The Royal Philatelic Society London has used all reasonable efforts to ensure that material that infringes copyright is not present on its website. Its policy is to suspend access to content that is subject of a complaint of copyright infringement while that complaint is investigated and verified.

In the event that you are the owner of the copyright in any of the material on the RPSL website and do not consent to such use of your material, please contact us providing the information requested below and we will withdraw your material from our website whilst we investigate. In order to process your complaint, please provide the information shown below. Your complaint should be addressed to the Head of Collections at the following email address: librarian@rpsl.org.uk or by post. Your complaint will normally be acknowledged within three working days of receipt.

You should specify who you are: [Name, address and email address of complainant]; Item in question: [Title of item to which complaint refers]; and the subject of the complaint: [Describe the protected material in as much detail as possible so that it may be readily identified]. You should also confirm that you own or are authorised to represent the owner of intellectual property rights in the material. Finally, add the words "I/we hereby request, with reference to the subject of this complaint, that you remove it from the website, cease further use of the material, and withdraw from circulation any materials that include it."
