The Philatelic Committee would find it useful to have a uniform set of rules making it plain what objects could not be admitted to competition, e.g. if older than five years, into what group of the competition they should go. All data – date of publication, type of publication, author, title, publisher, number of pages, method of printing, etc., would have their fixed place in the rules.

Working out a unified recommendation for literature, to be applied to exhibitions of all levels, will be taken in hand by the society sections on Exhibitions and Literature.

I have already quoted the three aims of the exhibition rules for judging literature exhibits. In my opinion, the difficulty of judging literature competitively has hardly been faced; this is more obvious than the lack of definite criteria for evaluation.

The organiser has at least a moral obligation to get the exhibits judged fairly. Fair, accurate and impartial judging is based on the availability of people qualified to judge the special category of literature.

A listing of points to be watched for, along with the highest mark to be awarded for each (as I have said, I should welcome the production of such a listing within the scope of the special rules for literature) – is certainly a help for prize judges, but is not so helpful in judging literature. The evaluation of literature is not and cannot be a simple process. If it is to be suitable and just, there must be continuing acquaintance with the literature. To keep abreast of philatelic literature calls for the collection of a library with a couple of hundred titles. The judge of literature should keep abreast of the market for literature and the new publications, should be familiar with current writing, should study the various specialist magazines and keep a general eye on the hundred or so current publications of working groups. However, since literature is not an isolated phenomenon but part of practical philately, the prize judge for literature should not restrict himself to this category. A desirable combination would be that of literature with collecting from some special point of view. The interaction between the two disciplines should be particularly fruitful.

I would like to point out the need for a well-rounded philatelic understanding, not limited to one field of collecting. I should like also to mention the need for a very good broad general knowledge (not limited to philately alone), with emphasis on the historical and practical. Stylistic understanding, the gift of writing at a level suitable for publication, a knowledge of the design and production of books on scientific principles, along with at least a minimum of technical information on book-binding, printing, etc., must also be present.

With this background, and only then, will the scheme for the listing of points and marks, which I look forward to seeing as soon as possible, be a practical and useful tool in the hand of the prize judges. The qualities enumerated will introduce a degree of certainty into the evaluation which a list of points and marks cannot bestow, but can only underline.

The special guidelines for judging literature at international exhibitions under the patronage of the Fédération Internationale de la Philatelie naturally go into more detail about literature than do the BDPH rules.

An important point is the definition in Article 3 of philatelic literature. It “includes all printed treatises available to the collector” from all field of philately.

There follows a division into groups which is absolutely necessary for correct evaluation:

- a) Handbooks, special catalogues, etc.
- b) General catalogues
- c) Philatelic journals etc., (Working Party circulars etc., which do not get reprinted, are including here)
- d) Individual articles within other publications.

This breakdown affords material for discussion: it may be compared with the one given by a member of the NAPOSTA 1976 jury:

- a) Monographs and handbooks, finished works
- b) Research reports (including Working Party circulars, etc.)
- c) Commercial philatelic publications (including magazines and catalogues from firms, etc.)

In my opinion these three-group breakdown could form the basis for the recommendations of our Society working party, for example.

Article 9 of the International Rules lays down the following points for judging, with the highest corresponding marks:

|----|--|----------------|
| a) | Originality, importance and depth of research | Up to 40 marks |
| b) | Style, clarity, Skill in presentation of contents | Up to 40 marks |

A scheme worked out by a member of the NAPOSTA 1976 jury divides the criteria by a scheme of finer differentiation into 10 points. These proposals need discussion during a colloquium: there is not room to discuss them all in detail in this paper.

Using 8 or 10 factors for evaluation instead of only 3 is not absolutely bound to produce better judging, but does give the judges a better foundation for their evaluations. In other words, using more criteria will make the reasons for their judgements more obvious.

Article 9 of the International Rules of the criteria needed to arrive at the medal rankings.

Article 10 lays down that the cost of taking part in an exhibition of literature should not exceed that of taking part in the general classes.

Article 10 rightly requires that two copies of every item of literature be made available. I do not agree though that the exhibitor should have to claim his two books back if he does not want to lose them. Instead, the organisers should let the exhibitors have their property back as a matter of course without a formal request.

I have not been able to give a detailed account of the international rules or of the BDPh recommendations for exhibitions. Both contain enough material for an individual article with a full discussion.

To conclude my remarks on literature at philatelic exhibitions, another word about judging. Prize juries should not fall into the trap of awarding a well-known author a medal just because he is well-known. Laurels already obtained are not in the competition, only the actual works presented.

Also, prize juries should take care not to be over-influenced by external, purely optical impression. The literary content of something in a plain paper wrapper may not be any worse than that of something bound up in buckram with gold lettering, and it is the content that counts. The layout and design with respect of the material is what the non-technical judge must look for if his defective knowledge prevents him from correctly assessing the technical-scientific aspects of the item. This applies as much to the evaluation of literature as to that of collections. The material of the collection, the literary content of the book, that is the predominant element; layout and decoration cannot be a substitute for an evaluation of the material. This would also contradict the sense of the rules for exhibitions laid down by the BDPh (Section 20.1) in which only 10 points of a maximum 100 – i.e. 10% at most – are given for the make-up.

I would like to spread myself on the evaluation of literature. An art critic would never deal with the frame instead of the picture. Can a philatelic judge with a basis of firm knowledge approach his task any differently?

Editorial Board and Publisher

THE SHADY SIDES OF LITERATURE

by

Friedrich Leitenberger (deceased), Leipzig

When we speak of embarrassing moments in connection with our journal "Der Philatelistische Literatursammler", we are in no way going against its title, since we call ourselves on the other hand "Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature" and are thus interested in all questions of literature, of whatever kind they may be.

We absolutely do not want to sing our own praises here, but as friends of literature it is obvious that we will do more reading than the ordinary collector. We search the periodicals and other literary productions for ready explanations of this and that point which the person who simply collects will often try and deduce from his stamps without any guarantee of being on the right lines. And we are often brought up short in reading our magazines: we have surely read this before. And it can happen that we read the same article or whatever in a third and possibly even a fourth magazine. This can happen, and it hardly matters, when the article deals with a topic of general interest, its author wants to make it as widely known as possible and so sends it out to a number of magazines.

However it must be special when the main purpose of magazine is to give information on such and such a topic, but one can find the same excess of flattery in two to ten magazines. This usually happens in the "Reviews" of new literature. As a rule they all build on the same "laundry list". The "laundry list" is the hymn of praise which the publisher of the work concerned want to get from the various magazines to which he has sent review copies. This is understandable, as every merchant cries up his own wares. Honoured reader, if you ever get the opportunity to listen on the other hand to the lamentations of a publisher, then hearken with all your might, as the difference will be as thousand to one. If there really is any idealism left at the present day, and if it can be found anywhere, then it is with the publishers of all the literature outside the lucrative stocks of albums and world catalogues. The rest is awful. Known and unknown small wonder then that the new work appears with a fanfare like the Last Trump.

However, a knowledge of all the conditions and circumstances with regard to all the "knowns and unknowns" should not prevent us from separating the chaff from the wheat. Hats off to what is good, into the wastepaper basket with what serves no purpose. Every single magazine sins against its subscribers and its other readers by the uncontrolled printing of “laundry lists”, quite apart from the fact that it and its editor (or who is doing the creeping and crawling under this title) is giving a first rate proof of poverty. The bare reprinting of a “laundry list” helps neither the subject which the book concerned is supposed to serve, nor even less the people interested in it. How many times has it happened that a really poor product has made its way until a read editor has given it a proper scrutiny and cried it down, of course, too late. Since there can be no question of personal details relating to circumstances, name or rank being taken into account, the work calls for criticism and must receive it, with the critic drawing extensively on his stock of specialist knowledge. This often entails stringent requirements, since our field has expanded to an extent where nobody, absolutely nobody, can cover it all. In such cases a way out must be found by locating someone familiar with the material who will approach it without using the pons asinorum, i.e. the “laundry list”. And even a well-read editor will not ignore this and similar approaches especially when it comes to making his journal what he would like it to be. Thus, esteemed editors, and all who wish to be so: Laundry List – Wastepaper Basket.

There is of course another way out: many notices restrict themselves to giving details of author, title, publisher, number of pages and price – not a line more. Thus no guidance is given by either the author or the publisher, and it is left to the reader to such notices to find out what may be wrong with the book. Many magazines seem to care more about the possession of such items than their ethical duty and obligations. Such doings have the nature of evasions...

We must not however and date not throw out the baby with the bathwater. However blameworthy the completely unreflecting and unchecked reprinting of a laundry list may be, we still can use it – only not in the old and still prevalent form. It is not always necessary to replace what the publisher says: we can take as fact what he has put forward as fact, giving it as notes and in brackets (???) and then the critic gives his opinion on its own. If it seems a good idea (???), i.e. he may point out how one or other could be improved. Of course there are also critics whose opinions seem to be blacker than black, but as long as they remain factual and they are genuine opinion, they cannot be expected to refrain from expressing them.

And now, farewell, dear laundry lists, i.e. let us see you again in a new form.

And now to answer all the dear readers who want to know who these lines are aimed at: at all publishers, all authors, all magazines, all reviewers and, of course, to all readers of reviews; and you can take it as a wish or a warning, as your please.

1ST ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE SOCIETY FOR THE FRIENDS OF PHILATELIC LITERATURE

Held in Hamburg on 15th October 1933

At 1030 am, School Superintendent, H. Lüdecke, of Hamburg, opened the meeting and greeted the assembled members. He spoke of the significance and aim of the meeting, and went into more detail about the value of philatelic literature. Bank Director, E. Kock, Hamburg, expressed himself as ready to take the minutes of the meeting.

Five members were present, and twelve foreign members had sent proxies, so that a total of seventeen votes was available. After this had been recorded for the minutes. C. Schmittiel, Hamburg, read the following Society report:

“Starting from the viewpoint that philatelic writing is a basic factor in the present state of philately, and understanding that the promotion of philatelic literature is one of the important feature of philatelic science, just over a year ago on 1st October 1932, a number of friends of literature started the “Society for those interested in Collecting Philatelic Literature”. Its aim was to promote the understanding and collection of philatelic literature. To avoid confusion with another philatelic society with a similar name but a quite different identity our society changes its name in January of this year to “Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature”.

It must be gratefully acknowledged that with a few exceptions the philatelic press made our efforts widely known and thus contributed energetically to our recruitment. The intake of new members was particularly noteworthy in January and February of this year. Known philatelists joined our Society not just from the German Reich, but from practically all the surrounding countries, and have given it an international character. At the same time this intake gave us a large number of valuable helpers for our endeavours.

Especial thanks are due to our member and editor of the Society’s paper, Herr Johannes Klink, of Neibull. He has made himself and his efforts available for our work in the most unselfish manner. Special thanks are also due to University Librarian, Dr.phil. Johannes Schubert, Leipzig, whose practical advice has helped the Committee. Thanks also go to all members, named or not, who have contributed no less usefully to bringing our Society to its present position within the short period of its existence. Particular thanks should be expressed to members who have helped in the creation of our Society organ “Der Philatelistische Literatursammleer”, which was distinguished by a bronze medal at Vienna. This has also made it possible for the magazine to be published independently in an extended form from the beginning of the New Year.

At the minute our Society has 80 members. Unfortunately we have lost two members by death in the Society year just finished. Fritz Borger, an intelligent young philatelist, writer and friend of literature, died after much suffering in Vienna on 7th July. He gave promise of becoming a valuable member. Then on 9th September came the sudden death of Friedrich Leitenberger, Leipzig, in whom we have lost one who was friendly, helpful, and one of our best workers. We know well enough who Leitenberger was: unfortunately the plans he had for our endeavours will never now be carried out. The loss of these two members affects our Society very deeply, and it will be our honourable duty to keep them always in remembrance.

Of the bibliographic tasks projected, preliminary work has begun on the Handbook of Philatelic Literature. The necessary basis is already present in the generous support of a number of philatelists, so that the real work can be started in the very near future. We hope the co-operation promised will not fail to appear.

Various members have happily been able to let us have the benefit of their expert scientific knowledge. There has also been vigorous lending of philatelic literature. Ties with public, Society and private philatelic libraries have been further established and consolidated.

The Society year just finished has been distinguished by increased recruitment. It was useful to familiarise the world of collectors with our Society and its aims. Today’s AGM is meant in particular to draw up rules and regulations and get our Society entered in the Register of Societies, and to contribute to the establishment and extension of the Society.

In conclusion, may I ask all members to work together for the good of philatelic literature and our Society. Various important problems remain to be solved.”

After the reading of the Society report, Lüdecke spoke some heartfelt words for our two members who died during the past year, and those present stood at attention in their honour. Lüdecke also thanked the previous Chairman, Schmittdiel, for this work. The latter then read the following report of the accounts:

“As already mentioned in the Society report, our efforts were devoted to making the existence of our Society known to the world of collectors and to lovers of philatelic literature in particular.

A voluminous correspondence was needed to create and stabilise new bonds. This also explains why postal charges account for the greatest part of our expenses. Doubtless recruitment for our Society will call for high expenditure in the coming year, though it should not reach the level of the year just past.

We must first build up our Society by increasing the membership, so as to be able to carry out the tasks we project.

The receipts (contributions and membership fees) came to RM228.72, and the outgoings (Society journals, postage charges and sundries) to RM216.27, so that a balance of RM12.45 remains.

Schmittdiel's resignation as Treasurer was accepted.

Lüdecke then put forward the proposal for the entry of the Society in the Register of Societies. After a long discussion this was approved by 16 to 1.

The previously prepared draft of the rules was worked through in individual sections, paragraph by paragraph. They will be published in the next issue of this magazine. Particularly worthy of notice is the contribution of Privy Councillor, Dr. F. Kalckhoff, Berlin, who proposed the change of name to “Gesellschaft philatelistischer Literaturfreunde”: this was moved by the proposer and unanimously agreed by the meeting.

C. Schmittdiel, Hamburg, was chosen as first Chairman. He then took over the Chair of the meeting and thanked Lüdecke for conducting it so far. Bank Director, E. Kock, Hamburg, was elected Vice-Chairman, and School Director, H. Lüdecke, Hamburg, as Treasurer. Other Committee members were then elected unanimously and accepted the positions.

The meeting unanimously elected W. Ehlers, Hamburg, and Diploma Farmer, C. Michaulin, Schleswign, as auditors. Both members accepted the election.

The Chairman then put forward the suggestion of opening a Post Office account. The idea was to have this in the name of the Society, using the chairman's address and with the Treasurer alone having access to it.

After the decisions recorded had been signed, the meeting was closed by the Chairman at 1 pm.

of changes that have occurred in the literary field.

German State

Allgemeiner Anzeiger zur Verbreitung der Postwertzeichen-Sammelkunde begins its third year with No. 1 of 15th January 1897, and reveals that the editorship has been transferred from C. Dieckmann in Munster to Heinrich Kramer in Arolsen, the printer and publisher of the magazine.

Vereinsmitteilungen des Verein Braunschweiger Briefmarken-Sammler published 3 issues in 1891, 3 in 1892 (Nos. 4-6), none in 1893, 3 issues in 1894-1896 (Nos. 7-9) (we do not know when these last issues appeared, perhaps one of our readers knows), and then No. 10 appeared in February 1897. In future this publication should appear 4-6 times a year. Its contents are highly readable.

Austro-Hungary

Vertrauliche Mitteilungen d. Wiener Philatelisten-Club, in octavo format with Latin type. Nos. 1-3 of 15th April and 15th June 1881 and 1st July 1882 were reported as not received by the D.B.Z. From 19th August 1882 onwards the familiar lithographed Mitteilungen des Wiener Philatelisten-Club began to appear, with a new No. 1 on 15th September 1882.

Welt-Post completed its twenty-first year with No. 62, and has been edited by Sigmund Friedl of Vienna during this whole period. From 1880-1884 (Vols. V-IX) it was a supplement to the four volumes from 1876-1879 of:

Wiener Illustrierten Briefmarken-Zeitung, of which 12 issues appeared in 1885 (X), Nos. 1-6 1886 (XI), Nos. 7-11 1887 (XII), Nos. 12-17 1888 (XIII), Nos. 18-22 1889 (XVI), Nos. 31-38 1892 (XVII), Nos. 39-43 1893 (XVIII), Nos. 44-49 1894 (XIX), Nos. 50-54 1895 (XX), Nos. 55-58 1896 (XXI), Nos. 59-62. The journal has appeared in a completely new format from the end of February this year, with the date "1st April 1897" as No. 1 of Vol. XXII, and should appear regularly on the 1st and 15th of each month. The contents contain very little philately (Chalmers' essay), and are devoted to collecting, art and handicrafts. The annual subscription is 6 gulden or 12 marks. The editor is still Sigmund Friedl, 22 Nusswaldgasse, Vienna XIX, and the publisher is Karl Goldmann of Vienna.

Grazer Philatelist is the name of a philatelic journal appearing in Graz only once a year as the anniversary publication of the Graz Society of Stamp Collectors. No. 6 appeared on 24th March of this year. The contents relate in the first place to details of the Society's doings, humourously described, but there are also good scientific articles.

Switzerland

L'Annonce Philatelique, No. 1 of which appeared on 15th December 1894 at No. 26 Boulevard Plainpalais, Geneva, as we reported on p.19, 1895, reached No. 23 of Vol. II on 25th January 1897. The editor is Henri Carteret, 17 Boulevard du Pont d'Arve, Geneva. Subscriptions are not accepted. It will be sent on request "on receipt of a business card". As it is obviously not sent free to known addresses, this advertising sheet is not well known and adverts in it are not likely to have much success.

Luxemburg

Les Petites Affiches which we mentioned on p.19 of 1895, beings its third volume in the familiar format with No. 1 of January 1897.

Le Moniteur du Collectionneur, which forms a supplement to the first-mentioned advertising sheet, has appeared in a smaller format since January of this year, without the content being reduced.

Belgium

Le Philatliste Anverois No. 1 of which appeared in November 1896, is edited by F. Schenk at 107 Rue de la Constitution, Antwerp.

Le Flandre Philatélique, whose publication by E. Questiaux in Gendbrugge near Ghent was reported on p.6 of 1896, was merged from No. 3 of this year with the newly founded magazine: Le Moniteur Philatélique, and thus seems to have stopped. The editor of the latter magazine is Ald. Facon of Ghent, but E. Questiaux published in No. 1 an article on Belgian stamps, which he would hardly have done if his own magazine had still been in existence. Besides, Le Moniteur Philatélique has only undergone a re-organisation since it has existed in an unimportant form since 15th January 1896, as we mentioned on pages 7 and 16 of this year.

Netherlands

Le Globe, an advertising sheet, was issued by J. H. Hamakers in Rotterdam towards the end of 1896 or the beginning of 1897.

France

Le Philatéliste Français, No. 37 of January 1897 appeared in a tasteful cardboard cover with coloured printing, as Series II. It is published monthly by M. Lemaire at 30 Rue de Provence, Paris, at an annual subscription of only 2 francs. Single numbers cost 25 centimes.

L'Indicateur Philatélique et Commercial is an octavo magazine of eight pages of text plus adverts, most of them relating to philately. The magazine appears monthly in Mains-les-Bains in the Department of Vosges. The unnamed editor appears to be Désiré Dusapin. Yearly subscription 90 centimes for France, 1.25 francs abroad. No. 1 is dated January 1897, and shows the price of single numbers as “5 centimes”.

L'Echo de la Philatélie recently appeared from Ch. Caris in Luzarches (Seine et Oise), and Bulletin mensuel de la Société Philatélique Lyonnaise published its No. 1 on 10th March 1897 in Lyons.

L'Avenir des Timbres Poste, edited by J. Delzenne, Paris, ceased at the end of 1896 with No. 36 of Vol. IV. Vol. I (1892/93) consists of Nos. 1-12, Vol. II (1893/94), of Nos. 1-13, Vol. III (1895) of Nos. 14-25, and Vol. IV (1896), of Nos. 26-36.

Great Britain

The Juvenile Collector is published by Tillet (where is not known) and Stamp Gossip has recently appeared from W. S. Lincoln in London.

The Junior Stamp Collector appeared recently at 147 Constitution Hill, Birmingham. The name of the publisher and precise details of its appearance are not known to us as we have not yet seen a copy.

The Philatelic Journal of Great Britain, the well-known first-rate journal, is edited from April 1897 by G. B. Duerst of Manchester, a well-known philatelic author. The previous editors were J. Scott Stokes and his wife Ethel Stokes. The printer and publisher remains William Brown of Salisbury.

Morocco

Le Maroc Timbrologique is the first Moroccan magazine, which appeared at the beginning of the year 1897 in Tangiers, but we have not yet seen it.

Attempt to catalogue the philatelic periodical literature of the entire world from 1863-1896.

Dr. Jur. Rommel, Leipzig

I am currently trying to catalogue the entire philatelic periodical literature from its beginning in the year 1863 to the end of the year 1896, so as to supply an aid to the many lovers of this literature by collecting and arranging it. I have chosen the clearer tabular form with a chronological arrangement. I also thought it would be useful to arrange the literature by the lands where it appeared, i.e. by country, and then group these countries by language. Thus, for example, a magazine written in French but published in Italy will appear under “Italy”, which country will naturally appear in the Italian language group, but will also get a mention under the French language. Only the Austro-Hungarian monarchy does not fit neatly into this system, since its component countries belong to different language groups. Thus, the literature of this country forms an exception since it is split up into language groups which are placed at the end of the relevant section.

It is obvious that my work is based in the first place on the outstanding publications of Court Counsellor Viktor Suppantschitsch of Vienna. In some cases he gave me corrections, and from 1891 or 1893 to 1896 he supplemented my work. My work will unavoidably have mistakes and omissions, and I earnestly beg all lovers of literature to let me have corrections and additions.

I begin with the journals in the Italian language group, which covers the Kingdom of Italy, the Republic of San Marino and Trieste and its hinterland. No philatelic journals have appeared in the Trentino. The next instalment will deal with the Spanish speaking countries, i.e. the Kingdom of Spain, all South American (with the exception of Brazil), Central America and the Spanish West Indian possessions (the Philippines are not considered). The Portuguese speaking countries, i.e. Portugal with the Azores and Brazil will then follow. The further outline of the work will appear in due course.

I. Italian Language Group

1. Kingdom of Italy

2. Republic of San Marino

3. Trieste and Region (Part of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy.)

DR. OTTO ROMMEL'S LIBRARY DONATED TO THE PRUSSIAN STATE LIBRARY

Dear Mr. Birch,

We have now managed to trace your information, and would like to report as follows. Special rules were drawn up for the transfer of the collections of prominent people to the stock of the Prussian State Library, and these were applied to Dr. Otto Rommel's collection of philatelic literature. The collection of several hundred titles obtained in 1915 is obviously so valuable that the decision was taken to cover the material in a separate catalogue by countries within broad subject groups. This decision was communicated to Dr. Rommel on 20th June 1914, with the guarantee that his book collection would be retained for all time under the designation "Philatelic Library of Dr. of Laws Otto Rommel, of Berlin-Steglitz".

However, we must report to our great regret that though the catalogue survives as a valuable source of bibliographic data, the collection of philatelic literature was lost in the confusion of the Second World War. The catalogue of the "Rommel Collection" is kept in our building in the form of a hand-written card catalogue, along with a "Missing List" compiled in 1915, which lists the volumes missing from the more than 550 philatelic periodical titles. Both the catalogue and the "Missing List" may be seen on request on our premises. A loan is not possible. Reference was made to the Rommel collection in the specialist bibliographic press in 1915, the year it was taken into the Prussian State Library. We enclose a copy. We hope we have helped you, and remain with friendly greetings.

CENTRAL ORGAN FOR BIBLIOGRAPHY

Founded by Otto Hartwig

Edited, with the constant co-operation of numerous Specialists, by Dr. Paul Schwenke

First director of the Royal Library, Munich, 32nd year

Note about the library on pages 172-173.

The Royal Library recently acquired the philatelic library of Dr. of Laws Rommel. This is the second most important private collection, after the incomparable collection of the Earl of Crawford in the British Museum (see above p. 105). It includes some 2,000 volumes, with a very large number of bibliographic rarities. The philatelic literature is known to consist chiefly of the publications of philatelic societies, which appear very irregularly and in small editions, often never get into the book trade, and are thus very difficult to collect. Hence there are very many complete volumes but also not a few incomplete ones, but the number of titles included is an index of the importance of the collection. There are 214 German titles, 205 French, 73 Italian, 32 Scandinavian, 29 Dutch, etc. It is obviously very desirable to have such a collection on open access in the interests of the German philatelic societies, and it would be desirable for the Rommel collection to be completed and carried on.

LITERATURE

Calendar for Stamp Collectors, 1895. Edited by Konrad Starke, Secretary to the Dortmund Stamp Collectors' Society. Price 1 mark.

The Philatelic Diary for Stamp Collectors for 1895, Stanley Gibbons Ltd., Price 2/6d.

Cancellations on the Stamps of the Thurn and Taxis Postal Region by A. Glasewald, price 4.50 marks.

Chronological Tables of the German Philatelic Periodicals 1863-1893, by H. Fraenkel. Price 1 mark.

The idea of producing special calendars for stamp collectors is not a new one. Older collectors will remember the little calendar of 1877 (by A. Moschkau), that fitted neatly into a wallet. Robert Deyhle then let his calendar appear in 1881 and 1882, though it hardly had any practical use. The Senf Brothers then put out their pocket book, which was essentially the same as the calendar by Konrad Starke mentioned above. It takes the form of a rather larger notebook, nicely produced, and tries to give the collector not only the usual calendar material (dates, holidays, postal rates, tables of coins, taxes), but also a series of articles (German post offices in overseas territories, watermarks, perforations, secret symbols on Hamburg postage stamps, two Oldenburg forgeries, the stamp album: A world picture for youth, hints for collectors, list of societies, catalogue of literature) and a series of advertisement pages (values of stamps, stamps bought and sold, exchange packets, society circulars, exchange circulars, tested stamps, society contributions, lists of society members, interesting articles, new books, etc).

Thus, a rich compilation which will be welcome to both large and small collectors and dealers.

The modest English book, a novelty for England, is much more elegant and better produced than the German one. It contains no articles, instead it has two pages carrying a number of highly succinct advice which covers practically as much as the "Hints for Collectors" in the German Book (e.g. never remove the original gum; never cut apart block of rare unused stamps; never cut up a stamp, etc). The list of societies is limited to England and its colonies, but gives the names of chairmen and secretaries as well as addresses. A particularly valuable feature is a table of technical expressions in 3 languages, e.g. names of colours. Statistics for the most important states are not without value. For the rest, the book is arranged on the lines of our almanacs, so that every day of the year has a given amount of space for notes. A perforation rule is supplied in a special little pocket, so that it can hardly get lost or misplaced. The pencil cannot drop out. Three little pockets are added especially to keep stamps in. If the price were not so high, this really elegant little book would find wide acceptance in use in Germany as well.

Herr A. E. Glasewald is a known authority in the field of cancellations. He has collected articles published over a period in the Middle German Philat. Zeitung into book form and, in my opinion, has achieved what only a few people manage. By careful classification he makes this dry material understandable even to lay people, and his way of writing will capture the attention of those who generally have little interest in the subject. He is particularly salutary on the topic of entires, where he differs from Reinheim's extravagances and warns against foolishness. When we reach for example about the cancellations of other states (p.54) "However I cannot accept the data as regards monetary value, which often point to exorbitantly high prices", this is a destructive opinion as to Reinheimer's prices for such curiosities (e.g. Alsace-Lorraine with a "Paris" stamp). Speaking of local cancellations (p.15) Herr Glasewald goes on to explain that nothing but local cancellations were used in the year 1852 (hence must have been quite common), though later local cancellations merely represent the sins of omission of individual officials. This again contradicts Herr Reinheimer when he claims that items valued at a few pfennigs in his first edition are worth several marks if they carry a local cancellation!, whereas a local cancellation on later issues has only a curiosity value, not by any means the value that Herr Reinheimer places on it. The make-up of the book is very good. However, though the contents are entirely praiseworthy, I must regret the increase in price, which is a result of the use of dear hand-made paper. I personally prefer printing on white paper but this is a matter of taste. In any case the book deserves to be bought, read and studied.

The little work listed above under 4 gives, in tabular form and chronological arrangement, a picture of movement in the periodical literature in the field of our hobby, in Germany and is meant as a manual for collectors. This aim is severely compromised by a series of mistakes in writing and printing. As a slight excuse, I will point out that sets of figures such as this booklet contains are very hard to correct. The contents have already been made known by the favourable criticism the work has already received, especially the detailed critique by Dr. Rommel in the Ill. Briefm. Zeitung. However, I still maintain the opinion that periodicals can only be such as were intended to have further issues from the outset. I also take independent supplements to be those that can be separated from the main periodical: it is useful to have them separate since they can sometimes be quite overlooked, and also necessary, since they appear in all the usual literature surveys and cannot be lost if they are treated in this way. However, if the editor simply calls one section of his magazine a supplement, without separating it physically from the main journal, it can only be called a "supplement" incorrectly. It is not an "extra" but is contained within the journal itself. For example, the "Adverts" in the Internationale Briefmarken-Zeitung occasionally begins in the middle of a page, and is paged consecutively with the rest of the magazine. The same is true of the "Periodical Report on the Vienna Stamp Market" in Koch's Zeitung, and the Advertiser to the Deutsche Philatelisten-Zeitung (the first issue of which was however separate from the main journal). On the other hand, a journal cannot be listed twice when it is divided into two separate parts which however have the same title (the Ill. Briefmarken-Zeitung for a number of years). It has been objected from many sides that the tables do not make it sufficiently plain that what are marked as "last issues" are not actually so in the case of all journals: many (39) appeared again later. I must confess that I have never found this when using Tiffany's Library Companion: this deals with a specific period of time, and last issues are marked as such in there. A continuation for 1894 lists the journals that have begun to reappear, with the changes in them. Moreover Herr Rommel is in error when he states that the last issue of the Wiener Briefmarken-Zeitung, which appeared in Autumn 1893 is wrongly dated December 1892. It is so dated! and that settles it. For many periodicals, e.g. the Vertranliche Korrespondenzblatt, which often appeared very late in previous years, the actual date of publication is different from the one printed on it: however the collector and researcher of literature can only take the latter as determinative. It is different for researchers in other fields. In some circumstances they have to ignore a notice, since the magazine concerned did not appear till long after the date it carries. It is thus not clear whether the notice is much more recent than the date or not.

From now on a list of the necessary corrections will be included with every copy, and will be sent to everyone who has bought a copy from me. I have discovered some of the mistakes myself: my thanks are due to Herr Rommel, Herr G. Czegka and State Councillor V. Suppanschitsch of Graz for detecting others.

Another, Philatel. Anzeiger apparently appeared in the year 1892 from Kuabe of Erfurt, but I have not managed to find out anything about it. “Helvetische Philatelie” (No. 144) first appears (No. 1) in November 1892 as a price list, according to a communication from the editor. It then became a periodical from No. 2 (December 1893) onwards. However, there has been no follow-up to this No. 2, and Herr Jaquier has restricted himself to producing the special French edition “La Philatélie Helvétique”. Finally, mention should perhaps be made of the “Rotterdam Philatelist”; however, Dutch is so predominant in this that it would be better listed amongst the Dutch journals (it is different for San Marino Philatelist, Romania Philatelica, Philatelist Oriental, the last two of which contain practically nothing but German text!).

In this self-criticism, as in all my criticisms, I have tried to give the reader a completely truthful picture of what he will find in the writings concerned. For my own part, I do not take criticism amiss, but leave it to other people.

PROSPECTUS FOR A POSSIBLE HANDBOOK OF ALL THE LANGUAGE PHILATELIC LITERATURE THAT HAS APPEARED

EXCLUDING PERIODICALS)

AN APPEAL

The "Gesellschaft der philatelistischen Literaturfreunde" [Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature] intends in the course of time to compile and publish a series of philatelic - bibliographic works. One of the works envisaged is an index to the German language philatelic literature. If we look at the bibliographic literature of philately, we find there are a number of bibliographic works which deal in more or less detail with the German-language philatelic literature. However, we never get complete data, either because the work is cut off some years ago, or the later ones do not cover the whole of the literature. In recent years no detailed survey has been published at all. However, quite apart from this anyone who looks at a philatelic library, either private or belonging to a society, will not find all the bibliographic works published hitherto all collected together. One or other of them will be missing, and the lack of completeness often makes itself felt. It also happens, and is very unpleasant, that a dozen books have to be consulted, to find what is wanted, even if the facts are there and not in the missing books. The work described above is intended to correct this deficiency and take a further step in the encouragement of philatelic literature, work has now begun on the handbook described above. It is not however designed solely for lovers of philatelic literature, but every philatelist, especially specialists, will need it. A specialist who turns to the literature for aid in building up and completing his collection will often have felt the need for a comprehensive bibliographical record. The present appeal thus calls on everyone for their friendly co-operation. The plan of the work has not been finally settled, so that suitable suggestions may be put forward and may be taken into account in our planning. As the basis for the work we still need any writings not included in the following list, and those in it marked with a star.

It is requested that anyone possessing this bibliographic literature - especially library catalogues - get in contact with us. This request is addressed in the first place to all lovers of philatelic literature and to librarians.

PHIL* BIBLIO: THE MEDIA PROGRAMME

The media programme that has been available for some time has now been subject to reworking. It is now possible to access and administer even foreign data banks. For example, at "Article" in Phil* Creativ-Data" philately 1949-1995", will be found all the titles and reviews of the book publications described. Some 5mb are available, and the research philatelist has easy access. And this with all the established possibilities of expression in list form.

Exclusively for BDPh members (the membership is to be informed) there is a possibility of exchange with the DIVA* Biblio. From the data-bank standpoint this programme is identical, but has the extra module "BDPh-Literature-Reports". This is the largest worldwide bibliographical work on the literature of philately both at home and abroad. The book edition has been produced with this programme since the operational year 1991, and a few months afterwards the individual volumes can be obtained in either book or disc form. For example, volume LN1991 contains 2,767 data items with 13,217 keywords, LN1992 has 3,593 data items with 18,077 keywords, LN1993 has about 2,950 items with 15,096 keywords. 1991 and 1992 are already available, 1993 and 1994 are now ready. About 8mb storage places must be reserved for each volume. They can now be supplied on disc. Future plans are to cover the older, earlier volumes of Literatur-Nachrichten as well, back as far as the 50s.

The disc version is available for sale exclusively to BDPh members in the BDPh* Phila* Shop. BDPh members will be informed of these offers via the well-known specialist journal "Philatelie"!

Phil* Creativ also offers all BDPh members – as producer of the Society programmes available under the title DIVA exclusively for Society members, societies and clubs – favourable rates for exchange and upgrading. This offer is not transferable and applies only to members (to whom it will shortly be made available).

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE OF GERMAN
PHILATELIC PERIODICALS 1863-1893

Compiled by H. Fraenkel, Berlin, 1894. Published by the compiler.

The Berlin Philatelic Club decided, at its 65th and 66th meetings of the 5th and 19th January 1891 respectively, to compile a philatelic bibliography of the German States and elected a commission of 5 members, one of whom was the author of the above tables. However, this work was not carried out, since I had at the same time undertaken a similar but more comprehensive work although the Berlin Club had already shown a lively interest in philatelic literature. The soul of the whole undertaking was District Judge H. Fraenkel, who, as librarian of the Club, devoted himself above all to building up the library. He undertook this task with the greatest zeal and conscientiousness; and if the library is today in a flourishing and exemplary condition, it is due to him alone.

Fraenkel moreover, has a large philatelic library of his own to look after and the total effort he has to expend in both directions is greater than many readers could imagine. Obviously, both libraries include many foreign journals, including American, so that he had to rely on the Library Companion published in the year 1889 by John K. Tiffany, without the help of which it would have been almost impossible to get an insight into this domain. This gave him the opportunity to learn the advantages of this work and its importance for every friend of the American periodical literature, and so he got the idea of producing something similar with regard to the German philatelic periodical literature and thereby promoting the collecting and study of German philatelic literature and the development of specialist libraries. He based himself on the correct assumption that a knowledge of the older and oldest literature, even though it contains mistakes, is of outstanding importance for today's philatelists. He had my bibliography available as a source for the first 29 years from 1863-1891, and then he produced the above work, in which he covered the literature for the last two years 1891 and 1893 by himself. He based his arrangement on Tiffany's Library Companion, but he supplied a few details missing from Tiffany. His own practical experience had taught him that some of the data omitted from Tiffany – for example the number of issues in individual volumes of a journal – are indispensable for literature collectors and library administrators.

Fraenkel learned the hard way that it is not an easy task to bring such a work to a conclusion without mistakes. When his printed booklet was in his hands, he found that there were more than 50 mistakes in it, although it only ran to 7 printed pages in all. Thus he had to start right away on the production of a sheet of corrections. This does not lessen the author's achievement in producing a practical and handy guide to the German philatelic literature, since the appearance of the corrections makes it possible for everyone to correct the tables and make them usable.

I myself am in less than total agreement with the author on certain points – e.g. the inclusion of certain items under periodicals, etc. – but I do not mean to attack him on this account, since I respect the opinions of everyone who make out a reasoned case for them. I simply hope the pamphlet will fulfil its aim of promoting the collection and study of the periodical literature and the development of libraries. The printing and format are pleasing, and the price of 1 mark very reasonable for a tabular work.

M. BLOCH, GENERAL-INDEX 1919

Published by "Weltpost-Echo", Teplitz, Price 8 Kr =8 marks.

The author has carried out the detailed but unrewarding work of compiling an index to the contents of the German-language periodicals of the year 1919.

Why produce an Index for the German works?

The philatelic world would be grateful if a second Suppantshitsch would extend his 1890 bibliography to the present day. We are unfortunately very far behind in this respect, since we still have no general index of contents for the oldest magazines, Ill. Briefmarken-Journal and Der Philatelist, for example.

125 YEARS OF PHILATELIC LITERATURE IN LEIPZIG

by Wolfram Grallert

Leipzig can claim to be the birthplace of the first philatelic productions in the German language. When we remember that stamp collecting first began to spread in Germany about 1860 (it was then essentially an interest of schoolboys and students), we must admire the courage of the Leipzig publishers and booksellers. On the other hand, the “bookmakers” of this city of books and fairs had a certain instinct as to what would “go”, as printing and book production had a long tradition here. Leipzig had been a leader in this field since the 16th century. The trend towards stamp collecting spread through the German speaking territory in the middle of the previous century led to extensive economic and commercial relationships between the then German States and with other countries, and in particular the “foreign postage stamps” on the correspondence of commercial houses and large firms were preserved and collected.

As for the philatelic accessories needed, these were not very many, and fell within the range of “black arts”: namely information as to which stamps had appeared to date, and sheets to which the stamps could be refastened after they had been removed (usually torn off) from letters. It was completely uncertain whether stamp collectors round 1860 were prepared to read a specialist magazine regularly, or accept advice on how to collect. Testing this out was a publishing risk.

The first dealers in philatelic literature are known to be the bookseller Wuttig, the Dürr bookshop and the antiques and coin dealers Zschiesche & Koeder (founded 1855). The exact priority cannot be determined today, but it is certain that between the middle of 1862 and the 1st May 1863 (first issue of Zschiesche & Koeder’s “Magazin für Briefmarken-sammler”) the three firms mentioned had all begun to produce philatelic material. It is amazing that one of these first publishers had already realised and put on paper the items necessary for “correct stamp collecting” - album, catalogue and introduction to philately, to give them the names commonly used today.

In 1862/63, the firm of Dürr produced two volumes of “Handbook for Stamp Collectors – advice on the most suitable arrangement of stamp collections, along with a complete listing and description of all postage stamps issued to date”. The second part is a “listing and description of postage stamps issued to date”, arranged under the five continents of the world. What opinion did the publishers hold on stamp collecting, and what tips had they ready?

In Chapter II, “Stamp Collecting and How to Do It” they say amongst other things “So far our German youth have collected stamps in a relatively random manner, and their principal aim has been to acquire as many as possible, but people in Paris, London, Brussels, etc., have already progressed further and begun to apply a certain system to their collecting, to bring it more into line with the collection of coins, portraits,, coats of arms/weapons, seals and autographs.

If we look on postage stamps as a sort of paper money, collecting them would be a sub-division of and supplement to coin collecting; at the same time however they also connect with collections of portraits, coats of arms/weapons and can claim to be of historical, heraldic and genealogical importance; the portraits of successive Regents over a period of time would soon form a relatively complete gallery of Regents. Booked at from this standpoint, we cannot accept stamp collecting as merely a childish pastime.

In France and England, where men are more willing to spend money on their hobbies than the more prudent Germans, collections made up of only new and unused stamps, insofar as they are obtainable, are relatively common; in their perfect cleanliness these have a much nicer appearance than those consisting only of cancelled stamps, often made illegible by overprinting with the cancellation. The first sort are however relatively expensive, and 2-300 thalers would easily be needed to make up even an approximately complete collection.

A really complete collection is hardly feasible at the present time, since the postage stamps of all kinds issued to date amount to some 11-1200, divided between about 120 individual countries: also most of them are now off the market and have been replaced by newer ones. For example, the stamps of the provisional Schleswig government of 1850, of the earlier Italian states now annexed by Sardinia etc., are becoming increasingly rare and difficult to obtain, and if individual specimens do turn up they are offered at and get very respectable premium prices.

Most stamp collectors are limited to the cancelled and thus more readily available examples simply because of the price question, but even in this field there are obstacles in the way of reaching anything like completeness!

The author, unfortunately unknown, is not too clear about the position of stamp collecting in the cultural spectrum, although he has indicated the possibility of motif collection when he talks of getting a "Regent's Gallery" in postage stamps.

In Section II, "Stamp Collecting and How To Do It", the author says of the layout of the collection, amongst other things:

"An absolute requisite for a good stamp collection is one of the newly available albums, whose use can be heartily recommended to all collectors as the best way to give the collection an appropriate and attractive appearance."

For readers of this handbook we will point out that albums of this type, in more or less elegant shapes and layouts, are produced by the Dürr Bookshop in Leipzig, and can be ordered from all bookstores and art-supply shops at prices ranging from 16ngr to 2 thalers 20ngr. They consist of 60 loose large octavo sheets, in alphabetical order by the name of the countries that issue stamps, with a few explanatory notes, and an adequate number of printed compartments to stick on the stamps. This gives more symmetry than the previous ones that consisted only of blank paper. Extra sheets with only empty panels are available to act as supplements if any particular country needs more space".

We can conclude from this that definite guidelines had already been developed by this time, and that "customised collecting" – for the period could already be envisaged. We also realise that the earliest stamp albums were available at the start of the 60s, and that the pages (large octavo) measured about 16 x 24 cm. The "album for postage stamps" in its "second revised edition" was supplied in four different qualities. The paper used in these albums ranged from ordinary writing paper in the simplest case to pasteboard, and the binding went up to "finest shagreen leather, with gold stamping, gilt edging and clasp", which must refer to a box to keep the album in. The following very practical advice is given for detaching the stamps:

"To prepare a cancelled stamp for the album, the first step is the careful removal of the residual paper from the envelope to which it was previously stuck. The simplest way to do this is to apply 4-6 little pieces of blotting paper moistened with water to the reverse of the stamps, and leave them for 1-2 minutes. The loosened stamp is then allowed to dry, the edges are trimmed smooth to get a uniform shape, gum arabic is smeared on the reverse and it is stuck down cleanly at the appropriate place in the album.”

The recommendation to slip is edges of the stamps straight will be rightly met with incredulity by philatelists of today, but we must remember that philately has developed over the last 130 years as regards the treatment and evaluation of collected material as regards its quality. This also explains why many stamps that were printed with wide margins in the block turn up with relatively narrow borders. The Post Office shears are not always to blame!

Forgeries and falsifications were also on the market only 20 years after the appearance of the first postage stamps. “Many attempts have been made to get rid of the cancellation stamps or cancelling pen-strokes by chemical means, so as to make the stamps appear new and unused: however, as our own experiments have shown, these attempts are not always successful and leave the stamps slightly damaged or unusable, so on the whole we can disregard them”.

In Section III, “The Postage Stamp as an Article of Commerce”, the author returns to the subject of forgeries:

“It should not be surprising to find that less scrupulous people have tried to counterfeit postage stamps to impose on zealous collectors. This does not need further discussion as forgeries of this sort have no place in a collection”.

Nevertheless it must be stated that such items were not always produced to injure the collector, rather commercial considerations gave an impetus to the production of imitation postage stamps:

“If a passionate collector gave three times the price for one of the imitation 15 cent postage stamps that a Parisian chocolate maker used to decorate the envelopes of his New Year’s present bonbons, it would be as ridiculous as if the vendor thought he could get 3 francs for it simply because it later became scarce.”

Philologists and postal historians can also derive interesting information from this work. It gives, for example, the anecdote about Rowland Hill and the young girl who refused to accept a letter addressed to her because she could tell from signs on the envelope how things were going with her absent brother. This little story has survived to the present day. The use of special colours for the individual values is mentioned on Page 9: “The German-Austrian postal union has recently decided to introduce the same colours for stamps of equal value, such as green for $\frac{1}{3}$ sgr = 1kr, orange for $\frac{1}{2}$ sgr = 6pf, red for 1 sgr = 3kr, blue for 2 sgr = 6kr, light brown for 3 sgr = 9kr, etc. Whether there have been discussions about this, and how far it will be a success, is not yet certain.”

Amongst the specialist terms now generally used by philatelists we find the following: perforated, cancelled, uncanceled, face value, doublet, franking, nominal value, current, exchange transaction, postage stamp.

We will not go into detail here about the material on postal history mentioned in Section I. We will merely mention that 64 of the 96 woodcuts used to print the “Briefmarkenfreund” of Moritz Ruhl were still in existence. They were used by Alexander Bungerz in 1924 to reprint the 6th volume of “Kürzl’s Postage Stamp Library”, issued by the firm of Albert Kürzl in Munich. In the foreword to this volume, Bungerz writes “The blocks in ‘Ruhl’ were thought to have been destroyed decades ago, and then a few years ago Carl Beck managed to obtain all that were left from the Heirs of old Ruhl. His find consisted of 64 well-maintained woodcuts showing all the fine details of the old tables". Furthermore he reproduces 96 of the postage stamps shown in the old "Briefmarkenfreund".

There was a distinct upturn for the publishers of philatelic literature at the beginning of the 70s. The firm of Senf Brothers started publishing, and other Leipzig firms brought out philatelic titles or took them over from firms in other places, e.g. Wartig, J. J. Weber, Ernst Heitmann.

Amongst the works which ran to several editions and had their copyrights transferred to Leipzig were "Watermarks on Stamps, Covers, Postcards etc" by Dr. Alfred Moschkau (C. E. Dietze Co., Dresden), which was published from the third edition onwards by Louis Senf (1.7.1874-1.4.1880 owner of the firm) possibly because in 1876 Moschkau was installed as managing editor of the "Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal". Moschkau had contributed on "History of Postage Stamps and Philately (Stamps Science) to this title. This was the first outline of the development of philately to be published within the German-speaking world. Moschkau also included a survey of the philatelic literature to date, with Leipzig predominating. On p.20 of the 4th edition Moschkau states: "Philately spread at lightning speed in Germany with Leipzig then and now the centre of activity, with the bookseller G. Wuttig and the antiques dealers C. C. Zschiesche and C. E. Köder as its zealous champions. Moschkau calls particular attention to an article "Stamp Collections" in "Leipziger Illustrierte Zeitung" No. 1014, 1862 (J. J. Weber Co.) giving a quotation which leads to the conclusion that the authors of this article and of the "Handbook from the Dürr Company were the same, since style and content are (sometimes word for word) the same. We have quoted the paragraph beginning "If we look on postage stamps" on page 51".

In 1180 Eduard Wartig published "Guidelines for Philately (Postage Stamp Science). Later (1895), J. J. Weber included in his series "Weber's Illustrated Catechisms", a "Fundamentals of Philately and Stamp Collecting". The author of both these works was the well-known and important Austrian philatelist, Victor Suppantschitsch. The author gives a detailed description of the history and development of philately, the production and special features of postage stamps. However, he does avoid one topic in the latter work: although he mentions philatelic literature he does not name any of the "guidelines" or "textbooks" published between 1880 and 1895, such as "The Science of the Postage Stamp" by Dr. Hans Brendicke (Sigmar Mehring Co., Berlin 1888), the "Textbook of Philately" by Richard Krause (Ernst Heitmann Co., Leipzig 1889), and the first edition of "Guidelines for Philately" by Theodor Haas (Senf Bros., Leipzig 1891). In 1892 Suppantschitsch published, from A. Larisch in Munich, the "Bibliography and Reference Book of All the German Philatelic Literature from its Beginning to the End of 1891"; he may have decided this was enough without mentioning the rival work of other philatelists in his "Guidelines". It was not so easy to get hold of philatelic literature then as it is now, and many titles that are rare and sought-after now were then still available for years, sometimes at reduced prices.

Senf Brothers must be judged on the fact that they published not only "Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal" (from 1.1.1874) and the Senf catalogue (from 1892), but were active in all branches of philatelic literature. The reason for this might well have been that Louis Senf always had ambitions towards publishing and authorship (even after his retirement in 1890 he was active as editor and author of a Guideline): moreover they had acquired in Moschkau an editor with the literary experience, and finally, the Senf Brothers' stamp trade was so profitable that they could afford to take some risk with publications. This, as well as the Guidelines they published the "Calendar-Supply and Textbook for Stamp Collectors", the "Pocket Book for Stamp Collectors", and "Pamphlets for the Friends of Philately", to mention only a few. A more detailed account of the publishing activity of the firm of Senf Bros., and Louis Senf will be given later. The stamp catalogues published in Leipzig (Kröttsch, Baumbach, Heitmann) will also be dealt with in a later instalment.

To conclude this section we will look at the “Textbook of Philately” by Richard Krause mentioned before, as in content and arrangement, and the practical information it gave it was one of the peak productions of that date. After a consideration of the etymology and spirit of philately, Krause makes the following interesting remarks in “Chapter III – the Stages”.

“A young philatelist should only be a stamp collector, more precisely, a postage stamp collector, i.e. he should keep his hands off unstamped/uncancelled forms, field post items, post-paid stamps: he should concern himself only with postage stamps, i.e. the philately of the 60s. However he should collect everything that comes under his eyes so to speak: all the stamps of the world.”

By ‘young philatelists’ is meant collecting boys and youths, since a few paragraphs later the author recommends what someone who has been collecting for years should do when he reaches 20: “the 20th year of life is, in my opinion, the boundary into philately. The special collector must replace the general collector. A few countries or groups of countries are chosen, and the other postage stamps from the unchosen countries are put aside and used as duplicates, and kept in a special duplicates album, so that no material loss need be feared from this metamorphosis. The unstamped/uncancelled entire, the post-paid stamp, the return seal stamp (Germany) official seal stamp (Egypt) must obviously be acquired if these countries are chosen, also all private stamps, Zemstvo stamps, along with all postage stamps as stated. This would then be a defective special collection, lacking all shades, misprints, varieties, etc. The philatelist will now extend his knowledge in a good philatelic library, as a former general collector he will get a further insight into the stamps of all countries, even if he does not now go in for them all. The specialist researcher now begins his activity, he is now at the level of achievement, perhaps he begins to write about new issues, he gives information on harmful forgeries to the papers, unknown forms or post-paid stamps. Since he has chosen at least two different countries as his special topics, he can take on comparative philately as well as research philately.”

However much they were modified later, these indications do give an idea of how collectors thought 100 years ago, In fact, the ‘grandfathers of philately’ were still very young when they embarked on philately by way of writing and stamp-collecting. A. E. Glasewald, Alfred Moschkau, Richard Krause, Rudolph Krasemann (*1875, + 1908, author of the Bibliography of the Most Important Special Works on the Postage Stamps of individual countries – 1907), Louis and Richard Senf – to name just a few – had barely, or just exceeded, their 30th year when their activities laid the foundations for philately in Germany.

In further chapters Krause deals with all the facts and activities relating to systematic collectors. Amongst them are “The printing of stamps”, “Watermarks”, “Scrapbooks”, “Kinds of stamp to be collected”, “Stamp washing”, “Observing peculiarities/differences”, “Care of the collection”, “Cancellation stamps”, “New issues”, “Bringing in new and juvenile collectors”, and many others in a total of 38 sections. An appendix (the first in philatelic literature), gives the most important philatelic abbreviations, the principal philatelic terms and some colour details in German, English and French, a “Special table of the different kinds of forgeries” (a very interesting listing of the points whereby forgeries can be detected), heraldic names for colours and a “20 centimetre measure for entires collectors”.

In “Chapter VI – Graphics”, which at 54 pages is the most extensive section, Krause also deals with the production of postage stamps, types of writing, languages and their scripts. A short section is even devoted to “Colour blindness”, “Styles of postal ornaments and architectural styles” are dealt with in Chapter XVIII. It would be worth reprinting this work for its 100th ‘birthday’ (1989).

Even “Chapter XXXIII – Bringing in new and juvenile collectors” is still partly relevant after 100 years, so we will conclude by reproducing it in full:

“The aim of each and every stamp collector must not only be to carry on collecting and make his experiences known in the specialist press, no, he must also seek to increase the number of fellow connectors. Good ways of doing this are the exhibition of his own albums, conversation on the subject, display of the membership lists of societies so that lay people can see that all sorts and conditions of people of cultural importance take part in philately, loan of magazines, etc. One could even offer to give a few duplicates from his own stamps (often a cheap satisfaction), to introduce the other person to philately. Obviously, one will not always meet with success. Many people lose their enthusiasm for going on collecting when they have hardly reached their first thousand, particularly when collecting will involve the expenditure of a little time and money. It is very noticeable that people will happily spend ten times as much in wine and beer houses, but it is amazingly difficult to keep a happily captured new collector going unless he is enjoying himself, even when everything necessary is to hand.

This is where the layman comes in! Take schoolboy collections and their owner who can be assumed already to have some philatelic knowledge. Little boys often become great philatelists if advice and hints are given here and there, if they are treated with kid gloves and their little school albums handled, even though they are well-thumbed and the stamps are a bit dirty. Of course, there is no need to have much to do with callow lads in short trousers, but a little present of stamps now and again or some good advice are not to be despised, and young people are usually grateful. If we can early plant the love of philately in the hearts of children, we perform a good deed that will certainly bear good fruit. However, the schools have so far shown themselves to be the enemies of philately, a circumstance greatly to be regretted. Of course, there are also shadow sides of philately, visible mainly in the form of cheating, haggling and the turning aside from study and seriousness, though the bright side has always prevailed over the forces of darkness.”

Although in our society the relationship between the schools and philately has altered towards the positive, there is still a need for more members to take an active part in our youth work, so that the number of active philatelists recruited from the great crowd of stamp-collecting children and youths will continue to rise over the coming years.

Berlin, 3rd October 1852

My Dear Christine,

These lines are written to you by your most unlucky friend, who is being persecuted by Fate. I know you will share my grief and despair when you realise what has happened. My husband is insane! Isn't that terrible? Such ill luck! His mental breakdown has come on gradually, and I have every hope that he will become normal again. But hear what happened:

It is now over six years since I made a happy marriage with Heinrich, and our prospects looked rosy since he was, as you know, a teacher at the Wilhelm High School and I was able to contribute a little something to the marriage. We could thus lead a happy and peaceful life, and plenty of people envied us.

Some months ago Heinrich started collecting. Now there's nothing wrong with that you will say. People, and very highly regarded ones at that, have always collected books, coins, autographs, prints, etc. If that had been all, I would have said nothing about it, all the more so as Heinrich does not drink, does not smoke, and does not indulge himself. But – and now comes the awful part – Heinrich does not collect this sort of thing, no, he collects postage stamps! I hope you know what postage stamps are. I think they were first used here about two years ago, and are used by being stuck on letters to pay the postage. As you see, simple and harmless little things. These little pieces of coloured paper, which other people throw away – what else should they do with them – Heinrich has begun to take off. And not just from letters sent to him, no, he bothers all his friends and acquaintances and even strangers to let him have their stamps. I seem to recall reading some years ago that there were some people in England who had covered entire rooms in stamps. Obviously such behaviour is rare, but I can imagine that a room papered like this could look quite pretty under some circumstances and would be cheap as well. However, we should avoid this kind of "collector" as well as all can't be right in their upper storeys either. But our poor Heinrich is in a much worse case. If he simply wanted to paper rooms, then for Heaven's sake I could put up with it, but Heinrich goes in for a totally different type of collection: he studies every stamp with reverence, as if it were a gift from God, carries it about as if it were fragile, stares at it front and back through a magnifying glass, soaks it in water, in short, he has gone completely made over these little bits of paper.

I watched this going on for a while, and thought his collecting mania would die off of itself. No hope. My husband now has stamps on the brain, and the more his collection grows, so that he can arrange it tidily and stick it into exercise books, the less interest he takes in his surroundings.

I tell you, he doesn't care what I put in front of him for dinner, he who used to take such pleasure in his good, he neglects his clothes and looks as he did when a bachelor, before I took him in hand. What a job I have to see he shaves and gets his hair cut. His forgetfulness knows no limits. Forgetting his umbrella, yes! You know all absent-minded professors are supposed to do this, but a short while ago he even managed to leave a purse full of money on the counter when he was buying something, and on top of that left his purchase behind as well. Once he hunted for his tie – and it was hanging on his arm. Not long ago he had to open the door to Aunt Frieda, mistook her for a beggar, shouted “we’re not giving” and slammed the door in her face, in a rage at being taken away from his collection. Frieda is our rich aunt, and you can imagine what the result will be when she turns round and says “I’m not giving”! But he will part with money for stamps. Last week I found out – by indirect means of course – that he had given someone 3 silver gröschen for a few used stamps. You really wouldn’t have believed it possible.

His matrimonial duties – you are discreet, aren’t you, and I can be quite open with my bosom friend – he now neglects entirely. He was, alas, not too keen on this side of things before, and now he has completely ceased any intimacies. You know how much I have wanted a child for years; now every prospect of becoming a mother has vanished. All the energy, which between ourselves left something to be desired in any case, now goes into his rage for collecting, and I believe he will soon be quite unable to meet my need for love, even if he wanted to. Only once did he get excited and embraced me tenderly, when he had unexpectedly got hold of a letter carrying an American stamp: the first in his collection as he keeps on mentioning with pride. They are gradually beginning to notice his obsession at school, although, at least up to now, he has tried to hide it.

I naturally asked our doctor a while ago how to cure Heinrich. The doctor explained that what is called “stamp mania” is a disease that only occurs sporadically, luckily. Such people get very irritated if anyone interferes with their doings. Sometimes bloodletting, and often cold compresses round the head, will improve the condition. However, a complete cure will only happen very slowly of itself. A change of air might also be good. All very well, but how am I to give Heinrich cold compresses or draw blood out of him. He would take us to be deranged, whereas he is that. He is completely cracked, and only makes sense when someone takes an interest in his stamp collection. I shall have to take up collecting myself, so that everything will not be completely wasted. He wrote my mother a rude letter not long ago, because her last carried a stamp from which the picture of the King had been cut out. By ill chance the stamp had also been stuck on crooked. He wrote about lese-majesté, criminal and stupid womankind, who did not know how to handle their scissors.

Dearest and best Christine, I could go on for hours telling you about my unhappiness. I have tried everything to get Heinrich back on the right track and get rid of these cursed stamps, but unfortunately all in vain. I now have no more ideas and ask if perhaps you, who are younger but more energetic and experienced, know of anything that could bring my poor Heinrich back to normal.

I embrace you in thought, your unhappy

MINA

Ps: Please burn this letter because of the intimate details it contains.

Plauen, 8th October 1952

My very best of Minas,

I read your letter with deep sorrow, and genuinely feel for you. As you well know, when I visited you three years ago your poor husband made the best of impressions on me, and nobody could have foreseen that he would be afflicted in his mind. Even though according to your account Heinrich appears to be very ill, you must not give up hope of his eventual recovery.

You must just have patience. My husband does not, fortunately, collect – except money, which often does not suit me, as he overdoes this form of collecting as well, he is too thrifty. But that is always better than being too frivolous. My husband is thus completely normal, enjoys the best of appetites, carries out his duties – including the marital, I may add – with conscientious punctuality. He often drinks a glass of beer, and smokes a cigar with it. These are all his indulgences. However, if he ever did want to start collecting – quite apart from postage stamps; as I simply cannot imagine him getting so far into anything – I would certainly be in a position to divert him from it. I still think diversion is the best cure for this type of sickness. Perhaps you could try this method. Visit the theatre with him, take him on trips, get him into company, in a word do everything you can to stop him clinging to his stamps and meeting their unwholesome influence. If you can do this, you will have won, it cannot be long till Heinrich becomes aware of his “mania” and grows ashamed of it. The books of stamps will then certainly go into the fire where they belong: your husband is saved.

Apart from that, I have some very pleasant news which I had almost forgotten in thinking of sad account. We are moving to Berlin in December, and shall have Christmas there, since from next year my husband starts a management job in the Müllner & Son spinning mill. If my advice has not succeeded in getting your husband’s head to rights by then, I will gladly help, dearest Mina, to make him forget his stamps.

So trust in the future, and everything will be all right again. I am looking forward very much to living in Berlin – Plauen is a frightful hole – and shall be happy to be close to you again, as we were in earlier years when we were so happy together in Kötschenbroda.

Lots of love from your true friend.

CHRISTINE

PS: Best wishes from my husband

Once Christine was in Berlin, she kept her promise and began to help her friend to make Heinrich “normal” again. At first she pretended an interest in stamp collecting, but soon began – in line with her own advice – to shift the Herr Professor away from stamps, but at the same time shifted his attention in her direction, which was not difficult as she was a pretty, lively blonde, alongside whom Frau Mina had little to offer.

However, Christine worked an even cleverer trick. She decided to arrange things so that her own husband would gradually become interested in stamp collecting, and would get so involved with it that, true to type, his attention would be directed away from her during his free time, and so away from her relationship with the Professor.

And thus in the joyful month of May 1853 Mina wrote joyfully to her mother in Hamburg to report that Heinrich was quite himself again, thanks to the good advice of her bosom friend, and that he was amiable and gallant to her as never before (straying husbands are notoriously nicer to their wives at home than before – because of their feelings of guilt), and that Heinrich no longer wanted to bother with stamps. However, the disease seemed to be very catching, since Christine’s husband had not it in just the same way as Heinrich. Heinrich’s exercise books with the stamps had now been passed on to Christine’s husband.

SIEGER PRIZE FOR PHILATELIC LITERATURE

The prize for the best work in the philatelic field instituted by Director E. Sieger of Lord has now been awarded for the second time. This advertisement for the prize states that at the end of each year a council of prize judges will decide what was the best publication of the preceding year. In 1923 the decision was transferred to the "Society of Philatelic Literature Collectors", from whose members the jury was selected. They were Mr. Carl Beck, Counsellor Dr. Kalckhoff, Counsellor E. Pauli, Dr. Pirl and F. W. Thulmann. The Sieger prize medal this year was unanimously awarded to Mr. Alexander Bungerz for the "Great Lexicon of Philately", and we heartily congratulate Mr. Alexander Bungerz on this well-deserved honour.

THE STAMP FRIEND

A collection of accurate illustrations of postage stamps from all parts of the world enlarged several times.

Sixty years ago a work was published under the above title by the firm of Moritz Rühl of Leipzig. It is known and highly esteemed by bibliophiles by the title "Rühl's Stamp Friend". It consists of 12 parts in 20 x 14 ??? former, with eight coloured tables in each. The binding is a yellowish paper, with red and black printing for parts 1-7, and slightly different printing in black only for parts 8-12. In V. Suppantisch's "Bibliography" item 503, p.192/93, the number of parts is given as eight only, but this mistake is corrected in the supplement, p.748. Herr Ton states, in his "Handbook of the German Philatelic Literature" that from 1872 onwards the remainder of the tables were issued under the title "Collection of 100 giant postage stamps in the original colours". The Crawford catalogue states that "probably there are four further tables from the year 1871", and these are reproduced in the "Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society", October 1909. These four supplementary tables are lithographed, whereas the others were wood engravings. They show, printed in blue, the stamps of the United States, Brazil, Belgium and France, and are only mentioned here for the sake of completeness, as they have nothing to do with "The Stamp Friend".

The covers for parts 1, 2 and 4 are specially printed, and have the contents of the enclosed tables on the 1st page, the 4th side gives a prospectus for the entire work, whereas P.3 of Part 1 has adverts as well. Parts 3, 5, 6 and 7 have the list of contents stuck on and also have the prospectus on the last side of the cover. Part 7 also has the contents inside. As mentioned above, parts 8-12 have slightly different black printing on the first page only, and the part number (etc) are inserted by hand, and a contents list is enclosed. Part 7 also exists with the part number written on.

There are no details of years of printing or publication. Crawford gives them as 1864/65. The first mention of the work is in "Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler", No. 12 of 1st April 1864, which also gives its price, 5ngr per part.

Part 1 has a sub-title "Foreword" (4 pages) which says "The postage stamp, this important by-product of the great international world commerce, the irresistible forward march of cultural and commercial progress and the intimate contact and understanding between all the peoples of the world is, apart from ready money, the sole medium of exchange understood everywhere, in Europe as well as America, in Asia as in Africa and Australia."

However, this universally recognised token does not serve merely its ostensible purpose, but because they are very tasteful and attractive they are generally and increasingly sought on publication by people who simply want them for stamp collections. This has led to an extensive trade in stamps and has given rise to a relevant literature, as witnessed by these five journals in various languages and a whole quantity of literary productions.

Bearing this in mind, the trend in stamp production is increasingly towards the union of artistic beauty with the practical, as can be seen from practically all the more recent issues.

With all this, plus the increasing part played by stamp collecting, it is taken for granted at the present day that the object will be treated suitably.

Partly because of their small size, partly because of the cancellations, partly because of the frequent-hand-to-hand transmission, the sticking into and removal from albums and the fading of the colours, a large part of the most important stamps are now hardly recognisable, so that these very ones of the greatest interest to collectors and which he most wishes to learn about, have been lost.

The "Stamp Friend" tries to tackle this problem from all sides by giving pictures of stamps as true to the originals as possible not only in the design and layout, but in the original colours as well. Moreover the pictures are magnified several times (which is often very difficult to carry out) so as to make them clearly available for examination.

One of the first problems facing "The Stamp Friend" was to get fine layout, careful drawing and brilliant colour printing for the pictures of stamps and keep them consistent throughout the entire work.

The sequence of pictures (assuming adequate participation/co-operation was planned so that every country issuing stamps would be represented even in the first part. The subsequent parts would illustrate the characteristics of the principal groups, so that they would finally build up a rounded whole satisfactory for all those interested in the work.

The rich material had been collected over quite a long time, carefully arranged and according to the Introduction was already partly in the hands of the artists involved, so that this beautiful and interesting collection should be brought to a conclusion within a reasonable time. It would then represent a stamp collection which would be very seldom assembled so completely by any other means: even if it could be found, it would cost an enormous sum, whereas the "Stamp Friend" was available for a relatively very modest outlay.

The tables consist of wood engravings, and show the stamps at a size of about 6 x8 cm. They are very carefully produced, particularly as regards the lettering and figures, whereas the heads have some out very differently. Thus, on the 2cents Sandwich Islands we see a very badly cut head of Victoria (or Victory) next to an artistically worked head.

THE STAMP FRIEND

By Alexander Bungerz

(conclusion)

Many pictures are interesting because they deal with trials/essays, not with known stamps or sections of covers; thus for Denmark we have the square trials with the head of Mercury and the picture of King Frederick VII, the first at values of 4RBS – 1¼SCH.C, and the latter with values of 8RBS – 2½SCH.C. The legend on both designs is "K. G. L. Post F. R. M". In the "Short Description of the Trials Collection of Martin Schroeder, Leipzig" these two examples appear under No.164 (Moschtau dates both of them to be the year 1850 in his "Handbook for Trials Collectors"). As well as the 7 schilling stamp, Hamburg has a 1 schilling trial with the legend "Fr. Stadt Hamburg Postmarke", and two private postage stamps. Both came from the Institut C. Hamer & Comp; the first is square with the legend "Hamburger Boten", the second round. The value of both is given as $\frac{1}{2}$ (schilling). Russia shows us a round stamp the size of the first cancellation stamp on the envelopes, with a legend to say this is a telegraph stamp. In Wurttemberg we also see sealing stamps for returned letters.

Asia is quite understandably far behind Europe, since at that time there were nowhere near so many Asian stamps; the collection contains only the British East Indies, Ceylon, Hong Kong, and Java, by which is meant the Dutch Indies. The notes to the first country many be of interest: they read "Surface area 68,706 sq. miles with 176,634,144 inhabitants. Religion: most of the inhabitants profess Brahmanism, then come Mohamedons, Christians and Jews. Principal cities: Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Hyderabad. Principal mountains: Himalayas, Vindhya. Principal rivers: in the north the Indus, Ganges and Brahmaputra, in the south the Mahnadi, Godaveri, Kistna and Kavery. Animals: elephant, tiger, panther, lion, apes, snakes. Plants: indigo, cotton, sugar, coffee, rice". It does not lie within the scope of a critique of the philatelic content of a book to criticize these remarks, after more than 50 years we can hardly so do, but I will point out that the author even then should have known that there are also many Buddhists in India, but no lions! There are five illustrations.

Africa is also given five illustrations, starting with the Cape of Good Hope. I will reproduce the attached notes without comments: "Surface area 5,900 sq. miles, with 267, 096 inhabitants. Principal rivers: Orange, Kei, Fish, Gamtos, Gaurit, Olifant. Climate: there are two season, summer from September to April and winter from May to September, which is healthy. Plants: date palm, banana, fruit, vines, walnuts, oranges, lemons. Animals: antelopes, quaggas, zebras, ostriches, leopards. Principal city: Cape Town". The triangular stamp represents philately. Liberia, Mauritius, Natal and Sierra Leone follow. Reunion and St. Helena are missing.

The next to be treated is America, which is philatelically rather poorly treated since a number of countries are missing which were already known to collectors in 1866, and were included in the Handbook from the firm of Dürr in Leipzig, which appeared in 1863 but was not known to the author. The missing states include Argentina, Buenos Aires, Chile, Nevis, Peru, St. Lucia, Danish West Indies, Uruguay, Venezuela and what was then New Granada, now Colombia. We find the following countries included: Bahamas, Barbados, Brazil, British Guiana, Canada, Columbia and Vancouver Island, Cuba, Puerto Rico, Grenada, Jamaica, Mexico, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Trinidad and St. Vincent. Apart from Brazil, Mexico and Trinidad, the usual information is missing: each country is represented by one stamp, Bahamas by two, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick by three, and Canada is distinguished by first. There is a total of 23 stereotypes.

The last part of the earth, Australia, is given 14 illustrations, covering South Australia, Western Australia, New Zealand, New South Wales, Queensland, Van Diemen's Land, generally called Tasmania today, and Victoria. Geographical and similar data are completely lacking in this case, which hardly matters, but unfortunately the countries of New Caledonia, Philippines and Hawaii are also missing, though they were then known to the collecting world and to literature.

Nevertheless, "The Stamp Friend" is an interesting document from the childhood of philately, and as such deserves to be rescued from oblivion. If my words help to arouse interest in the literature so unfortunately neglected by many collectors, it could only be to the benefit of our subject. Many old collectors who now have extensive and valuable collections could certainly look through their old catalogues, price lists and magazines and find many items that bibliophiles like and would value.

The owners, who perhaps have little interest in or comprehension of them, could then exchange them for rare stamp. If any reader of these lines has any such material amongst his old possessions from previous times, and would part with it, I should be very grateful to hear about it.

THE PHILATELIC PERIODICALS OF SPAIN

I believe that no catalogue exists of the Spanish periodicals devoted entirely to postage stamps. I do not intend to compile one, but I do wish to rescue from oblivion the ones that chance has put into my hands, since aficionados of this branch of philately consider them worthy of collection and study. I will start then by saying that the publications which have come to my notice are as follows:

[I have not considered it necessary to have had the listing of periodicals translated.

This is the information which I have managed to acquire relating to the philatelic press of Spain. I do not claim it to be complete, or anywhere near, since good luck counts for more than diligence when it comes to bibliography. Moreover, the ones listed have the defect of being dry and uninteresting since we lack the enlightening details it is customary to give in a paper of this sort about the duration of the periodical, its factual existence or non-existence,, the greater or lesser merit of its articles, engravings, typography and the other factors that would recommend it from the learned, commercial or literary point of view.

I mentioned above the suspicion that there was a gap of twenty years (1871 to 1891) during which no magazine devoted to philately was published. I think this can be easily explained by the fact that trading in and sale of stamps was forbidden by law; moreover a country so addicted to bullfighting and lotteries would not take readily to the gentle and peaceful task of arranging old stamps. The fashion finally penetrated Spain, and thanks to the prestige reflected from abroad it began to develop with all possible vigour in Spain. I say with vigour, since it would have been a rare and extraordinary thing if a nation so inferior in commerce, industry, riches and power to the rest of the world had taken a leading place in philately. The Spanish periodicals that did appear were in the main worthy and valuable and thus were recognised as such by the judges at various foreign exhibitions. However, we must admit, since it would be ridiculous to do otherwise, that as far as their artistic and typographic effects are concerned they do not reach the level of, for example, Le Timbre-Poste (Brussels 1863), The Stamp Collector's Magazine (London 1863), Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie (Paris 1875), The Philatelic Journal (Birmingham 1872), Guida Illustrata del Timbrofilo (Bologna 1876), Berliner Illustrierte Briefmarken Zeitung (Berlin 1878) and other which are in their field what The Times or the Revue des Deux Mondes are in the political and literary fields.

Though we recognise and admit our modest place, no-one can justly despise us. Captains, priests and merchants can alternate with generals, bishops and bankers. Though it may not have a ducal diploma, Spanish philately could show to noble rank by means of a full and complete list of the books, catalogues and periodicals it has produced, not forgetting the names of López Fabra, Isasy, Argiles, Vázquez, Burguera, Rua Figueroa, García Mauriño, Fernández Duro, Leopoldo López and others who have supported it with their learned pens and commercial activity.

There is certainly no lack of people competent to carry out the work I have indicated. If the choice were left to me, I would entrust the task to Don Domingo Delgada de Mendoza, confident with his clear understanding, his love of philately and his steady activity in anything he undertakes, along with his graceful style, he will give us a useful, accomplished and attractive work. I hope my good friend will accept this invitation without saying along with the priest of Fruime

If you invite me to a party and then ask me to pay you, that is, if I am not mistaken, inviting me to invite you

I will end by saying how very grateful I would be for any correction and addition that philatelists could make to the present outline, and will cover myself with the wise man's saying

Est quodam prodine tenus, si non datur ultra, or with the vulgar aphorism

but better hard than none at all.*

The Continental Philatelic Magazine No 3.

Before discussing Mr. Pemberton's articles, first something about himself. Edward Loines Pemberton was born in the U.S.A on December 1 , 1844. As a very young child he lived already in England. At the age of 15 he started to collect stamps. He, did not however stop there, for when he was 18 years of age he published in collaboration with Thornton Lewis, a booklet titled " Forged stamps and how to detect them". This was one of the first philatelic publications.

Pemberton was a born stampcollector. He published much and , is with Dr. Legrand considered as the founder of the scientific philately. Pemberton was not afraid to state his opinion and fought relentlessly against the at that time prevailing abuses in the stamp world. Especially the large stream of forgeries and fake and bogus stamps descending on the stampcollectors during the years 1860-1870 was like a thorn in his eye. His fights against this situation was disappointing. He did not get anywhere. The editors of the philatelic magazines did not like idealists who might alarm their readers too much. It also would turn out that they (the editors) were printing news items without verifying , that what they printed was correct. And moreover there were many who did not believe Pemberton. What remained was a reader's comment now and then in which certain allegations could be mentioned. Early in 1869 Pemberton came in contact with young van Rinsum. It is at this time not possible to trace how this came about. It is most likely that Van Rinsum wrote to the already very well known Pemberton and requested a contribution to his magazine. Pemberton saw a good opportunity and wrote the article " The Boston Forgeries".

Van Rinsum was elated with an article by such a well known philatelist. Hjp:readers would marvel!

In this article is said that : the best forgeries originate in Boston. Experience taught the dealers from that city, that bad forgeries only yield little profit. That is why they make better stamps, which requires more work- however- but there is much more monetary profit to be made- the imitations and fake stamps, the latter known as " Yankee Bogus" are traded so ingeniously, that an experience of many years has to be the basis for the scam operations- the reason that they have been untouchable as yet is that they are too smart to be attacked. One of the first acts of the Philatelic Society of London must be the destruction of this brood of varmints.

This shall not be difficult, for their names are known to me. But it is not my intention to quote them here.

I will only describe some of their forgeries.

Then there follows a description of a number of forgeries and bogus stamps, after which Pemberton closes his article with " how inscrupelously those individuals will swindle, lie and forge ".

This is the first time an open attack is made on one of the most important centers of forgeries in those years.

And imagine , in a magazine published in the Netherlands!

Reactions in the foreign press

It is obvious that many people were alarmed:by this article Already in the May issue of " The Stamp Collectors Magazine" (afterwards called here S.C.M.) an item can be read titled

" The Stamp Dealers of Boston". The SCM staff received a letter from a certain Mr. Trifet from Boston. This gentleman is the publisher of " The American Stamp Mercury". Enclosed in this letter is a statement signed by six stamp collectors, that. they have bought many stamps from Mr. Trifet but that he never has delivered any forgeries.

The S.C.M. thinks this is an odd letter. They have never said anything bad about Mr. Trifet The readers may think what they want.

After that the editor of the S.M.C. discusses an article from the last issue of " The New England Journal of Philately" a small American magazine. This magazine writes : "There is no magazine in Europe in which is alleged that forgeries are made in Boston. In the name of Boston and the dealers who live there,, We dare the publisher of this magazine to name these forgers _ If not complied with this challenge, then we declare in name of Boston, the allegations of this magazine to be dirty, vicious lies and the editor a liar, defamer and a robber of philatelic honesty . Strong language purely coming from the later to be mentioned big name man in the background."

The S.C.M. chuckles over this item and asks the directors of " The New England Journal of Philately", that , if there are no forgeries made or sold in Boston, how come your paper is carrying an ads in which a Boston dealer offers a set " Pacific Steam Navigation Company " for 15 cents.Are these stamps real by chance?

And then we find a letter to the editor from Mr. Pemberton in the S.C.M. The staff - however - cautiously says that if a number of American readers might feel hurt by what is mentioned Mr. Pemberton will be able to take full responsibility, the letter again directed to the Boston-swindlers.

A number of forgeries are again discussed , to wit a stamp from Paraguay (see picture # 1). This stamp is being introduced by a certain Mr. Chute. This gentleman is not afraid to even work with falsified consulate correspondence. (Here

Mr. P. points to the stamps of the Dominican Republic (see pic. # 1) The editors of S.C.M. say, that they now also are in doubt about the Paraguay stamp, and commenting very casually that " Mr. Chute is a long time correspondent of ours, and we would regret it very much that he, as the case seems to be has connections with a bunch of cheaters". Then the staff makes yet a very deceptive remark by saying, that they wanted to warn earlier against the Boston forged stamps but first wanted to be sure and await the right opportunity. But that Mr. Van Rinsum was the first, are they not afraid to do so.

The Continental Philatelic Magazine No 4

This issue comes out May-1869. Among the usual ads we find one from Charles A. Lyford, Boston, Mass "Has constantly on hand U.S. Locals".... The contents consist of the Monthly Chronicle, the Review of Stamp Publications and a "Note", in which Van Rinsum says to intend to write an article in which the correlation between stamps and history will be explained. It is a pity that this article never appeared.

Then there is the continuance of " Later Stamp Forgeries", "Notes on the Stamps of all Countries" and a " Second Note of Philatelic Stamp Publications".

In this last article Van Rinsum comments on the above mentioned article from the "New England Journal of Philately", and says that names shall be mentioned for sure Tbo.Continental Philatelic Magazine No 5 The 5th. issue comes out on June 15-1869.

We are finding : A word to our readers, the Wenden Stamps and The Boston Forgeries II (by the editor). Van Rinsum received a letter from Mr. Charles A. Lyford. For this gentleman he ran an ad and received as payment 50 copies of Hawaii 13 ct. (Kings Head) and 100 copies U.S. locals . Because these were all swindle stamps, he had them marked false and returned. Lyford replied with a very angry letter. The Hawaii 13 ct. is real, for there is a dot behind "States", and the locals are also real for they come from different plates (!). If Pemberton calls a cow a sheep, this is not so because Pemberton says so.

I consider Pemberton a man with a limited outlook. Now that he got the color-mania and other philatelic misprints, did he - as far as stamps are concerned- degrade to a mumbling idiot. You marked my stamps false. They are not, so I had them cleaned. The bill for this is enclosed.

Van Rinsum replies that he has nothing to do with the stories of Lyford. The whole New England Journal of Philately together with all the dealers from Boston- compared with Mr. Pemberton do not know anything about stamps. You are all cheaters.

The Continental Philatelic Magazine No. 6

In this issue, which appeared on July 15-1969, we find after "Postal Chit Chat" the third part of "The Boston Forgeries" Van Rinsum says that he waited in vain for the continuation of the contribution of Pemberton. He can wait no longer because it is most urgent that the stamp collecting public learns everything about the swindlers.

Van Rinsum then declares that in Boston not only false stamps are traded, but that these are manufactured to wit by S. Allan Taylor and Charles A. Lyford.

Also are corroborating : J. M. Chute and Fred E. Washburn. Mr. Trifet has nothing to do with these gentlemen.

This open accusation causes a considerable uproar in the philatelic press. Lyford was practically unknown, but

Taylor was not just anybody- He was a well known stampdealer and the publisher of the first American Philatelic Magazine : The Stamp Collector's Record (1864-1872) Pro and contra started throwing punches.

" The American Journal of Philately", " The American Stamp Mercury", " The Timbrophile", " The Philatelist", " The Stamp-collectors Magazine, etc. all started to get involved with this business, but had to admit finally, that they also were duped by these swindlers. This is the big victory for Van Rinsum The "S.C.M." writes : " It is our opinion, that the conduct of Mr. Van Rinsum cannot be praised enough . Unafraid has he divulged the names and has consequently been run through the mud. However we got to know him as somebody who will do anything for the philately".

The " Philatelic Society " in London, not yet granted the "Royal" to its name concludes the following : " The secretary being handed copies of " The Stamp Collector's Record " printed in Boston sent by the publisher to its members resolves : in view of the lowdown interpretation of the articles in the magazine, that all correspondence received from this publisher, shall be returned to sender unopened." Van Rinsum can be proud !.

Samuel Allan Taylor

Although Van Rinsum mentioned several different names, investigation of the date concluded that there was only one main character, This was Samuel Allan Taylor. The others were merely followers and strawmen.

Taylor has been one of the most spectacular brazen, manipulating and an arch-swindler. of that time for stamps from private postal to bring into circulation not less than 134 from by him created private american postal

Another of his strong points was the emission of stamps from other countries that did not even have an official postal services Everything was put into circulation in a extremely shrewd way.

It is interesting to see, while leafing through the news items of old- but for those interested still vivid magazines-how the stamps were discussed and often described as great rarities, of which we know now, that they were Taylor's creations Among the pictures you see a small collection of the so-called-"Boston Bogus " stamps, all the work of Taylor and Chute.

It would take us too far to describe the adventurous life of Taylor. For those who would like to know more about this we refer them to " Stamps" of December 1952, " The Stamp Lover" Volume XXXVIII, p. 72 and " The Postage Stamp", of L.N. and M. Williams, London 1956.

What kind of man Taylor was can be concluded from his motto: " It is the first class liar and knave who makes figures in philately. Using the demand services he managed different stamps services.

20 YEARS OF THE HAMBURG PHILATELIC LIBRARY E.V

For all co-workers and friends of the Library who have followed the development of this 'work', it is a double miracle that we are celebrating this festival. Who would have thought in 1971 that this little plant of a library, that had to struggle to thrust itself up through the asphalt, would develop into a stately tree appreciated and respected over a wide area.

The second miracle to me is that in the many years since there have always been philatelists sufficiently interested in books to carry the work further. There have been many crises to overcome, but enthusiasm for the task of making literature available to the collector has always prevailed.

Looking back, we remember the many outstanding co-workers without whom this work could not have succeeded, but who are not here to celebrate with us, unfortunately. They deserve our thanks and their names will always be associated with the Library.

I must admit how happy I am to be able to celebrate this anniversary with you. I wish the Library continuing success that the committee and all their helpers could wish for their work in helping collectors and continuing to develop philately.

Renate Brandt
Chairman, Hamburg Society for Philately e.V

GREETINGS

The Hamburg Philatelic Library e.V has been in existence for 20 years. Founded and supported by the Union of Philatelic Societies of North Germany – who put their own collections into this library – and a series of idealistic philatelists. This truly co-operative effort by the North German stamp collectors has taken an outstanding place amongst existing German philatelic libraries and German philately – particularly its research-scientific elite – can no longer imagine doing without it.

It is the only library run almost exclusively by honorary active collectors. These people deserve the thanks of everyone. We think in this connection of the founders of the Library, Frau Renate Brandt, for a long time the chairwoman, Frau Ramm – too soon dead – who ensured the library's presence at major exhibitions and fairs, Wolfgang Ehrhardt – also no longer with us – who provided the Library with modern technical equipment, and the many other committee members and helpers of the library over the past 20 years, as well as the existing helpers and officers.

Future work will still call for work and effort on the part of Committee, helpers and members. These exertions could be made easier if more members would become helpers, and more societies and individual collectors would decide to become members. This would then be a visible return from philatelists to the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History, without whose financial support the Library could not operate.

The Philatelic Society of North Germany hopes the Hamburg Philatelic Library will carry on its wonderful work for philately and wishes joy to all its helpers in their turn.

GREETINGS

After only one year's activity as Chairwoman of the Hamburg Philatelic Library I am especially pleased to have been able to prepare for and direct our 20th anniversary celebrations.

We have had a long way to come before we could celebrate this event. I have given a short summary of the most important events in the chronicle following.

Naturally, the name of Frau Renate Brandt, who initiated the foundation of the library, and Frau Hilde Ramm must be mentioned before anything else. Frau Ramm's tireless efforts made the library known at exhibitions and philatelists' meetings all over the country. Unfortunately, we lost her far too early in 1982. However, the name of the Hamburg Library is linked with that of Frau Ramm still at the present day.

My special thanks go to our many voluntary helpers of both sexes, who go to such trouble to meet the wishes of philatelists, and can often by their painstaking efforts satisfy the most exacting wants. This is obviously not always easy, but we have become known over the years by just this kind of work.

In this connection many I say that a satisfactorily large number of philatelists have used the library, so that the initial efforts were not wasted, and the formation of the library has proved worthwhile. Naturally, the financial help given by the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History and our State Union should not be forgotten. Only this help has enabled us to use these rooms here and employ a librarian for the library.

I hope that we shall be able to keep the library going along with our helpers and members and that somebody will make sure that nothing stands in the way of a 25th anniversary celebration.

Jutta Fullrich
Chairwoman of the Hamburg Philatelic Library

CHRONICLE

1970 In March the Hamburg-Altona Society for Philately opened its book room at 33 Poststrasse, Hamburg. The following societies made their own libraries available on loan:

Winterhude-Alsterdorf Stamp Collector's Society
BSV Bergedorf
B. U. W.
Harburg 920 Stamp Collector's Society
Schleswig-Holstein Group for Postal History and Philately

- 1971 On 18th January was the inaugural meeting of the “Hamburg Philatelist Library e.V” Society. The first chair was Frau Renate Brandt. The number of members on 31st December 1972 was 90.
- 1974 Herr Harry von Hofmann became Chairman. The number of members has risen to 113.
- 1976 Removal to 10 Hohenfelder Strasse. The Library has a stand at NAPOSTA 76 in Wuppertal.
- 1978 Library stand at NAPOSTA in Frankfurt
- 1981 Frau Hilde Ramm becomes chairwoman. The Library for the first time obtains a subsidy from the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Post History e.V.
- 1984 Herr Harry von Hofmann becomes chairman again
- 1985 The Library of the Wandsbek Society is added to the Philatelic Library
- 1987 Herr Dieter Hüweler becomes chairman. The Library now has 163 members
- 1989 The new catalogue of holdings is ready in time for IPHLA in Frankfurt: it had previously been published in the DBZ. The Hamburg Library is the only to have a stand at IPHLA. Name is changed to “Philatelistische Bibliothet Hamburg e.V.” as the word ‘Bucherei’ is confusing for foreigners.
- 1990 Frau Jutta Fullrich becomes chairwoman. The Library has 186 members, and it began thus:

In the years 1963 and 1965 our Society held two exhibitions of literature in the Hamburg State and University Library. I had to assist Ruprecht Glasewald and Ernst Becker. This made me realise how difficult it was to locate the books which had been handed over by the Society to this library in 1957. The reason was: to make the books accessible not just to Society members, but to a wider circle of interested people. This proved to be Utopian. The books gathered dust in the stacks and were hardly locatable.

When in 1969 the possibility arose of being personally responsible, my dream seemed to be within reach. After deliberations within the committee of the Society, I visited the Director of the State and University Library with the agreement in my hand. There had been a change of generation in the meantime, and there was great surprise at the agreement since the Library people saw no possibility of making the books publicly accessible, i.e. of fulfilling the agreement, the Society took its books back, with a promise to hold a display of literature in the State and University Library during 1907.

The basic stock of the library was now in our hands. It remained to find helpers, locate a suitable room and persuade the Hamburg societies to give up their own book collections, which were usually lying forgotten in some cupboard, so that an interesting supply of books was available. Yes, then came the financing. Our Society agreed to cover for one year the costs that could not be met by other revenue. Thus the idea of the book room arose!

People ready to help with this 'mad idea' quickly came forward. They included Frau Bofferding, Frau Dettmann, Frau Hermann, Frau Kruper, Frau Drugman, Frau Ramm, and Mssrs. Knauer, Arthur Schmidt, Wolfgang Schmidt and Dr. Ulex.

How could we find a room? This was our most urgent problem. Herr Schmidt quartered Hamburg in his car. Many places were looked at, till we finally struck lucky in Poststrasse. Its position was centrally in the inner city, second floor but with a lift, parking available at that period, a reasonable rent – everything came into line.

The room question was solved but we had no furniture and no money to buy any. Again I successfully took up my 'begging bowl'.

The books available filled only a part of the bookshelves and cupboards – so we hoped that an appeal to the societies would not fade away unheard. To our great delight the societies parted with their treasures.

In March 1970 we were in a position to open the book room.

The books and journals were placed very loosely on the shelves, and duplicates were laid on their edges to make the shelves look as if they were full. Photos of that period speak volumes. Now we began to tremble. Would the book room be accepted? How far was it really in line with the interests of collectors of literature?

Targeted publicity, 'Cross-country' trips with the books to exhibitions and the growing interest of Society members all paid off. As the first year came to an end, it was obvious: the experiment was a success.

We had to overcome many obstacles. We had indeed a great interest in literature, but apart from Herr Knauer none of us had experience with 'library organisation'. Common sense was not enough here, so Frau Ramm and I went back to school and turned ourselves – with examinations – into institutional librarians. My search for information in Munich was not at first very encouraging, since there was never much material available, and it was clear to me that we should have to develop an entirely different concept. Moreover, our attempts to get financial assistance had only limited success. The number of visitors and the call for external loans, on the other hand, gave grounds for optimism.

In 1970 came the society and open meeting of the BDPL in Hamburg. We took advantage of this event, which coincided with the 85th anniversary of our Society, to hold an exhibition of literature in the State and University Library. This was very successful in calling attention to our Library. The book room itself was the venue for the ladies' programme of the Congress.

The Reading Room could now become a library. Which type of organisation would be most convenient? Independence of the BDPL, the Post Office and the city seemed to be indicated. We wanted to rely solely on collectors and the individual societies. Hence, in January 1971 came the foundation of the Hamburg Philatelic Library Ltd., and the infant, which could now crawl very well, was released for independence.

HAMBURG-ALTONA SOCIETY FOR PHILATELY IN HAMBURG LTD

We have our library again!

On Saturday 15th November 1969 from 10.00 onwards you will be able to look at and leaf through the books that disappeared into the stacks of the City Library in 1959. During intensive discussions with the new head of the City Library, I was able to make the point that it was ridiculous to have the books any longer unused in a store. Thus we got our library back. At once I found myself with the books in my home (19 Klarchen-strasse) and they could be seen there on 15th November. They only remained there for a short time till they had been catalogued and some of them bound. We plan to set up a reading room in which this collection, plus the smaller new one we had assembled in the meantime, can be placed and made available to everyone interested.

A library committee will take over the running of this ready room. Herr Wolfgang Schmidt has already offered to act as chairman of this new group.

Some members have already supported this new work with a financial contribution. The reading room will have to be furnished, as nothing can be done without bookcases, tables and chairs. Hence we have set up a Library Account: Account number 447608 Dresbner Bank. If you have in your bookcase or on the floor any books, magazines or catalogues that you can spare, we should be glad of them to complete our holdings.

You will get the next news of the reading room from Herr Schmidt.

I am pleased that we have finally managed to secure the 'restoration' of our library in our jubilee month. I am certain that all philatelists with an interest in literature will benefit from the reading room

PHILATELIC LIBRARY
33 POSTSTRASSE, HAMBURG 36

5th January 1971

In the ¾ year of its existence, the Hamburg Philatelic Library has picked up a noteworthy circle of friends and supporters. We warmly invite them, and the chairmen of the Societies who first made this work possible by loaning or presenting their Society Libraries, and the chairmen of the BDPh Working Parties who have made their publications available to us to the Inaugural Meeting of "Hamburg Philatelic Library e.V."

We shall meet at 1900 hours on Monday, 18th January 1971 at 33 Poststrasse.

Will the room hold every interested?

Minutes of the Inaugural Meeting of the Hamburg Philatelic Library” Society on 18th January 1971 in the Library Rooms at 33 Poststrasse, Hamburg 36

At 1900 hours on 18th January 1971, 31 people turned up at the Philatelic Library, Hamburg (see attached list of those present). Frau Renate Brandt greeted the visitors, described the aim of the meeting, to inaugurate the “Hamburg Philatelic Library” and asked those present if they were in agreement with the founding of the Society, to which everyone said year.

Frau Schmidt then proposed Herr W. Götting as clerk of the minutes, which was agreed unanimously. Herr Götting accepted the post. Herr Götting then read out the rules shown in the appendix, and threw them open to discussion. Those present agreed with the wording of the rules. Frau Brandt then declared that the “Hamburg Philatelic Library” Society with the rules as shown had been founded by those present. Frau Brandt then asked for the election of a committee of management. She proposed Herr Brocks as returning officer. Those present agree. Herr Brocks then asked for a decision as to whether voting should be by voice or ballot paper. Those present were unanimously in favour of a voice vote. Herr Brocks asked for nominations for the Committee.

Frau Brandt was nominated. Herr Brocks put this nomination to the meeting and asked those present to raise their hands if they were in favour. Frau Renate Brandt, senior assistant mistress, 19 Klarchenstrasse, Hamburg 39, was unanimously elected as chairwoman, Herr Arthur Schmidt, senior accountant, 10 Johannes-Böse-Wug, Hamburg 62 was nominated as vice-chairman. Herr Arthur Schmidt was elected unanimously. Other committee members proposed and unanimously elected were:

Karl Knauer, retired major, 57 An der Sternwarte, Hamburg 80
Frau Hilde Ramm, no profession, 13 Schillerstrasse, Hamburg 50
Peter Giese, shop assistant, 30 Görlitzerstrasse, Hamburg 70

Proposed for the council were:

Philatelic societies of BUW, Bergedorf, Winterhude, Barburg, Wansbek, Young Philatelists, DMV, Hamburg-Altona, Alsterdorf
Frau Krüger
Herr Bederke.

Election was unanimous.

Frau Brandt thanked these present for their choice, and asked if anyone wished to speak. No-one did. Frau Brandt then closed the meeting at 2100 hours.

FOREWORD

Because of late editorial work this year, only now can I offer you No. 61 of Literatur-Nachrichten. It remains at 160 pages, but the offers of literature have practically disappeared, since the review of literature has increased in extent. The number of journals evaluated has also increased slightly. What I foresaw last year has in the meantime happened – work on Literatur-Nachrichten is taking up practically all my free time. Although I asked for help in the previous issue, unfortunately no-one has offered. However, myself and my co-workers cannot cope with the task of evaluating still more philatelic journals. Hence, once again the heartfelt request to you, if you have the inclination plus some knowledge of languages, to help us with the evaluations. Unfortunately, I cannot offer any honorarium beyond a free copy of Literatur-Nachrichten.

In spite of the yearly publication, I am also up to date with the issue. The journals published up to June 1972, which awaited evaluation, have been to a large extent dealt with. The latest reviews have also been published. However, as was predicted in my last Foreword, the subscription can no longer be kept at 9.50DM or 10.50DM with postage. The reason is the constant rise in the postage rate for printed material. As I earlier included a bill in every copy, if you have already paid, could I ask you to let me have the amount of the difference. Otherwise, will you please use the enclosed transfer form, as I would rather spend my time making Literatur-Nachrichten more complete than writing out reminders.

May I express my thanks to all my co-workers, the ladies and gentlemen of the Philatelic Division of the Munich City Library and the Kalckhoff Memorial Library, and to the League of German Philatelists for their continued support.

Allow me to finish with my usual request: recruit for Literatur-Nachrichten in your circles of friends and collectors. It is valuable enough for every philatelist to use it in his work.

Berlin-Spandau, Sept. 1972

Fritz Gaedicke

Report of the Chairman of Society Group B

By the time you get this report, No. 60 of Literatur-Nachrichten for the year 1971 will have been sent out. Some 160 pages are devoted to the literature that has appeared in the past year, as far as it is known to me or to reputable reviewers. Also, and this to me is the most importance aspect of Literatur-Nachrichten, there is the systematic indexing of over 140 philatelic journals and exhibition catalogues. Every article mentioned in this issue can be seen or ordered from the Philatelic Division of the Munich City Library. There are over 40,000 references to articles which have appeared in the philatelic literature. Here we are gradually reaching the limits of what our esteemed co-workers can do, since the time they can devote to evaluation is limited. My most urgent task for the coming year is to find more workers. The sudden death of my co-worker, Hermann, Eilers, has left the Scandinavian region, comprising Sweden and Finland, uncovered. Moreover, the Munich Library is constantly getting new journals which also have to be indexed. Getting new recruits for the literature, and Literatur-Nachrichten in particular, is also one of my aims. I use every Society meeting as an opportunity to recruit new subscribers, and thus hope to get some at Cassel as well. I am thinking in the first place of philatelic societies. I simply do not understand why the majority of societies in the League of German Philatelists have no money for, nor interest in, Literatur-Nachrichten. There is still a lot of work in front of me.

I have also been very pleased to find so much respect in foreign countries for my little publication. I would like to be able to exhibit and recruit at all the international exhibitions. As I stress every year, Literatur-Nachrichten is an advert for the Literature Group, and thus for the League of German Philatelists.

The other work carried out by the Group is not very much. I try to respond to all wishes and requests forwarded to me. If I do not always answer by return of post, please excuse me on the grounds of pressure of work. In conclusion may I express heartfelt thanks to all my co-workers for their support, and hope for continuing fruitful co-operation.

News from the book trade

Edward Ruben of Copenhagen has just sent us his latest catalogue, for which he wants 20M.

Although this is a very high price, those interested should not be put off from buying it, since Ruben is correctly rated as extremely knowledgeable, and moreover carries out a world trade in postage stamps that is out of the ordinary.

The price rises of all unused European stamps are interesting and surprising. This relates to the fact that good unblemished stamps are too few to meet the demand; also there is a tendency for beginning collectors in France especially to show a particular interest in “unused”.

The future will show whether these prices are really justified, but meanwhile the catalogue will continue to be of great influence.

Extraordinary high prices noted for English and Austro-Hungary:

Chronicle

of changes that have occurred in the literary field since No. 5 of Philatelistische Litteratur.
(We are always grateful for corrections and additions from editors and literature lovers.)

German Empire

Monatsschrift für Ansichtskarten Sammler, by A. Mello-Göggingen (cf. No. 5, p.XIX and No. 10, p.XXXVI) has not ceased publication: No. 4 reached us, though late, at the end of October for this year. The magazine will appear more punctually in future.

Norddeutsches Postwertzeichen-Offertenblatt from Marion Noetzel in Sianowo (cf. No. 1, p.II, No. 10, p.XXXVI) has again ceased to appear with No. 8 of May this year, as we correctly supposed and has been kindly confirmed by some of our readers.

Bulgaria

Balkan (see our report in No. 10, p.XXXVII) has appeared in three issues (v, 20/7, 20/8 and 20/9). This has been notified by Herr F. Krallert of Vienna, who enclosed the covers and also by A. Burger of Giessen.

Turkey

Poste Oriental was advertised in May by J. Dimitracopoulo & A. Rossolimos of 7 Rue Tápé Bachi, Pera, but never turned up, and according to information from other editors has not appeared so far.

United States of America

Michigan Philatelist which we assumed in No. 5, p.XX to have ceased, was reported as appearing again in Goldwater by L'Ann. Timbr. This summer but has not yet turned up.

Briefmarken-Verkehr published No. 1 in April 1894, No. 2 did not appear till March 1895. According to its editor, A. Paimann, an issue should have appeared monthly in New York since then, but this has not yet happened. Sent gratis and post-free, is merely a price list in journal form.

The Boston Stamp Book appeared with No. 1 on 20th May 1895, published by A. L. Cassino & Co., in Boston, edited by J. L. Kilbon of that firm. Annual subscription for 12 issues 50 or 60 cents.

The International Philatelist, No. 1 of the new series, dated July of this year, edited by Herbert C. Beardsley in St. Joseph Mo (Box 216). No further issues have appeared.

The Philatelic Monthly and Philatelic Word has appeared in Philadelphia since May of this year, and has published two issues to date.

The Philatelic Advertiser has appeared since March of this year in Tuskaloosa, Alabama: not yet received.

The Bay State Philatelist — address: Drown Stamp & Publishing Co., Mattapan, Massachusetts, Tileston Avenue.

The Golden Philatelist reported by L'Ann. Timbr. Otherwise completely unknown.

The Philatelic Journal of America, published by Mekeel, St. Louis, MO., ceased with No. 126 of June of this year. In future Mekeel will publish a thick volume of philatelic articles on 1st April and 1st October, plus his second magazine.

Mekeel's Weekly Stamp News will appear weekly in future in a 12-page edition.

The Philatelic Newsletter appears in Minneapolis, Minnesota, according to other journals but was not available.

The Rocky Mountain Stamp reported in No. 5, p.XX, has so far survived 8 issues.

United States of Columbia

Columbia Postal should have appeared on 1st July of this year from Gastelbondo in Barranquilla, but has not yet been received.

Costa Rica

Costa-Rica-Postal, reported in No. 1, p.III and No. 5, p.XX, only 5 issues have appeared and it has presumably ceased. No. 4 and 5 (double issue) on 15th April this year.

Brazil

Le Timbrophile Brésilien should appear from 1st January 1896 from Mattoso Maia Forte & Gedilha in Petropolis, in a format of 4 pages per issue. Specimen issue in the press.

Argentina

El Filatelista Sun-Americano has been transferred from the ownership of A. Metté on his removal to Avignon (France) to that of Luis Sobrino, publisher of Guia Filatelica.

British India

Abger's Philatelic Monthly and Stamp Mart is published in Calcutta according to Ann. Timbr, but has not been received.

Egypt

Le timbrophile Egyptien has been published since about the middle of the year by Isaac M. Aboulafia in Alexandria. Not received.

Tunis

Tunis Philatélique should have been published on 15th September of this year by René Coscas in Tunis, but has not been received.

THE SUDETEN GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

by

Eduard Fleischmann (continuation)

18. Internationale Brief-Zeitung und Offertenblatt

Central organ for letter exchange, collecting, exchanges and acquisitions. Society organ of the international stamp collectors' club I.P.B. – "Internationaler Philatelistenbund". Business address – I.B.Z., I.P.B. Division, Zwittau. In spite of its lengthy and pretentious title, a completely worthless magazine of which a few issues appeared 1919/20. The editor is Karl F. Karger of Zwittau, Moravia, who was also responsible for all the "undertakings" mentioned in the title.

19. Sammlerwarte-Franzenbad (Stamp Magazine)

Publisher and editor: E. Sedlak of Franzenbad. Appeared September 1919 to August 1921. This magazine, though not very comprehensive, was well produced, but would not survive the inflation period. In 1922 Sammlerwarte passed into the ownership of "Internationale Briefmarken-Courier" of Munich, which however also ceased publication soon after.

20. Weltpost-Echo

Teplitz-Schönau. Publisher: Friedrich Leitenberger. Appeared from October 1919 to August 1920, fortnightly at first, then monthly. An excellent large-scale journal. Inflation silenced this Echo as well.

21. Die Briefmarke

Teplitz-Schönau. First issue dated 15th March 1921. Journal of the Teplitz-Schönau Philatelic Society. It was to some extent a replacement for "Weltpost-Echo", and was printed first in Teplitz, then in Leitmeritz. In July 1926 "Die Briefmarke" passed into the ownership of the Pickert Press in Leitmeritz. The society ended its connection with the magazine at the close of the same year and began to publish its own organ "Der Philatelist" in Haida. In the second half of 1928 "Die Briefmarke" was united with "Der Philatelist", and became the Society organ under the title "Die Briefmarke-Der Philatelist". From 1st January 1932 the Society again dissolved its connection with the Pickert Press, and again issued "Der Philatelist" as its only organ. "Die Briefmarke" never appeared again from this day onwards.

22. Der Philatelist (Leitmeritz)

Monthly magazine of philately. The first number appeared on 19th January 1922. Publisher and editor – Dr. Zitek of Leitmeritz. Printed by Pickert in Leitmeritz. The last issue appeared in November 1923 after the magazine had passed into the ownership of the Pickert Press. It flickered into life again for one issue on 25th November 1926, as the publishers wanted to demonstrate that the title was in abeyance but by no means dead, since the Society of German Philatelists of Czechoslovakia was publishing a “Philatelist” at the same time.

23. Der Philatelist (Haida)

Magazine for philatelists and collectors. Founder and publisher: Society of German Philatelists of Czechoslovakia”. The first issue is dated 6th December 1926. In August 1928 it was joined with Pickert’s “Die Briefmarke” under the title “Die Briefmarke-Der Philatelist”, with the “Philatelist” being the news-organ of the Society. A fresh split took place on 1st January 1932. “Die Briefmarke” finished and “Der Philatelist” has appeared since then as an independent journal.

24. Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung (Teplitz)

After the Pickert Press (Leitmeritz) had handed over the editorship and control of “Die Briefmarke” to the Society in August 1928 to act as the Society organ, a number of stamp dealers in Teplitz-Schönau started a new magazine with the title “Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung” in September 1928. This magazine had an unusually large advertising section and appeared to be very prosperous but unexpectedly ceased to appear at the beginning of 1931.

25. Die Cechoslovakische Briefmarke

Official organ of the “Spezialsammler Cechoslovakischer Briefmarken”. Publisher: Max Trill of Brünn. Editor: B. Heinz of Brünn. Nos. 1-18 appeared from 1st July 1927 to December 1928, then it ceased. The only German philatelic journals appearing in Czechoslovakia at the present time as “Donaupost” (in its 16th year) and “Der Philatelist”, Haida (in its 7th year).

PHILATELIC SUPPLEMENTS AND COLUMNS IN THE DAILY PRESS

These began before the War with the old Prague “Bohemia” and its supplement “Der Sammler”, which was printed every Wednesday in the text of the main paper (1 side), and was exclusively devoted to postage stamps. The first number appeared in “Bohemia” on 3rd June 1914. However soon afterwards – after the outbreak of the War, this supplement was discontinued. Shortly after the War, “Bohemia” began to print a short column headed “Philately” every Sunday. On Sunday, 27th November 1921, this again became a supplement of at least one page, with the title “Der Briefmarkensammler”, and this was printed every Sunday along with the main paper. From the middle of 1923 the “Briefmarkensammler” became an independent supplement of at least four sides, printed in such a way that its text was quite separate from the remaining text of “Bohemia”. From 1924 the “Briefmarkensammler” was only sent to those “Bohemia” subscribers who specifically required it. “Der Briefmarkensammler” ceased to appear with No. 13 of the year 1932, a victim of the economic crisis.

Following the example of “Bohemia”, other supplements and columns were produced in Czechoslovakia. We find them in various provincial daily papers such as those of Brünn, Olüetz and very many more. Official journals in the German language had very extensive philatelic supplements (e.g. “Prager Presse”, with its supplement “Philatelist”, 1921-1925, and the magazines from the Wolf Co. in Saaz). Some German dailies today still have special columns on philately, and we urgently request our readers and societies to send any supplements and columns known to them but not mentioned here, to Eduard Fleischmann, of Mesice near Prague – preferably giving the date of publication – and so contribute an item to the history of Sudeten German philately.

We would like to see copies of all issues published of journals, 1, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 17: they will be returned promptly.

NEW PHILATELIC LITERATURE

THE STANDARD INDEX TO PHILATELIC LITERATURE 1879-1925

by

Albert H. Harris

Full cloth binding, 255:194mm, 146 pages with over 20,000 items. Publisher: Harris Publications Ltd., 112 Strand, London W.C.2., Price: 25 shillings. Only a love of the subject and a work undertaken with great ambition over the last 8 years could have enabled this outstanding philatelic bibliography to appear. Begun in April 1925, the work was brought to a conclusion a few weeks ago. The philatelic works of the entire world plus the most important articles from 47 leading specialist journals of the British Empire are included. Over 20,000 bibliographic references are given in a well-arranged system. The prices are also given at which the literature named can be obtained from the publisher. The index is currently the only means of finding what books or what articles, have been published on a given topic. Bibliographic data such as name of the author, size, illustrations, supplements, year and part number are always given.

Attempts have been made for years in Germany to produce a similar work, but a bibliography can hardly be produced by a few lovers of literature without the support of a larger philatelic organization. The English work has involved considerable money and effort, so that the work which the editor has produced with such idealism can be offered at a price a long way from covering its expenses. Collectors who are interested in a particular topic but do not want to buy the entire work can also buy individual sections containing about 3,000 references at a price of 3s/6d. The sections are:

- I Abyssinia-Great Britain
- II British Guiana-French Colonies
- III French Colonies-Heligoland
- IV Heligoland-Naples
- V Negri Sembiland-Papal States
- VI Papal States-Tasmania
- VII Turkey-Zululand

No philatelic library should lack this bibliographical standard, and it should be, along with the Suppantisch Bibliography and the Crawford Catalogue, the constant adviser of every philatelist, not only of lovers of literature.

CATALOGUE OF THE LIBRARY OF THE BERLIN PHILATELISTS' CLUB e.V

Edited by Philipp Baruch with a foreword by Dr. Franz Kalckhoff. 2nd edition (closed 1032). 220:145mm, 102 pages. Published by the Berlin Philatelists' Club e.V., Berlin. The administration of large club and society libraries is becoming increasingly difficult at the present time. All too often the bigger libraries lack space, or the costs of running them (purchases, binding, catalogues, shelving, security, rent, index cards, etc) are not sustainable. In recent times we have seen such libraries taken over by municipal libraries and run by them. Along with this goes the scanty publication of library catalogues, since this is always being put off till better times. The Berlin Philatelists' Club however has one of the biggest specialist libraries, and it is very gratifying to have a complete, well-produced index after a 25-year break. This catalogue will not benefit only club members and lovers of literature; researchers and specialists will find it valuable and be able to use it with profit in their studies. It can be deduced from the foreword that the library has not always had rosy times, and has suffered a great deal from various changes and unsympathetic management during the war years. However, Privy Councillor, Emil Pauli, has run the library with great skill for 25 years (1907-1931) and its present happy state is due to him alone, which is why the Club has nominated him to honorary membership. Herr Philipp Baruch, the present head of the Library is a worthy successor.

The new arrangement of the Library and the present catalogue give eloquent witness to this. We hope that now the use of the library is facilitated by such an excellent catalogue, philatelists will use it eagerly for the main purpose of any library – borrowing books. The division of the catalogue reflect the layout of the Library:

I Journals:

- a) German
- b) English
- c) French
- d) Other Germanic languages
- e) Other Romance languages
- f) Multilingual
- g) Other languages

II Books, Pamphlets, Albums, Catalogues:

- a) German
- b) English
- c) French
- d) Other languages

III Price lists, prospectuses, auction catalogues, etc.

Appendix – works dealing with countries in alphabetical order

Der Philatelistische Literatursammler, 2 No. 6, June 1933

DER LITERATURE IN THE LEIPZIG UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

by

Dr-Phil Johannes Schubert, University Librarian

However, the main division of a philatelic collection is the magazines issued by the collectors press, which form one of the most important aids to philately. Papers of general interest to collectors and those which are purely society organs belong in this group. They are arranged alphabetically by countries then alphabetically by title within the country. The group includes 300 different journals, 100 of which are published in Germany, and the other 200 outside our country.

The post and its organization form a special group. This includes 30 items, and covers generalities, postal history, the world Postal Union, postal regulations and postal law, the post of individual countries, regions and towns, and finally, individual sections of the post such as railway post, ships' mail, air mail, field post, private post, etc.

A small group that needs special mention deals with franking (works on mixed franking etc).

One field diligently cultivated by philatelists is that of cancellations: hence this group is much better represented. It amounts to 70 items. It can be broken down in detail into hand-written and stamped cancellations. The latter group can again be divided into history and production of the cancellation stamp, types – place stamps (i.e. place of receipt and place of delivery), advertising stamps, post-paid stamps, use of the cancellation stamp, field post cancellations. Studies of the postal cancellations of individual countries, districts and towns are also included here.

The next group consists of literature on the actual postage stamps, the general ones covering individual stamps and entires. The general works are those on design, material (paper, etc), production (printing methods), trials (test printings), with a group on beauty and conservation, colour (e.g. the various colour charts), security devices (watermarks, control marks), means of separation, division into sheets, and issue, sale and use of postage stamps. So far this section includes 22 items. The special works (not now including entires), number 130 items, devoted to the postage stamp itself (i.e. over the entire world) and the individual parts and countries of the world. They can be divided into postage stamps (ordinary postage stamps, air mail stamps, charity stamps, U-boat stamps, etc.), official stamps, prepayment stamps, newspaper stamps, registered-letter stamps (and registered labels), bill-stamps and railway stamps. Amongst the monographs on the stamps of individual countries I should like to distinguish Kropf: The Postage Stamps of the Austrian Empire, Prague 1908; Bartels, Foster, Palmer: Postage Stamps of the Philippines, Boston 1904; Carl Schmidt: Catalogue of all the Postage Stamps of the Russian Provincial Offices, St. Petersburg 1910; Zumstein: The Stamps of Switzerland, Berne 1924; Otto W. Friedl: The Sicilian Plates, Vienna, and the magnificent publications by the Philatelic Society of London on the stamps of British India, Ceylon and the English colonies in America and Oceania. Of the French publications one should mention Maury: History of French postage stamps, Paris 1907.

Actual catalogues are also included in this group. They form a further 15 series. They obviously include Senf, Michel, Kohl (including the “Neue Normal-Katalog”); also Friedemann (Europe), Kürzl (including the “Welt-Katalog”), Heitmann, Willadt, Beyfuss (Hanover 1863); and for foreign countries: Stanley Gibbons, Bright & Son, Scott, Marimian-Yuert & Tellier, etc.

Non-official postage stamps form another group; with 30 items on private postage stamps, new impressions and forgeries.

Entires (if not already included under postage stamps in the general section) are dealt with in 15 items.

A new group relates to special features of stamps such as rarities, divided stamps and the like. It includes 5 items.

Another feature deserving a group to itself is the contents of stamps. There are 5 works on the values of stamps (by Alexander Bungerz, 1922), the philology of philately (by Oskar Kausch, 1886), Columbus on stamps (by Van Peurse), and similar topics.

A further group is devoted to the valuation and pricing of stamps, and includes several works.

Law in relation to philately forms a section containing 15 items, including what are called the “black lists”.

Another very extensive group is that relating to the stamp trade. It consists of 100 dealers’ lists, price lists etc., and 120 auction catalogues (from the firms of Köler, Maier, Stock, Sekula, etc), and because of their photographic supplements these may also contain useful material for the history of individual stamps (particularly rarities). Literature on dealers’ organisations, dealers’ meetings and the like is appended.

Works on collectors needs form an as-yet very insignificant part of the philatelic literature. From what is available I will pick out as an example Richter: the Stamp Collector’s Tools.

Not less scanty is the section on album publishers and the history of albums, which also has very few items. There is an opportunity here for Messrs. the album publishers to give collectors a helping hand.

Collecting itself has a group of 65 works devoted to it. The works by Krötzsch (Leipzig) and Hudetz (Vienna) stand out from the sub-group on “Statistics and (E)valuations”, From the sub-group “famous collections” I will mention Lindenberg: “The Entires Collection of the Petschek Brothers”, Berlin 1927; Lindenberg: “Catalogue of the Stamp Collection of the Imperial Postage Museum”, Berlin 1888; Reinheimer: “Short Description of the Trials Collection of Martin Schröder”, Leipzig; Riep: “The Collection (Special Russia Collection) of Baron Carl von Scharfenberg”, Berlin 1925, and finally one foreign work; Peckitt: “The Avery Collection”, London 1909. The third sub-division of this group covers the big national and international exhibitions, with the distinguished names of Maphila, Iposta, Luposta, Wipa and so forth.

The third-last group includes works devoted to the acquisition of stamps, i.e. to their purchase, circulation for choice, exchange and donation. I shall mention for illustration only the paper by Alexander Bungerz: How to deal with circulation packets (Kleine Sammler-Woche No. 1, Munich), and the second enlarged edition of the same work under the title “On circulation packets and exchange associations” (Sammler-Woche, Munich).

Another group, Miscellaneous, includes works which cannot with the best will in the world be fitted into this system. It covers such things as philatelic song-books.

Our classification ends with auxiliary disciplines. Here in particular we will find historical, numismatic, heraldic and other non-philatelic works.

This last named group is generally not too well represented in collections of philatelic literature, but – apart from the fact such collections are not devoted to these topics – it matters less for a subject collection forming part of a large public library; since this will contain an adequate stock of all conceivable disciplines and have it ready for use. The Leipzig University Library also has a large special collection on numismatic literature connected with its valuable and very extensive coin collection.

Finally, it must be remembered that certain works of philatelic literature are generally only available in large libraries. I am thinking of works that appear, for example, as part of a major scientific series or in periodicals. There are, for example, such works as Woodward's "A summarised catalogue of the postage stamps of Japan", 1906, in the Transactions of the Asiatic Society of Japan (this was moreover a preliminary to Woodward's great many-volume work on the Stamps of Japan, Shanghai, 1928), or Kurt Ammon's paper "The German stamp trade, especially after the Great War", Jena 1927 in "Abhandlungen des Wirtschaftswissenschaftlichen Seminars zu Jena". Not least by any means is the doctoral dissertation on posts and telegraphy, a summary of which after its appearance in September 1932 appeared as a supplement to "Archiv für Post und Telegraphie", No. 11, November 1932.

THE LIFE OF PHILATELIC PERIODICALS

by
C. Michaelis

To conclude my studies of this topic, I come to the ephemera. The group is worth bringing to the attention of the collector of literature, since the appearance of a new paper often took place almost without publicity, and the journals in this group have remained unknown to the majority of collections. The post-war and inflationary periods were especially rich in this type of journal. The literary content was frankly not very valuable in most cases, but some of them did come to grief financially because their make-up was too expensive. From the collecting point of view, however, these ephemera are of outstanding interest, especially as some of them are very rare indeed. The following list can only give some of the immense number of very short-lived journals that have appeared.

SOCIETY FOR THE FRIENDS OF PHILATELIC LITERATURE

Association for the Care and Promotion of Philatelic Literature
Chairman: C. Schmittdiel, 45 Toruquiststrasse, Hamburg 19

In spite of the present-day development of philately, the complaint still arises from those who know that large numbers of collectors still distance themselves from the detailed study of the scientific philatelic literature. Our hobby has fostered various special interests, but the literature on them is neglected. We only need consider where philately would have been today if serious students of postage stamps had not entrusted their results and knowledge to the press. Certainly the great majority of collectors would just be sticking one stamp after another into an album and calling that philately. Care has indeed been taken to give philatelic literature what all serious students judge to be its rightful place at the major international exhibitions in recent years. Many praiseworthy efforts have been made also to cater for lovers of literature at smaller local exhibitions. By and large however, philatelic literature is unfortunately not valued as it ought to be.

Some collectors have recognised the great value of philatelic literature, and have tried to promote the collection of literature as well as of stamps. However, so far the friends of literature have been on their own, and their wish to draw closer together has increased to the point where it has finally led to the formation of a Society. the aim of this Society will be to impress upon all collectors the great importance of the literature for philately and the value of an intelligent study of the literature. To do this, the Society will have its monthly organ “Der Philatelistische Literatursammler”, which will regularly publish:

- Scientific articles with a philatelic-bibliographical content
- Reports and reviews of new publications in philately
- Philatelic notices of literary importance
- Communications from the “Gesellschaft der philatelistischen Literaturfreunde”
- Detailed periodicals review with a systematic survey of their contents.

Further possibilities for reaching the desired objective are:-

- Exchanges of ideas and literature
- Loan of philatelic literature for purposes of study
- Converting duplicate philatelic literature into money
- Community of interest with all big and little public, university and private libraries
- Providing scientific and technical information on the basis of a detailed card index, for the cost of postage
- Providing magazines at reduced special rates

Since many friends of literature lack the bibliographical foundations to built up a philatelic library or promote the literature in any practical way, the Society has various bibliographical undertakings in view. Although there is absolutely no obligation on anyone – this must be stressed – voluntary participation in the work envisaged by the Society on the part of the members is very much to be desired. The following tasks are initially envisaged:

- General index to the philatelic periodical literature
- Register, possibly Handbook, of philatelic literature to date in the German language (handbooks, monographs, pamphlets, etc., excluding periodicals)
- Register, possibly Catalogue, of all German language philatelic journals
- Special register of philatelic-bibliographical writings and periodical articles
- Register of known philatelic journals
- Register of collectors of philatelic literature and society libraries at home and abroad

The manifold activities which a society of this kind will undertake make membership particularly advisable for philatelic researchers, editors, writers, publishers, society chairmen, librarians and collectors of literature. Collectors and societies who seriously intend to promote the interests of philatelic literature in the ways described above will be accepted for membership.

To produce successful results from the membership of societies as well, individuals with a particular interest in philatelic literature should, if possible, be elected to their committees. It has been found that closer contact with individual friends of literature can produce successful co-operation for the good of the Society.

Register and Possible Handbook of all Philatelic Literature
(Handbooks, Monographs, Pamphlets, etc., excluding Periodicals)
Published to date in the German Language

An Appeal!

The “Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature” hopes in the course of time to produce and publish a series of philatelic-bibliographical works. One of the works projected is a register of the German-language philatelic literature. If we look at the bibliographical literature on philately, we find that there are a number of bibliographical works which report in a more or less detailed manner on the German-language philatelic literature. However, we never get complete details, since either the work was concluded some years ago, or the later publications do not cover the whole of the literature. Uniform data have simply not been published in recent years. Quite apart from this, however, anyone who uses a philatelic library, whether private or belonging to a society, will hardly be likely to find in it all the bibliographical treatises produced to date. One or another work is missing, so that the lack of completeness is often very noticeable.

Also it is tiresome and inconvenient to have to look through a dozen books to locate what one wants, even if it can be found and does not prove to be in the missing work. To overcome this difficulty and at the same time take a further step in the promotion of philatelic literature, we have undertaken the work described above. However this work is not for lovers of philatelic literature alone: every philatelist, particularly the specialist, will need it. Any specialist who currently uses the literature to build up and extend his collection will have often felt the lack of a comprehensive bibliographic index. Hence, this appeal is to ask everyone for their friendly co-operation. The plans for the format of the work have not yet been finalised, so that useful suggestions are still wanted and could be taken into account in our compilation. We still need for our preliminary work anything not given in the following list, and the items in it marked with a star.

Anyone who knows about this bibliographical literature – particularly in libraries – is asked to get in touch with us. This request is addressed in the first place to all lovers of philatelic literature and to libraries.

REVIEW

Literature Exhibition at the 23rd Collectors’ Day of the Germania-Ring in Leipzig

This small exhibition held on 30th April this year was devoted solely to philatelic literature published by the “Germania-Ring” and Leipzig publishers. The exhibits came from the Libraries of the Ring and certain Society members, and the firms of C. F. Lücke and Senf Brothers kindly made available works from their companies and their Libraries. The literature on display was not arranged by subject, but by publisher. The most important works will now be listed: first came various old and new volumes of “Germania-Berichte” plus different monographs from the Ring on stamps, forgeries, cancellations, postal undertakings, etc., some of which were reprints from Germania-Berichte. The firm of Zschieschke and Köder, one of the oldest Leipzig philatelic firms, showed the “Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler”, the oldest German stamp magazine with its 48 issues from 1st 6 May 1863 to 1st April 1867, plus the second edition of a stamp catalogue. The firm of Ernst Heitmann was represented by its Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung, plus the Grosse Handbuch der Philatelie and a number of simple works including Krause: “Lehrbuch der Philatelie”, Finke “Geschichte der Penny-Porto-Systems, Dr. F. Kalckhoff “Neudruckwert”. The firm of Senf Brothers, plus Louis Senf as an individual, showed a great number of the philatelic works they have published, including Dr. A. Moschdau’s writings on watermarks, trials, history of philately; handbooks for stamp and postcard collectors, Dr. Kloss’s various textbooks of philately, and finally a number of the Senf catalogues of 1892. There was a complete copy of the “Handbuch der Postfreimarkenkunde”, published and, to some extent, compiled by Hugo Krötzsch, also the “Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung” issued by him from October 1896 to July 1919. Amongst the items from the firm of Fritz Seifert were “Leitfaden zur Einrichtung von Jugendgruppen”, the young people’s magazine “Basler Taubschn”, “Baden-Abstempelungen”, Deutsches Philatelistisches Jahrbuch”. The firm of C. F. Lücke showed the first albums of Bauschke and Kümmel, from which the well-known Schaubek albums developed, and also the first Schaubek album, also the firm’s publications “Die Briefmarke um Dienste der Wohltätigkeit”, “Atlas der Briefmarken-Geographie”, “S.O.S.-Rufe um der Philatelie”, and the “Post” 1932 (issued by this firm since 1st October 1932) which was founded in Leipzig in 1894 by Baumbach & Co. This firm also showed the works it published by the well-known specialist on German colonial stamps, Albert Friedemann, “Die Postfreimarken und die Entwertungen der deutschen Postanstalten in den Schutzgebieten und in Ausland”, “Porbeu und Entwierfer für die Marken der Deutschen Reichspost und die Aushilfs-marken von Tsingtao”, various catalogues and his “Berichte”. The same firm also exhibited works by Beck “Freimarken von Sachsen; Rommel “Zeitungs-literatur 1894, 1896, “Morocco”. Other periodicals published in Leipzig were “Philatelistisches Echo” (J. J. Arudt); “Berichte des V. L. B. B.” (Alwin Hoffmann), “Beiträge zur Postwerthzeichenkunde” (Senf Brothers), “Briefmarken-Umschau (Braig), plus a large number of single issues and stamp corners from various Leipzig magazines. During a survey of the exhibition by participants in the Collectors’ Day, the undersigned in a brief address described the arrangement of the exhibition and drew attention to particularly valuable items.

General Index

The magazine “Die Post” in its article “How can philately be fructified?” puts forward a suggestion which interests us as lovers of literature, and which we reproduce verbatim below:

General Index: No collector today can hope to follow the mountain of book and periodical literature or go through it for special topics. Hence we hear lamentations that the dusty volumes stand unused in the philatelic libraries. No wonder! Where is the badly needed General Index? Why does the “Bund” not take it in hand? Amongst its many thousands of members there are more than enough collectors with the necessary knowledge who are willing to carry out this work: they only need to be asked. Come on with an appeal!

We recall the appeal from J. Schütte, Magdeburg, which rang through all the German specialist press some years ago. We also know the programme of work of the "Society of Friends of Philatelic Literature". Here is the possibility for numerous lovers of literature to compile a general index, if the leading organizations will just take on the task of organising them and supporting them by active participation. Otherwise the "General Index" will always remain a Utopian vision.

Cheap Binding of Magazines

Interesting information on this has been obtained from Germania-Berichte, which we quote verbatim as follows:-

We have news for the collectors of all magazines who would like to have them kept from the first as if they were in a bound book. A linen-bound casing has a double support. Individual magazines are secured to this double support at top and bottom by means of curved pins. The outer part produces a good-looking and solid impression. The cover has a panel on which the contents can be noted. One case can hold up to 5 years = 60 issues, which each individual part lying flat as in a bound book, though each can be taken out directly and without trouble. Every collector and periodicals librarian will welcome this advance. Finally, the lover of literature will have no need now to send his journals away for binding, as he will have them to hand as if they were bound right from the start. We can recommend the purchase of these binders as strongly as possible. The price of individual binders varies with the format, and is basically cheaper than binding the periodicals. Enquiries to the G. R. Office.

General Index 1930-1932 to the magazine "Grüne Sammler-Welt"

Drawn up by C. Michaelis, the publication of an index to the first three years meets an existing need. The clear arrangement makes it easy to locate the manifold topics. The index can be obtained post-free from the publisher at a price of RM 0.25 (stamps or International Reply Coupons).

BULLETIN 3

Dear Philatelist and Bibliophile Friend,

Here we are at the time of year during which philatelic activities are in full swing. Sales are going on both abroad and in the four corners of our own country, public auctions compete with attractive items and numerous exhibitions solicit our visits.

There was Essen in April, London at the beginning of May, and very recently BELGICA 90 has been announced, whether or not one is a great admirer of this type of show, the one dedicated to the centenary of our federation will still be an event on the 1990 philatelic agenda.

The exhibition hall 4 has a stand reserved for the library (see the plan on page 5). Some fifteen showcases will offer the curious visitor as wide a panorama as possible of philatelic literature from its origins to the beginning of this century.

You will no doubt find there our president, Olivier Simons, to whom the organizing committee of BELGICA has given the responsibility for the Library. It will be a real pleasure on this occasion to tell you about the items set out for the bibliophile's scrutiny.

Don't hesitate to drop in there.

II: Proceedings of the Meeting of March, 24th

Our second meeting of the year 1990 took place in Mr. Stragier's very beautiful house. We wish to thank him sincerely for his hearty welcome.

Apologies from: Messrs. Burlet, de Clercq, Michel, Pirson, Goeteman, Sosson (OFAC), van der Panhuyzen and Vervisch.

Present Mme. Mossiat, Messrs. Mecre, le Jeune, d'Allegeershecque, Loontjens, Schooberechts, Simons, Stragier and Vatelet.

The meeting began with an exchange of opinions on the organisation of the Society and more particularly of the bibliographic index.

Everyone thought the idea had merit, and deserves consideration before opting definitely for one or other type of software. Everything depends to a great extent on the type of consultation envisaged.

On this subject, the principle of searching on the basis of one (or several) key codes seems to be accepted.

On the other hand, it seems that the UDC (Universal Decimal Classification) best meets the classification needs of a library. UDC is a system of classification which allots to each work one or more numbers consisting of a number which gets longer and longer as the subject dealt with becomes more precise: thus, each level of this number is a more specialized section of the number which preceded it.

The great advantage of this method is that it allows the user to specify his range of investigation more closely if the information supplied is too abundant. The converse is equally true.

We have now made contact with several people about designing a programme and will continue to keep you up to date with the latest information on this subject.

The floor was then given to Mme. Mossiat, who talked to us about a forger known in the world of philately for his skill and enterprising spirit: Jean de Sperati. Reprehensible as his activities may be, they are worth lingering over and Mme. Mossiat gave us a very lively account of them illustrated by numerous works dealing with fakes in philately.

The lady also circulated several stamps from Sperati's abundant production.

Other original documents were also shown. Of them, we may mention the album, as rare as it is interesting, of the Fournier forgeries, edited by the Union Philatèrique de Geneve. The example shown was specially made for Fernand Serrane. Again, there is a publicity leaflet from the beginning of the century, vigorously praising the quality of the "reproduction postage stamps sold by the house of Fournier.

Thanks again to all concerned.

III: Invitation

We have the pleasure of inviting you to our next meeting which will take place on Monday, 4th June about 14.30 in the actual premises of the Belgica exhibition. For this occasion we have not hesitated to reserve the audio-visual centre of Exhibition Hall 4, so as to organise a grand afternoon open meeting for which a special programme has been made up.

Why not take advantage of a visit to BELGICA 90 to come to our meeting? This suggestion is addressed in particular to our provincial members.

IV: Talk and Subject of the Meeting

The subject for the day is within the framework of Belgica 90, and we shall go into the History of the Letter Post in Belgium from its Origins to our own Days. Your President, Olivier Simons, will give an audio-visual presentation on a topic as wide as it is exciting: unusual postal transport. There is no shortage of examples, for men have at all times competed in ingenuity to ensure the forwarding of the mail in unfavourable circumstances. Let us think of the "pony express", the "tin can mails", the Moulin balls, mounted(?) balloons and carrier pigeons. If you have any documents relating to this subject, do not forget to bring them along.

Finally, the meeting will end with a guided visit to the Library set up in Exhibition Hall 4. This will enable us to learn more about the old material shown to visitors.

Hence we are waiting eagerly to see a great number of you taking part in the great feast of philately which is BELGICA 90.

V: Corrections

A misunderstanding led us to write in the previous Bulletin that Mr. Léo Clercq had donated a complete series of the bulletins of the Académie de Philatelie to the SBB. Unfortunately this was a temporary loan for consultation.

However, knowing the interest which these publications have for our Society, our vice-president, Mr. André Decre has undertaken to try and secure them permanently for us. We are very grateful to him for this.

VI: The Topic of "Forgeries"

Unusually, we are not giving in this bulletin the bibliographical references for the past month relating to forgeries in philately. Two specialists on this topic, Mme. Mossiat and Mr. R. Vervisch have in fact promised to let us have the list of books and articles which make up their respective documentation. A big thank-you as this is a wide-ranging piece of work, very complete, and containing more than a hundred references.

It will appear in its entirety in the end of year booklet which has been mentioned several times during our earlier meetings.

VII: Our General Meeting

This will be held during the month of December and we hope to organise a grand sale of books for this occasion. If you would like to put anything into this sale, you can send them in to the President from now on.

VII: A Philatelic Almanac

As we have already mentioned, the SBB intends to put out at the end of the year a work which we have decided to call an almanac. Why an almanac? Because the intention is to bring together a wide range of articles, some on bibliophilately, some on the philatelic events that have marked the preceding year.

By making it known to a wide audience we hope to alert the traditional philatelist to the early literature and reveal to him the existence of authors and works that are the foundations of our current knowledge.

This project is gradually taking shape and at the moment we are deciding on the technical make-up of such a publication. From the editorial point of view, a number of articles are in preparation, but we should be happy to hear from you. This is the first time a publication has been aimed at philatelists-cum-bibliophiles. Despite everything, bibliophilately remains a subject about which little is written. So here is your chance to write a few lines about, for example, a rather unusual book, a famous collection, a "forgotten benefactor" of philately, or any other subject close to your heart. We await your suggestions.

LIBRARY

The philatelist today is no longer content with simply collecting postage stamps. After many years of groping, he will sometimes have started to build up a reference collection, which will then become a philatelic library. To do this he will have to search out documentation and will begin to think of philatelic books as interesting and exciting investments and not as awkward expenses. On this topic, our country may pride itself on a rich philatelic and literary past which has made it known in the four quarters of the world.

The name of Paul de Smeth, Robert Delapierre, Louis Hanciau, Baron de Vinck de Winnezele ... represented the fine flower of Belgian philately 50 years ago. Though all these men have disappeared, they have nevertheless left us their writings.

Works as important as "The Belgian Post and its Various Postage Stamps", "The first Issues from Mexico", and the still-existing magazine "Le Timbre-Poste", are of world-wide fame.

Thanks to the specialised studies, the works of popularisation, and the numerous magazines that have seen the light of day in our country, philatelic knowledge has been universally diffused.

Nevertheless, the early works have an interest going beyond their simple content. Some of them remain authoritative, and some are as rare of the postage stamps they deal with.

Thus, Louis Hanciau's work on "The Belgian Post and its Various Postage Stamps", or the papers by André de Coch on "Number Cancellations" are striking examples of works to which specialists still refer today.

Finally, what we also like about old books is their binding. Here we are speaking as bibliophilatelists. To us, a rare book should be given all the care it deserves. The full leather covers, the gilding and clasps of the last century also remind us that every book has a history.

On this occasion of BELGICA 90 we shall uncover for you some aspects of the Belgian philatelic literature, particularly those relating to old books. With this in view, a guided tour will be available at stand number 11 of Exhibition Hall 4. We expect to see you in great numbers during the whole of the exhibition.

The gems shown in the Library cases at BELGICA come from the Major Belgian collections, namely those of:-

Mr. L. de Clercq
Mr. G. de Ram
Mr. H. Havrenne
Mr. A. d'Allegeersheque, junior
Mme. E. Mossiat
Mr. V. Schouberechts
Mr. O. Simons
Mr. R. Vervisch
Mr. G. Waroquiers

Olivier Simons
President of the S.B.B.

FOREWORD

A bibliography of the German philatelic literature must fulfil two purposes. On the one hand it should supply the philatelist with all the periodical literature in his field of interest without his having to search through the many volumes of "Literatur-Nachrichten", most of which are out of print anyway. On the other hand, it should enable the publications of a given author to be found in one place under his name. In addition, a loose-leaf format will enable constant updating to be carried out.

The bibliography is divided into the following sections:

1. List of the periodicals surveyed, and their abbreviations
2. Keyword register
3. Keyword index
4. Author index

The keyword register is a better and quicker key to the keyword index. The latter also includes the authors, and also given articles without an author ("anonymous").

The author index is the actual key to the original articles. The title of the work is located, in the following order:

Abbreviation for the journal, volume (underlines), page, year; or Abbreviation for the journal, volume (underlined), year, part, page. In this case the page number is separated by the a colon from the part number.

If an article is published in series form, the page number is given only for the first part, followed by "etc".

A volume number is not absolutely necessary, none is given for example in "Michel Rundschau" or "Interphil-Courier", which give only the year, the part number and the page, preferring simplicity over detailed bibliographical information.

Occasionally reference is made to authors who do not appear in the author index. These can be looked up in the appendix (important philatelic and numismatic literature since 1945).

All the literature quoted is in my possession, so that I can if necessary make articles or books available to anyone interested who cannot get hold of them otherwise. Articles from journals can be supplied in the form of photocopies.

The cut-off date for inclusion is the 31st December 1970, irrespective of whether particular volumes have been completed or not.

I have attempted to cover the periodicals as extensively as possible, so that in many cases my survey is more complete than that in "Literatur-Nachrichten". However, since this is the work of a single person, it is entirely possible that articles have been overlooked. I ask your indulgence over this.

The bibliography will be extended by supplements and kept as up to date as possible.

Hanover, February 1972

When the journal “Archiv der philatelistischen Literature” appeared from Herr Alfred Ihm of Wunsiedel in the year 1950, F. Kalckhoff wrote the following Introduction, which was published in Part 1, January 1950, of this magazine.

Foot of p.III

It is interesting in this connection to say something about this Archiv”, which appeared for the first time in 1948 (under the title “Philatelistischer Brief-Dienst uber Briefmarken-Zeitschriften”) and whose work was taken over by the familiar “Literatur-Nachrichten” from the BDPL. Hence I am publishing Herr Ihm’s leading article that appeared in the same issue of the “Archiv”.

The Editor

Finally, I will close this first issue of my new philatelic-literature magazine by reprinting a further article by Herr Ihm, which of course cannot be transferred direct from 1950 to the present day.

A PREFACE

The dark time of year is with us again, and I once more have to give my thoughts on an issue of Information. During the year that has almost gone, I have personally been involved in building my house and the unavoidable labouring that goes with it

However, my work on publications has gone on, thanks to the tireless workers in the Library, and I have received much understanding and support during my temporary absence. This deserves mention here!

In the present Information No. 6 you will find the minutes of the AGM of 2nd July 1991, our new regulations for borrowers, and costing for our Subject Catalogue Part 2.

Moreover, we shall give you a glance at our "travelling" activities, since this Library was present at exhibitions and one sale, as our work permitted.

Finally, we have two special titbits for you. The Chairman of the "Germania" group supports this number with an article on the cancellation of posts by machine methods. Dr. Gert Noll reports on long-familiar printings of the Breastplate series. We publish the text with his kind permission.

We wish you much pleasure in browsing, and hope our "Info 6" will please you.

MINUTES

Of the Annual General Meeting of the Hamburg Philatelic Library e.V
On Tuesday, 2nd July 1991 at 19.30 in the Hotel Oper

Opened: 19.30 - Closed: 21.00 hours

Present were 16 individual members, the representatives of 8 societies and two guests.

Total of 24 entitled to vote.

Agenda as on invitation of 28th May 1991.

Item 1 Welcome and Determination of Quorum

Frau Fullrich opened the meeting at 19.40 hours, greeted those present and established that the meeting was quorate. Before proceeding with the agenda, Frau Fullrich asked those present to stand in tribute to a deceased members, Hugo Andersen of Lüneburg.

Item 2 Election of Minutes Secretary

On the proposal of Frau Fullrich, Frau Töppe was unanimously elected as Minutes Secretary. She had taken over as head of the library from 01.04.1991 on the resignation of Frau Weil.

Item 3 Report from the Chair

Frau Fullrich reported a year positive on the whole

- although the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History e.V proposed to reduce the grant by 70%, the full amount was secured for 1991, thanks above all to the support of the L.V chairman, Herr Brock. Hence the new computer was purchased.
- the principal work in the Library consisted of the supplement of the 1988 catalogue, and further progress on the local history. The manuscript for the first supplement was proof-read, so that its printing in the DBZ could be started.
- an important event was the reception of the Library as a registered society/limited company on the occasion of its 21st anniversary.

For this reason over 1,800 DM and numerous gifts of books and other things were used. The money was used to finance the computer. Moreover two honorary members, Frau Renate Brandt and Herr Wolfgang Schmidt were nominated. Both took part in our foundation.

- issue of Information Bulletin No. 4, and a special issue.
- recruitment activities: Spring 1990, stand at Nordposta in Harburg and in Berne. Visit to the Level 2 exhibition in Kiel at the beginning of 1991, and planned visit to the airmail exhibition in Dresden August 1991. For the first time also, a stand at Sindelfingen. Finally, Nordposta in Hamburg. These activities served to make our publishing work better known in other parts of Germany, but do however entail heavy expenditure.
- Membership position 1990:

117 individual members:	Including	19	new recruits
		6	departures
29 societies:	Including	2	new recruits
		1	departure
- special thanks to our honorary collaborators, without whom the library could not maintain the position which it has reached in the past.

Thanks are also due to the chairman, the committee and the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History e.V for their donations to date (at the request of Herr Niedersetz: 43,000 DM in 1991).

No discussion on the Chairwoman's report was requested.

Item 4 Report of Head of Library

Frau Fullrich read the report appended. No discussion was requested.

Item 5 Approval of the Minutes of the last AGM

The minutes had been posted to all members along with Info 4. There were no queries, and the minutes were accepted with 23 votes for and one abstention.

Item 6 Treasurer's Report

Herr Rübke reported a balance (sheet) of 61,000 DM for 1990, of which only 58,960 DM had been spent. He explained the individual debit and credit entries. There were no questions on the port.

Item 7 Auditor's Report

Herr Niedersetz reported that he and Herr Tonn had carried out an audit. All receipts and documents had been made immediately available to them, everything was clear and in order, so that there were no grounds for objection.

Item 8 Resignation of the Committee

Herr Niedersetz recommended on the basis of his report, the resignation of the treasurer and the committee. The recommendation was adopted unanimously, with the exception of the composition of the committee.

Item 9 Choice of Committee

Both Frau Brandt and Frau Fullrich declined with thanks to serve on the new committee. It was a choice between new or old members. Frau Riese decided against becoming a member of the committee.

Frau Fullrich proposed Herr Prof. Dr. Rüdiger Martienss and Herr Klaus-Peter Reinhardt as successors.

Herr Prof. Dr. obtained 17 votes in favour and 5 abstentions on the first ballot. He accepted the election.

Re-elected	Herr Schmidt	22 in favour
	Herr Tonn (in absentia)	22 in favour
	Herr Ehlers (in absentia)	23 in favour
	Herr V. Hoffmann (in absentia)	22 in favour
En bloc	Hamburg Society for Philately
	Hamburg Stamp Collectors' Club
	Bergedorf Stamp Collectors' Society
	Hamburg Young Philatelists	20 in favour

All those elected agreed to serve.

Herr Reinhardt was asked to attend future committee meetings as a guest, so as to develop cooperation with the library and be available if further committee members were to drop out in future.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE HAMBURG PHILATELIC LIBRARY

Several important tasks were taken in hand in the year 1990 just past. The manuscript of the first supplement to the library catalogue was sent to the DBZ to be printed. The catalogue was extended by some 2,000 titles and the exhibition guides were reprocessed. All the exhibition guides we possess were catalogues by place or region and placed in stock as "local history". Over 2,100 titles appeared in the first supplement to the catalogue.

Our entire stock has not yet been catalogued. Unfortunately we have only been able to make a start on some tasks, such as adding titles to the catalogue, the foreign-language journals and the foreign exhibition catalogues. Hence only limited loans were and still are possible from these volumes.

Our stock of auction catalogues had to be reduced for space reasons.

During the past year 400 new books, most of them newly published, were added to stock. The periodical stock was increased by 180 volumes by the purchase of a legacy.

We have started to revise our keyword catalogue by using Literatur-Nachrichten. This is an immense task, in which whole subjects have sometimes to be looked at again, and dealt with by close and painstaking work. It is obvious that this work will have to go on into 1991, and is absolutely essential for outside loans. Starting this work has pointed up problems of space. There is nowhere to put the catalogue cabinets.

Over the last year the library had 796 readers and 977 issues. 183 parcels with 716 volumes were sent out on outside loan. 1,254 copies were prepared for local loan, and 2,687 sent out on outside loan. Some complicated special requests were also met in exceptional cases.

All the library's publications in the philatelic press over the last year resulted in a sharp rise in interest in the philatelic literature. The need of collectors for information is obvious, and the existing possibilities of meeting it must be made constantly public.

The library has been open two afternoons a week and every first Saturday in the month. The limited space available and the paucity of seats for readers became very obvious at these times.

The various tasks would not have been possible without the help of our voluntary collaborators; could not in fact even have been contemplated. May I thank them most sincerely for their support. Thanks are also due to the Foundation of Postal History & Philately, without whose financial support the work of the library could not have been carried on.

NEW REGULATIONS

Since 1st October 1991, new regulations have been in force for the Hamburg Philatelic Library e.V. the greater part remain unchanged but there are some new charges.

Thus, the existing postal charge of 5DM for an external loan is replaced by the actual postage incurred. This became necessary as the previous sum no longer covered the costs. There is a positive advantage in this for those readers who do not want a parcel but a letter or single book from the library. Costs in these cases will be below the previous rate.

Late return of items borrowed will be dearer. In future there will be a fine of 2DM per book and per week. This will apply to members as well. Hence the library asks all readers to return their borrowed books punctually, or ask for an extension in good time. A call, giving details of your reader number, date of return and book label will be sufficient.

LIBRARY CATALOGUE, PART 2

Dear members and friends of the Library,

At last here it is, the supplement to our catalogue, already announced in Information No. 4, 1990. Actually at 50 pages it is pretty well a full-blown catalogue on its own and we thus call it with pride "Part 2".

Hearty thanks at this point to everyone who has helped to prepare the catalogue. In spite of diligent proof-reading there will certainly be little mistakes and printer's errors here and there and we apologise for them in advance.

And now, what is there "in" this Part 2. In the first place, a completely new subject group – local philately. This takes up half the new catalogue. The other half lists the new literature on the existing topics that have appeared since the middle of 1988. You will see that various things have been added.

At the moment Part 2 is being printed section by section in the DBZ, like Part 1. In the course of next year you will be able to purchase Part 2 complete from us.

CATALOGUE OF THE HAMBURG PHILATELIC LIBRARY

We can take some pride, as the exclusive publishing organ, in the following announcement: after the Munich issue, Part 2 of the index to the loans library in Hamburg is now ready. All publications appearing since 1988 (textbooks, catalogues, journals) are included. It follows continuously from the first edition of the catalogue. The contents are set out as before, so it is easy to trace new publications. The first sequence of six pages in the next issues.

DRESDEN – SINDELFINGEN-NORDPOSTA – We Were There!

The preparations for the International Air Mail Exhibition “Lilienthal” ‘91 caused us some headaches. We had to travel 600km from Hamburg to the “Florence of the Elbe” in an aged Volkswagen bus. Boxes full of books, information and display material were packed up and then began the journey over the “hiccupping stretch”. Onwards through fields of blooming sunflowers and pine woods at 30°C in the shade.

Arrived in Dresden, we found in the Exhibition Hall in Fucik-Platz a stand which could not have been bettered. We were delighted with the furnishings, fittings and equipment in the Literature Centre. Our books showed up to full advantage in the glass cases.

At first the visitors were hesitant to have a good browse through the literature on display, as they were quite unaccustomed to this kind of philatelic service. During the week our stand drew increasing numbers of visitors and we gained new readers for the external loans service.

The Society evening in the “77th” was also interesting. We had a real philatelic conversation with the Society committee and the Saxon collectors. The ten days went by all too quickly.

Hardly were we back in Hamburg than there was the “Sudwest ’91” stamp market in Sindelfingen for us to attend. Again, we were there with a stand for the first time, and we were surprised at the unaccustomed crowds. We often did not know who to deal with first.

During the day, readers who had previously known the library only by its external loans took the opportunity of getting to know its workers in person. In the evening came the “Round Table Colloquiac”, with the friends of the “Extra-Terrestrial” Group: the collectors of post-free and consignee-free cancellations.

Last but not least, at the end of the season came “Nordposta” at the CCH in Hamburg, where we were practically “at home”. Also, nothing unfamiliar for the collector. There was a good attendance and our stand too was well consulted.

And now, what can we expect in 1992. Certainly a lorra, lorra work!

REQUEST FOR HELP

Have you already visited the Hamburg Philatelic Library, or have you perhaps made use of its external loans service? If so, you have probably got to know one or more of our voluntary helpers, who regularly help to maintain the external loans facility.

The tasks in the library are very diverse so that everyone can help, e.g. with local and external loans, booking in journals and obtaining new books. Moreover, there is a great deal to do in looking after the stock of books and journals. Our voluntary helpers are absolutely essential (in 1991 the library needed some 1,500 hours of work). Only in this way can it be kept going in its present form.

Perhaps some of you who have used this service have already thought of helping in the library yourselves. Perhaps you have thought: “A library, that’s for me”. You would also have the opportunity of getting information for your collection and a cup of coffee would be waiting for you.

We would be very glad.

THE PHILATELIC LITERATURE COLLECTOR,
2 no 10, Oct. 1939

TO OUR READERS

We are in the happy position of being able to offer our esteemed readers the publication of the supplement from January 1934 in the form of an independent and enlarged journal.

Only a few months after the supplement had been absorbed into "Grüne Sammler-Welt" a lack of space became apparent, and this increased from month to month. The regular size of four pages often had to be exceeded and the supplement appeared at times with five, six and eight pages. However, since the contents of into "Grüne Sammler-Welt" could not be expected to suffer from this expansion of the supplement, we have decided to issue it as an independent journal from the beginning of the New Year. The subscription price will be RM-3.00 per annum. Members of the "Gesellschaft der philatelistischen Literaturfreunde" will receive the magazine as their society journal cost free. A rich selection of bibliographical articles by reputable philatelists and lovers of literature awaits the publication: various new features are also planned.

We thank all contributors and readers for the lively interest they have shown in our supplement so far. We intend by means of our journal to do everything to promote the knowledge and collection of philatelic literature. Any suggestions that might be helpful in the further development of the journal will always be gratefully received by us.

FRIEDRICH LEITENBERGER

We have received the very sad news of the sudden death of our member and co-worker Friedrich Leitenberger, Leipzig, in the 44th year of his life. He suffered a heart attack on 9th September this year, at Gernode in the Harz Mountains where he had been sent for a cure by the State Insurance Service. In accordance with his own wishes he was cremated quietly at Bernburg. His ashes were placed in the family grave in Teplitz-Schönau.

Leitenberger, born on 31st August 1890, tried after the war to set up a philatelic publishing house in his home town of Teplitz-Schönau and combine it with a scientific philatelic journal. The "Weltpost-Echo", which he founded and edited, appeared ideally placed to develop into a first-class magazine for collectors, because of both its contents and Leitenberger's outstanding qualities as journalist and philatelist. However, it could not withstand the inflation and failed after a year of existence. The philatelic publishing house did not flourish either. Leitenberger left Teplitz and went to Berlin. There he fell in with Alexander Bungerz and neither family had it at all easy, since the philatelic authorship for which they both went in for on a large scale brought nothing in. In Berlin, Leitenberger got to know Carl Beck and got the use of his large philatelic library for study purposes.

In this way Leitenberger gained a fundamental knowledge of the entire old and new philatelic literature. In 1924 the J. K. G. Wagner Buchdruckerei in Neustadt-a.d-Orla set up a new specialist magazine "Die Philatelie" and Leitenberger became its editor. However, this magazine did not manage to survive either. During this period of editorship Leitenberger had the great idea of compiling and publishing his "Bibliography of the German-language philatelic literature". However it did not get past the very early stages. He lacked means and support. Now it chanced that at a meeting in Hamburg, Leitenberger became known to the publisher of the Schaubek album, who took him on as editor to produce an absolutely new edition of the album. Leitenberger was in his element here and one can well imagine that he threw all his knowledge and all his enthusiasm into this work. In the year 1930 he published, at great expense, the "Handbook of Czechoslovak Cancellations of Austrian and Hungarian Origin" which dealt with a hitherto neglected subject of great potential. His collections on literature were distinguished at various times at international exhibitions. Leitenberger also stimulated the Germania-Ring to the creation of the Bungerz Memorial Medal, to reward the hitherto neglected activity of service to the German-language philatelic literature. Since spring of this year he had joined the ranks of the unemployed.

The gap that Leitenberger's departure will leave in German philately, and especially in philatelic literature, is a very large one. Leitenberger was a philatelist, researcher and writer of note. He was a helpful co-worker, always friendly, and if his criticisms were often cutting they were nevertheless accurate. Only a few days before his death he sent hearty greetings from Gernnode, with a paper which we shall publish in our next issue.

We shall always hold this fighter for philatelic literature in esteem!

4th CONGRESS OF THE INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF THE PHILATELIC PRESS

Held in Vienna, 3rd July 1933
by Alexander Leo, Munich

The current President, Ing. Edwin Muller, opened the Congress at 09.30 hours with an address of welcome, but unfortunately had to report that the founder, F.I.P.P. Director Dr. Giulio Tedeschi was prevented from making the trip to Vienna by an illness in his family, so that the board of F.I.P.P. was represented only by its secretary, Francesco Monney. Lieutenant-Colonel Hesshaimer greeted delegates in his capacity as President of WIPA, Dr. Willer in the name of the F.I.P., and Prof. Renaut for the Academie de Philatelie, whilst Alexander Leo brought greetings from the first President of the League of German Philatelic Societies, State Railway Director Falck, who was unable to attend. Lt-Colonel Hesshaimer asked editors of philatelic magazines who reported on EIPA to avoid polemics of the sort that were never helpful. Written greetings had been received from many members who were unable to be present, and these were read out by Secretary Monney.

As there was no agenda, Ing. Edwin Muller proposed the topic "Press and Exhibition" at the instance of WIPA. He pointed out that philatelic literature had hitherto been the stepchild at all exhibitions. WIPA had tried to get it accepted that the literature of given countries should be exhibited along with the stamps from those countries. Also, WIPA could not give out diplomas but only medals for philatelic literature. Prof. Renaut praised the better treatment of literature by WIPA and Dr. Turyn suggested that in future a representative of the philatelic press should sit on the jury at every major exhibition, to which Ing. Muller replied that the editors of our philatelic journals (Arggropoulos, Hertsch, Ing. Muller and Strandell) were on the jury of the WIPA. Dr. Turyn proposed that in future a representative of the philatelic press should be a member of the jury at F.I.P.P. exhibitions and this was approved unanimously.

Lt-Colonel Weigl complained that the daily papers in Vienna had given very little support, with the slight exception of WIPA, and ascribed this in the main to the fact that only in the rarest cases did newspapers have technical reporters on their staff. Perhaps also EIPA has not been careful enough to supply the non-technical press with regular reports from qualified writers over the entire duration of the exhibition.

In future, the following guidelines should be observed in awarding prizes to philatelic literature at the great international exhibitions.

1. Philatelic works which have gained a gold medal at one exhibition can only be shown again outside competition, unless they have appeared in a significantly altered and enlarged new edition.
2. Works which have been awarded a gold medal along with others can only take part in competitions for five years.
3. Works never previously exhibited can take part in competition without restrictions.

Italy plans to have a special exhibition of philatelic literature in connection with a F.I.P.P. Congress to take place in that country. It was proposed from another side that the Congress and Exhibition be held in conjunction with the Swiss philatelic meeting to be held in Lugano in 1934, as Lugano is easy to reach from Italy and Switzerland.

Finally, Alexander Leo asked the directors of the F.I.P.P. if it would not be possible to start again issuing that most valuable publication of theirs, the "Repertoire Bibliographique de la Presse Philatelique Mondiale", since it, like all previous philatelic bibliographies, had unfortunately ceased to appear for two years (1929 and 1930). The Secretary of the F.I.P.P., Monney, explained that too few subscribers to the bibliography had come forward and that Prof. Renaut, the meritorious editor of the two years that had appeared, had spoken of the difficulty of the work, which was too much for one editor, whilst the co-operation of several was made difficult by the fact that the necessary uniformity was lacking. The directors of the F.I.P.P. will nevertheless give serious consideration to the continuation of the bibliography. If the Federation Internationale de la Presse Philatelique cannot guarantee the continuing appearance of this bibliography, we shall just have to do without this absolutely necessary aid for the serious philatelist. In going on with this publication the F.I.P.P. would be creating a philatelic memorial for all time, and performing a service which deserves much more recognition than it has received hitherto.

At the concluding ceremony of the Congress, the directors of the F.I.P.P. invited participants to a banquet in the Grand Hotel. Some 30 people attended, including the Austrian Minister for Commerce Stockinger, and, like all these events organised by the F.I.P.P., it was aimed at bringing participants in the Congress closer together.

Privy Councillor Dr. Phil Franz Kalckhoff, Berlin-Charlottenburg, has married Frau Elli Bungerz, widow of the well-known deceased philatelist, lover of literature and painter, Alexander Bungerz. Dr. Kalckhoff is holder of the Lindenberg Medal, Chairman of the Section for Scientific Philately, Hon. Member of the Berlin Philatelist's Club and the Berlin Entire's Collectors' Society, International Jury Member, Judge for the Sieger Prize and the Bungerz Memorial Medal, and member of the Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature. We extend our heartiest wishes for happiness to the newly-weds.

Berlin Needs an open philatelic library. We have often expressed the wish that the combined literature collections of Rommel, Beck, Bungerz and the Berlin Philatelist's Club now together in the Prussian State Library in Berlin could be made accessible to collectors and dealers. The philatelists of Leipzig are luckier in that both the University Library and the German Library in Leipzig make their philatelic treasures available for study. How necessary such an institution is for Berlin as well is made clear by P. P. Lindenberg in his article "Stamp dealers in line", in "Briefmarkensammler".

It might also be possible to promote philatelic literature in this way, since by supporting it both collectors and dealers would broaden their philatelic knowledge, and express or extend their ideas. Amongst the things worthy of promotion are the Kohl Handbook, the technical journals, the specialist libraries. Unfortunately, Berlin, the national capital, lacks a large open philatelic library. Berlin has 3,000 organized collectors, and probably ten times as many who do not belong to societies, along with over 80 dealers affiliated to the I.P.H.V., and at least the same number who are not affiliated. All of them need, sometimes quite often, answers to questions which have already been dealt with in the literature. But ignorance of the literature on the one hand, and unavailability of the books and magazines themselves on the other, leave a gap which urgently needs to be filled.

We ask: when will the collections of literature be made available when will a catalogue appear, when can the library be used?

Society Library in Munich. Because of the departure of J. A. Bosshard to Zurich, the Society Literature Group needs a new head. This, and the Literature Disposal Group and the Society Library have passed into the care of Alexander Leo, Munich, the editor of the Society's journal. It is to be welcomed that Munich thus comes into the possession of a fair-sized philatelic library, especially since Berlin and Leipzig already have extensive collections of books.

RESEARCH AND LITERATURE IN PHILATELY SALONAn exhibition for Society Members only

In connection with the 36th Society and 83rd German philatelic congress from 28th-31st October in Leverkusen, all specialist groups belonging to the BDPh – about 130 in all – were asked to take part in the salon on “Research and Literature in Philately”.

This salon was a novelty in the work of the BDPh. There was no experience on which the organizing group could draw. Thus, the Bayer* e.V. Stamp Collectors' Club was breaking new ground. (*Possibly the chemical manufacturers?)

In Spring 1982 all the specialist groups were contacted via the Society's Research Section and asked to take part. Sixty of them reacted positively and promised to take part, though some could not meet the stipulation of having a representative present for the entire duration of the exhibition. Thirty groups were represented by their own members, and the rest by the organizing society, which also put up and took down the exhibits.

The exhibits of all the groups must be denoted a success. All gave details of their aims, tasks, studies and research results. Practically none failed to record the number of their members, year of foundations, level of subscription/contribution, news-sheets, information papers, etc.

This uniform level of information for all the sections could be supplemented by personal contacts and exchange of ideas, and serious philatelic literature could be examined and exchanged.

In spite of some initial scepticism, the organizing Society maintains that public response to the Salon was positive, thanks not least – it must be pointed out – to the informative and detailed exhibits provided by all the groups that took part.

Leverkusen was a successful beginning, and further Salons should follow. Sixty participants is very good, but a higher number is both desirable and possible.

Finally it should be noted that all participants are represented by one page of text in the exhibition catalogue, which is available from the Bayer e.V. Stamp Collectors' Club, P.O. Box 120138, 5090 Leverkusen 1, for 5DM including postage.

GREETINGS

Philately enjoys particularly high esteem in our town of Soest. This is shown by the fact four national meetings combined with major exhibitions have taken place here. The 1964 National, and the Society meeting plus Philatelic Open Day in 1968. Mention should also be made of the “Soest Salon” and the Soest Colloquia, which are now continued in the “6th Soest Colloquium”.

Ministers of State, the Ministerial President of our country, foreign ambassadors, and leading figures from German and foreign philately have all acted as patrons. This will indicate how highly these events in our town were rated.

A hearty greeting to all guests: their philatelic enthusiasm deserves all acknowledgement.

The friends of philately in Soest – united by bonds of comradeship – stand ready to do all they can to assist you with your problems and reach your desired aims in a satisfactory way! We hope and trust that this “Soest Colloquium” will also meet with full success, and that the Soest philatelists will again be overwhelmed with enquiries.

May all participants in the “6th Soest Colloquium have an enjoyable, successful and interesting time in old Soest!

Helmut Busmann
Mayor of the town of Soest

There are places and towns in Germany in which philately is specially cherished and encourages: one example of Rottweil, whose exhibition designs have given such an impetus to the organization of exhibitions in the range of the Society of German Philatelists, and another is Soest, whose philatelists have in the past managed to put on every type of exhibition, from the recruiting show to the national, to hold salons and numerous subject displays, and above all have managed to ensure the constant recurrence of an event on the Society level, the “Soest Colloquia”.

These grew from the meeting of two large societies for the study and discussion of work over the whole range of subjects of interest to philately – the design of exhibitions, the combating of forgeries, publication, research and literature, and have now with the 6th one developed into a forum for the latter. Designed as a platform for meetings and discussions between more than 120 leaders of research and scientific societies, study group leaders from the “Rhine-Danube” Postage Stamp Guild and chairmen of the sections for research and literature in the 10 local sections of the Society of German Philatelists, this colloquium should provide the impetus for carrying out joint projects, make people known to one another via the discussions and attempt to bring problems of common interest to an optimal solution. It should also – and quite rightly – show what lies behind these research and scientific societies and how they act, not only to deepen the knowledge of their own members and the 80,000 members of the Society of German Philatelists, but to extend philately all over the world. The award of prizes to the German literature shown at the first World Exhibition of Philatelic Literature held under the auspices of F.I.P., MILANO 82, is also a step in this direction. The Society of German Philatelists is rightly proud of these achievements of members from its ranks.

This little show is extended by a show of the objects of literature supplied in the interval between the 5th and 6th Soest Colloquia by the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History, with sometimes considerably means. This is only the visible portion of an undertaking which covers all the research and scientific sections, and for which German philately is sincerely grateful to the Foundation.

The special cancellation chosen will help participants to remember the great philatelists without whom the work of our philatelists of today would be very difficult.

Our thanks to the Society of Soest Philatelists and their energetic chairman, Karl Hemmer with his co-workers, who have again borne the main load of preparation in an outstanding manner, must include thanks to the town of Soest, whose active support to all participants in this 6th Colloquium has never fallen short on either the technical or the personal level.

- Meeting and discussion.

“SOEST COLLOQUIA”

by Karl Hemmer

1st President of the Society of Soest Philatelists

Where it was cannot now be decided, but somewhere at one of the major philatelic meetings the then President of the Berlin Club, Dr. G. Duntsch, and the writer came to an agreement in which the Berlin club acquiesced, to come to Soest with his Committee and a few members. It was intended for the Berliners to give 3 papers. Also, questions of philatelic importance were to be discussed. The Berlin club came with about 15 people. The larger meeting under whose auspices this took place was the 1st International Boy Scout Exhibition of 22-24th April 1970. The Society of German Philatelists and the “Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History” also met in Soest at this time. There was great astonishment at finding the hall filled with “philatelic prominence” at lecture time. Apart from SPG and Foundation members, the local Committee and many officers from North Rhine-Westphalia were also present.

The invited papers soon came to an end, as they did not live up to expectations, but the associated question-and-answer sessions built up into a highly interesting round of dialogues. The then Cabinet Minister, Ernst Moering, from the Federal Ministry of Posts chaired the discussions. At the end he suggested the name “Soest Colloquia” to be used every year. This was adopted.

This friendly and harmonic meeting came to an end with the kind cooperation of the Army.

Invitations to the “2nd Soest Colloquium” were issued for the 16-18th April 1971. Participants travelling on 16th April 1971 were taken on a visit to a brewery in Unna. The warm hospitality received at Unna was carried on in the “Kipp House” at Soest. The “2nd Soest Colloquium” took place in the overfilled Chapter House on 17th April 1971 in the presence of society representatives, people from the Federal Ministry of Posts and many philatelists. Again it went off to everybody’s entire satisfaction, and the “3rd Soest Colloquium” was an accepted fact. In the evenings the participants were guests of the Army, who sent double-decker buses for most of them. After finishing off a harty Westphalian cold buffet, the subjects of the afternoon were discussed in lively large and small groups.

The main emphasis at the 1st and 2nd Soest Colloquia was on the exhibitions, but the 3rd, from 14-16th April 1972, concentrated more on press and publicity. The moderator of the colloquium was a member of the Society committee, Hans Paikert. The topics covered were:-

- Post and philately
- Commerce and philately
- Press and philately
- IBRA Munich 1973

Taking Part:

Cabinet Minister Klaus Spreen	Federal Ministry of Posts
Dr. Walter Lippens	Chairman of the publications section of the BDPh
Hartwig Danesch	President of the Young German Philatelists
Jürgen Ehrlich	President of the League of German Stamp Traders
Joachim Krebs	Technical journalist
Dr. Claus Mökrke	Home affairs & philatelic columnist for the Dusseldorf Gazette
Herr von Blücher	B & B Recruiting Agency, Hannover

Proceedings opened with 5 short 10-minute papers:

Dr. Walter Lippens	1½ years after the analysis of the publications sections at the Hamburg meeting of 1970
Hans Paiket	Information and publicity for a leisure-time society
Klaus Eitner	Publicity for a large society
Gunther Welter	What can an ordinary (small) society do by way of publicity?
F. W. König	Possibilities and limitations for publicising by the State societies

And extensive discussions followed.

Herr Minister, Klaus Spreen of the Federal Ministry of Posts dealt for the first time with philatelic publicity.

Again, lively discussions on what we had heard were carried on in smaller and larger groups chez the Army, who did not neglect our bodily comforts.

The “4th Soest Colloquium” was devoted to research. The Committee of the BDPh gave it their blessing for the 25-26th May 1974, so that full preparations could be made. A new Committee was elected for the BDPh at their meeting in Krefeld in 1973, and the Research section got a new chairman as well. The new committee accepted the dates and Herr Hüttl turned out to be very pleased about the colloquium, as it gave him the chance to put forward his views on research rapidly and in detail. The overall leadership was in the hands of Dr. Hauflaud. Amongst the people giving papers were Prof. Dr. Weidlich, Dr. Niedermeier, Prof. Dr. Brühl, Georg Winkler and Dr. Hauflaud, mentioned in the order in which they spoke. All papers were followed by a lively discussion. The evening discussions took place – as usual – on Army premises. On 26th May 1974 the new leadership of the Society suggested a working part to discuss further joint activity. There was an extensive exhibition of sample work available for inspection. On the evening before the Colloquium, the Society of Soest Philatelists gave a banquet of suckling pig, which was supported by the Committee of the BDPh. Dr. Nebo still licks his lips today when he hears that suckling-pig banquet in Soest mentioned.

There was a long interval after this 4th Soest Colloquium. One reason for this was that the Society and its sections had to concentrate too much of their attention on the International Stamp Fair in Essen.

The “5th Soest Colloquium” took place on 28-29th April 1977. The motto this time was “Research and Literature”. Overall direction this time lay in the hands of the Vice-President of the BDPh, Herr Emil W. Mewes. Herr Hüttle, the Chairman of the Research section of the Society, again provided some first-class oratory along with Herr Mewes. The dispute between Prof. Brühl and Dr. Lippens on the topic of classical vs. theme philately is still remembered. Other members of the party were Herr Gabriel, Herr Gleixner, Herr van Loo and Herr Hunstler. An extensive display of technical aids was shown. A pleasant evening with an outstanding “Westphalian pepper-pot hash” gained much approval.

The BDPh decided that in view of its many commitments the colloquia should only be held again every 3 years and that research and literature should predominate. Unfavourable circumstances have meant it has been in fact 4 years until the 6th Soest Colloquium is held during the current year.

In Memoriam – Carl Lindenberg

In 1905 the Berlin Philatelic Club of 1888 decided on the creation of the LINDENBERG MEDAL.

In the statutes for the award, it says inter alia that the Lindenberg Medal is designed to distinguish men who have given outstanding service to philately in the fields of scientific research and literary activity.

The award was made by a chapter consisting of holders of the Medal, honorary members and the two chairmen of the club, and a 2/3rds majority was needed.

Up to the year 1943 the Lindenberg medal was awarded 30 times. On its 90th anniversary in the year 1978 was refounded, though the previous regulations for award were largely taken over.

Even in his own lifetime Carl Lindenberg was a legend to all philatelists. His philatelic activity, trailblazing scientific researches and literary abilities made him one of the most significant and successful philatelists within the German range.

In memoriam – Dr. Franz Kalckhoff

In the year 1950 the Society of German Philatelists e.V decided to create the KALCKHOFF MEDAL, as a prize for literature.

The statutes said inter-alia that the medal should be awarded to those who had given outstanding service in the field of German-language literature. Awards were made at 2 year intervals, at the German Philatelists' Days Awards were decided by a chapter consisting of the President, Vice-President and Chairman of the research and literature sections, plus the holders of the Kalckhoff medal.

Dr. Franz Kalckhoff, known and still honoured after his death for his extensive knowledge and scientific research as philatelist, specialist writer, editor of collective works, author of important books and organizer of philatelic events, was one of the most outstanding and versatile philatelists of this century.

In Senf's philatelic almanac for 1939 he was spoken of as the Nestor of German Philatelists.

In memoriam – Gustav Kobold

Founded by Infla-Berlin to honour its spiritual founder and long-term chairman, the KOBOLD MEDAL took the place of the Lindenberg medal which was not awarded after 1943.

Infla-Berlin, in conjunction with the Berlin Philatelists' Club of 1888, created this distinction in the year 1954 for special services to philately.

In the statutes it says inter-alia that the Kobold medal is designed to distinguish people who have given particular encouragement to the collecting of German postage stamps by their scientific research and literary activity.

The medal was bronze as a rule and only awarded once a year. The award was decided on by a chapter consisting of holders of the medal, honorary members and the two chairmen of Infla-Berlin, and more than a two-thirds majority was required.

Infla-Berlin owes its origin and existence to the philatelic knowledge of Gustav Kobold, his many publications, the selfless application of his energy and his organizing skills.

His human qualities of sympathy and resoluteness, and as an idealist are still the pattern not only for Infla-Berlin but for all those who collect postage stamps out of idealism.

In memoriam – A. E. Glasewald

In memory of the great German philatelist Ernst Friedrich Arthur Glasewald, MERKUR – the Society of Private Post Collectors – has decided to revive the GLASEWALD MEDAL founded by the “Gösnitz Union” and the “German Philatelic League”.

The statutes for this medal state that it is meant to honour people who have given special services to the promotion of private stamps as a field for collection by means of scientific research and literary activity.

As a rule the medal was bronze and only awarded once a year. The award was made by a chapter consisting of the two Chairmen of MERKUR – Society of Private Post Collectors – and the holders of the medal, a two-thirds majority being needed.

The name of A. E. Glasewald remains unforgotten in German philately because of his writings, either as author and publisher of many books, pamphlets and articles or as the editor of specialist journals.

As well as his great talent for organizing major philatelic exhibitions, his activity as an independent stamp dealer (from 1886) should not be forgotten, since this served to advance philately in an almost ideal way. He, the dealer, was always guided by philatelic self-respect.

In memoriam – Hermann E. Sieger

Consul Hermann E. Sieger founded the Sieger Prize for philatelic literature.

Since his death in the 1954 the prize has been awarded by a chapter consisting of the chairman of a philatelic editorial board (at present Dr. Josef Bender), Consul Hermann Walter Sieger, and the two last holders of the medal. The award is made annually to a philatelic who has advanced German philatelic literature either by his own work in the German language or by significant basic promotion.

Consul Hermann E. Sieger founded the stamp firm that bore his name in 1922. It specialised in the supply of novelties – the Zeppelin post in his day. He was distinguished not only as an informed philatelist and author, who published basic works on philately, but also because he promoted important philatelic literature via his stamp firm.

PHILATELIC LITERATURE: ROLAND LIBRARY – PART 2

The first part of this exceptional collection of philatelic literature was auctioned in January 1999 with great international success. We hope that the catalogue covering the second portion of the Roland Library will meet your expectations in view of the numerous rare works on philatelic literature it contains. Some of the titles have not been offered in German auctions for years or even decades. We are convinced that many of the titles to be offered will make desirable additions to your library. Some of them represent numbered special editions, frequently with decorative special bindings and/or dedications by the authors.

Since the collecting areas are overlapping, we recommend that you carefully review all offerings shown in the auction catalogue. Many thanks for your interest.

THE TREATMENT OF PRINTING CONTROLS 258-161 IN PHILATELIC LITERATURE SINCE 1965

P. I. Litschke

This paper, which I have presented to the members of the Society Working Party on Colour Control lines by printing in their circular, is intended as a survey of publications that have appeared to date and their contents.

All publications can be borrowed on short-term loan from the Librarian of the working Party, Georg Plantz, 1 Okenweg, Quackenbruck D-4520, on payment of return postage (0.70DM).

The following abbreviations, corresponding to those of the Munich Philatelic Library, are used for the philatelic journals:

SDC	Der Sammler-Dienst, Coburg
SL	Die Sammler-Lupe
BS	Briefmarken-Spiegel
M	Mauritius
DBZ	Deutsche Zeitung für Briefmarkenkunde
BN	Bundes-Nachrichten
MIR	Michel-Rundschan
SE	Sammler-Express
DBZ	Der Deutschland-Sammler, Munich

Apart from the abbreviation of the title, the data given are the year of publication, the part number and the pagination: the part number is not given for the Michel Rundschan only.

The work is divided into the following sections:

II	Sheet edge rim phenomena
III	Colour fringe phenomena
IV	Catalogues and handbooks
V	Colour fringe phenomena in the DDR and the USSR
VI	Publications of the "German Federal Post" Working Party
VII	DBZ controversy
VIII	Publications in circulars of the working Party on Colour Fringes
IX	Supplement

I: PUBLICATIONS ADVERTISING THE WORKING PARTY ON COLOUR FRINGES

The following publications exist:

Gehrke, Erich:	Working Party "Colour Fringes", SDG 1969, 7:403
Ibid	"Colour Fringes": formation of a Working Party: SL 1969, 8:226
Ibid	New! Working Party on Colour Fringes: BS 1969, 6:37

- Ibid Working Party “Colour Fringes”, M1969, 8:102
All these have the same text on the foundation and aims of the new Working Party.
- Schultz, W. Membership drive for the Working Party on Colour Fringes, SDC 1969, 19:1264
The membership drive was announced on 15/16th November 1969 in Zell/Moselle.
- Häger, U. Society Working Party on Colour Fringes. ForP 10:10, 11:14
Issue 10 contains an anonymous account of the contents of the first Working Party Circular, and a repetition of the tasks and aims of the W. P. Issue 11 gives a shortened version of the description of the first circular in the DBZ. This version contains a mild attack on Herr Grunig.
- Häger Ullrich Literature Working Party on Colour Fringes in the Society of German Philatelists: BN 85:29
Ullrich Häger finds fault with the “multi-tracking” of two Working Parties in the BDPL (as well as this one, he means the “German Federal Post” Working Party – author’s note), and the production of a catalogue in the third place (he means the Schwarz catalogue: author’s note) and suggests all three should be combined.

II: SHEET EDGE PHENOMENA

In addition to the article mentioned in the “DBZ controversy” article, I am aware of the two following publications dealing in general terms with sheet edge phenomena:

- Häger, Ullrich: Sheet edges are also interesting:
DBZ 1965, 21:2889/90; 22:3071/2; 23:3245/7

The following sheet-edge phenomena are dealt with:

Colour fringes (Häger mentions the fact that sheets without colour bars are at least as frequent [in sheets with colour fringes – author’s note], and he explains this by the fact that “the Federal Printing Office never uses individual switch sheets and control is reflected by printing with the bars once per machine proof”). “Usages” on the world’s first two postage stamps, the Geneva cantonal post, what are called the Waadt issue, the Manchurian and Belgian pre-cancellations; marginal inscriptions from Liechtenstein, Italy, the DDR and Yugoslavia: duration of validity for Swiss stamps, edge phenomena on plate and roller printing; series; series numbers; line output; stroke output; edge output of the VEB Graphics Factory at Leipzig; (in-house) order numbers; plate and mould numbers; sheet signatures, account numbers; perforation points; registers; works numbers, advertising output; sheet numbers; running numbers; printers’ marks; plate cancellations for stamps before the end of the war, used as guidelines for the machinery used to separate the machine sheets into switch sheets and not to be confused with the colour fringes of today; sheet packing numbers; printing dates; tabs? (Israel), and perforations from the United Nations postal undertaking to control the stamp paper sent out to printers all over the world.

At the beginning of his series of Articles, U. Häger also gives advice on setting up a special collection on sheet edges; on non-proof sheets and on the first sheet of stamps “without every edge appendage, on the following pages of “specialities” in the most symmetrical possible arrangement and not too high numbers, and with a short record.

- Frey, Paul: Why not collect sheet signatures

P. Frey deals with plate numbers and colour fringes, pointing out that such collections are very suitable for extending an already almost complete collection. He would like to see them catalogued in the Michel special Germany catalogue which need not necessarily be combined with a valuation. In a further section in Issue 7 he mentions a contact with H. Kling and U. Häger, and mentions the special catalogue by G. Schwarz.

III: COLOUR FRINGE PHENOMENA

We now come to an abundance of publications on colour fringe phenomena on stamps of the German Federal Post and the German Federal Post of Berlin. The earliest publication known to me is as follows:-

Groth, H: Building up a special collection with varying edges:
DBZ 1965, 21:2882

Mention of the first stamps with coloured edges from the German Federal Post: Bismarck, 1st May, along with the special Bremen stamp from the series of the capital cities from the states of the DBR.

An official comment from the German Federal Post appeared in “Press Release of the Federal Ministry for Posts and Telecommunications, Germany, 3/66” and was reprinted in the Michel Rundschau:

Anonymous: Technical data on printing on switch sheets:
MR 1966, 464

The Federal Ministry of Posts reveals that value and series numbers are required by the Post, which thus do not amount to a “symbol of the print works”. These are rather:

1. Sheet numbers (in the philatelic sense = plate and mould numbers – author)
2. Offset colour lines for “internal operating control during printing, processing and checking of the sheets of stamps” and screen-depth colour lines for the series “International Traffic Exhibition 1965”, which serve as “guidelines for the photoelectric control of the four printing presses”.
3. Printers’ marks.

Anonymous: Ray of Colours:
DBZ 1966, 14

The anonymous author reports that colour fringes do not constitute “colour tests” but are colour bars for the photoelectric control of the printing process.

An extremely important article for research in the field of colour fringes is the following:

Schmid, Claus: Two years of sheet edges with colour fringes – evaluation of a special collection:
BDZ 1967, 12:2128/30

C. Schmid first discusses the reasons why a collector should be impelled towards a narrowly restricted specialist topic such as colour fringes for example. The reasons he gives are principally completeness at not too high a cost, and lack of work on the topic. He goes on to explain the significance of colour fringes, and cites the press releases of the Federal Ministry for Posts and Telecommunications (see above). (These mention the reason for the colour fringes found only on the upper edge of the 1965 church commemoration stamps: they were printed in individual sheet sheets to avoid differences in register in combined offset and intaglio printing). The author also records that colour fringes only occur in offset printing and not in engraved intaglio printing. (This is not the case, see the press releases). As for the sequence of the colour fringes, Schmid suggests that this follows the sequence of the colour printing, but not invariably. He mentions the fact that colour fringes only appear from the Federal Printing Works not from the Bagel Grossdruckerei.

In the case of the Stuttgart city stamps, which appear some with and some without colour fringes, the author works out the actual sequence of printing at the two print works.

Is it not possible that the Saarbrücken city stamps were actually printed with colour fringes which were trimmed off after printing? The author comes to the conclusion that the dimensions of the edges make it highly probable that no colour fringes were printed.

Finally, C. Schmid gives further important advice on how to set up a colour fringe collection, and gives a survey of the stamps with colour fringes issued by the German Federal Post in the year 1965/66.

Gehrke, Erich: Colour fringes:
MR 1968: 452/6

Survey of colour fringes produced by the German Federal Post and the German Federal Post, Berlin, from the standpoint of 3rd October 1967.

Schultz, Wolfgang: New Federal issues: print run of 300,000 items?
DBZ 1968, 19:3653/4

W. Schulz attempts to arouse interest in stamps with colour fringes by means of the reduced print runs of these stamps.

Gehrke, Erich: General survey of colour fringes:
DBZ 1968, 21:4206/7

E. Gehrke refers to the paper by C. Schmidt and gives a detailed survey of colour fringes (as at 3rd October 1968). He expresses the wish that the editors of the Michel catalogue would include colour fringes at least in the special Germany catalogue, and finally mentions that it would be very difficult to assemble a collection of 620 uncanceled individual stamps with colour fringes.

Finally he gives the following account of “colour fringes with other uses”.

The control signal for the electronic control of the paper track in the printing works for the 15 and 20pf IVA stamps of 1965, and the degree of colour luminosity on a part-issue of the 20 and 30pf Europa stamps of 1967.

Krebs, Joachim H.: No more sheet edges with colour fringes:
SDC 1969, 12:751

J. H. Krebs reports the decision of the Federal Ministry of Posts to have the colour fringes applied to the part of the paper track that is cut off after production of the sheets and before issue, and weighs up the reasons which, in his opinion, led the Ministry to this decision.

Schiessl, W.: Special Collection “Colour Fringes”:
DBZ 1969, 13:XXI/XXII

W. Schiessl attempts to extend the articles by C. Schmid, W. Schultz and E. Gehrke with respect to valuation and cataloguing.

He gives a graphic representation of the relative print runs of colour fringes from 1965 to 1967, and a formula for the theoretical calculation of their value, thoughts on how to collect colour fringes, explains the terms normal collection, complete collection and research collection (in relation to collections of colour fringes), and a catalogue scheme for colour fringes of the German Federal Post.

IV: CATALOGUES AND HANDBOOKS

The following two catalogues and handbooks on colour fringe phenomena are available:

Schwarz, Günther: Special catalogue of sheet signatures and roller marks.

The catalogue (in loose-leaf form) covers sheet signatures, roller marks, control signs, guide signs, sheet counters, house batch numbers, mould numbers, etc., along with a cataloguing scheme and valuation of colour fringes.

As well as this catalogue, there is a publication from the Working Party on Colour Fringes: Handbook of Federal Colour Fringe Phenomena, Berlin, also in loose-leaf form and with valuation.

V: COLOUR FRINGES IN THE DDR AND THE USSR

Heckel, Kürt: Coloured edge strips in the USSR:
SE 1951, 3:36

A short notice refers to the appearance of edge strips on Mi-stamp No. 1333 (USSR: Stamp Issue 1949: 25 kopeks) which seem to be similar to those from the Wertpapierdruckerei of Leipzig on the 1948 series from the German Post on “Heads of Personalities from Politics, Arts and Science” (of the following publications):

Zempel, Heinrich: Noted on the edge:
SE 1951, 7:106

H. Zempel investigates the stamps in the above series from the German Post in 1948 with the following edge characteristics:

1. Edge strips (a detailed treatment of these will be found in the next publication), and
2. Printers' names; Zempel gives a table of the printers and explains the meaning of their names.

Zempel, Heinrich: And once more edge strips:
SE 1951, 18:282/3

Detailed treatment of the edge strips of the above mentioned series of stamps, as far as they were known at the time.

H. Zempel considers that these could not have been protective strips, but does not however explain what their significance was in printing technology.

Zempel, Heinrich: Eloquent edges – what the sheet edges on the “Heads Series” have to tell us:
DS 1961, 24/32 and 46

An expansion of the topic dealt with in the two previous papers, but again giving no explanation for the presence of edge strips. Numbers issued, dates of printing and printers’ names are also given for this series.

VI: PUBLICATIONS OF THE “GERMAN FEDERAL POST” WORKING PARTY

Kling, Herbert: Circular No. 28 from the “German Federal Post” Working Party (July 1965), p.3/4: Colour fringes on the 15 and 10pf IVA stamps of 1965.

The regular circulars published in the Sammler-Lupe from this Working Party (see S. L. 1966, 10/289), also dealt with the colour fringes on the newly-issued from the German Federal Post and the German Federal Post of Berlin; these circulars are as follows:-

- | | |
|--------|---|
| No. 3 | Explanation of the meaning of the colour fringes on the basis of the press releases from the Federal Ministry of Posts. |
| No. 5 | Wohlfahrt stamps, Froschkönig 1966 |

WHAT DO PEOPLE SAY ABOUT OUR FIRST SPECIAL ISSUE

The Dantzig “briefmarken – Rundschau” writes as follows in no.11 of the 16th march about our first special issue: “German-language philatelic Literature in the year 1921”, by Alexander Bungerz:

“This special issue of 125 numbered copies produced by lithography is mainly statistical in nature. Only someone very familiar with the material could evaluate it properly. It has been produced by the leading writer on the German philatelic literature, the artist Alexander Bungerz. In contrast to England, there are as yet few convinced friends of philatelic literature in Germany, despite the efforts of the Society of Philatelic literature Collectors in Berlin to gain greater recognition for this branch of philately. The present report is indispensable for every philatelist who needs to concern himself professionally or from interest with the literature. The editors of 2Briefmarken – Rundschau are at one with all lovers of literature in thanking the author at this point and expressing the deepest appreciation for this valuable publication”.

VOHL REDIVIVUS

In the times of peace there were two main catalogues in Germany, the “Seuf2 and the “Kohl”. The first was better known and more widely used by the collectors’ world as a whole, but the latter had more recognition from the more scientific collector. In fact, one can safely say that Kohl’s Briefmarken-handbuch had a dominant position throughout the world, on the outbreak of war, both works disappeared from the face of the now so stormy world. The European section Seuf only reappeared after some years, whilst Kohl’s 10th edition of 1915 has been the last hitherto. Hence, Herr Rudolf Siegel, the proprietor of the House of stamps and Entires, Berlin, decided to obtain the rights to the Kohl handbook, and let it appear again. He found the most suitable person to undertake this immense work was Dr. Herbert Munk., Whose wide expertise has made him one of the best-known collectors in philatelic circles. Under the leadership of Dr. Munk, and with the help of leading researchers and collectors at home and abroad, the old handbook now appears in a new guise. Technical difficulties unfortunately made it impossible to bring the work out all complete in one volume, and it will appear in sections of some 160 pages. The first section is now available, and anyone who takes the trouble to examine the material will be convinced what it represents a work that again bears witness to the often-praised German thoroughness and system.

In a very detailed foreword of 24 pages, which will be continued in later issues, the editor sets out the guidelines by which this 11th edition of the Handbook has been compiled: arrangement by issue, type of stamp, numbering, classes of stamp, division by names of countries, pattern and type, colour etc. Varieties of perforations, paper and watermark are then gone into in detail; because of the unreliable state of the German currency, prices are given in goldmark shillings.

The first section covers Afghanistan to the Bahawa Islands. If we look for instance at Afghanistan, which covers 20 pages, we can appreciate the immense diligence which has gone into this work. Albania takes up practically the same number of pages, and Argentina 36 – only those who have ever tried to do something similar will really understand what these concise data have actually involved.

The illustrative material consists mainly of the old Kohl stereotypes, augmented by many special new illustration. There are detailed historical notes, and details of issues, sheet arrangements, plates, types, perforations, bisection, surcharges, reprints etc. There are abundant notes on the existing literature used in the study. For Egypt, Argentina and Ethiopia there are valuable accounts of the foreign post offices, their stamps and cancellations.

The details of the colours are given as they appear to the eye, avoiding as far as possible the all too often illogical and confusing descriptions used in earlier years. It is obvious at once that a simple colour scheme will not do for a handbook; many issues and stamps exist in such a plethora of colours that an extended scale is needed to describe them. The very tricky series from blue to violet, purple, lilac and red is handled extremely well. Individual designations such as “dull cherry colour” (Afghanistan, no.81) have been left which must be accounted an oversight, since “cherry colour” could be either black, white or red – the colours of the old German flag.

The collectors' world can only be grateful to the editor and the publishers of Kohl's Briefmarken – handbuch: this new work is indispensable. The subsequent issues, which should appear at 3 – monthly intervals, will be awaited with excitement.

In conclusion we will say that the work can be ordered direct from the publisher in Berlin (162 Friedrichstrasse, Berlin W.8) if not available from all better stamp dealers at home and abroad.

Alexander Bugerz.

VICTOR SUPPANTSCHITSCH.

He was born the son of a merchant of Laibach in Carniola in 1838, and his father wished him to see him enter trade as well. However the son was more inclined towards study, left his local High School in 1857 and studied law in Vienna. He entered official service in 1862, became a Court Assistant in 1869, Deputy Public Prosecutor in the provincial court of his native town in 1873, District Judge in Adelsburg in 1874, Provincial Court Counsellor in Klagenfurt 1883, Counsellor in the Supreme Court for Steiermark, Carinthia and Carniola, in 1889 he was appointed Chairman of the Arbitration Court of the Workers' Compensation Board for Carinthia and Steiermark and in 1896 he was promoted to Court Counsellor in the highest judicial body in the Empire, the Supreme Law and Cassation Court of Vienna. In 1894 he was distinguished by the award of one of the highest Austrian orders, the order of Leopold, and in 1906 he retired as President of the Senate, went back to Graz and since then has enjoyed his happiest years with his family and his Summer home in the Tyrol.

When he was a high school student, Suppantschitsch collected plants and butterflies, until the death of his brother in 1863 brought him into possession of a small stamp collection, which he carried on as a pious duty but with real good will, as in the same year he began to take the first German specialist magazine, the Magazine für Briefmarken-Sammler by Zschiesche & Köder of Leipzig. In 1864 he also began to take the Börsenblatt für den Briefmarkenhandel from Wilh. Reichel & Co. of Kaufbeuren, and the Allgemeine Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung from Siegmund Friedl of Vienna, and the Weiner Briefmarken-Zeitung from Heinrich Koch. The last published Suppantschitsch's first philatelic work on special collecting and inspired him to the serious study of postage stamps and a more scientific approach to philately, so that further articles of his appeared in the current specialist journals. In 1880, the Firm of Ed. Wartigs of Leipzig published his Leitfaden der Philatelie [Guidelines to Philately]. In 1880 this was distinguished by a bronze medal from the Société Française de Timbrologie (with few exceptions, this remains the highest distinction received by the stepchild "Philatelic Literature"). In 1882 appeared Weltbriefmarken-Album [World Stamp Album] compiled by Suppantschitsch, and this was issued up to 1899 in 6 volumes as the Patentiertes Permanent-Briefmarken-Album [Patented Permanent Stamp Album].

This fruitful literary activity brought Suppantschitsch into lively contact with philatelic luminaries, and the charm he showed to everyone brought him many opportunities of friendly interchanges. His friendship with the apothecary Ferdinand Meyer of Franzensbad, with whom he wrote the widely accepted Handbuch für Postmarkensammler für den Permanenten Gebrauch Bestimmt [Handbook for the Permanent use of Postmark Collectors] from G. Zechmeyer of Nuremberg in 1881, struck such deep roots that his death (31.12.1882) almost destroyed Suppantschitsch's productive ability. However, time had a healing effect, the will to work broke through again, and 1892 the firm of A. Larisch of Munich brought out Suppantschitsch's major work, the Bibliographie der gesamten Deutschen Philatelistischen Literatur seit ihrem Entstehen bis ende 1891 [Bibliography of all German Periodical Literature from its origin to the end of 1891], which, in spite of its technically impractical format was an inspiring and animating source for all philatelic researchers.

On 1895, J. J. Weber of Leipzig published the Grundzüge der Briefmarkenkunde [Fundamentals of Philately], with a second edition in 1908. In 1897 came the Katalog der Philatelistischen Bibliothek des Oberlandesgerichtsrates V. S. in Graz bis ende 1893 [Catalogue of the Philatelic Library of the Supreme Court Counsellor V. S. in Graz to the end of 1893]. This was also printed in the Austria-Philatelist, 1895/97. In 1901 came Die Entstehung und Entwicklung der Philatelistischen Literatur in der Zweiten Hälfte des XIX Jahrhunderts [The origin and Development of Philatelic Literature in the Second half of the 19th Century], and in 1904 Die Seltenheiten der Philatelistischen Zeitungsliteratur bis 1900 [Rarities of the Philatelic Periodical Literature up to 1900], previously published in the Dresden Philatelist, 1903/4. In 1909 came Die Philatelistischen Literatur Österreich-Ungarns im XIX Jahrhundert [The Philatelic Literature of Austria-Hungary in the 19th Century], and in the Dresden Philatelist from 1905 to 1908 a series of articles on Über Unregelmässigkeiten bei Herausgabe, sowie über Irrungen und Verstösse in der Numerierung, Datierung und Paginierung der Philatelistischen Zeitungsliteratur bis Ende 1900 [Irregularities in the Issue, and Mistakes and Differences in Numbering, Dating and Pagination of the Philatelic Literature to the end of 1900]. More recently, Suppantschitsch has been practically the most active contributor to the Handbuch der Deutschen Philatelistischen Literatur [Handbook of the German Philatelic Literature] that appeared from 1916 as a supplement to the Dresden Philatelist, and is now finished.

In recognition of his great services to philately, Suppantschitsch was awarded the Lindenberg Medal in 1913. We reported this on p.33 of 1913 and from there we reprint the portrait, accompanied by a facsimile of his signature showing his extraordinarily fine writing.

It can be seen from his literary activity that Suppantschitsch developed from being an ardent stamp collector into an even more zealous book collector, with the extraordinary result that the acquisitions to his philatelic library just up to 1900 amounted to some 1800 books, 3037 complete volumes of periodicals, and more than 30,000 single issues. This most extensive private library enabled Suppantschitsch to give outstanding support to the exhibition of philatelic literature at Bugra in Leipzig 1914 by sending in 984 selected gems, i.e. published materials not available in other libraries; some of them did not appear even in Crawford's library. Lending such valuable items at such a distance is a proof of his unlimited helpfulness in promoting and fostering serious philately, as is also the devoted work he put in on the accompanying forms. They give not only the complete titles, carefully entered individually, but also very explicit explanations of the rarest items. However, even this was not enough: Already in his seventy-sixth year, he did not shrink from the difficulties of a long journey to visit the exhibition, to view the initial endeavour. Our distinguished guest visited at the end of June when the exhibition was not really ready, but all his questions about particular exhibits were speedily answered. Not only the external aspect of literature exhibition, but also in particular, the reason for the detailed placement of the many items entrusted to us received recognition, and the praise received from the most experienced and respected of bibliophiles constituted our most valuable mark of honour and our best thanks.

We felt amply repaid for all the trouble of setting up the exhibition, which did not reach its full flower because of the war.

The evening brought us a few pleasant hours of gossip, when Suppantschitsch amongst others gave us a brief account of his travels in the high Alps. With the wish that a man retaining so much mental and physical vigour at such a great age may live to see many more birthdays, we will express our heartfelt thanks for the methodical encouragement that Suppantschitsch has steadily given to philately for 55 years in spite of many injustices.

Aome Facts on the Russian Philatelic Literature

By Dr. Ivan Karl Turyu, Vienna.

From the standpoint of German philatelists it is a great mistake to be content with the results of scientific philatelic research in his own country and completely ignore the philatelic publication of the other countries. However it would be useful to do this where the German philatelist can act by his example as teacher and pathfinder, and can bring the stamp collectors of a whole nation into contact with the German ethos of collecting and sense of order. And such a country, where philately is so to speak still in its childhood, is undeniably the Soviet republic. Here, philately is certainly going through quite a dangerous crisis. A completely superfluous wardship, doing more harm than good, has checked the beginnings of the steady developments of Russian philately.

The rapid progress of this development in the course of one half year, the second half of 1922, can be illustrated by the appearance of an important philatelic literature within the Soviet republics. Only two insignificant little periodicals survived the dark years of the Revolution, the "Journal der Sammler und Korrespondenten des aussersten Nordens" (Archangel, from 1917), and the general Moscow magazine for collectors "Unter Sammlern" (from 1921). Others have come forward rapidly since the middle of 1922. The "Nordkorrespondenz" has been, the title used since October 1 1921 for the collectors' journal of the Far north. The "Bulletin für philatelistische Anzeigen" was issued by the same publisher for a year, then appeared in July 1922 in a much enlarged and improved format. After this, a series of new publications appeared in rapid succession. In August the "Kaukasische Sammler". At almost the same time the "Krimische Sammler" began to appear in Sevastopol (September 1922), along with the "Uralsche Sammler" in Viatka, whilst "Soviet – Philatelist" was published as the official organ of the "Russian Bureau for Philately".

The first non – periodical literature deserving a mention are four little books published by the "Nordkorrespondenz" (Archangel) during the years 1922 and 1923. These were:

1. "Price List of Russian stamps with reports on stamp issues of Soviet Russia
2. An English translation of the same
3. "What is philately" by S. Jevleff,
4. "Calendar for Russian collectors for the year 1923".

These little volumes contain in their limited pages essential guidelines for everyone interested in the postage stamps and philately of Soviet Russia. The specialist work of the renowned philatelist W. Popoff "Table and values of the stamps of the Ukraine with the coats of arms of the Podolian postal district" (Kiev 1922), and the same author's "Catalogue of all stamps from the territories of the former Russia" (Kiev 1923) concludes this preliminary survey of the Russian philatelic literature. May the present retrogression in Russian philately not last too long, so that it can soon progress again.

The Stamp Friend

A collection of original pictures of the stamps of all parts of the world magnified many times.

(Continuation and conclusion)

The names of the countries are given as on the originals. I have described "The Stamp Friend", in such great detail because it is a great rarity of philatelic literature. It is in fact lacking from very large libraries, and is only rarely listed in the well-known library catalogues. It appears in the great Crawford library, and in "Catalogue of the philatelic library of Court Councillor Victor Suppantshitsch in Vienna to the end of 1893" (see Austria – Philatelist 1896, p.395) His library was bought by the Collector's club of New York. It also appears in the following libraries: International Philatelic Society, Dresden; Austrian Philatelic Club – Vindobona, Vienna, Royal Philatelic Society, London; Dr. Emilio Diena, Rome; Herbert Clark, Augmering; Hugo Krötzsch, Leipzig; Carl Beck, Berlin, and the author's own. Carl Beck and H. Clark are probably the only people to possess the four supplementary tables of 1872: the author has two of them. In pre-war days a specimen with 96 tables was sold at auction for 10 pounds. 10 examples are known according to the foregoing list.

In the present time of the magnificent philatelic engravings by Hessheim, it is of particular interest to find out more about the old "Ruhl". Although tables cannot compete with the engravings of the Viennese artist, they are still vivid proof that there was keen interest in the large – scale reproduction of postage stamps as early as 60 years ago.

Greetings

25 years ago I would hardly have dared imagine that the Philatelic Library would celebrate this jubilee. Uncertainty as to whether there was enough interest in philatelic literature in the North Rhine region made the founding of this institution a risky business. The effort has been rewarded.

The gratifying growth in our book stock has led and will continue to lead to problems of space. The rising number of people with an interest in this literature from "near and far" can only be satisfied by the indefatigable aid of many voluntary helpers.

I am very happy that this enterprise is still as vigorous after 25 years as at the beginning.

Recognition by the BDPH and the Foundation had to be fought for. The strenuous efforts of many Society members made success attainable in the end. And there were always philatelists ready to take on the responsibility.

Thus the idea – a library of philatelists for philatelists met with success.

My wish is for progress to continue in the next 25 years. Allow me to express my thanks here to all who have contributed to the achievement over which we can look back for 25 years today.

Renate Brandt.
Chairwoman of the Hamburg Philatelic Society.

Greetings

The Hamburg Philatelic library has been a going concern for 25 years now. A handful of idealists then got together to create an institution which would supply research philatelists with information from the literature.

The founders and their successors must have made personal sacrifices to set up this outstanding library. They would however, feel rewarded by the success of their activities the recognition won by this Hamburg library is surely the best reward for the active workers.

The Society of German Philatelists eV gladly supports the Hamburg Philatelic Library, now the second largest in Germany, out of deep conviction. It is however the largest one based on a society. It is used by philatelists from all over Germany, since its book stock is extensive and worth seeing. We hope to be able to contribute to the wider influence and formation of the library.

I express my thanks in the name of the BDPH members to the founders and workers of the great Hamburg Library for their work and their many accomplishments for the use and well-being of philately in Germany: They have deserved well of philately. I ask them to go on with the good work. I wish them much success.

Michael Adler
President of the Society of German Philatelists eV

Greetings

Dear Co-workers of the Hamburg Philatelic Library,

Let us begin by congratulating you heartily on your 25th anniversary. The duration of your activity and its rising acceptance in philatelic circles shows how successful the library has been.

It should not be forgotten however that your achievements were only made possible by the successful solutions of problems of finance and space.

Since it is one of the aims of our Foundation to support philatelic libraries, we helped to make it accessible to circles interested in philatelic literature.

We have done this all the more willingly in the past since we know and esteem the voluntary work of its helpers.

May the work of your library be as successful in the future as in the past.

Gerd Gnewuch

Business Director

Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History.

Greetings

To collect knowledge of philately – conserved in books – and make it available to all stamp collectors was the reason behind the foundation of the Hamburg – Altona Society for Philately at the end of the sixties, using the resources of the Hamburg Book Room.

The idea of setting up a centre for serious philatelic research came from the then and current Chairwoman of the Society, Fran Renate Brandt.

She and other friends then carried this idea a stage further: they persuaded the Hamburg Societies to place their own libraries at the disposal of the Book Room to make a support facility and call it the “Hamburg Philatelic Library eV”.

This idea bore fruit. All the Hamburg societies took it up and founded it in 1971. The library found its first home in Post Street.

Male and female collectors from Hamburg, all working for nothing, carried out what soon became an enormous volume of work. External lending was inaugurated, catalogues of holdings were prepared. The reputation of the Library expanded. No major philatelic undertaking failed to consult it on setting up a library and find out what they ought to have. As the Munich Library did not do external loans for quite a while, it was the Hamburg Library which gave this service to Germany.

The Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Philatelic History noted this valuable and useful activity and gave it considerable support over the years. The increasing reputation of this library led to its name being changed to “Philatelistische Bibliothek Hamburg eV”. For many years it was successfully run and represented by a lady philatelist: Fran Jutta Fullrich.

The North German Philatelic Union thanks the members – whether individuals or societies – there could well be more societies and collectors who might support and promote the work of the library – for their support of and loyalty to the library, but in particular the directors, amongst whom ladies – without a quota – have taken a prominent place.

We and I wish the Library further prosperity for the good of philately!
Dieter Brocks
Chairman of the North German Philatelic Union.

Greetings

On the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the Society for the Hambrg Philatelic Library eV I express hearty thanks to the foundress and founding members for their work in creating the Society. On the 18 January 1971 thirty-one people got together to convert the Book Room opened a year earlier by the Hamburg. Altona Philatelic Socieity into a separate library on a society basis. Nobody realised at the time how important this library would become.

Today we can look back on 25 years of successful activity, most of it carried out voluntarily by lady and gentleman philatelists. The engaged work of our helpers is to be thanked for making the library known far beyond Hamburg, all over Germany and abroad, and has been widely, acknowledged.

It will be readily understood that we are rather proud of being the major provate enterprise of this type in Germany supplying all interested philatelists with on-the-spot and external loans, and supplying subject information. An appreciateion of this work was the award of the “Sieger Prize for Philatelic Literature” in the year 1995.

However it should not be forgotten that we can only maintain our activities thanks to financial support from the BDPh via the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History, our State society, and the contributions and gifts of our members.

Thus, in the first place my hearty thanks go to our lade and gentlemen helpers, and then to the friends of the library for their financial support.

I hope we will be able to carry on our work in the future, and that this 25-year jubilee will not be the last we can celebrate together.

Jutta Fullrich.

FROM BOOKROOM TO LIBRARY

In March 1979, now 25 years ago, conceived friends of literature in Hamburg decided that it would suit a wider circle of philatelists to reactive a collection of books that had been very difficult of access in the Hamburg State and university Library since the year 1957.

A lot of them had originally been handed over by agreement from Hamburg – Altona Philatelic Society eV.

The basice idea at the time this friendly arrangement did not work, and the society had great difficulty in getting at its books, even when referring to the arrangement.

The iniative for starting a book room was thus the next step. After suitable premises had been found, the opening of the “Philatelistische Bücherei Hamburg” took place in Poststrasse on 14 March 1970.

Our honorary member, and then as new chairwoman of the Hamburg Philatelic Society, Fran Renate Brandt, found champions to support this enterprise.

Furniture was collected so that the books could be housed on the one hand, and potential readers would have somewhere to sit.

An appeal went out to other societies in Hamburg and they made their society literature available to the young library as well.

This was done by the Winter-Alsterdorf Stamp Collector’s society, BSV Bergdorf, BVW, Harburg Stamp Collectors’ Society of 1920, and ArGe Schleswig-Holstein Postal History and Philatley.

With an already quite outstanding stock, a large number of readers were attracted to the premises during the early months.

The meeting and philatelists’ day of the BDPh took place in Hamburg in the year 1970, and was distinguished by an exhibition of literature on the premises of the State and University Library.

The formation of the society “Philatelistische Bücherei Hamburg” on 18 January 1971 can be looked on as a further milestone. Progress towards independence began on this day.

Amongst the founder members brought in by the new chairwoman Fran Brandt we find amongst others the names of Gustav Adolf Albers, Arno Bederke, Dieter Brocks, Wolfgang Ehrhardt, Klaus Eitner, Fritz Klauke, Karl Knauer, Heinz Möhle, hilde Ramm, Albert Schuchardt, Artur Schmidt, Wolfgang Schnidt and Gerhard Wendowski.

Because of the rise in the number of books the library moved to its present home in Hamburg-Holenfelde.

The increasing number of members and visitors, and the rise in requests for local and inter-library loans confirms how right we were to bring it into existence.

In 1985 the Hamburg – Wandsbek Stamp Collectors’ Socociety decided to donate its literature to the Hamburg library.

Various chairman followed Fran Brandt. From 1974 to 1980 and 1984 to 1987 this office was filled by Herr Harry Hoffman, and by Fran Hilde Ramm from 1980. Fran Doris Weil took over direction of the library in 1983, and various honorary assistants ensured its smooth running.

From 1987 to 1990, the Hamburg institute had a new chairman in the shape of Herr Dietur Hüweler.

The acquisition of a computer enabled the production of a catalogue to be put in hand. This has been published in conjunction with the Deutsche Briefmarken – zeitung, and was obtainable as a catalogue in time for the IPHLA in Frankfurt in 1989.

Following on enquiries abroad – the word “ Bucherei” was ofter translated as “Bookshop” – a change of name was decided on. From 1989 its title was “Philatelistische Bibliothek Hamburg eV”, and is thus beyond doubt a “Library”.

The new chairman in the year 1990 was Fran Jutta fullrich.

In the following year she celebrated the 20th anniversary of the foundation with a circle of founding members and friends of the library.

The founding members Fran Renate Brandt and Herr Wolfgang Schmidt were made honorary members at this time.

Following retirement of Fran Doris Weil, the new head from 1991 was Fran Stephanie Töppe.

Our presence at NAPOSTA in 1976 and IPHLA in 1989 has been followed by appearances at Dresden (Lilienthal), Sindelfingen (Stamp fair), Dartmund (NAPOSTA) Hamburg (NORDPOSTA), Essen (Stamp fair). Rostock (HANSEPHIL), Osnabrück (OSNAPOST), and several regional exhibitions.

The much expanded 2nd part of our catalogue was published in Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung with special attention to our stock of exhibition catalogues, and then appeared as a special offprint.

This catalogue shows that the book stock has now grown to some 10,000 titles.

A further growth in the number of members should be mentioned, as it reflects the work of the largely voluntary staff.

This has not remained unobserved and has been reflected in the award to the hamburg philatelic Library of the SIEGER PRIZE FOR PHILATELIC LITERATURE/. This honour was bestowed on 15 October 1995 at the 96th meeting of the Society of German Philatelists at Bremen-Vergesack.

The Hamburg library is recognised as one of these special libraries (Munich and Frankfurt – au-Main) in Germany whose extensive stock is available for local and long-distance loans.

Stamp collectors from Germany, Europe and overseas use the services of our library.

This confirms the basic thinking behind the creation of the “Philatelistische Bücherei Hamburg e.V.” in 1971, and it remains to hope that there will be something more to celebrate in 25 years’ time.

Hans-Joachim Förster
Acting chairman

DEAR READER OF THIS JUBILEE ISSUE

If you would like to mark our 25th anniversary with a small present, we would be glad to have a contribution in the form of money instead of flowers or the like, to enable us to buy a badly-needed more powerful computer. The capacity of our old one has been exhausted and is handicapping our work, so that help must be provided as soon as possible. Obviously you can have a receipt for your contribution.

Chapter of the Sieger Prize for Philatelic Literature

Laudatio.

Award of the SIEGER PRIZE for Philatelic Literature 1995.

Consul Hermann E. Sieger founded the SIEGER PRIZE for philatelic literature in the year 1927. The award is made every year to a philatelist at home or abroad, or according to Rule 6 for the SIEGER PRIZE, to a philatelist or an institution who has made a basically important contribution to philatelic literature. Since 1984 the prize winner has regularly been honoured at the meeting of the Society of German Philatelist of the German Philatelists’ Day. After the death of the founder the design of the medal was altered: it now carries on the front the head of the founder with the inscription “HERMANN. E. SIEGER 1902-1954”. The medal is awarded by a chapter consisting of the chairman, a philatelic author, Consul Hermann W. Sieger and the prize winners from the two previous years.

For the year 1995 the chapter has awarded the prize to HAMBURG PHILATELIC LIBRARY eV.

In the course of almost two-and-a-half decades the book room of the then Hamburg-Altona Society for Philately has developed into a library whose work extends well beyond the German region. Our estimate of its value does not depend only on the considerable expansion during recent years of its stock in books and periodicals, and their recording in a detailed and clear catalogue, for the printing of which thanks should be given here to the German Society for Philately. Above all, we took into account the painstaking efforts, sometimes for years, of the mainly voluntary helpers, to whom we owe valuable advice and sometimes also outstanding contributions to philatelic knowledge.

The pleasure that the workforce takes in their daily tasks in the library: loans, inter-library loans, purchasing, cataloguing, subject enquiries, is remarkable, and is not often equalled in the philatelic field. This work in support of philately would not be possible without the constant support of the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History, to whom the thanks of all philatelists are equally due.

CHAPTER OF THE SIEGER PRIZE FOR PHILATELIC LITERATURE ATTESTATION

The Chapter for the Award of the Sieger Prize for Philatelic Literature has awarded this prize for the year 1995 to

for their almost twenty-five years of untiring work in the service of the extension of philatelic literature and its conservation and preservation of philatelic literature and its conservation and preservation from destruction.

What Can We Do to Draw More Attention to Stamp Collecting?

This question was posed some 110 years ago and is the title of an article from the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal no.10 of 22 May 1886. (Some proposals for promoting philately, by O.T.H. in H). Even then, the small number of existing collectors was concerned with this still-relevant question.

The article dealt with the following topic, amongst others:

The recommendation at this time was to use the philatelic library of the Seuf Brothers. The text goes on to say:

“...how can such a library get into the hands of a younger collector, whose finances seldom run to an album to keep his collection in...”

The author now proposes such a library for the general benefit.

“...philatelic lending libraries could be set up in all stamp-dealers’ shops and commission houses, available to anyone for a small charge. Also and this would be even more advantageous, the whole library could appear in sections at the lowest possible price...”

It was further suggested that the Seuf Brothers might undertake to supply such a library.

This will be enough, but it is really surprising to read the thoughts of a collector of 1886 in the year 1996!

In the meantime there have certainly been many efforts to bring this end closer.

The question will now be discussed of whether enough has been and is being done to give the literature its rightful place.

The proposals of that day are the realities of ours and collectors now have every facility for using specialist libraries, whether in Munich, Frankfurt or Hamburg.

However the question always remains: are libraries and archives only for the few people interested.

When we speak collectors - even local ones – we tend to assume they know everything and have the literature at home.

If the collector leaves home and asks about his field of collecting in the library, and is shown something from the index or the stock, he is always very astounded.

Also when the library appears at fairs and exhibitions, there is often amazement when we show the collector what we have on his subject.

It should be stressed that it is always the same group of collectors who visit or write to us.

Most of them are exhibitors who turn to the literature wither beforehand or on the advice of the jury. Only a very few, usually specialists in their field, are regular “customer”. The interest in literature (auctions, buying, selling) has greatly increased on the whole.

The increasing specialisation of recent years, in whatever direction, will probably kee on bringing new readers and users to our library. However, much could still be done to give the specialist literature a more prominent place.

Our experience at major exhibitions has shown that the presentation of the available literature can rouse great interest only in terms of its subject content. This is apparent on return from a fair, when questions and requests reach the library from collectors.

When, for example, further references are given at the end of an article in a specialist journal, some collections will receive the impetus to approach the library.

Normally the author of an article will give details of his sources, but not always.

It would not need much space to give such details and they would probably be useful to readers of the article.

Paths to Literature and thus to knowledge

What is knowledge? Knowledge is not just the name of a little town at the southern edge of Siegerland, but simply expressed is the systematic range of experience.

“Knowledge is Power” says an old proverb and this is true for life , occupation and also for philately.

Knowledge comes from learning, reading, seeing and comparing, so as to draw conclusions.

Knowledge, we have just read, comes from, amongst other things, reading, and I will try to make this part of the path to knowledge to make it accessible – in a simplified form – to you.

For reading we use written and printed materials, i.e. manuscripts, letters, newspapers, books, charts (maps) and also notes. The collective term for all this is “literature”, and a mass of this is to be found in libraries and archives.

The difference is simple. Archives contain (mainly) hand-written material, libraries contain (mainly) printed materials and are open for general use (limited) Libraries are divided into general and specialist, according to their contents.

Before you go into a library or archive, you should know a little about bibliographical terminology (i.e. the special expressions used).

A distinction is drawn between “primary” and “secondary” sources. Primary literature – as concerns us philatelists – is original literature, i.e. principally laws, regulations (rules, rescripts, circulars available), including all service manuals for the Post office, such as for example, the Service Instructions, the ADA (General Service Directions for Posts and Telegraphs, and for the Post and Telecommunications Service), or the DAP (Postal and Telecommunications Service), or the DAP (Postal Service Directions) etc etc.

Secondary literature is all other printed literature based on the sources (i.e. on the primary literature) such as magazines, books etc.

It includes what is called “minor writing” or even “gray literature”.

It covers all typed and printed materials from small organisations such as reports and circulars from working and study groups, or even exhibition catalogues etc.

Bibliographies are collections of literature on given themes or subjects, e.g. on a given district, region, or the like. Larger works have a bibliographical appendix as a rule. Correct specialist works will have what is called an author index or a literature survey. These give the details of the sources from which the editor or author has derived his information.

These two things (bibliographic appendix or author index and literature survey) are eminently valuable sources for further study by the researching philatelist. These source data often give us the impetus to start digging in libraries and archives.

An outstanding bibliographic source of knowledge is the yearly “Literature Reports” from the BDPh supplied to all societies and working parties since the 1977 edition.

“Literature Reports” has appeared since 1951. Up to and including 1988, it runs to 60 volumes.

Further bibliographic help for postal history and philately is given by the bibliographies of Hermann Wolpert (“Literature on the Postal Service from 1539 1870”) with over 2,300 titles, and that by Alfred Koch (“Literature on the German Postal Service 1500 to 1964”), including 14 000 titles. There are also the indexes to series important for us, such as the “Archiv für Deutsche Postgeschichte”, or the “Archiv für Post und Telegraphie”, of great importance as sources of recondite knowledge.

These bibliographies are the best means of getting information ahead of a visit to a library or archive, to find out what is available in printed or written form. Having exact source details will make it easier to locate things in the library later.

As a rule, if a personal visit is made (please find out beforehand about the opening times of the library concerned, they differ very widely), a loans slip is filled in for every item. You will then be dealt with by the library staff. This all sounds more cumbersome than it is in practice.

All libraries contain certain bibliographic works (usually rare and /or old) which cannot be borrowed. Sometimes they cannot be copied either. There are restrictions on loans as well, for example the circulars from working and research groups for the last three years may not be borrowed. This is obvious when we consider time and place...

“We now give some current information on existing philatelic libraries and archives”.

...The obverse of libraries (which consist mainly of printed materials) are archives (which take mainly written material). The Postal Acts are the principal items of interest to us philatelists in these archives.

The best-known of these archives in Germany is the “Thurn and Taxis Principality Archive” in Regensburg...

...In addition, Coblenz and Freiburg have archives with much material on such topics as the German Field Post.

A common feature of all archives is that they do not lend material, and one must apply in advance. Visiting at the arranged time, and is shown “finding books” in which all the available items are listed. One then fills in a consultation slip for everything wanted, and is given the desired items to read. It should be noted that in one archive only film is available, in another only some items can be photocopies and others have to be consulted and copied by hand.

You will see there is an endless supply of literature in the libraries and archives, and it is up to you to make use of the available knowledge for your own collection. Overcome your timidity and get into one of the libraries named. You will find the library staff friendly and helpful. It is not so very hard to find information on your personal collection, and is always worth while.

You will also find it interesting to get exact details of postal routes, so you can follow the exact route of a mail coach and so on. Also, the exact routes for mail, the individual stations and their distances, the costs per mile and per horse, etc. You will naturally also get to know from when and to when the route concerned was used...

...In simple words: you will get to know more than other people, and you will not easily have the familiar “X” replaced by a “U”.

KNOWLEDGE IS INDEED POWER!

I with the friendly agreement of the author, his manuscript has been reproduced in a shortened form.

Up-to-Date Details of philatelic Libraries

Hans-Joachim Förster.

MY PATH TO THE HAMBURG PHILATELIC LIBRARY

On the occasion of this Jubilee, some reflections of value to all philatelists seem to be in order.

As a former chairman of the research Section of the B.D.Ph, I should like to describe my own experience and try to allay possible basic fears and uncertainties.

Allow me to begin by saying that I have written on cancellations and filled the post of 2nd chairman of the Philatelic Library.

As a then “resident” of Hamburg I was a regular reader in and occasional borrower from the library.

Conversations with other people interested in cancellations extended my scope: the honorary assistant Fran [REDACTED] Riese and then chairwoman, Fran Doris Weil, were interested in them.

Until I had not known that literature and basic articles were available on this topic.

It turned out there had been articles on it during the thirties. These naturally interested on “obsessive” and to my surprise proved mines of information.

Then as now, the assistants complained of the lack of helper to support their own voluntary activity.

In helping with such minor task as collecting items for loan or copying requested articles, I came on unexpected articles relating to my desired subject.

Thus was laid down the foundation stone for a period of useful activity in the library.

There was always something new to discover in series of articles and fresh sources of information – in foreign journals as well.

This has now gone on for six years and has not finished yet.

The more than one thousand books, the extensive stock of journals, the official papers and proceedings of many working and research groups are always available as sources.

This has led to a personal archive which now fills five document containers.

This example should make it clear that when material could be found in plenty on this chance subject topics.

Searchers will be helped by the eighty thousand index cards produced by earlier voluntary helpers, who in the time before computers took the trouble to search all the available philatelic journals for articles.

Our library is always a real mine of information and advice.

When are you coming?

Bibliography of Specialist German Publications on the Postage Stamps of Individual Countries

By
Carl Beck

IIIrd enlarged and corrected edition.

Special Publication of the Society of Philatelic Literature Collectors Publisher: "Der philatelische Bücherwurm", 46, Grumerweg, Berlin.

Preface to the IIIrd Edition

In Autumn 1915 appeared the first edition of my "Bibliography of the most important special publications on the stamps of individual countries" and I was able to produce the second edition in Autumn 1919. The appearance in the meantime of many new books and pamphlets has made a third edition necessary, and I present it herewith to Society members as

2nd Special Publication of the Society of Philatelic Literature Collectors

The friendly reception given to the earlier editions prompts me to the wish that the third edition will also supply collectors, researchers and Society Librarians with what they need, and that my work in the interests of philately will not be fruitless.

In view of the increasing tendency to concentrate more and more on collections for individual countries, every philatelist will greet this bibliography with pleasure. Every collector who goes beyond the schoolboy level of buying stamps and sticking them in albums to take a serious interest in his acquisitions will find it very useful and profitable to make himself familiar with the philatelic work of other researchers and experts in special fields. This is why I have compiled the following "Bibliography of German special publications on the stamps of individual countries". I hope thereby to have done the collecting world a service, and if this work excited a further circle of collectors to the diligent study of our specialist literature, then the bibliography will have fulfilled its purpose.

As with the previous editions, this covers practically all the monographs published in German at home and abroad. My thanks are due for the corrections and additions which have been so readily sent to me from many sides, and it is my pleasant duty to express my most heartfelt thanks to those who have helped with the preparation of this work, in particular the late Senate President Victor Suppantchitsch of Graz, Professor Erich Stenger of Charlottenburg and my artist friend A. Bunge of Tegerusee, amongst others.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF PHILATELIC LITERATURE IN GERMANY
IN THE 19TH CENTURY

1. COLLECTORS' BOOKS

Stamp collecting had gone on in Europe for many years and enjoyed steadily increasing popularity before any sort of informative and instructive literature was made available to the collector, apart from the price lists of one dealer or another. Not until industry began to concern itself with this hobby did the first promotional literature start to appear. These were the collectors' books. They were originated by the French, who early appreciated that stamp collecting could only become a commercial activity when the collectors knew what was available for them to collect, and had somewhere to keep the items collected. Hence, collectors' books existed in France as early as the year 1861.

The German publishers followed this example in the year 1862, when the first small collector's book appeared in Leipzig. The then low state of development of philately, and the fact that stamp collecting was visibly the province only of schoolboys, meant that the design of these collectors' books, also called "stamp albums" or "postage stamp albums" was very primitive. Even the "Wuttig Album", put out by the bookseller G. Wuttig of Leipzig in the year 1862 and later to become so famous, consisted in its first edition simply of loose leaves marked off into sections and bound only in cardboard. However, this simple aid found such a ready market that six further edition appeared in 1863. Each one represented an improvement. The 2nd edition was already in book form, with descriptions of the stamps that had appeared. Meanwhile, competition had begun to appear. Friedrich Ludwig devised an album which was published by F. Hoewe of Leipzig. In the year 1863, the firm of Calvary & Co. of Berlin issued an album, and in 1864 the Dürr bookshop in Leipzig issued one compiled by R. Claudius. Other publishers quickly followed with their own products. In a short time the market was flooded with albums. Most of them disappeared from the picture sooner or later, but Wuttig's retained the goodwill of collectors, since the publisher paid as much attention to the contents as to the format. From the 9th edition it passed into the ownership of G. Bauscke, and he issued it in two languages, French and German, from the 10th edition onwards. The 15th edition was published by the Literary Museum of Leipzig, in three languages – German, French and English. With the 18th edition it passed into the ownership of J. Kümmel, and with the 20th into that of Louis Seuf, who issued it in four languages – German, French, English and Spanish – under the title "internationals Briefmarken-Album".

Meanwhile the need became obvious for an album which would not become obsolete within a few years, since this created difficulties with a regular arrangement of the stamps, apart from the loss of money. This was provided by the firm of Seuf, who converted their album into a “permanent” one at its 21st edition. It was split into two volumes at the same time. The first was for stamps, the second for covers, cards, money orders and postal wrappers. The permanence of both volumes was ensured by providing a number of folds at the end to facilitate the addition of supplements.

The editors tried to fit in with the text of the best handbooks, and to conform to all wishes of the other collectors’ books the only one to keep going was that by R. Claudius, which was taken over by A. Zschiesche in 1896, and appeared in a 12th edition in 1891. Zschieschke was also the first to split his album into two volumes (stamps and entires) in the year 1879.

In the year 1870, G. Schaubek (a pseudonyme for Baschke), in 1874 Dr A. Moschkau and in 1879 H. Schwanenberger appeared before collectors with new albums. Both Seuf and Schwanenberger followed the wish of the collecting world in 1889 by dropping their section on entires, and devoting their collectors’ books to postage stamps alone. These were known as “reform albums”, and proved very popular. One of the best collectors’ books was the “Koepe Album”, published in 1885 by the firm of A. Larisch and named after its author Oscar Koepe of Barmen. It was the first album based closely on a handbook (by Ferdinand mayer), and thus included all watermarks and perforations. It banished all illustrations, and was aimed especially at large collectors. In 1883 the firm of Moritz Schanenbergh of hahr, issued a world stamp album and in 1888 the same firm brought out a patented permanent world stamp album in 6 large volumes, which had a simple mechanism enabling supplements to be inserted at any point desired. The “Universal-Briefmarken album” issued by J. F. Bösenberg in the year 1890 also included watermarks and perforations, and was awarded the highest distinctions at exhibitions.

C. Cl. Sauer of Mährisch-Ostrau responded in 1889 to the steady increase of specialist collecting by putting out special collectors’ books including the catalogues of the countries concerned. As well as all these stamp albums, known as “proof albums” with compartments drawn in and more or less detailed texts, there were also collectors’ books without proofs for stamps, and especially for entires. The first of this type was put out by Dr. A. Moschkau for entires collectors in 1874. A similar one for stamps only was put out in the same year by S. Friedl of Vienna.

There were little printing devices which the collector could use to make proofs to his own liking. Moschkau chose a portfolio to store his sheets, and Friedl used an adjustable holder. Further albums without proofs were put out by S.F. Friedmann in Vienna in 1876, by Stimming in 1883, by Dauth in 1884, by Glasewale in 1888, and by Zschieschke in 1891. All tried to solve the problem with more or less dexterity. Various types of empty cardboard box were used by Dauth, Seuf, hofmann etc.

To take account of the trend towards the collection of entire letters, A. marbes of Bremen in 1891 put out a collectors’ book for entires and stamps or letters. Thus, within about 30 years collectors’ books appeared on the German market in every conceivable shape and form. They met practically all requirements and were translated into many foreign languages, which could not be said about the foreign products. The collectors’ books were the basis for the entire development of stamp collecting, without which it would never have undergone the rapid and broad expansion it actually did.

2. THE CATALOGUES

The next literary product brought out for the stamp collecting industry too the form of price catalogues. In Germany as early as 1860 there were bug stamp dealers who issued catalogues of existing postage stamps and inserted the prices at which they were selling the individual stamps. One of the first price catalogues was put out by tramberg's Sons under the title "Survey of all know postage stamps issued from 1849 [more probably 1840] to 1862". This appeared at the end of 1862 or the start of 1863.

In 1863 further such catalogues were put out by Zschiesche and Köder of Leipzig and G. Wuttig of Gründer, the first major German stamp dealers. They ran to about 8 pages and covered 600 to 700 stamps, described by design, colour and value. A large number of price catalogues appeared over the years 1864 to 1866. Since they were designed in the first place to help the dealers, their philatelic data are limited to essentials. The first two large-scale German catalogues appeared in 1874, in the form of Dr. A. Moschkau's catalogue in Leipzig, and in 1877, from Sigmund Friedl in Vienna. The first of these reached its second edition in 1876 under the title "Handbuch Für Briefmarken-Sammler", and was looked on for a long time as one of the most comprehensive catalogues over the years 1874 to 1880 especially it was a favourite with large- and medium-scale collectors. This affection was based on the first truly systematic treatment of the material, including watermarks and perforations, and the many scholarly notes. Dr. Moschkau himself only edited it up to the fourth edition, the 5th was taken over by W. Herrmann and the 6th Richard Seuf of Leipzig.

The 7th edition appeared in two volumes, the first covering stamps, envelopes and postal wrappers, and the second covering the rest of the entieres.

The "Friedl catalogue" which appeared in three parts was extended by supplements upto 1881. In 1883 Friedl embarked on the publication of what was planned to be a large-scale catalogue of all postage and telegraph stamps, but it only got as far as the letteer I (Italy).

3. HANDBOOKS

A particular place was occupied by those catalogues that did not give prices but were simply meant to inform and instruct collectors about stamps.

These are known as "handbooks", in contrast with the price catalogues. The first was published as early as 1863 by the Dürr bookshop in Leipzig. It contains a short account of the history of postage stamps and an introduction to building up a collection. There were very dear descriptions and drawings of all the stamps known to date, with detailed notes of the regions and periods over which they were valid. This handbook was far excelled by the "Description of all postage Stamps known to Date", by the book dealers Widow Berger-Levrault and Son of Srrassburg, in 1864. As well as actual postage stamps, this dealt with trials, designs, sketches, printing samples and known pirated editions (forgeries). Other useful handbooks came out in 1864 from F. Elb in Dresden on the basis of official sources, from A.F. Starch in Vienna in 1866 and from G.W. Schubert in Dresden the first "motif" handbook, listing all the allegorical subjects, portraits, coats of arms etc appearing on stamps. These handbooks and catalogues contained some gaps, some inaccuracies, and lacked a systematic philatelic approach.

Nevertheless they were important aids for the collector who found that albums alone were not enough. They were the forerunners of the extensive handbooks and monographs that appeared later, so their importance for philately should not be underestimated.

4. THE SPECIALIST JOURNALS

Collectors in the early years of philately had at their disposal only collectors' books, catalogues and handbooks, which usually had to serve them for a long period of time. Information as to the current new issues, appearance of forgeries etc. was thus very late in reaching those interested. This information gap was closed by the Leipzig firm of Zschiesche and Köder on 1 May 1863 with the publication of the first specialist magazine in German devoted solely to the interests of stamp collectors, the "magazine für Briefmarkensammler". This was an event like no other for philately. The hearts of all collectors went out to the new journal, which gave them information in a convenient form on the entire range of philately, in the shape of articles with fine illustrations. Moreover it provided a means of interchange between collectors and dealers. Hence a path was opened along which philately could rise to ever higher developments. Up to May 1867 it was the scientific foster-mother of German collectors, and whatever the German periodicals became later, their origin lay in the "Magazin für Briefmarkensammler". However, the "magazine" did not remain for only the only specialist German journal. In the year 1864, W.Reichel & co. put out their "Borsenblatt für den Briefmarkenhandel" for their stamp dealership in Kaufbeuren. It appeared twice a month, and was devoted chiefly to market reports, but did include well-written technical articles with pasted-on illustrations. It ceased to appear after 6 months but its place was taken on 1 July 1864 by the "Allgemeine deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung" from E. Roschlan of Coburg. This also appeared twice a month and was very well edited. The illustrations appeared first as supplements, but later they pasted into the articles. This too ceased to appear on 15 December 1864. These two journals could not withstand the competition of the "magazine". Another attempt by Spiro Bros. of Hamburg, with "Der deutsche Briefmarken-Sammler" foundered after a few issues starting in November 1864. G. Bauschke had more luck with his "briefmarken-Sammler", which appeared ten times a year, in Leipzig, starting at the beginning of January 1866. Very well edited by the publisher himself, it soon earned the goodwill of collectors, and in April 1867 it took over the place of the by-then defunct "Magazin", up to October 1870, "Briefmarken-Sammler" was the only significant German specialist magazine. It survived the German-Austrian War, but failed in June 1871 as a result of prominent collectors of the day amongst its contributors, such as Alexander Triefel and John Siewert. The failure of this journal was felt less keenly because A. Zschiesche and G.Bauschke had founded the "Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung" in Leipzig in October 1870.

The editor was Dr. A. Moschkau, the distinguished contributors were A. Triefel, r.F. Albrecht, T.Haas etc. Dr. Moschkau gave up the editorship as early as October 1871, and helped to publish the "magazine für den Sammler von Essais, Privatpost-, Wechsel-Stempel – und Eisenbahnmarken" in July 1871. However this journal too survived for just a year, till June 1872. Amongst several other short-lived journals, the "Allgemeine Briefmarken-Auzeiger" published by F.W. Rademacher and L.May in Hamburg is worthy of mention. It was the only specialist journal from June 1873 to January 1874. In the year 1878 it passed to E.W. Grossman of Dresden, who published it as the "Dresdener illustriertes Briefmarkenjournal", then from 1882 as the "Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung".

THE DEVELOPMENT OF PHILATELIC LITERATURE IN GERMANY DURING THE 19TH CENTURY

(Continuation from Part 21/74 and Conclusion)

On 1 January 1874 a new magazine, "Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal" entered the philatelic arena. It was published by H. Wernick & co. of Leipzig, but soon passed into the ownership of Louis Seuf, and became one of the most important and long-lived of the German philatelic journals. Its great upturn took place in 1876, when Dr. Moschkau became the editor. This paper outshone all its later competitors when it came to satisfying the needs of collectors at all levels. Its excellent work under the heading “New issues”, the instructive treatment of the Editor’s Letter Box”, the numerous, sometimes coloured, illustrations and the wide variety of supplements found wide acceptance in all philatelic circles. There was hardly a single German philatelist of repute who did not write for the “IBJ”. It appeared twice a month from 1884 onwards.

The philatelic-literary life began to develop in Austria as well. In July 1872 S.F. Friedmann of Rudolfsheim (Near Vienna) came before the world of collectors with his “Philatelische Berichte”. In format it was small and unimpressive, but it did supply its readers with an abundance of shorter but important items. The advertisement section served the ends of its publisher. It appeared in 40 numbers to the end of 1877. The “Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung” published by S. Friedl in Vienna was on the other hand much better presented. It just appeared on 15 January 1876. It soon gained a firm foothold in Germany as well as Austria, and was able to adopt a larger format for its second volume. In the year 1880 it adopted the title “Weltpost”, under which it appeared till 1907. Its most brilliant period was from 1878 to 1883, when Ferdinand Meyer was one of its principal contributors. A series of other outstanding contributors such as P. Lietzow, H. Lübker, H. Henpel, Jausmann etc gave the journal its standing in all German philatelic circles, so that it was considered in no way inferior to the “Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal”. In Switzerland too, the stamp dealer E. Riesen of Schwanden put out a stamp magazine, which however only reached 9 issues.

From then on, the philatelic publications multiplied year by year. In 1877 the “union” appeared in Dresden, and the advertising sheet “Mercur” in Kreutz; in 1878 came the “Berliner Illustrierte Briefmarkenzeitung” and the “Philatelistische Verkehr” in Leipzig. In 1879 appeared the “Hamburger Briefmarken-Zeitung” and the “Schweizer Briefmarkenzeitung” from Robert Doyle in Berne. 28 new journals appeared in the years 1880 to 1885, 39 from 1886 to 1890, and a grand total of 82 from 1891 to 1895. Most of these however proved to be mere “Ephemera”, which often barely survived their first year. Amongst the more important were the already-mentioned “Berliner Illustrierte Briefmarkenzeitung”, which passed to Georg Foure in its second year, then changed its name to “Berliner Illustrierte Philatelisten-zeitung” in 1882. It ceased to appear in November 1887. In the year 1880 philatelists gained a new organ which soon developed into the most important German specialist journal after the “Illustrierte Briefmarken – Journal”: this was the “Philatelist”, from the Dresden International philatelic Society. H. Schwaneberger took over the editorship in 1883, and created the first magazine completely independent of dealers or other special interests. This periodical survived till the beginning of the Second World War. In 1890 the many new journals included two other outstanding ones, the “Postwerthzeichenunde” from A. Harisch in Munich and the “Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung” from D.H. Brendicke in Berlin. Finally from 1888 there was a magazine devoted entirely to the special interests of collectors of private postage stamps, the “Neueste Privatpostnachrichte” from A.E. Glasewald of Gossnitz, which rapidly gained in popularity, especially as its editor was known to be a leading expert on private stamps (and still is today).

One special feature of the German philatelic periodical literature was that authors had a distinct preference for writing for magazines, so that much special material was printed in them before it gained independent publication. One reason for this was the proverbial German thoroughness and the wide extension of specialist collecting, so that philatelic researchers were very much impelled to publish their findings as soon as possible, and the number of contributors to the journals increased rapidly.

Another special class of philatelic journal consisted of the society journals, which were however as a rule restricted to members of the Societies and associations. The honour of producing the first such journal belongs to the Vienna Philatelic Club, which began one in the year 1882. The Bavarian Philatelic Society followed in 1883 with the "Philatelist", a name which was later changed to "Das Post-Werthzeichen". The reports of the Berlin Philatelic Club were of great significance because of their scientific articles. The reports appeared from 1888 to 1889. From 1890 onwards the reports were only available to members. Some 25 of such Society journals appeared from 1882 to 1895, and enjoyed much support. Dealers' organisations and stamp exchanges also had their organs. Also worthy of notice are the purely advertising magazines, which first appeared in the mid-60s: the most important of these was the "General-Auzeiger für Philatelie", from 1883 to 1945.

5. TEXTBOOKS AND SPECIAL WORKS

The appearance of the first philatelic textbooks and special catalogues takes place in the period 1880/90. the first textbook was the "Guidelines on Philately" by Victor Suppantšitsch, published in Leipzig in 1880 by the firm of E. Wartig. it was awarded a bronze medal by the Société Française de Timbrologie in Paris. Some eight years later (1888) R. Krause published his "Textbook on Philately", which was followed in 1889 by two similar works "The Science of Postage Stamps" and "Vademecum for Philatelists" by G. Finke, then in 1890 by "Signpost for Postage Stamp collector" by O. Jeran and finally in 1891 by "Guidelines on Philately" by the Seuf Brothers. An extraordinary book was published by O. Kausch under the title "Philology in Philately".

Much was achieved in the field of major handbooks and special catalogues. Paul Lietzow led the way with a two-part handbook, in which he broke away for the first time from the hitherto accepted tradition of an alphabetical sequence for the countries, and used a geographic one instead. Furthermore, he dispensed with illustrations and replaced them by precise descriptions of the stamps. Also, he relegated all private postage stamps and dubious to the appendix. Vols 3 and 4 appeared in 1885 and 1886, and there was a second edition of the first part in 1888. Moreover in 1884 Lietzow put out a catalogue of "rarities" and this went to the three editions up to 1893. in the year 1881 Ferdinand Mayer astonished the philatelic world with his famous "Handbook for Stamp Collectors". Its particular features were that it was written by a single individual and appeared as a complete whole. This handbook was the first product of critical research, and found universal acceptance. Even the greatest collectors began to be guided by it, and Oscar Koeppel based his major 1885 album on it. After the 3rd supplement, which must have appeared immediately after Mayer's death, Dr. Paul Kloss carried the work on with 4 further supplements.

In the year 1887 A. Larisch, then in Vienna, put out a handbook that became known throughout Germany under the name "Catalogue Larisch". In the same year came O. Teltz's "Great handbook of Philately", the editorship of which was later taken over by C. Lindenberg and carried his name. 26 parts of this work were issued up to the end of 1891, going as far as Mexico. As well as official and private postage stamps it also covered telegraph stamps, trial essays and new impressions. Issues 25 and 26 alone dealt exclusively with the stamps of Mexico up to 1872, which will give an idea of the scope of the entire work.

Also worthy of mention are the specialist works "Postage Stamps of Greece" by Glasewald, "The postage Stamps of Spain and its Colonies" by R. Friedrich, "Handbook of German Private Postage Stamps" by Glasewald, Sattler and Wagner, 11 other special works and monographs were made available to philatelists up to 1891.

In conclusion it should also be mentioned that at the beginning of the 90s “Philatelic School Societies” were founded in Germany and Austria, and they also tried to put out their own literary efforts in the forum of Society papers, within the limits of their resources.

6. ADDRESS BOOKS AND PHILATELIC CALENDARS

Address books must also be included amongst the oldest philatelic literature, giving as they did all the details of dealers, collectors and postal undertakings important for the collector. The first steps in this direction were taken by Ch. Maann in 1864 in Leipzig, E. Pegan in Trieste, E. Halbrock in Bielefeld and O. Kreuchauf in Hamburg all in 1872. In the years up to about 1893 there were no fewer than 20 such address records put on the market, and I would like to give special mention to the “Schwindler-Address Book” by r. mayerhofer, hamburg, of 1877.

The first calendars I have traced are the “Permanent Wall calendar for Philatelists” by S. Schmidt, 1880 and the “illustrated Philatelic Calendar for 1881” by r. Deyhle. A curiosity was the “German Philatelists’ calendar” by Dr. A. Moschkau, 1887, which took the form of a rather large postage stamp.

If we take a backward glance at these 30 years in the development of the German philatelic literature, we must freely admit that great pioneering work was actually carried out over this period of time.

From 1862 to c. 1895 the following appeared:

About 80 different collectors’ books

About 420 catalogues and dealers’ price lists

About 120 handbooks, monographs and specialist catalogues

About 200 different specialist journals

About 25 textbooks

About 30 address books and yearbooks

If we compare the first albums from G. Wuttig or F. Ludwig and the first catalogues and handbooks from Zschiesche and Köder and the Durr Bookshop in the early years with the Koeppel or Schanbek albums or the Ferdinand meyer handbook at the end of our period, we shall be amazed at the great progress made by philately since the beginning of its literature, and the ardour and assiduity shown by our predecessors in giving philately its scientific aspect.

“The German philatelic literature is a national enterprise in the true sense of the word, produced by common application to a loved common topic” said Victor Suppau0tschitsch in the year 1893

PHILATELIC LITERATURE IN SPAIN.

NOTES FOR COMPILING A CATALOGUE

PHILATELY – fem. Knowledge, study of and affection for the postage stamps used to frank correspondence.

PHILATELIC - adj. That relating or pertaining to philately.

FOREWORD

There would be no point in devoting many pages of this pamphlet to an examination of the little pieces of paper that are stuck to the outside of our letters. They are the monument to a great administrative reform adopted today by practically all the nations of the world. History, geography, administration, finance, monetary systems, linguistics, heraldry, fine arts, etc., are all directly and intimately related to the humble postage stamp which passes unnoticed before the eyes of the majority of its users. The stamp trade is a considerable branch of commerce in various cities in Europe and America: their study occupies prominent and educated people, and respected societies, and the books, periodicals, pamphlets and papers to which philately has given rise can be numbered in hundreds, many of them of outstanding quality and recognised value. We may mention some of the best known French and English publications relating to stamps, which give an authoritative presentation of the basic ideas, along with many other features as much novel and erudite as curious and interesting. Enough then, of these vague generalities, directed towards both beginners and experts in philately.

The Société Française de Timbrologie, established in Paris under the Presidency of the learned philatelist Baron A. de Rothschild, has invited its members to co-operate in the production of an index of the various writings that have a bearing on stamps or philatelic questions, and that have seen the light in countries inhabited by their Corresponding Members.

I have been honoured with a similar task, as I know something of Spain because of the times I have spent in this country for reasons of health, and so did not feel at all uneasy with the literature of one of the most important branches of philately, and thus I venture to publish this pamphlet, which will give an idea of the backward state of development of Castilian philately.

It could not happen in any other way. By their very nature, studies of this kind call for patient scientific observation, which does not suit the ardent imagination of the hidalgos [members of the minor nobility in Spain], nor their customs, nor the social and political state of Spain. Here, where civil wars, revolutions and pronouncements in their unbroken sequence form the habitual and ordinary state of things; here, where it is just as easy to get along without science or study, changing night to day with poetry, writing, business or politics; here, where seventy-five thousand duros [silver pesos] are spent every day on cigarettes, bulls and lotteries; here, where swindles and frauds by customs men, forgeries of coins, stamps, banknotes and coupons are an everyday part of life; here, where blank paper is worth more than Government bonds; here, where only a fifth of the population knows how to read and write; here, I repeat, where we lack the conditions under which philately has managed to thrive in France, Belgium or England. And if moreover, we consider that we are dealing with a new craze which is still the butt of mockery instead of patronage from the learned, and which confers neither status nor advantage, how can it prosper in a town where agriculture and industry are down on their luck, and where there are other easier and more convenient ways of obtaining within a short time, respect and money?

We have indicated the causes, both permanent and casual, for the backward state of philately in the Peninsula, and must in fairness repeat an observation which may be taken as axiomatic and which could easily be demonstrated by numerous examples if anyone doubts it. There is no science, art or branch of knowledge in which the Spanish nation has shown itself more backward, and in which it cannot point to any individuals capable of rivalling their more learned colleagues in foreign countries. Certainly those devoted to Philately have not even got a wretched catalogue of the different and curious stamps from the home country and its colonies; certainly the only two philatelic periodicals started in Madrid have passed from the cradle to the grave without even time to receive the water of baptism; certainly Spanish collectors, amongst whom are some very illustrious people, have to read and study foreign works, just as doctors and lawyers have to learn their trade from the French books designated as textbooks by the Spanish Government; nevertheless, it is also certain that the majority of the writings in this catalogue suffer from dealing with generalities rather than with concrete points, from being, to put it plainly, rather practical than mathematical. On the other hand we may quote others, numbers 59 and 62 for example, that can stand on a level with the clear-headed monographs of the celebrated Doctor Magnus, or the unusual book on the Stamps of Russia by my illustrious Polish friend, Samuel Koprowski.

Philatelic Literature in Spain has led the existence of a mendicant friar. It has been charitably housed in various political and literary periodicals of the sort that are born and die so readily in the Peninsula. Today it has the support of the influential Revista de Correos, but months and months may go by without any pen producing an article relating to postage stamps. Although it may appear paradoxical, this means it is at once easy and difficult to compile an index of Spanish writings; easy because they are few in number, difficult because they are scattered though the different papers not directly concerned with philately. This is not the place to describe how I have done my utmost to ensure this listing is complete: I worked without help from anybody, and as a result can blame nobody else for the defects and omissions which may be noted. I do not doubt that many notices in Spanish newspapers, criticising stamp issues, announcing their renewal or exchange, or giving commercial information, have escaped my diligence and goodwill. Nevertheless, I do think that I have managed to pick up the most important, erring perhaps in the direction of being too diffuse rather than too brief or too obscure. I must admit that for guidance and information, the study of Spanish stamps and a clear understanding of Castilian philately, the collector finds it most logical and simple to use foreign works which will give him a body of information and at the same time by means of album and catalogues, an easy and reliable guide to arranging his collection. The great majority of Spanish writing neither lay down general principles nor form a harmonious whole; they are like odd components made by various workmen, which cannot be put together to form a complete and useful machine. Perhaps lovers of bibliography will find some merit in my efforts, and will be indulgent towards their shortcomings, and perhaps they will pardon me for referring to the Philatelic Library from the distinguished North American John K. Tiffany and applying to my small work what he said about his own gigantic labour: from the nature of the task it is hardly possible that it will be found complete or free from errors.

The stamp trade could not exist on the hundred philatelists that exist in Spain: it is supplied and exists thanks to their dealings with rich foreign merchants to whom it provides common and rare stamps from the Peninsula and its colonies, highly prized by the stamp dealers of Belgium and Germany. Many Spanish ladies are active collectors of stamps, and are leading agents in the mercantile aspect of Spanish philately. They are certainly not lovers of Philately. For motives of charity they seek out used stamps for some kind purpose which ignores the actual stamps; others exchange a hundred thousand for a sewing machine, whilst others have set themselves the task of collecting a million! And receiving in exchange a magnificent piano. Do those who go in for this realise that a million stamps will weigh more than 75 pounds, and that if they get 100 a day it will take 30 years to collect them. The truth of the matter is that the net is so cleverly cast by foreign merchants that their agents in Spain come up with good and abundant fish.

The Castilian law code is against the trade in stamps. Whether new or used, the sale and transmission of packets via the post is severely prohibited and punishable. Nevertheless, like many other Spanish laws, this one is ignored in practice. In mentioning these penalties we must not fail to mention the protection given to philately in Spain. At the Madrid exhibition (October 1873), José Maria Provanza was awarded the silver medal for his magnificent album of stamped paper; the illustrious philatelist the Count of Toreno, then a minister of the Crown, built up a collection of five thousand stamps, including all the dependencies of Spain, and added them to the Historical Archives: the Royal Academy of Fine Arts of San Fernando, reporting to the Government on forgeries of stamps, added that stamps should be given all the artistic importance they deserve, which advice, put into effect in June 1876, gave us the first worthy, decent and respectable stamp to be produced in Spain over twenty-five years of alterations, variations and trials. If this specimen signals a new epoch to be marked with joy and gratitude by philately, perhaps the appearance of our young monarch on the stamp will herald a new age of good fortune and tranquillity for poor beaten Spain, the victim for so many years of charlatans, fortune-seekers, thieves and rascals.

NOTES

The 147 items that make up this catalogue, counting item 55 twice, are made up in the following way:

Postal legislation	3
Revista de Correos	28

El Averiguador [The Enquirer] (Second series)	44
Miscellaneous
Various Spanish periodicals	21
Various foreign periodicals	25
Spanish journals on stamps	2
Pamphlets	3
Printed stamps papers and manuscripts	17
Albums	2
Bronze and wooden seals	2
Total	147

The 25 lists in Section Five have not been included in this pamphlet.

The editor of this catalogue possesses everything in it, except for those numbered 120 and 121.

The Madrid periodical La Correspondencia de España for the 9th October 1871 states that the “the comedy performed for the first time last night at the Teatro Martin under the title La Tarjeta Postal [the Postcard] was a brilliant success, its author, Rafael Maroto, being called to the front of his box”.

I have tried to get a copy of this dramatic production, which as far as I know and judging from its title is the first to be written in Spain on a philatelic/postal subject. I have not managed to get one, since it has not yet been printed, according to Antonio Alvarez, the owner of the above, who adds that he is thinking of handing it over to be published by Señor Gullon.

FOREWORD

I wish to express my gratitude to Messrs.* José Fernández Bremón, Anselmo Fuentes, Manuel Chaves, Enrique Redel, Augusto Xerez Perchet, Francisco Fernández Miguel, F. Miguel y Badía, Ramiro Blanco y Pedro Roca, for their kind reviews of the Third Set of Articles in the year 1895 in the periodicals:

La Ilustración Española y Americana (Madrid, 22nd & 30th March)
La Opinión (Badajoz, 21st March)
El Programa (Seville, 3rd April)
La Unión Mercantil (Malaga, 14th April)
Heraldo Postal (Madrid, 25th April)
Diario de Barcelona (Barcelona, 4th May)
El Mundo Naval Ilustrado (Madrid, 25th April)
Revista de Archivos, Bibliotecas y Museos (Madrid, May)

* Translator's note: With regard to names, I have deliberately omitted the prefixes D. (Don) and S. (Señor), with which this document is peppered.

I am also grateful for the following anonymous reviews in:

Diario de Cádiz (Cadiz, 15th March)
El Arcobricense (Arcos de la Frontera, 20th March)
La Lidia (Madrid, 21st March)
Sol y Sombra (Madrid, 24th March)
Revista Contemporánea (Madrid, 30th March)
El Mosaico (Murcia, 10th April)
L'Union Postale (Berne, 1st September)

If I have omitted anything, it is from ignorance and not deliberately.

The Forewords to the First and Second Sets of Articles contained copies of various criticisms, skits, satires and sneers directed at my writings. Hence, I may perhaps be excused the boastfulness of reprinting, as an appendix to the present volume the letter, or rather paeon, with which I was favoured by the ‘friendship’ of the learned bibliophile José Antonio de Balenchana (R.I.P.). The chance reader who takes a fancy to read both sides may not think it quite suitable, but even when his sentence is adverse, it cannot cause grief or annoyance.

PHILATELY AND POSTCARD COLLECTING

To Don Enrique Laso

During the years 1859 to 1862, it was looked on as a crime in Spain to deal in, clean, resell or remit from one nation to another postage stamps that had been used.

At this period the word philately was not in use: it was launched on the world a short time later by Mr. Herpin, who formed it from two Greek words that meant “love of franking”.

The good sense of using it soon became apparent, and it was adopted by all the countries of the world. Spain used it for the first time in the year 1869. It was adopted for common usage, and soon gained academic approbation as well. From then on it made enormous strides.

In his official circular of 2nd September 1901, the worthy and illustrious Director General of Stamps Federico Laviña, used the expression philatelist as being perfectly suited to the idea he wished to express. In my opinion, this set a kind of official seal on the use of this word.

The order already quoted touched on another delicate point, that of whether or not employees of the Post Office could or could not form collections, and as a consequence exchange, buy and sell postage stamps. I shall not say a word about this. Nevertheless it is obvious that the exclusion of these functionaries meant that other people not so employed were perfectly free to collect, exchange, buy and sell postage stamps.

Double gratitude and double thanks are due from collectors to Laviña for his noteworthy circular which not only abrogated the tyrannical ruling that prevented stamp dealing, but also used, admitted and sanctioned the word philately. God should reward him and philatelists show him gratitude.

The same considerations that apply to stamp collecting also apply to the collection of the Post Cards issued by the governments of various countries, and the card album could attract as much curiosity or more than the stamp album. However, we must not go too far and give things a weight they cannot carry.

It is obvious that any piece of paper can become an object of value if it is designed by an artist of merit or carries the lines of a famous writer. Obviously the flood of private cards that has gone round the world does not meet these conditions as they do not carry beautiful fine, elegant, pictures showing the limitless number of things and symbols that the designer is capable of producing.

I do not know if these cards are arranged by countries, or are subdivided into what might be called families and types such as cities, buildings, gardens, houses, saints, bulls and portraits, or scenes from Gil Blas or Quixote.

If the collector is satisfied with unused cards, it will be easy for him to acquire them and lodge them in his album; however, if he wants to have writing on his cards and postmarks on his stamps, he will have to get someone to send them to him, if he can find someone who has the same interests and will take the trouble, as is the case with Juan Palomo and myself.

Obviously, building up a collection of postcards is an enterprise similar to that of building up a collection of photographs such as the ones people take every day, or else it would be a tiresome labour verging on the impossible. There is a sort of struggle between publishers and collectors, with the first trying to publish (since the more types the more profit) and the second to acquire the various types: a continuous struggle without truce or interruption except in countries where postage and official stamps are kept on sale for long periods.

I do not mean to say that I am the opponent of those who collect picture postcards with all sorts of beautiful objects and inscriptions. Nothing could be further from my wishes or my intentions. I am a devotee of liberty and tolerance, and obviously each collector is entitled to find his pleasures where it suits him, so long as the result offends neither God nor his neighbour. There are much worse things than collecting picture postcards to pass the time. What I wish to stress in this note is that the fashion for collecting these things is likely to be ephemeral, and to die in infancy without reaching the year 1905.

This is what I think and what I say, in the hope of being proved a false prophet.

THE PHILATELIC PERIODICALS OF SPAIN

To the Count of Cerrageria

I suspect there is no catalogue of the Spanish periodicals devoted exclusively to postage stamps. I have no intention of compiling one, but I do wish to save from oblivion the magazines that chance has enabled me to collect, so that those interested in this aspect of philately may find them worthy of obtaining and studying. Here then are the publications that have been brought to my notice, in chronological order:

(Vol. 1, Madrid, 15th July 1870, No. 1)

Fortnightly periodical. Correspondence and subscriptions to be sent to Eduardo Gilabert, editor and owner of the periodical. Payment is always in advance. Editorial office: 32 Calle de Lope de Vega, 4th Floor, left-hand side. Printed by C. Moliner & Company, Jesus 3.

In 4°, 4 pages without numbers. We believe this to be the first paper of the type published in Spain, but only the issue just mentioned ever saw the light, and is very rare. Its articles carried the titles:

To the Public
Basis of Publication
England
Spain

El Coleccionista de Sellos

(Vol. 1, Madrid, 15th February 1871, No. 1)

Fortnightly publication, appearing on the 15th and 30th of each month. Correspondence to the editor-owner, Balbino Cotter Cortés, 48 Leganitos, first floor.

In 4°, 4 pages. Four issues were published, the last being dated 31st March. The first has no indication of the printer, but the others carry the notation: Madrid 1871. Printed by Manuel Minuesa, Juanelo 19. The periodical El Averiguador (Madrid, 15th April 1871) printed a sharp attack on El Coleccionista, showing it to consist of poor translations from foreign journals. This brought about the demise of the magazine, which is very scarce today.

(It is a curious fact that during the nineteen years between 1872 and 1890, when philately was expanding in other countries, no journal relating exclusively to this topic was published in Spain so far as we know).

El Coleccionista

(Vol. 1, 16th December 1890, No. 4)

Monthly review begun in Spain for the hobby collector. All correspondence to the Publisher, Juan A. Aguirre, 10 Gaona, Malaga. Printed by J. Valor, Convalecientes 1.

In folio, 4 pages. From the issue we possess we can deduce that publication started in September 1890. The generic word Coleccionista used on the titles does not show whether it deals with coins, weapons, books, or what, but the text makes it quite clear that it deals with postage stamps. The paper could have lost nothing by making this clear from the title.

Ilustración Filatélica Hispano-Colonial

(Vol. 4, nos. 35 and 36. August and September 1895)

Editor and owner, Ricardo S. Antonio, 6 Gignas, first floor. Printed by Balmás, Casamajó y Compañía, 5 Correo Viejo, Barcelona.

4°, 16 pages. Cover in colour, with four facsimiles of Spanish postage stamps. We do not know the first number of this periodical, which ought to belong to the year 1891. In N°49, [Translator: 39?] for December 1895, the cover of which has only three facsimiles, we read as follows: Ilustración Filatélica Hispano-Colonial. Specialist review for collectors of stamps, coins, photographs, chromos, insects and antiquities. Editor and owner, Ricardo San Antonio, Barcelona. It is the oldest philatelic periodical published in Spanish anywhere in the world and has the widest circulation. For this reason it will publish announcements in all languages. It is published every month and will appear twice [Translator: twice a month?] in 1896, if circumstances and the number of announcements permit.

Number 50, for January, was adorned with two copies of Spanish stamps, and one Anglo-American showing Columbus in La Rábida [Translator: a prison]. It consists of 16 pages, smaller than the previous ones. The coloured cover bears a selection of the illustrations from the book Crónica de la Guerra de Cuba and two facsimiles of Spanish stamps. It appears to have been printed by J. Famades, 82 Lauria, Barcelona.

The issues for September and October 1896 (Vol. 6, Nos. 60 and 61) were also printed at this establishment and the size has increased to large 4°, with 16 pages. As a headpiece it has a mappamundi between the Columns of Hercules with PLUS ULTRA, and the words Europe, Asia, Africa, America and Oceania. Ilustración Filatélica Hispano-Colonial. Ricardo S. Antonio, Barcelona. Revista especial de los coleccionistas de ambos mundos. On the cover, which is of yellow paper, is the portrait of Sir Rowland Hill (copied from one used by Le Timbrophile of Paris), and 32 engravings of Spanish stamps in red.

We have seen another number of Ilustración Filatélica, worldwide magazine. Published three times a month in all languages. The oldest of its type published in Spanish, and having the widest circulation in the world. Published 72 and 29, Calle Universidad. Consists of 16 pages in 8°, on the cover the title is given in colour as Ilustración Filatélica Hispano-America with the date 1898, and its number of 107 corresponds to Vol. 10. (We may assume that Vol. 10 is a mistake). No location is given for the journal but we may deduce it to be Barcelona.

It would be interesting to see a complete run of this journal, not only for the variations in title, format, typography, etc., which have been indicated already, but also for its encyclopaedic character, which, according to page 11 of N°107 just mentioned, will deal with cycling, hunting, bullfighting, pelota, fencing, philately, numismatics, books, plants, minerals and postcards. (Anything else would surely be going too far!)

La Alianza Filatélica

(Vol. 2, Barcelona, February 1892, No. 4)

Monthly international review. Publisher, Juan de Solo. Editor, José Prats. Editorial and administration, 346 Diputación, Barcelona. Printed by A. López Robert, 62 Asalto. Telephone Barcelona 460.

In large 4°, 8 pages. From the issue cited we may deduce that number 1 appeared in November 1891.

El Anunciador Filatélico

(No. 1, Cadiz, 5th April 1892, Vol. 1)

Monthly review. Editor: 3 Manzana, first floor, Cadiz. Printed by Viuda de Niel, 2 San Francisco, Cadiz.

On folio, 4 pages without numbering. Print run stated to be 6,000, distributed free. N°2 appeared on the 20th May, had a coloured cover, consisted of 8 unnumbered pages, and had been reduced to 4°. In N°5 of 20th August El Anunciador is stated to be a bi-monthly review of stamps, appearing on the 5th and 20th of each month under its publisher, Francisco J. Carpintero. Subscription rates are quoted, which indicates that the free distribution had ceased.

La Unión Filatélica

(No. 1, Barcelona, January 1893, Vol. 1)

Monthly review. Editorial-Administration Office: Hermenegildo Prats, 2 pasaje del Crédito, Barcelona. Printed by P. Ortega, 13 Aribau, Barcelona.

In large 4°, 8 pages. N°20, which is dated October 1894, appeared in 8°, with 16 pages and is stated to be published from the Tip. Lit. Bazar Enseñanza, pasaje del Crédito. No place of printing is given but it is doubtless Barcelona.

Cádiz Filatélico

(Vol. 1, Cadiz, August 1893, No. 1)

Monthly review on postage stamps. Director, José María Adam. Editorial and Administration, 7 Cobos, Cadiz. Printed by Viuda de Niel, 2 San Francisco. In folio, 4 unnumbered pages.

El Heraldo Timbrológico Hispano-Americano

Special news advertiser organ for stamp collectors and dealers. (Title is repeated in French and English). Published monthly. 15th May 1895. Direction and administration, 27 Sierpes, Seville. Free. Printed by Valle, 31 Sierpes.

In large 4°, 12 pages, two colours, green and black, with a vignette of the Giralda (Editor's note: A former minaret, it is now the bell tower of the Cathedral of Seville.) and facsimiles of postage stamps. On page three is a picture fortunately lettered with the words View of Seville – the Cathedral, since without this explanation the famous memorial would be hard to recognise. The periodical claims to have a circulation of up to 10,000 copies, issued free.

Filatelia

(Vol. 1, Malaga, 31st January 1896, No. 1)

Owned by and organ of the Philatelic Society of Malaga. Correspondence to be sent to the President of the Philatelic Society of Malaga, Eloy de Montes Casarabilla, 25 Pozos Dulce, Malaga, Spain. Printed and lithographed by Herederos de Fausto Muñoz, Malaga.

In large 4°, 8 pages. Monthly. N°6, for 30th June 1896, which consists of 12 pages, states that this publication is a recasting of El Heraldo Timbrológico Hispano-Americano (cited earlier) published in Seville by Angel Pulin. For this reason, N°6 is decorated with a picture of a herald and the words El Heraldo Timbrológico, organ of the Philatelic Society of Malaga. Write to: Eloy de Montes Casarabilla, 25 Pozos Dulce, Malaga, Spain. Below this title, printed in black, the word FILATELIA is printed in a beautiful capital letters, diagonally in red, along with the number of the Malaga paper, which is repeated at the head.

Crónica Filatélica

(Vol. 2, Madrid, 1st February 1896, No. 3)

International organ for collectors and dealers in postage stamps. (Title repeated in French and English) Manuel Asenjo Pérez. Editorial Administration: 9 Gravina, Madrid 3. Is published on the first day of each month. Printed by Enrique Mototo, 34 Pelayo.

In large 4°, 8 pages. Elegant heading adorned with postage stamps, amongst which the title of the periodical is placed. Claims to have the highest circulation in its class.

La Filatelia Española

(Vol. 1. Villanueva y Geltrú, November 1896, No. 2)

Monthly review for stamp collectors. Villanueva y Geltrú. Printed by Milá, 41 Rambla Principal.

In large 4°, 12 pages. Its heading is an elegant group of stamps, printed without doubt from a separate plate. Issue stated to be 4,000 copies. the coloured cover states the owner-editor to be J. Foradada Canalda (Villanueva y Geltrú, Barcelona, Spain), and changes from referring to philatelic collectors to stamp collectors.

Madrid Filatélico

(Vol. 1, 1st January 1897, No. 1)

Monthly review for stamp dealers and collectors. Director: Miguel Aleñá Fernández. Owner: Miguel Gálvez Jiménez. Editorial: Cruz, No. 1, Madrid. Administrator: Rafael de Gorrity Gallardo. Printed by M. G. Hernandez Sons, 16 Libertad, Duplicated.

In folio, 16 pages. Cover in colour with a sketch by A. Matarredona, which represents a steamship, a railway engine and postal telegraphs. This important and well-reputed periodical was honoured by the award of a bronze medal at the international Philatelic Exhibition in Paris in the year 1900.

Boletín del Círculo Filatélico Matritense

(Vol. 1, July 1897, No. 1)

Monthly review. Is published on the 15th of each month. Director, Luis L. Zabala, 10 Calle de la Victoria, Madrid. Luis Parra, 11 Bola and 1 Torija, Madrid, 1897.

In large 4º, 16 pages. Printed in different colours on glossy paper with an elegant coloured cover.

La Timbrología Española

(Vol. 1, Val de Santo Domingo, December 1897, No. 1)

Universal philatelic review. Madrid, 1897. Baena Bros., Printers, 14 Colegiata.

In large 4º. Handsome edition on good paper. Published once a month, under the direction of José Alvarez Tanariz, a doctor in Val de Santo Domingo, Province of Toledo.

 *La Propaganda Industrial

Santiago (Corunna), 1897.

Mentioned as a stamp periodical in N°4 of Madrid Filatélico. (Titles marked with an asterisk, like this one, are those of which we have not managed to see a copy, and know it only from advertisements or references.)

Boletín Filatélico

(Vol. 2, January, No. 13)

Monthly review for stamp collectors. Purchase, sale and exchange of stamps. Aureliano Ruiz Cabrera, printer, bookseller, subscriptions, photography and stationery. Manzanares.

In 4º, 8 pages without numbers. The number we have seen begins with the greeting Salutation to our readers and Happy New Year 1899, from which we deduce that publication began in January 1898. Lacks details of printer. the editor describes it as modest, though it is in a high rank for typography, paper and literature. (If only all editors would comply in this way with the octave commanded by the law of God!)

El Filatélico Valenciano

(Vol. 1, January 1898, No. 1)

Monthly review. M. Ferrero and Co., Printers, 3 Plaza Pertusa.

In 4°, 8 pages plus four unnumbered. N°2 of this interesting publication consists of 16 pages, and mentions that it first saw the light in Valencia under its editor-owner José Sanchís, 1 University.

España Filatélica

(Vol. 1, 15th May 1899, No. 1)

International periodical dedicated to collectors of postage stamps. Comes out the 15th of each month. All correspondence should be sent to the editor-owner, Alexandre, Count of Asalto, No. 9 Barcelona, Spain. Tipolitografía Seix, 5 and 7 San Agustín, Barcelona (Gracia).

In 4°, 16 pages. The coloured cover bears the title as given plus an elegant allegory of Philately, signed by A. Serra Fiter.

La Propaganda Filatélica

(No. 1, August 1899)

Administration: 2 Columela, Madrid. Monthly review. Madrid 1899. Baena Hermanos, Printers, 14 Colegiata,. Year 1.

In 4°, 8 pages. Editor-owner, Antonio Riesco.

(Vol. 1, 31st January 1900, No. 1)

Bulletin of prices and philatelic news. Studies on antiques, numismatics, palaeography, etc. Subscription free. Reasonable advertising. José G. Ceballos, editor-owner, 31 Lagasca, Madrid. Printing and photogravure by E. Rojas, 15 Pizarro, Madrid.

In 4°, 10 pages and 6 unnumbered, this periodical publishes a curious Collector's Almanac for 1901, made up of 46 pages in 4° and 41 (without numbers) of adverts, printed in Madrid by A. Pérez & Compañía in 1901.

El Filatélico Onubense

(Vol. 1, Huelva, 15th January 1900, No. 1)

Philatelic review for stamp dealers and collectors. Huelva. Printed by Agustín Moreno.

In 4°, 8 unnumbered pages. Colour cover. It is a curious redundancy to call the periodical Filatélico and then go on to describe it as a philatelic review. What is abundant does no harm.

Cádiz Postal

(Vol. 1, March 1900, No. 1)

Monthly review for stamp collectors. Editor-owner: José Juliá y Fernández.

On large 4°, 16 pages, the first issue does not name the printer. Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were done by Imp. de Rodríguez, 24 Verónica. From 5 to 12 it was Manuel Álvarez, 25 Sagasta y Murguía', and from 13 to 17 Tip. de Rodríguez Hermanos, with the aid of J. Rus, 16 Verónica. The first nine issues had coloured covers with a lithograph representing a railway engine and a postal worker. Nos. 10, 11 and 12 have a vignette. From 13 to 17 the size of the periodical was reduced to small 4°.

 *La Circular Filatélica

Monthly review for stamp collectors and dealers. It was announced in a circular dated from Huelva on 25th April 1900, by the firm of Robert W. Adam.

Boletín Filatélico Universal

La Tarjeta Postal

(Vol. 1, 30th [sic], February 1901, No. 2)

Only magazine of its kind published in Spain. Monthly review for collectors of postcards. Editorial and administration, Hermenegildo Prats, 8 Duque de la Victoria, Barcelona. Printed by P. Ortega, Aribau 13, Barcelona.

In 4º, 8 pages, with photogravures of postcards.

 *España Cartófila

We do not know the place or date of this publication

El Progresista Filatélico

(Vol. 1, September 1901, No. 2)

Monthly review for collectors of stamps and postcards. Editor-owners, J. Minondo and B. Fueros A., San Sebastian.

In folio, 16 pages. Elegant covered cover with drawing representing a man examining a stamp album. Clear, high-grade printing, without details of printer.

El Agente Administrativo, Filatélico y Anunciador

A circular issued in Malaga on 18th October 1901 and printed in that city by M. Jiménez, announced the publication of this weekly for the first day of November. The announcement stated that the publication would cover Europe, Asia, the Americas and Oceania, that the print run would be 6,000 copies and that the offices would be located at 2 Plaza de Uncibay.

On the basis of these dates, and ignoring España Cartófila, whose place and date we do not know, we arrive at the following statistics:

These are the magazines relating to postage stamps and postcards that have come to my notice. Although it would be impossible or very difficult to list all the political or literary periodicals which have dealt incidentally on a greater or smaller scale with Philately, the following may be mentioned:

In its issue for December 1867 it published the first philatelic report to see the light in Spain, under the title Stamps for franking correspondence. Though it appeared anonymously, the author was the illustrious Francisco Lopez Fabra. In succeeding years from 1872 to 1881, the Revista continued to deal with philately and reported all the official decrees relating to this topic published in Spain from 1849 to 1880.

El País

(Political periodical: Madrid, 16th August and 23rd November 1870)

Criticized followers of philately and the defective orthography that led to Congresso (with a double s) being used on a stamp for the Spanish Parliament.

El Averiguador

Correspondence between collectors, literary men, antiquaries, etc. (Madrid, 1871 to 1879).

The philatelic contributions in this interesting publication are for the most part of great merit and importance.

Criticizes the postcard issued on the 1st December 1873.

El Gobierno

(Political periodical, Madrid, 10th and 25th October, 7th November, 9th, 12th, 17th and 18th December 1873, and 17th March 1874)

Deals with postcards, principally those issued for private individuals in the year 1873. Pages 37 to 75 of the short book entitled Something of Philately (Madrid, Sucesores de Rivadeneyra, penultimate year of the 19th century) reprinted practically the whole of these articles.

El Cascabel

(Madrid, 1st February and 1st March, 1874)

Deals with postcards

El Ateneo

(Seville, 15th January 1875)

Shows how well postage stamps conform with artistic standards

Diario de Cádiz

(Cadiz, 28th April and 19th September 1875)

Praise of the stamp exhibition held in France, and criticism of the heraldic shield carried by Spanish Postcards of the issue of 3rd April 1873.

La Verdad

(Cadiz, 30th March 1875)

Suggests that the postmark on postcards should be a map of Spain.

El Solfeo

(Madrid, 25th April 1875)

Condemns the report All correspondence should carry the sender's name on the reverse as it is applied to postcards.

La Correspondencia de España

(Madrid, 19th and 26th August 1875)

Exonerates the government from the faults noted in the postcards of the issue of 3rd April.

La Prensa Gaditana

(Cadiz, 27th September 1875)

Complains about the defects in the monopoly postcards.

El Averiguador Universal ...

Editor – José María Sbarbi (Madrid, 1879 to 1882)

There are various articles on philately in the four volumes of this curious magazine.

Almanaque Bailly-Baillière

(Madrid, 1898)

The volumes since this year have dealt with postage stamps.

La Ilustración Española y Americana

(Madrid 1899)

Since May this noted weekly has devoted some part of its coloured cover to notices and facsimiles of the new stamps issued in various countries. The issue of 30th July contained an article with the titled Philately in Spain.

El Heraldo

Since March this periodical has devoted a section to postage stamps.

These are the notices we have been able to obtain relating to the philatelic press in Spain. We do not claim it to be anywhere near complete, since bibliography needs good luck more than diligence. These notes have the defect of being dry and fleshless, but should be judged lightly since it is customary for each entry about a magazine to give details of the duration of the periodical, its existence or not at the moment of writing, the greater or lesser merit of its articles, engravings, typography and other features which would recommend it from the learned, commercial or literary point of view.

We mentioned above our suspicion that there is a gap of nineteen years (1872 to 1890) during which there were no magazines devoted to philately. We think this can be easily explained if we consider that traffic in and selling of stamps were crimes punishable by law and that moreover a country so fond of bullfighting and lotteries would not readily adapt to the gentle and peaceable task of collecting and arranging old postage stamps. The fashion did finally reach Spain, thanks to the glamour, prestige and credit it enjoyed abroad, and took vigorous root in Castilian soil. We may say with all possible vigour, since it must be a rare and extraordinary thing that a country so inferior in commerce, industry, riches and power in the eyes of the world should occupy a pre-eminent place in philately. The Spanish periodicals which represent it are large in number, worthy and estimable, as has been recognised by the judges at foreign competitions and exhibitions. However, we must admit since it would be foolish not to, that they do not reach the level of learning, artistry and typography reached by, for example, Le Timbre-Poste (Brussels 1863), The Stamp Collector's Magazine (London 1863), Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie (Paris 1875), The Philatelic Journal (Birmingham 1872), Guida Illustrata del Timbrofilo (Bologna 1876), Berliner Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung (Berlin 1878), or others which reach the same level in their own class, such as The Times or the Revue des Deux Mondes, amongst the political and literary groups.

Though recognising and admitting our modest status, nobody can in fairness look down on us: Captains, priests and merchants may interchange with generals, bishops and bankers. If Spanish philately does not wear the coronet of a duke, it shows the deeds of a nobleman in the full and ample list of books, catalogues and periodicals it has produced, not forgetting the names of López Fabra, Isasy, Argiles, Vázquez, Burguera, Rua Figueroa, García Mauriño, Fernández Duro, Leopoldo López and others, who have helped it with their learned pens or their mercantile activity.

There is certainly no shortage of people competent to take on the work we have indicated. If the choice were left to me I would entrust the responsibility to Domingo Delgado de Mendoza, certain that with this clear understanding, his love of philately and his persistence and industry in the tasks he undertakes, he would shoulder the burden gracefully and turn out a useful, learned and attractive work. I hope my good friend will accept the invitation without saying, along with the priest of Fruime:

*If you invite me to a meal
And then ask me to pay,
It is, if I am not mistaken,
Asking the guest to be the host.*

I will finish by saying how much pleasure it would give me if philatelists would supply additions and corrections to the present outline which I will defend with the words of the scholar.

Up to a certain point and no farther or with the vulgar saying that:

*The bread is hard, hard, hard
But better hard than none at all*

Doctor Thebussem

The Philatelic and Cartophilic Press of all countries

What a fine task it is to locate in all countries those time friends of the Postcard and the Stamp, who use their pens to spread the taste for these collection, to show interest in them, to guide small and large collections. How much effort, how much ingenuity, is shown in this peaceful specialist press. The national press, the press of useless and bellicose polemics, often pretends to ignore their philatelic and cartophilic colleagues. They are wrong. They ought to learn from them about the history and behaviour of Foreigners which widens horizons and enlarges ideas. The press devoted to the Card and the Stamp is also distinguished by a good faith which is not an inevitable attribute of the virtues of the national press. In one word, it does good and useful work in its own sphere, and dies its best. Hence we are happy to list here the philatelic and cartophilic organs known to us, whilst researching the right to complete this list later in accordance with the communications made to us by interested parties.

England was the home of the first philatelic journal. The Stamp Collector's Review and monthly Advertiser dates from the 1st December 1862, and was published in Liverpool. The Stamp Collector's Magazine appeared two months later, on 1st February 1863. The Timbre – Poste, edited by J – B, Moeus, was born a few days later (915 February 1863). It appeared up to 1897. In France, the Collectionneur de Timbres – poste, by Arthur Maury, did not appear till 15th July 1864, but has lasted to the present day, apart from certain interruptions, notably during the war of 1870 and the Commune. It was in this journal, in 1865, that the words Philately and Philatelis were coined by M. Herpin.

The philatelic press expanded considerably from 1865 onwards, and today specialist journals on philately are found in all languages.

The cartophilic press was added to the philatelic press in 1898.

In the list that follows we give the principal magazines that publish articles worth consulting. We have seen no point in trying to separate the philatelic from the cartophilic journals: the two ought to live combined.

The references that follow are arranged thus:

1. Title and frequency of the journal.
2. Date of its foundation (when known)
3. Name of its editor in chief or director
4. Address
5. Price per issue or subscription

Finally, there are political, society, literary, scientific and illustrated magazines which sometimes deal with postage stamps and picture postcards and publish interesting articles on them, such titles as: Le Journal, L'Echo de Paris, le Petit Parisien, Les Amicales Politiques et Littéraires, L'Illustration, Les Lectures Pour Tous, Femina, Mon Dimanche, Le Bibliophile et Collectionneur, L'Intermédiaire des Amateurs Photographes, etc., etc.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE BIBLIOGRAPHY AND REFERENCE BOOK OF THE WHOLE GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE FROM ITS BEGINNING TO THE END OF 1891

The work I compiled over the years 1892-1893 for the Munich firm of A. Larisch under the above title consisted of 5 parts, as follows:

- | | |
|-----------|---|
| Part I. | History of philately, with particular reference to Germany. |
| Part II. | History of the German philatelic literature. |
| Part III. | Listing of the entire German philatelic literature from its beginning to the end of 1891. |
| Part IV. | Reference book for the German philatelic periodical literature from its beginning to the end of 1891. |
| Part V. | Philatelic writers and prominent philatelists. |

Part IV is again divided into two parts, the general and the special. Two other sub-divisions which I planned and worked on, namely, the Postal Service and Society Matters, have been left out, since, as I stated on p.715 of the work, they had become too voluminous.

However, I always intended eventually to publish them separately. To respond to the numerous requests I have received in this connection, I give here the 3rd sub-division "Postal Service", and hope it will gain the same approving acceptance as the main work.

SURVEY OF ARTICLES ETC. ON THE POSTAGE STAMPS OF THE GERMAN STATES APPEARING IN THE PERIODICAL LITERATURE
OF THE YEAR 1897 AND OF MONOGRAPHS ON THE SAME TOPIC
PUBLISHED IN THE SAME PERIOD OF TIME

After I prepared the following compilations for the years 1894-1896 for the Post and its regular supplement Die Philatelistische Literatur, Der Philatelist and its editors decided to publish them from then on under the heading Philatelic Literature. Even though the great majority of the readers of this Society journal might not find this kind of survey particularly interesting, I still hope that those who are more than simply mechanical collectors will find it welcome, even if only to have the possibility of quickly locating the places where they can find information on some question or other. Possibly my surveys may also help to increase the love of philatelic literature and its collection, and prompt the reader to start collecting a library.

Similar things have often been done, but this sort of compilation does not imply that the various sources are of equal value. Conversely, new numbers sometimes contain similar, maybe even identical, material.

I would gladly avoid this, as I think it a shortcoming, but these surveys have to be made over the course of a year by entering the journals as they appear, so that the above shortcoming cannot unfortunately be avoided without very much further work, as it would mean constantly referring back to earlier journals.

I have retained the alphabetic sequence and again conclude with a longer section of articles of general interest. I begin with: Baden.

Translator's note: The remaining part of the article consists of references, which have not been translated.

CATALOGUE OF THE PHILATELIC LIBRARY OF THE EARL OF CRAWFORD

by E. D. Bacon, London, 1911, (£2)

A book of 924 columns in folio format as the inventory of a philatelic library. Moreover this is the greatest collection of its sort so far assembled, and the work has been splendidly planned. However, we get only a survey of the richness of the international literature on philately. The work consists of four sections. The first part records details of the most extensive handbooks and monographs, down to humorous items and dealer's offers. The second and most detailed part is devoted to the periodical literature, in strict alphabetical arrangement. The third part lists the periodicals by countries (with short title, place and date of publication). The fourth part gives a survey of all works relating to philatelic literature. However, the first two parts are more than just a mere library catalogue, they are a bibliography. The individual works are not listed under the name of their author, but under the name of their country and separately under a key word for the contents (e.g. "Reprints"). Every work is shown with the height of its format and the number of pages: the periodicals are shown with the format for each individual volume plus the number of issues and the date. Everyone interested in Philatelic literature, society librarians in particular, is now in a position to find out exactly what is missing from his library. The work produced by Bacon with immense diligence is thus almost beyond price as a reference book. The thanks of all philatelists are due to him and the generous owner of the greatest philatelic library, the Earl of Crawford, who made this work possible and brought it into being: also however, to the Philatelic Literature Society which, with the consent of the Earl of Crawford has brought out a popular edition of 300 copies of the work. This makes the catalogue generally available, since the private edition for the owner of the library is for presentation only, and is thus limited to a very small number of copies. Small mistakes naturally do not outweigh the value of the work of this kind to the philatelist, still, the great advantages make the small, easily avoided mistakes doubly regrettable. For example, the Indian convention States (Faridkot, Chamba, etc.) are not given special keywords, although they have been as exhaustively treated in monographs as Bhopal, the only one for which an exception has been made. Peculiar keywords have often been chosen for the works that appeared anonymously, e.g. Black (for Black List, etc.), Under (for Under the Trade Sign), 3000 (= three thousand) for a pamphlet of which 3000 copies were printed, New (for New Issues, etc.) This is a result of the principle of taking the first word of the title- apart from articles-as the key word: however it means that the exact title must be known if the work is to be found. It would probably have been better to take the word relating to the contents from the title.

Some striking divisions of words, such as “Verein-Smittheilungen”, “Fests-Chrift” obviously point to Bacon’s ignorance of German. The catalogue of monographs goes in general to the end of 1908, that of periodicals to the end of 1906: nevertheless, new periodicals appearing in 1907 and 1908 are listed along with supplements and changes that became known up to the printing of the work. However, anyone interested can relatively easily carry on the catalogue, it will be easy to build on such a foundation as is provided by this monumental catalogue.

Editorial

Dear philatelist and Bibliophile,

The Summer holidays for this years of 1994 are already nothing but a distant memory, during which we thought of certain improvements to the structure of our bulletin.

As you will see, an appendix to this gives a little section for offers of selected items between members. From now on we shall use colour to show off fine specimens. As for sales of philatelic works, we shall certainly continue to have an important one (and only one) every year.

This is preferable, given the amount of time they need. Members who have works to commission can suggest them to use from now on. The next sale of books should take place at the beginning of the year 1995.

As for the actual content of the bulletin, it will remain basically the same. You will continue to find in it articles relating to the bibliographic topic of the month, and to new works that have appeared or are about to do so. Thus in this bulletin you will find on the first Belgian ambulant for which we have received documentation during the past year.

The author of this article, our secretary Mr. Eric Miesse has added some personal reflections on the use of the first stamps on the ambulant line AN1 – AN2.

We hope you will have much pleasure in reading this bulletin.

Olivier SIMONS
President of the S.B.B.

Editor's note: There has been no finance available for publishing the index to Philatliste belge, which finished about a year ago. Its appearance, promised a long time ago, has been postponed several times.

The reason is that we prefer to put out something pleasanter to read and better –looking than simple photocopied sheets. On the other hand, we have obviously got to be sure of certain financial viability. Here again, the ideal formula is not easy to find.

We thank the members of the S.B.B for their patience in this respect. It will soon be rewarded. Members who have paid their subscriptions for the years 1993 – 1994 or 1994 – 1995 will receive a copy

Correspondence:

The work of the secretary and treasurer will be carried out henceforward by mr. Eric Miesse, av. Des tarins, 26, Bierges 1301.

SBB Committee

The present committee of the S.B.B. would be happy to expand. Every serious motivated person may propose himself as a candidate to the President.

SUBJECT FOR THE MONTH

This month we shall attempt to list all the information relating to Belgian aerophilately.
Here are some references on this topic.

We hope that many of you will react by letting us have fuller information. On this topic, anyone who has run out of bibliographic slips can request them from us. We shall be happy to supply them.

Last month we asked members to let us have documentation relating to postal tariffs, internal and external service. Here are papers to add to the previous list:

Philatelic literature - a proposal for co-operation

PHILATELIC LITERATURE - A PROPOSAL FOR CO-OPERATION

Paper read to the Teplitz-Schönau Philatelic Society by Max Block.

Stamps have been collected since the '50s of last century, the first German catalogue appeared in the '60s, as did the first specialist philatelic journal, and they have had numberless successors. Since then, many books, catalogues and reports have been written, printed, bought and sold, but the majority of collectors, unfortunately, do not know of a simple book, read barely a simple journal - and that is probably an advertising sheet - and it is comparatively rare to find a collector who takes a serious interest in philatelic literature.

The reasons? They are all too obvious.

A great number of collectors are too young and superficial. We cannot expect school children who gladly spend their odd coppers on brightly coloured foreign stamps to subscribe to a magazine. There are also many older occasional stamp collectors who go on collecting at odd times just out of habit and who have little idea that philatelic literature exists. It is scarcely surprising if they are indifferent to the fact. But there are numbers of serious stamp collectors who will say "yes, I do collect, but just to amuse myself, I don't take it so seriously that I need to read specialist literature". And yet this viewpoint is as perverse as it can possibly be. The collector - at least the average collector - is not expected to go in for detailed serious research, but he should read a publication or book - whether a textbook or a handbook - partly for enjoyment and partly - and this should not be underestimated - for protection against losses.

What pleasure the collector will have if he finds from a specialist work that his collection includes, unknown to himself, rare varieties or types, unusual cancellations, etc. How easily he can detect a forgery and so protect himself from loss!

But there is a great deal of laziness here. He would rather firmly stick ten forged stamps or new issues into his album or pay 100 crowns for notoriously dubious stamps than spend 10 crowns a year on the subscription to a really good magazine or 20 crowns for a good handbook.

And he has a second objection.

He says: "Supposing I do subscribe to a magazine, I shall not find nearly as much as I need in it, but there will be a great deal that simply does not interest me.

This is unfortunately true, but it is reasonable to expect the 10 to 24 issues of a simple volume to give a basic education about all the postage stamps of every country?

Right again. The 46 volumes of the Senf journal would already cost a pretty sum. The Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, with its now more than 30 volumes, would also cost 150 to 200 marks.

And yet I would say to everyone who is not a specialist collector of an individual country: “Buy as many old stamp magazines as you can! They are the basis of science in philately.”

The work has been going for years: is philately, or better, the study of postage stamps, a hobby or a science? I think we can say the position is now as follows: simply sticking in pretty little pictures is a hobby, or a game, an investment, or perhaps even a form of playing the market, but serious concern with stamps such as gives the collector his real enjoyment is - and this is quite indisputable - a science.

Now, what are the sources of this science since there are no schools and teachers for it? Only the literature.

We have to distinguish between two branches: Firstly, philatelic books, secondly, philatelic journals.

To every serious collector, and to many of the younger ones, a philatelic book means a catalogue. Whether it be the normal Senf or the Michel catalogue, one of them is absolutely essential for the purchaser or exchanging collector in Germany or Austria - or what is left of Austria now. The Senf catalogue, with its fundamental information, really amounts to a small handbook, which has basically not been superseded by the Kohl Handbook as it is too inconvenient for many collectors, too detailed and too dear, or else it would be used more widely than it is. Moreover the Kohl Handbook is inadequate for the specialist collector of many countries and for them reference has to be made to other philatelic literature. The collector of old Germany has it easy. If he has enough money he can buy the Kröttsch Handbook, if he collects cancellations he has a range of other specialist works such as the Reinheim catalogue of cancellations, Glasewald’s work on numerical and place-name cancellations of the individual German States, and there are works by Ohrt, Ton, Beck-Holzschuler, Stenger, etc., on individual German States. We also know of very good specialist works on most of the other European States, though they all have one shortcoming: they go up to a certain point in time, that of their publication, and then they stop. Supplements practically never appear.

This is where the periodical literature comes in, a supplementary factor, not just for this one aspect but as a general supplement to the book literature. What an enormous amount of knowledge and experience, observations and discoveries lie in the volumes of all these journals - and unfortunately for the most part ignored. Then how is it possible for the normal specialist collector, without a big library to hand, to find out which volume of which journal contains the article to which most collectors would be indifferent, but which is of the greatest interest to him. There is a gap here and it is one which I would gladly fill if I could get the necessary support.

The way I look at the matter is as follows: a handbook or general index to all the existing German technical journals should be compiled. It should list even the smallest and apparently least important article alphabetically under the names of individual countries, with an index of significant words. As an example, and irrespective of trouble and cost, I have drawn up a general index to German Philatelic Literature for the year 1918 and it is appearing in Briefmarkensammler, I took as my pattern the impressive index of the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung of Leipzig.

Thus, the philatelic periodical literature must be processed year by year, or, what might be more practical, every journal should produce its own cumulative index to all the volumes it has published. The Krötzsch Company of Leipzig intends shortly to produce such a general index for the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung - perhaps others would care to follow suit.

However, any individual collector who owns the older volumes of philatelic journals, and has sufficient idealism to take part in such a gigantic task, can help by dealing with one or more volumes along the lines of my proposal i.e. by drawing up a contents list corresponding to the requirements of Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung. The Suppantseitsch bibliography is adequate up to the year 1890. The new work must follow on from that. I will gladly take on this enormous task if I can get sufficient support, and if some of the other collectors will help me. My own experience has shown me that a volume takes 3-6 hours on average to process, and 8-10 hours at most. Please write to me at the address below, telling me which journals you have available. However, I will of course need support from the big societies and the editors and publishers of journals.

However, the work will not be finished when this handbook has been compiled and printed. How will the collector who does not possess his own large library find out exactly what was said by journal xyz in 1893 on a particular topic if he cannot get hold of the relevant volume.

This is where the societies and their libraries come in. There are societies in Germany which already possess magnificent libraries, such as the Germania Ring or the Int. Phil.-Verein, and although these libraries do not own complete runs of all journals they still have a good number. However, the smaller societies should really make an effort to build up a library commensurate with their size. How many volumes of old philatelic journals lie unread and gathering dust in the bookcases of individual members! Get them into the society library! If members do not wish to build up their own little libraries, they can act for the good of all in this way.

I will not today go into the actual literature, the individual books and journals but reserve this material for a second brief contribution.

I would be very pleased however if my idea for co-operation on the large-scale Handbook of Periodical Literature met with approval and if, in these days of mass unemployment, those who are ready to work will find pleasure in helping with this great task..

THE CATALOGUE OF THE PHILATELIC LIBRARY OF THE EARL OF CRAWFORD COMPILED BY E. D. BACON.

On looking through this marvellous work, carried out with diligence and expertise over many years with the aid of almost all collectors of philatelic literature, the following details have struck me.

I miss Mitteilungen des Briefmarken-Sammler-Vereins Alemannia, Berlin, three numbers of which had appeared by April 1897.

With Collectionneur (Autun), column 501, the third volume should run from 1st October to 15th November 1903 (not 1902).

I possess Volume 1, Nos. 4-10 of L'Universel published by Paul Royer in Etampes, France, from 15th May to 30th November 1906. This is an advertising paper devoted to philately and picture-postcards, and does not appear in Bacon.

A large number of philatelic magazines have been announced in France, but never actually appeared. Some at least may have issued prospectuses. Bacon only mentions L'Echange Universel.

Not mentioned are:

L'Univers Timbrologique (Jaudrin-Jaudrainouille, 1894)

Le Publicateur Philatélique (L. Sardé, Béziers, June or July, 1895)

Le Timbrophile Picard (Montdidier, 25th August 1895)

L'Union Timbrophilique du Nord (G. Bercet & Eugen Desmaret, Solse-le-Chateau, end 1895)

L'Echo des Philatelistes (J. Garcon, Douai, 15th December 1897)

Circulaire Mensuelle Philatélique (M. Cartier, Troyes, 1898)

Petites Annonces du Haut-Vivarais (A. Gay, Annoncy, 1890)

Reclame Philatélique (M. Bauley, Lyons, 1899)

Le Timbrophile Provençal (Rey & Rebuffel, Vidauban, 1900 or 1901)

Le Petit Philatéliste (Charles Balley & Caucille Bachalet, Paris, 15th July 1900)

A No. 6 of Timbres et Cartés (column 798) seems to have appeared.

Guide Cartal Philatélique Universel; the No. 2 sought by Bacon does not appear to exist.

Revue Philatélique d’Egypte was announced by Jules Gani of Alexandria in 1898, but was not mentioned by Bacon. The same applied to Le Bazar Philatélique, which was announced by Pagliondis & Pandoridis of Alexandria for 1st January 1906.

Marki’s Les Timbres (Column 621, 622) – IV, No. 7, is dated 15th August 1899, IV, No. 1 is dated 15th January 1899. Vol. 5, No. 3 (Whole number 42) is dated 1st June 1900. The VI volume contains issues 1-9, from 15th January to 15th September 1901. No further issues are known.

I know De Postzegel, from Steenmeijer & Co., Amsterdam, from a survey of April 1895. According to this at least 6 (not a bare 5) issues appeared in 1895.

According to Suppantischitsche’s data, Filatelico Italiano published Vol. I, No.9, as well as the issues recorded. It was dated December 1892. Another one or more issues were apparently published by Luigi Polli in Florence in 1896.

One issue of Il Filatelico without part number, date, or volume number was published in 1896 by Vierci & Sarasini in Savonna, Italy. This is not really a periodical, but a price list, which is however missing from the first part of Bacon as well.

Réclame Economique (Placido Montalto, Catania) is entered twice, for no reason (column 741). An autographed sheet for 20th May 1902 is in existence, one for 16th July 1902, and a No.5 for 25th August 1902. This last is numbered and printed as Vol. I. It is incorrect to refer to this number as Vol. I, No.5. Obviously there are two further sheets initially unknown to me. Placido Montalto has personally assured me that 5 sheets were issued.

A supplement to Dealers’ Exchangers and Collector’s Directory by Louis Chessa Grillo in Cagliari, Sardinia, appeared in 1903 as a sheet without number or date. I do not find it in the 1st or 2nd part of Bacon. Two sheets are supposed to have appeared.

Unione Filatelici Internazionali was published by L. Battaglia in Turin. I am aware of a specimen issue of 15th December 1905, designated Vol. I; also Vol. II, No.1 of 1st January, No. 2 of 15th February, No.4/5 of 15th February/1st March 1906. Bacon does not mention this journal.

Luz Filatelica Española was announced in 1899 or 1900 by Alejandro Astruc, San Pedro Alcántara, Marbella, but never seems to have appeared. Bacon does not mention it.

Regeneración Filatélica (Column 743): The No.1 mentioned by Bacon exists with and without cover pages. According to the postmark it was sent out on 12th April 1906, 13th June 1906 and ? (postmark missing). A supplement is called Ilustración Filatélica, Vol. II, No. 2, without date (postmark 12th April 1906), No. 3 without date or volume number (postmark 13th June 1906), No. 4 without date (no postmark), No. 5 without date (postmark 14th July 1906), No. 10 (no postmark).

El Iquique Filatélico was advertised in 1899 from Iquique; a prospectus probably appeared as well. Bacon does not mention it, and it probably never appeared either.

Noticias Filatelicas should have been published by Carlos Gutierrez Briebe in Santiago de Chile at the end of 1905.

El Anunciador de Sellos was announced by Caledonio Posada & Daniel A. Mesa in Medellin, Columbia. Bacon's silence seems to indicate that the magazine never appeared.

El Filatelico Ecuatoriano (José A. Serrano, Guayaquil). The details given by Bacon, column 556, are obviously completely wrong. There are two magazines with the same name from the same publisher. To the best of my knowledge, both survived for 3 issues. The first 1-3 went from 31st August to November 1901 (the last number was shown to me by the late J. Jacquier of Morpes), and 1-3 from July to August 1902.

El Filatelico Cartofilo. Of the two publishers, Miguel A. Mendez lived in Santo Domingo, Daniel Goris in Canton Pimentel, St. Domingo.

Anunciador Postal Mexicano was announced in 1897 by Leon Giron, Mexico. Did it never appear?

Aurora (Sociedad Cartófila Mexicano, Durango) appeared in at least 11 issues. No. 11 is dated November 1906.

El Porvenir Filatelico. No. 1 should have appeared in July 1896 in San Juan de Portorico. Bacon does not know the title. The same applies to El Progreso which ostensibly appeared in March 1898, though this was possibly not a philatelic journal.

El Filatélico Comercial (San José, Costa Rica). Of this magazine, I also know Volume III, No. 25 of 1st July 1898, III, No. 31 of February, No. 32 of March, No. 33 of April 1899, Volume IV, No. 37 of 1st June 1899, Volume VII, No. 73 of April, No. 74 of May, Nos. 75/76 of July 1902. No. 75/76 is marked 76-4 and on the outside 75, for June 1902.

Revista Filatelica Centro-Americana should have been published by Victor Furminieux in Guatemala. Is this incorrect, and are we dealing with a mere announcement here?

Filatelia is known to me from a prospectus by A. Arango in Medellin, Antioquia, dated 22nd October 1905. Bacon does not record it.

Filatelista (or Philatelista) Pacutycuse should have appeared in 1900 in Pacoty, Brazil.

O Anunciador Philatelico was announced in Lisbon in 1899. Did it ever appear?

Anunciatorul Marcilor (J. Saraga, Jassy) (column 453) was supposed to be continued by P. Agagean, Jassy, as La Roumanie Philàtelique. Did this actually happen.

Curierul Marcilor Postale. As well as the one mentioned in column 522, another one with the same name was published in Pitesti on 10th May 1900 by J. M. Lazar. This magazine is in my possession.

A whole series of magazines should have appeared in Romania, which either never did or are not known to have done so. They are the following:-

Vocea Philatelica, Jassy, 1894
Union, Garabat Aslan, Foççani, 1st April 1895
Internationales Rumanisches Offertenblatt (Constantin Buzdugan & Co., Jassy, 30th October 1895)
Journal Philatélique Oriental (Ghita, Learer, Jassy, I of 20th January 1896)
Filatelitul Roman (Turn-Severin, 25th November 1896)
L'Echo de la Timbrologie (Georges Bollé, Berlad, 1897)
Globul (G. K. Panaitescu, Berlad, 1897)
Anunciatorul Timbrologie (Turn-Severin, Autumn 1897)
La Timbrologie Roumain (Oscar Lazaresau, Bucharest, Autumn 1898)
La Philatéliste Roumain (Nathan Steinfeld, Bucharest, 1st March 1898)
Le Globe (R. Rosenstein, Jassy, 1st December 1898)
Le Timbrophile Roumaine (Oscar Lazarescu, Bucharest, Autumn 1902)

Bacon knows of only two issues of Collector's Budget (column 505). I have a note of a No. 6 dated September 1904.

Philatelist's Exchange Medium appeared at the beginning of 1905 from Ernest E. Empett, Chatam, and is reported in the Dresden Der Philatelist, p.17, 1905. The same applies to Price's Philatelic Press List (John G. Price, Liverpool), reported by Der Philatelist, 1905, p.59.

Philatelic Messenger. The third year (volume) ends with No. 3 (incorrectly given as 8) (No. 16 overall), dated 16th January 1899. No. 17 for March 1899 is in Volume IV.

Museum Bulletin (column 648) No. 5 and 6, were published in Lake Village, NH.

Stamp Collector's Calendar was published by the Rev. P. M. Barral, Philadelphia PA, Mos. 1-3, from March to September 1895, and perhaps later as well. I cannot find this in Bacon.

The Evergreen Monthly ostensibly appeared in 8 issues during 1898, not 1888 as Bacon gives.

Keystone Stamp (not to be confused with the Keystone Philatelist) seems to have appeared in 1897 or 1898 from C. T. Reno in Allentown, PA. Bacon does not mention it.

Philatelic Advertiser seems to have appeared in 1901 or 1902 from C. Drew, Hartford, Conn. Jones does not know of it; Bacon also fails to mention it.

Hoosier [not Hosier] State Philatelist (unknown to Jones and Bacon) appeared in 1902 or about that date in Goshen. The same is true of Minnesota Lake Tribune of Minneapolis.

The Exchange News was published by the Exchange News Publishing Co., St. Louis, MO, and was devoted to picture postcards and philately. I know of Volume II, No. 1 of January 1903, Volume III, No. 4 of October 1903 and Volume VII, No. 2 of February 1906. I cannot find this journal in Bacon.

As well as the issues given, The Philatelic and Photographic East (column 684) published a No. 5 for June 1903.

Buckeye should have appeared in about 1903 in Mainville, Ohio. Jones does not know of this one either. Perhaps it was only announced.

Stampur (Garner, Iowa). The publisher is Fred C. Butler. Volume III, No. 1, is dated January-February 1904.

Western Stamp News (column 831) was published by George W. Brink, and appeared as No. 1 for April 1906.

I have subsequently noted the following:

L'Annonce Anversoise did not finish with No. 17, but with No. 18 of 15th October 1904, as I have already stated in Der Philatelist' 1910, p.60.

L'Annonce Universelle, the supplement to Scaldis Philatélique, survived for 3 issues from October 1896 to January 1897.

To my knowledge, Le Timbre Belge was merged not with L'Annonce Philatélique but with L'Alliance Philatélique in Paris.

Bulletin Mensuel from G. Carion, Paris, appeared as Nos. 1-6, 7/8, 9/10, from January to December 1884. I do not find this periodical mentioned in Bacon.

Elocubrations Centeniales Philatéliques (see under Paris-Poste, column 675) also appeared as a single issue of 1st August 1888, and two undated except for 1889.

Le Philatéliste Française. It is incorrect to say that no issue appeared in October 1893. No. 17 of 15th October 1893 appeared incorrectly numbered 16. After No. 17 (incorrect 16) came No.17/18. There is also a No. 81 in the form of a price-list supplement to No. 81. Pages 181-192 are missing from the pagination.

Les Petites Affiches Philatéliques (Paris) did not finish with No. 11 for November but with No. 12 for December 1894, an issue that I possess.

Le Libre Echangiste (ParisPassy). The only issue, for April 1896, is not numbered.

L'Annonce Philatélique et Commerciale, No. 12 was originally dated 1st March. This date was however altered to "10th March".

Bulletin Mensuel des Petites Annonces du Collectionneur published to my knowledge, Volume I, Nos. 1-3, from 1st April to 1st June 1899.

Le Courier Universel (Paris) appeared from No. 1 for July 1900 to No. 6 of March 1901. I own the last issue myself.

L'Annonce Philatélique (Troyes). Nos. 1-4 have no volume number. I take No. 4 to be the first issue of the second volume.

Le Timbrophile du Litoral does not appear to have stopped with Volume III, No. 1, of 15th January 1903. A Volume III, No. 28, of August 1903 has been mentioned.

Luz Filatelica (Paris). Volume II, Nos. 8/9/10/11/12, have also appeared.

Étoile Carto-Philatélique (Gondrecourt). No. 4. Does not ever seem to have appeared.

Others amongst them are messrs Armstrong (Sudan and Year book 1912), Edward H. Masson (Test Printings of the United States) and the first number of a large – scale work in the bibliography of the philatelic literature of all countries by William R. Ricketts. It is to be hoped that he will be able to complete this work, which would certainly earn him the hearty thanks of all researchers in the field of philately.

It is also pleasant to be able to mention that a literature competition is to be held in connection with the exhibition taking place in Paris this month. The result will be announced in April. It is to be hoped that this experiment will provide the impetus for more of the same kind, even though the first one may not produce any very outstanding results.

Of libraries left behind, that of Theodor Haas, who died in 1911 in Berlin, has come into the possession of the great bibliophile, Court Councillor Suppansschitsch. Trade Councillor Moschkau greatly disappointed expectations in the disposal of his library. Only fragments of the treasures he is known to have possessed came up for sale. We do not know when or by whom the rest of the treasures were removed. Even the journals put out by the dead man were only represented by the odd single issue as “samples”.

The Lindenberg Medal

In accordance with the current decision of the Chapter, the Lindenberg medal established by the Berlin Philatelic Club in the year 1905 for outstanding services in the field of philately has been awarded to Court President Victor SUPPANTSCHITSCH of Graz.

Philatelists active in research and writing have long recognised the outstanding contribution of the latest holder of the medal to the recent development of philately. Suppantischitsch's "Bibliography of the German Philatelic Literature from its Beginning to 1891" has been for years an essential tool for the useful and positive further development of philately.

Victor Suppantischitsch was born on 31 October 1838 at Haibach in Carniola. After furnishing his studies at the High School in his native town he studied law at the University of Vienna, and entered State service in 1862. He inherited a small collection, enriching and deepening philatelic knowledge by zealous reading of the existing philatelic magazines. In 1870 S. began to be active in philatelic authorship himself. During the following years a large number of scientific articles from his pen appeared in the most varied philatelic journals of the time, and made his name known over wide circles. S. was a close friend of Ferdinand Meyer, the author of the handbook on which the well-known Köppe album of the time was based. Meyer's death upset S. so much that he came close to bidding farewell to philately. Fortunately he did not go so far, but he broke up his collection and devoted himself from then on to purely literary activity. In 1880 he published "Guidelines to philately" which was awarded the bronze medal of the French Philatelic Society in Paris in 1881. He was also several times involved in the production of stamp albums.

During this entire period however, most of his attention was devoted to the collection of philatelic literature, so that by 1890 his library covered more than 2000 catalogue entries, including 750 complete volumes of philatelic magazines. It was an outstanding piece of work to bring this extensive material into a suitable form as an easily visible whole, as was done by S. in his masterpiece already mentioned, his large-scale 16-part "Bibliography". Even after he had finished this work, he went on publishing interesting articles in the philatelic literature on selected topics, e.g. rarities of philatelic literature up to the end of 1900; the origin and development of philatelic literature in the second half of the 19th century, and many more. Thus it can be said without hesitation that he was the first person to demonstrate the importance of literature for philately, to open a way to an appreciation of philatelic literature, and that in his "Bibliography" he has given us a most valuable means of help.

THE POSTAGE STAMPS OF AUSTRIA

The earth-shaking events of the year 1918 have affected Austria as well in recent hours. Whatever feelings affect the hearts of individuals, one thing is certain, that a line must be drawn under the country in our albums, and that Austria now belongs among the philatelically closed countries. The Austrian Post has offered a wide field of activity to the specialist collector: types of paper, enormous numbers of perforations, printing errors, but also it gave us truly artistic postage stamps.

Unfortunately however, there is little literature on Austrian stamps, and it would be very desirable for someone to compile a handbook- something like the Kohl's handbook for Old Germany, since Kropf's work does not nearly cover the material.

The year 1918 brought us only two catalogues. The Michel catalogue treats Austria relatively fully but obviously cannot go into nearly so much detail on perforations, differences between plates, etc., as Kohl's handbook. Then there is also a special catalogue from the firm of Baumgarten, Vienna, which however has many of the prices missing so that it cannot be used as a basis for exchanges, and the catalogue of the XIII, stamp auction in Vienna. This contains many interest items for the Austrian specialist, with pictures as well, and the prices obtained show how highly the types are valued today. Rare cancellations also made very good prices, e.g. an Austrian field post cancellation on a letter from the Papal States, which reached 473K! An unused red Mercury without gum with a small thin patch reached 12,650K. The postage due stamps perforated in Prague in the year 1900 also roused great interest.

The Austrian Post Office rarely offered us new issues.

Air-mail stamps appeared on the 31st March 1918. The air mail route Vienna-Cracow-Lemberg-Kiev was opened on the 20th March 1818, initially for military and diplomatic correspondence, then for private mail from the 1st April. The postal rates were increased sharply. They consisted of the ordinary postage, a handling charge of 1K, and an air mail charge of 1.50K per 20g. Only specially issued air mail stamps could be used for the handling and air mail charges. These were lilac 2K stamps (the same pattern as the existing 2K blue), overprinted with 1.50 K 1.50; yellow 3K stamps (the same pattern as the pink 3K stamps), overprinted 2.50 K 2.50, and grey 4K stamps (the same pattern as the existing 4k green). They all had the additional overprint "Flugpost".

Originally it was assumed that these would only be provisionals and a definitive issue would appear shortly afterwards, but the air mail was discontinued a while ago and the new issue never appeared. Every letter handled carried a hand-written number in the bottom left corner, which showed its place in the sequence, and also had an airmail cancellation on the dispatch and receipt. For further details see Donaupost, p.134ff.

The air mail service Vienna-Budapest was opened on the 4th July 1918, but was closed down again on the 24th July because of a number of serious accidents.

From the 15th October the Vienna-Lemberg air mail service was closed for private use, and Lemberg-Kiev only went on for a short time for military and diplomatic use. As far as the size of the issue goes, Donaupost (see p.133ff) reports that some 25,000 items had been sold to the end of April, and their sale over the counter was discontinued on the 27th April.

Errors are not known so far, except for one variety in which the overprint on the 1.50K stamps is displaced to the left, and the colour error in the shape of a darker 4K stamp sold in Lemberg.

The issue of 4 and 45h stamps announced in several places has not appeared yet, but there has been a 1K stamp in the design of the 40h stamp, in red on yellow paper.

Donaupost (see p.443) also reports a printing error on the 2h on 15h charity stamp with the surcharge at the top.

The 5h and 20h stamps of the 1916 issue appeared in a lighter or darker colour in the course of the years. According to Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal this is an insignificant variety, but Donaupost looks on it as a definite change of colour.

Austria has been more productive of postal stationery. The shortage of postcards in the year 1917 is relevant. There were weeks when retail outlets in provincial towns had no postcards, and the Post Office counters only a few.

The 8h Karl card, was originally published on thin, smooth, soft card, but later appeared on poor, thin, grey cardboard. Double cards also appeared on this. After the increases in postage of the 1st September, postcards appeared with 10h and double cards with 10+10h, on the pattern of the 10h stamps, without prior notice. Since however these cards did not appear until relatively late and there were still large stocks of 8h postcards on sale, but there were no 2h stamps on the market then. The 2h special delivery stamps, both the rectangular and triangular types had to be used for the additional postage. These special delivery stamps (obviously for private use) were also used as additional charges on postcards. There were also letter cards carrying the green 20h Karl stamps. The report found in various journals (Germania-Berichte, Neutrale Korrespondenz, Illustriertes (sic) Briefmarken-Journal) that the issue of letter cards was completely discontinued is thus not correct.

A provisional postage stamp (already queried in Illustrierten (sic) Briefmarken-Journal), a 1h red with a red pen stroke, issued in Wörgl, appears to be a private makeshift.

As mentioned above, the postage rates were increased considerably from the 1st September, the most important changes being cards raised to 10h, inland letters to 20h.

The specialist collector will find some very interesting articles in the literature for the year 1918.

Donaupost published an article from the reputable pen of Dr. Weinert on the 1st issue of Austrian stamps, dealing with types of paper, print and colour, and giving specially interesting pictures of bisected stamps.

Also, Bach in the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, p.80, gives a table of bisected Austrian stamps. According to him, the 1st issue was only bisected diagonally and only used in Hungary.

Donaupost also published an article by Lešeticky called Control Marks on the Stamps of Austria. I think the editorial board of this journal would do specialist collectors of Austrian stamps a great service by issuing this judgmental work as a separate off-print.

It will just be mentioned briefly here that according to the author, control marks have been used on Austrian stamps since 1865. Up to 1899 stripes, crosses, Roman Numerals or similar signs were used on the coloured edges. From 1899 the Roman Numerals 1-XII were used with only stripes for the last, 1908 issue. Small crosses were used in one corner of the protective borders of the war pictorial stamps, from 1913 to 1915 crosses or small stripes, crosses for the 1916 issue and stripes since 1917.

Later (end of 1918), the edge of the sheets showed wide stripes in the colour of the stamp.

Philat. Zeitung published an article on commemorative stamps from Kolbig, Budapest, but these are welfare stamps not postage stamps.

The same journal carries an article by Glasewald on three forged cancellations on new printings of the first issue.

Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal on p.94 gives an article by Heynold surveying all stamps issued (before the beginning of the world war), namely:

Austria	388
Austrian Post Offices in Crete	22
Austrian Post Offices in Turkey	101

This is considerably more than, for example France with its 205 stamps - in spite of having three changes of regime - or Great Britain with its 276, though it certainly has a much greater turnover of stamps.

A reader complained in Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal that the current Austrian stamps are very hard to soak off and the editors advise him to soak them in warm water.

An advert in the same journal, p.180 shows that the remarks about pneumatic postcard No. 24 in the postal stationery section of Senf in 1917 is not quite correct, since such a card was purchased in 1904 at the Prague Post Office No. 5, and sent off via the pneumatic post.

The editors of Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal, on p.244 also state that the 2h periodical stamp of 1908 only exists in blue, not in green as well. They think a breakdown in colour may have occurred. This is contradicted by Donaupost.

The Deutsche Stempel-Zeitung reports false cancellations under Nos. 62 and 116.

So much for the stamps of Austria. Field Post stamps will be described in a later article.

25 YEARS OF THE "D.B.Z."*byDr. F. Kalckhoff

The second half of the eighties of last century saw the second golden age of stamp collecting and philately in Germany. The first golden age, in the sixties, was brought to an end by the wars of 1866 and 1870.

An external sign of this ending was the disappearance of most of the technical magazines and the new upturn brought a growth in the technical literature. This was very poorly represented in Berlin at that time. The only Berlin stamp magazine the "Deutsche Philatelisten-Zeitung" ceased in 1887. The magazine "Der Sammler", produced by Dr. Brendicke, was considered much inferior by philatelists. The "Berliner Philatelisten-Klub" founded in January 1888 thus thought there was room to start a journal of their own. From 1889 this was limited to being simply a Society organ, for internal reasons, so that Berliners lacked a good philatelic magazine, a lack that the steady development of philatelic science caused to be increasingly felt. Dr. H. Brendicke of Berlin decided to leap into this gap and found an organ which would be devoted exclusively to the interests of stamp collectors.

The new magazine appeared for the first time under the title "Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung" with the date 18 October 1890. The most distinguished contributor, who was responsible along with Dr. Brendicke for the almost the entire literary part of the first issue, was the then junior judge Lindenberg, who concealed himself under the pseudonym "D. Richter". The list of new issues was compiled by the former post-office clerk, W. Herrmann. Three Berlin societies, along with the Berlin and Hamburg Stamp Exchanges, chose the "D.B.Z." as their official organs.

Of other people who contributed to the first volume, we may mention two who have died, Distinguished Sanitary Councillor Dr. Paul Sachse (pseudonym "Pauls" or "G. Heim" and District Judge Heinrich Frankel who gave an impetus to philatelic literary studies with his paper "The Trojan War in Philately". He was also sharply critical of the idea put forward by Patrick Chambers as to the priority of the "discovery" of postage stamps by James Chalmers. The writer of this survey also contributed a number of articles. In the following years there were a series of occasional collaborators; there was lively literary activity from 1894 from Lieutenant Paul Ohrt. Lindenberg, Frankel and Ohrt were the leading spirits of the time and Dr. Brendicke, the editor and publisher of the magazine, was only too willing to open his columns to them. They gave the "D.B.Z." character and colour. The ethos of the magazine remained strongly scientific, tolerating none of the half-truths, flatnesses and clichés which abounded in the other increasingly numerous German philatelic journals. On the one hand, this attracted the attention of all serious philatelists to the "D.B.Z." but on the other it naturally attracted the antagonism and hatred of all the "greats" whom they mercilessly dragged from their little thrones.

Poor Dr. Brendicke had often enough to act as whipping boy when his contributors had been a little too severe on the "would be greats". He took it all with true Berlin humour and the conviction that "they can't hurt us!" Scientifically, of course, that was true, but things did not always go smoothly from the business angle. Brendicke was too much the idealist and too little the businessman and thus he made nothing from his magazine. It is thus obvious why he seized the opportunity to get rid of this too-great financial burden and sold the magazine to Hugo Krötzsch of Leipzig. The first issue put out by his firm was number 10 of volume 7, dated 8th October 1896. the first five volumes always ran from October to September. This was impractical for business reasons, particularly as regards the use of the journal by the societies, who always took the calendar year as their operational year. Hence Dr. Brendicke decided to make the volumes of the journal coincide with the calendar year. To do this, Volume 6 began in October 1895 and finished with the December issue, so that Volume 7 began in January 1896. Since then, the years and the volumes have run in parallel. the first "Berlin" period of the "D.B.Z." cannot be better characterized than by Brendicke's parting words in Number 9 of 8th September 1896:

"From the first issue onwards, the "D.B.Z." has enjoyed the esteem of serious philatelists. The editor can say with pride that his decision to concentrate from the beginning on scientific research has proved to be correct, so that he has been able to steer a course in several directions in the interest of our philately. to sail over all shallows and cut through all waves without taking water on board is impossible. The "D.B.Z." has had to fight many battles during these six years, has often had to contend against adverse winds and, if there is one reproach that can be made against it, it is that it did not tack and tack about enough! It has always sailed straight for its objectives, the promotion of philately and the wishes of collectors, and has carried on the fight against contrary opposing and even hostile elements, even when there was little prospect of success and it might have been better to weigh up the risks more carefully. Consciousness of our own power, pride in the strength of our knowledge and, above all, belief in the rightness of our own position have never left the editor and his contributors and have been their support even in difficult times."

These words are a striking expression of the old defiant Prussian pride, shown by all Germany in the war currently raging.

The new owner and editor gave an external signal of his take-over of control in the form of a new heading for the journal, which is familiar to all existing readers, as it has remained unaltered since then. The German eagle in the background indicated that Herr Krötzsch intended to cover the whole of Germany. His success in this is indicated by the large number of societies that have chosen the "D.B.Z." as their society organ. A fresh approach was also signalled by the record of new issues which was drawn up by Krötzsch himself from then on, in careful detail and illustrated. The contributors initially remained the same. There were, of course, gradual changes as was bound to happen in the course of nearly twenty years. Death, personal differences, withdrawal from philatelic publication, have led to the disappearance of many of the old contributors and, of the four regular contributors specified by name when the "D.B.Z." changed hands, only the undersigned is still active. For him too, the time cannot be far off when he must leave the field to younger powers and restrict himself to occasional papers. Happily though, the rising generation includes a whole series of serious and capable researchers and writers who can accept and improve on the inheritance of their philatelic fathers.

Philately itself has changed during the 25 years existence of the "D.B.Z.". The early years were, in general, a period of fresh activity and growth. The norm was then the general collector who naturally tended to be interested in certain topics rather than others. Everyone was more or less interested in everything, people could easily communicate with one another and help one another. Universal handbooks like the "Grosse Handbuch der Philatelie", most of which was due to Carl Lindenberg, the Krötzsch handbook, and the "Catalogue for Advanced Collectors” by Collin & Calman of New York, were eagerly studied. An all-German philatelic bibliography by Victor Suppantisch appeared. It was the time of the idealistic drive to produce the springtime of philately. However, as in the life of every person, so in philately the “nervus rerum” began to exert its unhealthy influence.

The expansion of collecting led calculating heads to the idea of speculating in stamps. This new problem was attacked in various ways. To give an idea of the very unhappy consequences, we need only mention the name “Seebeck”. This name relates to a programme that involved the steady supply of new stamps by legal means so as to keep the collector always in anticipation and make use of the resulting desire to obtain them. N.F. Seebeck worked things so that certain unimportant countries put out new postage stamps every year at his request and supplied him free for the right to the remainder and the reprinting of the stamps concerned. Seebeck’s system did not last long but it set a bad example which was immediately followed by hard-up states and postal undertakings. The result was the inexhaustible flood of new stamp issues in which every general collector is helplessly drowned. He could only manage to breast this tide by a more detailed study of stamps that made him a special collector. And just as in life, the theologian, the jurist, the scientist and the merchants are usually strange to one another, stamp specialists had no companions either.

The second type of speculation was more a matter of market operation. There are those “collectors” who on getting hold of a stamp think only of what they can make on it. What is understandable from a regular dealer becomes an abuse with these “collectors”, since they do not want a regular trade with a moderate profit, but want to rig the market. To do this they store up quantities of individual stamps, thus driving the price artificially high, whereas the real collector, who collects for pleasure and will keep his stamps for a long time, is disappointed. All known speculators are regularly exposed, especially in the annual catalogues, the original of which is the Senf catalogue, since these catalogues are the philatelic stock-lists.

It is obvious that this brief sketch of the development of stamp collecting and philately must be reflected in the technical journals. A neutral organ such as the “D.B.Z.” has a hard time in these circumstances of choosing the correct middle path between conflicting interests, so that it does not fall between two stools. I think the readers of the “D.B.Z.” will agree with me that Herr Krötzsch has tried hard and with success to find the right path which must naturally tend in the direction of the truly serious collector, the collectors’ societies and the reputable dealers. These are the circles who thus have the greatest interest in keeping the “D.B.Z.” going. And as it has now been established and esteemed for 25 years, may it be granted many more years to carry the banner for true philately and its partisans.

Deutsche Briefmarken – Zeitung, XXIV, no.4, 10 April 1913

The formation of an International Philatelic Library
A proposal by Hugo Krötzsch

On p.51 of our last issue for February we had to report the death of the Earl of Crawford, and the question occurred to many readers of this report: “What will happen to the philatelic treasures of the departed?”. As regards his stamp collection, “St.C.Fortn”, in an article in “London Opinion” reports the rumour that there has been an offer from America for the dead earl’s “united States collection”, and suggests that the “England Collection” from the same estate should be bought by the British nation, so that the earl would be kept in the memory of british philatelists by the acquisition of this wonderful collection. Presumably this treasure would be kept alongside the Tapling collection. However, the implementation of this plan is doubtful, since some of the unused stamps of British India missing from the Tapling collection were offered as a gift by the “Philatelic Society of India”, but were not accepted because there was no room for them!! See 1905,p.74

However, the Earl of Crawford’s estate contains an even more valuable philatelic treasure than the stamp collection, namely

The Crawford Library

And according to “ St.C.Fortn”, this has been willed to the nation, certainly to the great joy of all philatelic researchers, and will probably be kept in the british Museum. We sdescribed the catalogue of the stupendous specialist library in 1911, p.100. We will merely recall here that this catalogue runs to 924 colums in folio format. Anyone who is also familiar with the catalogues of our big society libraries will be able to appreciate the colossal extent of the Crawford library, and anyone who also realises that most society libraries consist mainly of recently published works will see that the greatest value of the Crawford Library lies in its possession of the other publications. Also anyone trying to build up a library of his own by including the old publications will be sufficiently aware that tit is much harder to complete a philateis library than a collection of stamps. It is thus not surprising that when bibliophilic rarities come on the market,they command a high price in relation to the small numbers of people interested. Thus for example, according to p.44 of “Phil Ree” the following prices were obtained at the auction of the remainder of the Legrand Library:

For 12 vols of “Stamp collector’s magazine” (1863- 74) M200-

10 vols of “Philatelist” (Brighton, 1867-76)

For Valette “petit manuel de l’Amateur des Timbres Poste”, of 1862, a very rare catalogue, the extraordinarily low price of M .28-

For the first vol. of “Le Timbres – Poste” (1863) M.90-

For Tyfanny’s “Philatelical Library (1874), one of only 150 copies produced M –42.

The reliability or otherwise of auction prices is again illustrated here, since 4 issues of “Stamp news Annual” were bought for m.30, whereas all 6 of the issues that appeared are still available form the pulisher for M.1. each. Even this brief example of the prices gives an impression of the material value of the Crawford collection, which naturally includes far greater rarities than the above selection from the remainders fo the earlier Legrand library.

The Earl of Crawford began the collection has now presented to the nation in 1901, when he purchased the library of the deceased Mr J.K.Tiffany of st.Louis, Missouri., Tiffany collected with zeal, but his collection finished with the year 1897. The new owner set about tht task of extending the library with energy. He got hold of everything the available, and also got the first refusal of all the larger collections that became available. This was originally meant for the private use of its owner: however the Earl finally allowed the “Philatelic Literature Society” to print an edition of it for its members, and thus made the catalogue available in a generous way to philatelic literary men and bibliophiles.

English philately is now in the fortunate position of owning this valuable library, which was obviously collected from all countries, and which will certainly be of use abroad in supporting research work by lending out to local libraries works which they do not possess and which are not available any nearer home. Exactly for this reason, it should be a moral obligation for non-English writers and publishers to make a slight return by presenting all their new books and journals to the Crawford library in future. It should also be ensured that the founder and unselfish benefactor of this quite exceptional library is honoured by his work not ceasing at his death, but is constantly extended and can never be overshadowed by any other Library. No nation should exclude itself from this willing sacrifice to honour, since it is hardly possible that any country would receive a comparable gift on the one hand, or that its storage and maintenance could be queried on the other. The collection, maintenance, antiquarian supplementation of and continued acquisitions for the library impose such great demands that the problems should be prevented from multiplying. If, as it is to be hoped, the English retain control of the custody and maintenance of this noble gift, we may well assume that English philatelists will be sufficiently interested to present all new literature (books as they are and journals bound up at the end of the year, in this original binding as far as possible) without cost, so as to give effective support to this large – scale and generous undertaking. In this way the library would obviously remain in the ownership of the British nation, but would become an international collection point for all philatelic literature, wellspring for international research in philately, the first link in a chain uniting the international philatelic community, and a noble memorial to a fine systematic collector. A permanent memorial to its founder and most outstanding promoter would best take the form of incorporating his name in a conspicuous fashion in the name of the library, e.g.

INTERNATIONAL PHILATELIC LIBRARY
EARL OF CRAWFORD K.T., LONDON

To carry out the suggestion put forward here, the first step would be for the societies of all countries to debate the proposal, preferably at this year’s congresses. If they agreed, the English nation and English philately could be asked to accept this international support to the honour of its founder and the promotion of international scientific.

CARL BECK

So far our comparison between Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann and Carl Beck has been limited to one external: pipe smoking. However the likeness between the two extends to something much more important: the collection and appraisal of philatelic literature, but above all in the production of new works. Beck is known by the pseudonym he occasionally uses – C.B. Bookworm. This word seems to have fascinated him. Whyen he started a magazine for the friends of philatelic literature in 1921 – along with Alexander Bungerz – he called it “Der Philatelistische Bückewurm”. The magazine was poorly printed, and was meant to be the organ of the “Society of Philatelic Literature Collectors”, started the same year. Thalmann was on the board of directors. However Lindenbergh, Kalckhoff, Pirl, Krötzch, etc. – already familiar to us in this connection – were not absent either. The magazine was aimed at bringing and keeping together those with a direct interest, but also to give some encouragement to the great mass of those who are notoriously hostile to literature. Beck addressed himself to this problem since he was already chairman of the Literature Section of the League of German Philatelic Societies (1925/29). “Is there really nothing beyond stamp trading, new issues and catalogue study? Is there really not a simple collector in the societies who will take it on himself to take over the society library and run it? Must it really be that even the extensive libraries of major societies in the truest sense of the word represent nothing more in their intention and their present state than dumps for old papers” (quoted from Carlrichard Brühl, History of Philately, 1986, p. 1014).

Now who was this zealot Carl Beck, the devotee of literature, Heppenheim was his place of birth, 27 December 1879 his date of birth. Obviously innately precise, he was an employee of the Reich Office of Statistics. In his 25 years of service he became Chief Secretary. Before his “Bückewurm” he brought out another publication on the same topic: the “Philatelic Miscellany” (known from 1905 and 1909). Research studies from his pen dealt with Bavarian issues in particular. Thus, the world knows from his pen works on the Bavarian millwheel cancellation with price tables (1911, in collaboration with Carl Holzschucker) and the Bavarian Kreuzer stamps of the 1849-1875 issues. Other titles are a bibliography of the most important German special writings on the postage stamps of individual states, then “The State Postal Museum and its stamp holdings”, “Practical guide through the realm of philately”, “Laying out philatelic libraries”, “On the importance of philatelic literature”, “On the value of philatelic literature” (the similarity of the titles is not very edifying), and “The need for philatelic literature”. There are also a number of shorter pieces, which often undeniably have the nature of polemics against the lack of interest of most collectors in scientific work. He also carried on a vigorous campaign in his own name and that of the Germania-Ring against the highly dubious collaboration between the State Postal Museum and the well-known stamp dealer Philipp Kosack – an affair that really made waves in collector circles at that time (see above, on the State Postal Museum and H. Hill, who wrote “The book of world post”, in Sammler-Express”, 4/89, p.150). Carl Beck gained high international recognition and was, for example, a member of the “Philatelic Literature Society” founded in London in 1907. A favourite item for collection by Beck was autograph (hand-written) covers from well-known philatelists. He also produced detailed biographies of Alexander Bungerz and Viktor Suppantshitsch. Not least, as top man of the Germania-Ring he started an “Enquiry office and black list” on unreliable also-collectors, giving the names, addresses and house numbers of these delinquents, as well as detailing their shortcomings such as “does not supply stamps ordered in spite of many reminders” or “a stamp dealer in many complaints about him, prosecution has been initiated”.

The world of collectors was deeply moved to hear that this man, so many-sided and active in the interests of collectors, had died in Berlin on 9 July 1929. His unique private library of the German-language philatelic literature (like that of Alexander Bungerz previously) has gone to the Prussian State Library in Berlin, bought from the profits of the ig IPOSTA exhibition of 1930 (Berlin). His “Bückerwurm” has been taken over by J.A. Bosshard and Fritz Seifert.

ALEXANDER BUNGERZ

If ever a romanticist would think to dedicate an artistic work of prose to a lover of postage stamps, who met a memorable fate, he would find in Alexander Bungerz a predestined figure. Bungerz is known (hopefully) to today’s philatelists as the creator of the first “Great Lexicon of Philately”, which appeared in Albert-Kürzle-Publishinghouse, Munich, in 1923. And one should assume that the author of such a hit would be a happy man. Such an assumption is strengthened with a look into his highly intellectual (spiritual) face. From it shines harmony, yes peaceableness and dignity. But let us hear his course of life!

Caption under photo: A.B. with 50 years

He was born on 7 November 1876, as the son of the merchant Alexander Bungerz and his wife Christine Jordan in Munich-Gladback (Mönchengladback); she came from an old musical family.

He could attend the grammar school and gymnasium only part time, since he suffered with a bad sickness – hæmophilia. It is hereditary, passed on by women, but appears only in men. According to the lexicon, even small injuries to skin or mucous membrane can lead to severe, life-threatening bleeding and also diseases of the joints, because of the absence of a certain coagulating agent, which is necessary for the blood to clot.

The young Bungerz spent at that time, indeed, more time with doctors and in sanatoriums (hospitals?) than in school. Canes and crutches were his almost constant companions. Only when he was grown up eased his suffering to a tolerable level by a controlled life-style and an iron will to complete accepted work duties.

First he worked for his father as merchant and after his death he devoted himself to the arts and studied in Dusseldorf, Munich and Rome. He was here a master-student of an expert whose name we find as the designer of the German postage stamp Michel-Nr.64 with the motive “North and South” : Lipinsky. He married Elli Quack in 1914 who gave him three children.

the lived in and on Tegernsee. Bungerz, as a boy, lived often in the country when it was physically impossible to attend school. there he lived with a Pastor who taught him science and who acquainted him with postage stamps. His earlier travels to England, France, Italy, the Balkans, Switzerland, North Africa and Scandinavia left him with deep, abiding impressions which enflamed his artistic (fondness of art) talent. Because of this he saw important media also in postage stamps, coins, antiques and books. With that he distinguished on one side a scientific approach to the inner pertinent context; on the other side, cultural learning and entertainment worth. such insights were mirrored perhaps in his unbelievable productivity as writer, specialty (expert) author, as also with simple (straight-forward) collecting. Let us, first of all, name his collecting areas:

First he was a general collector (that already as a schoolboy). then he followed the trend to unalterable restriction and at the same time deepening of the collecting area. So he became Europe-collector. In 1905 he was supposed to possess stamps of the continent complete within 25 pieces. after that he specialized in Old-Germany, German Colonies, Great Britain and Greece. A favourite subject, somewhat a motive-collection, carried the confined term “Beauty Collection” in accordance with his artistic ambitions. In it he combined, independent from the issuing country, according to his personal perception, the most appealing issues, for example picture stamps from the USA or the British Colonies, but also the English “Penny Black” and other issues of that time were not missing, because their simple and well-balanced design, call it classic, was never met again in such completeness since then. As a painter he had a special eye for that.

His philatelic library, without doubt, belongs to Bungerz’s serious collecting activity, which was obtained with difficulty and high subscriber dues for numerous trade journals, which was to have had 20,000 single numbers in splendid condition, including 600 books, memographs, pamphlets, and separate prints (without catalogues).

This brave and always sickly man attained his most serious and self-created accomplishment with his specialty (trade) writing, which he started relatively late when he felt he was sufficiently able. His main work, the “Great Lexicon of Philately” was already mentioned. We can list here only the titles of other important works (small publications?):

- History and Catalogue of the German Colonial Stamps (1920)
- About Circuits and Exchange Associations (1920)
- From Studio to Window (1921) Development of the Postage Stamp
- The Hunt for the Postage Stamp (1922)
- The Hand (cancellation) Stamp Issue of Libau (no year)
- The Coin Data (?) on Postage Stamps (1922)
- How One Collects Postage Stamps (1923)

Bungerz wrote for many years for the “Berlin Postage Stamp Newspaper” and was editor of “Collector-Week” in Leipzig. He started with Carl Beck the “Philatelic Bookworm”, a journal for philatelic literature. Stamp stores boasted about his occasional assistance in their ads, publishers used him to revise earlier works of other authors (ex. “The Postage Stamp Collector” by Dr. Hans Brendicke). He tried his hand in 1920 at a youth paper “The Young Postage Stamp Collector” and edited periodicals as the “Postage Stamp Mail” and stamp corners as in the “Morning Mail of Berlin”. He finally caused a reprint (black print) of a coloured publication “The Postage-Stamp-Friend” which appeared in 1864 by Moritz Rühl of Leipzig. Because of such accomplishments awards were bestowed; the “SiegerPreis” for philatelic literature (1923 for his lexicon), a so-called “Lindenberg-Herrari-Preis” (500 mark from the surplus of the Philatelic (?) of Hesshaimer (see pg.52), not to be mistaken with the Lindenberg-Medal which was him denied). The publisher also received a medal for his lexicon. Altogether very little, in the meantime, Bungerz's illness sapped his work and vitality.

Economical need forced him to part with much; in 1929 he had to sell his beloved "Beauty Collection" and especially his vastly varied and complete philatelic library which was taken over by the Prussian State Library of Berlin. He left with his family the lovely Tegernsee and went to Berlin where friendly contacts with known stamp merchants and auctioneers, Ernst Stock and Philipp Kosack, were useful to master the highly burdensome life. He soon had to leave there also and move to the apparently cheaper Cologne-Lindenthal. As his needs grew bigger, the German Philatelic Association took him on and called for a fund-drive – a drop on a hot stone.

A "light at the end of the tunnel" appeared suddenly in this situation; Norbert Frisher, postage stamp dealer in Vienna, hired him in mid-1931 as editor of his journal "We Postage Stamp Collectors". But this change to the good stopped suddenly; Bungerz died of appendicitis on 1 November 1931 – only 57 years old.

The German-Ring honoured Alexander Bungerz by donating a memorial-plaque bearing his name 'for services to the philatelic literature' (also shown in the photo with caption: The Bungerz Memorial Plaque).

Despite his artistic capabilities and the creation of excellent design for Bavarian stamps, Bungerz could not achieve postal-used stamps. The Bavarian-Essays came not into use since Bavaria lost its mail-sovereignty in 1920. And designs for an air-mail stamp, which he presented upon commission by the "Reichspost", were not accepted – the shown eagle was supposedly "too aggressive".

as, "Stadtverwaltungs Oberinspektor ", (Chief Inspector with the Municipal Attorney's office?) he was also active as a philatelic technical writer. His favorite area of stamp collection brought together commemorative stamps of all countries, particularly those which concerned a particular area of history. Additionally he was interested in which may have to be understood as his preference for " Urbilder (original proofs?) for stamps " (so it was expressed anyhow in a questionnaire, on which he by the way indicated the year 1908 as the beginning of his collecting activities; as a 14 year old. At that time another passion began to appear which led to the above honors: He collected philatelic literature and created an estimable private library of this category.
As a member of two Munich stamp collecting associations he was always ready to serve as the librarian. The lasting main achievement of Mueller however consisted in efforts (starting in the beginning of the 1930's) to construct central " philatelic library ". This was achieved gradually, and their holdings were merged since 1937 with the municipal library Munich. However, they formed a separate library unit.
Mueller cared for these with deep commitment until 1958 with high regard and assistance nationally and internationally. Meanwhile this library is probabl known to all German and numerous foreign Philatelists as a source for data research. Since 1969 it has been directed by Otto Gleixner.

C.O.Mueller, who lived in Steinbach on the Woerthsee, managed for many years also the national position for literature in the BDPH and cared for the holdings together with Robert Hoehn and Fritz Gaedicke through their publication "Literature News". Their first issue appeared at the 1 January 1951 with 24 pages. Issues of today by Franz Josef Lindauer, Soest, with the cooperation of honorary writers from professional and research associations produce a compiled publication with a scope annually of over 500, 600
A-5-pages (small offset) and records and reviews capturing meticulousness the new releases in philatelic literature. The establishment founded by Mueller is today left in reliable hands.

The Munich philatelic library took after Mueller's death on 7 May 1967, his private library just as it was pleased to acquire possession of the holdings of the earlier " Federation of Germans and Austrian Philatelic Associations ". Also the well-known Ganzsachen collector, Hugo Schroeder of Munich, the stamp dealer Anselm Larisch or his widow as well as different club libraries all left their Literature Collections to the Munich library, so that their scope of their holdings increased to approximately 30,000 titles (single volumes, magazines, catalogs, monographs, brochures) - an almost inexhaustible treasure trove for researching Philatelists.

If one reports here about C. O. Mueller, who worked in the western part of our nation, then one should also think of Henry Mueller, who in a quite similar area acquired great merit in the eastern section. - Duplications

So it follows correctly that he was active and considerably involved in the preparations for the reopening in 1951 of the (east) Berlin Postal Museum which has been heavily damaged in WWII. Collections of many kinds were saved

FRIEDRICH WILHELM THALMANN

On this we shall deal with and contrast two very important philatelists of days gone by, whose only unimportant point of resemblance was that they were both pipe-smokers. The well-known artist and philatelist, Ludwig Hessheimer, drew them in this attitude. Apropos pipe-smoking, if a philatelist has to be a slave to nicotine, pipe-smoking is the most practical thing for him, since it will leave his hands free whilst he deals with his stamps and entries. Of course, he must take care of sparks flying about whilst he is lighting up.

Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann was born on 11 October 1870 in Potsdam. After attending a classical secondary school he learned the specifics of the book trade and concentrated from the beginning on philatelic literature, which was, of course, of inestimable value for his collecting – his penchant for the printed word bore early fruit. He was a member of the Germania-Ring, and superintended their library between 1905 and 1929, in which he was assisted by the equally well-known philatelist Paul Ohrt (1867-1943). This library is now located in the German Library at Leipzig. From 1927 to 1929 Thalmann carried out further distinguished functions as one of the principals of the Albert-Friedemann Foundation, and from 1922 onwards as a committee member for the Sieger Literature Prize along with Franz Kalckhoff, Emil Pauli, Paul Pirl and Carl Beck.

Such responsible positions would, of course, only go to a man with suitable philatelic accomplishments. As a collector, Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann devoted himself in the first place to Prussian cancellations, preferably on entire letters. After that, his interest was in pre-philatelic letters and cancellations. The deep insight he obtained into these subjects prompted him to put it into writing and thus preserve it for posterity. Not least was his work in the Handbook of "Verein der Freunde des Kohlbriefenmarken e.V", Berlin. Later, on p.195, the reader will find a record of his work in this connection.

In the realm of prephilately, Thalmann produced the title “The German ray cancellation from 1802 and its origin” (Leipzig, 1929). He frequently wrote on this and other topics in “Germania-Berichte”, to which he was a regular contributor. We also find him listed as the author of expert papers in specialist magazines such as “Der Deutsche Philatelist”, Die Postmarke”, Die Deutsche Sammler-Zeitung” and “Berliner Briefmarken-Zeitung”.

Particularly worthy of note is his work on the history of the German Circulating Library, published in “Deutsche Philatelistische Buckerwurm” (January and February 1936). In the July issue for the same year we find his report on a Rhineland stamp exhibition “Düba 1936” at Düsseldorf. Other publications worth a mention are:-

- Catalogue of Central Library of the Germania-Ring (1912)
- Collection of Prussian postal cancellations (published 1925 by Noste/Borna, known as “the Thalmann”, a definitive reference work for collectors of these cancellations)
- The Halle Prussian forgery, 2 silver pieces, 1861/65 issue (reported on in Germania-Berichte 1916, 1919 and 1923, and in summary form in 1925, p.111)
- Our collection of Prussian cancellations (in the Festschrift of the Vereik der Briefmarken-Sammler, Potsdam, 1929).

This last society (Thalmann was its secretary, inter-alia) gave him its honorary membership. the Verein der Literatursammler of Berlin also numbered him amongst its members and contributors.

Thalmann steadily tried to bring together the scattered Prussia collectors, so as to get better research results. He caused a sensation for example by his account of the collections of Emil Augsprach (Berlin) and Hermann Reitmeister (Buckow), one a wello-known champion of Prussian philately. A real gap was created in his circle of friends and collectors when Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann closed his eyes forever on 3 February 1938 in his birthplace Potsdam.

62nd meeting of 27 December 1906
Present: 15 members, Chairman – Herr A. Wisanowski

The Chairman opened the meeting with good wishes at about 9½ hours. Our dear Society brother Gabrielski celebrated his silver wedding on Christmas Eve and our dear brother philatelist Mietke was presented with a little daughter by his better half on Christmas Night. We propose a hearty toast to them both. The minutes of the last meeting were then read and approved. Before the Ring collection of forgeries was made ready for it journey to Essen, the Chairman read out an album verse, since we have sent this important means of instruction for further development and use on the way, in accordance with the wishes of its donor. Herr Juch then read out a letter from the Post Office in Windhoek, from which it appears that the sender had received compensation for a registered letter lost during a raid on the Post Office. Post received was: details of subscription to the new magazine “Der Deutsche Philatelist”, details from Postage Secretary, C. Dieckmann, of his book "Postal History of the German States", the purchase of which was proposed by Herr Thalmann and accepted by the meeting. Journals received were: "Illustrierte Briefm-Journal", no. 24, Berliner Briefmarken-Ztg, no. 12, "Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung", no. 12, "Vertraul

FRITZ LEITENBERGER

The postcard reproduced on the next page was sent during the 37th Philatelists' Day (4th to 5th July, in Brunswick). It was signed by a selected group of then-renowned philatelists. Some are still remembered by experts today, but not Fritz Leitenberger (marked by an arrow).

Never heard of him? However, every second or third collector of today has come into contact with a part of his life's work: Leitenberger worked for eight years during the Weimar Republic on the Schaubek album in the firm of C.F. Lücke, and did so well that no stamps were "forgotten" in the first edition, which called for the highest degree of conscientiousness.

Fritz (Friedrich) Leitenberger first saw the light on 31 August 1890 in Teplitz-Schönau (today Teplice in the Czech Republic). At the age of 43, on 9 September 1933, he had to leave to seek a cure at Gernrode/Harz, an all too brief stay, but of great importance for our hobby. As a collector, specializing in the Hradschin issues of Czechoslovakia, he was awarded a large number of medals work on all the issues of the 50-heller stamp, from abroad, e.g. Le Havre, Antwerp, Melbourne, Strasburg or Luxemburg. His society, The Germania-Ring, could thus be proud of him.

He propagated his work most widely, in publications from his own firm, such as "Weltpost-Echo" (1920/21). Lovers of philatelic occasionally come up against his "Bibliography of the German-language philatelic literature". Another sought-after reference work from his pen has the title "Handbook of Czechoslovak cancellations of Austro-Hungarian origin" (from the firm of Fritz Seifert, Leipzig 1930). Another important production is his 19 page work "Hradschin specialization" from "Die Briefmarke" Teplitz-Schonau, 1929. Papers by him will also be found in "Germania-Berichten", Leipzig, "Sammler-Woche", Vienna, "Postmarke" Vienna, and in the organs of his original homeland, such as the Prague "Briefmarken-sammler", a supplement to "Deutschen Zeit, Bohemia", and the Haida "Briefmarke".

He founded a society for collectors of Czechoslovakian cancellations after the appearance of his above handbook. The associated card-index of Czechoslovak cancellations roused particular interest amongst researchers. He also played a leading part in the production of the "Bungerz-Medal" for philatelic literature. And anyone who takes the trouble to refer again in Hugo Krötsch's contribution will easily find Fritz Leitenberger in the photographs he gives – as a participant in a meeting at Neuahaldensleben: at the bottom, slightly to the right of centre, we see his portrait by Ludwig Hesshaimer. He is referred to there as the Berlin correspondent of "Sammler-Woche". Hesshaimer also supplied the photo of the postcard reproduced here. On it we can read the names of Fritz Seifert (publisher in Leipzig), J.A. Bosshard (Chairman of Germania-Ring, Meiningen), then our Leitenberger, next Josef Schäfer (Chairman of the Leipzig Society of Stamp Collectors)... Wilhelm Herzog (2nd Chairman of the League of German Philatelic Societies, Calvörde) Pastor Alfred Naumann (Editor of Philatelisten-Zeitung, Gössnitz), Dr. Franz Kalckhoff (Berlin-Charlottenburg), Erich Böden (stamp dealer, Brunswick).... Arthur Zweiling (Chairman of the Berolina-Ring, Berlin-Niederschönhausen) etc. This list, which we have deciphered from the signatures on the card, points to the fact that in addition to widely-known experts (e.g. Franz Kalckhoff) there is a much greater number of unselfish, modest philatelic functionaries who have taken and are taking care to keep philatelic life going.

VICTOR SUPPANTSCHITSCH

Anyone familiar with the many-sided aspects of philatelic literature, particularly the older, will find the name of Suppantschitsch springing readily to his lips. All others, however, will have some initial difficulty just in spelling his name. However, we hope this will impress it all the more firmly and unforgettably. This is because Suppantschitsch was, and remains, one of the foremost German-speaking collectors and authenticators of philatelic writings, particularly it is true for the period up to 1900, i.e. the foundation years.

Victor Suppantschitsch was born on 31 october 1838 in Laibach (today Ljubljana, Slovenia). Originally the name Suppantschitsek, but from 1864 onwards he used the form still current today. Such changes of name were common in his day. The father of Suppantschitsch was a merchant, and he wanted his son, Victor, to follow the same calling. However, he had other ideas – after his time in high school he went to Vienna in 1857 to study law. He attained the rank of councillor of the highest school of law in the Royal and Imperial Reich, and in 1906 he became Honorary Senate President.

As a schoolboy Suppantschitsch collected plants and butterflies – doubtless he roamed the countryside with his plant boxes and cases as many young people did at that time. In 1863 his brother died. Part of his inheritance consisted of a small collection of stamps, which he treated as a sacred relic. He carried it on and, as a result, his interest was directed more and more towards this branch of collecting.

Then he did something which even today many collectors – and not only the young ones – do not find necessary: he subscribed to specialist magazines. The first one was the famous “Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler” from Zschiesche & Köder, Leipzig. Next came in 1864 “Börsenblatt für deu Briefmarkenhandel” from Wilhelm Reiche & Co., of Kaufbeuren, “Allgemeine Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung” from Siegmund Friedl of Vienna, and finally also “Wiener Briefmarken-Zeitung” from Heinrich Koch.

The last named journal accepted the first article from the young Victor on special collecting with reference to scientific work on philately. Over the next years and decades he published work of outstanding importance and permanent value from different publishing houses as follows:-

- * “Leitfaden der Philatelie”, Wartigs Verlag, Leipzig, 1880. A year later this book was distinguished by the award of a bronze medal by the “Société Française de Timbrologie” (there was no higher award for philatelic literature at that time).
- * “Weltbriefmarken-Album” 1882, which appeared later up to 1899 as “Patentiertes Permanent-Briefmarken-Album” in six volumes from the firm of “Lahner Hiekenden Boten” (however this was financially a flop).

- * “Bibliographie der gesamten deutschen philatelistischen Literature seif ihrem Entstehen bis Ende 1891”, Verlag A. Larisch, Munich 1892 (Suppantisch’s most important work: he published it in his 50th year).
- * “Grundzuge der Briefmarkenkunde”, Verlag J.J. Weber, Leipzig 1895, 2nd edition 1908 (at that time the fundamental text, before a subsequent one by Theodor Haas).
- * “Katalag der philatelistischen Bibliothet des Oberlandesgerichtsrates V.S. in Gras bis Ende 1893”, also published in the magazine “Austria-Philatelist”, 1895/1897.
- * “Die Entstehung und Entwicklung der philatelistischen Literature in der zweiten Hälfte des xix Jahrhunderts”, 1901
- * Die Seltenheiten der philatelistischen Zeitungs literature bis 1900”, also published in “Philatelist”, Dresden, 1903/04.
- * Die philatelistische Literatur Österreich-Ungarus im XIX Jahrhundert”, 1909.
- * “Über Unregelmassigkeiten bei Herausgabe, sowie über Irrungen und Verstosse in der Numerierung, Datierung und Paginierung (= Angabe der Seitenzahlen. Anm. d. A.) der philatelistischen Zeitungs literature bis Eude 1900”, a series of articles in “Philatelist”, Dresden in the years 1905 and 1908.

Suppantisch got rid of his one significant stamp collection under the influence of the early death (1882) of his friend, the apothecary Ferinand Meyer of Franzbad. The death of his friend crippled Suppantisch’s urge to activity for a long time and impelled him to restrict himself exclusively to the collection of philatelic literature. However this “restriction” led to Suppantisch becoming Europe’s most important collector of literature, after Lord Crawford (1847-1913) of Great Britain and well before Theodor Haas (1848-1911) of Leipzig. For his unique efforts in collecting and recording the specialist literature of philately, the famous Berlin Philatelic Club of 1888 awarded him the Lindenberg medal (1913) and in 1918 – a few months before his death on 2nd March 1919 in Gras – he was gratified by the Hans Wagner medal. Suppantisch’s library contained 1,170 books, some 27,200 periodical issues, and a further 30,000 simple objects such as price lists, society reports and other minor writings. Unfortunately, this prodigious collection did not remain in Germany; discussions between his heirs and the Berlin Philatelic Club were not successful. so it ensued that the collection was purchased by Theodore Edward Steinway, a leading American philatelist (1883-1957) for $1,500 (during the Austrian inflation), who passed it on to the New York “Collectors Club”, whose hitherto modest library thus become one of the greatest in the world. Thus, the extensive library of Theodor Haas, whose contents had been bought by Suppantisch in 1912 for DM 1,500 also went to the States.

Suppantisch showed the most valuable items from his collection, which contained numerous items not in the world-famous Crawford Library, at BUGRA 1914 in Leipzig. Also, he quite often wrote about philatelic problems, especially those relating to literature. And his opinions carried weight! He believed, for example, that the German specialist press was the first to take account of and study postal cancellations. In 1892 Suppantisch expressed his satisfaction that it was German philatelists who led the way in drawing the attention of collectors to pre-philatelic items (stamps, postal receipts, etc). Suppantisch did not regard auction catalogues as philatelic literature, an opinion only partially accepted today since not a few catalogues, particularly the exclusive ones have taken on the character of richly illustrated handbooks. The verdicts of juries on philatelic publications at general exhibitions are often badly astray since, for example, a silver medal for a stamp collection cannot be equated with a silver medal for a high-class literary production from a specialist author. Hence Suppantschitsch – whenever he was on a jury – always stood up for a correct evaluation of the productions of the “writing fraternity”. thus, in the year 1890 a gold medal was awarded in this line for the first time (to Jean-Baptiste Moens), which resulted in further distinctions of the same kind. a major gold medal was awarded once only – Suppantschitsch was naturally the foreman of the jury – this time to Edward Denny Bacon, an outstanding British philatelist who was also curator of King George V’s collection. In contrast with auction catalogues, Suppantschitsch accepted albums into his bibliographies, hence considering them as “literature”. Bacon, who produced a catalogue of the Crawford Library, did not on the other hand accept these into this work of 1912.

The unwearying attempts of the best philatelic mind to appreciate and promote subject literature – a labour of Sisyphus which is still going on today and for which no final end is in sight – ground their expression on 19th September 1907 when the “Philatelic Literature Society” was founded in London. Its members included many international leaders such as Suppantschitsch (and also such people as Hugo Krötzsch and Paul Pirl, but not, however, Franz Kalckhoff). German attempts to extend the use of philatelic literature were carried out by this group with “Philatelistische Bückwurm” for example and the biographies of our outstanding men, the pioneers. May collectors come to appreciate more and more that subject knowledge is the best guarantee of high philatelic management and also for maximum material success.

VICTOR SUPPANTSCHITSCH

On Sunday the 2nd of March 1919, the old Master of philately, retired Senate President of the Higher Court of Justice, and Knight of the order of Leopold, died in Graz at the age of 80 years, 5 months, and was laid to his final rest in St. Peter's cemetery on the 5th of March.

As well as his children and grandchildren he is mourned by the world of philately which he had nurtured since the mid - sixties of the previous century and to which he devoted his affectionate attention up to his death. His philatelic-literary productions are listed in the biography for Suppantschitsch's 80th birthday in the concluding issue of the previous year. As was stated there, Suppantschitsch was not only a stamp collector, but above all a philatelic bibliophile and in over 50 years with persevering zeal he built up his major philatelic library, a collection containing many rarities missing from the great Crawford collection. This life's work of Suppantschitsch is now at an end! Who will take over this magnificent inheritance and continue to care for it? The conscientiousness he always showed enables us to presume that he will have left testamentary dispositions to prevent this valuable library from being broken up and transferred abroad. If there is any question of a sale, surely German philately will undertake the honourable duty of ensuring that this first-class collection is retained and made available to German philatelic researchers. This could be done best if it is administered by the German Library in Leipzig.

This would provide a worthy and permanent memorial to this outstanding, meritorious teacher and be a font of intellectual knowledge for German philately as it could probably never be obtained again. Taken into the German Library, the collection could always be kept up to date by the regular cost-free addition of at least all the relevant German literature. Above all, there would be otherwise unobtainable financial support for the necessary care and preservation of the collection.

In Suppantschitsch we have lost a methodical and zealous pioneer, a giant of the philatelic Old Guard whose early work has been the solid basis for more recent research and for the administration of collections and will continue to be so for a long time to come. However, Suppantschitsch was also a high-minded, kindly person always willing to help with information, who had moreover many admirers abroad. Anyone who has corresponded with him and admired his learned answers as an inexhaustible source will always remember his blameless character, his friendly openness and lively conversation. The editor of the DBZ mourns in him a valued patron who honoured him with his friendship in the earlier years.

'May he rest in god's eternal peace.'

Dear Member and philatelist Friend,

After far too short a holiday, and being up to the eyes in professional work, your editor has finally found time to draw up this 11th issue, which I hope will give you some pleasant surprises.

The first is due to Mr. S. Waroquiers who with his usual generosity has agreed for us to publish the index to "Philatliste Belge", the most important magazine (along with the Balasse Magazine) for Belgian philately in the 20th century.

The numerous interruptions there have been to the publication of this have led to often very difficult styles of printing. Some issues have thus become very rare, and few philatelists have a complete set. This makes it all the more difficult to compile an index for it. Here is a real gap in collecting.

But this is not all...

Deciding to take my courage in both hands, I decided, with Mr. Waroquiers's support, to compile a Complete Table of Contents to Philatliste Belge. This should be ready by the month of January 1993, and will be the object of a special issue of the Bulletin of the SSB, on laid paper. All Society members will get a free copy. I will say no more. The surprise will be all the nicer.

Also, at the request of certain friends and with their support, we shall publish a second Bibliophilatelic Almanac in 1994. This will be better and more complete than the previous one.

Help from all members will obviously be welcome. They may contact me on this subject from today onwards.

Dr. Phil. ALFRED MOSCHKAU:

A LIFE FOR PHILATELY, 1848-1912

FOREWORD

From Stamp Collector to Philatelist and Historian

In the springtime of philately, the young Alfred Moschkau, born on 24th January 1848 in Löbau, Saxony, was one of the first and also most outstanding stamp collectors in Germany. In the year 1859 he found 5 unused red Saxony three-pfennigs in his father's correspondence, and these gave rise to his love of philately. Exchanges with his schoolmates soon enabled him to claim a collection of over 400 stamps his own. He tried to extend his knowledge of philately by studying the relevant specialist press. At the age of 21 he wrote his own first article for publication, and even in his youth his name became well-known, in collectors' circles. He was the editor and author of the Philatelistische Bibliothek (Philatelic Library) series, the 4 volumes of which kept appearing in one new edition after another to the turn of the century. At different times he was the editor of a very wide range of philatelic journals, stamp examiner (expertiser) and society founder, as well as compiler and editor of stamp catalogues and albums, all of which established his reputation as the leading philatelist in the German language.

In his own lifetime Dr. Phil. Alfred Moschkau ranked as Chief of German Philatelists, as he was called by Gustav Reitz Edler von Bollheim, in the biography published in Vienna in the year 1882.

In 1879, at the height of his multifarious work for philately, he was confined to bed by a serious liver disease from which he never fully recovered. As a result of this illness he had to limit his philatelic activities, and give up attending meetings and exhibitions. However, his friends and fellow-workers did not forget him, as can be seen from the greetings cards from meetings and exhibitions, especially the special postcard from the organisers of the League of German and Austrian Philatelic Societies, which was founded in Cologne in 1896.

Dr. Phil Alfred Moschkau was the first serious philatelist who attempted to urge the German stamp collector in the direction of serious research, as illustrated by his collection of the Franco-German War 1870/71, which he exhibited at the 1st International Exhibition of Postage Stamps in Vienna from the 13th to the 20th November 1881. He showed the postal history of both sides with scientific accuracy against the background of political changes, on the French side from an Empire to a Republic and on the German side from the North German League via the North German Confederation to the German Empire.

The present biography will immediately provide the philatelist with a literary memorial of and thus maintain for posterity his importance as the founder of scientific and historical philately.

1. CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH

Otto Carl Alfred Moschkau was born on the 24th January 1848 in Löbau, in Saxon Oberlausitz. He was the son of Karl August Moschkau (1809-1867), a farrier and veterinarian, and his wife Laura Juliane, née Beichling (1814-1862).

His childhood was carefree and happy. The intelligent youngster went to school in his native town, and from very early days showed a particular inclination for history and archaeology. This inclination was strengthened by a collection of over 200 books he was given as a Christmas present when he was only thirteen. He began on these books with zeal, to quench his thirst for learning. A heart ailment was the result of this strenuous overwork, so that he had to give up the idea of going to university. His elders then directed him towards the commercial world, and so in 1865 he went to the Commercial College in Leipzig, where he began his literary activity by editing the College paper Merkur [Mercury]. In 1867 he went back again to Leipzig to continue his studies. In the following year he settled down in Dresden, where he became a regular visitor to the local libraries and museums. He also took up literary activity during this period. He was in rapid succession a shopkeeper, a homeopathic doctor, a photographer, a historical author and a novelist, and in all of these avocations he carried out extremely fruitful and varied work. On 26 November 1875 he obtained a Decree as personal Homeopathic Consultant from the Russian Countess Galitzin, after he had gained the degree of doctor in the year 1873.

2. HOW I BECAME A PHILATELIST

Recollections of Dr. Alfred Moschkau

Extract from Dr. Phil. Alfred Moschkau's book Zur Geschichte der Philatelie [On the History of Philately] - collected contributions on the history of stamps and philately, with portraits and illustrations, published by Louis Senf, Leipzig 1879.

My heart condition - a torment to me to the present hour - appeared in a serious form in the autumn of the year 1859, and banished me to a sick-bed. Accustomed to roam through meadows and woods in spite of wind and weather, I was now compelled to keep to my room for months and had to invent all sorts of ways of amusing myself, though they tended to lose their attraction very quickly since the days seem longer to an invalid and he needs constant variety in his pastimes.

How fortunate therefore - since it might never otherwise have happened - was it for me that my father had an idea for shortening my unwilling hours with the Muses by getting me to go through his very extensive correspondence and discard whatever was obsolete and unimportant. A great trunk full of old documents was given to me to sift and, pleased to have something useful to do, I set about undoing and sorting them bundle by bundle.

I had no idea at all that people were already collecting stamps over there across the Channel (i.e. in England). Regardless of shape or colour, type or age, the letters with stamps on went into the wastepaper basket along with old certificates and receipts and special memoranda. For days on end I had nothing to do but open letters, read them through and either return them to the bundle or tear them in two and throw them under the table.

Then I unexpectedly found in an ordinary letter from Dresden five un-cancelled old red Saxon three-pfennig stamps. They had probably been sent to my father as return postage and overlooked by him because they were so insignificant, but I had never seen them before and thought they might be worth saving because they were unused.

As if finding these stamps had made me fall in love with the entire species, from then on I subjected the inside and outside of every letter to an increasingly close scrutiny, - every stamp became a sacrifice to my suddenly awakened passion, and as well as the untouched correspondence, the letters that had been carefully arranged by year were gone through again and a cigar box was speedily filled to the brim with this new and original booty. What a joy it was to count up the stamps at the end of the task and find the result to be several thousand of these pretty little pictures.

However, what was the next step? Boredom led me to the idea of combining this treasure with one of my old notebooks and with a zeal worthy in my father's view of a better object, I pasted in my stamps - there is no other word for the way they were fastened. By the end of the second evening this task was finished, and the volume could be put under my pillow to bring sweet dreams.

Thus, this stamp book contained the rank and file of a stamp army arranged by type and value without advice from anyone, and the five three-pfennig stamps were the commanding officers. However, my un-resting mind had another idea only a few days later.

What exactly are stamps? What have they got in the way of portraits, coats of arms, and details of value? How many have you got of every type and colour? These and other questions rose up in my mind, and the result was that I got a fresh sixpenny octavo notebook and stuck into it one example of every country and every type, and wrote the name of the country above as decoratively as possible. I was able to put about 60 stamps together in this way - a number which was rapidly trebled, as more and more of my trusty school friends took it on themselves to save stamps for me, and brought me in new ones practically every day. I still remember clearly how the sight of a blue Cape triangular sent me practically into ecstasy, how its owner would not make me a present of it, and how with tears in my eyes I bought it for 25 pfennigs cash, a sum that represented two month's careful saving out of my pocket money.

A year later, I had used all available means - swaps, with the produce of my father's orchard being a particularly successful medium of exchange for a long time - to reach the number of 250 different stamps in my sixpenny book, and my collection had been produced in front of most of my father's personal and business friends - of course with a view to further additions! This notable collection then found an admirer in the shape of our barber, who on the advice of another person who later became my friend, bid in all seriousness a mere 8 thalers [Translator's note: 1 Thaler = 3 marks] for the book with the rubbish (my father thought the barber was an idiot!), and I was obliged to follow my father's advice and part with my collection.

Of this gigantic sum I got a mere 4 thalers, and my two younger sisters got 2 each - however the nagging grief at the loss of the collection was mine alone, and did not come to an end until I was able to start a new collection, the necessary basis for which was the rest of my duplicates.

I think I shall have to forego giving a detailed account of how I quickly built up a bigger collection in the following years, how I bought stamps at fifty pfennigs the lot along with like-minded friends in Leipzig, with what delight I devoured the first issue of the Zschiesche & Köder magazine, and how over the long period of two decades I have remained a true lover of stamps. This little sketch is just designed to tell my friends near and far: how I became a philatelist and how my first collection arose.

3. DR. ALFRED MOSCHKAU

Champion of Systematic Philately and Founder of Historical Philately

As Dr. Moschkau describes in his recollections, his passion for collecting was aroused by the discovery of 5 unused red Saxony 3-pfennig stamps amongst his father's correspondence, and he did not part with them up to his death in the year 1912. When he arranged his collection of stamps by country and issue, he created the first known philatelic special collection, on lines which are now followed all over the world. The sale of his first collection did not interrupt his urge to collect. He steadily built up a new collection on the basis of duplicates he had retained, with the basic stock increasing only slowly because of the conditions existing then.

After leaving school he rapidly built up his collection by purchases to a value of over 1,300 Marks, so that he could be classed as one of the major collectors of the springtime of philately; before 1870. He acquired his philatelic knowledge from the first Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung [German Stamp Journal] a "magazine for stamp collectors" published by Zschiesche & Köder from 1863 onwards. He studied each issue avidly to widen his knowledge.

He wrote his first philatelic article at the age of barely 21, so that whilst still young, he became a familiar name in the philatelic press and amongst the new societies.

At the age of 19 he became engaged to Frieda Ernestine Pfeifer of Ober-Cunnersdorf in Saxon Oberlausitz. To set up his household he parted for a second time with the bulk of his stamp collection, but he did retain the rarities. After his marriage in the year 1868 these rarities formed the basis of a new collection, as he could not overcome his yearning to collect postage stamps and postal history. He had so many connections with philatelists all over the world that in a very short time he had again built up a collection of over 5,000 stamps, a general collection which would today be neither physically available nor financially possible.

This collection was remarkable for its completeness, since it only lacked 5 stamps from all the then available issues. The collection was repeatedly exhibited to members of the Saxon royal family, including his majesty King Johann (1801-1873) and the then Crown Prince Albert (1828-1902) of Saxony, and to many other princes and leading officials of the various German postal undertakings. The first private exhibition of his stamp collection took place on the 30th August 1868 at the Dresden Geological Society, where Dr. Moschkau gave a full and particular description of his collection. He thus showed the Society members how the postage stamp could be a geographical mirror of the country concerned.

After combination with the Trauwitz collection, there came the first open exhibition of his stamp collection at 5B, Waisen Hausstrasse, Dresden, on the 10th April 1871 under the auspices of the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung.

An invitation to visit this exhibition was issued by Dr. Moschkau himself in the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, 1870 [sic], Issue 2, in the following words:

The editor responsible for this paper (Dr. Moschkau) intends to exhibit his important collection of postage stamps &c. Examination of his extensive collection of 5,000 different stamps and covers excluding private stamps, may bring many of those who now look down on philately to be more favourable to it. The exhibition itself takes place thanks to the Field Post Office of the Franco-German War of 1870/71, and received vigorous support from the Dresden branch of the North German Postal Authority. As far as the exhibitor knows, it is the first exhibition of its kind in Germany.

Dr. Moschkau's bravura and skill showed it to be entirely possible for an individual to put on a stamp exhibition, providing of course he has the necessary breadth of outlook and organizing talent. He tried to make the Dresdeners aware of his exhibition by adverts in the local press and posters. He showed visitors round the exhibition himself, to impart the historical importance of philately to them, and to interest them in, and win them for, philately. We can thus hail Dr. Moschkau with reason, as the father and founder of the German style of exhibition.

A year before this, in 1869, the young Moschkau made the acquaintance of Gustav Bauschke, later the publisher. This led to his collection being used as the basis for the make-up of the Schaubek albums. His friendship with Louis Senf, co-founder of the world-famous stamp firm of Senf Bros., Leipzig, should not be forgotten either. In subsequent years it led to a lively exchange of philatelic ideas, and to a literary collaboration on Senf's Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal.

At the beginning of 1870 he took on the editorship of the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung founded by G. Bauschke and A. Zschiesche. In October 1871 however, he gave this up to put out a periodical of his own. This bore the title:

A. Moschkau's Magazin für Markensammler

Organ für die Gesamtinteressen der Markenkunde

[A. Moschkau's Magazine for Stamp collectors

Organ for Everyone Interested in Philately]

Unfortunately this enterprise of his own did not have a very long life. It ceased to appear as early as June 1872.

On the 10th of May he founded, along with law student Treichel and Dr. Arldt, the:

Verein Deutscher Philatelisten in Dresden

[Society of German Philatelists] in Dresden, and was its first President. The editing and publishing of the Society journal Vertrauliche Mitteilungen [Confidential Reports] was undertaken by the first President, however, only four issues appeared. Although the Society only lasted a few years, it was nevertheless the model for all later societies founded in Germany and the German-speaking world.

In the year 1877 he helped to found the:

Internationale Philatelisten-Vereins

[International Philatelic Society] in Dresden with its later national and international sections. With interruptions, he was editor of, and from 1894 a regular contributor to, the Society journal, Der Philatelist.

To further philately as a science and popularise it, Dr. Moschkau wrote the:

Philatelistische Bibliothek

[Philatelic Library Handbooks] issued by the firm of Louis Senf, later Senf Bros. Ltd. A total of four volumes containing relevant treatises appeared:

Volume 1:	Watermarks on Postage Stamps	1871
Volume 2:	Handbook for Essay Collectors	1875
Volume 3:	Handbook for Stamp Collectors	1876
Volume 4:	The History of Philately	1879

The Philatelic Library Handbooks were extremely popular with stamp collectors, so that new and expanded editions of Volumes 1 and 3 kept appearing until the turn of the century.

As well as the Philatelic Library Handbooks, 1877 saw the publication of:

1. Deutsche Philatelisten-Kalender

[First German Philatelic Calendar] which has had no imitations to date.

He was particularly interested in the creation of a model collectors' album, since the simple accounts in his exhibitions were not adequate for all the valuable details of his stamps thus, after lengthy preparation, his:

Deutsches Briefmarken-Album

[German Stamp Album] appeared in 1876 in a tasteful getup and format - the name of the countries in raised gold lettering - and a useful dictionary for the collector.

On the 1st January 1876 Dr. Moschkau became managing editor of Senf's *Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal (IBJ). He steadily developed the IBJ into the leading scientific organ for German and international philately. In the following years, philately reached its first peak, represented by the foundation of collectors' societies in many towns. The magazine was simply overwhelmed with reports of the founding of such societies, too many to print. Barely the name of most of these societies still survives, but one is still flourishing with unaltered vigour. It is the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde in Frankfurt-am-Main. This was reported in the August 1878 issue of the IBJ as having been constituted on the 6th of June, but it was noted somewhat ruefully that the membership consisted initially of only 15 gentlemen. It rarely happened that a newly-founded society received a special editorial greetings from Alfred Moschkau. In this case though he did so with the editorial note:

We hope this Society blooms and prospers, may the Frankfurt society be a real nursery of philately.

This wish from the patriarch of philately has been wonderfully fulfilled. The Society has effectively outlived all other foundations from that and later periods for more than 105 years, benefiting and advancing philately. This Society also retains one of the most extensive and valuable philatelic libraries in the ownership of any Society.

The earliest forgeries appeared in the very Springtime of philately. Dr. Moschkau carried out a pitiless war against forgers and their productions. On this basis he was a member of the:

Heidelberger Vereins zur Unterdrückung Antiphilatelischer Elemente

[Heidelberg Society for the Suppression of Anti-Philatelic Elements] and wrote the first article on forged stamps, which was published in the Heidelberger Bazar für Briefmarkensammler [Heidelberg Bazaar for Stamp Collectors].

Caricature of forgers and their forgeries in the early days of philately.

In the year 1871 he set up the first testing [expertising] service for stamps. The tests were free: only the return postage was required. This service was extensively used, e.g. by over 400 philatelists in the years 1874 and 1875. Exposing a Frankfurt stamp dealer during his campaign for “clean” philately led to his incurring a heavy fine which compelled him to sell his house in Oybin and also a part of his collection. Because of the loss of this action, and his own failing health he announced the cessation of his stamp testing in the Allgemeine Anzeiger [General Advertiser] of 1st May 1877.

The fame of Dr. Moschkau as a leading expert in German and international philately extended throughout the German-speaking world. Hence, in the middle of the year 1881 he followed a call to Vienna to become editor of the magazine Weltpost [World Post], formerly the Wiener Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung [Vienna Illustrated Postage Stamp Journal]. The subscribers to, and readers of this journal were informed of Dr. Moschkau's arrival as Manager and editor by the following notice in N°7 of the 6th Volume, dated 15th July 1881:

To our Readers

...we are pleased to be able to announce today that the grand master of German philately Dr. Alfred Moschkau previously of Oybin, is now entering our business not only as co-editor of the “Welt-Post”, but also as the independent head of our widespread highly renowned stamp business. The name of “Moschkau” is already too well known for it to be necessary to stress what an asset we have gained for “Welt-Post” and for philately in Austria as a whole: our valued clients and customers, in particular, will be very pleased to hear that their orders will be dealt with by such a famous and knowledgeable expert.

Editor - Publisher

Siegmund Friedl

It is clear from this notice what a good name and reputation Dr. Alfred Moschkau enjoyed in the ranks of philatelists and how highly he was regarded. It is thus no surprise to find him being named 1st secretary of the Vienna Philatelists' Club at the same time, and also being entrusted with the organisation and direction of the projected:

1st Open Exhibition of the Postage Stamps of All Nations

The now world-famous Vienna International Postage Stamp Exhibition, the WIPA, held in Vienna from the 13th to 20th November 1881. The opening ceremony took place in the presence of a member of the Austrian Imperial Family, high officials of the Royal and imperial Postal Service, and well-known representatives of other European postal services. This first exhibition of stamps and documents on postal history roused the greatest interest on all sides and drew the attention of everyone concerned with the means by which philately could win new friends and enthusiastic collectors.

Dr. Moschkau made a number of valuable items of his own available, and one reporter described these as follows:

Dr. Moschkau exhibited philatelic memorabilia in Group VII, including: a portrait of the Countess de Longueville, the inventor of the first municipal postal cover, Paris 1653; an old wood engraving of Sir Rowland Hill, the ultimate founder of the stamp method in 1840, also in a splendid case, four original letters from Sir Rowland Hill and two photographs, the former addressed to Dr. Moschkau and the latter being presents from the venerable world postal reformer to named exhibitors.*

Anna Genoveva, Countess of Longueville - the inventor of postage stamps. It was at her suggestion that Fouquet introduced the familiar "post-paid letters" by the decree of the 8th August 1653. This forerunner of the post-paid stamp does not detract from the important work of Sir Rowland Hill, who appears in postal history as the founder of the modern postal service.

Dr. Moschkau also exhibited for the first time his advanced contrast collection on the Franco-German war of 1870/71. On the German side, this illustrated the development from the North German Postal Region to the German Empire by means of stamps and field post items, and on the French side it illustrated the changes in post from the Empire to the Republic in terms of stamps, field post, balloon letters and pigeon-post dispatches (see souvenir prospectus for this collection).

This contrast collection shows the scientific acumen with which Dr. Moschkau collected, and at the same time documents the unique stature of this pioneer of philately. It is thus no wonder that Moschkau's collections were highly praised in the local Viennese press and were celebrated as the highlight of the entire exhibition. Indeed, wrote the local press, to Dr. Moschkau belongs the honour of raising stamp collecting to the level of a science.

However his sojourn in the old imperial city on the Danube, then one of the leading centres of philately, was only of short duration. An old liver complaint (see his postcard of 29th April 1878) compelled him to return in 1882 to his home in Oberlausitz, where he removed with his:

Museum of the History of Oybin founded in 1879, in the Hall of Knights of the old town and took up his residence in the space available. The philatelist Dr. Moschkau made his home in this splendid romantic castle, to cure his serious liver ailment.

However, his life as a philatelist was not interrupted, so that he soon resumed the editorship of Der Philatelist, the society journal of the International Philatelic Society in Dresden. Moreover he undertook an extensive correspondence with philatelists all over the world, as the covers shown in the Appendix illustrate. In 1883 he took on responsibility for the Society magazine

Germania – a general German philatelic journal - from the Frankfurt Society for Philately, so as to start a new type of scientific periodical. The aim was to make it the first German magazine for stamp collectors actually edited by a collector, as Dr. Moschkau explained in issue N°. 1. Furthermore, the new periodical was intended to build up the scientific side of philately as vigorously as possible and at the same time to wage war against the dishonest elements that were exploiting collectors. In spite of this impressive editorial programme, response to the new journal was so slight that Germania had to cease publication after the appearance of N°12 of its first volume. Thus, the offer by his friend Louis Senf of the managing acting editorship of the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal [Illustrated Postage Stamp Journal] was very welcome to Dr. Moschkau. He tackled this part with enthusiasm and verve, and was responsible for the appearance of the IBJ from N°121 of Volume XI, 1884, onwards. He carried on till N°13 of Volume XIV, when he became editor and contributor. However, he acted as principal editor till the end of Volume XIV. At the same time he was chief editor of E. Heitmann's Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung [Illustrated Stamp Journal] up to and including N°3 of Volume V, dated 1st February 1892.

Dr. Moschkau did not want for public recognition of his services in developing and promoting the new philately as a coming special branch of historical science. He was the holder of:

Diploma of the Société Française de Timbrologie, Paris

Mastership of the Free German Academy for Science, Arts and General Culture in Goethe's home at Frankfurt-am-Main and honorary membership of philatelic societies in Germany and abroad, the records of which, as far as we have them, are given in the Appendix.

Nor were official honours lacking for Dr. Moschkau. The title of:

Royal Saxon Commission Councillor

was bestowed on him, and he was awarded the Wettin medal, accompanied by a gracious private letter.

Dr. Moschkau was:

Knight of the Franz Josephus Austrian Imperial Family order
and

Knight of the Holy Stanislaus Russian Imperial Family order

Even during his lifetime Dr. Moschkau ranked as “The Chief of the German Philatelists”, as Gustav Reitz Edler von Bollheim, Chairman of the Vienna Philatelic Club wrote in his biography in the year 1882, as well as a pioneer of systematic and historical philately. He wears the crown of being the driving force in the springtime of philately. His systematic and scientific labours raised philately to the level of a serious branch of study for the history of posts and commerce and are the foundations for his underlying posthumous fame. The first and one of the greatest scientific philatelists from the Springtime of philately.

Dr. Otto Carl Alfred Moschkau closed his eyes for ever on the 27th May 1912. A truly great and noble person ended his earthly existence, honoured and unforgotten by the great fellowship of philatelists all over the world.

May his memory be revered.

Obituary

The obituary of the old master of philately Dr. Alfred Moschkau in Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal N°13 of the 6th July 1912 exactly expresses the great loss suffered by philately. Its finale reads: We do not wish to end this obituary without again making plain that the whole of philately has a great deal for which to thank the deceased, and expressing the hope that living philatelists, especially the many belonging to the younger generation, will devote the same tenacity and enthusiasm as Alfred Moschkau showed his whole life long.

(Joseph Kroger, Editor)

Dr. Moschkau in the Judgment of his Co-workers

Superior Provincial Court President Dr. Carl Lindenberg (1850-1928) writes as follows about Dr. Alfred Moschkau in his article “From Bygone Days” in Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal N°11 of the 1st June 1913:

...of course I only collected stamps and covers, and paid no attention to either watermarks or perforations on the stamps. Both characteristics, now in vogue with every half-way intelligent collector, were then as good as unknown. Perforations only began to play a part in Germany towards the end of the Sixties, and the first accurate studies of watermarks were published some years later. Dr. Moschkau's contributions in these respects were very great. Like so much else that we owe to this old-established philatelist, they are now almost forgotten. He and Treichel truly were the pathfinders in the field of the scientific treatment of philately in Germany.

Those of us who struggled for so long in darkness feel eternal gratitude to him who first caused a ray of light to penetrate our gloom. Today, when we are working with recognised concepts, established principles and fixed terminology, it is hard to retain any idea of how philately developed. It is more than time for a comprehensive history of philately, especially of philately in Germany.

End Piece

According to the personal recollections of his nephew, Dr. Rudolf Moschkau, who has himself since died, his widow exchanged his stamp collection with a Zittau coal merchant for house coal during the inflation after the First World War. From there the collection passed into the hands of a Zittau stamp dealer, who broke it up and put it on sale. The remnant of the collection, some 60 sheets, was rescued by a fervent philatelist, who later bequeathed it to the DDR Cultural League in Zittau. On the other hand, the historic Wettin collection of old manuscripts, mandates, pre-philatelic letters and pictures remained intact. It was acquired by the Zittau Museums Union as early as 1912, and was handed over to the Zittau City Museum for careful preservation and archiving.

4. ALFRED MOSCHKAU AND THE 1st LEIPZIG

STAMP CATALOGUE OF THE YEAR 1871

A contribution from Dr. Cerutti, Milan

Biographers have gladly undertaken to draw the attention of the philatelic world to the meritorious work of Dr. Alfred Moschkau, the founder of scientific philately and the world's first great philatelist. His magnificent collection was so important that it could serve as the basis for one of the first stamp catalogues in the world. Moschkau made the acquaintance of Gustav Bauschke, a well-known Leipzig stamp dealer, who he told about his then very extensive stamp collection. Using the Moschkau collection and an anagram of his own name, Bauschke then put out the first Schaubek Alben, which was in great demand amongst collectors from the start.

In the year 1871 the Katalog aller seit dem Jahre 1840 bis auf die neueste Zeit ausgegebenen Briefmarken. Nach der Alfred Moschkau'schen Sammlung bearbeitet und herausgegeben von G. Schaubek. [Catalogue of all stamps issued from the year 1840 to the present day. Based on the Alfred Moschkau collection and edited by G. Schaubek] appeared in Leipzig. According to this catalogue, Moschkau's collection must have included great rarities, entires as well as stamps. We can find what was missing from the catalogue by comparing it with present-day ones. For example, Mauritius begins in the 1871 catalogue with the issue of 1856/57, and gaps are to be found principally in the old German stamps. On the other hand, the stamps of the former German states are present practically in their entirety, as the entries in the catalogue show. Moschkau did not only collect one specimen of every stamp, he also took into account variations in colour, watermarks, etc., or Schaubek's catalogue would not mention them. Schaubek remarks in the preface that he placed particular stress on details of the year of issue, and careful separation of what had been looked on as slight fluctuations but were in fact different issues, often to be distinguished by differences in the watermark. The Alfred Moschkau collection currently one of the most extensive and important in Germany served the editor as an outstanding aid. In view of the early state of philately, it was a stunning achievement to bring such a collection together.

It is no longer surprising to find a catalogue of the year 1871 based on a private collection. There was hardly any cooperation between postal authorities and collectors' groups, especially not overseas. What could a catalogue editor turn to, if not to an important private collection?

Now let us take a look at the catalogue of 1871, which is in the possession of the author of these lines. Even purely externally it can only be viewed with emotion. It has an octavo format, and includes 94 pages, with two extra ones for the stamps issued whilst it was being printed. This total of 96 pages illustrates not only the stamps of the entire world but also entires, so that the numbering is slightly different from that used in present-day catalogues for stamps alone. For example, under Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, N^o1 is the 1 Kr yellow, N^o2 the 1 Kr orange, N^{os}7-10 are the famous newspaper periodical stamps (Mercuries), N^{os}25 and 26 the 1 Kr light grey and greyish-lilac of 1861, then the entires for 1861 follow as N^{os}27 to 34, and so on.

The prices are given in silver groschen and half-groschen, which is surprising since the place of publication, Leipzig, lay within the region of the Saxon currency (new groschen).

The overvaluation of the foreign stamps is very noticeable. It is probably explicable by the fact that stamps were difficult to obtain from overseas. Stamp N^o1 from Corrientes (today a province of Argentina), for example, is quoted in the catalogue at 50 silver groschen and the other Corrientes stamps at 40 silver groschen each, with the pink one not included. On the other hand, the Oldenburg stamp N^o1 is given at 10 silver groschen, N^o5 at 15 silver groschen, the Austrian 1858 newspaper stamp, the blue 1 Kr, at 1½ silver groschen, and the 18 Kr from the North German Postal zone at 1 silver groschen. This overpricing of foreign stamps went on to the beginning of the present century, as the author of these lines found when he began to buy stamps as an eager schoolboy. He obtained many South American and Australian stamps via his father's business, and these were fairly snatched out of his hands by his classmates in exchange for old German stamps.

The office of the Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung [German Stamp Journal] in Dresden sold stamps at these prices "only as authentic and perfect examples". The mention of authenticity shows that forgeries were about even then. Stamps which the Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung could not supply right away had no price given in the catalogue, and this happened very often, particularly in the case of foreign stamps.

The stamp countries are arranged in ABC order. Thus Basle for example appears under "B", Neuenberg under "N", Winterthur under "W", and so on.

All in all, the catalogue reflects a long-lost period of early philately, so that it can be looked on as a philatelic and bibliographical jewel. However, it could never have been printed had Moschkau not built up such an extensive collection.

5. FROM THE "SOCIETY OF GERMAN PHILATELISTS"

IN DRESDEN – 1871

Conditions for membership and Invitation to 1st General Meeting

The President of the Society, Dr. Alfred Moschkau, gave a humorous welcome to new members of the Society of German Philatelists, as we may read in Vertraulichen

Mitteilungen [Confidential Communications], N°1 for the year 1872: New entrants are welcomed with open arms, those still hesitating are eyed askance, and later comers must feel honoured if they are let in after imploring!

Invitation to the 1st General Meeting of the Society of German Philatelists, held in Dresden on the 14th July 1872, from the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler [Magazine for Stamp Collectors], N°2/71. Editor and publisher Dr. Alfred Moschkau, Oybin. (See page 28 of the original for the illustration.)

The first General Meeting of the Society of German Philatelists will be held at Hempel's Restaurant, Old Market, Dresden, on the 14th July from 11 am onwards.

Agenda:

- 1) Presentation of annual report
- 2) Reading of society accounts
- 3) Nomination of honorary members
- 4) Motions proposed, see Confidential Communications, N°s1, 2, 3
- 5) Election of new officials
- 6) Delivery of lectures

Members of the Society, and anyone interested in its aims, are earnestly requested to favour this meeting with their attendance

The Committee of the Society

Alf. Moschkau, President, Oybin. Law student A. Treichel, Vice-President, Berlin

Dr. Med. Th. Arldt, Secretary, Dresden

NB At the conclusion of the Agenda it is hoped to take lunch together and if possible make a short excursion through the attractive surroundings of Dresden. Gentlemen who wish to give talks are asked to get in touch with one of the undersigned.

6. REPORT ON THE "1st GERMAN PHILATELISTS' DAY"

ON THE 14th JULY 1872 IN DRESDEN

The idea of a Philatelists' Day occurred to Commission Councillor Dr. Alfred Moschkau when he invited the members of his Society of German Philatelists to the first General Meeting in Hempel's Restaurant in the Old market at Dresden on the 14th July 1872 from 11am onwards, and invited anyone interested in the aims of the Society to favour the meeting with their attendance.

Unfortunately attendance at this open General Meeting was poorer than even the blackest pessimist could have foreseen. It is amazing to read the words in which Society President Moschkau himself depicts the course of this day: As decided, the meeting was called in Dresden, at Hempel's restaurant in the Old Market, a private room was reserved, and the President arrived punctually with the minutes and accounts. The table had been laid for about 50 participants. However neither the restaurateur nor the President had reckoned with our friends the philatelists. Of the room's two windows, one was occupied by the President, the other by the head waiter. Every man, young or old, who crossed the Old market in the direction of Hempel's was greeted with silent but heartfelt pleasure as at last "a philatelist", a hand was ready to be extended to every passer-by, and the lips were open to give him a hearty welcome. From minute to minute, quarter to quarter, the hands crept round the dial of the clock on Holy Cross Church at length the head waiter disappeared from the window and the room itself with a look of pity, and the President began to sweat with anxiety as he faced the bitter disillusionment about the level of interest he had assumed to exist. Then, more than an hour after the meeting should have begun he opened the meeting-room, and like a bird of good fortune appeared a friend in need, Herr Albrecht from Berlin, to help to bear the disappointment. His rail connection had prevented him from getting there earlier. Since none of the Dresden members had felt obliged to turn up, not even the Secretary or Treasurer, the two of us went on in friendship and harmony to elect a new Committee, go through the agenda, give each other advice, admonish the bad "philatelists", drew up plans and castles in the air for the future of philately, then sitting together at a festive board declared the "festival" open, drank the health of the Society and the subject, and went together on the "festival boat" for a trip to Loschwitz. And the end of this story? We separated towards evening in the consciousness of having done our duty and each gained a friend. The restaurant owner let us off paying for the room, "on account of our misfortune", and the President proposed that such "days" should not be repeated till further notice, with the esteemed member signifying his approval in writing as required by our statutes. However, the society founder's original intention of advancing philately by personal contact did not look very hopeful.

7. DR. ALFRED MOSCHKAU AS AUTHOR

IN THE PHILATELIC PRESS

7.1 Opinion of Victor Suppantschitsch, Graz

The philatelic literature expert Victor Suppantschitsch, born in Laibach on the 31st October 1838, died in Graz whilst President of the Senate on the 2nd March 1919, wrote as follows of Dr. Alfred Moschkau:

...the most important phenomenon in the field of German philatelic literature.
which documents his premier position as an author.

Victor Suppantschitsch was entitled to make this evaluation, since during his lifetime he owned the largest private philatelic library, built up over the period from 1861 to 1900. It included:

- 1800 books and separate monographs on postage stamps
- 3,037 complete volumes of philatelic journals, with over 30,000 individual issues

His published catalogue:

Bibliography of the Entire German Philatelic Literature... has never been equalled to date.

The next page gives an original reproduction of an article on: Dr. Moschkau's Deutsches Briefmarken-Album from the periodical Wiener Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung [Vienna Illustrated Postage Stamp Journal] of the 15th December 1876, which is a splendid witness to the creative force of the producer and editor.

8. DR. ALFRED MOSCHKAU AND PHILATELY

Achievements and Chronology

8.1 Dr. Moschkau as Editor

- 1869 First contribution as author in the specialist press
- 1870 Editor of the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung [German Postage Stamp Journal] founded in Dresden by G. Bauschke and A. Zschiesche. Gave this up in October 1871 to devote himself to a specialist magazine of his own.
- 1871 From July on, editor of his own journal, with the title A. Moschkau's Magazine für den Markensammler [A. Moschkau's Magazine for the Stamp Collector] - Organ for all those interested in philately. The magazine appeared until June 1872.
- 1874 On the 1st January appeared the first number of Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal [Illustrated Postage Stamp Journal], from the firm of Louis Senf, Leipzig, with the collaboration of Alfred Moschkau. The preface to the new journal was written by Alfred Moschkau under the title Good Luck!.
- 1876 Editor responsible for Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal from N°25 of Volume V to N°90 of Volume VIII on the 1st June 1881.
- 1881 On the 1st July, he took on the editorship of the Viennese Weltpost [World Post] produced by the firm of Siegmund Friedl, Vienna. He left this post as early as N°10 of the 1882 volume.
- 1883 Publisher of the Society journal Germania - General German philatelic journal – for the Frankfurt Philatelic Society. However this ceased to appear on the 20th December 1883 after 12 numbers.
- 1884 Again became editor of the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal, from N°121 of Volume XI. He was Managing editor up to N°13 of Volume XIV, and after this was only Chief editor, the Managing editorship being transferred to the firm of Louis Senf from N°14 onwards. He gave up the editorship completely at the end of the year 1887.
- 1888 From the 1st April he became Chief Editor of the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung [Illustrated Stamp Magazine] founded by E. Heitmann on the 1st January 1888. Remained in this position until N°3 of Volume 5, dated the 1st February 1892.

8.2 Dr. Moschkau as Author

Editor and author of the Philatelistische Bibliothek [Philatelic Library Handbooks].

Volume 1

- 1871 Die Wasserzeichen auf Briefmarken, Couverts, Postkarten etc. [Watermarks on Stamps, Covers, Postcards, etc.]
Includes a Geschichte der Briefmarken und des Briefmarkensammelwesens (Philatelie) [History of Stamps and Stamp Collecting (Philately)]. Appeared in a total of 4 editions. The first German work on watermarks as a protection for philatelists against forgeries.

Volume 2

- 1875 Handbuch für Essais-Sammler [Handbook for Proof Collectors]
Lists of all known official proofs and postal essays.

Volume 3

- 1876 Handbuch für Postmarken-Sammler [Handbook for Postmark Collectors]
Illustrated catalogue of all postage stamps, covers and postal wrappers issued from 1653 to December 1875, with many explanatory notes, reports on forgeries and new printings, with 2000 pictures of stamps. Second enlarged and corrected edition of the 1874 Catalogue.
Up to the turn of the century appeared altogether 7 editions, which were constantly supplemented and revised and from which later, the greatly enlarged Senf Katalog developed.

Volume 4

- 1879 Zur Geschichte der Philatelie [On The History of Philately]
Collected contributions on the history of postage stamps and philately.
With Portraits and illustrations.

Frau von Longueville, inventor of the postage stamp – Sir Rowland Hill, founder of the postage stamp system – Dr. Heinrich von Stephan, Postmaster-General of the German Empire – Prince William of Prussia – Princely philatelist - Who actually collects stamps? – Reminiscences – Stamps at the Vienna World Exhibition – The Covers of Sardinia and their Forgeries – A Curiosity from New Brunswick – “The Connell Stamps” – Collecting postal stationery - Collecting Cancellations - The Stamps of the Paris Commune – American Post Office Paper Money – Chinese Covers – The Local Postage Stamps of Russia – Detecting Forgeries – Forgeries: I: Basle Dove – II: Naples 1860 with the Cross of Savoy – III: Cover with the issue of 1856 from Mecklenburg-Schwerin – IV: 1st Philippines issue. 8.3 Dr. Moschkau as a Philatelist

Editor and compiler of stamp albums and catalogues

- 1871 Catalogue of all Postage Stamps Issued from the Year 1840 to the most recent Times
Based on the Alfred Moschkau collection, compiled and edited by G. Schaubek.
Prices given relate only to genuine examples in fine condition, from the offices of the Deutschen Briefmarken-Zeitung in Dresden. Leipzig 1871.
- 1874 Catalogue of all Postage Stamps, Covers, Postcards, Postal Wrappers and Local Stamps of all Countries Issued from 1818 to April 1874
This was the first comprehensive German catalogue for all specialities in philately, and thus the prototype and precursor of all the stamp catalogues that appeared later.
- 1874 Schaubek-Alben in 2 Volumes a) For Stamps b) For Postal Stationery Developed from and based on the national collections of Dr. Alfred Moschkau.
The album for postal stationery was particularly important, since it was the first collectors' handbook of the type. It consisted of loose sheets of cardboard with a border and a decorated space for the name of the country, which were generally quite empty and could be kept in a portfolio
- 1876 Deutsches Briefmarken-Alben. By Dr. Alfred Moschkau.
The new, extended and improved edition is beyond doubt the peak of the then development of stamp albums. As well as the greatest possible clearness of arrangement for the individual stamp countries, the various sheets give the coats of arms of these countries with outstanding detail and precision. There is also a short dictionary combined with a luxurious make-up, which go to make this edition a gem amongst stamp albums.
- 1879 Dr Alfred Moschkau's Permanent-Album für Postmarken
Was also particularly designed to take uncut postcards, postal orders, covers, parcel labels etc. With a precise guide "Please take care in using this Permanent-Album".
- The Permanent-Album was followed in 1896 by Hugo Krötzsch's Illustrierter ausführlicher Katalog über deutsche Postfreimarken mit Bekanntgabe der Auflagenmengen, Restbeständen, ... auf der Grundlage des anerkannt vorzüglichen Permanent-Album der Postfreimarken. [Detailed Illustrated Catalogue of German Postage Stamps with Particulars of Size of Issue, Remainders, ... based on the well-known excellent Permanent-Album for Postage Stamps]. With notes on prices.

8.4 Dr. Moschkau as Exhibitor – Stamp Tester – Society Founder

- 1870 International Exhibition of his extensive collection of stamps at the “Geological Society” Dresden, to give the members a new angle on the countries of the world.
- 1871 1st Public Stamp Exhibition of his collection in Dresden in aid of the field postal services during the Franco-German War of 1870/71.
At that time the collection included over 5,000 stamps and was outstanding for its completeness, since it only lacked 5 stamps of all the known issues of the period.
- 1871 Setting up the First Stamp Testing Service in Germany
Testing was free, for return postage only. Extensive use was made of this service, in each of the years 1874 and 1875 over 400 philatelists turned to it. In the long run he could not sustain this heavy work load, particularly in view of his failing state of health and the loss of a lawsuit against a forger, so that he announced the end of his testing service in the Allgemeiner Anzeiger (General Reporter) – a supplement to the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal – on the 1st May 1877.
- 1871 Foundation of the “German Philatelists’ Society” in Dresden on the 10th May 1871, along with A. Treichel and Dr. Arldt. The first President was Dr. Alfred Moschkau, who also produced and edited the Vertraulichen Mitteilungen [Confidential Communications].
Although the Society only lasted a few years, it was the model for all those founded later in Germany and the German – speaking world.
- 1877 Foundation of the “International Philatelic Society” in Dresden with the collaboration of Alfred Moschkau. The Society organ, Der Philatelist, for which he was the editor without interruption to 1894. Thereafter, he was a regular contributor to the magazine.
The Society quickly gained international recognition and had Sections throughout the German-speaking world and abroad.
- 1881 First Secretary of the 1st Open Exhibition of the Postage Stamps of All Countries, the now world-famous Vienna International Postage Stamp Exhibition, WIPA, held in Vienna from the 13th to 20th November 1881.
Dr. Moschkau himself showed a number of postal-historical memorabilia, as well as, for the first time, his contrast collection on the Franco-German war of 1870/71. This showed the scientific acumen with which Dr. Moschkau collected, and documents the unique greatness of this pioneer of philately. His collections were highly praised in the Viennese local press, and celebrated as the high point of the entire exhibition. Indeed, wrote the local press: to Dr. Moschkau belongs the credit of having raised stamp collecting to a science (see the Introduction and Souvenir Prospectus to this contrast collection at the first WIPA in Vienna 1881).

9. HONOURS FOR THE PIONEER OF GERMAN PHILATELY

Dr. Phil. ALFRED MOSCHKAU

The idea of organising a group of philatelists to promote personal contacts and the exchange of ideas and to arrange meetings is as old as philately itself. One of the first attempts to form such a group was made by the Head of German philatelists, Dr Alfred Moschkau, when he founded the Society of German Philatelists in Dresden on the 1st May 1871 along with A. Treichel and Dr. Arldt. He was its first President, and invited the members and anyone else interested to attend the first general meeting at Hempel's restaurant in Dresden on the 14th July 1872. Although only one philatelist turned up, from Berlin, this was the basis for future Philatelic Days. They took place in 1889 in Mainz, 1890 in Frankfurt-am-Main, 1891 in Dresden, 1892 in Prague, 1893 in Berlin, 1894 in Kiel, 1895 in Mannheim and 1896 in Cologne in connection with the foundation of the [League of German and Austrian Philatelic Societies] as is shown by the card reproduced below, sent to Dr. Moschkau by his friend E. Plotz, Committee member and Librarian of the Internationale Philatelisten-Verein [International Philatelic Society] in Dresden. To round off this event, all participants took a steamer ride on the Rhine, when ship's post had a special cancellation for them. Dr. Moschkau could not take part in the Cologne meeting because of his illness, as is also shown by the greetings from later Philatelic Days, a selection of which we print in the appendix.

Bundes Deutscher und Österreichischer Philatelistenverein

Dr. Moschkau, the Head of German philately, died in Oybin in 1912 after a long and severe illness, so that the year 1987 is the 75th anniversary of his death. This date will be the occasion for the to honour the memory of this champion of the community of ideas amongst all philatelists. This will be done by the issue of a special stamp for the Day of the Stamp 1987, special cancellations, and a memorial postcard. The following suggestions and designs have been put forward by the two authors.

10. Dr. ALFRED MOSCHKAU AND SCIENCE

Homeopathic Doctor, Student and Author on Local History

The biography of Dr. Moschkau as a pioneer of philately would be incomplete if we ignored his other activities. For instance, he carried on an intensive correspondence with the great men of his time, e.g. Charles Darwin, Ernst Haeckel, et al.

In the year 1875 he followed a call to become a teacher at the Koch Institute for Natural Medicine in Dresden, as he was an enthusiastic champion of the teachings of Samuel Hahnemann. His patron, the Russian Count Galitzin, appointed him as his personal homeopathic consultant, on the 26th November 1875. To propagate his ideas on a natural life-style and therapeutics, he issued a popular-science journal Der Ärztliche Hausfreund [The Home Medical Companion] from 1876 onwards, and this homeopathic magazine became very popular amongst the people of Saxony.

For decades Dr. Moschkau was one of the few students of and writers on local history in Oberlausitz. The unique breadth of his interests is revealed by his writings on Oybin, on the knights' and robbers' castles of Oberlausitz, the High Church, the tombstones on the soldiers' graves of 1813 in Oberlausitz, on Wehlen, and by his 1872 Guide to Oberlausitz.

Local history museum in the old Knight's Castle on the Oybin mountain. Founded in the year 1879 by Dr. Moschkau. He was the owner and Director of this until his death. A view of the exhibition hall before rearrangement and remodelling in 1912.

From 1876 on he edited the local-history magazine Saxonia, from 1879 the tourist paper Oywina, and from 1884-1889 the magazine Lausatia. In 1888 he founded the Gebirgsfreunde [Friend of the Mountains] and edited it for two years. For some years from 1893 he was co-editor of the magazine Aus deutschen Bergen [From German Mountains]. From 1898 to 1901 he was editor of the history paper Aus der Heimat [From the Homeland], and from 1907 to 1911 of the Blätter für heimatkundliche Geschichte [Leaves on Local History], the last two were supplements to daily papers, whereas all the others were independent magazines.

Dr. Moschkau was an honorary member of the Oybin and Jonsdorf Mountaineering Society, a member of the Oberlausitz Scientific Society and the Globus natural history society of Zittau. He edited the Archiv für die Geschichte des Oybin [Archive for the History of Oybin].

As a collector of the relics of the historical past of Oberlausitz, he founded the Museum for the History of Oybin. In the year 1883 he moved his collected treasures to the Knights' Hall in the castle. This museum was privately owned, and was not taken over by the town of Zittau until the year 1937. In founding this museum, Dr. Moschkau earned the undying gratitude of his Oberlausitz homeland, which today finds suitable expression in honouring his person.

CHRISTOPH OTTO MULLER

We owe the Munich Philatelic Library, an establishment that has made our German philately the envy of the whole world, to the initiative of one man: Christoph Otto Muller, who left us on the 7th May 1967 as quietly as he had lived.

Born in Munich in 1894, he spent his early years in Bad Reichenhall, and went to grammar school in Munich, where he first became interested in collecting. On leaving school he found a job with the City of Munich: he devoted his free time more and more to philately, and soon took up the collection of philatelic literature. His society, the distinguished "Tauma", soon appointed him to take charge of its already extensive library; this was gradually united with other society and private libraries owing to the far-sighted initiatives of Christoph Otto Muller; Zinckgraf's outstanding collection of literature may be mentioned as one of its richest treasures. The Munich City Library finally made space available for these treasures, to which Christoph Otto Muller selflessly added his own, so that the famous Munich Philatelic Library was born. A logical development was for Muller, a Munich city official, to take over as honorary director of the library, and he was in post from 1938 to 1946. It was however fortunate for both the library and for Muller that this position was made official in 1947, so that his tastes and his career could be united.

The League of German Philatelists, also at this time rising again from the ruins of the post-war period, recognised the value of this pioneering work, and so it was an obvious step to elect Christoph Otto Muller to the chair of the "Philatelic Literature" section of the society at its 1951 meeting in Munich. Another priceless and valuable creation owed to his initiative is "Literatur-Nachrichten", in which he gave abstracts from well over 100 periodicals and book reviews from all over the world. Our well-remembered Carl A. Duda, publisher and principal editor of SAMMLER-DIENST, gave him all possible support and at a later date also made himself responsible for the technical production. No wonder that Christoph Otto Muller mourned him as a friend when he left us in October 1958.

The many honours by which the thanks of the philatelic world were expressed to Christoph Otto Muller can only be hinted at. However we can hardly thank him better than by continuing to serve his ideas: to maintain philatelic literature as the lifeblood of philately and introduce as many collectors as possible especially young ones, to it.

SURVEY OF THE ITALIAN PHILATELIC PRESS

In recent years philately has been studied on a large scale purely and simply as a pastime: stamps are studied more and more widely, from the viewpoints of technology, iconography, history and postal usage.

The boom in Italian publications, as might have been foreseen, broke out at ITALIA 76, where the philatelic literature class recorded about forty handbooks and monographs, two new periodicals, Il Nuovo Corriere Filatelico and L'Osservatore Filatelico (this latter merged in March with the established Filatelica Italiana), plus of course the catalogues from such established firms as Gloria, Orlandini, Sassone, S.C.O.T., and the more recent I.C.E.F. Society of Milan. It should be noted that these are all publications that have appeared during the last few years, and do not include publications registered at the major Milan exhibition.

I shall review by sections both the handbooks and monographs, and the periodical publications currently in existence.

Former Italian States

This is one of the most intensively studied subject, thanks to the outstanding material collected and made available.

For Lombardy-Venetia there appeared last year the second edition of Cancellations of Lombardy-Venetia and the Austrian Levant, by Raffaele Alianello, enlarged by the inclusion of the VIth Austrian issue, which was current in the Levant from 1867 to 1883, with values in soldi instead of Kreuzer. Also in 1976 were published the monographs by Paolo Fabrizio & Adriano Cattani, Cancellations of Venetia and Friuli (1866-78), of Franco Burini, Collector's stamps in Friuli (1868-1911) and their valuation. Also, there was the second edition of the Catalogue of Sardo-Italian cancellations by the post offices of Lombardy 1859-1863, with brief notes on the postal service of the period by Ettore Faraone – of particular importance from the postal history standpoint was the inclusion of cancellations on post-free letters. Recently there have appeared the large-scale monographs by Paolo Vollmeier, Pre-philatelic stamps of Milan from the beginning to 1850, and Antonio Marzari Postal history of Venice from its origins to the proclamation of the Kingdom of Lombardy-Venetia". A noteworthy adjunct to the subject is the first volume of a series of four which Umberto del Bianco has dedicated to Austrian-Lloyd and the maritime cancellations of Austro-Hungary. The first part of the volume deals with the history of postal services on the steamships in service on the Adriatic, Lakes Maggiore and Garda, and on the Po. There is also General catalogue of stamps of the old Italian States, by Paolo de Magistris, an enlarged reprint of his father's catalogue issued in Genoa in 1947. Monographs with a more limited subject matter include the Postal history of Vitoriese, by Ennio Tranchini & Fiorella Foti, Cenneda Saravalle, Vittorio-Veneto: historical notes and postal documents, Giulio Rubini History of the free post during the Napoleonic occupation of Friuli, Post of Abbiategrosso by Mario Comininci, Posts at Bergamo by Fernando Rea, Postal history of Montagnana and its territory by Angelo Ferrazzi, and Postal services on the large Italian Lakes: history, cancellations and valuations by Ercolano Gandini.

The Kingdom of Sardinia is also well covered. Amongst the works available at least in part are: one by Giuseppe Fontana: Sardinian States. Stamps and postal cancellations, 1851-1863. This has beautiful coloured reproductions and classifies the offices on the basis of postal divisions and not of administrative divisions which were too likely to change. Then there is Renato Pintus History of communications and postal services on the island of Sardinia from their origins to 1851, and Arnoldo Omodeo Stamps with cursive lettering in use in the kingdom of Sardinia from 1st January 1838.

The Papal field has been widely studied. To the three volumes of Mario Gallenga, which have already appeared by Raybaudi, devoted respectively to the stamps of Romagna, the Marche, and Umbria and Sabina, was added in 1976 the fourth volume which deals with The stamps of Lazio. This was by Italphil, but typographically was the same.

Mention should also be made of the work of Camillo Cavagnari on The embossed Postage stamps of the Papal States, which appeared recently. Of the monographs with a more restricted scope are History of Narni and the other Umbrian communes by Azelio Onofri, and Cancellations of the Province of Latina (1852-1890) and of the Province of Frosinone (1866-1890) with valuations by Mario Rasile.

On the sector of the Ducal States, the fine volume by Vittorio Mioni The postal history of the Este domains 1598-1859: catalogue of pre-philatelic stamps is outstanding; also it is impossible to ignore the following which appeared in the Fifties from the pen of Giulio Bolaffi, Catalogue of the cancellations of Modena and Salvatore Morrone & Carlo Rossi, Catalogue of the stamps and postal cancellations of the Duchy of Modena (1852-1859), and of Sardo-Italian and Italian cancellations used from 1859 to 1900 within the territorial limits of the former Duchy.

Tuscany above all is on the crest of the wave, having found authors like Filippo Bargagli Petrucci & Paolo Vollmeier who have to date got into print the first two volumes of a monumental work Monograph on Tuscan posts. The first, by Vollmeier, deals with Tuscan postage stamps to 1851; the second, from Bargagli Petrucci, deals with stamps from 1851 to 1863. The epic of the Tuscan '48 was the use of the "heart" stamps which are described by Marcello Catania in The "heart" of Florence at Curtatone and Montanara.

On the other hand there have been few studies on Naples and Sicily in recent years. There have been volumes from Vito Mancini Postal history of the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies and Gaetano Russo, Stamps and postal cancellations of the kingdom of Sicily in the period of use of the stamps of Ferdinand II. These appeared in 1970 and 1968 respectively, The Stamped papers of the Kingdom of Naples from the Bourbon restoration to the adoption of postage stamps (1815-1858) and their valuation by Giovanni Chiavarello, appeared in Naples in 1971 in a numbered edition of 500 copies. Other publications are Catalogue of the cancellations of Sicily by Luigi Sassone, and the monograph by Lorenzo Previteri, Institution of post offices in the Kingdom of Sicily. The Sicilian revolution of 1820-21. Valuation of stamps from the offices abolished in 1821, also the “booklets” by Nino Aquila Sicily 1858-letters sent out on the first day of use of the stamps of Ferdinand of Bourbon, and by Gaetano Panzera Mephil catalogue of the numbered Sicilian cancellations.

Italy

Last century had been studied accurately and in detail by Albino Bazzi, The stamps of Vittorio Emanuele II and Umberto I, 1861-1900. The likenesses of the Gentleman King have been researched by Gian Francesco Giaquili Ferrini in The iconography of Vittorio Emanuele II on stamps (1871-1877) published in 1953 on the occasion of the International Philatelic Exhibition in Lisbon. Franco Filanci has made a critical study of The first issue of the Kingdom of Italy. Dino Platone has studied The De La Rue issues for the Kingdom of Italy, and Piero Damilano The 20 cent overprint of 1st January 1865. Finally, mention should be made of a work which includes all the postage stamps of Italy, namely the handbook by Roy A. Dehn, Italian stamps: a Handbook for Collectors since the section on the issues from the kingdom of Italy contains accurate, not readily obtainable information.

From the period of the interregnum and the Italian Socialist Republic come two paper back volumes Postage permitted 1943-1946 and Emergency markings 1943-1947 by Fermo Casarico, both published by the Milanese Philatelic Circle, The Atlantic base at Bordeaux by Renzo Bernardelli and the works by Cesco Giannetto Stamps of the Allied Military Occupation in Sicily 1943-1944. R.S.I. Postal history from 20 December 1943 to 31 May '45: notes on official, local, special and private issues. A year of interregnum from 8-5-45 to 8-5-46: the Italian Republic stamps and post from 8-5-45 to 31-12-48, A.M.G.V.G. – Venezia Giulia” – this latter in collaboration with Agostino Zanetti.

There are well-made studies relating to the Republican period; in the first place are the two volumes published by Sirotti and written by V. Ghisolfi, S. Pigazza, L. Sirotti & C. Sterpone The stamps of the Italian Republic 1945-1972, followed by Postal history of the Italian Republic 1945-1965 by Andrea Malvestio, and Italian postal history from 1-10-45 to 31-12-52 by Angelo Zanaria & Cesco Gianetto.

Non-official issues which nevertheless received official approval have also been studied in detail. Alfredo E Fiecchi has studied the emergency issues of 1920, Creation of a special service and private postage stamps in Milan – 1920; Mauro Lepri, the little stamp which became a commemorative for a day: A page of postal history, Il Duce at Leghorn 11th May 1930; Egidio Errani & Cesco Giannetto, Local service and delivery issue. Military, charity and celebratory stamps decreed by the Committees of National Liberation. Undocumented E.N.L. issues of a military, political and propaganda nature. Miscellaneous and private issues 1945-1946.

There have been many studies of cancellations, particularly those of the military post.

The itinerants have been studied by Adriano Cattani The Italian railway travelling stamps – catalogue of cancellations and their valuation and by Roy A. Dehn & Franco Filanci, Itinerant post offices of Italy (A.S.I.F. Notario, N^{os} 121, 122 and 126).

Collections have been catalogued by Giuseppe Gaggero Postal collections of the Kingdom of Italy. Catalogue of stamps and cancellations with more than 5000 valuations.

Sea routes have been dealt with by Umberto del Bianco, Italian maritime cancellations in use before 1891; there has recently been a reprint of The postal service in the military marine 1892-1920 by Ottorino Pieroni, published by the Historical Office of the Military Marine. This was a useful reprint of a work issued in a very limited edition in 1942 and almost unknown, although it was the product of painstaking research in the archives, whilst C. Balestra & A. Cecchi have studied the Postal Services in the Italian navy during the Second World War.

There are many works dealing with the military post. For the period of the First World War we may note the works of Luciano Buzzetti The military post numbers 1917-1923 and The Italian detachment in Palestine, 1917-1921 - this latter in collaboration with Silvano Sorani, and Discourse on military services in the First Great War 1915-18 – franking, stamps, post by Cesco Giannetto. Also there has been a reprint of Account of the military postal service during the 1915-1918 campaign, originally issued as a supplement to the Bollettino N°16 of 1st June 1919. For the Second World War we have List of Italian military posts 1940-1945 and Italian military post in East Africa June 1940-41 by Cesco Giannetto, and Military Post offices set up during the World War and their dispersal over various fronts by Fernando Ales.

For air mails we have Italian catalogue of aerial posts. Volume one 1846-1930 by Cherubino Cherubini & Sandro Taragni in a bilingual Italian and English edition, Italian aerophilately, Vol. 1, 1784-1940 by Fernando Corsari & Ugo de Simone, and Catalogue of Zeppelin aerogrammes for Italy, Italian Colonies, S. Marino and Vatican by Ermanno Violino. In the balloon field we may cite the monograph by Giuseppe Schenone The balloon post in Paris during the Prussian siege of 1870-71.

Italian sphere of influence

Two interesting publications on the subject of the ex-colonies have appeared in recent years: Italian Somalia 1885-1935. Cancellations and stamps. Maritime and Royal Navy by Cesco Giannetto & Mario Sismondi and Eritrea Colony. Twenty years of postal history, 1883-1903 by Paolo Bianchi

For the Occupation, mention should be made of the monograph by Giovanni Chiavarello The stamps of the Ionian Islands 1941-44 and survey of over-stamping and the sixth part of the series Stamps of Italy used abroad. Carpathos to Symi. Ship mail in the Dodecanese.

The postal and philatelic history of the world's smallest republic has been described by Alessandro Glaray & Franco Filanci: Republic of San Marino. Postal history from its origins to end of 1800. Sebastiao Amaral has carried out an in-depth study of San Marino Zeppelins – Italian voyage, presented at Serenissima 76, and Cesco Giannetto & Giorgio Gulizia have republished and brought up to date their list of Postcards, letters, covers, entires of S. Marino.

The Vatican has been the Cinderella of this field: there has not been a single noteworthy study in all the world, despite the interest in its stamps, what accounts for the indifference shown to this field of collecting?

Periodical publications

Not many journals are appearing in Italy today, although at the end of 1909 sixty-seven were recorded in the monumental Bibliography of Writings, General, Special and periodical by J. D. Bacon. [Actually E. D. Bacon.]

The oldest of the journals currently appearing is Il Collezionista published in Turin by Giulio Bolaffi since 1948: it has a circulation of about 50,000 copies and covers thematic collecting, postal history, aerophilately, cancellations and postal stationery.

Next come La Gazzetta Filatelica founded in Milan by Vincenzo Gloria in 1948; Il Filatelico a monthly from Catania dating from 1952; Vita e Valore del Collezionismo, by Cesco Giannetto, which has appeared in two series from 1955 to 1960 and from 1967 to date; Il Bajocco, the official organ of the Philatelic-Numismatic Circle of Rimini, founded in 1955 – a review limited in scope and coverage. From 1960 there appeared in Turin the Notiziario dell' A.S.I.F. – today the organ of three important organizations. The editor-in-chief is Andrea Malvestio 160 numbers have appeared to date.

Two years later the dynamic Luigi Raybaudi Massilia founded Filatelica in Rome. In 1975 this passed into the hands of Aldo Ausilio of Padua; a technical review with sumptuous typography, it has lost some of its previous splendour in recent years.

Turin in 1969 saw the birth of F & N, newspaper of E.N.A.L., the National Union of Philatelic and Numismatic Associations. It has always been edited by its founder, Carlo S. Cerutti.

The official organ of the Sassone catalogues is Rivista dei Francobolli. The first number of which appeared in Rome in July/August 1970. With N°46 of July 1974, its title became Francobolli.

A philatelic event of importance was the rebirth in 1975 of Corriere Filatelico founded in Milan in January 1919 by Leopoldo Rivolta, which was distinguished from the others by having the collaboration of Diena and Fiecchi: it appeared until 1943. The second series under the title of Il Nuovo Corriere Filatelico is published in Florence under the editorship of Vito Salierno: it is bimonthly, and publishes articles on philately, aerophilately and postal history, for the most part bilingually.

Last year, a monthly on philately, numismatics, art and culture, L'Osservatore Filatelico saw the light at Cologno Monzese, just outside Milan. The publisher is Rolando Gianni.

Finally, the Summer of 1976 saw the reappearance of Cronaca Filatelica, official organ of the Unificato Catalogue, published in Naples by Paolo de Rosa. It deals in particular with modern and current stamps.

Catalogues

Quite a lot of catalogues appear every year, perhaps too many for a market which remains somewhat puzzled by the diversity of quotations between catalogue and catalogue; sometimes material is offered at above catalogue value.

We should mention for the record: the Bolaffi catalogues from Turin, in studio editions for Europe, ONU, Israel Cyprus and Gibraltar-Malta, Olympic countries, France, Liechtenstein, Switzerland Great Britain, all priced: the Sassone catalogues for Italy and the Italian-speaking countries, in studio editions and short versions, former Italian states in a deluxe edition, European Union, Israel and Europe in separate parts; the union Catalogue of the C.I.F. Society in three editions – specialist D’Urso of the I.C.E.F. Society.

An interesting initiative has come from the C.I.F. Society, the problems of the Unified Catalogue: at Riccione and San Marino on 28-29 August they are holding an International Convention for editors of stamp catalogues with the aim of “uniting the editors in an international association to facilitate the work of editors, to improve and extend relations with Postal Administrations and international philatelic organizations of collector, dealers, journalists and experts etc”. It is claimed that this will be a considerable step towards eliminating the major discrepancies between the various catalogues whilst retaining freedom of expression and opinion for the various members.

Bibliographies

Essential as working tools, bibliographies have been somewhat neglected of recent years. Since the Sixties there have been only two works by Luigi Piloni, Bibliography of Italian posts and philately (now out of print) and Il Bollettino Filatelico d’Italia. Half century of life – a bibliographical index of the homonymous Italian review: 1913-1973; and three articles by Emilio Diena published in Il Corriere Filatelico of January/February 1919, July 1925, and August 1932.

Afterwards, Vito Salierno published Italian bibliography of postal stationery (1970), Tuscan journeys (1972), Annotated philatelic and postal-historical bibliography of Lombardy and Venetia (1973); Towards a catalogue raisonné of Italian postal history (1974); Italian philatelic reviews (1974); The Italian philatelic Press (1974), AISP Library – Author Catalogue (1977).

One last consideration. Only three years ago, writing on Philatelic literature in Italy (Il Collezionista, 27th July 1974, p.22) we deplored the state into which the Italian philatelic press had fallen – low circulation and difficulty above all of selling monographs and handbooks, not to mention magazines – and concluded it would be a miracle if in the course of a few years the cost of philatelic literature had not risen in line with that recorded by the stamps in most demand. This forecast has become reality: to build up a philatelic library today is difficult and costs as much as a collection of stamps, but the information it imparts is without equal.

A GLANCE AT PHILATELIC LITERATURE IN FRANCE*byMarino Carnévalé-Mauzan

It is always difficult – even dangerous – to set one’s self up as a critic and establish the state of what has been written in whatever field, and even more so to hold forth on the value or interest of such and such a book.

The task becomes even more difficult when the field in question is not defined in an absolutely clear manner. Such is the case here. The decades long tendency to mix up philately, stamp-collecting and postal history leaves any panoramic view blurred and debatable.

This is why I have given up the term “panoramic” which is the first one I thought of when my friends Paolo Vollmeier and Vito Salierno asked me for the lines which follow and have preferred the much less constraining term “glance”. This is, I think, the only way to shelter my judgement from critics who may take my views as arbitrary or tendentious.

Thus, I comply with the overall view generally taken by collectors and look as a whole at publications in the three domains mentioned, although they can easily be differentiated*. Let us take the word ‘Philately’ (as used by the organisers of the Exhibition of Literature in Lugano) and give it this triple significance, although this really amounts to an abuse of meaning.

‘Philatelic’ literature is thus relatively flourishing in France in these days. Like most national philatelic literatures, it falls into two main categories, the periodic press and monographs. It should be mentioned, though, that there has been a profound evolution, with a rapid acceleration, over the last thirty years: the study of postage stamps, and necessarily of postal history, has tended to draw ahead in importance of philately in the strict sense, as we shall see further on.

As far as the periodical literature is concerned, we may mention, of the half-dozen French publications, the old “Eco de la Timbrologie”, whose columns are continually opened to new aspects of collecting. It had a make-over some years ago and remains a solid, fairly traditional, review in its new guise.

More recently, “Le Monde des Philatelistes” has seemed to go in systematically for original studies on the most diverse subjects. It, too, has a large number of readers and is, I believe, the only one to publish in pamphlet form the most interesting articles which would be tricky to locate in sets of the journal. the only drawback is that these pamphlets are distributed in practice by “Le Monde des Philatelistes” and by it alone. The lack of an organised network of points of sale means that these excellent little productions are slow to sell out despite their relatively limited numbers, which do not exceed 1,000 copies: only 500 of the first ones were printed! these studies cover postage stamps (the post offices of the Island of Mauritius, backing (?) of French Blues, methods of printing, Audorran issues ...) as well as cancellations, especially of the 20th century.

The third monthly with a certain impact is "Philatelie". It appears to be the organ of the house of Thiande of Paris: deliberately avoiding well-trodden or familiar paths, this journal often tackles subjects of enormous interest (military campaigns, censorship, postal disinfection, history in general). Unfortunately, polemics often dominate its one-sided and slanted articles, which show clear traces of originating in pillage of earlier works. Its columns are often filled with scandalous gossip, whilst many subjects touched on are simply ruined, which makes it impossible with the best will in the world to take subjects seriously that are dealt with in "Philatelie", and that is a great pity. More seriously still, the editorial board never quotes its sources.

It should be noted that the presentation of these three major journals is quite modest by comparison with the contemporary Italian magazines "Filatelia" and "Il Nuovo Collezionista". But as this remark applies equally to the basic works, I will deal with it further on.

Studies of the monograph type are all the rage in France, always with a tendency towards specialisation and the evocation of subjects bordering on, or scarcely involving, philately.

A limited, but steady, demand in recent years has led to the reprinting (in completely new type) of older works such as "Yuert specialist catalogue" and "Specialist Catalogue of Postal Entires" (A.C.E.P. 1975) from France and the francophone countries whose long absence has been cruelly felt, and the pure and simple reprinting in their original form of "Catalogue of Marks/Stamps" (1829), and Strowsky ("Stamps of the Great War").

The study of wartime posts has given us, amongst others, the four Deloste series covering the French side (and the Allies, even the opposite side) of the wars from 1900 to the present day, along with "Prisoner of war and civilian internment camps in France and French Africa" (1914-1920) by your humble servant.

In parallel, but on the maritime side, R. Salles has published the extraordinary series of "The French maritime post" which is a remarkable development in eight volumes of the old catalogue edited formerly by Le Graouli (not quoted in the bibliography).

However, the main effort was on the level of departmental monographs on postmarks and cancellations (and sporadically also the postal history of regions on Departments. These studies began at the end of the Second World War and by now cover more or less three-quarters of the French Departments, not counting the Conquered Departments (De Beaufond, G. Noël). The best of them is certainly that on Doubs by our colleague P. Fallot. The exact title of this work is "Postal history of the Department of Doubs" (1973); this is a revealing title which confirms the current tendency to be interested in the overall development of the Postal Service within a Department from its origins to our own day. This is an ambitious project giving real happiness to the author who was given the contract. Its precursor was L. Lenain, whose very fine work on "Post in La Drome and L'Ardeche" (1972) carried out a similar survey up to 1920.

Most of the other Departmental monographs, many of which were published by "Les Feuilles Marcophiles", stop at 1876, i.e. close to the beginning of the U.P.U. although this cut-off point is not really justified.

For old-time stamp collecting, one cannot ignore the excellent work by L. Lenain. "The post in old France" (1965), which covers the whole period before 1972 and the whole of France. Occasional supplements keep it an up to date reference work. Every other author of a monograph should nolens volens start by checking off these lists before embarking on his own catalogue.

We also owe to L. Lenain “Army posts and international postal relations from their origins to 1791”, which is also authoritative and places its author amongst the best specialists of the period called the Ancien Régime as well.

Publications have appeared here and there devoted to various aspects of postal history, possibly including a study of postmarks, and of special stamps used in a particular context – “The French forwardeds” by L. Dubus, which has just been completed by a supplement “The rural postal service” (1959) and “The purification of letters in France and Malta” (1960) by the author of these lines, “Square tax figures of France” (G. Noël), and “French newspaper stamps” by the same author. The historical aspect is generally well represented in the titles just given.

Different preoccupations are represented by the exhaustive studies of cancellations, such as “Date stamps of types 11, 12, 13, 14” (by my friend Jean Chevalier), “French mechanical cancellations (Diphila), “Date stamps on separates(?)” (Mathieu), “Provincial newspaper and printed cancellations since 1872” (Lavarack).

The “Nomenclature of French post offices” from the same author plus the “Dictionary of French post offices 1575-1904” by J. Pothion, this last a very recent publications, along with the works of L. Lenain on the Ancien Régime, are indispensable tools for anyone interested in the French postal network either as a whole or from a particular angle.

Finally – and I shall stop here on the catalogues, at the risk of omitting many of them – some extremely exact lists due especially to the pen of J. Pothion keep us informed of the items carefully brought to light annually or occasionally. They are:-

- Catalogue of grille and little figures France – cancellations
- Catalogue of line conveyors
- Catalogue of station conveyors
- Catalogue of cursives
- Catalogue of station cancellation stamps
- Catalogue of small and large figures
- Catalogue of small figures or large figures

I have certainly forgotten some. A brief introduction to the collection of these stamps is given by J. Pothion in “The French cancellation – introduction”. it is an excellent way into the material which leaves room for one (or several) more detailed studies on the relationship between Postal History and the use of cancellation stamps. Amongst the latest works of general interest, we will finally mention the very recent first part of “The Red Cross and the post” edited by the Society of Specialist Collectors on this topic. This is the first part of an encyclopaedia issued in a ring binder and consists of the catalogue al all stamps issued throughout the world since 1889 for the benefit (or in honour) of the Red Cross. The editors intend to bring this up to date every year with articles on all aspects of the relationships between the Red Cross and the post (varieties, postal entires, obliterations, messages in times of war, first days, special postcards, etc). This is an initiative which I think useful and worth calling to attention.

And to conclude this section, I am pleased to mention the excellent “Encyclopaedia of the postage stamps of France”, published by the Academy of Philately. Uncommonly luxurious in presentation, this work consists of two volumes of 599 + 847 large-format pages, and gives the bearings for up to date knowledge of French stamps from 1849 to 1853 and the way they were used: nuances of the vignettes, conditions and manner of use, postal rates for the period concerned, everything is covered. And I think it will be a long time before anyone adds any significant new information to what is assembled here, unless it relates to contemporary prepayments in cash, an aspect of the question in which the co-authors seemed to take little interest.

This is not the end of literary activity in the fields of philately, stamp collecting and French postal history.

Mention should be made of the magazines put out by various groups of collectors, starting with “La Philatelie Française”, the organ of the “French Federation of French Philatelic Societies”. It is edited by Pierre Langlois, Federal President, and has just reached its 276th monthly issue. Like the traditional journals mentioned above, it has been modernized and is open to stamp collecting, modern in general (flames?, maximaphile?).

Amongst the stamp collecting/marcophile societies, two deserve more than a passing mention. “Les feuilles marcophiles” (organ of the Stamp Collecting Union) is a model of its kind; its last quarterly issue was number 208. It is the nec plus ultra of marcophilic material. Number 200 (special issue for Arphila 1975) condenses a truly remarkable piece of documentation into 270 pages, all previously unpublished pieces.

Its younger sister is the quarterly review “Philatelic and marcophile collector”, for which our friend Dr. Camboulives is responsible, and the 34 issues published to date again contain nothing but previously unpublished material.

I have no false modesty in adding to these two magazines the “Bulletin de la Société d’Histoire Postale” that I edit, and which with very slight resources and by dint of constant effort has published 33 issues within this little-studied field. The latest issue (32/33) is devoted to communications in time of epidemics.

However, I would not like to end this rapid survey without mentioning a remarkable work from the pen of Pierre Nougaret, and which every researcher should possess: this is his magisterial “Critical bibliography of French postal history” (1970). Two volumes (the pages are not numbered but there are about 500) give 3169 brief notes on books or articles with description and evaluations. This is the first time, so far as I know, that the summarizing of magazines has been carried to the limit and that an author has accepted his responsibilities. He will save the reader in search of information a good deal of time and will avoid mistakes.

The first of the bibliographies (French bibliography of posts and philately) by E. Blanc (1949), remarkable in its day, has been rendered perfectly superfluous since the publication of this one by P. Nougaret.

This brief account nevertheless calls for a few remarks and especially this one: French publications often have a summary, even primitive, appearance. They are often Roneo’d (with outstanding exceptions such as “Encyclopaedia of the postage stamps of France” and “the Red Cross and the post”) and have negligible print runs, which makes every title a rarity, whilst the author (who generally publishes at his own expense) has to dispose of his own production. What a contrast with the magnificent Swiss and German publications and the luxury Italian magazines. This is because, as far as I know, there are no foundations such as are ready to help – with really serious publications of course – in Switzerland and Germany. I have in mind the last “notebook” (Part 1/1977) of the review “Archiv für deutsche Postgeschichte”, which is the organ of the very important Society for German Postal History. This is a very handsome publication of 240 pages, 15 in colour, entirely devoted to the history of telephone connections.

Apart from the fact that this Society appears to live in symbiosis with the Postal Museum (where it has its headquarters), it appears on reading that this publication had a grant from the Federation for the Advancement of Philately and Postal History. I do not think there is anything similar in France. This is why French authors have no choice but to publish at their own expense.

If we consider that Departmental monographs interest at most fifty or so collectors and a hundred or a hundred and fifty other people (according to the Department), we can understand why a researcher who has run off 500 copies of his paper (very exceptionally 1,000) may have to wait 10 or 20 years to dispose of them, and will rarely be tempted to do it again!

In spite of these severe judgements, I think France is by no means an under-developed country as far as what is called philatelic literature is concerned: all the same, it would be highly desirable to set up a mechanism (possibly consisting of the “producers” or a close liaison with them) which would study the circuits for information, promotion and distribution, and would support talents and researchers currently unknown. This is not a new idea. Pierre Langlois spoke to me of something similar a year or two ago, but the project does not seem to have got off the ground, which is a great pity.

Of course, the above remarks are completely personal and reflect no-one's opinion but my own.

Before taking leave of my dear readers, I shall ask them to forgive the multiple omissions which tarnish this short account (I recall that I have not mentioned either the very interesting developments by J. Legendre on free posts, nor the “Bulletin des amis du Musée Postale” which fully deserve to be mentioned here and only the limited space allotted to me is responsible for their omission.

Philatelic Literature in the Federal republic of Germany

Emil-W. Meures.

“7 percent of my expenditure on stamps on average goes to the purchase of philatelic literature, a share which is more profitable than you might think”.

These words, ascribed to the great collector Philipp Barcon La Renotière con Ferrari (1858-1917), give a thoroughly prosaic, one might almost say commercial, picture of one of the greatest collector in the history of philately, but if we replace the word “profit” by “knowledge”, they do show how much philately as a field of collecting depends on having really wide range of literary sources. Thus, philately is one of the subjects with the richest literature, and philatelic literature is nearly as old as the postage stamp itself, if we look at much older works on postal history and studies which go back to the time of the earliest messenger services. With the historical extension of our field, their contents have become absolutely vital for philatelic research.

The 7 percent expenditure by Ferrari can only represent a “dream figure” for today’s true philatelists and their yearly outlay on their hobby, but even so the position of philatelic literature in the Federal Republic of Germany is really not a bad one. The publication of philatelic literature in the Federal Republic of Germany has been favoured by the activity over 10 years of the Foundations for the promotion of Philately and Postal History, which has devoted the essential part of its resources year by year to widest range of philatelic literature, starting with the research reports of well over 1000 working and research groups of the Union of German Philatelists via the numerous individual studies produced by the New Handbook Working Group in association with the original Kohl handbook, and of which today 46 individual works exist, down to the major handbooks on for example Baden, Württemberg and Thurn and Taxis. The visible sign of this Promotion is the rubric “Produced with the support of the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and postal history eV” to be found in many publications from the Federal Republic of Germany and exhibited at the International Show of Literature in Lugano.

It may be said with truth that without this, sometimes considerable, financial support from the Foundation, much of the work shown in Lugano would still nest today as manuscripts in their authors’ desks.

A contribution from the Foundation makes possible not only their publication but also their appearance at an “accessible” price, which is perhaps more important. And today, unfortunately, the expenditure of the serious philatelist differs very much from that of a collector like Ferrari. He might well have shown his collection at all levels of exhibition and expected to get the highest awards, but he was often frustrated by a lack of knowledge of what his collection contained, since he neglected to concern himself seriously with the literature of his field of collecting, and was unfortunately in very many cases not ready to acquire knowledge and reach a better state by steady application.

The way in which the Union of German philatelists, as umbrella organization for philately in the Federal Republic of Germany, does everything possible to disseminate the essential research results on the most varied philatelic topic, and preserve them in the form of research reports, special catalogues, handbooks, monographs or similar works can be illustrated by a few examples.

The yearly Union and Philatelists' Days in the Federal Republic of Germany have been for several years extended by a day, the Working Party Day (Research and Literature, combating Forgeries and Testing, Exhibition techniques, publication work). The Working Party on Research and Literature, which is headed by the current chairman for this topic in the Union, gives the other Working Parties a detailed report of the work carried out in the past year, to which is added a lively exchange of views, which has taken the form of a lively "chat with Michel" in the last two years. Interested collectors, researchers and testers have got together with contributors and editor-in-chief to bring it up essential questions of catalogue production. It is gratifying in this connection to see the increasingly strong trend to close cooperation between the producers of the major catalogues and philatelic publishers and the Working and Research groups of the Union of German Philatelists, so that the results obtained can be integrated into the corresponding catalogues and handbooks.

"Soester Speak" is a further development of the Union of German Philatelists. It takes place at irregular intervals, roughly between 1-3 years, and gives a platform for lively exchanges between the heads of the U.G.P. Working Parties.

Obviously when it comes to setting up national and regional exhibitions of philatelic literature, the U.G.P. and its regional societies do not help merely by setting up a suitable literature class at the exhibition, but even more by giving the best possible presentation of literature in a reading room, making it possible to get hold of long-sought texts for one's own use by means of photocopies, and calling attention to the possibility of loans by the presence in many cases of the very active Hamburg Philatelic Library.

Individual authors and working groups can find in the publication NEW HANDBOOK OF PHILATELY, issued with the support of the U.G.P. and the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History, a well-organised retail outlet for the literature they produce, which by its nature will not attract a normal publisher, since it is only likely to interest a smallish circle of interested readers. This publication has already recently put out some important works, which have aroused a considerable sensation in the world of philatelic literature. Dr. Carl Richard Brühl, in collaboration with Heinz Thoma, has produced a handbook on Wurttemberg philately, of which two volumes on the Krezer period (1851-1875) are available.

A collaborative work by Dr. Hans Haferkamp and Erwin Probst, "The Thurn and Taxis Postmarks up to and after the Postage Stamp" is planned to cover three volumes, the first of which is available with the two remaining ones expected in the course of the year 1977. Mention should also be made of the long out-of-print "Kohl Handbook of the Stamps of Germany 1872-1925", which is still looked on today by serious collectors of German Stamps as the foundation of all Germany Philatelic Research.

The Foundation for the promotion of Philately and Postal History also underwrites the publication of the quarterly supplement "Philately and Postal history", a 32-page addition to PHILATELIE, the magazine of the union of German Philatelists. This is an essential source for details of new philatelic literature, and naturally depends on the research activities of the working parties of the Union of German Philatelists,

Another publication that should not be overlooked is Literatur-Nachrichten, which has been very popular for decades not only with German-speaking philatelists. It was founded by the still-remembered first head of the Munich Philatelic Library, Christoph Otto Müller, and after his retirement it was continued by Fritz Gaedecke, Berlin, the head of the Union literature section. The last volume available is that for 1974. The details of sources given in Literatur-

Nachrichten from all branches of philately are unique. Unique, because they form a source lexicon not only of national philately, but all individual topics and the whole motif philately. LN has now been taken over by the new head of the literature section Erwin L. Martner, and we should have another volume for the years 1975/76 in the foreseeable future.

Thus, anyone who wishes to emulate the great collector Ferrari and “sacrifice” 7 percent of his outgoings to acquire philatelic literature, and wants to limit himself to the Federal Republic, will find his table richly laden.

MEMORIES OF DR.HERBERT MUNK IN LUGANO, APRIL 19,1953

Emil – W.Mewes

The occasion of the International Philatelic literature show in Lugano over the period from 17 to 19 June 1977 gave rise to memories of a distinguished philatelist to whom the philatelic literature of the world owes an infinite debt: Dr. Herbert Munk, who died in Lugano on 19 April 1953. Lugano was his last home from 1936 to his death. Dr. Herbert Munk was born in Berlin on 26 June 1875, studied philosophy and psychology and took the degree of Dr. Phil at the university of Göttingen. He joined the Berlin Philatelic Club at an early date, and soon made contact with leading philatelists at home and abroad, especially as he soon enjoyed the reputation of being an outstanding expert on stamps.

In the year 1921 the Berlin stamp dealer Rudolf Siegel acquired the copyright of the Rohl Stamp catalogue, and offered Dr. Munk the editorship of a new (11th) edition, which like the 10th was to be in the form of a handbook. Dr. Munk accepted, and for his part worked out a concept for the catalogue based on a uniform viewpoint for all part of the future work. This concept, with a study of the “psychology of collecting” was set out in his “Prospectus of the Kohl Stamp Handbook and Great Catalogue” (1922).

The work ran into serious difficulties at the beginning of 1925 because of increasing commercial difficulties encountered by the publisher Siegel, but these were overcome to some extent by the organisation and founding of a “Society of the Friends of the Kohl Stamp Handbook”. A leading part in the foundation of this was played by the Berlin Philatelic club. Dr. Munk was then able over the period from March 1923 to April 1936 to put out 40 numbers with initial letters from A (Afghanistan) to I (Italy to 1928) comprising 5 volumes with over 5000 pages. The original edition of 6000 copies was later increased to 10000 copies. Thus the work was done according to Dr. Munk’s concept, with the co-operation and sometimes the actual authorship of leading philatelic researchers at home and abroad, so that it gained not just the applause of specialists but of wide collecting circles of the entire world, and is still the basis of collecting for the topics it covers.

Particular response and recognition was accorded to the sections on “German Reich, Greece, Great Britain, Guatemala, Hamburg, Hannover, Heligoland”, to name only a few. Particularly noteworthy was the support given to the work by foreign members of the “Society of the Friends of the Kohl Stamp Handbook”, particularly the Collectors’ Club New York and its outstanding member Alfred F. Lichtenstein. The Collectors Club obtained the translation rights, and as a result published numerous translations from the Kohl Handbook in its magazine “Collectors Club Philatelist”. The rights to the translation of the “Great Britain” section of the Kohl handbook were transferred by the Collectors Club to the Royal Philatelic Society of London.

At the conclusion of the SH volume, Dr. Munk gave up his work on the Kohl stamp Handbook and transferred his domicile to Lugano in free Switzerland, for health reasons but probably also because of the unhappy political conditions in Germany.

There, he turned back to intensive philatelic research, and published trail-blazing studies of the lithographed Swiss ray stamps in “Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung” and “Basler Tauke”.

Many were the honours bestowed on Dr. Herbert Munk during his lifetime. He was a prizewinner at many leading stamp exhibitions, of which IPOSTA 1930 in Berlin may be singled out, holder of the Lindenberg medal (1925), inscribed on the “Roll of Distinguished Philatelists” at the philatelic Congress of Great Britain (1931), and after the 2nd World War, he became honorary Fellow of the Berlin Philatelic Club and Hon. Life Fellow of the Royal Philatelic Society, London.

After 1950, Dr. Munk’s state of health steadily worsened, and death snatched him away on 19 April 1953.

Dr. Munk’s ideas for the Stamp Handbook and the way he put them into practice remain a pattern and inspiration for all serious philatelists. After the 2nd World War the new Handbook for Philately Working Party of the union of German Philatelists tried to carry out Dr. Munk’s work by publishing individual sections.

The State of Austrian Philatelic Literature

By Hermann Schmirler

Austria can proudly lay claim to having been a leader in world philatelic literature for a good half-century. Authors such as Kropf, Hanusch, Ladurner and many others demonstrate this. This tradition was also carried on after the Second World War with much diligence and perseverance, with the two Nestors of Austrian philately, Ing. Edwin Müller and Baron Kumpf-Mikuli doing the lion's share of philatelic publicity, though many others unnamed should not be forgotten. It is always a real joy to anyone familiar with the topic to read the volume "Postage Stamps" edited by Ing. Müller, and the society reports in "Savo", edited by Kumpf-Mikuli.

Even though many other countries have drawn level with us in the literary field since the Second World War, and even outpaced us in recent years, the choice of philatelic literature, is still not so small as might be assumed. It is just not so concentrated, but appears over longer periods. The chronological list of significant publications in Austria is now as follows:

- 1960 Ing Edwin Müller. Handbook of the Pre-Stamps Postmarks of Austria. New York.
- 1960. Heinz L. Gindl. Special catalogue of Ind. Austrian Republic. Plate defects of trials and structures. Edition several times corrected. Linz.
- 1961. Ing Edwin Müller. Handbook of cancellations of Austria and Lombardy-Venetia on the 1859 1858-59, 1860-61, 1863, 1863-64 issues. New corrected edition, Vienna.
- 1963 Georg Sobetzsky. "Catalogue of Austrian cancellations. Vienna
- 1964 Alfred Clement. "Handbook of Field and Military Post in Austria". Graz.
- 1964 Victor Majetic. Field and rest-Centre Postal Cancellations, 1914-1918. Salzburg.
- 1965 Dr. Karl Kühn. 1st supplementary report to Müller's Prephilatelic Handbook. Vienna.
- 1967 Wilhelm Klein. "Postal Stampings and other types of cancellation on the Austrian stamp issues of 1867, 1883, 1890.
- 1973. Second supplementary volume.
- 1967 Huber/Diruberger. Austrian special catalogue 1850, Linz
- 1968 Huber/Diruberger. Lombardy-Venetia special catalogue 1850. Linz.
- 1970. Heinrich Himmel-Agisburg. Graz clapper post 1794 – 1847. Graz.
- 1970/71. Karl Huber. The old letter and its secrets. Linz
- 1970. Dr. Ulrich Fercheubauer. Austria 1850-1867. Vienna
- 1974 Dr. Ulrich Fercheubauer Austria 1850-1900. Vienna Enlarged and corrected edition
- 1975 Karl Kühn, Dr. 2nd supplementary report to Müller Prephilatelic Handbook. Vienna
- 1976 Dr. V. Fercheubauer. Austria 1850-1918. Vienna. Revised and extended edition.
- 1976 Huber/Wessely. Great Handbook of Austria and Lombardy-Venetia with special catalogue for 1st issue 1850. Linz-Vienna.
- 1976 Dr. Augus Zoppelli. Southern Tyrol cancellations, 1770-1850. Merano.
- 1977 Ing.F.Schneiderbauer. Entireties of Austria. Krems
- 1877 Karl Huber. Types-plates-tables. 1850. Linz
- 1977 Wolfgang Balzer/Heinrich Himmel-Agisburg. Mainz Confederation Citadel. Austrian Imperial and Royal Military post 1793-1797, 1814-1866. Mainz-Graz. The following periodically appearing books and catalogues are worth a mention:
- 1967 Various authors. Philatelic research papers. Graz
- 1945 Rosner Co. Austria not catalogue Vienna
- 1946 Rosner Co. "Austria". Austria, Germany, Switzerland, Lichtenstein, European Stamps. Vienna.
- 1948 "W.B.K." (Viennese Stamp Catalogue), Vienna.

”Die Briefmarken”, the organ of the Society of Austrian Stamp Collectors, which has just completed its 25th year, is the only ??? Austrian subject journal, apart from a few society magazines.

It need only be said of the proceedings and catalogues of various Austrian exhibitions that they contain much typical and useful work.

In conclusion I will deal with some other works dealing with Austrian philately that have been published abroad, and therefore have included their successor states in their range of collection:

1971 Giuseppe Gaggero. The Republic of Veneto 1848-1849

1976. Raffaele Alianello. Cancellations of Lombardy. Veneto and the Austrian Levant.

1976 Umberto del Bianco. Austrian Llyod and the Maritime Cancellations of Austria-Hungary.

1976 Keith Tranmer. Austrian Post offices Abroad.

Periodisch, Sassone. Catalogue of the Stamps of the Former States and their Cancellations.

Last but no least is the book by Paolo Vollmeir published in 1976 – “The prephilatelic stamps of Milan”, whose execution and presentation should be an example to us Austrians for the future. With great regret and in full realisation that I have exceeded the limits set, I close this far too brief account with the particular remark that the literature described here can only be a distillation of Austrian philatelic publications. The works not mentioned here, particularly the periodically appearing philatelic reports, are certainly no less important.

A large part of the works mentioned here, and probably more, are on view at the “International Exposition of Philatelic Literature, Luyano”. Use this one-off event to enrich your philatelic knowledge: “Knowledge is Power” in philately as well.

INDEX OF LITERATURE IN PHILATELIC EXHIBITION

Introduction

The index below includes philatelic articles/writings as they appear in Finnish postal stamp exhibit directories between 1950 - 1991. Non-philatelic articles as well as various credits given the exhibit organizers have been eliminated from the index. One of the aims of the indexing is to remind collectors of the large philatelic data bank formed by the various philatelic articles and especially by the often brief but nonetheless thorough philatelically researched writings. These articles often bring new information about a particular subject. Articles are rarely reprinted in the philatelic press, thus information is often only available to visitors of exhibits. Regrettably the fate of exhibit directories and the articles they contain is that they are often forgotten. At the end of the index there is listed the names of exhibits and those of the organizing clubs or societies from where exhibit directories can be requested. At the postal museum there are a number of different exhibit catalogues that may also be distance-borrowed for those unable to visit the museum in person.

De postzak (The mailbag)

THE PIONEERS OF THE PHILATELY OF THE NETHERLANDS (PART I) by K.Kouwenberg.

Introduction

When we are sitting down and admiring our latest acquisitions and trying to put them in their proper perspective with the help of extensive literature that we have to our disposal, we never think back to that lone pioneer who passed on long ago, who also was contemplating his stamps. But he could not fall back on anything else but what his stamps before him could tell him.

Who was this pioneer? Who was this first collector? It was impossible to answer these questions.

The first collectors were schoolboys, who started to collect these colorful little pictures as soon as they appeared. Older people slowly followed in their paths, until in 1860 stampcollecting began to be a fad. This_.

was a remarkable fact which caught the attention of others. Thus said a.o. the well known German stampcollector'

Carl Lindenberg, already in 1889 in a lecture for the =Berliner Philatelisten Club= (quote from German):

" The growth that stamp collecting experienced in the year 1860 man can not imagine today"

The stamp collecting was = in =. After 1860 the development starts and the basis is laid for our modern Philately. It is now exactly a century ago . A fact,= as far as I know = not commemorated in the philatelic press. Let the =Postzak= also in this lead the way. Congratulations stampcollectors with your 100th. birthday! The names of the first stamp collectors-:-are unknown.

The names of the fundamentalists of our philately however have been saved. The wellknown Austrian and expert on literature Victor Suppanschitsch (1838-1919) has listed in his publication : The start and development of the philatelic literature in the second half of the 19th. century (1901) in the chapter = The golden book of the pioneers= their names, to wit: the composers of the catalogues : Oscar Berger Levrault, Alfred Potiquet

Dr. Gray J.B. Moens, William Booty etc. Of the publishers of the first philatelic periodicals: Pierre Mahe, Arthur Maury, Zschiesche and Koder,-"Moens, Alfred Smith & Co. etc. Of the first authors : Dr. Legrand, Bacon , De Viver, Tiffany, etc.

And among these names we come across:

WILLEM FREDERIK DANNENFELSER

The average Dutch collector does not like reading. At the most he may look in his catalogue - the wrong one quite often- and that is it. To take out a set of books from the library to learn more about his hobby considers he a waste of money.

As a result the name Dannenfels - very much unjustly so - is almost unknown. To Mrs. M.J. van Heerdt goes the honor of keeping his name alive in her = Postage Stamp science and postal Service (1932)= and her = Guide for the philatelic literature of the Netherlands and its Colonies =

She only however mentions his name and his work. It is my opinion - however - that he did not get enough credit for his work, for Dannenfels was the man who published the first stamp catalogue or rather the first stamp handbook in the Dutch language.

A very important fact that up to now was not highlighted enough in the Dutch philatelic literature.

Who was this Dannenfels?

The Dannenfels Dynasty, old time well-to-do vintners 3ils.^• from Schorsheim in The Palts. In the beginning of the Napoleonistic era a Dannenfels took up residence in Holland as a wine merchant. This Dannenfels turns up in the Hague in 1830.

He lives with his family at 10 Plaats, and is well-to-do, having two live-in domestics. Willem Frederik Dannenfelser ; born in the Hague May 26-1826, was the youngest son, -nrtbisffat1,y. Nothing is known about this Dannenfelser,s youth.

When he was 19 he was working as a clerk salesman in a bookstore in the Hague. In this town he also married Wilhelmina Berendina Doorman. She is a daughter of general Jan Diederik Doorman, Archfather of the Doorman Dynasty, of which a.o. admiral Karl Doorman was a hero in the Battle of the Java Sea in 1942.

It is remarkable that this Doorman family has contributed much to the knowledge of philately. General W.H. Doorman was-a well known collector of postal printed matter- postcard, etc. From his hand appeared a number of publications on this subject, a.o. in = the Philatelist d.d. May 1-1930 in the section:

Your Questions (x).

After his marriage Dannenfelser left the Hague. The author does not know the correct dates of both his marriage and departure from the Hague. He could not bring up the courage to wrestle through a number of dusty tomes to find these dates who were not very important anyway.

Dannenfelser settled in in Utrecht about 1850.

He established himself as a bookdealer at the Pausdam. then numbered F. 274. From the size of this property, which still exists and is in use by the University in Utrecht can be deducted that Dannenfelser had a fairly large business. He was not only a bookdealer, but also a publisher. In the old archives of the town of Utrecht are a number of townplans published by Dannenfelser, while the undersigned owns a festifal speech published by Dannenfelser for the occasion of the marriage of H.R.H. Princess Maria of Prussia with H.R.H. Prince Hendrik of the Netherlands.

At first Dannenfelser,s business was very good, but Dannenfelser was not really a businessman. He was very friendly, always helping where he could, but he shortchanged his business and his family by doing so.

In May 1878 Dannenfelser moved to Amsterdam with his family, where he is mentioned as a publisher of address-books untill 1886. In that year he accepted a position at the then = Daily News= newspaper. In the last years of his life he was disabled and very much in need of assistance in his every daily needs. He passed on on May 8 1894. at the age of almost 68 years.

In the = ,Daily News = of May 11- 1894 this obit appeared:

Yesterday here in Amsterdam passed away Mr. W.F. Dannenfelser who had an administrative function with the = Daily News = . For only - a short time he was co-director of this newspaper, until health reasons forced his retirement, leaving behind an impression of cordiality and friendliness. Before he settled in Amsterdam, Mr. Dannenfelser was a respected bookdealer in Utrecht His name is linked to some important publications.

The most important publication for us is:

THE DANNENFELSER VADE-MECUM

Together with the growth of stampcollecting .in'--the--beginning of the 1860,s the trading in stamps developed. This trade however was completely different from the one we practice today. Tom, Dick and Harry started selling stamps. Nobody knew anything about it. The farthest away stamp was the most expensive.

The prices in the starting period were all in the penny range. The buying and selling of stamps took mainly place in the bookstores. And there were quite a few. In contrast with Mr.-G. Keiser wrote in his = The development of the trade postage stamps in the Netherlands = in the Jubileebook of the number of traders in the years 1860-1863 mushroomed. To mention some:

1. F.A. de Reus. Haarlem

Trade reasonable, wholesale and retail. 2. C.L.W Brackenhoeft, Amsterdam

All kinds of stamps.

In 1862 stamps were for sale every where, mostly through the bookstores. Although the author could not find any proof of this, he assumes that Dannenfelser stayed not behind and also started trading in poststamps. But he did not stop here. On November - 1862 he published the very first poststamp manual in the Dutch language and also the first philatelic printed matter in this language.

This Utterly remarkable booklet is entitled : -

. Vade-Mecum for stampcollectors of all the different states adopted stamps- From the French.-Utrecht, W.F. Dannenfelser. 1863=

On the inside of the title page one can read;--printgd.by J. van Boekhoven, Utrecht. The measurement. of this booklet is 9x142 cm. and has 114 pages.

This manual starts with the introduction : = The origin of the postage stamps =. It states here , that the first idea of issuing postage stamps was introduced by the Swede G. Treffenberg in 1823. A large majority rejected his proposal.

The introduction then outlines the system of blanco postage free letters in England and France and stated : But see here what Mr. Alphonse Esquiros tells about the introduction of postage stamps in England. It is left unknown to the eager reader what sort of authority this Alphonse might have been,, but there is a heartbreaking story about a traveller who was strolling through England's landscape and happened to meet a lettercarrier at the door of an inn where a young lady was just leaving having a letter to give to this person. It seemed that through the sequence of acts that followed that this young lady was not so innocent as one would expect, for she had with her brother , who was the sender of the letter created a plot consisting of putting on the cover some hieroglyphics explaining what was supposed to be on the inside of the letter.

It seems that after studying the cover, the lady let out a deep sigh, and after giving the letter back to the carrier informed him that she could not afford to pay the postage.

The traveller continued his way, asking himself if this system with the high postage rate , that causes these loopholes is not in fact a very weak system.:_..

Afterwards it is revealed that this traveller is nobody less than Rowland Hill and that this incident caused the postal reforming in England.

This beautiful story that completely originated in the fantasy of Mr. Alphonse Esquiros is followed by the introduction of a summary of the start of introducing of stamps in various countries.

THE PIONEERS OF THE PHILATELY OF THE NETHERLANDS (part 11) by K Kouwenberg.

THE STAMPS OF ALL NATIONS AND STATES

Before attending to the second pioneer of the Netherland's philately- PIETER HARME WITKAMP - we have to make a sidestop to France, where our sport of collecting was born. The sudden rise of stampcollecting in the 1860's echoed also in the popular press of those days.

In the June issue of 1862 the readers of the magazine =The illustrated Magazine =, a french family publication with the style of something for everybody - were surprised with-the start of a number of articles titled • " THE POSTAGE STAMPS OF ALL THE COUNTRIES OF THE WORLD"

These series were continued without interruption until December 1966 when it was suddenly stopped , despite a = to be continued =

Some 100 countries and states were described.

The modern reader shall, when he wants to learn about these series of articles, do this with a reservation. What did anybody know 100 years ago about stamps. Soon was the interest raised and one asked himself with growing astonishment where the author of these articles received the particular information seeing he had but a few primitive booklets to his disposal, forerunners in the field of catalogues. He did not stop with the simple listing of the then known stamps, but a large number of facts are given. Postal rates, printing, specimen paper, stampsize, number of copies sold, products of fantasy, counterfeits, in short everything gets its turn. And that was 1862!

The picture of a random page (no.2) from the = Magasin = gives the impression of the extensive study and enorm work involved in the production of these articles.

Here speaks the real philatelist, and in the opinion of the author facing the period in which he accomplished his work, the greatest philatelist .of all times.

His name was NATALIS RONDOT.

Who was he? When trying to answer this question one meets a remarkable fact. One runs across his name very seldom, despite the fac that his achievements rise far above those of his contemporaries, some of which were mentioned in the beginning of part 1 of my article (1) up to now I have found most data in an article by Georges Brunel: " the stampcollecting in 1867" appearing in " The echo of Stamp Science " no 809- from Sept. 15, 1929. In this issue, that was not completely available in the Netherlands until 1961, Mr. Brunel says that the essays in = The illustrated Magazine = have been compiled by " THE FAMOUS EYEDOCTOR NATALIS RONDOT".

In the continuation of his article in the year 1930 however,. Brunel speaks of Armand Martin being the real name of Natalis Rondot, and suddenly Mr. Rondot is not an eyedocter anymore, bud an executive with the French postal Service.

In the = Who is who of the 20th. century = and the = Universal Dictionary of Contempories = by Vapereau The name of Armand Martin is not mentioned, but Natalis Rondot is. However , this was a textile expert and as a salesman he travelled much.

In 1864 he was in Portugal with a French diplomat , and immediately thereafter in Russia. It was impossible to find the time then to write the articles that were published under his name. So far things are yet very unclear and surely merit more study.

In = THE POSTAGE STAMPS= by Georges Brunel, issue 1909-19X0 it is mentioned that the collection of Natalis Rondot at about that time was sold to the Parisian dealer Victor Roberts for the sum of frs. 15.000,--.

Rondot's series of articles were well received. Many foreign publications followed the example of the = Illustrated Magazine = .e. = CASELL'S ILLUSTRATED FAMILY PAPER, YOUNG ENGLAND, DER BAZAR= and also

The = NETHERLANDS MAGAZINE _

The = Netherlands Magazine= was a weekly started by the publishing house of the brothers Van Es in Amsterdam in 1861. It contained a number of articles , short stories, patriotic particulars, ethnics, hobbies, essays etc.. All in the style of that time, sentimental and dripping with false romance.

To meet its readers halfway in the sudden rage of stamp collecting the staff of the = Netherlands Magazine = eagerly took to the publications of Rondot.

In February 1863 appeared consequently in the = Netherlands Magazine under the title = THE STAMPS OF ALL NATIONS AND STATES = from the French of Natalis Rondot by P.H. Witkamp

The introduction of this article is a translation of the introduction of Rondot.

Witkamp however had inserted some additions. He says a.o. that Natalis Rondot was one of the first Scientists of France and that he also is a member of the = Association of Peoples home Crafts = in Amsterdam. In addition Witkamp gives a lecture about the usefulness of stampcollecting. akin to his original education to the teaching profession.

After this introduction Rondot is closely followed. Issues of some countries have been added after the publication of Rondot's articles. The separation of the countries is, just as by Rondot Ji geographical. The start is tie Russian' Empire, followed by the realms of Friesland, Poland, Sweden, Norway, etc.

When reading the Netherlands text , after one gets used to the missing of the modern philatelic vocabulary , the admiration for the compiler grows. How many hours of intense study have been devoted to this work, as well as research and putting into proper order. Everything expresses the interest the real philatelist has for his subject.

For England for instance facts are given that are not even listed in a modern manual as the of three volumes consisting = Encyclopaedia of British Empire Postage Stamps =. Elaborated account is given to the = Treasure Competition =, we read something about proofs and see a.o. pictures of those from James Chalmers, Charles Whiting etc. The proof-perforation by Henry Archer handled, as well as the developement of the = Mulready-envelope= etc.

We see a number of covers pictured, including the = Intemperance =

THE PIONEERS OF NETHERLANDS PHILATELY PART II

PIETER HARME WITKAMP (see figure 5)

The translator of the articles of Rondot, Pieter Harme Witkamp, was a very remarkable man, and as his image shows, a completely different type of person than Dannenfels. He wasn't a born aristocrat, Witkamp was a man from the common people. He was born on October 30th 1816 in Amsterdam, the son of a shoemaker. Due to his ability, bright mind and much study did he become a well known personality in the Netherlands in the years 1860-1880.

Witkamp's parents made him, when he was quite young, an apprentice with a goldsmith. Pieter Harme did not have the least interest in this noble trade. He wanted to go to college. But there was no money. Pieter gave his parents such a hard time that they decided to enroll him in the Normal School to become a teacher. As usual history does not mention his parent's sacrifices. After four years Witkamp passed the final exam and the committee of trustees, amongst, it was said was a Jacob van Lennep, who was amazed by his broad knowledge. Witkamp entered the teaching profession until the year 1852. In that year he made the acquaintance of the well-known Dr. Sarphati, who asked him to join The Association for Peoples Arts. Witkamp became administrator and librarian to the Magazine of Peoples Arts. Furthermore he was the co-founder of the Palace for Peoples Arts. In 1861 he became one of the editors of the Netherlands Magazine.

Witkamp has done much for the city of Amsterdam. He was an honorary member of a large number of leagues and associations. A huge celebration took place, partly on his initiative, in the Palace for Peoples Arts on the occasion of his 70th birthday. His Majesty the King [William III] bestowed upon him the Order of the Oak Crown. After this Witkamp retired. He died on the 8th January 1892 at Wychen.

Witkamp worked hard all his life. Not only did he do much for his hometown, but at that time he was a well-known historian and mapmaker. He has an impressive list of publications to his name, for example the History of the Seventeen Netherlands, Amsterdam 1871-1888, in 7 volumes and an atlas. Witkamp considered this as his main achievement. Now this is out of date. Witkamp was an ardent lover of nature and besides his many activities he was a brisk hiker. He traversed the Netherlands and Luxemburg on foot, writing down everything he saw. The Dutch Iron Railroad, for example, used his services. The short, stocky and always sloppily dressed appearance of Witkamp was eventually known throughout the Netherlands and soon he got the nickname of the Great hobo. He who wants to know more about this remarkable man should consult the Biography of the Late Fellow Members or the Affairs of the Organisation of the Dutch literature, 1892.

We may assume that Witkamp was not a stamp collector. He had no time for that. Also in his quite elaborate biography, that is hard to find, no sign of such activity is mentioned, only his contribution to the Netherlands Magazine is quoted. However, Witkamp's biographies failed to cite one little work, and with this we come again to:

THE STAMPS OF ALL COUNTRIES AND STATES (Figure 6)

Witkamp's contributions to the Netherlands Magazine were also issued in book form. The Gebr. van Es saw some merit in it but it was not successful. Natalis Rondot was too far ahead of his time. The collectors of those days did not have need for a manual. All they wanted to know was how many and what kind of stamps were printed. For quantities, print, paper and other philatelic particulars hardly anybody had any interest.

Two volumes were issued of The stamps of all Countries and States: Volume 1 Northern Europe, issued in 1863 and Volume 2 Central Europe, issued in 1864. It is a pity for the enthusiasts who at that time bought Volumes 1 and 2, that Witkamp discontinued his publications. In vain they looked forward to the appearance of Volume 3. There is one consolation however. Neither could Rondot finish his work and that is why there never was a complete series.

Just like the Dannenfeser Vade-Mecum both of Witkamp's volumes are extremely rare. In particular, Volume 2 can be considered a great rarity. I have found only one happy owner of both volumes 1 and 2. This is Mrs M. J. van Heerdt-Kolff, well known to all of us in connection with her many philatelic publications. Even the famous Crawford Library is left behind. Although the Earl of Crawford and E. D. Bacon did their utmost, they could only secure volume 1 for this library.

Then there is a volume 1 in the library of the Postmuseum in the Hague. As far as I know there are still 3 copies of volume 1 and only one copy of volume 2.

In the library of Philatelica are still some remnants of volume 1. This library has, for example, in its possession a copy of New Guide Manual for Collectors of Postage Stamps by Pierre Mahé of 1865. Its first owner has on his own account in this, by itself already an antique jewel, pasted some cutouts from volume 1 of The Stamps of all Countries and States. Ultimately there was yet a copy of volume 1 located in the library of Hollandia in Amsterdam. At the meeting of the 21st March 1910 of this association, a thank you letter was read, pointing out that this copy was borrowed by the well-known Austrian collector of literature, Victor Suppantschitsch. It is noted in the minutes of the meeting of the 24th September 1910, that Victor Marsh, a well known English dealer at that time made a bid of £3 for this booklet. No action however was taken. There is nothing more to read about this booklet in subsequent minutes. My written request to Hollandia to inform me of the whereabouts of this booklet left me without an answer. It is still mentioned that Suppantschitsch also chased both volumes of The Stamps of all Countries and States, but his quest was in vain.

Herewith I cease Witkamp's account.

Next time something about the most active among our pioneers, Cornelis van Rinsum, the first Dutch man who dared to publish a philatelic magazine and how he got involved in a furious battle with the boys of the Boston Gang.

* Editorial note: In the Yearbook of 1914 of the previously mentioned association, dated the 1st January 1914, which also contains a library list, Witkamp's booklet is not mentioned anymore!

LETTER FROM DOCTOR LEGRAND

To the Director of L'Annonce Timbrologique

This was retrospectively numbered 1st Article. For the later articles see Philat. Trans. 301.

Sir,

I find great pleasure in reading your journal every time. This is not because it reports on interesting novelties which appear each month, like the major journals or on unusual studies on stamps. You are right to leave these serious subjects to older and more experienced colleagues: which need not prevent you from picking up unpublished details here and there without having to reprint works on philately or articles from magazines already known to the whole world and which have long since lost their freshness. But I think you have served the higher interests of Philatelic Science as well as anyone else! Oh!! What an odd word. If we were in Spain, people would think I had written Filoutelique, and how unpleasant that would have been for the honourable company? But let us leave this point on one side.

Part of your journal is devoted to collectors of journals, and to articles and announcements relating to exchanges. And it appears your magazine is read: the other day I saw an announcement of philatelic publications, I wrote to the author and the answer I got was: from the day after the publication of the journal he got a favourable response, and mine only came in the eighth batch. I am not complaining, but I drew the conclusion that a fair number of others were following the example of Mr. Tiffany and collecting everything published on philately from its origin, and that there was an interest in getting together to exchange the duplicates that each of us may have. But to do this several conditions must be met.

The first is to have a list of all the publications, magazines, catalogues, price lists, monographs etc. Mr. Tiffany has in fact started this work with the publication of his Philatelic Library (Saint Louis, 1874). But this stopped at the year 1874, and its author has not seen fit to continue. In 1889 he published: The Stamp Collector's Library Companion 1st Part Periodicals, which only deals with the United States of America. The philatelic literature of this country is certainly very rich in number: but that of Europe is equally so, and it provided the first publications. For instance, the Catalogue of M. Potiquet in France, that of M. Moens in Belgium, the Stamp Collector's Review and Stamp Collector's Magazine in England, Le Timbre-Poste in Belgium, and Collectionneur des Timbres in France. All these show that American collectors were not committed until after Europe with collectors from all countries now trying to move on from their predecessors.

Contemplating these venerable ancestors of the philatelic Stud Book, these little monthly sheets or pamphlets which look so laughable today to the readers of 4° size weeklies or the large catalogues of more than a thousand pages in 8° laugh with pity, one must regret that most of them have not been preserved, as they give details which are far from being expected. There is nothing new under the sun, says the proverb. Let us resolve in future to preserve every paper dealing with philately. If their possessors cannot do this themselves, let them think of others, better informed or harder-working, who will want to preserve them and will be happy to buy them or exchange them for stamps which will enlarge their collection.

But to make exchanges, we must know who wants them. This is where your magazine comes in. First of all, devote a column of adverts of three or four lines at most, published every month and giving the names and addresses of collectors. Such adverts will make philatelic bibliophiles known to one another, and will promote exchanges. Collectors will know who to apply to to get rid of magazines and catalogues which they no longer need, instead of putting them in the fire. Then, the advertiser can list what wants more particularly, or what they want to get rid of, when they cannot find these things out in the ordinary course of events. To draw up these adverts in an economical but precise manner, there should be an exact and numbered list or lists, to which reference can be made. This should be done at least provisionally until an exact and complete list can be drawn up and put into everybody's hands.

Then, the Repertoire proposed by M. Emile [sic. Actually Emilio] Diena in 1889, could be drawn up.

If this suggestion meets with your approval, Mr. Director, I will return to this question in a later issue.

I am, Sir, etc...

Dr. Legrand
Secretary of the French Society of Timbrologie.

STUDIES ON PHILATELIC BIBLIOGRAPHY

To the Director of L'Announce Timbrologique

As you have agreed to open your columns to articles on Philatelic Bibliography, I want first to deal with the question of the list of these publications.

[2nd Article]

A definitive catalogue can only be the result of cooperation between the stamp-lovers of each country and I do not think the list can be sufficiently complete for publication.

Thus, there can only be a provisional list, and we shall show today what elements it could consist of at present.

Stamp collecting has not been going on for long, and Mr Mahé has stressed the importance of getting out a list of everything that has been published or put out on this subject since the first issues of Timbrophile in 1864. I did not see the necessity of this. The progress of events has shown the Editor of Timbrophile to be right. But if I did not realise as keenly as today how interesting such a collection could be, did carefully preserve all the magazines and catalogues he gave me to collect, and the day I started to put them in order I was delighted to find rare pieces that had become well-nigh impossible to be found.

The first attempts at Philatelic Bibliography appeared in 1867 in various magazines, notably the Philatelist in 1867, 1869 and 1872, and in the fourth volume (1871) of the American Journal of Philately for England and America, the only magazines we have been able to consult and in Moschkau's Magazin for Germany. But these articles were inadequate, giving only the date of publication of the journal, and the number of issues that appeared.

If we are not mistaken, Mr Tiffany published the first work on philatelic bibliography in 1874, and it is interesting enough for us to review its principal features.

His Philatetical Library can be looked on as an almost complete list of what had appeared by that date.

Printed in a 4° luxury edition of 150 copies, it was sent by its author to all the principal stamp collectors. The work is divided into three parts. Each is divided into sections according to the language in which the work was written, or better, the countries in which it saw the light: America, Denmark, Low Countries, Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Spain and even Russia. All these have contributed to the compilation, which consists of 1462 paragraphs.

The first part includes catalogues, journals and important publications on stamps. This is the scientific part, if one may use the expression.

the second is devoted more particularly to publications relating to the stamp trade, such as price lists, circulars, advertisements etc. It gives an idea of the state of the stamps trade, and gives interesting insights on the values acquired by the stamps of this era especially if one compares them with the values they have reached since.

Finally, the third part lists articles on stamp collecting, the history of postal reform and postal history published in journals which do not usually deal with philately: postal magazines, games relating to stamps, pieces of music, photographs etc.

The whole work extends to more than a hundred pages. Each article is arranged in alphabetical order by the name of the author, and is given an individual number. A table of journal titles facilitates research.

In the introduction to his book, Mr. Tiffany describes attempts previous to his made by various philatelic magazines in England, Germany and America. We have already mentioned the three most important. We may also note: The Stamp Collector's Monthly Gazette by George Steward of Saint John, New Brunswick, The American Coin and Stamp Review (1871) and the Deutsch Briefmarken-Zeitung (1871).

Mr. Tiffany's book is certainly the most accomplished and the best model to follow for the bibliographic catalogue under consideration. The details of each article given first hand are of most satisfactory accuracy. Those who have followed in his footsteps only need to complete his notes, rarely to correct them. I shall allow myself only one criticism, which in my opinion does not detract at all from the value of his work.

The three main divisions of it can be summarized as follows: 1. Scientific Section, 2. Commercial Section, 3. Section for articles not fitting into the preceding ones.

We find jumbled together in the first part the scientific catalogues, periodicals dealing with stamps, monographs and albums.

This confusion strikes us as regrettable. Moreover, in his wish to leave nothing out, Mr. Tiffany lists journals whose publication was announced by his colleagues, but which did not actually appear. So what is the point of listing them.

In the second, he mixes up current prices, circulars, and announcements of packets. Finally the various subjects in the third part could be increased by a certain number of chapters such as those dealing with publications previous to the birth of the International Postal Union and its later development: the chapter on the controversy between the heirs of Sir Rowland Hill and James, Chalmers, the Dundee bookseller who disputes with him the invention of the postage stamp, the catalogues of public stamp sales, especially those into which the prices have been included: finally, the statutes and rules of the innumerable Philatelic Societies, including their yearbooks and reports on their position and doings, but not their bulletins or journals.

These last questions were not on the agenda at the time, and we should not blame Mr. Tiffany for not having specified the publications that contain them.

But what strikes us as valuable for our purposes in this work is that each article is numbered, so that we only need quote for example:

to designate the Stamp Collector's Magazine from Messrs Stafford Smith and Smith, which will be found under No. 349, Part I, of Mr. Tiffany's Philatetical Library. Adding the number of the volume or the year in Roman numerals and the missing numbers in Arabic numerals we can get on a single line the complete information that would otherwise have taken two or three lines. But let us leave this point to one side for the moment: we will come back to it.

Mr. Tiffany's book appeared in 1874, but unfortunately had no sequel. However, from the same author we have meanwhile had The Stamp Collector's Library Companion, which is arranged on a slightly different plan. The first part of this new work, the only one to appear, covers periodicals. They are listed in order of appearance, but for the United States only. This time the author still includes in his list in chronological order the publications that were announced but did not appear, but he designates the journals that did appear by an Arabic numeral, and the ones that were merely announced by letters. As he does not stop till the end of 1888, the list of American journals published in The Philatetical Library can be extended by nearly fifteen years. We do not know whether the author has extended his publication for the years 1889, 1890 and 1891, as well as the other chapters that make up his work. If this publication is used as a guide, it could be designated by T.L.C and the number relating to the journal.

For the volume, year or monthly number, do as before.

Dr. Legrand
Secretary of the French Society of Philately

[3rd Article]

Mr. Tiffany's Philatetical Library can act as a bibliographical list up to 1874 for English philatetical publications. We do not know if any author has tried to complete this work: we should be pleased to know, and shall be obliged to any philatelist who can inform us.

We know that Dr. Moschkau has started this work for Germany. Has anyone followed it up? We are not able to say. Again, we ask for information from those interested. There is however one way of getting at least a partial list of German publications. Every year the Dresden society publishes its Vertrauliche Mittheilung containing an article entitled Vereins Bibliothek [Society Library]. This enumerates all the publications sent to the Society day by day, and

No.13 (15 January 1891), which we have to hand, gives a quite respectable list of journals and books. The list for Germany can serve as a point of departure along with Mr. Tiffany's catalogue until a better turns up, and we offer this list as a contribution until we hear of a different work.

In France, Mr de Bosredon has repeated Mr. Tiffany's work and brought it up to the year 1877, Like Mr. Tiffany's, Mr de Bosredon's work is divided into a number of categories: 1. Catalogues; 2. Special Publications; 3. Special Periodicals; 4. Albums; 5. Articles published in various major journals or in non-philatelic journals; 6. Price-Lists, Announcements, Prospectuses, 7. Paintings, Caricatures, Prints, Photographs; 8. Pieces of music; 9. Miscellaneous documents; 10. Legislative documents and rules relating to a) postage stamps, b) telegraphic stamps, c) revenue stamps.

Belgium has given M. de Bosredon the materials for a second work with the same divisions. Really, his classification strikes us as much better than that used by Mr. Tiffany. However, it still strikes us as leaving something to be desired. The section on Special Publications mixes together works of totally different natures. The Manual du Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste (nos. 2,3,4, Moens), the Timbres-Poste Illustrés are not very different from the catalogues, since like them they simply list all the stamps known at the date of publication, they do not belong in this chapter, but in the one on catalogues. We should prefer this second section to have the title Monographs. This would seem to us a better title for this class of work, consisting of either the in-depth study of a question relating to stamps, forgeries, watermarks, or of stamps of a single country. The latter would give a detailed history, including an extended list and an indication or reproduction of the Laws and Decrees that preceded the issue of stamps. Otherwise they could be real general histories, like the Histoire de la Poste aux Lettres, by Mr de Rothschild, or the Histoire du Timbre-Poste by Mr H. Boyer, which deals with French stamps in particular. We also think that a special chapter should be devoted to the nomenclature of philatelic societies, an account of their rules, notices, annual reports and reports issued as separate publications. Catalogues and journals are too well defined to need criticism.

The same is true of albums. However, we must say that the interest attached to this series of publications strikes us as really slight and extremely problematic.

However, we do not wish to be dogmatic about the classification of all philatelic publications.

We will return to this topic in one of our later articles.

Other countries than the ones we have mentioned have also issued interesting bibliographical works about their literature. In Spain, Mr Pardo de Figueroa has published his Littérature Philatelica en España, Apuntes para la Redaction de un Catalogo, by Dr. Thebussem (pseudonym of Mr P de Figueroa), an 8° pamphlet of 34 pages.

In Italy, Mr Leoni has published a philatelic bibliography of Italy, a note for the compilation of a catalogue in his Guida Illustrata del Timbrofilo. This survey was published in numbers 16 and 17 and includes a classification similar to that adopted by Mr Tiffany and Mr de Bosredon.

We intend to designate M. de Bosredon's work on France by De B.F. and the number, and by De B.B. for Belgium, that of Mr Pardo de Figueroa by Dr. Th and the number, and that Mr Leoni by L. B. and the number. The Dresden Society catalogue can be represented by Dr. and the corresponding number. It would be a good idea to place the two figures for the date after Dr. so that the list can show changes from one year to another.

Thus there is a certain number of publications dealing with our question. The two works by Mr. Tiffany, that of Mr de Bosredon, those of Messrs Pardo de Figueroa and Leoni, completed by the lists given by the Dresden Society already constitute a very interesting assembly that we must now complete.

Several other countries have now supplied documents for philately: the Low Countries, Denmark, Sweden, Russia, Turkey, Romania, Greece have published journals, catalogues and price lists. But so far as we know no list has been published. Countries outside of Europe have now taken their place in the movement.

Mexico, the English possessions in North America, Columbia, Brazil, Chile, the Argentine Republic, also the Dominican Republic, the Island of Curacao, the Australian possessions, Java have seen the publication of journals and interesting monographs, and we should like to give a list. First of all we would have to get hold of and then classify the various items. This will be the object of our efforts, and we count on all stamp lovers and dealers to let us have documents they possess or information concerning their publications or those of their compatriots.

Dr. Legrand

Note: The Editor of this journal has received a letter from Mr. Tiffany to Dr. Legrand concerning the catalogue of philatelic publications. It will be published next month along with the observations it suggests.

(4th article)

Here is the letter that Mr. Tiffany has just sent to the Editor of this journal, and which we announced in our Postscript.

St. Louis, Mo., United States of America
16 December 1891

To the Editor of L'Année Timbrologique

I have read with interest the letter from Dr. Legrand in No. 20 of your esteemed journal, in which he proposes to use your journal as the intermediary between enthusiasts who collect everything published on philately. If you intend to go ahead with this project, let me know the cost and I shall take first place on the list, which I hope will contain the names of only those who are in the habit of replying when this question of exchanges is raised.

The learned Doctor has done me the honour of speaking in his letter of my works The Philatelic Library and The Stamp Collector's Companion, and complains that these finish, one in 1874, and the other with the journals of the United States. As he insists on the importance of knowing not only who is collecting, but also what works there are to be collected, and as lists such as those in the Library and The Companion were not compiled in a day, it seems in order for me to tell the Doctor and any of your readers who may be interested that the two works in question are in fact complete to the present day, but only in manuscript in view of the cost of publication and the few people of my acquaintance who need them. The Philatelic Library was a book of 110 4° pages and gave titles in extenso for 569 items, at least 620 current price-lists of less than eight pages, and 272 titles appearing in non-philatelic works. today, there would be more than 2,962 titles for the first part alone. These titles are in alphabetical order by authors, and each time a title is added the numbers of all the following items have to be altered.

To remedy this drawback, I have adopted for the Companion the French decimal system, in which the works are divided into classes and the classes into sections, allotting one or two figures to each class and section and a certain number of figures to each section.

Thus, for the Philatelic Library, nine classes are needed: I Journals; II Catalogues; III Catalogues of public sales; IV Miscellaneous works, such as bibliographies ;V Statutes and works that concern philatelic societies; VI Lists of addresses; VII Albums; VIII Current prices; IX Works containing materials of interest to collectors, such as Government reports, etc. Each class is subdivided into publications from: 1. United States; 2. English colonies; 3. England; 4. French language; 5. German language; 6. Italian language; 7. Spanish and Portugese languages; 8. Dutch and Swedish languages; 9. in all other languages. I have allotted four digits to each part, so that the numbers will only have to be changed after there have been 9,999 entries in that section. The first journal published in the United States takes the number 110, 001, and the others will follow in chronological order: the first catalogue for Canada is distinguished by the number 220,001: the first catalogue for a public sale in England is numbered 330,001 etc. If anyone says 160, 010 I know it is a German journal. Thus, if I do not understand German, it is not worth while consulting it. With a list like this, only the number need be quoted. There will always be people who want to put the publications of their own country in the first place, but I think this system more convenient for the catalogue Doctor Legrand considers necessary. I have found it convenient to give the same numbers to every work in the Library, by writing each title on a special card then arrangeing the cards in alphabetical order. I am thus in a position to continue the two works at any moment, if there is the demand.

Moreover, I have prepared a third list with the same numbers which classifies the works simply by their year of publication, plus an index which classifies them by each important word in their titles, since there are many Philatelists and Philatelistes, and Annonces Timbrophiliques or Timbrologiques.

In addition, I have already done what Mr Diena wants, i.e. compiled an index for all these journals arranged by subject alone. I took on each individual stamp as a subject, the list is too long and too detailed to repay the cost of printing.

I have explained in detail the way I have catalogued my library, so as to demonstrate that the work has been carried as far as my researches have permitted. It remains to put the result at the disposal of editors so that others could correct it. I do not flatter myself that I know of everything, and no doubt there are quite important works I have never even heard of. Here is a summary of the works included in my lists.

I have not included in this list several hundred amateur journals which sometimes deal with stamps, and several thousand journals which have mentioned stamps and the postal service. I have only given some of the catalogues that have appeared in parts, even when there was an issue per month. There have been some 10,813 different issues of the 762 journals. A complete collection of the works known only to me would include at least 17,399 different items.

I am, Sir, always at your disposal for philately.

John K. Tiffany

A reading of this letter suggests numerous observations to us. the first is this. Before thinking of preparing a complete and definitive catalogue, we propose to create a provisional one using the elements already published.

These are Mr Tiffany's two books: The Philatelic Library and The Stamp Collector's Companion, then the Bibliographie Timbrologique de la France et de la Belgique by Mr de Bosredon, Littérature Filatelica en España by Mr Pardo de Figueroa, the Bibliografia Timbrologica de l'Italie by Mr Leoni the lists given by the Dresden Society. These are the elements for the study of stamps, for which the pointers were given in great part by Mr Tiffany, as we are happy to recognise. Bibliophiles should endeavour to complete them.

This does not strike us as an outstandingly difficult task given the number of collectors in each country.

Mr Tiffany has told us that this work is ready, that it is complete to the present day, and that he has been held up by the cost of publication and the consideration that few people will need it. We accept what he says with pleasure and will try to get the societies and collectors of all countries together as soon as possible to start this publication.

We will now see how Mr. Tiffany proposes to use the various parts of his Philatelic Library: He has divided them into nine classes according to their type (see above). Each class is divided into nine sections, as follows: publications from 1. United States; 2. English colonies; 3. England; 4. in the French language; 5. in the German language; 6, in the Italian language; 7. in the Spanish and Portugese languages; 8. in the Dutch and Swedish languages; 9. in all other languages. this last division seems erroneous to us, since it is unrealistic. Publications should be classified according to the language in which they are written, or perhaps according to the country in which they are published.

In the first place, why have three sections for America, the English language, when publications from France are mixed up with those from Belgium and other countries; those from Germany are not distinguished from those of the Austrian Empire; those from Spain are pell-well with those from the South American Republics. Surely the Portugese language is sufficiently different from Spanish to justify a separate section for Portugal and Brazil? But we think a classification by country is preferable. They all have the right to claim property in the work of their nationals, or of those associated with them. We are not the ones complaining of finding the work of collectors from the four corners of the world put together under the aegis of Belgium.

As for the order used by each country to number its publications we think that if everyone starts with the publications of his own country, the result could be a certain lack of order. We suggest adopting alphabetical order, as is usual in all diplomatic acts, and in the treaties for the constitution of the Postal Union. This strikes us as allowing for all national jealousies, and if we group ceratin countries together as the colonies of European powers with their metropolis, we cannot therefore be accused of carrying out annexations. We cannot admit any distinction between the English colonies in Canada, which have supplied journals to the library since the earliest days, and those from the Australian colonies.

We may in future be compelled to establish new groups.

Is what Mr Tiffany calls the French decimal system really advantageous and indispensable to designate a work by a given number.

We do not think so, We see from Mr Tiffany's table that we are currently dealing with some 17,399 items, to intercalate future publications in their place in the classes and sections, we shall perhaps need a million numbers for these 17,399 publications. What confusion this could lead to. We think it would be better to use an arrangement similar to that used by Mr Moens in his latest catalogues. However, we do not think it useful to insist on these details at the moment. What we have said about the sections proposed by Mr Tiffany allows us to dispense with discussing the catalogue of French-language journals that accompanies his letter. Next time we will discuss our proposals for the classes and sections for the projected catalogue, along with the reasons for our preferences.

We think it might be useful to return to Mr. Tiffany's letter, published in our last issue. This letter was accompanied by his list of French philatelic journals. Here is the list. Some slight corrections have been made to this list.

As will easily be seen, the classification is the one adopted for American journals in the Stamp Collector's Library Companion. The first column gives the number of the journals in their order of appearance. The three first figures on the left give the special number for the series, and the three on the left form what Mr. Tiffany calls the French decimal system, and specify the class and section in which the work appears. In this example the French philatelic journals begin with the number 140001.

The second column gives the name of the journal, the third the name of the editor and the fourth the town where it appeared. These two particulars are indispensable for distinguishing between publications issued under the same title.

We may note in the fourth column the names of the cities of Paris, Brussels, Rome, Geneva, Constantinople, Montreal, Lisbon, Amsterdam, Esch-sur-Alzette, Rio de Janeiro, etc, situated in all parts of the world and in places where French is not the language of the country. It would be very easy to quote other journals written in more or less correct French? in Italy, Greece, Romania and Egypt: we do not mention this to accuse the author of omissions but to show the unreliable base on which he rests. Thus, Le Timbre, a publication of the Netherlands Society, essentially Dutch in origin, is separated from Nederlandsch Tydschrift, its elder brother and twin. We think it would be better to use a geographical classification which for Mr Tiffany's first sections would not mix pell-mell the work of a number of countries of essentially different origin, and would not separate items whose origins are incontestably the same.

The fifth column gives the number of volumes and issues for the journal. The sixth gives the dates of the first appearance and of the last number published to 31st December 1891.

These data make it possible to find easily the details of the journal required, but it is a chronological index rather than a true catalogue. All the same we can see that, for the information we can derive from this useful list, for the classification of all the philatelic and bibliographic publications, we owe gratitude to Mr Tiffany in the first place.

P.S. Some of our correspondents have asked what is the value of various philatelic publications. Before giving our point of view on this we would be happy to know the opinions of the leading collectors on this collection. We will say only that the price for the journals will vary according to the age of the journal, the number of copies issued which will determine its rarity, its intrinsic interest, and whether it is a single isolated issue, a set of issues forming a complete volume or a complete run, but it is difficult to give precise guidelines. It is even harder to say anything definite about other items. Publications' importance because of their scope or their scientific interest are the only ones that can be given exactly, and again it will depend on their age and whether they have been superseded and will no longer appear anywhere but in the history of philatelic bibliography.

We shall be pleased to receive all communications on this important question.

Neuilly, 10 February 1892

In our previous articles we have described what a good thing it would be to draw up a catalogue of philatelic publications. We have shown how using the two works by Mr Tiffany, that of Mr Bosredon, and the catalogue of the Dresden Society's Library (this occupies nineteen pages of Vertrauliche Mittheilung no.14, of 15th January 1892), and using the numbers given in these works, we can denote the items we seek from collectors by giving a single number with the initial letters T for Tiffany, B for Bosredon, D, the Dresden Society. Mr Tiffany has given us an interesting account of the point he has reached in his work and has informed us of the difficulties that have halted his publication. Though we may criticize certain points in Mr Tiffany's work, we fully acknowledge that his is a model to follow and that we need only modify the detail.

First of all, philatelic works should be divided according to the materials they deal with. Mr Tiffany uses nine classes: 1. Journals; 2. Catalogues; 3. Auction Catalogues of public sales; 4. Miscellaneous works; 5. Regulations and works appertaining to Philatelic Societies; 6. Lists of addresses; 7. Albums; 8. Price-lists; 9. Works containing materials of interest to collectors. This classification does not strike us as very methodical. We will allow the first class, that for journals. We do know that the first philatelic publication were catalogues or at least current price-lists for all countries. However, we shall put journals in the first place, as they the most numerous and important class, and the one for which a complete list can easily be drawn up.

We will also accept the second class, catalogues, on condition that it includes only those claiming to give an exact list of the stamps known at the date of publication, that the list is simple, and that it includes the prices asked for the stamps. As examples we may quote on one hand the catalogue by Mr Potiquet, the first to be published, and the 7th edition of Mr Moen's catalogue. This latter, like many others, is not a current-price list.

It appears that Mr Tiffany has included in this, catalogues whose special aim is to enumerate the stamps of a particular country. We would bring these together with monographs or complete and developed studies of the stamps of a single country, or of a particular topic and with the general works which are only a type of monograph. To us, this is a third class to be called: General Treatise, Monographs and Special Catalogues.

In a fourth class we would put Official documents relating to stamp issues, covering Laws decrees, regulations and posters published by governments. This is the class which Mr entitles: works containing materials of interest to collectors.

In a fifth class we place Current price-lists, prospectuses and circulars for the sale of stamps.

A sixth is reserved for Albums, but this seems to us of very limited interest and we only include it for completeness.

The seventh class covers the catalogues of public Auction sales, so frequent abroad at present.

An eighth comprises the Statutes of Societies, with their annual reports and their publications apart from bulletins.

A ninth is reserved for books of Addresses, Annuals and the Almanacs put out by dealers.

Many magazines, reviews and journals deal incidentally with stamps and publish articles worth keeping. these could usefully form a tenth class.

The eleventh will cover everything that does not fit into one of the earlier ones, such as Drawings, Caricatures, Photographs, Music, etc.

Works dealing with Bibliography form the twelvth and last class.

If we now arrange these twelve classes in the above order, prefixing each with a capital letter A to L, the presence of this letter will indicate the intended class. Here is the list

- A.) Journals
- B.) Catalogues
- C.) General works, monographs and special catalogues
- D.) Official documents relating to stamps
- E.) Current prices, prospectuses and circulars
- F.) Albums
- G.) Catalogues of public auction sales
- H.) Statutes, Yearbooks and reports of Societies
- I.) Address books, Annuals and Almanacs from dealers
- J.) Articles published in non-philatelic journals
- K.) Various publications relating to philately, but not fitting into any of the earlier classes
- L.) Philatelic Bibliography

The point on which we most differ from Mr Tiffany's plan is the classification of the sections. Our critique has shown how fragile his basis is: it separates countries that definitely speak the same language and lumps together others with absolutely different origins. Why, for example, do the United States, the English colonies and Great Britain form these sections, when they all speak the same language, when France and Belgium form a single one? From this aspect, Mr Tiffany's classification is absolutely silly. We would prefer to take as our starting point the alphabetical order of countries as given in a document inserted into No.1 of Revue Philatélique Suisse in 1892. The Universal Postal Convention, signed at Vienna on the fourth of July 1891 gives us the alphabetical nomenclature of the powers that signed the treaty as given at the head of it. We have simply added numerals to the order.

52 countries in all, for the moment. The objection has been made that some of these States do not as yet have a philatelic literature.

This is true, but in putting out stamps they are bound to publish decrees which will be collected in the official journal of each country, and so it will be possible so far to find material to put in the fourth class, Official Documents. Also, we may note that Mr Tiffany leaves large gaps in the numbers in his list, to accommodate items not yet represented in his main classes.

The order used for our two main divisions, sections and classes, matters little. The Roman figures always indicate the sections, the capital letters the classes. Should the classes be a division of the sections, or should the classes be divided into sections. our preference is for the first option, which unites all a country's publications into one group. However, someone else might prefer to group together all the publication of one type, journals for example, whatever their country of origin.

Now, whether the section is divided into classes, or the classes into sections, how do we arrange the items that constitute them.

In the Stamp Collector's Library Companion, Part 1 Journals, Mr Tiffany arranges the journals in the order of their publication. He places in a first column the name of the journal, preceded by an order number. A second column gives the effective number of issues, though we hardly know why he distinguishes this from the real number, by using double numbers for a grouping of two monthly issues. This distinction strikes us as useless.

The third column gives the name of the editor, the fourth the country of publication. The fifth gives the number of volumes and issues that have appeared. Finally, the last one gives the months and year, the date of its last issue.

All this information should be enough to distinguish between all the philatelic publications. However, this classification makes it difficult to find out the title of a journal. it needs to be complemented by a list of journals in alphabetical order. Would it not thus be better to use an alphabetical classification by names of journals? Our readers must be the judge.

For other classes of publication, we may use an analogous method in each section or class, with a slight change of order:

1 st column	Name of Author
2 nd column	Title of Publication
3 rd column	Place of Publication
4 th column	No. of Volumes, No. of Issues, etc.
5 th column	Date of Publication

A chronological order could be adopted for the various series, as for the journals. Perhaps alphabetical order would be more convenient for researchers. Chronological order would call for an alphabetical index, as for journals.

We look on chronological order as the most rational but we think alphabetical order will be easier for research unless one has a more or less complete knowledge of what has been published up to a given time. It brings together items with the closest affinity and enables them to be distinguished more easily.

WHAT WILL BE THE BEST WAY TO A GERMAN BIBLIOGRAPHIC WORK ON PHILATELY?

Thanks to the stimulus given by Herr Diena in Postwerthzeichen, the history of philatelic literature has begun to interest the leading philatelists more and more in recent years. Obviously, the compilation of a German bibliography to raise fundamentally the overall level of philately, is so important as to make the production of such an essential work desirable as soon as possible.

It is completely obvious that the chief obstacle to the accomplishment of this plan is the financial difficulty caused by the great extent of the work to be covered. This must depend on the actual sale of it, so that it would be hard to find a publisher willing to take the risk. It is equally obvious that the only prospect of calling this bibliography into life depends on the societies raising the money. It is the aim of this article to search for the most suitable ways of supplying this help, without overloading the societies with work, since they themselves already have the task of promoting philatelic interests. This task cannot be neglected or perhaps even given up.

The first step needed is to divide up the work that will lead to a history of the German philatelic literature, to form the main supporter and propagator of the overall picture of philately, which cannot be rated too highly. To do this it is necessary to recruit the finest talent from the main German philatelic societies in Vienna, Dresden, Munich and Frankfurt-am-Main. (*) They will need to work closely together to deal with the material accumulated in their own libraries and archives, and at the same time to exchange materials for study amongst themselves. It would also be necessary to make available material from the other German societies which could be missing from the four main ones.

As part of the preliminaries, the prospective publisher of the work, who should if possible be the owner of his own philatelic magazine, should publish an appeal in his paper and also in the society magazines, which ought to give the necessary space free. This should ask all of the subscribers to the magazine and the members of societies and sections to subscribe to the parts of the projected work, perhaps at half of the later publication price or even less*. ()

- * Obviously these rebates can only be claimed by those societies and sections which can guarantee their members will take up a given number of copies of the work. Even so, no member can be compelled to subscribe to the work, though every member should look upon it as a privilege to help in the production of such an important work.

The publisher's journal will gain a considerable number of subscribers by this manipulation, whilst the societies and sections will guarantee the sale of the bibliography to the greater number of their members, and the agreement with the publisher will result in the sale of a significant number of copies of the work, according to the subscriptions taken out.

To make certain, the societies and sections should draw up an agreement with each member concerned, stressing the need for punctual payment to be made in advance for one or more parts. The actual payment should be noted on the back of the agreement. At the same time the societies and sections should be ready to pay the full published price for copies of the entire work for their libraries.

Philatelists who are members of several societies will obviously choose one of them as their source for the work, and let the other societies and sections to which they belong know of their decision.

An arrangement like this should make it easier to find a publisher for the work, since he will have a guarantee of a wider sale for the work in collecting circles. He can then later charge the full price for foreign sales which will ensure the publisher an adequate if not generous recompense for his undertaking.

This would entail a number of problems for the societies which however weigh lightly against the great gain to philately: so, may these guidelines for the practical fulfilment of the desired aim be put into effect as soon as possible.

- () Naturally these privileges can be enjoyed only by those organizations and chapters that are prepared to guarantee the purchase of a certain number of copies of this work for their members. Likewise, no member can be required to subscribe to this work but all members will doubtless feel honour-bound to participate in the success of such an important work by subscribing to it.

Postscript

While we were gathering material for Lindenberg's great Handbook of Philately, we felt the need for such a work, so we are prepared to support the publication of this work and to undertake its production at our own expense subject to the conditions cited above.

100 YEARS OF SCIENTIFIC PHILATELIC LITERATURE

HAMBURG-ALDINA SOCIETY FOR PHILATELY IN HAMBURG E.V.

100 years of scientific philatelic literature: a special exhibition of philatelic literature from all over the world.
From 1 to 31 October 1962 in the Hamburg State Library.

INTRODUCTORY WORDS

It is a great pleasure for me to extend my hearty good wishes to the Hamburg-Altona Society for Philately in Hamburg eV. I take it as a good sign that this exhibition is taking place in Hamburg, where we held the brilliant INTERPOSTA in 1959, to which friends came from all over the world, and at which we made close contact with international philately and formed stable contacts. The money we got for special stamps enabled us to finance many worthwhile books and special works, and it is very close to my heart to make all amateurs and philatelists aware of the specialist literature, which is an inexhaustible source for founding and widening their knowledge.

I should also like to take this opportunity to ask philatelists who have wide knowledge and perhaps already have a manuscript in their drawer to make their knowledge generally available by publishing their research. The German Society of Philatelists is always ready to consider them and help with advice and action.

My best wishes go with the Exhibition of Literature and I hope it will meet with every success.
Hermann Deniger.
President

The Hamburg-Altons Society for Philately has performed a task worthy of our thanks in setting up an exhibition of literature from the philatelic press.

For the active philatelist the literature is an essential task which he needs continuously for his hobby.

The broad mass of our collectors need constantly reminding how much they need the knowledge they can only obtain from the philatelic literature. The opinion sometimes expressed that all the collector needs is to know his way round the catalogue is basically false. With its forthcoming exhibition, collecto once more of the importance of our literature.

The State Society also thanks the Hamburg State Library for making available the space for the exhibition, the exhibition personnel for their work and the care which is needed for every exhibition of this kind.

May the attendance at the exhibition and its effect on collectors richly reward those concerned for the trouble they have taken.

Köhler

Chairman

Hamburg/Schleswig-Holstein State Society, members of the Soccity of German Philatelists.

The promotion of philatelic literature has always been seen as an important task in the Hamburg-Altona Society for Philately. The Society supports a philatelic library and still runs a philatelic readers' circle, which takes the German-language journals and makes them available to members. Numerous publications have appeared from the pens of members, with Hamburg predominating, they showed that the importance of philatelic literature was recognised early. In the last years of the war, the library was totally destroyed by bombing. An extensive collection of specialist literature was built up again with the help of members. In 1958 the Society moved to new premises in the State Library, to make their collection available to the widest possible circle of philatelist. The library thus became the basis of a newly-created section of the State Library. The philatelic City Library in Munich gets thousands of users a year, so it can be seen at once that a similar specialist library is needed for the North German region.

IN 1892, Supreme Court Justice Suppantschitsch, who had been an honorary member of the Hamburg Philatelic Club since 1874, pointed out that there was so much philatelic literature that the layman cannot cover it all. What can we say about the smount of philatelic literature available since? The Munich Library has a stock of about 15,000 volumes today. it is now practically impossible for a single person to keep an eye on the entire literature, so that some convenient way of divideing up the task must be thought out.

The fact that the first philatelic publications appeared in 1862 enables us to celebrate the centenary of philatelic literature today. The first catalogue to appear in Germany was put out in 1862 by Thramburg's heirs. Catalogues appeared at approximately the same time in Strasberg (Berger-Levrault) and Burningham (Mac-Millan). The exhibition will give collectors and enthusiasts a survey of the range of specialist literature, arranged by spheres of interest. The whole field of philately covered; we have found space not only for classical philately but also for modern trends and journals from all over the world.

May this exhibition help to inspire beginners, enable more advance people to make progress, and give pleasure. The Society will work closely with the State Library to build ip a significant philatelic division in Hamburg.

Guide to the exhibition

Specialist Journals of the World

Ten wall-cases show a panorama of the 360 philatelic journals from some 55 countries currently appearing all over the world. Serious researchers can consult a card-index of all journals under supervision.

II Specialist Textbooks

29 free-standing showcases give a cross-section of home and foreign literature, starting with the oldest German handbook from the year 1863 and extending to the most recent new publications.

Where possible two examples will be shown, one showing the cover and the other opening at an interesting page of text. Here, again, serious researchers may examine a third copy under supervision.

The arrangement of the books does not imply anything as to quality. The order of the exhibits may be changed to incorporate important new items.

Introduction

You now have a further volume of LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN, which shows that philatelic research has been uninterrupted in the year 1994. It strikes me as remarkable, that there is always fresh philatelic research, which is happily then secured for us in the form of literature. I am perfectly sure that coming years will also bring fresh knowledge and research results.

I would like again and still more urgently to give all philatelists the chance to publish the results of their research. It is not within the province of organisation to keep back philatelic knowledge – for whatever reason. Every publication of research results will not only help in the shaping of a collection, it can also give the impetus for someone else's research. Curiosity is the first step towards research activity.

Particularly large amounts of philatelic research are carried out by the Working Parties of the BDPh. His LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN testifies to the intensive, directed and successful search for the answers to philatelic questions and problems. Pretty well every philatelic specialist will find a suitable Working Party for his speciality, as the following list will show. You can always get information from the Society's Research and Literature Group, with its leader Frans – Josef Lindauer.

At this point I should like to express my heartiest thanks to Franz – Josef Lindauer for compiling LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN 1994. Every reader will certainly appreciate how much goes into bringing together the individual items. I can only hope that this special commitment will again be revealed in future years by the appearance of further volumes of LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN.

Particular thanks are due to the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History, without whose support this volume of LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN could not have appeared.

Afterword

Dear User of this Literatur – Nachrichten

As you have already seen in the Foreword, both this and the 1991 edition of Literatur – Nachrichten can be obtained in electronic data form from Phil Creativ Verlag, BDPh – PhILA SCHOP, Post Box 10, 41366 Schwalmtal.

Although several of my lady colleagues – led by Frau Johanna Finger – and my own dear wife have tried to correct all the mistakes, you can be sure to still find a few.

Hence, may I ask all users to tell me of any mistakes in printing or of fact. If an issue of journal or an article has been left out, please also let me know about that. These mistakes can then be corrected on the computer.

So thanks in advance to all who write in.

In conclusion may I thank all my helpers in the Working Party who have indexed your publications, in particular Messrs Hartwig Danesh, Schwelm, Ulrich Jobsky, Wiehl, Jörg Maier, Munich, Rainer von Scharpen, Mainz, Gerhard Trägel, Leverkusen, Christain Schunck, Trier and Jürgen Ząszewski, Manching, who have dealt with many foreign journals, and our foreign readers. Without your work, LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN would only be half as valuable/

Thanks again.

Franz – Josef Lindauer

Leader of Group on Research and literature.

[Foreword]

Formerly Philat. Trans. 020.

Circular N°2 comes to our members very late. We trust you will understand that a very great deal of work had to go into the accurate preparation of our present list of philatelic abbreviations; we now hope the list will meet with your undivided approval.

Hearty thanks for the many letters, which reached us in a torrent up to the end of 1956. Unfortunately, it was not possible for us to deal with them all right away - partly because of a shortage of voluntary secretarial help. However, we hope to keep abreast of our current mail now.

Please support our work by recruiting further members. The minimum annual subscription is DM 12. Our friends from Middle and East Germany do not have to pay any subscription.

Our work has been made more difficult from the beginning by anonymous parties. There have been attempts to prevent our access to lists of literature. We are always grateful for contributions, which we will keep confidential if desired.

As Jean Paul Sartre said in his book Dirty Hands, he has had no definite thoughts about philately yet. Anybody who believes in German philately today and wants to use it to advance his own personal ambitions should bear in mind that his time will soon be over. What Sartre said at the end will refer to him, Not applicable!

This Circular runs to 16 pages again. The continuation on the literature of the Saar will be found in the next Circular. It will also contain an alphabetical index to all philatelic journals as a supplement to the existing index of abbreviations. As usual, we shall be grateful for any additions and corrections. Subsequent national indexes will be divided by subject: the indexes that have already appeared for Württemberg and the Saar region will be republished later in this new form.

The current publications from *Livedi are unfortunately held over for reasons of time, but we will finish all the existing ones in the next Circular.

The “Saar Handbook” is Coming

The State Society for Stamp Collectors of the Saarland is bringing out next month the first edition of its Handbook of the Postage Stamps of the Saar Region and the Saarland.

The book is appearing in loose-leaf form and the intention is to put out a new supplement every three months. About 10 issues are planned. The work will cover all stamp issues of the Saar region and the Saarland. They are described in detail, and there is also an account of the postal history of the Saar region and of its pre-philately. As well as the stamps of the Saar region and the Saarland, it will include all other topics such as cancellations, entires, military post, etc., based on the most recent research, the results from the workers in these fields. The book contains several hundred illustrations.

The special price for subscribers per issue of 48 sides is DM 3 including postage, due on receipt of the issue.

Subscriptions can be obtained from the Society for Philatelic Literature, Post Box 789, Duisberg.

Problems of Philatelic Documentation

Hardly 22 years after the introduction of the first postage stamps in England by Rowland Hill, the Strasburg book-seller and printer, Oscar Berger-Levrault met the needs of the large number of collectors who had appeared in England, France, Germany and North America by putting out a stamp catalogue. This, which appeared on 17th October 1861, is reckoned to be the world's first philatelic publication. However, nobody could then foresee how important philatelic literature was to become in the field of philatelic studies. Apart from the fact that philatelic science is unthinkable without literature, it became steadily more important when the increasing number of new issues after 1900 compelled many collectors to give up general collecting and concentrate more and more on special topics (groups of states, individual countries, motifs and themes, air mail, pre-philately, pre-cancels, first day covers, entires, etc.) This specialisation compelled the collectors to turn to the specialist literature for research results and information.

Now it is an unfortunate fact that only a fraction of all the research work published can appear in book form as a monograph, since it cannot always find a publisher willing to meet the high cost of publishing a relatively small edition with the necessary illustrations. A considerable part of the research results only appears as articles in the specialist press which, in view of its 95 years of existence and international expansion into philatelic libraries, has at least twice the space of monographs at its disposal.

On searching for source information it is important for the collector to know which periodical (or almanac, yearbook, calendar or the like, which can also contain useful articles) will contain the research results relevant to his work, and in what year it appears. This leads to the need for the production of source guides (biographies, indexes) which was recognised as early as 1891 by the Austrian Senate President, Victor Suppant, so that he produced a Bibliography and Reference Book of all German Philatelic Literature from its Beginning to the end of 1891, with the help of the Munich firm of Larisch that still exists there.

His example was followed by A. E. Glasewald, the editor of the (Mitteldeutschen Philatelisten-Zeitung) and founder of the Gossnitz Philatelic Society. Carl Beck, the editor of the Deutscher Philat. Bücherwurm, Alexander Bungerz, the artist and author of the Grosse Lexikon der Philatelie, District Judge H. Fraenkel, Rudolf Krasemann (Bibliography of the most important special works on the stamps of individual countries), Friedrich Leitenherger (Bibliography of German language literature), the Potsdam Librarian Fr. Wilh. Thalmann (Index to articles in philatelic journals), Max Ton, the author of the Handbook of Philatelic Literature. Unfortunately, the international reference work on philatelic literature, Mondial (1936), begun by Fritz Billig (then in Vienna, now a publisher in Jamaica, NJ, USA) remains unfinished, and C. Schmittdiel, who was working out the guidelines for contributions to the projected General Index to the German Language Periodical Literature did not return from the last World War. The same fate befell the Handbook and Catalogue of the Philatelic Literature of the World announced by Karl Scharfenberg in Magazin für Philatelistischen Literature in 1950.

A very promising project was the Répertoire Bibliographique de la Presse Philatélique financed by Dr. Ing. Giulio Tedeschi Co-founder of the International Philatelic Press Federation (FIPP) and edited by Professor Francis P. Rénaut. This was supplied free of charge to members of FIPP along with the FIPP Bulletin. Unfortunately, this was discontinued after 4 parts had appeared because of insufficient subscriptions.

Abbreviations for Philatelic Journals as used in the Index to Philatelic Libraries

For many years collectors and philatelists have paid more and more attention to articles and supporting material on philatelic literature. However, all these articles and publications can only be accessed if it is known what is available. In Germany, and also in England and America, these works have been indexed so that today we philatelists have extensive possibilities of locating the earlier literature.

However, the production of such an index calls for the use of given abbreviations which should not overlap. An authoritative table of these has been available in Germany for a long time in the Philatelic Section of the Munich City Library. However, some of these abbreviations do not agree with the ones commonly used in England and America. To reach international agreement our second Chairman, Christoph Otto Muller of Steinbach and Wörthsee has carried on a lengthy correspondence, as a result of which he has now produced the accompanying internationally applicable table of abbreviations. Some older references must thus be corrected. Not too far in the future all libraries will be able to work with the most modern form of the list of abbreviations.

Today we give a list in alphabetical order by abbreviation and another arranged alphabetically by journal will follow.

The following special points should be noted:-

- before the author means this is a monograph. Without this dot, the item is an article in a magazine, festschrift, etc.
- * before the journal indicates it is still appearing currently (end 1956)

To avoid confusion, the abbreviation BnBZ: Berner Briefmarken-Zeitung, will be used to distinguish this from Kosak's magazine BBZ: Berliner Briefmarken-Zeitung. Since SBZ: Sachsische Briefmarken-Zeitung, SchBZ will represent Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung. SiP means Sieger Post. SiP will also represent the current volumes of Sieger Post appearing as Deutsche Briefmarken-und Flugpost-Zeitung.

The abbreviations in our Literature Index will be as given in the following list for forthcoming publications.

See the original for the abbreviations.

THE PIONEERS OF DUTCH PHILATELY - PART III

CORNELIS VAN RINSUM

The Continental Philatelic Magazine No. 7

Van Rinsum probably had to recover from the commotion he stirred up because the number 7 issue of his periodical was not issued until Dec. 15, 1869, four months after number 6. The 7th number had the heading "New Serie". It looked outstanding and was arranged better than the previous number. There were large advertisements, including some of the well-known London dealers Young and Stockall and from Edwin Clark. The content was of much lesser quality. It showed that Van Rinsum was still too young and had no life experience. In a very long and very personal, also unreadable article, he attacked Charles A. Lyford who became a personal enemy of Van Rinsum. Instead of considering the case closed and to use the goodwill created for his magazine he used it to fight a feud, which is of no interest to any reader. In spite of the good impression this number gave at first sight, we see that after reading, it is the end of The Continental Philatelic Magazine.

On Jan. 15 1870, a number 8 was issued but that was the end. Van Rinsum had debts. A dealer to whom he assigned albums for sale had swindled him. The dealer was George Steward Jr. from ... by fate ... from Boston.

The Trimbophilist

Van Rinsum was very energetic. Between all the above businesses, he saw the opportunity together with his friend Groenendijk to issue a philatelic paper called "The Trimbophilist". This paper, the first number issued in June 1869, was in Dutch. This was the first real Dutch philatelic magazine. It was a rarity of the highest caliber. In 1874, Tiffany in the description of his library called it number 1. This copy was now in the British Museum. Victor Suppantchitsch had pursued in vain to find the "Timbrophilist". He wrote Van Rinsum in 1896 but he had no longer a copy left. Even then a copy could no longer be found. It was therefore a pleasure to offer you a picture of the "Timbrophilist" number 2 of August 1, 1869. This copy, most likely the only one in existence, had been loaned kindly by Ms. C.J.Heilbron-Van Rinsum, the daughter of Van Rinsum, to be photographed.

According to Bacon, eight issues of this magazine were issued, July 1869/ Feb. 1870. But we doubt it.

"The Trimbophilist" was one of the reasons there was animosity between Van Rinsum and Lyford. This one had issued a "Timbrophilist" in America, a trashy paper mentioning ugly things about Van Rinsum.

The General Stamp Advertiser

Finally Van Rinsum also issued a magazine in English "The General Stamp Advertiser." The first and also its last issue appeared on June 1, 1870. I have never seen this paper and can't tell anything about it. There is a copy in the British Museum and one in the library of the "Collector's Club" in New York.

Van Rinsum also published several albums. The best known one was "Van Rinsum's Permanent Album" in four languages issued in Amsterdam in 1860. One example in very good condition was recently sold in an English auction. It went for more than I could afford.

It's understandable that all these activities had not the right influence on Van Rinsum studies. His father finally gave up and let him do what he wanted to do. So Van Rinsum became a stamp dealer. For several years we heard nothing from him. He married young. When he was 19, his first daughter was born. Having to take care of his family was possibly the reason why after such a good start he never published anything again. But he was a hard worker. Around 1880 he lived in Nieuwer-Amstel and in 1887 he moved to Diepenveen. There he had a known and flourishing stamp shop. He issued pricelists regularly and found him advertising in local and foreign magazines including in the yearbook 1891-1892 of the Dutch Society of Stamp Collectors and in the "Vereenigde Erball Mercur" of 1890. He also dealt in bulk he received among other sources from the Minnebroeder-cloister of Weert.

In 1892, his wife died quite young. His oldest daughter took care of the household now, which was not to the liking of Van Rinsum who loved both of children very much, and he was a good educator. In 1895, he decided to move in with his younger daughter in Lienden to free his older daughter to develop herself further. At the age of 50, Van Rinsum had a stroke and one of his arms became partially paralyzed. But he carried on energetically. With his arm supported by a book he kept busy sorting the postage stamps he loved. When his youngest daughter, now studying at a boarding school came home and wanted to talk to her father, he was too busy with his stamps. To be social she helped him sort the 1881 postage dues stamps. A job saved especially for her because of her young eyes. She wasn't interested very much and once played a trick on him, which resulted in some angry customers.

In 1899, Van Rinsum moved with his youngest daughter to Leiden. By then he must have been a well-known personality among stamp dealers and in collector circles. He received invitation for lectures but always refused them because of his paralyzed arm. He died after having lived an active life on February 14, 1910.

Van Rinsum never liked to talk about his publications. He viewed them as a sin of his youth. We don't agree with that. Taylor and associates are demanding a lot of attention again, especially with the Anglo-Saxon collectors. The publications from Van Rinsum are a grateful object for all who are interested in Taylor. Sins of our youth could be good for something.

We arrived at the end of a review of what happened at the beginning of philately. We have become acquainted with people that lived in totally different times. The things of interest to them are no longer the same for us. But they made philately the way it is now and with sadness we sometimes think back to that time "when postage stamps were still postage stamps"

PHILATELY IN HAMBURG 1862-1900.

It is not known when postage stamps were first collected in Hamburg, although the opportunity was there from 1840. The merchants of the Hanseatic city were trading and thus exchanging letters with the entire world. The carriers of the City Post and the six foreign post offices got letters every day from all countries in the German Union, Europe and the other side of the ocean. As early as 1850, citizens of Hamburg could buy Prussian stamps from the Prussian Head Post Office in the Goose Market, "post shillings" from the Schleswig-Holstein Head Post office in the Bleaching Green, and the letter-carriers from Thurn and Taxis brought in Bavarian, Swiss and French stamps. The Prussian postal service brought in Austrian and Saxon stamps as well as its own. Also, the Hanover Head Post Office sold inland and overseas stamps, whilst the letter-carriers of the City Post carried post bearing British, Brazilian and North American stamps.

All these stamps were collected just as coins were and exchanged and sold, not only in Hamburg but also in England, France, Germany, Belgium and the United States of America. However, it is still amazing to find a report that a stamp market existed in Hamburg in the second half of the 50s (i.e. 1855 to 1860). It has not yet been discovered who was dealing in stamps at this time in Hamburg, but it was probably dealers in cigarettes, paper wares, antiques and antiquarians. Some well-known German journals referred to "stamp collections" in 1862, such as the Leipziger Illustrierte Zeitung and the fashion magazine Bazar; the daily press referred to the Great Universal Exhibition in London 1862, where stamps were also shown.

However, there were no aides for the collector such as catalogues or journals anywhere, apparently: otherwise there would be no point in an advert in Notes & Queries of 23rd July 1860 in which S. F. Cresswell asked for price lists, catalogues and periodical articles about postage stamps. On 17th September 1861, the Strasburg book dealer and publisher Oscar Berger-Levaul sent his collector friends a lithographic catalogue of 973 postage stamps known to him, asking to be told of any others. The following year, a series of catalogues, specialist magazines and books for the collector relating to forgeries appeared in France, England and Germany.

Hamburg in 1862 saw the publication of the first German stamp catalogue Übersicht aller bekannten, von 1849 bis 1862 emittieren Franco-Marken [Survey of all known stamps issued from 1849 to 1862] by Tramburg's Erben, Zollenbrücke 2, Hamburg, whereas the first German philatelic journal, the Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler was published on 1st May 1863 by Zschesche & Köder [not Roder - BJB] in Leipzig. Stamps albums had been published by G. Wuttig of Leipzig in the previous year.

Another stamp journal, Der Deutsche Briefmarken-Sammler was published in Hamburg by the Spiro Brothers, unfortunately only a few issues were published. The set in the Hamburg City Library fell victim to the fire bombs in 1943. However, the Museum for Hamburg History got a photocopy of the London set. The note in 1869 that young people were offering stamps cheap under the name of certain firms is of particular interest.

These are the only faint traces of philatelic life in our father city.

Not till the end of the Franco-German War, which sent philately into the background, did L. May of Hamburg publish the Allgemeinen Briefmarken-Anzeiger from the firm of F. W. Rudemacher. This survived for ten years and only ceased in 1890 as the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung in Dresden. It was for a year the Society organ of the North German and Dresden societies. Its editor, L. May, founded the Philatelic Journal Readers' Circle on 24th November 1871 with Ed. Grundstikker as President. On 1st October 1872 this developed into the Philatelists' Club, which met every week at 15 Pelzerstrasse under the aegis of L. May. Like all societies, it concerned itself with forgeries. The Society sponsored the then important Philatelic Congress in Lübeck on 14th July 1872. Its members included V. Suppantschitsch, who drew up the Society's statutes on green paper: the idea of having lectures on philately in the Society is worth noting. The composer V. Hönecke dedicated his Postage Stamp Waltz for pianoforte to this Society. It was published by the firm of A. H. Benjamin, Hamburg in 1873. In 1800, the Hamburger Briefmarken-Anzeiger also published a novella Leontine's Stamp Album.

The stamp trade must have been quite extensive in Hamburg. Unfortunately we only have a few of the price lists, e.g. one from Oscar Ulex in 1871. The same firm put out a detailed illustrated price catalogue in 1872. Unfortunately, however, our father city became notorious throughout the world's collecting circles because of a forgery industry. Particularly well-known was the paper dealer J. H. Behrmann, 24 Fuhrentwiete, who were able to put out their forgeries unhindered for a decade, so that Hamburg shared the bad reputation of Leipzig, Nuremburg and Dresden in this respect.

In 1862 J. B. Moens in Brussels and [P.] L. Pemberton in London, wrote about stamp forgeries. To aid the collector, O. Kreuchauff of Hamburg published in 1872, an address book of dealers 100 Adressen von Briefmarken-Händlern aus allen Weltteilen [100 Addresses of Stamp Dealers from all Parts of the World]. O. Menze published a second edition in 1876 150 Adressen der momentan wirklich existirenden und bestrenommirten Briefmarkenhändler [150 Addresses of Currently Active and Reputable Stamp Dealers]. The Schwindler-Adressbuch from R. Mayerhofer, Hamburg 1877, also belongs with this group.

The foundation of the Philatelists' Club coincided with the publication of Theodor Müller's Regular Weekly and Market Reports from the Hamburg, Lübeck and Bremen Stamp Markets, which appears in lithographed form from 1st September 1872. The Stamp A.-G. project also appears here in 1874. Even a Postage Stamp word Game with dice was put out in 1873 by H. Rübke of Hamburg; however, it has not been possible to find out anything about it.

One of the best-known stamp dealers in Hamburg was Julius Goldner who is known to have bought the remainder of the postage stamps from the City Post Office for 1,000 marks cash, then to meet his obligations he got the lithographer C. Adler to produce new impressions of the 1¼ and 2½ schilling from the original plates.

The stamp dealer, A. Bestelmeyer, moved from Ulm to Hamburg, Pelzerstrasse 6, on 1st October 1874; forgeries of the 1¼ and 2½ schilling stamps, originally printed in Berlin, were traced to him.

The Philatelisten Club was dissolved in 1878 for reasons not known to us.

In July 1878, O. Owitch and S. E. G. Brasch founded the Hamburg Postage Stamp Society which, according to its statutes, initially used Senf's Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal (in existence since 1874) as its Society journal. The Society met in Kloth's Beer Hall on Kleine Bäcker-strasse. From 24th May 1879 it had A. Sternberg and O. Meyer as its chairmen and published its Society reports in the Hamburger Briefmarken-Zeitung. This appeared from 15th November 1878 and was edited by A. Owitch. It acted as the Society organ for many German societies, and also published the Reports of the Hamburg Postage Stamp Market. It appeared for the last time on 20th June 1880.

However, Owitch of Hamburg-Uhlenhorst, published the Welt-Briefmarkenhändler-Adressbuch [Address Book of World Stamp Dealers]. During this period some costumes in the Hamburg carnival procession were made entirely of postage stamps. One such costume was preserved for a long time by the firm of Glasewald.

It then quietened down in Hamburg philatelically. Only the barrel organs on the Hamburg streets played the "Postage Stamp Polka" by J. V. Hamm, which was published in 1863 by C. H. Siegel of Hamburg: people often sang along with it as well.

Also, the Thalia Theatre presented a "dramatic trifle in one act" by Marie von Ernest, with the title Briefmarken. It was given as a curtain-raiser to plays by Möser (e.g. War in Peace). It was given on Sunday, 7th November 1880 at 18:30 hours, and on 15th February (?) – (A playbill has survived).

We do not encounter the foundation of a new society till the year 1885. At the instance of A. E. Glasewald, who tried to form a branch of the Bavarian Philatelic Society in September, the Hamburg Society for Philately was started on 14th October under the leadership of Dr. J. Joseph of Gerhofstrasse 19. It met at Deicke on the Steinhöft. Its statutes appeared in October of the same year. On its 4th anniversary on 9th October 1889 appeared the "Commercial Anthem of the Hamburg Society for Philately" and in January 1892 came the Revised Statutes of the Society.

On 9th and 10th June 1894 it promoted the 2nd North-West German Roving Meeting, and on 25th and 25th(?) July 1897 the IX German Philatelic Day in Hamburg. The report of the latter was published.

A stamp collectors' society was also set up in Altona, probably in 1886 or 1887, as the Hamburg Society wished it good luck on its founders' day in 1887 in conjunction with the opening of the new headquarters from the postal service in Stephansplatz: "Post und Telgraphie in Hamburg".

An "Exchange Offers" catalogue was announced by W.L. Oemler, Hamburg-Uhlenhorst, but it did not appear.

The reports of meetings of the Society for Philately were published in the journal "Der Philatelist", Dresden, from its beginning to 1919.

On 15th August 1888, the “Hamburg-Altona Stamp Collectors’ Society” came into being. A branch was started in Noss in 1896. This became known from its “Society Reports” which appeared from 1896. Later they had the title “Annual Report, with register of members and library catalogue”. It also published a “Beer Magazine for the Hamburg-Altona Stamp Collectors’ Society from the beginning of its 10th Anniversary Celebrations to 3rd September 1898”.

From 16th September 1891 onwards the Hamburg Postage Stamp Market took place every fortnight in the Marienthal Beer Hall (today Thalia-Theatre-Place). On 3rd February 1892 it moved to the Hammonia Meeting House in Hohe Bleicken and on 4th January 1893 it returned to the Marienthal Beer Hall. In July 1894 the “H. Lüdemann International Stamp Market, 11 Gäuse market” appeared.

The stamp trade kept on growing in Hamburg: Suppantchitsch mentions in his bibliography (1890) the price lists of 42 Hamburg dealers since 1864, including J.H. Behrmann, P. Siegert, Ph. Spiro, O. Ulex, A. Wülbern but not J. Goldner. In 1891, A. Wülbern published his “The stamps of Heligoland”, Bremen 1892.

On 19th September 1892, Max Warming, 124 Eppendorfer Weg, founded the “International Stamp Exchange Institute”, which gave rise to the “Merker International Postage Stamp Collectors’ society” under his direction. Its proceedings were printed in September 1893. This Society puts out printed and lithographic society proceedings. E. Bohpenstengel took over the direction on 30th April 1894.

The “German Exchange and Purchase Society for Stamp Collectors, Hamburg” was founded on 10th December 1894. Its publications date from 16th October 1897. It has been called “Purchase and Exchange Society” since the year 1900.

A journal “Norddeutsche Briefmarken-Post” appeared in Hamburg 1894/95, as did the “Journal für Markenkunde” 1894.

In the years 1895 and 1898, H. Berger published his “Illustrated Price Catalogue of Telegraph and Cancellation Stamps of the individual German States”.

The last society to be founded in the 19th century was the “North German Philatelic Society of Hamburg”, in October 1898. It joined with the Hamburg-Altona Stamp Collectors’ Society” on 1st January 1905. Its well-known members are Max Norden, Rob Engel, Röper, Lossau.

Unfortunately not much can be learned about the first forty years of Hamburg philately, but there must be much to be learned from reports of meetings, journals and the legacies and memories of many collectors.

Introduction

For the first time, a second issue of LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN appears in one calendar year. The present volume lists all publications appearing on the philatelic market in the year 1993. Again it will be seen from the total number of titles that philatelic research is nowhere near coming to an end. We may confidently expect the coming years to bring fresh research results which will be of great importance for philately as a whole.

The chief originators of this new philatelic knowledge are out numerous working parties who devote themselves resolutely and with great care to their special fields of work, whether classic, postal-history or thematic. But we should not forget the philatelic research carried out in our local and regional societies, or by individual male and female collectors. We know that outstanding publications are often put out without connection to a society concerned with the same topic.

The BDPh e.V. has made it their business to persuade all male and female philatelists actively researching in their particular field to publish their results and so preserve them for posterity. They are naturally concerned not with the size of the publications, but their actual content. The Society groups on research and literature can offer advice on how to get a publication issued.

Also, I would like to give particular thanks to the editor of this LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN 1992, Franz – Josef Lindauer, who has devoted many hours to bringing together this collection of all philatelic publications. We all know what it means to enter a mass of individual data into the computer.

Further thanks go to the Foundation for the Promotion of philately and Postal History e.V. , who have made possible the production of this edition of LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN.

Afterword

Dear User of this LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN

As you have already read in the preface, this LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN and the one for the Year 1991 is available online from Phil creative Verlag, BDPh* - Phila Schop, Post box 10, 41366 Schwalmtal.

Although many of my lady colleagues – led by Fran Johanna Finger – and my own dear wife have attempted to detect and correct all the mistakes, you are certain still to find a few.

Hence, may I ask users to let me know of any mistakes in transcription or fact. If an issuer of a journal or an article has not been evaluated or entered, please let me know of this also. These mistakes can then be corrected on the electronic computer.

Thanks in advance to everyone who contacts me.

In conclusion may I thank all my helpers in the working parties who have helped with their publications, in particular messrs Hartwig Danesch, Schwelm, Ulrich Jobsky, Wiehl, Jong Maier, Leverkusen and Jürgen Zalaszewski, manching, who have made themselves responsible for many foreign journals. Without their work, LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN would only be half as valuable.

Again, thanks.

Franz – Josef Lindauer

Chairman of Research and literature Seciton.

To our members

The Society of German Philatelists eV is again in a position to supply its members with a new volume of LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN, thanks to the generous support of the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History. This collection of literature is one of many very important collections recently made available to all members of the constituent societies of the BDPh. We hope that the Society chairmen will call the attention of their members to the existence and importance of LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN and also make it available to them. A Society Library available to all members would be particularly suitable for this. Because – and this cannot be repeated often enough – philatelic literature is a must for every collector, whether a beginner or more advanced.

However, a Society Library should not be limited just to stocking stamp catalogues, though these are certainly a useful tool. By philatelic literature we naturally mean philatelic textbooks, Society circulars, journals information sheets and pamphlets. These form one of the backbones of philately.

This 91st edition of LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN again gives a survey of the enormous output of German philately, with particular emphasis on the philatelic research work in the active societies of the BDPh. It is really amazing that enough philatelic publications to keep on filling LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN continue to appear, when they generally represent fresh philatelic research. We hope to continue it all for the coming years. I am certain that Vol. 92 of LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN will reach the same extent as the one now before us.

In conclusion I would like to thank our section Head for Research and Literature, Franz – Josef Lindauer of Soest, for his work in compiling this LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN. He has spent many hours of his free time sitting in front of a computer to produce this work. We can only hope and wish that this level of commitments will be maintained in the coming years.

Introduction

The SOEST COLLOQUIA have been held in Soest since the year 1970 as meetings of the Bund Deutscher Philatelisten. From the 4th, in the year 1974, onwards they have been devoted exclusively to the fields of research and literature in philately. The importance of these meetings has always been underlined by the use of a special cancellation containing the motto of the particular colloquium:

4th SOEST COLLOQUIUM 1974: “Research in philately”

5th SOEST COLLOQUIUM 1979: “Research and literature”

6th SOEST COLLOQUIUM 1983 concentrated on philatelic literature as represented by a distinguished book in the names of C. Lindenberg, F. Kalckhoff, G. Kobold, A.E. Glasewald and H.E. Sieger

7th SOEST COLLOQUIUM 1985: “Modern philately – research – enquiry confirmation

8th SOEST COLLOQUIUM 1988: “50 years of the Cancellations Guild” The motto was “Without Cancellations Philately”, but it did not appear on the cancellation.

The 9th SOEST COLLOQUIUM was held this year from 31 May to 2nd June 1991, and had the motto “Philately and Communication”. The special cancellation related to a special anniversary to which a small exhibition on “Philatelic literature” was devoted:

“40 years of LITERATUR NACHRICHTEN”.

This volume 89 for the year 1989 is thus practically a jubilee volume which the BDPH offers to the numerous friends of philatelic literature as a useful compendium in the same series as the FIP volumes. Its editor in chief, the present chairman of the Society Literature Section, Franz – Josef Lindauer, is celebrating a minor jubilee of his own, as this is the fifth time he has edited this extensive work. It is almost as large at 512 pages as its predecessor (528 pages), and 375 pages give a total of 4,957 references to literature, divided as follows between the individual sections.

- country references 2,135, special topics 2,04
- thematic references 709miscellaneous 99

All circulars and research reports from the working parties and study groups, and the motif groups of the BDPH have been covered. This indicates the importance of the work of these groups, to which all the members of societies affiliated to the BDPH or the FIP can belong.

The activities of these groups will and shall be reported on in future. As in previous volumes, a large number of philatelic journals have also been covered, and for this our grateful thanks are due to Hartwig Danesch, Schwelm; Johanna Fiuger, Wadersloh; Hermengild Lindauer, Soest; Esa Mattila, Espoo (Finland); Uwe Seif, Scharudorf; Gerhard Trogel, Leverjusen and Jürgen Zalaszewski, Manching. Another 119 literary productions were reviewed as well. The annual volume 89 and the “40 years of LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN” jubilee were also supplemented by a short review on the production of this publication. The “Archiv für philatelistische Literature” edited by Alfred Ihm, Wuusiedel, a member of the “Rhine-Daube” Cancellations Guild, ceased publication with no.5 of May 1950 in the third year of its existence. This meant that Christoph Müller, then in charge of the Philatelic Section of the Munich City Library, and chairman of the Literature Section of the BDPH at its 1949 meeting in Munich, had to carry on with the documentation began in the “Archiv”, which he had worked on along with Dr.F.Kalckhoff, H.Posselt and Alfred Ihm. Thus “LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN – PHILATELISTISCHER DIGEST” was born. The first number appeared in January 1951 as a modest affair of 20 pages in DIN A5 format. It appeared bimonthly in 6 numbers during the years 1951 and 1952, and quarterly up to the year 1962. From then onwards it was decided to publish it as an annual volume, sometimes divided into two.

The author of these lines thinks himself fortunate to have been a collaborator on LITERATUR – NACHRICHTEN from its Number 1 onwards. Unfortunately there were never many people on whom Christoph Otto Müller and his successors could rely to take part in this work over the course of the years, in contrast to the numerous national and international publications.

By the year 1962 this work was an indispensable part of the literary output of the BDPH and its creator, 10 years after the appearance of no.1, could point to 26 highest distinctions at international and national exhibitions, including the then customary “Diploma in The Gold Medal Class”.

From 1963 to 1974 Fritz Gadicke of Berlin succeeded Christoph Otto Muller as chairman of the literature Section: in 1975 he handed this position on to the Robert Höhn of Cologne, and the current Chairman of the BDPH Literature Section, Franz – Josef Lindauer, took over from him in 1985.

With thanks to these people and the others mentioned in connection with this volume, this jubilee volume now sets out on its journey to all the societies, working parties and sections and special group in the Bund Deutscher Philatelisten, and all country members of the FIP; again this is only possible because of the generous support from the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History.

CRITICAL CONSIDERATIONS ON THE PRESENT STATE OF PHILATELIC SOCIETIES AS REGARDS PHILATELY

Motto: Watch and carefully promote the Good,
 Pluck out the Bad by the root,
 To reach Perfection more nearly

The philatelic press often publishes opinions which do not correspond to the prestige and authority of the philatelic societies which are still expected to protect and promote the interests of philately in all directions. This has led me to try to hinder further harm to the prestige of the societies, which would in turn harm philately as a whole. I shall attempt to bring to light the reasons for this, and find the most suitable way to promote the further free development of philately.

It seems to me that heretofore there has in many cases been too little stress on the prestige and authority of the philatelic societies, and futile attempts have been made to base fruitful activity on the rules of the various German societies. So far this line has produced little or nothing, since up to the present the chief aim of many societies has been to help their members to build up their collections in the most cheap and convenient manner. However, this predominant aim of some philatelic societies must now give way to promoting prestige and authority. All our available energy must be directed against the present flood of forgeries and fraudulent products which threatens to engulf us, and towards delivering their producers and their accomplices into the hands of the law.

This cannot be done without greatly extending the authority and prestige of the societies, so that they can exert the necessary influence on the relevant legal and postal authorities and make it easier to punish fraudsters, forgers and receivers.

A systematic lead from the societies is an absolute precondition, and this can be given in the following way:-

I. By the formation of a Central Society for the entire German Reich and German-speaking part of foreign countries, to increase the prestige and authority of the philatelic societies and any associated devotees of philately. The only members of this society should be people who have given special services to philately and have shown themselves trustworthy. A list of candidates should be prepared, and members should vote for or against. The seat of this society must be at a neutral point of philatelic activity and given arbitrary powers to link together all the other societies and their sections. All societies must make it their serious business to report mis-usages direct to the central authority and to detect and punish forgers, fraudsters and receivers much more than formerly. The central society alone will have the resources to check allegations and follow them up. At the same time it will be necessary to build up a special fund (made up of special contributions from every society and section, depending on the number of members) to enable the central society to follow up investigations and proceedings.

An attempt should be made to bring all the small local societies that spring up like mushrooms into centralisation by making them sections of societies more at the centre of philatelic activity, and getting them to accept the rules of these. Then we shall illustrate the truth of the old saying "unity is strength".

A basic central society like this would have to be protected against getting burdened with unimportant trifles, hence only the philatelic societies and not their sections should have the right to contact directly the "Central Society for Raising the Prestige and Authority of Philatelic Societies". Naturally, as the sections are under the protection of their mother societies, they can apply to the latter, who will first check the complaint and then pass it on at their own discretion. The sections will retain their independence as before, since this procedure will only relate to profound questions of philately.

In my opinion it would be enough for the German Reich and other foreign German-speaking regions to have mother societies in the following uniformly-distributed locations:

- | | |
|--------------------|-------------------|
| 1. Dresden-Leipzig | 2. Berlin |
| 3. Munich | 4. Hamburg-Lübeck |
| 5. Vienna | 6. Basle |
| 7. Prague | |

All other societies could be linked with these as sections.

It would be a very good thing if the Dresden Society could take the initiative by choosing its best members and getting them to move towards writing the societies in the manner described and setting up the Central Society, which can only be done by a clear understanding between the societies and sections.

II. By calling together a Philatelic Congress to which all-important societies would send delegates with the right to vote. They could look at all propositions put before them, decide what to do to increase the prestige and authority of the society and start things going. (Note – both these courses of action have considerable drawbacks since they could not happen without cooperation between the societies and sections, and this would call for self-sacrifice and the suppression of envy.)

III. By a vigorous campaign in the specialist press, which would be the quickest way to achieve our aim, so I will deal with this point in particular, whilst asking the societies and the editors of the specialist press most earnestly to give me real help in my endeavours. I make this request in particular to the Dresden International Philatelic Society to make this their own affair, so we can reach a satisfactory end result!

First we must set our sights on the following important points, and look at them in more detail. They are:-

- a) The rules of philatelic societies
- b) The philatelic press organs, and
- c) Society life itself

First, let us look for comparison and evaluation at the rules of various societies* that have been made available to me: we see they have the following principal aims:-

(*Note - these are the following;

- | | | |
|---------------------------|-------------------|----------------|
| 1. Dresden-Leipzig | 2. Munich | 3. Berlin |
| 4. Wurtemberg (Stuttgart) | 5. Würzburg | 6. Lübeck |
| 7. Hanover | 8. Halle a. d. S. | 9. Ulm-Neu-Ulm |
| 10. Offenbach am Main | 11. Danzig | 12. Basel |
| 13. Dessau | 14. Amsterdam | 15. Valparaiso |

1. Elevation and promotion and philately, frequently without defining law this is to be attained; when details are given, they relate to:

2. Making way for the union of stamp collectors which is, of course, the aim of every society.

3. Extending and promoting philately which is represented by Rule 1.

4. Holding philatelic lectures.

5. Publishing scientific works and writings as the foundation for a library.

6. Organizing exchanges with foreign collectors, e.g. by linking up with societies, and thus enriching collecting as far as possible. This point is given by some societies as their principal aim.

7. Starting purchasing associations.

8. If possible, giving members advice on doubtful or special stamps.

9. Combating forgeries and fraudulent products and uniting philatelists at home and abroad for this purpose with particular reference to philately. The first part of this rule is given by the Munich Philatelic society alone as the principal aim of the society, and all other societies are urgently recommended to copy them.

10. Extending the knowledge of philately which, of course, must be an aim of every society.

11. Covering the literature and history of philately, which all societies certainly ought to consider.

12. There is little or no concern with the trade in postage stamps, with the great exception, according to their rules, of the earlier German Society for Philately in Berlin. This means that the rest have exclusively scientific interests and do not want as societies to concern themselves with trade, appearing to ignore it completely. This society may be aiming too high* (*Note: It remains very doubtful whether this Society actually pursues this part of its programme to any great extent, since nothing positive in the press indicates that this prominently-stated aim of the Society really gets much attention) but it does offer a useful example of how the exchange of purchase of postage stamps could very well be one of the last concerns of a philatelic society, so as not to lose sight of the far more significant task of increasing the prestige and authority of the society.

This and the Danzig society also took care, after the death of a member, to dispose of his collection as advantageously as possible if the survivors so requested. This very useful measure prevents the collection from falling into the hands of spoilers and gives it to knowledgeable people, as well as giving the survivors a useful sum and preventing them from being cheated.

13. Firm rules of business are only found in the rules of the Würzburg Society, and it must be wondered why the other German societies (Note: I am, of course, speaking here only of the statutes that have been made available to me) have so far completely failed to make this important point for maintaining discipline amongst their members since an accepted discipline will have a very good effect on how the Society appears to outsiders!

This last opinion should not be taken as meaning that all societies are guilty of a lack of discipline, since the leadership of the chairman or his deputy must be exerted during the meetings, but reports in the specialist press show that a more detailed set of regulations than heretofore must be provided to increase the authority of the Society. The mere choice of committee members and the exertion of their authority are not sufficient for this purpose and there must be binding rules for the behaviour of members, like those the Würzburg society has introduced.

Now, in line with my programme for this article, I shall turn to society reports in the philatelic press. My object will be to find out how, and to what extent, these in their present form contribute to raising the prestige and authority of the societies, and thus the closely connected life of the societies. Unfortunately I must say that in many cases it is insufficient and does not contribute to the desired aim. The Illustr. Briefmarken-Journal, the periodical with the widest circulations, has already dealt with this drawback in a special article (in no.192), which I have described and criticized. If there is to be a considerable rise in the prestige and authority of the philatelic societies, the present style of every society report must be altered in the manner I set out in No.192 of Ill.Br.J. A good guide to the societies would be the reports of the "St. Petersburg" section of the Dresden Society on "Philatelist". The scientific content of this is always very suitable for the ambitious and knowledge hungry collector, and rouses great interest. If this example were followed, the authority of the societies and the reputation of the specialist press would very quickly be increased, to the overall profit of philatelic science.

Furthermore, the annual report on the meetings should avoid, as far as possible, the impression of chummy high-jinks, since these meetings practically always end with thick heads, hangovers and hangover cures: reports like these, especially from scarcely viable societies, cannot raise the prestige of the society, may even damage it considerable. An example should be drawn from other societies whose main aim is not rowdy diversion but serious intellectual work. Only on special festive occasions such as last Whitsun at the Dresden International Philatelic Society, is there room for a merry Society romp with mugs clinked in the street, after a long period of influential activity.

In the smaller societies, philatelic activity seems to be a cover for the main purpose which, apparently, is to have rowdy evenings in a given locality, and it would therefore be desirable to choose a venue that gives less scope for this sort of thing, and this should be laid down in the statutes.

A closer check on society life would also lead to a more controlled reporting of the societies in the philatelic press, and would help to protect them from the excesses and mistakes which are sometimes not excusable.

Thus, in the future, the main task must be to eliminate treatments not contributing to the prestige of societies, so as to give a number of philatelic societies the stamp of suitability. The following conditions are necessary for this:

- a) Holding the meetings of societies, especially small ones, in private houses as far as possible.
- b) The introduction of strictly controlled business, a point I shall return to.
- c) Scientific and serious activity during the meetings by means of lectures and discussions of the material presented.
- d) Only at the close of the meetings should inspection, exchange and purchase of stamps be permitted.
- e) Publication of the scientific papers given at the meetings in the society magazine.
- f) Policing of behaviour, so that the popular noisy parties are restrained as far as possible and only allowed to take place on particularly important festive occasions.

However, this is not by any means to say that every convivial pleasure should be suppressed at the end of meetings, but I would keep these merry sessions with mugs or glasses within reasonable limits, and hold them in another place as far as possible.

I shall probably be accused of taking a pessimistic and schoolmasterly view, but mature reflection will show whether my opinions and proposals are really without foundation.

p.196 Continuation

If all these points are fulfilled, much will have been done towards increasing the prestige of the societies and on this basis we reach the following conclusion:

Statements must be prepared to reach all German philatelic societies and their sections from all sides to stress that they must raise the prestige and authority of the societies and I will outline here a possible form for these statements which must be taken up with hesitation:

§1 Every society and every section must make it their first aim to preserve and extend their authority and prestige as far as possible in all directions. This will be attained:

§2 By combining societies as far as possible, i.e. choosing the largest and most influential societies as mother societies and adding the rest to them as sections, accepting the formers' rules as their own.

§3 Every society with its sections should be obliged to adopt strictly enforced rules of conduct for its meetings and, in this connection, I would like to direct particular attention to paragraphs of the Würzburg Society on pages 15 & 16, paras. 1, 2, 6, 8 and *

§4 Meetings should be held in locations not likely to offer lively distractions.

§5 Careful study of forgeries and fraudulent products should be promoted as far as possible, the results discussed thoroughly by the society, then published along with special scientific articles in the specialist literature.

§6 The obligation must be accepted to pursue producers and propagators of forgeries and fraudulent products with energy and hand them over for legal treatment and punishment.

§7 Every society must act against the propagation of facsimiles and new printings that are not really stamps and call to account those responsible.

§8 Any society member who compromises their society or its sections in word or writing must be excluded from membership of the society concerned, either for a time or permanently, according to the seriousness of the offence.

§9 Anyone thus excluded can only be received into another society when the former society to which he belonged has agreed to take him back.

§10 If the excluded person is a member of other societies as well, his exclusion from one should have no further consequences unless he is guilty of slanderous statements, in which case no other society should accept him as a member.

§11 the larger societies should work together to ensure that articles on philately appear every year in the most widely read German weeklies, such as Gartenlaube, Leipziger Illustrierte Zeitung, Ueber hand und Meer, Das Buch für Alle, etc., for the enlightenment of a wider public.

§12 The final decision on how and which postage stamps should be collected should be based on last year's article by Dr. Emil Pfeiffer of Wiesbaden in Ill. Briefm. Journal "On the limits of stamp collecting" and the final result arrived at after thorough discussion should be accepted as the established foundation for stamp collecting.

§13 It should be explained where the limits of collecting are, and warnings should be given before the purchase of any album that ignores these limits.

§14 The album question should be thoroughly discussed, also how they are to be classified, and care should be taken to following the guidelines in introducing new albums.

§15 Any sections of the society whose rules do not coincide with those of the mother society should be persuaded to come fully into line with in the rules of the mother society.

§16 The mother societies should revise the provisions of their statutes and extend them in line with the pointers in this article.

§17 Societies which for trivial reasons do not want to adopt these guidelines should be looked as not having the interests of philately at heart, and should be treated accordingly.

§18 Societies and sections should endeavour to obey these rules implicitly.

Note: these paragraphs lead

§1 The first meeting of every month is purely business: dealing with correspondence, admission of members, motions, etc. Other meetings are devoted to papers, discussions and exchanges

§2 Once the official session has begun, there must be no more dealing with sheets of stamps, albums, exchanges, etc.

§6 Politics are forbidden during the official meeting, also what is called talking shop.

§8 Dealers who are members of societies are not allowed to take stamps they want to acquire or exchange unless all the members had had a chance to examine them.

§9 The rules must be posted up in the society meeting place.

I do not claim to have exhausted my chosen topic in the foregoing paragraphs since I have not managed to get hold of the statutes of many societies. Hence, I ask all larger and more influential stamp societies to accept this article as a call to them to build on the foundations I have laid down here, undertake a detailed critical discussion, to accept the admissible and improve the rest or else dismiss it as totally impracticable, and finally to bring in new suitable material.

In any case it would be best for the more influential societies, particularly the Dresden and Bavarian Philatelic Societies, to join together to compare the results obtained by these discussions in every society and incorporate the final results as firm statutes in their rules. Such a centralised unit would bring the whole of philately into a solid union and establish philately on a sound basis so that it would bloom into new life. It could then take its place on a level with its two older sisters, numismatics and heraldry, thus improving the prestige and authority of philately and its societies in the eyes of both its adherents and the lay public. May one such society take as its principal aim: the increase of its own authority by the study of postage stamps, their history and production, and the detection and suppression of forgers, swindlers and receivers of stolen goods!

In conclusion I express my most devoted thanks to Herr John Siewert, Moscow, for his friendly advice which has helped me to draw up this article and I beg the Dresden Society to take the initiative in carrying out the suggested plan which will have to contend with various difficulties, so that it will not run uselessly into the sand.

II. HOW SHOULD A GOOD PHILATELIC JOURNAL BE CONSTITUTED

This question relates to the most important and effective tool for raising the authority and prestige of the philatelic societies and the overall interests of philately. it is closely related to the previous article and I shall try, with special reference to our society magazine, "The Philatelist", to lay down guidelines for improving and re-shaping this magazine to fit it for its forthcoming role as a "central organ for the overall interests of philately".

To attain this aim calls for a thorough reorganisation of "Philatelist". This is essential from every point of view, but the main points are more frequent appearance (now attained) and a more convenient format (now attained), along with a wider and different distribution, to meet all the requirements of the future.

Before I discuss this topic in more detail, I will again give a brief sketch of the present state of the philatelic press, although the materials at my disposal are unfortunately very scanty. I, therefore, ask for your indulgence as I unfold my thesis, since my principal aim is always the promotion of philately until a favourable end result is reached.

The picture afforded by the philatelic press is as follows. As we know, it is divided into three parts:

1. The journals that deal with philately as a whole, with corresponding scientific papers, new issues and descriptions of them, ways of detecting forgeries, society reports, announcements, etc.
2. The journals devoted exclusively to new stamp issues with concise descriptions.
3. The journals that are simply advertising sheets, publishing philatelic announcements.

We shall concern ourselves here only with type 1 and the journals in this category, so far as they are known to me, that are in the first rank are "Le Timbre-Poste", "Das Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal" and "Der Philatelist".

Without going into details of the first two, I think that the Dresden Society with its almost 1,200 members is in a strong position to take the initiative, reform its own organ "Der Philatelist" as much as possible to give it an esteemed and valued place as the leading and most complete specialist journal.

The free impartial efficiency of the Dresden Society remains undiminished in its society organ, since it always remains free of the one-sided personal consideration which affects the other two magazines mentioned, and hence appears to be the best qualified to act as a true guardian and promoter of philatelic endeavours. Hence I now go on to suggest how the "Philatelist" could best be used to attain this end?

The first task of the society organ is to promote the authority and prestige of philately as a whole and, as already stated, to use its influence to become the central organ for everyone interested in philately. To reach this aim will mean overcoming many difficulties but this can be done by honest and persevering effort.

p.211 Continuation

The first requirement would be for a significant increase in its existing programme, and for the magazine to appear in future as a weekly if possible, retaining its present size. It would then be feasible to alter the present title to something like "General Philatelic Weekly", central organ for all those interested in philately. The print used should be similar to that of the "Illustr.

Brfm. Journal". the layout of the weekly should reflect the new programme, with the currently prominent "New Issues" and remarks on them relegated to the background, and the sequence of material in the future journal should be as follows:-

- 1a Original articles
- 1b A monthly review
- 2 Forgeries and fraudulent products
- 3 Forum
- 4 Society reports
- 5 New issues
- 6 Enquiries with answers
- 7 Form the book market
- 8 Postal questions and their solutions
- 9 Miscellany
- 10 Letter box
- 11 Market report
- 12 Notices
- 13 Descriptions of various societies in their current form
- 14 Advertisements

Such a programme arranged in this way should satisfy all requirements, and it is high time to put this programme in hand. I will now discuss this layout in more detail, beginning the sequence with:

1a Original articles

The most important means of enlarging philatelic knowledge is to include one in every number that appears and they should include articles on the special topics of postage stamps and their history. Special articles on trials/essays(?) and biographies of men who have made outstanding contributions to philately also belong here.

1b Monthly review

Such a review should be the leading article in the first issue for every month. It should deal with the happenings of the previous month, and warn the readers against any forgeries, new impressions, facsimiles and other fraudulent products that have been uncovered during the period. Given careful and thorough treatment of the material, this section can be of great importance for the further development of philately and so it is perfectly justifiable to omit an original article from every number in which this monthly review appears.

2. Forgeries and fraudulent products

Articles relating to these should be presented in the usual way. Descriptions of forged cancellations should also be included and it would be very desirable to include pictures for comparison where possible. Stamps that have been cancelled by the Post Office for sale to collectors without having been used for mail also belong here. Such gross misconduct deserved to be sharply denounced.

3. Forum

This should air, in a detailed scientific way, pieces on questions or disputes of the day. It would be desirable to give the editor limited powers of censorship to suppress unsuitable items which do not support the prestige of the paper and authority of the Society.

4. Society reports

These reports should be factual as far as possible, free of anything silly, and above all free of any turns of expression that might compromise the Society. Thus, the editor should again be free to exercise censorship. It would be best if the society secretaries would submit drafts of their reports to the Committee for evaluation, and only finalising them after they have been approved by the editor. This would spare him the taxing job of censorship.

5. New issues

New issues should appear first in this spot, and it would be desirable to follow the clear method of presentation used by Ill.Briefm.Journal. At the same time the following divisions would be necessary:-

- a) Official stamps
- b) Semi-official stamps (Russian provinces, Norwegian district postage stamps)
- c) City postage stamps
- d) Private postage stamps

It would be desirable above all to picture new issues in the correct colours as far as the medium allows.

6. Enquiries with answers

All queries of general interest sent in to the editor are to be given here, with an appropriate answer. The sequence of questions and answers should be numbered so that if the same ones keep recurring they can be referred to the relevant number for answer. This arrangement does call for a good deal of time and effort in looking up the relevant information but it is too useful to be omitted.

7. From the book market

This gives critical appreciations of new publications in the field of philately: philatelic works, albums, catalogues, etc.

8. Postal questions

These are questions capable mainly of arousing and maintaining interest in philately. This section should again be included monthly and the issues concerned should have the answers to the previous set of questions.

9. Miscellany

This section should include belles-lettres articles or brief abstracts of philatelic articles, but anything in bad taste should be excluded.

10. Letter box

This should be made available by the editor to his contributors, to send in their letters.

11. Market report

This section gives the prevailing prices for stamps most subject to fluctuations due to speculations, or prices that have undergone sudden and unforeseen changes due to special circumstances. This report should appear twice a month; in special cases it could appear in every issue, or only once a month.

12. Notices

In the form previously used

13. Descriptions

Again in the form previously used for other societies and sections

14. Advertisements

These should appear in special supplements; offers of exchange and sale should also appear here.

The keystone of this programme would be a list of all the people in the “black books” kept by the societies. This should be published about twice a year as a supplement for every subscriber, so that swindlers would guard against being included in these lists and so being made known to the entire world of collectors. This would afford considerable protection against various types of swindle.

I am very well aware of the great difficulties in the way of putting this programme into effect, particularly as regards raising the means. The first step would be taken if the “Philatelist” could appear twice a month and the rest of the new programme was provisionally accepted.

To attain this end it would be desirable to unite the “Philatelist” and “Postwerthzeichen” with the subscription for the members of the Dresden Society and its sections should be raised from 5 marks to 6 marks to pay for the Society journal, which would produce a surplus about 1,200 marks* (*Note: every reasonable member will gladly accept this slight sacrifice for his society magazine, all the more so since the membership subscription for the Munich society has been 6 marks for a number of years).

The advertisements in the adverts section would increase significantly in number with this broad expansion of the society journal, since this must have a much wider circulation than before and a big increase in numbers, hence a considerable rise in revenue for the society magazine. At the same time this might mean that the subordinate magazines under Points II and III, which cannot achieve any great level, could simply cease publication and the adverts they had been getting could go to the benefit of the Dresden Society magazine. Then, all increased costs for paper and printing and for the extra editorial activity would easily be covered. However, even to reach this point the societies and sections concerned must agree to make a collection to get a basic fund of money to expand the “Philatelist”.

I am not a specialist in these things and so cannot make a competent judgement as to whether my proposals go far enough, but I hope many of these guidelines will meet with the necessary approval and can be used as a basis for further development.

I also most earnestly ask the Dresden Society to make a fundamental assessment of my proposals, accept the feasible ones and add new material where necessary, make "Philatelist" as the central organ for the German philatelic world and work to raise the authority and prestige of philately as a whole in the eyes of the public and the competent authorities. The latter must be brought over to the view that the philatelic societies are the best preservers and promoters of their interests and that the legal and postal authorities should afford the societies more audience and attention than has been the case hitherto.

OUR LITERATURE AND ITS CRITICS

It is a recognised fact that writers are seldom included amongst those who earn a reward for their work, since between themselves and the buyers of their product stands an intermediate figure, the critic, and my article will apply to them.

Why I have chosen this subject should be clear to every observant philatelist since the indefensible state of affairs existing, especially at this point in philately, cannot possibly continue. Why is it that philately attracts so few specialist writers, or why does one so rarely read a single word of explanation from the coryphées of science?* These are questions which have often concerned me. The answer is quite simple. The great majority are guilty of ingratitude and indifference.

With care and trouble it was possible to bring together the small number of subscribers for the translation of Möens' work despite the challenge of our major societies, and many other examples of the same type could be quoted.

The publishers are often not in a position to take on the risk of printing, still less to pay an honorarium or send out free copies. What do Meyer, Lübker, Krause, et al., expect for their work? Definitely not to get a financial return for their efforts.

However, is the collector the only guilty party? No. A large part belongs to the critics of the specialist press who, unfortunately, often depart from the truth. I will not split hairs and will only distinguish between:

1. The mechanically toadying critic
2. The biased egotistical critic
3. The nagging critic
4. The objective critic

Our knowledge is imperfect, that is a fact that cannot be avoided in reading through the most classic work, but research and investigation must be our aim.

* A ballet dancer who dances in a small group instead of as a soloist or in the corps de ballet and ranks between the two.

We need to penetrate further and further into the secrets and dark places of our young science and this calls for people who are industrious, unprejudiced and not looking for recompense.

The Mechanical Critic is pretty certain to be the one met with most often and every thinking philatelist must give a sympathetic laugh when they find every new publication described with the unvarying formula we can therefore ... only recommend, like a museum viewed from the outside.

It should be obvious to everyone that there is neither sense nor purpose in this kind of unthinking assessment of all new intellectual products: it is of no service to philately.

Something similar applies to the Biased, Egotistical Critic who, unfortunately, tends to work for individual magazines and is a great obstacle to the expansion of our literature. Books and pamphlets from rival firms will be hushed up, whilst his own firm will be represented as the only source of good, usable, or even brilliant material, unless one looks at other magazines. This means the public is not being served.

An author will send in a book, hoping at best for a mention, only to have it simply ignored, whereas fairly good stuff from the same firm will be printed under false colours.

A large part of the readership of periodicals will consist of developing philatelists who derive their knowledge from a simple organ for their own interests. Thus it is obvious that their education is very one-sided.

Thus we are not dealing here with the overall interests of philately, but with business advantages: it is not a love of the subject but the crassest egotism.

The third category are the Nagging Critics wanting to pull everything down: unfortunately they have become very widespread in recent years.

They criticize, or rather carp at, everything without being able to improve it, and indeed everyone who has given up his time to write periodical articles or pamphlets must lose the last remnants of enthusiasm when people whose earlier performances have simply been to produce a pile of articles on one and the same subject suddenly appear as literary critics.

Does it really promote collecting or the acquisition of new skills if the layman chances on an abusive review of a work such as, for example, Krause's Lehrbuch which, in spite of numerous mistakes or flaws that call for much more reasonable treatment, still contains a large amount of new and interesting information which no other earlier work contains.

All new publications should serve as foundations for further work and it is the law of the world that the later should learn from the earlier and attempt to surpass it. However, to the solace of all true philatelists, there are knowledgeable, rightly-judging critics who blame or admonish only when necessary.

Philatelist, Postwerthzeichen and other magazines are known for their sharp but unbiased reviews and the collectors' world may be proud that these are the magazines that serve as organs for the majority of experienced philatelists and the major societies.

Might one yet arrive at the conclusion for philatelic journalism that argument will never increase the reputation of a journal nor also in this way put the collector under tutelage.

Sooner or later knowledge comes, however, and the aim will be noted.

If, however, our literature is healthy and finds publishers it will be as much the task of the specialist press to support appropriate efforts as of the collectors' world.

Every philatelist might think, in particular, that apart from the large economic undertaking of the few publishers, support for philatelic literature is not a matter of talk only, but should be founded in love and selfless effort.

Thus, if it is not possible to make the criticisms more reasonable, less spiteful, and above all more scientific and less partisan in form, then the number of writers damaging the development of our philately should be reduced.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

The lack of a bibliography of German philatelic literature is indisputably today the sorest point of philately and a painful lack felt to a greater or lesser extent by everyone pursuing our young subject seriously and in depth.

The German specialist press has given its attention to this lack for a number of years. We need only refer to the articles published in Postwerthzeichen 1888 numbers 1 and 2, 1889 numbers 7 and 8, in Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung from Heitmann, 1888 number 22 and 1889 number 15, in Senf's Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal 1888 number 5, in Philatelistische Börsencourier 1889 number 3, Philatelist 1889 number 10, etc.

The first idea was to draw up a bibliography of all the philatelic literature of all peoples in one work. However, the insurmountable difficulties in the way of carrying out the idea were soon appreciated and it was soon recognised that it would be easier and better if every country produced a bibliography of its own literature.

It would certainly be a feather in the cap of the Germans if they could be the first nation who could celebrate a bibliography of their philatelic literature*. We have been trying for a long time to bring this idea to fruition, and today we are in a position to lay a definite plan before the world of German collectors.

* Note: A philatelic bibliography for France and Belgium has already appeared as:
P. L. de Bosredon: Bibliographie Timbrologique de la France et de la Belgique., [Philatelic Bibliography of France and Belgium.], Brussels, 1878.
See the Catalogue of the Society Library of the International Philatelic Society, Dresden, No. 223. The Editor.

The principal difficulty was to find a person who had both the capacity to carry out such a work and the will to undertake this difficult and complex task. We have now succeeded in getting our best philatelist, the Imperial & Royal High Court Justice Herr Victor Suppantschitsch of Graz, to compile this work.

We shall not go into details of the high culture and more than 30 years experience of this outstanding philatelic writer. They ensure that the work will be well done and that all requirements needing to be met by a bibliography of the German philatelic literature will be satisfied, so long as the choice of this person meets with the fullest approval, and German philatelists are ready to thank the distinguished author for his readiness to undertake this onerous task.

As for the work itself, it will consist of the following 4 sections:

Part 1 will be a history of philately (stamp collecting) as a whole. A history of the German philatelic literature will follow in Part 2.

Part 3 will present a survey of the entire German philatelic literature including the most recent data.

Part 4, finally, will give in lexicographic form the actual bibliography of the entire German philatelic literature.

This bibliography will cover everything in all fields of philately written and published in the German language.

This will be arranged so that anyone will find it easy to look up any facet of collecting or philatelic term, to determine what was published, by whom, and where it was published.

Of course, every philatelic author will be presented and all his books, writings, periodical articles, etc., will be listed individually with details of its subject, etc.

In this connection the editor with his precise knowledge of the German philatelic literature will make a conscientious and mature choice, not on the one hand omitting anything likely to be of value to the philatelist, nor on the other including anything that is either of no interest to philatelists or can readily be obtained from any major catalogue or album (like the thousands of reports of new issues of postage stamps).

The work should cover about 40 printed sheets and will be put out in Sections of three printed sheets. The first Section should be ready in May 1892, then a further section should appear every month.

The price has been set at 1Mk or 60 Austrian Kr per Section.

All subscribers who have agreed to take the entire work by 1 August of this year will be given a 50% discount.

It is thus in the hands of the world of German collectors to bring this work to life, since the work can only appear if a sufficient number of subscribers comes forward to ensure that subscriptions will cover half the cost.

Our appeal is thus directed first to the German philatelic societies and to philatelists, with the request for them to subscribe in numbers so as to give Germans a work such as no other nation yet possesses.

At the same time we have another request for the distinguished philatelic societies and the authors, editors and publishers, of philatelic works. Will they support our editor in his great work by kindly sending him examples of their issued or published philatelic books and journals, and warning him of forthcoming ones. The societies might send him their philatelic publications statutes, annual reports, society communications without waiting to be asked for them. This would be the best support. Also, they could make it possible for him to borrow the older German philatelic literature in their libraries. It is only by everyone acting together we can get something good and complete worked out.

NEW DIRECTOR FOR THE MUNICH PHILATELIC LIBRARY

NACHRICHTENBLATT DES BRIEFMARKENHANDELS,
Apr. 1997, 52 (4)

New Director For the Munich Philatelic Library

On the 31st March 1997 I retired after 43 years at work and 28 years in the Munich City Library. In view of my various publications and as a member of various societies and working groups I shall naturally remain connected with philately.

In recent years I have catalogued a largely unrecorded book stock and put out 5 catalogues of holdings. A further one for acquisitions since 1991 is in preparation. In cataloguing I was able to keep the philatelic aspects well in mind, which was not simple given the difficult rules laid down by library science.

Books were obtained from everywhere, i.e. there was not and is not any restriction and all countries and districts were covered. However I must unfortunately state that the library is not well supported, and can hardly afford new literature. The same applies, I am sorry to say, to Germany as well. Of the enormous expenditure that the city of Munich makes available for philately every year, despite the difficult economy, (about 250,000 DM for staffing costs alone), I would have liked to see more acknowledgement and help for matters connected with our lobby. This applies particularly to post, which has not been covered in over 60 years since the foundation of the philatelic Library.

I wish my successor more support, so that in future the City of Munich will henceforth not be solely responsible for the immense costs of this special library.

Otto Gleixner.

His successor then writes:

As a philatelist I have already been using the Philatelic Library in Munich for almost 25 years, and have been able in this way to extend my philatelic knowledge considerably.

At the same time I have multiplied my collections several times in the international field aswell.

Herr Gleixner got in touch with me about 2 years ago, and asked if I was willing to work here – At first I was somewhat sceptical – I was not sure about making my hobby my job – and workwise it was a new departure. However in the end it was a challenge , so I put in for the job, and was able to become a librarian as well as a philatelist.

In any case it is firmly guaranteed that literature supply and cataloguing will still take place from the standpoint of philately. After I have worked myself in I hope to be able to ensure that philatelists will have their wide – ranging interests again served by the extensive services of the Philatelic Library.

Apart from striving in future to cover all ranges of collecting from the literature point of view, I hope to increase the publication side, making our unique stock of literature better known to all German philatelists. The progressive development of electronic techniques will certainly be of help here.

I hope to have a successful collaboration with everyone connected with philately, and will try to make my own contribution in this direction.

THE STAMP MAGAZINES OF GERMANY AND AUSTRIA INCLUDING GERMAN-SPEAKING HUNGARY
AND SWITZERLAND 1914/1919

At the end of the first six months of 1914, great numbers of specialist journals were appearing in the world of stamp lovers and collectors, as in everything else. They grew continually in size, as one can easily see from the increasing thickness of bound volumes in the bookcase. New publications kept on appearing, and there really was life in the field of philatelic magazines. Then came the Great War and all life seemed to be extinguished all at once. Even in England, the homeland of philatelic literature, which might not have had so many journals as America but still put out an endless stream of specialist journals and books, the journals either ceased to appear or came to a pause. This sudden change ought to have been much more obvious in Germany and Austria but such was not the case. Only a few minor papers ceased to appear during the first year, most never to reappear. There were eight of these as follows: Mitteilungen der Firma Paul Kohl; which really was a pity, Philatelistischen Neuheiten-Berichte from H. H. Duncker; Württembergische Briefmarkenzeitung from Paul Kempf; Berichte des Vereins Leipziger Briefmarkenbörse; Mitteilungen des Oberelsässischen Philatelisten-Clubs, Mülhausen; Internationale Zeitung für Philatelie und Sammelwesen, Hamburg; Deutsche Stempel-Zeitung from Paul Ohrt; and Blaue Blatt from Cornel Herzog; which concentrated more on picture-postcards. Of these, the Deutsche Stempel-Zeitung reappeared in the year 1918 and Berichte des Vereins Leipziger Briefmarkenbörse announced its reappearance. All other magazines managed to keep going, even though most of them had breaks in publication, or had to issue several numbers in one.

In the year 1915 Freyse's Philatelistische Mitteilungen went under: 1916 saw the cessation of Reith & Co's Philatelistische Monatsblätter and also, unfortunately, the Vertrauliche Korrespondenzblatt which started up again however, in the year 1918. The Mitteilungen des Berliner Vereines für Privatpostwertzeichenkunde and Der Briefmarkensammler, Bremen, ceased to appear in 1917. In the year 1918 Freyse's Mitteilungen put out a few issues again, but on the other hand Vereinsnachrichten der Tauschverbindung Münchener Briefmarken-Sammler ceased to exist in 1919, and Sammler-Woche was adopted as the Society organ.

New titles that appeared during the War were however: 1914 Bremer Briefmarken-Zeitung, Heinrich Lunow, of which however only one issue is known: 1915 the Mitteilungen des deutschösterreichischen Philatelisten-Vereins, now the Mitteilungen des Verbandes deutscher Briefmarkensammler, Essen. Mitteilungen des Münchener Briefmarken-Clubs; the Mitteilungen der Marken-und Ganzsachenhaus G.m.b.H; the Neue Briefmarkenkunde (Neutral correspondence), Berlin-Lichterfelde; the Sächsische Postwertzeichen-Offertenblatt, now the Sächsische Briefmarken-Zeitung, Alfred Kurth; the Philatelistische Presse-Correspondenz, Artur Wülbern; and the Deutschöstr.-ungar. Briefmarken-Offertenblatt, Berlin-Nowawes.

Some of these however ceased again, as will be seen from the list below.

In 1918, Sammler-Woche came into being: it is now the most important German periodical, the light of the World, also Philatelistische Mitteilungen from Karl Hennig. At the same time a Philatelic Number appeared amongst the reports of officials of the A.E.G. and B.E.W., Berlin in 1916.

Last year (1919) the following ceased:-

Interessanten Philatelistischen Mitteilungen, Willi Sonteg
Leipziger Briefmarken-Anzeiger, Franz Junghaus
Philatelistischen Mitteilungen und Gelegenheitsangebote, Artur Schumann
Rundschau für Briefmarkensammler und-Händler, Koch & Bitriol
Internationale Sammler-Welt, F. C. Wagler
Philatelistische Welt, Gustav Scheffler
Verbandsblatt, Koch & Bitriol
Der Sammler, Peter Rucks

Of the number of independent journals, the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung was withdrawn in 1918 and passed into the ownership of dealers and was finally amalgamated with the Leipziger Briefmarken-Anzeiger.

In Austria, the Philatelisten-Zeitung Bruna had a break in publication from 1914 to 1917. Friedl's Illustriertes Briefmarken-Offertenblatt and Der Universal-Anzeiger, both of Vienna, ceased in the year 1915. The latter reappeared in 1919 in an enlarged format. New titles appearing in 1917 on the other hand were:-

Briefmarken Anzeiger, Gustav Walter, Vienna
Briefmarkensammler, M. Stiegler, Vienna
Der Markenfreund, K. Kleophas, Teplitz
Oesterreichisch-Ungarische Briefmarken-Offertenblatt, M. Lott

However, the last two did not survive the year of their appearance. The Philatelistischen Mitteilungen, Jos. Baumgarten, Vienna, came out in 1914, Wiener Briefmarken-Offertenblatt, Friedrich Schiller, Vienna, and Der Briefmarkenbote, Bisamberg, in 1918.

In the year 1919 Die Postmarke appeared as a continuation of the earlier Mitteilungen des O.T.V. There were also:-

Deutschösterr. Briefmarken-Zeitung, Karl Buchmeisser

Universum Briefmarken-Journal, Friedrich Schiller

All three came out in Vienna. Mitteilungen der Briefmarkentauschvereinigung Riesengebirge, Parschnitz, also appeared but ceased the same year, and Sammler-Woche became the Society organ. The

Internationale Tausch-Adressen-Liste appeared in Innsbruck

Brünner Briefmarken-Zeitung, Max Trill, in Brünner. He did it for fun and began to number it with the 6th year.

Sammler-Warte, Ernst Sedlak

Weltpost-Echo, Max Leitenberger

We see that Austria was very enterprising, even though the quality of some of the new journals was unsatisfactory.

Two new journals appeared in Hungary:- in 1917 Neue Ungarische Briefmarken-Zeitung, Moritz Goldfinger, Budapest, and in 1918 Die Donau-Post from Dr. V. Weinert, Pozsony, which rapidly found favour.

In Switzerland Schweizerischen Philatelistischen Nachrichten, Ernst Zumstein, and Philatelistischen Nachrichten, Gustav Schmidt, ceased their existence in 1914. New arrivals in 1915 were Schweizer Briefmarken-Offertenblatt from Aldred Kürth, which was continued as Sächsischen Postwerthzeichen-Offertenblatt, the Berner Briefmarken-Zeitung and the Philatelistischen Mitteilungen, Eduard Locher. This latter published a German and a French number alternatively. In 1916 came Wegweiser für Markensammler, Eugen Szekula, in 1917 a few numbers appeared of Paul Altheer's Der Sammler. In 1918, Schweizer Briefmarken-Sammler, Bela Szekula, ceased.

I would not like to claim that any listing of the Swiss German-language magazines is complete, and in the interests of statistics I ask you to be kind enough to tell me of missing titles or issues. (Address: Tegernsee, Bavaria). The following is a list of journals that appeared in the year 1914 to 1919.

THE PIONEERS OF DUTCH PHILATELY - PART I

After this introduction, which is 10 pages long, on page 11 we find a list of the abbreviations used in the Vade-Mecum [Manual]. The actual Manual starts on page 13. It is divided into Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia. Illustration 4 gives us the division of the countries.

Included are not only the stamps, but also stamped envelopes. In those days, a country was not complete without all postal cards, stamped envelopes, etc. A good idea that, sadly enough, got lost around the turn of the century. (Of course, not by the “Po –and- Poërs”. Translator’s note: I do not know what this means.) Also the unofficial stamped envelopes are mentioned. Under England, it is mentioned that those of Smith Elder & Co. are not official. Also not missing are the Hamburg Ships, the Penny Post and City Express stamps. The manual does not say much about The Netherlands. Only numbers 1, 2 and 3 are mentioned, together with the law of April 12th 1850, the Royal decree of November 12th 1851 and the issue date: January 1st 1852.

That the Manual is a first step in unexplored territory is proven by, for instance, the section on Moldavia. Here are mentioned a 5 para black, a 40 para blue, a 62 para green and an 80 para red. Quite a bit is missing here, while the 62 para green is a questionable item. Also, with the chapter on Asia we are soon finished. Ceylon, Luzon (meaning the Philippines) and East India is all that are mentioned. With Mauritius the Post Office issue is, of course, missing but also, the Post Pairs are not mentioned. It starts with the sitting Britannia. North America covers most of the pages. Seven pages are used under the subheading “Private Posts”. The Manual finishes with an alphabetical index.

While the Dannenfesler Manual is not without mistakes, and in comparison with a modern catalogue, is very primitive, we cannot underestimate its importance. It has shown many collectors the way, and was used as a guideline for starting their collection and is an important cornerstone in the development of Dutch philately.

As we can discern from the title page (see illustration 2, page 83), the manual is not an original work by Dannenfesler. It is a translation from the French, of a catalogue by J.-B. Moens. The oldest edition of this I found in E. D. Bacon’s Catalogue of the Philatelic Library of the Earl of Crawford, London, 1911. John K. Tiffany does not mention the manual at all in his The Philatelic Library, 1874. Anderson, in his listing in The Philatelic Record, in 1885, does not mention it either. Suppantchitsch and Otto Rommel mention the manual without any details. Bacon is, as far as I know, the first one to mention that the manual is a translation of the second edition of the Manuel du Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste by J.-B. Moens. In the later publications, for instance, by Mrs Van Heerdt-Kolff, we find this is repeated.

This idea is not right. How Bacon came to that conclusion, I could not figure out. He had enough sources for comparison. The Crawford Library contains all philatelic literature that had appeared before 1900. In spite of that, Bacon made a mistake.

In illustration 5, you see the title page of the second edition of the manual by Moens pictured. The little crown seen does not belong to it. It is pasted on it by one of the previous owners.

When we compare this title page with the manual (illus. 2, page 83), they look the same. But if we open the books, then we see immediately that the introduction of the Dannenfelser manual is missing in the manual by Moens. In addition, comparing illus. 6, being the part on Brunswick from the Moens manual with illus. 4, being the same part of the manual, we can see a very clear difference. We can deduce from this that the Vade-Mecum is not a translation of the second edition of the manual by J.-B. Moens.

Of what then? Of course, from one of the many editions of this manual. If we could compare all of the editions, we could find the answer fast by comparison. But the literature we are discussing here is very rare, even rarer than a Post Office Mauritius, and so the obstacles make it impossible. We have to find another way.

The second edition of Moens' manual is dated January, 1862. A year later, in his publication Le Timbre-Poste, in the issue of January 15th, 1863 of the first year of publication, Moens writes an article under the title, Un mot sur l'origine de Timbre Poste. The "Un mot sur..." is almost word for word the same as the introduction in the Dannenfelser manual: "Origin of Postage Stamps". If we look up the issue of March 1st, 1863 of The Stamp Collector's Magazine and also the first issue of the Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler of May 1st, 1863, then we can see in both issues, under "Book review", a discussion of the third edition of the manual by Moens. From this book review, it's very obvious that the article, "Un mot sur..." not only appears in Le Timbre-Poste, but also in the introduction of the third edition of the manual. So we can accept that the Vade-Mecum is a translation of the third edition of Moens' manual.

By reading the aforementioned publications, the name of the comedian Alphonse Esquiros suddenly shows up as, it seems what we today call a journalist. Moens acknowledges in the second volume (1864) of Le Timbre-Poste that his Un mot sur l'origine de Timbre Poste was stolen from a work by Mr. Esquiros entitled Angleterre et la vie Anglaise. Further, Das Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler reports a juicy detail that the traveller in the work by Esquiros is not Rowland Hill but a certain Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

The Dannenfelser manual is now very rare. The Dutch collector, as mentioned before, has never shown much interest in philatelic publications. Over the years, rare editions have disappeared without a trace from libraries. Two libraries burned during the last war. Happily, we still have two copies of the manual. One is found in the "Bondsbibliotheek". It was a donation from the former library of the "Nederl. Verg. Van Postzegelverzamelaars". The library of the I. V. "Philatelica" has a second copy, donor unknown. The first possessor was Joris van der Hagen, Lange Voorhout 31, den Haag. A third copy was in the possession of Victor Suppantshitsch. After his death, it became property of “The Collectors Club” in New York, together with the rest of his library, and the copy is still there. A fourth copy belongs to the so-called Crawford Library in the British Museum. It is property of the British people and untouchable for the collector. Only if you travel to London, can you carefully take a peek at it. There was a fifth copy in the library of the “Internationale Philatelistische-Verein Dresden”. This gigantic library, which had almost all the rarities from the years 1860-1880 was destroyed in the last war.

With certainty we can say that there are still four copies of this, at one time, very popular manual. The writer of this article has contacted many, but not all of the philatelic libraries, so it's not impossible that one or two copies will surface and it's not impossible that some copies are still held in private hands.

What value do these four copies have? As much as a nine cent with missing value, of which 20 exist?

Dear librarians, be thrifty with your possessions, even though almost nobody seems interested.

PIONEERS OF DUTCH PHILATELY

by K. Kouwenberg.

THE DANNENFELSER ALBUMS

Dannenfesler not only published a catalog in the Dutch language, he also published a series of albums in Dutch.

Figure 7 shows an ad wherein Dannenfesler announces the publication of a Dutch album. The ad also indicates that he originally sold French albums. That was the album of Justin Lallier or Van Moens, most likely the latter. In 1863 Dannenfesler published his own album. A copy of this oldest Dutch album is in the Postmuseum in The Hague and is probably the only remaining example. The album is not dated and it does not show when printing it is. The second stamp issue is not shown in this album, so that it is certain that it is the first Dannenfesler-album of 1863. The pages are printed on both sides. At the bottom right hand corner is a reference to the Dannenfesler Vade-Mecum. The illustrations for this album were produced by the Lithographic Industry in Utrecht, the title page is shown on Pages 38/39. In addition to this copy the Postmuseum recently acquired a rare Dannenfesler album, also undated, but with the notation «2nd Printing». It is identical to the first mentioned copy, except for the fact that here and there a different font is used. The album is a stamp collector's dream because it is full of old stamps.

The Postmuseum also has an 1868 Dannenfesler album. The title page states: "From the High German of Wuttig-Bauschke and Kuemel, by J. vanHasselt". Lastly the Postmuseum has a 1878 Dannenfesler album with a description of the stamps and prices on the back of the pages.

QUESTIONS

It is almost 100 years ago that the Vade-Mecum and the first Dutch album were published, much of it is a vague memory and much has been lost. The extensive Dannenfesler stamp collection was continued by his son, but a fire in a villa in Naarden in 1941 destroyed the collection and the family records. This makes it impossible to get a clear picture of Dannenfesler, all that remains are some scattered pieces of information.

He must have had close relations with Moens. The second edition of Moens Manuel appeared in January 1862, the third about a year later. The Vade-Mecum is a translation of the third edition, published in November 1863, prior to the publication of the third edition. Dannenfesler must have worked with a copy from Moens. It is still a question whether Dannenfesler produced the Dutch text or Moens.

Moens was more a business man than a stamp expert, and Dannenfesler eventually lost contact with Moens. His 1868 album is a translation of a publication by Wuttig, the owner of the "Literary Museum" in Leipzig (now Senf) and Bauschke, which is now known as "Schaubek". Max Ton's "Handbook of German philatelic literature" lists: W F. Dannenfesler, Catalog of all postage stamps 1840 to April 1864, available from W P. Dannenfesler per enclosed price list. This indicates connections with Leipzig but the catalog raises a few questions. There are no known copies and it has never been in a philatelic library as far as I know. How did Dannenfelser all of a sudden show up in Leipzig?

Much remains in the dark. Any further information from our readers will be greatly appreciated. Any indication - how insignificant it may seem! - is welcome.

C.G. VOGEL

Carl Gustav Vogel was born on 26th September 1868 in Untermarxgrün. His parents moved to Plauen soon afterwards.

Even as a child C. G. Vogel showed a strong disposition towards business, and gave signs of a commercial intelligence which led to high hopes. On Sunday he bought a number of copies of the "Plauener Sonntagsanzeiger" from the Neupert Print works in Plauen and sold them again at the railway station. With his earnings from this he bought books to satisfy his thirst for knowledge. Thus even as a 12 year old boy he owned a library. The merchant spirit that dwelt in him told him he could use these books to make more money, and he started a lending library at school. He had agents in various classes, i.e. one pupil to issue and take back the books and collect the fee – 2pf per book, and he supplied enough books.

After school he worked for the firm of G. A. Hellriegel, wholesale grocers to get experience, and here again he showed his commercial abilities in the best light.

At the end of his school life – in the year 1886 – the experienced young man moved to Pössneck, and since it did not suit him to be an employee he started a small spinning mill in a former gypsum mill and went into the wool trade.

As a stamp collector he had begun exchanging stamps at school and extended this later to dealing on commission. This did not lead to the desired success and the fading of stamps in the shop window was another source of annoyance.

However, these disappointments did not damp his ardour: rather, he sought another way to be of service to the world of stamp collectors. He sold the small spinning mill at Schlettwein, near Pössneck, and started a modest printing works at 2 Wohlfarthstrasse, Pössneck, and used this to produce the “Internationale Briefmarken-Offertenblatt”. The first number appeared in January 1892. The printing works was on the ground floor of 2 Wohlfarthstrasse, where the founder now lives. A 2hp gas engine supplied the power for the printing press. The staff included members of his family as well as two typesetters. C. G. Vogel acted as printer, editor, packer, book-keeper, cashier and, above all, as commercial traveller on journeys through the provinces of Germany and abroad.

However, most success was attained with the advertising sheet, which C. G. Vogel was the first to introduce and which is still going for all the journals of the Vogel firm. It was sent out regularly to everyone interested, not only to advertisers. In this way he rapidly increased the success of the adverts, to the advantage of the advertisers. The success of the “Internationale Briefmarken-Offertenblatt” was followed in three years by the start of a new and larger enterprise.

In 1895 the firm of Vogel began to publish “Maschinenmarkt”, General Recorder for German Industry. In the first quarter of its second year this went from 9,000 copies to 12,000 and after another six months it had reached 19,000 copies. At present, “Maschinenmarkt” appears three times a week with an average of 37,000 copies. Over the course of time these two advertising papers were followed by 27 more, which usually appeared three times a week, and are listed at the end of this catalogue.

With its 29th volume, 1920, the plain title “Internationale Briefmarken-Offertenblatt” was altered to “Internationale Postwerthzeichen-Markt”, appearing weekly in an edition of 10,000 copies.

The increased requirements called for more working space and equipment:-

1899	New building, 3/5 Wohlfarthstrasse
1906	More building, with 26hp engine and rotary press for 16 pages
1911	50hp Diesel engine, second rotary press for 48 pages
1912	More building, 3/5 Wohlfarthstrasse
1915	Rotary press for 96 pages
1920	Building extensions at 3/5 Wohlfarthstrasse and 33 Schleizer Strasse, to a total of 12,000 sq.m usable space
1921/22	Installation of a 156-page rotary press (4-colour printing) – a 300hp and a 100hp diesel engine gave light and power.
1926	Installation of a three-story 128-page roller printing machine for illustrations (4-colour printing)
1927/28	Large scale dismantling at 33 Schleizer Strasse, and installation of an automatic telephone exchange with 200 connections
1915	220 commercial and technical employees
1920	Over 700 commercial and technical employees
1928	900 commercial and technical employees

More rapid conversion of the building was because of a State Post Office. 4 to 5,000 items of post came in every day, and 11 to 12,000 items, excluding periodicals, left the building. The form of Vogel also managed to get express trains to Pössneck for the more rapid dispatch of the technical journals it published.

Quite a while before the War, Carl Gustav Vogel started a brand undertaking on the Austria-Hungarian border: after the War this was relocated to Asch in Bohemia and Frauenbad. A number of journals were also produced for Czechoslovakia and the Austrian successor states. These brand undertakings were under the direction of Herr C. G. Vogel and his son-in-law.

Detailed accounts of the plans and, in particular, the typical organisation of the entire undertaking and, not least, the details of the up to date addresses are given in:

1928 A10 019
Interesting record of this works (Vogel Ltd, Pössneck), Pössneck 1928: Vogel Ltd

The entire enterprise was run by the senior man with his two sons: Arthur Gustav Vogel, Commercial head and joint owner since 1913, and Ludwig Vogel, partner since 1925 and technical director, in close co-operation with the purchasing staff, section heads and down to the last worker.

The firm of Vogel is always ready to have its extensive and up to date plant inspected.

C. G. Vogel is still working tirelessly at his simple desk in the commercial section of his first advertising paper. He has always been straightforward, simple, unpretentious and tireless, and still is so today. The enormous success of his creation has not affected his personal modesty and friendliness towards everyone. He sees his brilliant life-work only as a source of further tireless effort.

In view of the fact that the “Internationale Briefmarken-Offertenblatt” was the foundation of the present day major enterprise, his two sons, Arthur Gustav Vogel and Ludwig Vogel decided to present their father with Hugo Krötzch’s philatelic library on the occasion of his 60th birthday on 26th September 1928. He used it to establish a “Friends of German Libraries Society”, as a study aid for serious stamp collectors and to promote philatelic research. This Society passed it to the German Library for permanent custody on 28th September 1928.

On the occasion of his 60th birthday C. G. Vogel also presented the town of Pössneck with the necessary means to create a park in the centre of the town.

The town of Pössneck, to which C. G. Vogel had given an important new industry, honoured his Jubilee by renaming Phönixstrasse near his works as

Carl-Gustav-Vogel-Strasse

FOREWORD

Written works of all periods constantly act as foundation stones for all branches of culture. This is why the writings of older periods are collected and united into libraries. Ninety years ago the adhesive postage stamp was invented by Rowland Hill in England. These stamps were available as needed from the post office. These first English stamps were small works of graphic art, which certainly did not go unnoticed by everyone who sent letters, and were worth preserving. Whoever then thought of using different colours for the different values sowed the seeds of stamp collecting, without knowing what a rich harvest this seed corn would produce. Philatelic literature developed 20 years later with the first catalogue, and reached such a vast extent over the next 70 years that only the most extensive libraries could accumulate all the material available.

A simple stamp collector finds satisfaction in a price catalogue. Active societies send their members a magazine in the form of a “society organ”, printed by themselves or an outside firm, thus supplying their collector members with the foundation for a library. This search for information produces the men of letters, who can be supported by society libraries.

The largest society libraries belonged to the “Dresden International Philatelic Society of 1877” and the “Berlin Philatelic Club 1888”. However, the space needed by these large collections worked against their retention, if, as in Germany, clubs did not have their own premises. As a rule, a local society would find it difficult to house a single bookcase. Large philatelic libraries could only belong to rich private individuals, and their existence or disposal depended on the death of their owners. The first belonged to Theodor Haas. After his death in 1911 it was acquired by Suppantisch to supplement his own already large library, which was then the largest German Library, with 3,037 volumes of journals, over 3,000 single issues and 1,800 books from 1861-1900. It was sold by his heirs in 1922 to a society in New York (the “Collectors Club”, with its own clubhouse on 4th Avenue). The library of Dr. Elias (1922?) also found an overseas buyer. The internationally largest library, that of the Earl of Crawford, was willed to the nation and went, after his death (1913), to the British Museum. The basis of this library was that of Tiffany, which after his death (3.3.1887 in St. Louis, Mass.) went in 1901 in 39 chests weighting 40 hundred weights to its purchases, the Earl of Crawford, a member of the London Philatelic society. To fill the few existing gaps and build up the library further, the Earl bought in all available collections. As Vice-President of the London Philatelic Society, he bought in 1908 the valuable collection of the bibliophile Fraenkel, who died on 20.9.1907, and who had been for years the painstaking librarian of the Berlin Philatelic Club. In 1909, the American Library of Deats came into his possession. The entire contents of the unified library was then carefully catalogued by the President of the “Philatelic Literature Society”, E. D. Bacon, in the great “Catalogue of the Philatelic Library of the Earl of Crawford”, in 924 folio columns in 1911. In 1926 appeared a supplement in the same format, also by E. D. Bacon and taking up 136 folio columns. It was published by the “Philatelic Literature Society”, and again finished in 1911.

This all makes it clear why the foundation of the Krötzsch Library could only be the basis for the build-up of a permanent international philatelic library. Philately exceeds all political boundaries and only a comprehensive library can give the serious researcher support for his work. It is thus to be hoped that German and foreign collectors, dealers, suppliers (principally of new issues) and societies will go on with the work that has been started. Contributions of any kind are requested by the German Library in Leipzig.

INTRODUCTION

When it comes to discussing the location of the unified philatelic collection, it seems as well to say something about the German Library in Leipzig. Its prehistory goes back to the year 1848. In the days of the Frankfurt National Collection, the book dealer and Higher Commercial Councillor, Heinrich Wilhelm Hahn of Hanover, the original publisher of Monumenta Germaniae, made his whole firm available, as did 40 German book dealers at his suggestion. This gave the impetus for the foundation of a library in St. Paul's church. The Society collection reached about 4,500 volumes in a short time. After the dissolution of Parliament in 1855 the Library migrated to the German Museum in Nuremberg, and is still there today.

After the foundation of the German Reich, the problem of a National Library was raised again, until finally the German Library was established. Its overall collection contained all German and foreign-language literature published at home from 1st January 1913, plus German literature from abroad, and official publications from the central authorities, society and company literature, and private publications from the German language region. Excluded are music and daily papers. Further impetus was given in 1910 by the proposals of the Dresden society book dealer, Erich Ehlermann, in his memorial, which formed the basis for subsequent discussions. On 3rd October 1912, came the agreement on the foundation of the German Library by the State Treasury of Saxony, the Leipzig town Council and the German book dealers' commercial union in Leipzig. The city of Leipzig provided the building space, the State of Saxony provided the cost of the library building and administrative quarters, including the cost of later extensions already allowed for on the plans. The commercial union undertook, on the initiative of its then Chief Superintendent, Karl Siegismund, the erection, continuation and administration.

Collection of the German Library began on 1st January 1913. In February 1914 the building site was handed over by the City of Leipzig, excavation began in May 1914, and the final stone was laid in April 1916. The German Library moved into its new home from 22-27 May 1916, and was formally opened on Sedan Day (2nd September) 1916. The recurrent costs of administration have received contributions since 1922 from the German Reich, the State of Saxony and the City of Leipzig. The Society of the Friends of the German Library was founded as early as 1913 to promote all the aims of the German Library. It currently has about 2,500 members with annual and meeting subscriptions. In return they get annual bibliographical reports which are not obtainable via the book trade and which are far more valuable than the small annual subscription.

At the beginning of 1928, the stock consisted of about 700,000 volumes and the yearly intake was over 50,000 volumes. 800 to 1,000 journals come in every day. The big reading room has 200 places for readers, with a select reference library of 15,000 volumes on all sciences. The periodicals reading room has 106 readers' places, with 3,100 periodicals on display. A smaller reading room has a further 11 readers' places. The average daily number of users is 443. More detailed guides are available free from the German Library. The reading rooms are open from 8 to 22 hours.

The German Library is reference only: this means its books are only for consultation on the premises. However, it does participate in the German Inter-Library Loans Scheme: on its side it lends books which are only available in the German Library to other libraries, and on the other side, it obtains books not in its own stock from other Libraries for their readers.

To use the Library calls for a six-month reader's card costing 1RM, and call slips costing 10pf for 10.

The German Library has recently acquired a Clark photo apparatus of the latest design from the firm of H. Jantsch of Ueberlingen. It is used to reproduce text, tables and illustrations from single pages for the user.

It should also be mentioned that the German Library has taken over important bibliographical tasks:

1. Production of the "Daily Recorder" in the magazine for the German book trade, based on new items from the book-sellers
2. Production of the "Weekly Recorder" (both from 1st April 1921)

3. Production of “Literary Monitor for Germany (from 1st January 1927), the 79th volume of which appeared in 1928. Each contains about 140 specialist references, and supplies a complete and rapid bibliography of German scientific books and important periodical articles
4. Production of the “Monthly Guide to Official State Publications” (from 1st January 1928)
5. Production of German section of “International Bibliography of the History of Science”.
6. Support of a series of other bibliographical undertakings of a general and specialist character.

The Krötzsch Library had been housed in the German Library since 1913, and was incorporated into it to form a closed whole. An asterisk (*) attached to the shelf number or individual volume means that the item belongs to the Foundation.

LIBRARY CATALOGUE OF THE PHILATELIC LIBRARY OF
C. SCHMITTDIEL, HAMBURG.

FOREWORD

I offer herewith the first edition of the catalogue of my collection of philatelic literature. I hope this will be of use to my numerous collector friends. I am always read to lend collectors know to me literature from my private collection, as long as they will handle them properly and return them punctually at the end of the period of loan. I thus ask for strict observance of the library rules.

I would always be pleased to have the chance to extend my literature collection further.

Hamburg, 15 November 1936

LIBRARY RULES

1. My library can be used without charge. Foreign borrowers alone should enclose the cost of postage with their requests.
2. The borrower must secure literature borrowed against loss or damage.
3. A printed loans voucher must be filled out for every book borrowed. When the book is returned, this voucher will be returned to the borrower as a receipt.
4. A book borrowed must not be passed on by the borrower to anyone else.
5. The loan period is 14 days for each item for borrowers in this country: 4 weeks for borrowers abroad. Books kept beyond this period must be sent back as soon as possible on request.

Hamburg, 15 November 1936.

MEMBERSHIP LIST [OF THE BERLINER PHILATELISTEN-CLUB] AS OF 31st MARCH 1890

Translator's Introduction

In my bibliographic publications, mostly concerned with 19th Century periodicals, I like to include biographical details of the principal people involved to add a little more interest to articles which would otherwise be rather dry. This often causes me great problems since even some well known philatelists never had their biographies published. I suspect that often the information is available, if only one knew where to find it. Accordingly, when I recently came across the membership list of the Berliner Philatelisten-Club in a cumulative index to their Society Magazine, complete with members' occupations, I thought it was too good an opportunity to miss and have reproduced it here in English.

DIRECTIONS FOR EXTERNAL LOANS.

PHILATELIC LIBRARY, HAMBURG 10, Hohenfelder Strasse 2000 Hamburg 76	Opening Times
	Tuesday	14 – 18 hrs
	Thursday	14 – 19 hrs
	1 st Saturday in month, 9 – 12 hrs

DIRECTIONS FOR EXTERNAL LOANS

We have simplified the external loans system to make it quicker and less complicated to send your books. Every user of the library has a reader's ticket. We shall need a copy of your personal identity card (the side with the personal details). Please add your loan requests, with your signature, the author and the title.

The charge is DM2 per book/volume of a periodical (no charge to members of the library); please send this in the form of unused current postage stamps (if not all the books can be sent, the extra stamps will be returned).

We also ask you to send a postage charge of DM5, also in stamps. You may borrow up to 12 titles (we have increased the number so as to keep the postal charges per item as low as possible and make it worth your while to borrow).

Articles from journals, works of small extent and small sections from a work can be supplied as copies (so long as the copyright laws are not breached). You also have the possibility of getting sections from the subject catalogue, which covers the contents of magazines and research reports classified by subject. The card catalogue contains most of the old material from about 1890 onwards. We charge photocopies at the rate of DM0.30 per A4 sheet, plus postage.

Please return the small card with details of the regulations with your order.

If you wish to become a member, we will gladly send you the appropriate form. The annual subscription is DM40.

We shall be happy to help you with your work on philately and postal history.

REGULATIONS

1. Use

The Hamburg Philatelic Library may be used by everyone within the scope of the regulations.

2. Readers' Tickets

1. Loans will only be made on production of a reader's ticket, which will be issued on production of a personal identity card.

2. The regulations will be made known to the reader on issue of his card, or sent in the case of external loans and must received his signature.

3. The ticket is valid for a limited period, and will be renewed annually after confirmation of the original data.

4. For external loans, a copy of the identity card will be required.

5. Any changes must be communicated to the Library without delay

6. The user is responsible if his card is lost. The Library should be informed at once so that no-one else can use the card to borrow.

3. Loans

1. The reader's ticket is needed for all loans

2. Loans are restricted to 12 titles

3. The following are not available for loan:#
- current issues
- especially rare and valuable items
- loose-leaf works
- study group publications of the last 3 years
- works restricted by the author

4. External Loans

1. External loans will only be made on written application with details of the reader's number.

2. The loan charge must be forwarded in current unused postage stamps. The loan charge does not apply to members.

3. A postage charge of DM5 will be made, and this should also be sent in stamps.

4. Returns must be made using the same type of post (registered or parcel post) and the same amount of packing.

5. Loan Period

1. The loan period is normally 3 weeks

2. A special loan period may be agreed under certain circumstances

3. A loan may be extended if no other reader has applied for the book

4. Fines will be levied if the loan period is exceeded

6. Obligations of the Borrower

1. The literature must be handled with the greatest care. Annotations and markings of any kind, including underlinings, are prohibited.

2. The user must, in every case, replace items disfigured or damaged whilst in his possession. All costs involved in replacing, re-obtaining or repairing the item must be repaid.

3. Transmission in both directions is always at the user's risk.

4. It is forbidden to pass items on to a third party

7. Charges

Charge per book/volume of periodical	DM2.00
Charge to members of the Library	no charge
Charge to member of associated societies (proof needed)	DM1.00
Copies	DM0.30
Reservations	DM0.60

8. Fines

1. If the loan period of 3 weeks is exceeded, a fine will be charged for each week in excess.

THE POSTAGE STAMPS OF AUSTRIA
IN THE GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE OF THE YEAR 1918

Regarding the establishment of Libraries

As a result of a harmless designation of the collection of literature as a fashion (page 108 in no. 7 of this year) we have incurred a reprimand in no. 6 of "Postage Stamp Intelligence." This reprimand, however, is misplaced. It never occurred to us to attack the collecting of literature as such; and only if an attack such as that had indeed existed, an opposition would be justified. Thus, all further statements in the "Postage Stamp Intelligence," whether correct or not, are without any object. Certainly indeed there was no reproach against the "eight or ten men who occupy themselves with the collecting of literature in all of Europe" to have made a "fashion sport" out of it.

We continue to maintain the assertion that it is regrettable when the smallest clubs wish to acquire comprehensive specialised libraries. Because, as the opponent himself admits, the specialised libraries are used very little; and he further acknowledges that the smallest clubs cannot acquire great specialised libraries because they do not dispose of adequate means. And yet - should libraries be established? The consequence then would be that the material getting to the smaller units would be withdrawn from the libraries utilised more; that resources then would be split up to several places; that one number here and a volume there would be kept of a rare journal, so that in this fashion hardly ever would or could material be gathered completely. For these reasons we argued in favor of a wise limitation and added as a matter of fact: "Naturally every prudent collector and even the smallest club will have to acquire certain manuals and standard works if he will not remain behind in everyday knowledge," a view that coincides approximately with that of the opponent but which he suppressed for the sake of brevity.

If we want to speak about the establishment of libraries, we must bring to mind, first of all, what a library is and what it should be, and its Purpose. A library is every collection of books, i.e., of literary productions in the widest sense, while a specialised collection constitutes only writings in reference to a specific subject. There now arises the question whether there is to be accepted what is available in the subject, without discrimination and without limits, or whether a selection ought to be made. The reply is focused on the purpose of such a specialised library, and the purpose can be threefold: first, to be a resource for the philatelic specialist, thus for collectors an ever-ready work of consultation, instruction, and stimulation; second, to furnish to one who wishes to be absorbed in his field of specialisation and to study on his own further means of knowledge, notably in reference to the past; third, to offer an image of the total specialised literature, in effect, to add to it if possible, without regard to whether the material accumulated is of value, so that the preservation of literature becomes an end in itself.

The first kind of libraries will suffice completely for the average collector and for the average club (the numerous smaller clubs of thirty or less members). Unfortunately, the library of many collectors consists only of the current catalogue. The advertising publications "subscribed to" by these gentlemen, usually end up in the paper basket, and with good reason, just like the "periodical" which they possibly receive as well. At times the latter is retained, hence we find in such "libraries" a few years of publication of the most common or the worst of journals offered to its members by some clubs, according to Nir. Brummer's discourse in Mannheim. Textbooks are not likely to be found there. The collector is educated by way of the action and example of others, collecting not only stamps but experience. Many beginners do not know that textbooks exist. When, however, they learn about these, they are beyond the initial period and mostly no longer require such. One welcomes the progress, then, when a collector acquires several catalogues, possibly also a better manual, subscribes to several and better journals, buys a more comprehensive textbook, in short, acquires what he needs to further his knowledge via consultation and reading, and so guards against loss. If smaller clubs embrace their task to be useful to its members, they will have to make available a small library which, in accord with its principles, will help them in collecting; and in opening; their eyes. A club library, therefore, must obtain books and journals which every advanced collector should acquire on his own, so that the members will be animated; works, as well, too expensive for single members, therefore to be offered by the club for the use of its members, such as, e.g., Meyer's Manual with addenda, Lindenberg's booklet, and similar. It is reprehensible for such libraries to accumulate "dead freight" coming in, disregarding whether it serves a purpose or has any value at all. A repugnant example is the library of the Association for the Science of Postage Stamps in Brunn, evaluated on page 360 of the "Austria Philatelist" (August 1895) for entry. Among 14 newspapers there were listed 8 announcements of offers, a special section is for catalogues and price lists, and this heading contains all of three price lists. Another division contains postal manuals and address books, among these in fact two obsolete address books. Section I is a curiosity: books, works, manuals, containing; merely the generously and freely distributed festival number of the "Austria Philatelist." A library of this kind is worse yet than none at all. If one dares assert that the members have no use whatsoever from it; what happens is that they are being forced to haggle, with no interest in their instruction.

Procuring a small library suited to such instruction is not too difficult. Nor is it excessively expensive, and can be kept in a small bookcase in the apartment of the librarian or at the meeting place of the club, as well as be comfortably moved about. A library of the second class would have to correspond to more extended demands, i.e., an enlargement of the first. Here must be offered material for study. The student does not wish to instruct himself only but others, as well. Not only does he wish to learn about the generally recognized results of previous investigations but investigate himself and note how results now accepted have been obtained.

A library that suffices for such demands must of course be quite comprehensive. It must contain as many manuals and catalogues as possible, notably older ones, further monographs and older periodicals, so that the investigator has the opportunity to research extended spaces of time. Advertising material must not be lacking, so that price fluctuations may be determined, though price catalogues suffice for that purpose. As libraries of this type we regard the greater collectors, further the larger associations (Dresden, Berlin, Vienna, Frankfurt on Main, Munich). These libraries are able also to offer such because (with the exception of the Berlin Philatelists Club which came into existence more recently) they belong to older clubs, have been building for years, and so, today, hold a great deal of material which today can be obtained with much difficulty only. It is understood that in such libraries everything received is preserved. It is equally understood that these libraries need not chase after the mirage of completeness. For its purposes it does not require a complete collection of the total literature. It suffices when the best works and periodicals are complete, when from the rest one preserves only what is received without chasing after such. The library of Dresden may serve us as an example whose value is not diminished by the only partial representation of small publications by Jeran, Meier (Stade), Wenzel (Kbpenick), and Marbes' Stamp Collector is represented by one number only, and a number of club communications are missing. Indeed, any number of propaganda and announcements being kept here and there could disappear to make room for better materials. To be sure, a library such as that approaches the third type, that is to say, book collections which mean to represent the total literature of philately. A library such as this is possible only if it fulfills the conditions of the second kind. Initially the material for study must be gathered before the literature and its study can become an end in itself. If the material is available the temptation exists to expand the collection. A passion for the collecting of literature comes into existence, and the act of collecting itself without reward to the original purpose develops into a chief purpose. No doubt it is justified even though rather worth-less. We assert this - even though we pay homage to this passion and have sacrificed much time and money to it - as philatelic literature, for the most part, is not worth collecting in reference to content. It can disappear without doing harm without later times deploring its disappearance. If it is true what we doubt - that literature will outlast postage stamps - that will be merely a part of literature to which ephemeral flies, advertising sheets, price lists surely do not belong. Yes, we assert that such a far future which will no longer know postage stamp collections will be satisfied with Suppantisch's catechism as the only literature monument. In the meantime we find ourselves in the present, and here we find some people (to which we too belong) the passion to accumulate everything possible that has been printed about philately. All this printed material has been designated up to now as "literature." We find that this designation is wrong. Price lists, advertisements, address books, brochures are not "literature," not any more than club communications that limit themselves to reports on membership and exchange activities. No one regards as part of legal literature inventories of anti-ouarian book stocks or calendars of summons. Though the designation may be wrong, on the other hand, everything under that heading is being collected, and since one can justify all that one cares to collect, this kind of collection is justified, as well. We do dispute that such a collection possesses a great inner value or that it represents more than a curiosity. Take a look at the index of the library of Justice Suppantisch, the greatest among European literature collectors, which at the present time is being offered by spoonfuls to the patient readers of the "Austria Philatelist." Except for collectors of the last category it should be most uninteresting. But the contents of the truly copious library which Mr. Suppantisch makes available for use with admitted liberality are of use for study in a small part only. Rarely only will anyone approach him. Suppantisch requesting the numerous valuable ephemeral flies, and we assert that only the possession alone makes the collector happy. That applies to us also: one demands proof! Here is one: by coincidence an advertisement, the "United Globe Mercury," no. 1, page 9, contains an interesting opening about the forgery of the dictoria National Invalid Endowment envelope which we discovered accidentally, an article unhappily not concluded. The otherwise outstanding bibliography of Vir. Suppantisch does not mention this article anywhere! Proof, probably, that the bibliography of announcement brochures has not been read through. To return now to our theme, a library of the third kind must naturally seek completion, admittedly difficult, and as a result many collectors of this type have limited themselves to specific linguistic areas, such as e.g., only the German or exclusively English literature. The attainment of completeness is virtually impossible, of course. Certain older matters are found in few copies only. At times there will surface a copy of a magazine which until then had been fully unknown, or price lists (Windisch's Stamp Collector, catalogue by Tramburg's heirs). Numbers are found which had not been known, e.g., a no. 2 of the International Friend of Philatelists, a no. 4 of the Midland Philatelist (which numbers Mr. Suppantisch does not know, as he lists the journals in question as being complete, which however we "discovered" recently). Nevertheless, this collection too gives pleasure.

If the purpose of a library is properly recognized, and when its acquisition is effected correspondingly, it can produce much good use and also much pleasure for the collector of literature.

It will always be correct to recommend the first two types of library and to point out the considerations that oppose the last kind. We repeatedly mention that the formation of a library-fashion is to be regretted and deplored, as in the case of Heligoland or of British colonies when the main body of collectors rushed, as if a sport, upon the collecting of literature. A price rise would be the consequence, as we already observed in the case of some English books and magazines. There, a number of obsolete books are available only at fully ridiculous prices, because with the great collectors it is a matter of fashion and of good breeding to own them - not because of their intrinsic value but rather because they are rare, as written to us by an Englishman. We wish all the publishers of philatelic literature a good market. If, however, a work is out of print and has become obsolete, its value is only to the third kind of collecting and must be evaluated accordingly. A newer and more complete work is always to be preferred to the older one; and one who desires to establish a library of the second category (which we regard as the ideal specialised library) should renounce older, obsolete works, collect catalogues not according to edition but choose always the newest, which with us is usually the best.

Dr . N.

THE BERN PHILATELIC LIBRARY

The Bern Philatelic –Library
George Argypoulos, reporter.

To facilitate scientific studies within the philatelic circles of the Swiss Confederation, it was decided in the year 1944 to amalgamate the central library of the Union of the Swiss Philatelic Societies, which contains works covering the whole range of philately, with the library of the General Direction of P.T.T. This is situated in Berne, the seat of the World Postal Union.

Thanks to this amalgamation, every philatelist plus the 8500 members of the 88 local societies in the union will be able to keep his knowledge up-to-date, and study the literature relating to the whole of philately without difficult.

Every book or periodical will be available for consultation or study, both for inhabitants of the capital or for people in Switzerland beyond that, who will be able to borrow their desired publications simply for the cost of postage both ways.

The library of the General Direction of the PTT has taken over the administration, upkeep and service of the Philatelic Library, but its financial support falls entirely on the Union of Swiss Philatelic Societies. Moreover, the Union has agreed that all philatelic Central library for its further development. Financial support for the library will depend on an estimate to be mutually agreed of the sum required for the acquisition of new works, binding and repair of the volumes etc. Over the last 15 years the philatelic Library has acquired 1400 volumes at a cost of 20,567 SFr. This figure does not include the cost of buying in materials on postal history, material for the airmail archive and other minor provisions.

Now that the Library of the General Direction of the PTT includes the Central Library of the Union of Swiss philatelic Societies, it covers over 20 rooms on the 1st floor of the Berne headquarters of the General Post Direction. The library is designed on a large scale, with automatic electric control of the doors and hermetically sealed metal bookcases. The whole arrangement of the library is based on the latest results on scientific classification and the preservation of bibliographic materials.

The philatelic section consists of 1550 monographs and treatises, 1460 volumes of philatelic magazines, about 1000 stamp catalogues, 1200 auction catalogues, 350 exhibition catalogues and 500 works with varying philatelic contents, 6080 books in all. To these should be added 3950 volumes on postal history and an airmail archive.

As well as the printed library catalogue there is a detailed card index with 242 metal dividers that gives the stock of books and philatelic articles arrayed alphabetically by authors and subject. The classification, numbering and layout of the titles follows the international standards of method and form laid down for this material.

An important contribution to the study and expertise of Swiss cancellations is a card – index of all the rarest cancellations used in every Swiss post office since 1944 are also available, with explanatory details for those interested.

The library has a whole series of rare and out-of-print publications and monumental luxury philatelic editions, as for example the work on “Swiss Postage Stamps” published in 1899 by R.Mirabeau and A. Reuterskrold, the two-volume work on “The Postage Stamps of Japan and Dependencies” that appeared in London in 1978, the splendid edition on “The Royal Philatelic Collection” published in London again in 1952 by J.Wilson, and many others which cannot however be lent outside the library.

A visit to such a well-organised and well-stocked library will be a highly profitable activity for every stamp collector.

THE MUNICH PHILATELIC LIBRARY

Sammler-Dienst Coburg. 3?1974, p.183-185

The Philatelic Library, Munich

By L. Tröndle

Because of sudden changes to my last leave period, I was finally able to satisfy a long-standing wish, namely to pay a visit to the Philatelic Library in Munich. In fact, before the termination of outside lending on 14 January 1972, I had had a good deal of literature sent to me through the post, but only a personal survey could give a complete picture of its contents, as the last catalogue dated from August 1968 and then only contained books and catalogues from the philately of Germany, and not the extensive contents of German and international periodicals.

The Munich Philatelic Library was formed in February 1931 by the amalgamation of the private library of the art dealer F.H. Zinkgraf, the private library of the distinguished Bavarian researcher Colonel (retired) Hugo Schröder and Chief Inspector Chr.O. Müller, the library of the München Stamp club, the superfluous stock of the Munich Society of Entire Collectors, and of "Tamma" (Munich Collector's Society). The library received further additions when it took over the library of the former League of German and Austrian Philatelic Societies, 1934, that of the editorial board of the Society journal "Das Postwertzeichen" 1938, 30 boxes of duplicates from the former Prussian State Library in Berlin, and in 1946 from the legacy of the Widow Harisch, as well as a steady stream of gifts from philatelists at home and abroad. Within a relatively short time the contents of the philately Division of the German Library in Leipzig and the philatelic section of the Leipzig University Library were left well behind. Munich, as the biggest German philatelic library, Munich can now compete with the leading philatelic libraries of Europe in London, Stockholm and Berne. The stock now amounts to about 22,000 volumes excluding duplicates.

The Munich library covers the following fields.

1. Books on the collection subjects of Germany, Europe, overseas.
2. Books on special philatelic topics (e.g. cancellations, forgeries, science of collecting, motif collecting, postal service)
3. About 300 volumes of various journals, some in foreign languages.
4. Catalogues of all leading German and international publishers
5. Auction catalogues of most Central European firms
6. 80,000 (!) index cards for periodicals documentation

The special feature of the library is that its bookstock goes back to about 1860: they have complete volumes of some journals going back to 1871. The most important and oldest of the foreign-language journals are listed at the end of this article.

The American Philatelist from 1886 (USA)

The Stanley Gibbons Monthly Journal, from 1890 (England)

The London Philatelist from 1892 (England)

Le Moniteur du Collectionneur from 1893 (Luxemburg)

Svenst Filatelistisk Tidskrift, from 1900 (Sweden)

Nederlandsch Maandblad from 1922 (Netherlands)

Mijn Stockpaardje from 1946 (Netherlands)

Filatelica Italiana from 1961 (Italy)

The Munich Philatelic Library occupies 2 floors at no.5, Sparkassenstrasse. This street lies between the Old Townhall and the Mint and the Hofbauhaus, and is surrounded by ample parking space in Hildegardstrasse, the Farbergraben and on Marienplatz, a few minutes walk away. The arrangement within the library is as follows: bookshops for Europe and special topics, loans area with photocopier, German literature and the reading room (!0 places) with the current issues of journals, the library catalogue (card catalogue) and journals documentation. Particularly valuable handbooks and monographs are kept in two steel cases and are not available for loan.

In spite of all the efforts of the management and staff, the Munich Philatelic Library, with only two assistants, is not in a position to supply all possible information as a service in to enquirers, nor can it act as a philatelic information bureau. A loan is only possible when the author and title of a work are given. Searches cannot be carried out in view of the difficult staff situation, although serious and patient efforts are made to meet all requests as far as possible. Users of the Library should bear in mind that apart from their requests up to 1000 volumes are consulted monthly within the library, some 300 books are lent abroad and some 700 at home. On top of this, cataloguing, acquisitions take much time, as each book has to be ordered individually, usually from abroad, and of course has to be paid for as well. Only a few firms and authors will supply their works automatically and cost-free. This considerable amount of work is performed, as already mentioned, by only 2 people with great idealism and energy,

The work of cataloguing (because of which the foreign loans service had to be closed from 14 January 1972 to 30 September 1973), covering Germany and overseas, is now almost finished. The catalogue should appear in the middle of 1974. However it is to be feared that a sharp rise in the literary traffic would cause the whole system to break down again, especially as loud and massive complaints about the other two leading philatelic libraries in Germany are being heard from all sides. The Munich Library does not go public with verbose justifications, but it has never yet disappointed myself and my acquaintance in any way. It would be a good thing if our "organised philately" would recognise the value of this treasure trove of literature and would play its part in overcoming the problems, since philatelic literature and philatelic research are the pillars of philately, even though certain publications seem to think exhibitions are the most important. Without research no literature - without literature no research - without either, no philately. Exhibitions serve only to publicize our hobby to the outside world. It thus seems highly peculiar that of the millions raised from collectors for the Foundation for Philately and Postal History by issues of special stamps, only a meagre 5000 DM per year can be spared for the library (and that has to be fought for hard). On the other hand, 7 times that amount was freely made available for a 10-day International Exhibition. Those responsible should think very seriously about this discrepancy in the distribution of the means for real philatelic work. At this point, sincerest thanks should be expressed to the City of Munich, since it bears the main part of the costs for philatelists at home and abroad, and is thus a unique source of philatelic literature under conditions where not even the cost of postage is required.

There is no charge for use of the Munich Philatelic Library. External loans cost - .50DM per book for post and packing, - plus an extra 1.20 DM for parcel delivery – and payment can be in current postage stamps. Special items are rated separately. Photocopies cost –40DM up to 10 pages (or different items), from 11 onwards – 30DM. It should be stressed again at this point that the library is only in a position to give quite a limited service, so that extensive pieces of copyting (entire books etc.) cannot be considered with the best will in the world. The loan period is 4 weeks as a rule, though it may be shortened or extended on request. Loans at home and abroad are made via a public library associated with the regional inter-library loans system. Members of the Society of German Philatelists can have literature sent direct by sending in a 4-part loans voucher. These can be obtained from the Society and must be stamped by the Society on the reverse. A separate form is required for each work. Philatelists who might prefer to visit the library personally should note the opening hours: Monday 8 to 12am; Tuesday 12.00 to 19.00 and Thursday/Friday 8 to 15.30. The address: Philatelic Library. 5 Sparkassenstrasse, 8 Munich 2.

In conclusion I should like, as I said at the outset, to give those interested in philatelic literature my list of the philatelic journals of which a number of complete volumes are available. However the stock also contains single volumes or simple issues of some hundreds of German and foreign periodicals. My list is certainly not 100% complete; it is perfectly possible that I have missed the odd journal or individual volume, but the philatelic researcher or friend of literature will get a reasonably good idea by and large of what is present. At the same time, this will document the high state of German philatelic literature production over more than a century. official publications and those relating mainly to the postal service have not been included.

Stamp Exhibition in Frankfurt-Am-Main

The Federal Ministry for Posts and Telegraphs is showing from 15 Jan 1974, the Federal Postal Museum at 53, Schaumainkai, Frankfurt-am-Main, stamps from the following fields of collection: German Reich, Danzig, Saarland, Germany under Allied occupation, German Federal Republic, Berlin (West). The stamp exhibition is planned to go on till the beginning of March.

On conclusion of the 22nd volume of our Circular, a new UTOPIA – report is published today. This presents an index to the articles appearing in circulars nos 1 to 68 (1976 – 1977).

Two years ago this index would have needed 35 pages, but today it took 40 pages. A further proof of the extensive range of our CIRCULAR.

Also published was the second part of the index to contents of the AtGo internal communications.

Please replace the two previously published indexes (pages 1-35 and 1-4) by the present ones.

Indexes to further German – languages magazine are in preparation and will be published in a CIRCULAR as soon possible.

Photocopies of articles included so far can be supplied on payment of the cost (currently DM – 0.40 per DIN A4 page) plus postage.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR EXTERNAL LOANS.

Trans 325x

Letter from Munich City Library to Mr. B. Birch, 2.7.1990

Dear Philatelist,

The Philatelic Library is a division of the Munich City Library. All works received have to be dealt with by the regulations for the Science Library. It is concerned with the collection of philatelic literature, its processing and loan. At the moment the Philatelic Library contains over 35,000 publications (books, volumes of periodicals, auction and exhibition catalogues) in various languages.

The literature is highly accessible (catalogued), i.e. the books are shown on index cards in the library catalogue. This catalogue may be consulted here during opening hours. The Deutsche Zeitung für Briefmarkenkunde (German Journal of Philately) (DBZ) has produced a 75 page subject catalogue of the books on Germany, Europe, overseas and motifs. It contains all titles available via the EDV as at 1.5.1983. This catalogue can be obtained from the DBZ, Feldstr. 6, D-5408, Nassau, P.O. Box 1363, at a price of DM10.30.

Unfortunately it is not possible for us to do literature searches in given fields or on special topics, because of the amount of time they take. Such a service is not available from any other German Library either. As in other libraries, detailed literature searches have to be carried out by yourself on the spot using the library catalogue.

Bibliographical information can only be supplied in special cases. We are unfortunately unable to carry out detailed searches to answer particular questions.

Photocopies can be supplied to a limited extent, up to about 20 pages, at a price of 0.30DM per A4 sheet.

With friendly greeting

1934

Footnote: (done as in original)

Catalogue now available – DM10.30 at the moment, will probably appear next spring. A supplement to this catalogue will be published starting with No.24 of the DBZ, it will appear as a reprint in September 1990 – DM10.30.

Instruction for External Loans

1. Loans to Members of German Philatelic Societies

External loans of philatelic literature are made via the EDV. For this, an EDV card has to be made up for every library user. We need four personal details for this. Please fill in the attached green form, sign it and send it to us with a copy of your identity card or travel pass (the side with the personal details), and a copy of the front side of your membership card in the “Society of German Philatelists” for the current year.

Your personal details will be used to make up a library card. This is retained by us, since it is only needed for external loans from the Philatelic Library. Direct loans to members of affiliates to the “Society of German Philatelists” are only possible because this Society has made special arrangements.

A user number will be sent to you as soon as produced by our EDV division.

For future loans all you have to do is supply us with your user number, author, title and, if possible, book number of the works you want. Requests must be accompanied by a fee of DM1.50 per book in valid stamps to cover the postage, plus in every case a copy of your “Society of German Philatelists” membership card for the current year (valid till 31.3. of the following year).

In change of address you should send us an official notice of the new address (photocopy of the official record).

Loans become available after completion of the above procedure (allocation of a user number).

Stamp catalogues for the last five years are not available for loan.

2. Loans to Non-Members

All other persons at home and abroad can borrow literature from the Philatelic Library via the national and international loans system. Apply to your local library.

Munich Philatelic Library

The green form is the one you have fill in to be allotted a reader number.

RULES FOR THE USE OF THE MUNICH CITY LIBRARIES
29th NOVEMBER 1985

Rules not applicable to inter-Library Loans have been left out

The City of Munich has laid down the following rules on the basis of Art.23 clause 1 and Art.24 sub-sections 1 and 2 of the City ordinances:

Aims and organisation

1. The libraries of the City of Munich (Munich City Libraries) are to be run as public institutions within the meaning of Article 21 of the ordinances. Their aims are:-
 - to make their contents available for use within the libraries
 - to make their contents available for use on loan outside the libraries
 - to supply bibliographical information
2. The Munich City Libraries are divided into:
 - the municipal science library with its divisions
 - city libraries with travel and special collections

Public Utility

Borrowing rights

1. The Munich City Libraries may be used by every conforming to these and other sections.
2. Material may be lent on production of a library card to all inhabitants of the Munich region and to all jurists and members of organisations situated in Munich.

The same applies to people who do not actually reside in this region but are in non-temporary employment or education here.

Special regulations apply to external loans.

Library card

1. The library card will be issued on application. The appropriate form must be filled in by the applicant, and an identity card or travel permit and a current official residence permit supplied.

The application must contain the following personal details:

- surname, and previous names if applicable
- forenames

- address
- place of birth
- date of birth
- sex

In the case of minor applications, the corresponding data must be supplied for an adult guarantor, with the exception of place of birth and sex.

Changes must be notified at once, accompanied by the relevant documents.

Restrictions on use, rules and regulations

1. The Munich City Libraries may impose limitations as regards:
 - the use of individual library facilities
 - the loan or provision of certain types or numbers of items
2. If a user is late in returning items borrowed, or has failed to pay any relevant costs or charges, no further items may be borrowed by him.
3. The user must respect any copyright or other third-person rights attached to any item shown or lent to him. He must acquit the Munich city Libraries of any responsibility in this respect.

Loan period

The basic loan period is 28 calendar days. This may be reduce or extended either for part of the stock or for individual items.

Opening times

Loan of items, users' responsibilities

1. In any dispute as regards number and type of items to be loaned or periods of issue and return, the rulings of the Munich City Libraries must be accepted.
2. The user must check the condition of any item issued to him and point out any defects. If this is not done, the item will be assumed in perfect condition when issues.
3. Items must be handled with care and protected from damage. They must not be passed on to other people.
4. Items lost, soiled or otherwise damaged must be replaced by the user, even if he was not personally to blame. It is within the discretion of the Munich City Libraries to accept a cash payment, or a replacement item, a reproduction or another equivalent work from the user or at his expense.

If soiled or damaged items can be repaired, the user must bear the cost of this.

Replacement charges must cover the purchase price and the cost of reproduction and repair plus also the material and labour costs of making the replacement available for loan.

Behaviour in the Library

§ 10
Obligation to report

Borrowers in whose dwelling an infectious disease, as defined in State Regulation on Infectious Diseases No.3, has broken out must not use the loans service of the Munich City Libraries as long as there is a risk of infection. They must notify the Munich City Libraries and arrange to have their loan items disinfected.

§ 11
Ordering stock

§ 12
Charges

Charges arising from the use of the Munich City Libraries will be as laid down in the "Regulations for charges for the Use of the Libraries of the City of Munich.

Exclusion

1. Users who infringe these regulations, or others, regarding use of, or charges for the library, may be excluded for a period from the use of the Munich City Libraries, or in aggravated cases, forever.
2. The same will apply in the case of unacceptable behaviour begun or continued, particularly as regards failure to maintain order in the library premises, or the safety of items of stock.

Disorderly conduct

§ 15
Coming into force

1. These regulations come into force as soon as promulgated.
2. At the same time, the regulations for the use of the Munich city Libraries dated 25th September 1974 (MüAB1, S.182), cease to be valid.

The Town Council approved these regulations on 30th October 1985.

REGULATIONS FOR CHARGES FOR THE USE OF THE LIBRARIES OF THE CITY OF MUNICH

The City of Munich issues the following regulation on the basis of Art.1, 2, sections 1 and 8 sub-section 1, part 1, of the communal law (BayRS 2024-1), as amended by the law of 20th February 1985 (GVBl, p.17):

Freedom from charges

1. The Munich City Libraries may be used free of charge.
2. Charges relating to negligence and orders are exempt from the free use rule.
3. The right of the Munich City Libraries to charge for the cost of ordering, handling and processing replacements is unaffected.

Charges relating to negligence

1. If the loan period (§ 6 of previous regulations) is exceeded, a fine will be charged for every day by which the period is exceeded.
2. If the user who has exceeded the loan period can show that no blame attaches to him, no fine will be levied.
3. The rate of fine per day and item is as follows:-

- Adults	0.40 DM
- Children and young people (up to 10 th birthday)	0.20 DM

Days on which the Munich City Libraries are closed do not count towards fines.

4. Fines start when the loans period expires: they are payable when incurred.

Order charges

Expenses

Users of the Munich City Libraries must pay on request the actual sum of any expenses incurred in meeting special requests or supplying special items.

Coming into force

1. These regulations come into force as soon as promulgated.

2. At the same time, the regulations on charges for the use of the Munich City Libraries dated 25th September 1974 (MüABI, p.183), amended by the decree of 30th January 1976 (MüABI, p.31), cease to be valid.

Approved by Town Council 30th October 1985, & Bavarian Parliament, 18th November 1985

Munich, 29th November 1985
Kronawitter
Lord Mayor

Stamp catalogues for recent years, journals and literature still commercially available are excluded from external loan. Photocopies in limited quantities of up to 20 sheets can be prepared in return for costs (0.30DM per A4 sheet, plus postage).

LIBRARY OF THE
MUZEUM POCHTY I TELEKOMUNIKACJI AT WROCLAW

THE LIBRARY OF THE MUSEUM OF POST AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS IN WROCLAW.

SUMMARY

The library of the Museum of Post and Telecommunications in Wroclaw has the nature of a scientific library. It stores material dealing with the history of post, telecommunications and philately that is open to all in the reading room.

The library was established just after the foundation of the museum in Warsaw in 1921. Its birth was based on the humble collections coming from the old library of the General Management of Post of the Kingdom of Poland, operating in Warsaw after 1851. It obtained 129 official publications as instructions, newsletters, regulations, tables of mail routes, timetables of coaches, diagrams of postal links and so on. Over the years the library of the Museum widened its collections more and more. Gifts or transfers by both citizens and postal organizations were merged into the library, as well as purchases. Among the donors, Włodzimierz Rachmanow and Włodzimierz Polanski deserve mention because they contributed much to the growth of its patrimony.

In 1939 the library kept 3073 volumes. Up to the end of 1994, the number of books, news magazines, catalogs, manuscripts and old printings reached an amount equal to 12562 volumes.

Nowadays the library regularly swaps publications with 42 Polish and foreign institutions, like museums, editorial staff of magazines and philatelic organizations.

RUDOLF KRASEMANN †

Rudolf Krasemann

The philately especially the philatelic literature suffered a hard loss. As soon as our last number was published to our readers on September 20 we were reached by the deeply-grieved message of the death of the promising Rudolf Krasemann. He died on September 3rd after a short disease at age of 33. Whoever followed Krasemanns work during the past years – like we did – can't oversee the fact which void he is leaving. He was working in this branch for almost a lustrum and already and already published great dissertations during this time frame. Following a German translation of the "Verzeichnisses der Postwertzeichen von Schweden 1906" (index of the postage stamps of Sweden 1906) his "Bibliographie der wichtigsten Spezialwerke über die Postwertzeichen aller Länder" (bibliography of the most important dissertations about the postage stamp of all nations) was published and will be published as an installment with more notes in our current year's issue. This summer the listed German review of the great Swedish work "Sveriges Frankotecken 1855-1905" which he wrote together with Hilmer Djurling was published as "Die Postmarken von Schweden 1855-1905" (The stamps of Sweden 1855-1905). Recently a very serviceable elaborated catalogue of the library of Sveriges Filatelist-Förening" which contains about 1700 bibliographic had been published, too. Besides his work as a philatelic literary man he was an employee at "Svensk Filatelistik Tidskrift" which has to be due to some of his dissertations. Our readers will recognize the loss to our lovers. Rudolf Krasemann was born in Mosbach, Baden and settled over to Sweden in 1903. He said he started collecting stamps within an age of 8 and at age 13 his collection already consisted of around 4000 pieces. Unfortunately he wasn't remotely interested in collecting stamps anymore as he became a teenager and thus he sold his stamps far too cheap. Only in 1902 he got his interest back consecutive to an outward influence, which caused him to stay in Paris occasionally. His preferred stamps were the ones from France and from his new home, Sweden. As his close friend an employee Hilmer Djurling refers there were a large narrow circle of friends, two mourning sisters and a sorrowing bride next to the coffin of the memorable Rudolf Krasemann.

OUR LIBRARY IS IN THE MAKING

In the not small corner building in Berlin, Leipziger Street on the Corner of Mauer Street, the current seat of the Ministry of Post and Telecommunication of the German Democratic Republic, where also the library of that Ministry is housed. For many years the complete literature of local and foreign Postal services was combined in a large hall, placed on numerous shelves. The material was a source for researchers, for the ones working in the Postal sector and in the end also for Philatelists.

After 1945 large gaps were visible in the shelves. However, even when the losses of valuable works were considered, a considerable part was conserved intact. After the collapse* the task of putting the Postal Service back into operation was of the highest priority, the situation of the library had to be secondary. Now the time has come to reorganize the library again.

Meanwhile, a lot of material has been taken from the safekeeping of the library. Unfortunately, it was not possible to prevent damage to some of the volumes; however, careful treatment will make it again usable. Some material still waits to be collected and in the not too distant future the shelves will be filled again.

In the early years the library already contained a considerable amount of literature related broadly to Philately. In addition to Catalogues was the specialized literature from Germany and abroad, dealing with all existing philatelic areas. Many well-known philatelists used the bibliophile documents to make new discoveries or find information which became of use to all collectors.

During the re-Organization of the library it was noted that some of the philatelic literature was to be found in different locations. That has caused some sort of fragmentation which was found not usable; i.e. the Public Academic Library (OWiBi), earlier called the Prussian State Library, owned literature missing in the central Postal library meaning that interested students, planning to study the literature of a certain area completely, had to visit several libraries to go through the existing literature. This situation has now ended. The philatelic material, earlier located in the Public Academic Library (OWiBi) has now been transferred to the library of the Ministry of Post and Telecommunication. Also, the comprehensive inventory of the well known researcher Dr. Rommel have been transferred to the Museum in Mauer Street; as with the estate of the specialist author Beck. The Saxon Post Room also provided their material. With the centralization of the different inventories in one place, a Central Library is under way, something in which all interested philatelic parties may delight.

One should have seen the quantity of books, magazines, catalogues, documents and records waiting to be classified, processed, sorted and catalogued. It is noteworthy to mention that now almost 3½ tons of literature is available for the interested collector.

The members of the Philatelic Section Köpenick in the Cultural Union of the Democratic reformation of Germany volunteered to help with organizing and setting up the library. Several Collectors join the team on Sunday mornings with their fruitful work. Quite a few collectors see for the the very first time the amount of literature and several collector friends gained new knowledge along the way. All participants have fun and pleasure to assist here. The Director of the Library, Mr. Homuth, who is always helpful to all collector friends, noted that due to the volunteer work the mountains of unsorted material has become considerable smaller. One day the work will be compelled. Then the available literature will be well organized, waiting for the Stamp friends from near and far.

Contribution to the science of postage stamps

Part 1

Our belief that, regarding the older stamps in our catalogues and albums, we have a clear view has become void, actually for some time now. Since philately is scientifically preserved and protected by scientifically educated men, one is not satisfied or the one hand simply by collecting; one also investigated, and the fact that this investigating has not been in vain is sufficiently proven by the latest catalogues, etc.

Who would have thought that we are not indebted to the great Hill for the first postage stamps? He was the only reformer of the postal system, but there already existed postage stamps since the middle of the seventeenth century in Paris. The lovely Mulready envelope, praised again and again as the first postal envelope, gazed at and admired, had precursors twenty years before in the two Italian covers of the years 1818 and 1820. And if now we advance toward the mysterious stamps of Zurich, that stamp, with the number of the year 1843 assigned in the corners, has long disappeared from genuine catalogues, as it really is an essay only and may only demand a subordinate place in postage stamp collections. Likewise, the ½ anna red from East India, regarded as a great rarity at one time, is of diminished greatness, because it only existed as an essay, as well. What debates did not surge when the first Livland stamps surfaced; indeed, in foreign countries one said these stamps were a ridiculous invention, as these gentlemen did not try to find in their dictionaries Wenden (Livonia), the province in question. And yet, twice already these stamps have been issued and so these distrustful gentlemen are healed from their error and scepticism. Only after 13 years it was possible, not having stinted on huge expense and much trouble, to lift the veil that hovered above that unpretentious 27 Para of Moldovia. Finding it caused a sensation at the time, the publication of decrees documenting its existence caused much joy, because it was proven that only in the year 1858 were the first Moldovia stamps issued, while in catalogues, even in those of Berger-Levrault, Bauschke, Moens, etc. they are listed as having been issued in 1854. it certainly was interesting to learn that there had existed at one time a six-pence stamp from Victoria (Queen upon Throne), deep black, as there existed a copy with watermark and official cancellation; and to this day many a veteran collector who acquires a new album wonders about the Lombardy 1861 issue, finding spaces for the 5 and 10 soldi stamps, and three more for 2, 3, and 15 soldi, until one clarifies for him that these stamps had been made ready by decree but were never circulated. Mauritius with its antedeluvian stamps of the 1858 issue, on which only a brisk imagination may decipher a head, had in this type that showed on the left side transverse the words "Post Paid" two precursors as well that show, instead of it, the words "Post Office". Of their existence the first to bring us knowledge was Dr. Magnus in the year 1870, discussing these, and representing them pictorially, in a fairly extended essay in Le Timbre Poste (No. 85, page 5). That between the huge Russian steamship company stamp issued in 1864 and the two small stamps (with ship) issued in 1866 of the same company yet two more stamps of a similar issue were in use, remained unknown to us until 1870. These last are executed somewhat more roughly, blue and red - brown and blue, and very rarely found in any collection - and so there are more stamps indeed of whose existence we did have knowledge of at a far later time. Many investigators of philatelic concerns should certainly succeed in the future in discovering many a stamp of which we do not have a trace. To furnish information about still enigmatic stamps (for e.g. Deccan, Cashmere, Sarawak, etc.) we want to stimulate those men to progress on the way to clarify and to extend our knowledge by not denying them the gratituae they deserve, or our recognition.

Let us remember in these lines on philatelic literature, specialty journals which, though hardly edited with the predilection as abroad, nevertheless have won notable merits in the encouragement and stimulus in the field of philatelic knowledge.

Not just on the part of the greatest authorities but also of smaller but serious collectors, the appearance of the first German stamp paper, the Magazin für den Briefmarken-Sammler on May 1st 1862, was greeted with much jubilation. Messrs. Zschiesche und Köder who together were the publishers of the named publication continue to this day in the kind memory of all collectors. The orientation of the paper was impartial and objective, the presentation elegant, the articles, with few exceptions, satisfying for the collector; notably as well the chronicle [of new issues], a section of the publication which could rival the foreign journals, for which reason we read with regret in whole number 48 - thus at the end of the fourth year of publication - that the paper, so dear to us, would cease to appear. On January 1st 1864, the stamp firm belonging to W. Reichel & Co. in Kaufbeuren -published the Börsenblatt für den Briefmarken-Handel that appeared not once but twice monthly (on the 1st and 15th) under the direction of W. Reichel. Despite the fact that the publisher did much to keep the sheet alive, it perished with its number 12, reappearing in Coburg under a new name: Allgemeine Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung under the direction of E. Roschlau. This paper appeared twice a month as well, had in G. Wuttig and W. Th. Clausius capable collaborators, and appeared in its contents and presentation to wish to compete with the magazine by Zschiesche und Köder, notably with the gift of original stamps. Nevertheless it lasted for some time only and disappeared.

A hardly more fortunate speculation was tile publication (June 1864) of the Briefmarkenfreund by M. Ruhl who on a considerably enlarged scale offered illustrations of stamps in original colour and - it cannot be denied - beautiful presentation, but found little interest, and appeared in few copies only.

The Post, journal for postal affairs in Vienna, commenced in its number 20, dated October 15th 1865, to open its columns to philatelic concerns, but the manner in which this occurred could not be received in philatelic circles without cynical remarks. The continuation, accordingly, was unavoidable, and in order to cover the expenses of the wood engravings the Royal and Imperial Postal Official Storch published a very thin composition under the name of Briefmarkenfreund concerning which we abstain from judgment. The illustrated article about stamps published in the year 1865 in the fashion magazine Bazar is witness to much specialised knowledge. It Probably was an inducement to collecting on the part of the world of ladies.

It was as if the owner of the Literary Museum, Gustav Bauschke in Leipzig, had had a presentiment that the magazine by Zschiesche and Köder had reached the end of its days, on January 1st 1866, the Briefmarken-Sammler saw the light of day, finding soon after the appearance of its first and very rich number many friends and readers, and noted collaborators, such as Prof. Weiss, Barrister Treichel, and others, who raised the paper so notably that it could be regarded as a world philatelic publication. with Bauschke's resignation the paper also lost vigor, and now, having begun its sixth year of publication, it exists merely as a shadow. The publisher, Mr Kümmel., will probably tire soon of the paper. The Briefmarken-Anzeiger by C. v. Cardona (June 20th 1866) and a. Wildt (1869) had appeared for one number only, functioning as an advertising media. Much sensation came about as a result of the virtually fraudulent advertising appearing in the Bazar für den Briefmarkensammler by Faber & Co. in Heidelberg. Published in eleven numbers only, it changed format and paper three times, raised the price of subscription with the second quarter, and without delivering the paper in its totality to this day. The Bazar had empty promises only. Leaving aside the mediocrity of its contents, it was on the whole a publication of which we can say "rest in peace".

A REFERENCE BOOK ABOUT PHILATELIC LITERATURE

In the October 1887 issue of the Philatelic Record, I attempted to show what benefit could accrue to philatelic students through the publication of a manual or reference book dealing with philatelic literature. The article in question was intended mainly for English and North American philatelists and I intended to express my opinion in a German magazine as well. I now have the desired opportunity to be in a position to offer a modest contribution to my fellow readers of Postwertzeichen and I am doubly gratified as this issue will surely appear in a large circulation. Thus, my proposal will be read and examined by a large number of devotees of philately, notably Germans.

Before I express myself further concerning the publication of the reference book, it will be well to remember that the best work about philatelic literature has sprung from the pen of Mr. John K. Tiffany who in 1874 published his book Philatelic Library: A Catalogue of Stamp Publications in which is found an almost complete enumeration of the philatelic publications printed in the many countries of the world. This same philatelist continued to occupy himself with the literature of philatelic knowledge, not just because he collected everything published in that connection, but also because he incited at the same time the devotees in other countries to bibliographic investigations in the field. I find, by the same author, in The Stamp Journal (New York, Volume 3, Issues 5 and 8; and Volume 4, Issues 38 and 39) a compendium of philatelic publications that had appeared in the various countries in the years 1876 and 1877; as well as in the Philatelic Journal of America (St. Louis, Volume 2, Issue 12) an enumeration of those published in the year 1886 in the United States.

Following this first precedent on the part of Mr. Tiffany one continued in France regarding French and Belgian literature. The work in question by M. Philippe de Bosredon appeared in the Bulletin de la Société Française (Volume 1, pp. 101, 131, 221 & 283) and was reprinted later as the second volume of the Bibliothèque Timbrologique (1878). It is known to most collectors and is of recognised high value, so that a recommendation of the same seems to be completely unnecessary.

As regards Germany, we need only mention the articles by Dr. Moschkau, found in the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung (1871, Issue 12), in Moschkau's Magazin (1872, Issue 9) and in the Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal (1874, Issue 5 and 1876, Issues 30, 33 & 36), the latter article having been reprinted in 1878 in the Geschichte der Briefmarken und der Philatelie.

Spain possesses a thoroughly researched and valuable effort whose author is M. P. de Figueroa, known under his pseudonym Dr. Thebussem. His Literatura Filatelica de España (Seville, 1876) can be considered to this very day as an almost complete manual, as in the last decade Spanish philatelists have published little in the way of philatelic knowledge, with the exception of the significant work by A. F. Duro, Reseña de los Sellos de Correo de España (Madrid, 1881).

Translator's note: The title reads Succinct Description of the Postage Stamps of Spain. The Dr. Thebussem of the article is Mariano Pardo de Figueroa: see the portrait on the Spanish 5 peseta air mail stamp of 12th October 1944.)

A catalogue of the philatelic works of Latin America has not appeared so far, and it would be desirable if such a task were undertaken soonest by a South American club of philatelists, e.g. the one at Lima which, with its Catalogue des Timbres de Perou, has become known to its advantage.

Likewise, Great Britain does not up to now possess a manual of its philatelic works, but the now articles that have appeared in The Philatelist by W. Dudley Atlee and more so yet those of Messrs. P. J. Anderson and W. H. Earl in the Philatelic Record (Volumes 7 & 8) in which these gentlemen deal with the oldest English publications in the philatelic area will facilitate the work for anyone who might devote himself to such a task.

In the matter of Italian literature, in the Guida Illustrata del Timbrofilo (Volume 2, Issues 16 & 17) one will find a listing of the same by Mr. Leoni.

Of the works not so far mentioned regarding philately in Switzerland, the Netherlands, Denmark, etc., there is no listing other than those by Tiffany in his previously mentioned book.

Having shown what sources are available to the philatelists who desire to gain knowledge about the science of postage stamps in literature, there remains for me the task of explaining to the readers my project about a manual or reference book as I have designed it.

The undertaking would be divided into two, that is to say, a general and a specialised section. The first part would concern postage stamps generally, their value as objects to be collected, etc. To give an example, under the heading Organisation of the Collection there should be a collection of numerous articles that have appeared in connection with such organisation and I would suggest to list these chronologically, classifying however according to the languages in which they were written. In addition to the title listing of a book, title of the article and similar, the name of the author would have to be listed, as well as the date and place of publication. With articles, the name of the journal in which they appeared would have to be mentioned as well. In this general part the following would have to be included: title of articles etc. about the importance of collections as viewed from different perspectives; diverse systems concerning the arrangement of stamps as proposed severally; envelopes, postal cards, postal wrappers into albums, about kinds of paper used for production of stamps and watermarks in these; about colours, perforation, collecting unused or used postal values, and such-like. In my opinion the contribution furnished by German philatelic literature is the most significant by far for this general part, but I doubt that this part should be regarded as the most important.

The Second part of the work - which in my opinion would take shape as a very interesting one, notably for advanced collectors, also for those who wish to consult special works about certain stamps, as well as for editors of manuals and of special periodicals - would contain a list of the several works under the name of every country that has issued postage stamps. With these arrangements the chronological series could be maintained, similarly as in the case of part I grouped under the languages in which they were written.

In this section, in my view, Germany would not occupy so outstanding a position as Belgium, Great Britain, France, and the United States; nevertheless it would come into prominence as a result of some significant works that belong here. To emphasise the entire interest, the entire usefulness, which such a work must offer, it will suffice to remember that for some time now collectors have endeavoured to build special collections rather than those of all countries. For devotees of this category it would be important indeed to learn which articles and discussions are significant for them, with the help of a complete, well-edited reference work. Also, when such a philatelist is not satisfied to establish a specialised collection but prefers to write a study or series of articles about it, a bibliographic manual would immediately offer him a state of affairs in literature about his subject; nor would he need to waste time to peruse the indexes of philatelic journals - which are often rather poor - to discover whether the subject of interest to him already offers a basis for his essay or not. A glance at the manual would suffice and a more careful perusal would show which postage stamps have never been dealt with, so that every collector would know immediately to what subject he might devote himself preferably.

Another significant advantage of the book would be that when some outstanding article would be published in a specialised journal, it would not be condemned to be forgotten, thus remaining unknown to a majority of philatelists. In this connection I have referred to the local postage stamps of Baden in the Philatelic Record as an example - regarded by several catalogue and album publishers as a kind of rural stamps even, to be sure, following publication of an article (See Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie, 1879, Volume 2, p.12) which contained the official decree about the issue of these stamps, and as a result of which it was shown that these are postage due stamps. This incorrect designation is found in English and French catalogues which are otherwise first-rate, while German manuals are satisfied to designate the postage stamps in question as "rural post stamps", which is not saying enough.

Translator's note: The 1862 Baden stamps in question are both rural in nature and postage due, as well.

Far more remarkable yet is the example offered by the Lady McLeod stamp issued in 1847 by the Steamship company of Trinidad. Described for the first time in The Stamp Collector's Magazine (October 1867, p.154), it remained unknown for the following 15 years and was then "rediscovered" and its authenticity proven - that could have been done already in 1867 - and now this, by the way very rare stamp, could find its honourable place in some elite collections.

All this proves that these and similar errors could not have happened, had a philatelic literature lexicon been in existence. With the help of such, the publishers of catalogues would, I might add, see their tasks considerably simplified. Their publication would meet with less difficulties, and errors might be reduced to a minimum.

As soon as such a reference work is published, its usefulness could be heightened perceptibly if all philatelic clubs, following the example of the ones in Munich and in Dresden, decided to make it available to all its members (reimbursing postage expenses), in the same way as the entire contents of the clubs' libraries. An exact list of the works contained therein could be easily drawn up.

The idea suggested by me regarding a philatelic reference work and also the proposed scheme I developed was initially supported by Mr. Anderson (See the most recent November number of the Philatelic Record) who also took corresponding steps with the Philatelic Society, London which, it is to be hoped, will yield favourable results. In connection with the gentleman named I myself took steps at the Société Française in Paris with my proposal. With the task I am facing, I turn to the numerous German philatelic organisations with the request that they form a committee for a preliminary compilation of German philatelic works and specialised articles. This would have to be compiled according with the plan adopted by Tiffany for his Philatetical Library and by A. de Bosredon for his previously mentioned opus.

It may be unnecessary to add here that the petty jealousy which exists among otherwise very decent German clubs must not be an obstacle for the execution of the task which is to be undertaken by men working in union. Besides, the usefulness to be had by all philatelists as a result of the publication of the manual is so meaningful that all the minor frictions should cease.

The uppermost direction should be entrusted to one person, just as suggested by Anderson. That person would decide upon the division of labour and the results would have to be submitted to him by every single collaborator. For that purpose a uniform system for the compilation should be adopted, and it seems to me that the best by far, as reported by Anderson, is that of W. J. Poole, librarian of the public library in Chicago.

For the post of director no one certainly would be more qualified than J. K. Tiffany, and I am convinced that the choice could not be for a more competent person, as shown by the first-rate works he has had published and which would easily justify such a distinction. I might add that the task would be facilitated considerably for Tiffany as President of the American Philatelic Association. I could add many a point to clarify my project even further, but hope to return once more to the subject in a later number of the Postwertzeichen. Finally, I can add only that philately would be considerably promoted with such an opus, and that other sciences that are far older than ours, already possess similar works.

Such an undertaking would also prove once again that philately, even without being of the first importance, deserves nonetheless a place beside the study of seals, coins, medals, and the like.

PHILATELY

An accident that left a man dead and almost deprived the philatelic world of one of its most erudite and productive writers befell our respected contributor Doctor A. Legrand, the father, last July 28.

La Circulaire Philatélique was unable to bring you knowledge of this earlier because the August 1st issue was already in press when Mr. Ch. Lemierre learned of the events, the seriousness very alarming to all of us.

Doctor Legrand was near his home on Avenue Neuilly, in Neuilly-sur-Seine, when he was run over by a bicyclist.

Given Doctor Legrand's advanced age, this accident could have cost him his life.

His thought was that he might only need a few days of rest to recover from the bumps, bruises, and scrapes he received from the impact and knocking over. However, just when Doctor Legrand was hoping to get back to his work in mid-August he came down with fever. Two days later he had boils, then several difficult days and bad nights.

At the present moment, happily, the eminent stamp authority is back in good health and has returned to his work on the catalogue we are in the process of publishing.

As for the bicyclist, he was thrown off his machine and died the very night of the accident. He had a fracture to the base of the skull caused by his fall.

Supplement and corrections to the catalogue of Italian philatelic periodical literature in No. 5 of Die Philatelistische Litterature, p.XI & XII.

Dr. Rommel, Leipzig

An anonymous contributor in Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung has listed a number of corrections and additions to my catalogue of Italian periodicals, and we do not feel we should withhold this from our readers. Of course, we shall criticize these from our own angle, and will extend them by means of further corrections and additions, some of them from the Berlin Pressophilist. One will guess from this that even critics are capable of errors and omissions, although they do not seem to admit as much.

According to the critic, I have omitted two "papers".

1. L'Annunzio Filatelico Italiano, a single issue published by Gioacchino Guarttari, Rome, on the 20th April 1892, and a forerunner of my entry under No. 15.

However, this sheet remains completely unknown to me. I do not know whether it was No. 1 of Volume 1, or was just a test issue. In the first case, No. 1 will have appeared twice, on the 20th April and 30th November 1892. However, the first of these does not appear as a separate sheet, but as a special issue under No. 15, in my 4th column and the notes to it.

2. Il Raccoglitore Romano, published by Dr. Tommaso Capo, Rome. No. 9 of 1st August 1893 has the addition e la Filatelia as a continuation of Filatelia (No. 7 on my list).

This paper is also unknown to me: I have not seen it either here or in Italy, where I did extensive research into the Italian literature, and so far I have not been able to trace it. The critic does not seem to know any more about it either, since he gives neither the number of issues nor their dates. I am still trying to trace more details for publication.

The lack of three issues was also reported to me:

1. Of Filatelìa (No. 7 on my list), nos. 34/35 appeared from April to May 1893. I am grateful for this information.
2. L'Annunzio Filatelico Italiano (No. 15 on my list): No. 5a, supplement to No. 5.

This is as follows: No. 5 of April to May 1893 is designated as No. 5 and 5a, and at the same time has a supplement Supplemento Speciale No. 5A2. Of course, I should have mentioned this supplement in the Notes, but it is however absolutely not an issue missing from my list. Since when are supplements, e.g. to Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung or Mitteldeutsche Philatelisten-Zeitung, numbered as special issues?

3. Il Francobollo (No. 16 in my list): No. 15, 2nd edition of 31 March 1874.

Again, this is not really a missing item. Actually, No. 15 appeared on the 31st March 1891, pp.117-124, and No. 15, 2nd edition, pp.117-124 appeared on the same date. The only difference was that p.117 of No. 115 carried a $\frac{3}{4}$ column advert for the exhibition opening in Milan on 3rd May along with a map of the exhibition, whereas p.117 of the 2nd edition advertised in the same place the issue of No. 16 as a special number, and asked for adverts. p.118 of No. 115 had a brief Society report, the place of which in the 2nd edition was taken up by the exhibition report from p.117. Thus, the apparently missing number is actually nothing more than a largely identical reissue of No. 15, and is quite rightly noted as a 2nd edition, as was done in the Remarks column.

In the category of missing items also belongs the supplement to No. 16 of the journal (see Il Francobollo), which the critic does not mention. This contains a report on the prizes awarded at the Milan Exhibition, and has no page numbers. Also, No. 4 of the first year of Rivista Filatelica Internazionale (No. 10 on my list) should have a supplement which, however, I have never seen, and which also seems to be unknown to the critic.

Finally the following inaccuracies are noted:

1. L'Etoile d'Italie (No. 4 on my list): No. 15 is dated from February to March 1878. This is correct, my deviant remark in Note 1, p.16, relates to Suppantischitsches' data, since I had not seen the issue concerned at the time. The magazine also has on No. 15 the further title Stella d'Italia, which seems not to have been noted before.
2. The critic knows of a single extra issue, No. 14 of March 1884, of La Rivista (not Revista as stated on p.17) della Stampa Filatelica. He only quotes this as an example but certainly with all his efforts has not done enough if he knows of still other issues. Dr. Emilio Diena of Rome knew of only No. 22 at Easter 1897, and his report confirms that of Suppantischitsch, which I followed. In the meantime I learned of another issue myself: No. 8 of September 1883, which also proves that the magazine appeared in 1883 and 1884, not just 1885 and 1886. Moreover, No. 8 appeared not in La Ciotat but in Marseilles at 33 rue S. Pauline. However, correspondence was to be sent to Luciano Mori at La Ciotat. Thus, there is still something to be cleared up about this address. No. 22 is dated January 1886.

3. It is correct that my data about double issues etc., and languages are incomplete.
- a) Tinacria (No. 23 on my list) actually has title and contents in Italian, French and German, as the critic rightly remarks.
 - b) Rivista Filatelica Internazionale (No. 10 on my list), has not only 6/7 but also 8/9 and 10/11/12 as double and triple numbers.

I might note at this point that the pagination of this journal is very confused:

- I No.1 p.1-12; No.2 p.1-8; No.3 p.21-28; No.4 p.25-32; No.5 p.37-44; No.6 p.45-52
- II No.1 p.1-8; No.2 p.9-16; No. 3 p.17-24; No.4 p.25-32; No.5 p.33-40; No.6 p.41-48; No.7 p.49-56; No.8 p.57-64; No.9 p.65-72; No.10 p.73-80.

Although there is apparently a No.11 of December 1892, for which I have Suppantisch's authority, Vol. 3 No. 1 begins with pages 81-88, thus apparently following on directly from No. 10 of Vol. 1. It is followed by No.2 p.89-96, No.3 p.97-104. Vol. 4 begins with p.1 again.

I might also say that Il Raccoglitore (No. 3 on my list) of which only one trial issue is known, appeared in July 1874, Hence this must become No. 2 on my list, since Il Raccoglitore (No. 3 on my list) only began to appear in January 1875. Corriere dei Francobolli (No. 2 under "Triest" on the list) appeared as a prospectus of Year 2 in March 1876. Year 2, No. 1 then appeared on the 1st April 1876.

Finally, Note 14 on p.17 of my list should be erased. Roma Filatelica (No. 30 on my list), closed its first volume with No. 2 of December 1896, since No. 3 of 1897 is the first issue of Vol. 2.

Even though the criticism is to some extent unfounded, I am still extremely thankful to its author since he has contributed his knowledge and learning to correcting and extending my list. Only by such means will something absolutely correct finally be obtained. He only deals with the defects of my work, and does not give a single word of acknowledgement for the always difficult and laborious task, but I am not annoyed about that; I can do without it.

MARVELS OF PHILATELIC LITERATURE

By Carl Beck

There is certainly no type of collecting which can show the same rich literature as is the case with philately. The simple collector is naturally quite ignorant of its extent, and the advanced philatelist has, by and large, heard of and perhaps belongs to the major libraries at most. But the whole extent of it is only known to lovers of philatelic literature. Hence, it will often surprise people to learn that the Crawford Library is so extensive that its catalogue needs a book of 470 folio pages. As well as books and pamphlets it contains all existing periodicals, even advertising sheets. Hence, the record only goes up to 1906 and 1908, and meantime there has been a voluminous increase in philatelic literature. Today, a further and much bigger catalogue would be needed, or the original one filled up with the details of works and books. That everything goes into such a library without reference to its intrinsic value goes without saying, equally, it will possess all monographs. And we shall deal with these in a series of articles, limiting ourselves to the German literature only.

One of the most outstanding scientific works is acknowledged to be “The Swiss Postage Stamps 1843-1862” published by P. Miraband and A. de Reuterskiöld. We will direct our attention to this work.

Apart from the external circumstances, the extraordinary character of this book became obvious. Although it was only in paper covers, but every purchaser would have it bound if he wished, as the paper was suitable for this purpose, which shows the value placed on it. The numerous coloured illustrations were particularly natural and helped the overall impression considerably, and made the first impression a great success. And also the fact that only 150 copies were issued in German, 150 in English and 150 in French, witnesses to the fact that the authors did not expect to cover their costs even if all were sold, even though the subscription price was 48 marks and the purchase price 120 marks after its successful issue.

Every work of this type can only be based in fundamentals and essentials on official material, so naturally this also quotes all the relevant acts, so far as they were available. An outstanding extra was the material by Reuterskiöld, which was used to draw up the various tables. We counted 14 of these in all, the following in colour:

1. Zurich 4 and 6 black horse in 5 types each, a block of double Geneva, the Basle dove, the yellow-green Geneva with the small eagle, the dark green with the large eagle, Waadt 4 and 5C, Neuchatel, and a four-block of Winterthur, all naturally in very fine copies.
2. The upper part of an original 5C sheet Geneva with the large eagle, which along with 14 stamps in two series which show the complete border inscription.
3. The 100 types of the Waadt 5C, to which 4 black-letter tables belong, and the principal differences in type can be detected in double enlargement of 25 specimens of the 5C Waadt.
4. 40 types of local post
5. 40 types of regional post, with a black table with 4 local posts in threefold enlargement, the same with double lines, also a transfer, a smudged transfer and, finally, the proof impression of a smudged plate.
6. 40 types of the ray 5Rp dark-blue.
7. 40 types of the ray II 10Rp brownish-yellow.
8. 40 types of ray I 5Rp light blue.
9. Missing
10. 10 types of the brick-red 15Rp with large and small figures and the 15Cts.

Another paper specially made for the purpose was used to reproduce the coloured illustrations, to avoid any misuse of this completely original impression.

The text of this 278 page work breaks down into the groups of cantonal stamps, transitional stamps like Waadt and Winterthur, Confederation stamps with regional post, local post and rays, silk-thread issues and closes with cancellation stamps, which were given particular attention by about 700 illustrations.

As an introduction, Zurich is given an exhaustive treatment, types and under-printing are given, also the new issue in 1862 which, however, had no red lines and is recognisable by its defective printing and thinner paper.

Official acts are quoted to show that in the case of the Geneva stamps that change to a large eagle and the use of a different paper was not wanted from the postal side but was due to the lithographs used.

The Basle dove is given with all its documentation without, however, offering anything special.

The transitional stamps are known to have been produced at the time when the Confederation had taken over the postal service from the cantons of Zurich and Geneva and special issues featuring the Union Cross were used till a generally valid series could be produced. Hence the Waadt, Neuenburg and Winterthur were produced with the 100 types of the 5C being particularly interesting, since these were produced by taking the plate for the 4C, taking off all the figures and replacing them by new ones, which gave rise to all the variations in the lettering. It is also instructive to look at the production of the 40 types of Ray stamps, I and II, and the 10 types of Ray III, since this explains in particular the different ways of representing the cross.

The end of the stamp section is represented by the silk-thread issue, and as with everything else, the treatment of this leaves nothing to be desired. It would be too much to go here into the history of the colour changes of the silk-thread, especially as the catalogue gives adequate information here.

As mentioned earlier, cancellations are given very special treatment, which is not surprising when we consider how many types there are. For the Zurich, Geneva and Basle cancellations we get first the federal, then the regional, then the P.P. and finally the others used in post offices. The variety is increased by such things as coloured cancellations. Finally, we get the generally-used trellis cancellation, which was detached from the local cancellation with date, and then shortly afterwards to become the trellis cancellation again. In any case the illustration of approximately 700 different cancellations shows the scope of this field.

All this should go to show that we really are dealing with a perfectly complete work, and we must be involuntarily surprised to find this is not the case. However, this is an unavoidable defect, since it relates to the impossibility of obtaining the material and has been forced on the authors by the prevailing conditions. However, this does not alter the fact that the work represents everything that was available at that time. Moreover, errors in language make little difference and the authors earned general praise at the time. The limited edition meant of course that it was not very long in selling out, and thus it is all the more satisfactory that the felt want of a complete handbook for Switzerland has been met by a new literary creation, i.e. Zumstein's work. This has been praised for its excellence, extended to 1923 and is still available today.

We believe the work of Miraband and Reuterskiöld, and the new one by Zumstein could not serve Swiss collectors better, and we will describe Zumstein's "The Stamps of Switzerland" in our next issue.

MISCELLANEOUS

We learn from “Neueste Briefmarken-Umschan” that the famous English philatelic library of Mr. Herbert Clark of Angmering was auctioned in London on 18th and 19th February by the auction firm of H. R. Harmer. The sale was because its former owner had had to declare himself bankrupt. The Library was one of the largest in England. Mr. Clark was an outstanding expert on the philatelic literature, as his numerous publications bear eloquent witness. Also, we had the pleasure of years of contact with him before the war. Another victim of the times.

Société de Bibliographie Philatélique: It has been realised in France as well that lovers of literature should get together, and a Society affiliated to the French League of Philatelic Societies has been started. Amongst its founders we find such names of Georges Brunel, Robert Leroy, Dr. Morel and Albert Coyette. More details, rules, etc., from M. John Spohr, 59 Rue Rochechouart, Paris. We wish our French colleagues good luck with their Society, and will readily enter into relations with them about German literature in the future.

Literature Offer No. 31

With the appearance of this list, all prior lists become invalid. With the exception of newer works, which are still available from the publishers, the books and magazines offered are available only in a single copy or a very few copies. Those items that are available in more than a single copy, or those which can be re-ordered, are indicated by an asterisk (*) in front of the price. Items which are not available when an order comes in will be put on order for shipment when the item is again available, shipment will then occur provided the ordered item can be procured within six months and provided that the customer did not expressly forbid later shipment when [the item was] first ordered. Should you not find a desired item in this list, please inquire.

Shipment will be made only if paid in advance or if send COD, in order to save time and money in case of a closed account and / or tracking costs. Shipping and handling costs will always be paid by us.

International shipments [will be sent] only if paid in advance or billed in advance or if a corresponding amount of money has been put on deposit when ordering [the item/items]. Payments from abroad can be made only with international transfer [of funds], with bank checks or with banknotes in foreign [= non-German] currency. Any bank fees due to [cashing of] bank checks or [exchange of] international currency will be charged to the customer. International Reply Coupons can only be used to pay for postage costs. Payments for foreign citizens by native citizens or from foreign accounts in Germany or by sending German money from abroad are forbidden and punishable according to local laws [in Germany]. For that reason I cannot accept such payments and give credit for them.

Any literature currently available can also be loaned [= sent for inspection or use]. I ask that you transfer a deposit fee amount to 60% of the list price when you send a loan request. The loan fee amounts to 6% of the list price, per week, with a minimum cost of DM 20,--. The accrued loan fees and the postage and handling costs will be deducted [from the deposit] after return of the loaned item; remaining money will be transferred back or used for other payments, according to the instruction of the customer. The customer is responsible for the full list price of the item in case of damage or loss. In such cases, the loan fees will continue to accumulate until the day of the complete replacement, which is made instead of the return of the original loaned item. [See below]

In the case of smaller works or journal articles, I can provide photocopies if the work or the journal itself is not available or if the item should be too expensive for you [to purchase]. See page 24.

If you have philatelic, numismatic or other literature for collectors for sale, I would ask for your offer with complete details (author, title, publisher, edition, year of publication, binding, condition, completeness, and asking price). However, I can make an offer only when I have the object in hand. My offer is to be considered an estimate of value. Should you not accept my offer, there will be a fee amounting to 2% of the estimate due. Any shipping costs for estimates of value are the responsibility of the customer.

The court authority for any business transactions is the Court in Berlin-Schoeneberg. Any deviations from these conditions must be authorized by my signature.

Translator note: Apparently that "replacement" could be either a copy of the item in similar condition or the list price of the item, plus the loan fees involved until that day.

AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

IN THE 19th CENTURY

It is known to the readers of Der Philatelist, that in the last few months of the year 1907 in London, a club was formed for philatelic literature (Philatelic Literature Society), which today already has 54 members, amongst them 13 societies of which the Internationale Philatelisten-Verein in Dresden is one. One of their duties is the publication of bibliographies of individual countries.

I consider such bibliographies, which I believe to be of great importance especially now when philatelic literature is beginning to be held in such high regard and where almost all larger clubs are establishing their own libraries, at this point in time will come to the fore of philatelic literature in the fatherland.

Accordingly, as with polyglot Austro-Hungary, its philatelic literature is one in which many languages are represented, among them German, Hungarian, Italian, Polish, Croatian and Czech, and which appears appropriate to increase interest throughout this vast empire for this literature.

Hopefully to render all friends of literature a service, I ensured that the entry for each individual periodical (Part I) and book (Part II) adheres to a strict alphabetical order which in part I is arranged by title, and part II by the name of the author or publisher respectively.

AIHEFILATELISTI PERIODICAL GENERAL INDEX 1960-79

CtraHs 336_x

"AIHEFILATELISTI" PERIODICAL GENERAL INDEX 1960 - 79

To the Reader: The trade organ "AIHEFILATELISTI" of the AIHEFILATELISTIT (lit. translation: Philatelic subject(s) reached its 20th year at the end of 1979. Although not published under the same name for the entire span, the issues published between 1960-61 came under the title of TAKASIVU (lit. translation: Back page). Beginning in 1962 the name was changed to the familiar "AIHEFILATELISTI", although still appearing multi-copied during that entire year. Not until 1963, was the real printed magazine introduced. With the exception of the multi-copied issues, the magazine was published 5-6 times a year, and ultimately 106 issues had been published at the end of 1979, with a total of 1574 pages. A rather noteworthy achievement.

During the first year when four issues appeared, the periodical had no appointed editor-in-chief, only an editorial staff consisting of two persons. Since 1961 the following persons have been editor-in-chief:

(Please, refer to Finnish text with the five names of persons involved as editors).

The following persons have belonged to the editorial committee along with each editor-in-chief during the period of the publication.

(Please, refer to list of 12 names in Finnish text on page 4).

The general indexing adheres basically to that in the "SUOMEN PORSTIMERKKILEHTI" (Finnish stamp magazine) general indexing by Juhani Olamo, although here philatelic subject headlines have been added. The arranging of the collections according to scoreboard-like groupings form the backbone of subject categorizing. In placing the headlines below the sub-titles, a certain rule of balance has been achieved. A very precise arranging of even brief clues would have necessitated the repetition of several article headlines in too many places, thus making the index unnecessarily vast. Even presently, the headline might be repeated in as many as three categories.

The arrangement of the reference entries seem initially to have caused some difficulties because the numbering varies in year to year issues. In some annual issues each page number begins from one. Sometimes the page number has been omitted entirely, until finally the pages of each annual issue has been numbered in running order from beginning to end. For this reason, both the year, issue- and page numbers have been included in the index number, separated from each other by a horizontal line. For example: 64-2-27 indicates the year 1964 page numbers 27 of two issues, regardless whether there actually is a page 27 included in that one particular issue or another annual issue. In those annual issues where the page number is omitted, the reference numbering is according to each page. In other words, each number is assumed to begin on page one.

The categories prove how unevenly the published magazine articles encompass the philatelic subject area. Only a few articles have been published of the more essential topics, and the matter of postage stamp books has totally been ignored in the periodical. This of course is not the fault of the editor but of the writer, and hopefully even in such cases, the index still serves its philatelic purpose of pointing out those subjects not yet fully exhausted in writing. But perhaps first and foremost, the index serves as a reference guide of what and where desired topics can be found in written form.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE MOST IMPORTANT MONOGRAPHS ON THE POSTAGE STAMPS OF INDIVIDUAL COUNTRIES

BIBLIOGRAPHY OVER

THE MOST IMPORTANT SPECIAL WORKS ABOUT THE STAMPS OF THE DIFFERENT COUNTRIES

By RUD. KRASEMANN, Uppsala

All rights reserved.

In the fall of 1904 I got the idea to engage myself in writing a philatelic bibliography of the kind mentioned above. I started with the assumption that it must for serious philatelists be very important to know about the special works of the different countries in order to ease the studies of the philately of those countries. The journals have now undergone bibliographical treatment in various ways; a summary which quickly and satisfying will provide information about available books is, however, still missing. My goal was to produce something practical, I knew since long that the main interest was in the special works. One finds sometimes in philatelic reference books lists of philatelic literature, usually limited to title, place of publication and year, these mostly in very abbreviated form.

My idea was to prepare a bibliography, permitting the reader, without having a particular book in front of him, to comprehend its form, content, appendixes, that's all facts that he would feel desirable to know in advance if the book would be right for him or not. Even if my biography isn't fully comprehensive, I believe I have covered the major part of the literature of this type that has been published. Titles, for which I haven't been able to exactly make a correct biographical definition, are marked with a *. I would much appreciate messages about those as well as any corrections. They will be included in a forthcoming supplement.

May I here mention two people who have with much interest followed my work during the last 2 years, and who have always been ready to support me, namely Senate President, Mr. Victor Suppantchitsch in Graz, and my friend, Hilmer Djurling in Stockholm; the first has with his vast philatelic library and his extensive knowledge of the philatelic literature been able to give me needed information as well as advise on different matters; the latter has always provided a helpful hand with the extensive correspondence with philatelic societies, authors and publishers in order to achieve accurate biographical control of the material collected. I express my gratitude to these two gentlemen as well as to Sveriges Filatelist-Forening, who has kindly absorbed the certainly not small costs occurred over a period of time.

Messrs. Fred J. Melville, London, and E. Plotz, Dresden, have kindly provided certain information.

Note: It isn't easy to translate 19th century Swedish, especially when it looks as written by a lawyer...

PHILATELIC BIBLIOGRAPHY OF FRANCE AND OF BELGIUM

FOREWORD

“Taking a small piece of printed paper covered with an adhesive substance, sticking it on a letter, dropping this letter into a box and having it delivered to the given address at the most distant locations is now such a simple everyday matter that few people think of the processes that lead to this result. This little piece of paper is nothing less than the monument to a great reform⁽¹⁾”

This passage expresses, in a few words and with perfect accuracy, the usefulness of postage stamps, a quite recent advance which has already been accepted throughout the world. From the financial point of view, the loose stamp is a special kind of paper money⁽²⁾ which is supplied to the public at its face value and which is returned by the public to the administration at face value to pay off postal taxes or various other tariffs.

Because the loose stamp is of this nature, because it goes into circulation and is then used to pay a tariff, the administration of every state has surrounded their productions with the detailed precautions applied to actual paper money to prevent forgery; minutely engraved vignettes, papers containing watermarks or special marks, colours resistant to chemical operations or photographic reproduction, etc. Because the loose stamp serves as legal tender up to a point, the designs of monarchs, sovereignties, countries, epochs, etc., are always given along with the value. Because it is a specially important administrative and financial instrument, its fabrication is always inspired by that artistic sentiment inseparable from such work in civilised countries, though, of course, precautions are always taken to prevent fraud and demonstrate the official character of the stamp in its actual design. Finally, it is because the loose stamp has this triple historic, administrative and artistic interest that people were inspired to collect it.

At first, this type of collecting was simply a pastime, but it has gradually been elevated to a science. Thanks to the work of many distinguished amateurs, philately has taken its place alongside numismatics and medal-collecting. The result is a specialist literature, covering books, catalogues, journals, drawings and caricatures. An American enthusiast, Mr Tiffany⁽³⁾, has tried to draw up a list of all these publications; it has no fewer than 1,461 items.

It struck me it might be interesting to make a list of those publications that have appeared in France.

Although the oldest⁽⁴⁾ cannot be traced back beyond 1861, many are extremely rare today, or even absolutely unobtainable; others remain completely unknown. Amongst even the most knowledgeable amateurs, how many have consulted the Catalogue by Thirifocq, of the Manual by François Valette “of the Ministry of the Interior”, inventor of the “science of prognology”. Do many of them know the lively caricatures in which Cham made fun of their favourite passion? It seems to me that the time has come to draw up a list, though there are already serious difficulties.

Tiffany’s work has enabled me to complete the researches I had already begun. He gave me useful hints; and for my part I was able to fill in certain blanks and rectify certain mistakes by revising his lists. I submitted this work to the French Philatelic Society at its meetings of 3rd February 1876 and 3rd May 1877, and it aroused some interest: the Society decided to print it in its Bulletin⁽⁵⁾. Mr Berger-Levrault made a collection of publications available to me. Tiffany, whose learned work served as my model, sent me a note containing several new items⁽⁶⁾. Mr. Anderson told me of several omissions, and expressed a desire to see similar researches carried out for other countries. Pardo de Figueroa did me the honour of dedicating to me the pamphlet he recently published on the philatelic bibliography of Spain⁽⁷⁾. Finally, Mr Leoni very recently drew up a bibliography for Italy along the lines I adopted myself⁽⁸⁾.

These various testimonies have encouraged me to reprint my work, after revising and completing it, and to publish it as a pamphlet. I have divided it into ten categories, to wit: catalogues, specialist journals, special publications, albums, price lists, drawings, caricatures and photographs, pieces of music, miscellaneous documents, legislative documents and regulations. It contains nearly 300 items.

I have reproduced the titles of the works cited in the text. Those that I have not been able to verify positively are indicated by an asterisk.

Some people have been surprised not to find in my Bibliography certain works mentioned in the Tiffany’s Philatetical Library. This is partly because I have only included items relating to stamps, whereas Tiffany includes those relating to the postal service in general, and partly because I decided to cover only items relating to stamps or questions bearing on them, ignoring those which mention stamps in passing but are not really devoted to them.

Thus, Tiffany mentions Sardou’s comedy The Benoiton Family, because this includes an allusion to the fad for stamp-collecting. He could have added La Belle Helene, but these mentions strike me as off the point.

I only included in my list writings or documents relating to adhesive stamps, i.e. to this special paper money which was first used to frank correspondence, but was later applied to sending telegrams and paying various taxes, and the use of which has today become general in all parts of the civilized world. I have not mentioned writings or documents relating to fixed stamps or other types of stamped paper.

Use is made in certain countries of extras to the adhesive stamps properly so-called in the form of envelopes, wrappers, cards or money orders on which a stamp similar to, and often identical with, the adhesive stamp is printed in advance for the convenience of the public. We know that France has no stamped envelopes, wrappers or money orders. As for postcards, they also do not carry the impress of a stamp as in many other countries. However, the authorities deliver them carrying an ordinary postage stamp representing the prepayment charge. Thus in my view, they represent an unstamped item which is franked, like letters, by sticking on an adhesive stamp. However, since most enthusiasts admit them into their collections, I have decided to indicate the documents or articles dealing with postcards, though I do not share the collectors' opinions.

I have also included in my lists the curious Instruction of 1653 on Carriage-paid notes, which if not actually postage stamps were a sort of premonition of them so that we can look on M. de Velay as at least the precursor, if not the ancestor of Sir Rowland Hill.

Finally, I have joined the bibliography of Belgium to that of France, since the two seem to be natural complements. Articles and books published in Belgium are written in the French language, some of them with leading French enthusiasts for their authors.

8. Philatelic bibliography of Italy, notes for the compilation of a catalogue (Guida Illustrata del Timbrofilo, number 16, October 1877). M. Leoni writes as follows in the Foreword to his bibliography ... It took us a long time to decided to undertake this work. However, now that the famous Signor Ph. de Bosredon has decided to do something of the sort, and has honoured us with a request for our feeble help ... we thought it would be useful to publish a few preliminary notes for the preparation of a bibliographical catalogue.

Introduction

This work which we offer today to readers and researchers is, to the best of our knowledge, the first attempt made to bring to scholars and the general public an easily-usable catalogue of all works published in the French Language or containing French texts, which relate to posts and philately.

We have devoted three years of incessant labour to this work, which we undertook immediately after the publication of our first philatelic volume "Old French stamps and Their Collection". It was in fact whilst editing this manuscript that we fully realized the difficulties met with today by a philatelist wishing to undertake serious work.

Not that there is any lack of documents: they are, on the contrary, abundant. But numerous studies have been piled one on another, often contradicting each other, without anyone knowing exactly where to find them, which other documents to compare them with, how to list them, how to use them.

Today, it is no longer sufficient for an author to have one technical book dating from the happy days when stamps were few in number and philatelic problems rudimentary, and he could study the entire world without leaving the pages of his album. Issues have multiplied, specialisation has come in its turn, peculiarities and details have begun to attract the notice of an ever-expanding elite of amateurs. Hence, to undertake any sort of study, it is now necessary to go into the sources, refer to older studies, verify references, and to re-read all the monographs that have dealt with the subject. But bibliography is meant essentially to meet this need. It groups in a very simple form the references from all books, essays, pamphlets and even offprints relating to postal services and philately, which go to make up what is called, for convenience, philatelic and postal literature.

Postal literature is very old. Its origin was the famous edict of Luxies of 19 June 1464, by which Louis XI organised royal couriers in France. A number of ordonnances were published later, either to regulate these couriers, alter them, or to improve their service. Postal relays were started in 1597, then made available to the public under Richelieu. Postal literature finds its take-off point in the famous Guide of Estienne, which dates from 1552. This was to have innumerable progeny. All the post books, descendants of the route guides of previous times, were its successors, and were published fairly regularly, particularly in the XVIII century, starting with the “General List of Posts in France” by the geographer – editor Jaillot.

The ancestor of postal history is the “origin of Posts in Ancient and modern Times” by Lequien de la Neufuille, published in 1708, but there was nothing significant till the XIXth century. However, from the first decades of the last century, impetus was given first by the controversies between the proponents of post by horse and post by train, which was inaugurated in France (see the works by Jonhau) following and as a result of the postal reforms carried out by Rowland Hill in England in 1840 (see the pamphlets by Grasset).

Some years later, the birth of philatelic literature gave rise to considerable emulation, and since then “Posts and Philately” became an accepted and by no means negligible section of our public and private libraries.

The publication, on 21 December 1861, by Alfred Potiquet, of the first stamp catalogue marks the start of a veritable flowering of philatelic works (as they were called), the pioneers of which were Möems, Maurry, Berger – Levraut, Laplante at first, then Mahé, Valette, Chapalay, Baillieu, and finally, thirifocq, Leriche and Nicolas. We may say here that a list published by the famous Nancy amateur Oscar Berger-Levraut precedes by three months the famous and very rare 1st edition of Potiquet, but this cannot be looked on as a catalogue and it is still the Potiquet which remains the rara avis (as it was called by Pierre Mahé as early as 1908) of bibliophilately.

Along with catalogues and price lists, journals appeared that contained studies of stamps and their accessories. Then, under the impetus of the philatelic trade, monographs made their appearance from the sixties onwards then multiplied and prospered. J.B. Moëms was one of the first and most erudite philatelic authors. We find under his name an impressive file of volumes, not very consistent internally, most being based on only 150 specimens.

Since then, every year has brought us works, studies, or catalogues dealing with post or stamps, in the case of the latter covering them sometimes by country, sometimes by issues, sometimes by specialities.

How is it possible that this abundant literature has never given rise to a bibliography? In fact three attempts have been made in France, but none came to anything.

First, a work due to Philippe de Bosredon, entitled “Philatelic Bibliography of France and Belgium”, appeared without signature from Moëms in Brussels in 1878. It is totally out of date, that goes without saying, but it was very useful at a time when philately was going through its heroic phase. Then (in 1906), Quinet published his "Essay on Postal Bibliography."

This is a serious work, but unfortunately also too dated now, and it was very incomplete even in its own day. Finally, the "Annuaire de la P.T.T." published in May 1931 an article signed by M. Daniel Nernard under the title "Bibliographie de l'histoire de la poste, des courriers et des services de messagerie en France". However, like Quinet, though his work quotes periodical articles along with works published by the book trade, it hardly mentions philately.

However there have been two very useful specialist works. The first is that of George Fordham on the routes of France (No. 540). Secondly comes "Les Almanachs français" by John Grand Carteret, in which we have found several references to almanacs and year-books.

Generally speaking, printed French documents have not been very much help to us. The foreign literature, on the other hand, has offered us an abundant harvest. In the first place let us quote the admirable "Catalogue of the philatelic library of the Earl of Crawford" by E.D. Bacon, and the "Standard index to philatelic literature" by Albert H. Harris and L-A-J. Baker.

However, as soon as we examine these first sources, one difficulty meets us. Having refused periodicals on principle (as they merit a special study), what shall we do with the catalogues and price lists, and in the – obvious – case where we accept them, do we accept Bacon's formula and quote all their editions in the references.

Bacon's solution is of course the obvious one for him; a catalogue should include every publication in the library of the English amateur, for which the Philatelic Literature Society think – rightly – that the treasures should be indexed.

But this is not strictly the object of a bibliography, and our position is strikingly different. It would have been tedious, and moreover perfectly useless to encumber all the editions of a catalogue or a post book. We know for example that the house of Maury has published a general catalogue of postage stamps annually since 1865, that Yvert and Tellier is in its 53rd edition, that some catalogues have gone on for decades and have only ceased to appear in other forms or other covers, and finally that seasoned price lists or post books exist whose connection – perhaps with quarters of nobility – can be established from the end of the XVIIIth century. We can see there would be no point in going through all this, not for lack of material but because it would have been useless and of no practical value.

In principle therefore when a work goes into multiple editions we have entered it under one simple number. People who use our bibliography as a working tool, whether to mark up their own library or to make exchanges with other amateurs, can use the reference number from the bibliography to refer to the proportion they possess, offer, or are researching.

Nevertheless, changes in format, editor or presentation have obliged us to allot two or more different numbers to a work. We have done the same with route guides, lists of posts and postal boards without ever forgetting to accompany our references with notes that will show the relationship between the work and the need to cite more than are strictly necessary to ensure that every title appears in our index.

For the rest, we hope that as the reader goes on he will comprehend the method we have adopted and to which we have strictly adhered.

We have in fact come up against other difficulties, but the main one is that met with by every bibliographer: how to define the subject. We had to sacrifice abundance to ensure precision. We had to choose amongst a multitude of works to accept or exclude them.

As we said above, we accepted all philatelic publications from the outset, including price lists, since we know from everyday experience that these opuscles from last century devoted to the sale of stamps give us the only existing information on these.

We then went on to a more rigorous selection amongst the specifically postal works. We decided not to include legal and judicial publications, especially the laws published in sections, and doctoral theses (with a few exceptions, such as cases like no. 950, where it was not possible to omit them). We also decided that it was not within our remit, and moreover would only be of slight interest, to put in the manuals for postmen known by the general title of postal working courses (nevertheless we kept in the most important, no. 550 for example).

It was more tricky to pick out the non-postal and non-philatelic works which contain incidentally information we could find important. To make this plainer, let us think of studies devoted to carrier pigeons. We have included in our bibliography such works as those of Gaustier, Melville or Riquoir, but have excluded Chapuis, Girardin and many others. After studying these, we found that the first three devote one or more chapters to pigeon post, whereas the other either do not deal with this at all, or so little as not to interest us.

To illustrate more clearly the principles that guided us, we may say that certain works of a general nature have been included in this bibliography though their subject is only obliquely relevant. This is the case with the books by Auriac and Eudel. Others have found a place because they are traditionally considered as indispensable to any philatelic library, and because they may help the researchers of certain specialists. Thus the works by Boppe and Pihan. We may mention in this respect that we have always borne tradition very much in mind, and have thus never excluded the works that are found in every specialist library worthy of the name.

Finally, we think we have included our entries as carefully as possible, we have not managed in all cases to discover all the references relating to works not in our personal library or in any other we have managed to consult.

Nevertheless, we have spared neither time nor effort. Above all we have visited the public collections: the National of course, then that of the Ministry of the P.T.T., and that of the Société Française de Timbrologie. These were infinitely valuable to us. On the second place, we have examined title by title the catalogue of all the foreign libraries we have managed to get hold of, such as (far posts): Katalog der Bücherei des Reichspostamt und des Reichpostmuseums, catalogue générale des bibliothèques du Ministère des chemins de fer, Marine, Postes et Télégraphe (of Brussel), Catalogue de la Bibliothèque du Bureau International de l'Union Postale Universelle, Catalogue de la Biblioteca de Correos y Telégrafos (of Buenos Aires), Katalog over Kuml. General post yrelsems Bibliotek van het Hoofdbestuur der Posten en Telegraphie (of the Hague), along with many others. For philately, there were the catalogues of foreign philatelic libraries such as those in Stockholm, London, Leipzig, Zürich etc. On the third place, we have done the same with the sale catalogues of specialist libraries. We have discovered a certain number of these, along with price lists for philatelic literature, especially abundant for the Anglo-Saxon countries (Vallancey, Harris, etc). Finally, we have examined the majority of the abundant private libraries of France.

May we take this opportunity to express our very sincere gratitude to Messrs de Beauford, Bellion, Bauvet, Brun, Champin, Chapier, Dubus, Fabre, Kastler, Lutz, Morel d'Arleux, Northans Peemans, who have kindly placed at our disposal either their actual library, which happened in the great majority of cases (which enables us to say that we have seen with our own eyes the majority of the volumes cited in this bibliography), or the catalogue of the library. We should also like to express our gratitude to various foreign authors and philatelist who have given us valuable information on a certain number of works for which our references were incomplete. We may mention Messrs Bruck, Corbisier de Méaultsaut, Rotsaert and Symens for Belgium, Amberson and Erust Müller for Switzerland.

It now remains to say a last word about the way we have set out our work. It will be seen at once that we have in no way departed from the principles that should guide any bibliographer worthy of his task.

A first section consists of the alphabetical index by name of author or first work of anonymous works. This comprises more than 14000 different works. Whenever possible we give the name and first name of the author, the title of the work, the name of the publisher, the date and place of publication, the format and the number of pages. In the absence of the publisher's name, we give that of the printer, if neither is available we state that these details are wanting. In cases where the author is his own publisher, we have repeated his initials in the place where the publisher's name should be. In cases where the date or place of publication are not mentioned and we have managed – by cross-testing – to establish them to within a certain approximation, we have shown them within brackets. When totally ignorant of the date, we have used the sign (s.d.). We have also shown within brackets the number of pages in unpaginated publications when we have been able to count them, except in cases where we have not managed to locate the volume. Each time we follow the number of pages by the number of plates, charts or graphs, it should be understood that these are outside the text, as supplementary elements. And speaking of these, we may add that all the stereotypes that adorn this Bibliography come from our personal collection.

A second part, in which we have given multiple references as far as possible, is an analytical index by subjects and countries. The reader will see that in certain cases we have had to separate France from its possessions, to make the work easier. However in principle France includes its colonies, Belgium includes the Congo and Ruanda – Urundi, and Switzerland includes Liechtenstein. These three groups open the lists, since authors in the French language – as is quite understandable – are concerned above all with their national vignettes other countries follow in strictly alphabetical order, though again we thought it best to group Germany with its former states and Italy with its duchies, always for easier reference and sometimes from necessity. Again, though, our method will be better understood by using it, not from explanations, however detailed.

This work is necessarily incomplete. The reader will see that certain titles do not have all the necessary bibliotechnical references. If anyone knows them, or knows of volumes we have not recorded, we ask them to let us have the information – so as to prepare a supplement or perhaps a second edition. We also ask anyone who publishes anything on our subject to send us a specimen to our private address, 70 rue de Rennes, Paris, so that it can go into a later edition. Finally, may we hope that people will get in touch with us to report any of the inevitable mistakes, so that we can correct them. This is in the interest of us all.

Imperefect htought it may be, this bibliography will – we are convinced- be of service to the increasing numbers of these in France and abroad who are interested in philatelic and postal history. It has been drawn up for then, and it is for them to say whether we have succeeded in this enterprise.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF GERMAN MONOGRAPHS ON THE
POSTAGE STAMPS OF INDIVIDUAL COUNTRIES

Stamp collecting has grown during the last few years at a universal level. Every collector, not the one who buys common stamps just to stick in an album, but the one who works seriously on his stamp collection, will benefit greatly if he relies upon philatelic works by other researchers and specialists. That is why we have compiled a bibliography of the most important German publications on stamps of individual countries. We hope through this to provide a service to all collectors, and if this work encourages diligent studies on literature concerning this subject within the collecting community, then the purpose of the bibliography has been fulfilled.

In conclusion, I would like to express my gratitude to all who have assisted me in the formation of this present work, especially postmaster general H. Albrecht (Cologne on the Rhine), who has made the publication of the bibliography possible.

TWENTY YEARS OF HISTORICAL WORK (1924-1944)

The idea of gathering in a booklet a listing of all the investigations and publications concerning the labours of Walter B. L. Bose regarding Argentine history and philately has its origins amongst his friends.

It is our purpose to indicate the field of scientific investigations to which he dedicated himself with enthusiasm for over twenty years, contributing valuable proofs and precedence with reference to American and Argentine history.

His parents, Drs. Emil Bose and Margarit Heiberg de Bose, graduated from Göttingen (Germany) and Copenhagen (Denmark), respectively, had been engaged by Dr. Joaquin V. Gonzalez, President of the National University of La Plata, in 1909, to organize and direct the Institute of Physics of that advanced institution. His father died in that city in 1911. His Argentine students and friends still recall his personality. His mother continued her teaching labors in the School of Engineering, retiring in 1941. Both served the country with their scientific knowledge and activities. Thus, he was educated in a scientific atmosphere and took his courses of study at the Graduate School, at the National College and Faculty of humanities and School of Education of La Plata (1912-1937). Having arrived in Argentina still a child, he assimilated himself totally into the country's atmosphere, so much so that his entire literary production is written in Castilian. By the same token he became a citizen in 1926 and made his home with an Argentine lady.

He began his labors in the General Office of Posts and Telegraphs, despite his initial inclinations toward the natural sciences, as official in charge of the Philatelic Section of the Argentine Postal and Telegraph Museum, with the Director General Dr. Arturo Goyeneche conferring upon him the directorship of that museum in October 1928.

There he intensified his investigations about the issuing of Argentine postal and telegraphic stamps, applying scientific methods to philately. The knowledge thus acquired qualified him for the publication of numerous studies on the subject, bringing about additionally, as expert, a constructive labor in institutions of the Argentine Republic such as the Philatelic Association (AFRA) and others.

Later on he continued his university studies in order to devote himself fully to historical investigations, specializing in the "History of Communications in America". With this in mind he gathered from 1932 a wide documentation (with transcripts) in order to be able to base his work on original sources, with materials coming from a number of public and private archives in Spain and America.

His principal studies about this subject he published at the Historical Studies Center of the National University of La Plata. and at the Society of Argentine History of Buenos Aires. He took part also in a number of historical congresses and published numerous articles in the Post and Telegraph Review, the official organ of that national enterprise.

Complimentary to this activity have been studies about theoretical-philosophical matters relating to history in general which, after 1935, were combined in writings and thoughts regarding the "historical future" (the formation of historical series, cyclical movements, and the rhythm and harmony of evolutionary processes functioning as a function of time.)

In the period since that time he has worked incessantly, and we offer here an index of his works, classified by topics, in order to furnish a clearer idea of the whole. His friends believe that in this manner they fulfill an unavoidable duty toward one who has devoted his life to historical studies of America.

PREFACE

Dear members:

Following a prolonged pause we now wish to deliver to you book number 10 of our Information. As no doubt you have gathered from the specialized press, we were, finally, able to publish an additional library catalogue with parts 3 and 4 in the publishing house 1)BL-Paul Paray, following two years of preliminary work, at the end of 1998. In this way we have continued our up-to-now successful series. The present existence of 12000 books, more than 5000 magazine volumes, and more than 220 publications being kept up to date fills about 250 continuous meters in our library rooms. As a comparison: the Hamburg television tower rises 279.8 meters. With catalogue parts 1 to 4 the user of the library from near and far finds at his disposal a total of 200 pages of literature information. The subject group "fatherland philately" has also been reworked especially in the last part of the catalogue. Full use has been made for this primarily of exhibition guide-books with their frequently interesting articles. Indications regarding the postal history of a place are found by simply checking in the catalogue under the respective name.

The best catalogue cannot ever be completely up-to-date, as during the preparations for printing of every new catalogue books and articles are acquired and received which, however, can no longer be taken into account; and since the preparations for printing the last part of the catalogue proved to be notably protracted, shortly after its appearance an addendum has become necessary. In order to facilitate for you, our members, a nonetheless present-time panorama, we submit to you on the following pages this addendum as a special off-print with 1611 listings of titles.

We hope that you will have much pleasure with these, and that you will acquire new knowledge. In case you do not yet own library catalogues 1, 2, and 3/4 you can order these from us. Each part costs 9.50 German marks plus shipping costs. If the totality of all parts is requested you will receive these for 27.00 DM plus shipping costs.

High prices for philatelic specialized literature

Felzmann Auctions sold by auction the "Roland" Library (part I)

It has been said frequently, and still remains worth repeating: if there is to come into existence something of value as a result of systematic effort, that is impossible without recourse to solid specialized literature, has no chance of success, and at best is amateurish. This applies to postal history and philately no less than for science. More so yet as both post-related disciplines, even in the strictest sense, may be regarded as historical auxiliary sciences. Here as there, the advancement of knowledge is the only thing that cannot be taken from one. An advancement of knowledge, to be sure, which furnishes not only information but allows, if occasion arises, economic advantages.

Of course, good taste and understanding, as well as well-defined: goals are indispensable in connection with specialized literature. Specialized literature in the sense of one's own interests and inclinations, systematically compiled, can follow two purposes or goals which, notably in the fields of postal history and philately, offer the advantage that they are mutually compatible.

A first strategy in the acquisition and use of applicable specialized literature places the gaining of solid specialized knowledge in the service of one's own postal history and philatelic efforts into the foreground. Here, the specialized literature serves above all as an auxiliary in the accessibility or the knowledgeable building of quality collections of one's own.

A second strategy (possibly supplementing the first) regards specialized literature itself as collectible objects which not only furnish usable knowledge but can form, as well, a well-planned, attractive, and perhaps also collections of high value.

No doubt for both goals of special advantage was the specialized literature auction which the renowned Asseldorf auction house Ulrich Felzmann conducted January 16th of this year; because on the occasion of this 87th Felzmann auction, a total of 1070 positions with a total value of just under 300.000 German marks came to be auctioned as part I of the so-called "Roland" Library of postal history and philatelic literature. It was in fact the first time in Germany that a public auction was reserved for the offering exclusively of so specialized a library. No wonder then that postal historians especially followed this happening with exceptional attention, noted prices realized, and participated actively.

The remarkable success of this auction confirmed fully the concept of the Felzmann team, to reserve a complete auction exclusively for philatelic literature. Indeed, it corrected in part at least the rumor, not entirely unjust, that philatelists and postal historians were habitually reluctant to spend money. A noteworthy percentage of the partially rare works found willing buyers at the auction. Price increases for the objects sold were some 22% higher than the estimated prices which had been quoted without a great deal of reserve.

More impressive yet is the result when we establish the balance in the internal theme division of the attractive (and indeed worth collecting) Felzmann literature catalogue. Here one notes for instance that the quota of sales for (frequently early) general works and encyclopedias was 138%, for literature generally, respectively for single areas of classic German philately, at 112%, respectively 105% of the total offer. Most other themes as well could show more than respectable sales shares, such as for instance "postal history in general" (99%), private and local posts (95%), collateral German areas (110%), "view cards, topics, numismatics (134%), German colonies (95%), Germany after 1945 (107%), ship and polar mail (90%), military mail (field post) (78%), auction catalogues, mostly so-called "name sales" (104%) etc.

Some singular literature items merit special emphasis in view of the amounts obtained. This applies above all to the legendary Fournier volume Album de fac-Similes with more than 3000 hinged original Fournier forgeries, the publication: of which (with an edition of 480 copies) had been effected in 1928 by the "Union Philatelique de Geneve": valued by Felzmann at 5500 German marks the gavel was knocked down at a fabulous 14500 marks. Once only was a higher price obtained, for a literature object on Japanese philately - this, however, at an American auction.

Some further examples of noteworthy price increases speak for themselves: Billig's 32-volume Philatelic Handbooks realized 1900 (1600) DM; the five-volume Kohl handbook in the last edition, likewise 1900 (1000) DM; the 52-volume series Neues Handbuch, a modern classic as it were, 1500 (400) DM; Wilson's famous description of the "Royal Philatelic Collection" 2500 (1200) DM; The Philatelic Bookworm, the magazine for the collector of philatelic literature, 1000 (500) DM; Edward Bacon's catalogue of the famous Crawford Library 3500 (3000) DM; Suppant'schitsch's well-known literature study dated 1901, 1250 (1200) DM; the opus about Sperati's forgeries twice at once 1450, respectively 1400 DM; Dr. Bohne's manual of forgeries, 1350 (800) DM; Kosack's "Berlin Stamp Magazine" 1050 (1000) DA&; Enstrom's Manual of the postal system in the Danish West Indies, 1850 (1700) DM; the 14 Ferrari Auction catalogues, finally, a considerable 5600 (3000) DM.

Of special interest as well for the postal historian is the catalogue of tariffs from the year 1892 which attained an im-Dosing 880 (600) marks; Arthur de Rothschild's "Histoire de la Poste" from 1873, 1650 (1000) DM; Kumpf-laikuli's "New Letters about Old ones" 1200 (600) DM; the SAVO-magazines 1933/38, 1450 (1200) DM; the Prussian postal regulations of 1782, 3200 (1500) DM; and H. v. Stephan's history of the Prussian Mail, 2300 (1200) DM.

Part II of the superb "Roland" Library will be brought to auction in August of this year, once again with a special relzmann catalogue.

IN MEMORY OF THE FIRST PHILATELIC AUTHOR

The unknown writer of this remarkable study which first appeared in 1862, is retold here and represents a unique view of philately of the time.

THEN – NOW

Our monthly revue "Philatelisme" was assigned the goal to serve philately, only philately in general, and tasked with putting at the disposal of all philatelists a study dating from 1862 which the "Philatelisme" had the good fortune of first presenting.

This study encompasses the first twenty years of the postage stamp's existence, which first appeared in 1840.

It relates particularly to the birth of philately and specifically the classic period.

The classic stamp which is the basis for all stamp collections; for which this unknown study by an equally unknown author was written in a bygone era, tells of minor events and makes reference as much to the creation as the evolution of the postage stamp during this twenty year period

By its precision and detail, it constitutes a unique, precious and without equal work.

Bringing this forgotten work back from oblivion has been a public service which in our estimation could not have come at a better time as old documents have all but disappeared.

We publish this study in its original format without changing a thing. It clearly establishes the situation and reflects the atmosphere of the time.

We have preceeded the definition of the classic stamp as originally stated in the “Philatelie” with the permission of the author, Maurice Schuermans.

This same definition is the most exact and precise if not the only one known for its day; it is useful to examine the previous to have a better understanding of the present work.

To end this introduction, we express our wish that the present study contributes to re-establishing honour to the philatelic personality of Natalis Rondot, often unjustly ignored.

Our tribute to his name can be found in the dedication of this work.

LIST OF SWEDISH PHILATELIC LITERATURE IN THE PHILATELIC LIBRARY OF THE POSTAL MUSEUM

INTRODUCTION

The need for a bibliography of Swedish philatelic literature is great. Philatelic researchers of all kinds view it as a hindrance to their studies that they are unable to deepen their studies without a bibliography.

The books in the philatelic library of the National Postal Museum are listed on catalogue cards. Visitor to the Museum are thus able to access an important source. I am thinking of all those who are unable to visit the Museum and of those who seek help at various local libraries; they need a printed bibliography.

There are two earlier, published bibliographies of the Swedish philatelic literature:

- Handbok över Monografier m.m. i Postmuseums Filatelistiska Bibliotek. [Handbook of Monographs, etc., in the Philatelic Library of the National Postal Museum.], 1954, pp.1233-1258.
- Wåge Bergström; Svensk Filatelistisk Litteratur 1921-1971. [Swedish Philatelic Literature 1921-1971.], handout 1974.

In my work, I encounter these questions and have therefore tried to compile a bibliography of the literature catalogued under Sweden, the category dealing with Swedish philately. Catalogues, club newsletters, periodicals, and auction catalogues are not included in the bibliography. The bibliography comprises publications to July 1981.

PHILATELIC BIBLIOGRAPHY OF FRANCE [AND OF BELGIUM]

(Paper presented to the Société at the meeting of the 3rd February 1876, and complete up to the 1st July 1876 by Mr. de Bosredon)

In his work released in 1874 entitled Philatelic Library, Tiffany gave the nomenclature of all the publications (articles, special journals, catalogs, price lists, pictures, pieces of music, etc.) which have stamps as their subject.

It is interesting to carry out a census of those publications published in France, to update and revise Tiffany's list, by filling the blanks it shows and correcting some mistakes.

These mistakes and omissions (not so many) do not reduce the merit of Tiffany's book. It will be hard to find a work more correct, more meticulous and complete.

The result achieved by the author is especially remarkable because, although many works were published very recently⁽¹⁾, many philatelic essays released in France are now very rare, or even untraceable and others are totally unknown. Among the most skilled amateurs, is there anyone who has consulted the Catalogue by Thirifocq, or the Manuel by François Valette, "of the Ministry of the Interior", inventor of "science prognostique"? Is there anyone who knows the witty caricatures by Cham mocking our favorite passion? We approach a spicy, but pointless, point of view of our nomenclature; in order to show the serious one, it will be enough to remember that in one of the last society meetings, our honorable secretary appealed to the authority of one of the oldest catalogues, and maybe the most incomplete, too, to discuss some facts about Danish stamps. Indeed catalogues, or surely more detailed works, have to provide pieces of information or useful arguments. However, it might be good to keep track of the works having dealt with the history or the descriptions of stamps.

Our census includes 133 issues, namely: 28 catalogues, 8 special publications, 4 special journals, 52 albums, 17 articles in various works or journals, 12 price lists, 10 pictures and caricatures, 2 oddities. We took care to relate each work to the corresponding number in Tiffany's list: instead of arranging them in alphabetical order by author's name, we have considered it preferable to adopt a chronological order: that seems more logical.

We will consider only French works, and we have considered only works published in France^(1*). Tiffany was wrong when he considered some publications released in Belgium to be French ones, because they were written in French, whereas he took care to separate American works from English ones. We admit that the very good books by Moens published in Belgium, have a very particular interest to us, and we are going to deal with them in a second work.

- (1) The oldest work published in France (Catalogue of Potiquet, 1st edition) was placed on sale on the 21st December 1861.
- (1*) We have made an exception with the Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie which has been published at Brussels for convenience as it is without doubt a French publication.

PHILATELIC BIBLIOGRAPHY OF FRANCE

Second article (the first was published in the issues 4 and 5, page 101 and 131). Paper by Mr. de Bosredon presented to the Society on the 3rd May 1877.

In a previous work Société kindly liked, I gave the details of the works published in France about stamps. This bibliographic essay could interest someone: The President mentioned it in his report on the Society's activities in 1876; the Society itself published it in the Bulletin; Berger-Levrault provided me his collections of publications; Tiffany, whose work was my model, addressed me a note with several new publications⁽¹⁾. Anderson, who pointed out to me some omissions, expressed his wish to read similar researches for other countries; finally Pardo de Figueroa did me the honor to dedicate to me the booklet he recently published on Spanish philatelic bibliography⁽²⁾.

These different examples incite me today to show the Society a supplementary work where I provide details of very many essays or articles I did not know of when I wrote my first list or they were published since. Some omissions or gaps may still be found. The difficulty itself to be right and complete is enough to show the usefulness to keep the bibliographic information updated.

Some people were surprised not to find, in my bibliography, some works cited in the Philatelic Library by Tiffany: the reason is that on one hand I mentioned only the works about stamps, whilst Tiffany listed also those about postal service, on the other I had to consider only those works dealing with stamps completely, not partially.

In my work I added the indication about the legislative decrees and the parliamentary documents on postage stamps, telegraph stamps and fiscal stamps. There will be a great interest towards similar censuses in other countries: without turning to official sources, one cannot ascertain when stamps were created and issued, what their purpose was and when they could be used.

- (1) I am also obliged to Mahé for several useful communications and information.
- (2) Literatura Filatelica en Espana, apuntes para la redaccion de un catalogo. by Dr. Thebussem (Séville, 1876, in-8° de 34p.)

WEST LIBRARY:

THE LIBRARY'S CARD CATALOGUE INDEX 1984

The card catalog is constructed so that a given subject will chiefly be found under the heading of a country or a geographic area related to it. In addition to the geographical designations, the card catalog contains certain other reference headings. Both the country names and the other reference headings are grouped in alphabetical order.

The title of the book is usually listed in the book's language, and additional information is provided on the author or the publisher as well as the number of pages and the publication date.

Stamp catalogs which are devoted to one country only can be found in the alphabetic listing for the country in question.

Because of space limitations other stamp catalogs and periodicals are not included in the listing in view of the expenses in lending out the large stamp catalogs and periodicals covering the whole year. The postage required would simply be too costly. In most cases it would be more expedient to request a copy of the desired excerpt.

Some of the Library's materials contain articles on various subjects which would be too difficult to catalog by the title itself. These articles will be more suitably placed in listings which deal with related subject matter, for example, "Post Riders" or "Archives of German Postal History". Those interested may obtain a copy of the contents of items listed in the card catalog by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to the Librarian. Requests for sending the table of contents for all books will not be accepted.

Loan privileges for the Library's materials are restricted to members of a philatelic club affiliated with Danmarks Filatelist Forbund (Danish Philatelic Association), or who receives the magazine DFT as a B member. Proof of membership must be provided when loan material is requested.

The Library is not open to the public. Requests should be made in writing or by telephone to the Librarian who will normally send out the desired material within one week. The loan material may be retained for one month. The borrower must pay the postage charges in both directions. The postage outlay of the Librarian can be covered by enclosing unused stamps or by giro payment. The borrower may not lend the materials to others, and lost or damaged books must be paid for at replacement cost. Using a copier to reproduce the borrowed materials is prohibited. Experience has shown that many book spines are destroyed by careless use of a copier. If copies are desired these should be requested from the Librarian who will provide the service if the request is reasonable. The cost is 50 ore per page.

The Library is always interested in obtaining all forms of philatelic literature which may become surplus due to lack of space or as the result of sorting out unwanted material.

All materials, even those already in the Library's catalogue, are welcome and postage will be reimbursed if the shipment contains information on the postal or handling charges. The Library is also willing to negotiate a reasonable payment for more valuable material which may be offered.

Our circular ceased with no. 12/90 (December 1990) of vol. 15. For this reason, the subject index to Circulars 1 to 47 has been drawn up and published. However this publication did not include the internal memoranda of the Working Party. This part will only go Working Party members as a separate item.

On dealing with the CIRCULARS (Rundbriefe), the pages had to be numbered consecutively for issues 1 to 32.

From no. 33 onwards the pages have been numbered consecutively.

In dealing with SAMMLER – WOCHE (Report no.2) we made the mistake of thinking this journal had died as early as 1934. In fact, Sammler – Woche went on till March 1943. the published SW index (1-4) should be replaced by the corrected version SW (1-10). We ask you to forgive this lapse.

Subject indexes to more German-language periodicals will be published with the next Working Party circular (December 1991).

Photocopies of articles listed to date can be obtained in return for the cost of production (currently DM - .30 per DIN A4 sheet), plus postage.

CATALOG OF THE HAMBURG PHILATELIC LIBRARY

FOREWORD

More than 16 years have passed since the first catalog appeared. During these years the holdings have multiplied. The arrangement of the holdings has changed, and there has been a new subject matter breakdown. Free access to all the library holdings, in effect since the founding of the library in 1971, has been retained.

The library holdings can be roughly sub-divided as follows:

- Books
- German-language journals
- Foreign-language journals
- Study Group circulars/bulletins ["Rundbriefe"]
- Exhibition catalogs
- Auction catalogs (selected)
- Stamp catalogs

The exhibition catalogs are housed in the new section for "local history" ["Heimatgeschichte"].

Neither of the last two groups are contained in this catalog at present. Expansion and regular supplements are planned for the library's information bulletin.

In order to facilitate searching, you will find on the following page a table of contents by subject matter. Please look for a particular book not only according to the specific country or subject, but under all applicable fields.

The following are not circulated:

- Reference items;
- especially scarce and valuable works,
- publications of the BDPH [German Philatelic Federation] study groups from the past three years
- loose leaf publications

These titles are identified with initials "K.A." [keine Ausleihe = no circulation].

All other books, journals and auction catalogs can be circulated.

Journal articles, small publications and short extracts of publications can be provided as copies (so long as this does not violate copyright provisions). In addition, we offer you the possibility to obtain extracts from the subject matter catalog covering journal articles and research reports—arranged in sections according to their content. Here primarily the old volumes from about 1890 have been carded.

Circulation provisions can be obtained from the library for return postage.

The Hamburg Philatelic Library is located in the Hohenfelde section of the city. You can reach us by subway (U-1 in the direction of Volksdorf) and express bus (35 and 36) to the "Wartenau" station. By streetcar (S-1 in the direction of Ohlsdorf/Poppenbüttel) to the "Landwehr" station.

Catalogue of the philatelic library Hamburg

Preface

Three years after the appearance of the last catalogue, which combined more than 5000 titles, about 430 periodicals and over 200 circulars of study groups, these were combined for the first time in one volume. Part 2, with about 2200 new entries became necessary. Again all pertinent subjects were included after page 50, the first addendum follows.

The current catalogue includes all publications which arrived at the library since aug. 1988. This also includes the new category of local philately with disclosure of local postal history.

Included here were over 650 exhibit guides from Aachen to ??? as to content. This is particularly interesting for the home town collector. Here he can locate literature for his collection interest.

This catalogue, like its predecessor, is put together systematically. If a speciality belongs in more than one category it is cited under all of them. Just to be safe, it is best to look under all categories.

The philatelic library in Hamburg is open to anyone. The collection is available for perusal, with the exception of foreign periodicals and auction catalogues, which are stored elsewhere due to the lack of room. A loan is only possible under special arrangement.

Excluded from a loan are:

- current items (i.e. catalogues)
- especially scarce and valuable items
- publications of study groups of the German Philatelic Society in the last three years.
- Loose items (pages, etc.)
- These items are marked "not for loan" (K.Ph)

The library reserves the right to remove loan special items at any time. All other books and periodicals may be loaned out.

Items from the library are available on inter-library loan. They may also be obtained direct – by mail with postage pre-paid and wrapping supplied by the borrower. The original first volume is available at the library.

Yet the best catalogue cannot replace personal assistance. We would be happy if you visited us in Hamburg. You would have personal assistance from library staff.

CATALOGUE OF THE HAMBURG PHILATELIC LIBRARY

PARTS 3 & 4

Introduction

Since 1988 the Hamburg Philatelic Library has published its book and periodical holdings in the DBZ literary series. Including the library catalogue Sections 3-4, given here, more than 11,000 books, 430 periodical titles and 200 study group circulars can now be referenced in this manner.

Section I of the library catalogue contains all books procured up to mid-1988, classified systematically according to collecting areas. Periodical titles (German and foreign languages) and study group circulars available in the library are also catalogued.

Section 2 reproduces books of all collecting areas added from 1988 to the beginning of 1992. Confined to this catalogue section is the new subject group "Domestic Philately". Subdivided alphabetically according to location, the domestic collector will find here interesting books and articles from exhibition guide-books from A to Z.

The catalogue Sections 3-4 show the library's new acquisitions from 1992 to mid 1996. All subject groups contained in Section 2 are also presented in this catalogue.

The printed library catalogue sets forth the basic principle of creating for the user the discovery of literature important to him in the easiest way possible. Instead of listing all books alphabetically by title and author, regardless of contents, every title is related to one or more collecting areas. Thus every user can find "their" literature gathered in one place. If one book overlaps thematically, all subject groups in question should be searched in cases of doubt.

The Hamburg Philatelic Library can be used by everyone. The stock is freely accessible with the exception of foreign periodicals which must be kept in storage. If one wishes to borrow these periodicals, they must be ordered in advance.

A large portion of books and periodicals can be borrowed; excluded are:

- The current holdings
- Books appearing before 1900
- Loose-leaf publications
- Publications of the working groups in the German Federation of Philately within the last three years
- Works of banned authors

These titles are designated in the catalogue under non-lendable. The library reserves the right to subsequently bar particular works from being borrowed. However, it is possible to photocopy the table of contents or individual excerpts from non-lendable works.

The Hamburg Philatelic Library offers all readers direct long-distance loan to their homes. For 2 DM per volume, up to twelve titles per dispatch may be borrowed for a period of three weeks. Long-distance borrowing terms and an application for reader identity can be requested with a self-addressed, stamped envelope (1,10 DM). The two first sections of the library catalogue are likewise obtainable.

But the best reference catalogue can never replace a personal search of the facility. The largely honorary library assistants would be pleased to be of service to you in Hamburg.

LIBRARY INDEX

Foreword

The Philatelic Library of the Deutsche Altbriefsammler-Verein (DASV) [German Postal History Society], has been expanding and growing ever since its inception. Especially during the last decade, important information and donations have been received, also speciality collections have been donated by members and collectors. This helped tremendously the purpose of the Philatelic and Historical meaning of the library.

The DASV library was founded with the intention to promote and educate the collector of German Postal History. To help with this project, we are asking members and collectors, to lend or donate materials that are pertinent to growing the library and that can help with research for the members.

This was the idea of Ullrich Häger, who started to play around with the idea of founding a philatelic library specialising in German Postal History. Because of his articles in philatelic magazines, donations started to come in and membership started to develop. Because of the number of donations, the library has been able to catalogue all of the materials according to different periods and topics. Special thanks go out to Wigand Bruns for the work he has done on cataloguing the materials.

My wishes and hopes can not be expressed better than with the words of Ullrich Häger, that he used in 1972: Please keep on working on the idea to start this library and make it a success.

WEST LIBRARY:

SUPPLEMENT TO THE LIBRARY'S CARD CATALOGUE INDEX

1984-1992

The index is set up, so a given subject should be looked up under the country or the geographical subdivision, with which it is most closely associated. Besides geographical names additional limited key phrases have also been included. Country names and key words are listed alphabetically.

The title of the book is normally entered in its original language after which, in most cases, is information such as the name of the author or publisher, as well as year of publication and number of pages.

The time of check out from the library is one month, and the member pays shipping out and back. Forwarding is paid by the library and must be enclosed with the return of the material in the form of unused stamps or deposit on the GIRO account notice accompanying the shipment.

The customer may not pass the material on to a third party and lost or damaged material can be required to be replaced, with the cost of replacement.

It is prohibited to copy the material, as history shows, many book spines have been damaged by faulty copying. If copies are needed they can be ordered from the librarian, who will accept reasonable requests against payment of expenses.

Besides use of the library material via mail, the librarian will answer questions on a subject, within reason.

The library is always interested in receiving any form of philatelic literature, that might become available due to a clean up or lack of space. All material - even material listed in the index - is of interest. Shipping costs to get the material to the library will be refunded, if information regarding these costs are included.

It is even possible, after agreement, that a reasonable payment can be made for valuable material.

Do not throw it out - send it to us for the use and enjoyment of other collectors

ABOUT IRREGULARITIES IN PUBLICATION, ERRORS AND VIOLATIONS IN THE NUMBERING, DATING AND PAGE NUMBERING OF PHILATELIC PERIODICALS UP TO THE END OF 1900.

It is unlikely that there is any librarian of a philatelic club or friend or collector of philatelic literature who did not note, while sorting and organizing stamp magazines into his library, irregularities in their publishing, printing and numeration errors of dates and pagination.

The nature of such irregularities and errors is not always the same. Some of them are notable at the spot, others however misguide the friend of literature, causing additional time, effort and costs for additional research which often will lead to no results and decreased interest and enjoyment in a well organized library. I will show a few examples, which will explain these, constraints.

From the publication Deutscher Philatelist, published by H. Schmidt in Cologne-Ehrenfeld, only 2 issued were published, the first one in March, the second one in April 1896. However, the second issued is numbered as issue No. 3. The one who owns the two papers will search for No. 2 but the search will not be successful, simply because that issue does not exist. Since that publication is of little importance and most collectors may have after reading the same, have disposed of it, the information that No. 2 had never been issued will be hardly available and a collector of literature may search for years. He may add that issue into his wants list and consider his collection of that publication as incomplete.

The last volume, IX of 1894, of the Philatelistischen Börsencourier, which contains 18 issues of which the second issue of the 25th January and the third issue of the 10th February are both marked with Number 2 while issue 3 never has been issued. Also in this case the collector will look unsuccessfully for No. 3, thinking that this issue exists. He may even have had this issue for a long time in his duplicates, but still continues the hunt for it, just because the issues were numbered incorrectly.

He may well have seen the missing No. 3 several times or it may have been offered to him for purchase but he always declined the purchase based on his wrong impression that he owns that No. 2 already. Would he had the knowledge about the error in the numbering, he would have taken a closer look on the offered No. 2 and then found out that this is the paper of his desires.

Sometimes it happens that a paper contains a wrong volume number, e.g. instead of VII, No. 3 it carries the number VI, No. 3. Also in that case the collector will reject that numbered VI, No. 3 offered to him, as he believed he owns that issue already while the issue offered was actually the issue VII, No. 3, which is missing in his collection. In case it is a rare and hard to find issue so it may well happen, as it happened to the author of this article, that he will never again see that issue.

These few simple cases, aside of which many much more complicated cases exist, will convince the reader of the importance for the collector of literature/magazines to be informed about such irregularities and errors.

While hints and information about such errors occasionally can be found in newspapers, a complete and comprehensive compilation of such errors does not exist till now. Since I am working on such a compilation which will contain the newspaper literature of all nations and languages, I may comment that all data which I report in that list is authentic as I have taken it out of my own library, nevertheless, I will not claim any right of absolute completeness since neither my, nor any other philatelic collection is without gap.

Furthermore I like to add that I have considered only the more important irregularities and errors, the papers which only contain classifieds I have mostly ignored.

SCANDINAVIAN PHILATELIC PERIODICAL LITERATURE

This literature, which is not extensive, seems in fact to be quite limited. During a recent trip to Scandinavia, I sought to find as much as possible but in most cases it seemed to be unknown to those questioned. Nor was I able to find the individual items. There was very little even in the libraries of the many philatelic societies. In spite of that, I was able to make a number of new finds that should be included in the catalogue. The remaining gaps can be filled in by the co-operative efforts of our Nordic philatelists.

THE PHILATELIC PERIODICAL LITERATURE OF THE WORLD
IN THE YEARS 1901-1903

In addition to the great catalogue of philatelic periodical literature of the whole World to the year 1900, published by Victor Suppantschitsch of Vienna, which is about to be completed, I am publishing a detailed listing of the periodicals that appeared in 1901-1903. The letters and numbers are related to the aforementioned catalogue which will soon be put before the numerous friends of philatelic literature. Hopefully, through the collecting of such literature by the societies and individual philatelists, interest will be stimulated and the results beneficial.

THE PHILATELIC LITERATURE OF GERMANY

(Supplement to the article in No. 9 [Supplement] of A. Moschkau's Magazin)

In the short time of one and half years, the literature on stamp science in Germany has increased so much that, at this time, it seems necessary to enlarge the list published in September 1872 in my magazine, with a supplement.

Before I start on it, I must permit myself to pen some words on our German literature. Even though it does not measure up to that of foreign countries in regard to thoroughness, greatness, and quantity, and were it even less in the foreign countries or, better said, no opinion worth holding, in the main our literature is sounder and more correct than that in foreign countries. Short and sound, far from any that wildly exaggerate or deal with the many illegitimate issues, the German literature has developed slowly over many years and, at the same time, it is an indisputable fact that we are quite competitive with the foreign countries in such areas as our albums by Zschiesche and Schaubek and our handbooks by Berger, Schaubek, Moschkau, and others. In foreign countries every novelty seems to be published without any formal verification of accuracy or veracity, but in our country we are careful and distrustful of the newest that we check it and check it again and, if it does not pass muster, it will be placed in abeyance. Because of this, it is easy to understand that our published literature is more valuable. And while, in the foreign countries, much weeding is not done in order to make use of new ideas and new appearances that seem to free one from old problems, and hold on and propagate with a real tenacity, we have always thrown overboard anything that by us has been found to be impractical or lacking in authenticity, truth, etc. Let the foreigners keep their Bible-sized and unwieldy albums and their catalogues containing six to seven thousand numbers and let us continue on our old path. We will do well that way.

Already in the year 1872, I said that we need not be ashamed of our literature and I based this on that we have, in the midst of mediocrity, many excellent published works. Today I might change some words and say that we can be proud of our literature, since our latest publications have very clearly made great progress in terms of value and worth. We may expect from the rich spirit of philatelic science in Germany that the recent advancements in philatelic literature will continue to improve and also that our colleagues will continue to increase in number. I hope to see this fulfilled.

ON PHILATELIC LITERATURE

Text of lecture delivered at the XVII German Philatelic Meeting at Regensburg on 23 July 1905, By Ludwig König of Kiel

My Members!

To support what I want to tell you today I have naturally brought the greatest part of the philatelic literature, so far as it consists of books, i.e. coherent works forming a whole, and have set it out here for your examination. I have not brought along any volumes of old journals. The smaller ones, not all of which we possess in Kiel, have kindly been made available by Herr Gustav Schmidt of Giessen. There are over 100 examples, which should include pretty well all existing technical, advertising and society journals. Among the society journals I have included the most recent annual reports of the Dresden, Gössnitz, Strassburg, Frankfurt – a – M Kiel, Hamburg – Altona, Regensburg, Stuttgart, Graz, Sttting, Wilhelmshaven, Amsterdam, Herlsinki and Stavanger societies also those of the American Philatelic Association and the International Stamp Dealers' Society of Berlin. Naturally there are also stenographic reports of our 16 previous German Philatelic meetings, the Society Books of the Union of German and Austrian Philatelic Societies, the Festschrift of the Berlin Philatelic Club, and the society reports from Dresden and Kiel. I am quite ready to explain anything in more detail or to show examples.

When last year in Leipzig we decided to have a lecture on literature in Regensburg, neither Herr Hartmann nor myself were in no doubt that we had chosen a subject that is not popular in advanced philatelic circles. On the other hand, if you want to move onto advanced study, you will find that all practical and indeed all theoretical philatelist will simply have to use our abundant literature. Everyone without exception must use it, since philately will only then make progress and collecting can only have or maintain an internal value. When a stamp collector has exceeded his first thousand stamps, he should assemble his own smaller or larger philatelic library. Everyone, even the smaller collector, should however eagerly use the existing society libraries. This ought to make the expansion of our society libraries a more zealous object, on which more money is spent. However I am sorry to say that most societies treat their libraries badly, even very badly. Many of our societies limit their activities to promoting exchanges and raffles, apart from the activities common to all societies, not just the philatelic ones. I visit German and Austrian philatelic societies relatively often, and always speak up in favour of supporting philatelic literature by procuring the most important works and taking a number of magazines for the readers' circle. The Senf and Kohl catalogues are indeed very good and useful, but they should definitely not be the only items of philatelic literature in the Society bookcase – as unfortunately does so often happen. The philatelic literature, and above all the books which are often produced at great sacrifice, should be procured by societies as well as average and large-scale collectors not only because of the usefulness of their contents but also because it should be looked on as a noble duty. Also, there is the possibility of contributing one's own mite to the advancement of philately by buying a copy of outstanding works when they come out, so long as they are not too dear. Here too there are imponderables! There must and will be exceptions such as Mirabaud and Baron de Reuterskiöld – Lausanne who spent 40,000 or 60,000 francs on publishing a book, one of the most valuable and outstanding that has appeared till today, which was a philatelic feat of the first rank, and then gave it away.

Outstanding philatelists have, as is natural, taken an interest in philatelic literature from the earliest days of collecting. Some of them have even gone so far as to ignore actual stamps in favour of the literature, some once they did not have the time to attend to both to any great extent. This leads us to the few major collectors of philatelic literature who have built up libraries of thousands of different volumes, and have thus made available to us the important bibliographic works of philatelic writers that have been produced with so much toil. Here, three names stand together at the peak: Court Counsellor Suppantschitsch in Vienna, Dr. Legrand the founder and long-time editor of the Société Française de Timbrologie at Neuilly near Paris, and the late John K. Tiffany, a barrister and the President of the American Philatelic Association in St. Louis. This latter produced a bibliography, The Philatelic Library, in 150 copies in 1874 and gave it away. In his Origin and Development of Philatelic Literature in 1901, Suppantschitsch called Tiffany's work the best bibliography. Court Counsellor Suppantschitsch was making a concession here, since his own major bibliography of the German philatelic literature was published during 1892/93 by Larisch in Munich, and he ignored his own numerous special works on literature, especially his above-mentioned history of philatelic literature, the only one we have. Other bibliographies are those of Dr. Thebussem, the pseudonym of Don Manuel Pardo de Figueroa of Medina Sidona, covering Spanish literature in 1876, Leoni's on the Italian Literature in 1877, and the highly-prized work by Philipp de Bosredon on the literature of France and Belgium, 1878. Then comes the largest and most detailed German bibliography by Suppantschitsch in 1892, and in 1898 a set of essays on the journals in the Kiel society library. To this we can add the general index covering the first seven years of the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, compiled by Captain Ohrt, and the list of papers in Union and Philatelist compiled by Supreme Court Counsellor Dr. Berchermann of Darmstadt, and Fränkel, the librarian of the Vereins für Briefmarkenkunde, Hamburg. You will also find something about the German philatelic literature in our 1901 year book. In 1889 John K. Tiffany published his Stamp collectors Library Companion, which gives exact data for all American philatelic journals. Something similar for the German – language region was provided with the chronological tables of the German philatelic journals by Judge D. Frankel of Berlin, who owns what is the largest philatelic library in North Germany, and has for years managed and organised the library of the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub. Next to be mentioned amongst the German friends of literature and owners of large libraries is Doctor of Law Otto Rommel of Leipzig, who shares with Counsellor Suppanschitsch the credit of having written most on philatelic literature as such. Both have published for years under special headings in Der Philatelist, from the Internationalen Philatelisten-Vereins of Dresden. Also there is Theodor Haas, editor of the Illustrierten Briefmarken-Journals, one of the few people familiar with the older literature in particular. Albert Gottschalk, of Berlin, collects German philatelic literature, and for two years has issued a journal of his own. Nachrichten aus seiner Bibliothek, with illustrations, 17 issues have appeared so far. This is the best attempt at a periodical devoted to philatelic literature, following less successful efforts in America, England, and even Germany. In Great Britain the two University teachers P. J. Anderson of Aberdeen and F. A. Bellamy of Oxford have a special interest in philatelic bibliography.

After the death of Tiffany, his extensive library went to the Earl of Crawford, the Vice-President of the London Philatelic Society, who zealously built it up, and at about the same time the library of Moens in Brussels went to H. E. Deats of Flemington, New Jersey, the then President of the American Philatelic Association. So far as I remember, the price of the first was 10,000 dollars and of the other 5000 dollars. With this I can leave the major library owners. Also worthy of mention are the large society libraries in Dresden, administrator Herr Plotz the Berlin Club, in Gössnitz owned by Herr Glasewald, Frankfurt-am-Main, recently reorganised by the City Librarian, the Vindobona Library in Vienna, which I would like to reorganise thoroughly, Kiel, where my library supplements that of the Society and is kept on the Society premises. The very good library of the Bavarian Philatelic Union in München went into private ownership in Berlin after the break-up, after our Federation of German and Austrian Philatelic Societies unfortunately missed our opportunity. I will now list the smaller society libraries, giving the ones that are known to me without making any claim to completeness: Hamburg-Altona, Hamburg Society of 1885, Stettin, Stuttgart, Graz, Amsterdam, Birmingham, Stockholm and Zürich: this last, like Graz, has published a printed list of wants and duplicates for its library. Herr Plotz has published the same for the Dresden Society in Der Philatelist, and for society members via the section for society literature in Vertrauliche Korrespondenz-Blatt.

For some years the American Philatelic Association has had a special commission for philatelic literature, currently consisting of Messrs Stone, Aldrich and Loy. Every year this commission reports on the literary production of the previous year from all over the world to the General Meeting of the American Philatelic Association, a meeting which is however not so well attended as ours. This report, along with the other proceedings is printed in the next edition of the Yearbook of the American Philatelic Association. This seems a very good arrangement to me.

I would be out of order if I did not mention in this lecture Trade Counsellor Moschkau, who worked with success in all fields of philately during the seventies. During these years he concerned himself with such zeal with everything concerned with postage stamps that he was widely accepted as the representative of German philately even in distant countries. Moschkau was not only himself a remarkably many – sided writer, as well shall see later: for the first time to then he took exact details of philatelic printed material and gave special service in cataloguing the literature so that as has been noted he launched literary research.

Visitors to our XVII German Philatelic Meeting in Regensburg will certainly share my pleasure at the fact that as well as Senf, Kohl and the advocate for private postage stamps Sternheim, four German philatelists have joined us today, all of whom have produced highly praised works on postage stamps, which I shall deal with later in the appropriate place. They are Lieutenant-Colonel Kloss of Dresden, A. E. Glasewald of Gössnitz, Captain Ohrt of Spandau, and Hugo Krötzsch of Leipzig. Another guest has joined our celebration from a long way away, namely Murray Bartels of Boston, who has performed great services for philatelic literature in the United States. I will recall here only the two first-class works recently published by him on the American cover of Berthold and on the stamps of the Philippines.

Philatelic literature can be divided into three main groups, books, magazines and special publications. The last includes society and occasional publications, price lists, possibly also calendars, address books, Black Lists and the like, though these could also be classified as books under the heading of General. The magazines can be either technical, advertising or society papers. Literature does not include, or only dubiously, preprinted or even permanent albums, or other special printed aids and formularies, though they may be very useful, such as the exchange book by Gustav Schmidt and the statistics of my collection by Karl Hudetz of Vienna. I shall only deal here with the third, or first, major group, the books, which I consider to be the most important. The books can again be divided into three groups according to their contents: General Handbooks, which in my opinion include catalogues, and Monographs – i.e. individual works – on postage stamps and cancellations.

The general group would include everything not directly dealing with postage stamps. It thus includes works on philatelic literature, as I already mentioned, then those dealing with the history of Posts and philately, with a subdivision for controversies on the invention of postage stamps; then come Textbooks and guides to postcards, then books on trials, new printing, forgeries, offprints, watermarks, works on the changing uses of cancellations and private stamps, also actual works on cancellations, and finally possibly, address books, Black lists, pocket books, calendars and the like. I have not had much to do with the publishers of this last group, and will not go into details about them as they only have value for a limited time and should be looked at from a different viewpoint than the other, so to speak real book literature.

Postal history has been dealt with by Veredarius in the Buch von der Weltpost, and by Schweiger-Lerchenfeld in the new Buch von der Weltpost in 1901, Baron Arthur von Rothschild, Chairman of the Société Française de Timbrologie of Paris from its foundation 1874-80, wrote a History of the letter Post, 1873, and Note on the Uniform Rate of Post on Letters and the creation of Postage Stamps in England, 1872, The Penny Post, 1872, Paulian, The letter Post, 1887. The Queens Head appeared in 1889, The Penny Postage Jubilee London, 1890, Finke, History of the Penny Post System 1890, Dieckmann, Postal History of the German States, 1896.

A history of philately was given by Moschkau in his work on watermarks in 1871, and he published a pamphlet under this title in 1879. Suppantshitsch gives a history of philately in his bibliography. Eberhardt of Valparaiso wrote a Historia de la Filotelia in 1890. Perhaps we can also include here three books by Dr. Thebussem, which I find in the library of the Dresden Society; also Unger, History of the Postcard with special reference to Germany, 1881. The most interesting chapter here is the discussion of whether Sir Rowland Hill, the reformer of the English postal system or the bookseller James Chalmers of Dundee in Scotland invented the adhesive postage stamp. Probably neither of them invented it: it was taken over from some other function. Anyway, from 1881 to 1891. There was a tidal wave of papers dealing with this controversy, mostly by Patrick Chalmers, who wanted to have his late father recognised as the originator of the adhesive postage stamp. In our country von Gündel has dealt with this claim in a very lively but perhaps rather one-sided manner.

The first guide to philately was given by Suppantshitsch's Leitfaden der Philatelie in 1880. The second unchanged edition appeared in 1890. Also from Suppantshitsch comes Grundzüge der Briefmarkenkunde published in 1895 by the Weberschen Sammelverlag publishing house. Dr Brendicke wrote the Kund von der Postwertzeichen in 1889, and in 1901 this was used by Der Briefmarkensammler as Volume II of the Illustrierten Taschenbücher für die Jugend, published by the Verlag der Union of Stuttgart. Also in 1889 appeared the Lehrbuch der Philatelie by R. Krause, and the Vade-mecum des Philatelisten by G. Finke; the second 1891 edition of this was retitled Katechismus der Briefmarkensammler. I will close my survey of introductory books on philately in German with the one by the two pathfinders O. Jeran 1890 and C. Beck 1898; the Leitfaden der Briefmarkenkunde by the Senf Brothers in three editions in 1891; Schidlof Was Muss der Briefmarkensammler Wissen? in 1904; and for the sake of completeness also A. & G. Ortleb, Der Münzen- Siegel- und Briefmarkensammler. 1885. Suppantshitsch's first work was the first Textbook not only in German, but generally, and was published in instalments over two years by Theodor Haas in Illustrierten Briefmarken-Journal was the fullest and best in this field. In the French language I will mention Moens, 1882, Dr. Legrand 1894, Flandrin 1892, Bossakiewicz about 1895, and Legoue 1899. English textbooks include the very good one by Evans, Stamps and Stamp Collecting, 1st edition 1894, second 1898; Hardy & Bacon, The Stamp Collector in a Collectors' Series by George Redway, appeared in 1898; Nankivell Stamp Collecting as a pastime, 1902, Hardy Stamps Worth Finding 1904, and Hinton 1896, and Oliver, Firth, Holman, along with ABC of Stamp Collecting by Melville 1904. Finally we might mention What Philately Teaches by John N. Luff in New York, and the Italian Dizionario by Gelli in 1894. As a means of instruction we might mention the statistical and comparative tables compiled for philatelists by A. Keller, the chairman of the Munich Society for Philately, 1884. Along with the textbooks I feel compelled to mention Sprachwissenschaft in der Briefmarkenkunde by Kausch, two editions 1886 and 1891, the very good book for young people by Crome-Schwiening, Fritz der Sammler, which appeared in three languages in 1899. Der Briefmarkenkönig by Beauregard and de Gorsse, and Markenmüllers Philatelistische Berichte by Louis Knorr, 1894. I will also deal here with colour charts about which there has been controversy for so long. Most of us will remember the eight years of colour tables published in the Illustrierten Briefmarken-Journal, The Color Chart from the old National Philatetical Society of New York, founded in the year 1874 attracted a good deal of attention, as did the almost identical Standard Colour Chart from the New York firm of J. W. Scott. In 1899 Stanley Gibbons published A Colour dictionary by A. W. Warhurst. Colour charts, or rather their practical applications have become gradually less and less important: The Germania-Ring has recently promised to do something in this line, but we shall have to wait and see what happens. The problem of colour charts is often looked on as insoluble in experienced circles. The best ones I know are those produced for other aims than philately. I have picked out the Prang Standar of Color by Kast & Ehinger of Stuttgart 1899. I will not go here into the question of why colour charts are not more reliable.

As for essays, there is only one handbook by Moschkau 1875, which is naturally out of date today. On the other hand, our greatest German collector, who probably has the most extensive existing collection of essays, Martin Schröder of Leipzig, gave us a splendid work last year. This consists of the pictorial reproduction of the essays in 72 tables with details of their typography and finally their ludicrously low price of 8 marks. We also have descriptions of the items shown from the well-known expert on essays, A. Reinheimer. In connection with this I should like to repeat my earlier wish that the societies in particular would not neglect this opportunity of producing a valuable and useful work. In dealing with essays, even the smallest societies would find material in their members' collections. Schröder thus deserves our special thanks for producing his pictorial material. We can estimate roughly how much money is consumed in the production of such a work from the details I gave at the beginning of the price of the Mirabaud & de Reuterskiöld work on Switzerland. The individual collector would also do well to get hold of this pictorial collection of essays as it is most important to have them for comparison and study.

In 1892 official Counsellor Dr. Kalckhoff published a book on new issues, and there was a new edition in 1893. This met a real need and is highly valued. Its contents are slightly extended in the English translation by Hilckes 1893. In 1894 Piet Lataudrie also published a work Les Réimpressions et leurs caractères distinctifs as a special supplement to the Gazette Timbrologique. I think that in the book catalogue of the Dresden Society, the one I know best, has a small mistake here since it ascribes this work falsely to Dr. Legrand, in no. 222b p. 48. In 1899 appeared Bacon's Reprints, the latest but perhaps not necessarily the best book on reprints.

Right from the beginning philately was concerned with combating forgeries and on the other hand to follow the correct path. This is shown by Moens's, 1862 pamphlet De la Falsification des Timbres-Poste, which included an index of essays. According to Suppantchitsch, three further volumes of forgeries were published in England in 1863 and 1865, one by Lewes & Pemberton, and the others in 1865 by Dalston and by Sourton of Hammersmith. In 1879, the recently deceased Paul Lietzow founded his philatelic reputation with the issue of a short but very learned little work, Schwarzes Buch der Philatelie oder Neudruck und Fälschung. Since then only one person has tried to put out a handbook on forgeries on a large scale, and that is the English clergyman Robert B. Earée. The first edition of his Album Weeds, appeared with 500 pages in 1882, the second of 750 pages in 1895, and has sold out, and a third is in preparation according to the publisher Stanley Gibbons. The Germania-Ring, under Captain Ohrt, intends to produce a German handbook of Forgeries, but has come up against the objections of experienced and knowledgeable philatelists, who predict no success for it, since handbooks of forgeries, like colour charts, only have limited significance.

Watermarks were dealt with in 1867 or 1864 by Dr. Legrand under his pseudonym Dr. Magnus, then Moschkau in his first monograph in 1871, with new editions in 1875, 1878 and 1880. In 1890 Trillich had a small prize work on watermarks and their recognition published by the Magdeburger Vereins. Other shorter works have appeared, some as independent publications, some as part of other works. For example, the work on Barbados by Bacon & Napier includes a description of the paper and star watermark. To this I will add the only details on perforations known to me, in the work by Bacon & Napier on Grenada. Although this only deals with the perforations on English colonial stamps printed by Perkins-Bacon, it is still very instructive as it includes illustrations of perforations and perforating machines. A knowledge of the processes involved in perforating stamps will be very useful for philatelists, and will shield them from many mistakes.

Surcharges were dealt with in 1885 in the Proceedings of the Bayrischen Philatelistenvereins by Haas and Dr. von Klenze, in a separate supplement to the Society proceedings. In 1896 Gottschalk produced a special reprint from Der Philatelist on this topic.

I will now deal with the works on cancellation marks, private postage stamps, Russian Zemstvo stamps etc. although one could also justify covering them in handbooks and special works, particularly when I consider the prevalent trends in Germany today with works on cancellations predominating over those on postage stamps. To my mind the two do not go together; cancellations are a separate topic. County Court President Lindenberg agrees with me on this, as on other topics. They are also dealt with in books on stamps by French authors in particular, which will be mentioned later, with Moens and Roussin prominent. A catalogue of German cancellations was published in 1880 by Dr. Perlep, Budapest, and in 1896 Artur Wülbern issued an illustrated Preis-Katalog der Telegraphen- und Stempelmarken and cancellations for the individual German states, and another for Austro-Hungary. For France, Yvert & Tellier have recently published a catalogue of cancellations compiled by Forbin L'Hoste and another was published by the Revue Philatèlique française for the Parisian firm of Gilbert & Köhler. The latter is the son of the Chairman of our Cologne Philatelic meeting. I will also mention Guenin, Historique de Papier Timbrée et des Timbres Fiscaux Mobiles. A few years ago the firm of Morley in England issued catalogues of cancellations, of which we may mention the Morley catalogues of a) Great Britain, including stamps, b) British colonies without stamps and c) probably the only existing catalogue of telegraph stamps. The same firm issued Fulcher Spain and Colonies, including Occupation stamps, Lundy, Great Britain revenue stamps, Lundy Great Britain embossed dead stamps. Also, Lundy, Mexico 1890 from the firm of Mekeel. Also Revenue Stamps of South America. In 1874 Philippe de B., really Bosredon, published Timbres Fiscal Mobiles de la France. In the same year the Scott catalogue appeared: In 1877 Trifet of Boston published Descriptive Price Catalogue of all Nations. In 1878 came the catalogue by Walter Lee Brown. Without claiming comprehensiveness I will also mention Rich. Some Notes on the Telegraph Companies of the United States, their Stamps and Franks, 1900; Toppan, Deats & Holland in a publication from the Boston Philatelic Society, Historical Reference List of the Revenue Stamps of the United States, 1899, which preceded a similar work by Adenaw. I will also mention Sterling, Catalogue of the Revenue Stamps of the united States, 1888, and will close this section with a very fine work published a few weeks ago by the Philatelic Society of India: The Adhesive Fiscal and Telegraph Stamps of British India, by C. S. F. Crofton & Wilmot Corfield.

Private stamps are the province mainly of us in Germany, and after us the Scandinavians. Others that can be classed here are what are called Postmasters' stamps and for example the Wells Fargo of United States. Glasewald did a great deal of work on the German private stamps in the eighties. We have from him catalogues of the stamps in 1887 and 1888, and of the entires in 1888. In association with the now deceased teacher Otto Sattler and the Director F. Wagner, the present Chairman of the revived society for Collectors of Private postage Stamps, he produced the handbook for German Private Postage Stamps in 1892, though it only got as far as Hannover. In 1888 appeared a catalogue of the German private postage stamps by H.

Radenhausen from Sauer in Mährich-Ostrau. In 1902 Sternheim comes into the picture with his catalogue of the German private postage stamps, to which he added a first supplement in 1904. In 1895 a work by Tiffany on the St. Louis stamps was published by C. H. Mekeel. In 1882 appeared Coster The Private Posts of the United States of America in two volumes. The same author had written in 1877 on United States locals. From 1883 we have Les Timbres Municipaux d'Italie by Charles Diena.

Next to the country stamps we have the college stamps of Oxford and Cambridge, an elegant work by the Reverend Hayman Cummings which appeared in 1905. In 1901 H. L'Estrange Ewen published an elegant self-promoting work on the English railway letter stamps. He published an abridgement and supplement with prices in 1904.

The Russian Zemstvo or rural stamps were first dealt with by Count S. Koprowski in French in 1875. He then found a co-worker in Lübkert, who was then living in Hamburg in 1882, and in the American Herrick for English, and the Russians Ludowsky, 1888, and Krewing, 1889 for the Russian language.

I now come to the second principal group, that of the handbooks, to which we can add the catalogues in my opinion, although there are basic differences between them. With handbooks, scientific accuracy of detail is the important thing; with catalogues it is the prices. Despite all the efforts of the idealists, philately has been for years under the shadow of commercialism so that the expensive handbooks, sometimes – how awful! are completely different from those price catalogues which are yet better and better and more scientific. 40,000 prices and more is the lure by which more than 100,000 catalogues are disposal of year by year, as Theodor Haas informed us last year in one of his two fine contributions. Are there really much more than 1000 copies of the best of the book literature, minus albums, sold altogether in the entire world? I think I am hardly too gloomy if I answer with a no.

The oldest handbook, or more correctly predecessor, is a little work in German by a philatelist whom both France and Germany can claim as their greatest. Oskar Berger-Levrault was born in Strasburg and died two years ago in Nancy. Suppantchitsch informs us that on 17th September 1861 he produced a lithographed private catalogue for distribution to his philatelic friends, and this is the oldest printed philatelic work. It has 12 quarto pages with details of 973 postage stamps and ran to twelve constantly enlarged editions up to 1864.

When I come to handbooks in the German language, three items of philatelic literature stand out as landmarks I mean the first German Handbook by Berger-Levrault in 1864, that appeared in the French language enlarged and improved in 1867. next is the Meyer-Dr. Kloss handbook issued by the Frauenbad apothecary Ferdinand Mayer in 1881, with three supplements to 1882 and five more issued by First-Lieutenant Kloss up to 1893 from the firm of G. Zechmeyer, Nuremberg. The third is the Great handbook of Philately started in 1888 by the sixth-form pupil Teltz of Hale, then taken over and completed by Supreme Court President Lindenberg; After he gave it up, it was taken over from the 21st issue by the wholesale merchant J. H. Anheisser and Cavalry Captain Freiherr von Vittinghoff-Schell of Dusseldorf; originally in conjunction with Dr. Kalckhoff. The last of the total of 37 issues was put out by the publisher Ernst Heitmann of Leipzig himself. The work was never completely finished, it only got to N. The Berger-Levrault Handbook denotes the beginning of collecting, and, still readable today, it is a striking proof of the philatelic acuteness of its author, particularly as regards new issues, forgeries, sections? etc. The Meyer-Dr. Kloss

Handbook represents the limit to which an individual can still master the entire subject, and then only someone as learned as Ferdinand Meyer. The third, the Great or Lindenberg handbook, shows how a large increase in postage stamps had led to a proportionally still greater increase in the number of collectors, and how numerous members of societies had devoted such intensive scientific research to their hobby that the results could no longer be kept in one head, and perhaps not even be covered exhaustively in a major compilation. The impossibility of making the Great handbook cover everything explains why we are now in the age of the monograph, the individual statement. Of these, the most brilliant product of the German philatelic literature was Hugo Krötzsch's Handbuch für Postmarkenkunde, with its outstanding art tables. Unfortunately it has been some years since the last new volume appeared, another proof of the unfortunate lack of interest on the part of collectors and societies. These four works, or rather the last three, since the Berger-Levrault book is now only randomly available, should belong to every society, however small, and to every collector willing to spend a hundred marks a year on his own collection, especially since the Meyer-Dr.Kloss and the great Lindenberg handbook are now available at reduced prices.

If we now look back to the period of the '60s, we find there a series of handbooks, often under the name of catalogues. Students of philatelic literature and literature collectors fall out about their priority and are delighted when they have the good luck to find an older catalogue somewhere. According to Suppantschitsch, Potiquet from the Paris firm of Laplanche in 1861 is the oldest catalogue put on sale. The one from Berger-Levrault 2 months earlier was only given away, but served as the basis for Potiquet's. The next was Moens' in the year 1862. In 1863 appeared his first volume of illustrations, which can compete with the best in this field. The Moens catalogue went through 7 editions, in 1862, 1869, 1871, 1877/78, 1883, 1891, and consisted at the last of four volumes: Letters and Telegraph stamps, Illustrations, Cancellation marks and Entireties. The Moens handbook was from the beginning and is till today the first and most influential work in philately, and thus is also specially recommended for purchase. After the death of Moens, who is justly celebrated as the greatest philatelist, the handbook along with stock of stamps was transferred to Ruben of Copenhagen, from whom it can be bought at a very moderate price. The rest of Moens's works however can still mostly be obtained from J. B. Moens in Brussels. They are however not cheap. In 1888 the Internationale Philatelistenverein in Dresden and the Bayerische Philatelistenverein in Munich planned a German translation of the Moens work, but the plan foundered for lack of sufficient preliminary orders.

I shall ignore the oldest small German catalogues, they are often hard to distinguish from price lists. However, I will follow Suppantschitsch in naming the following: Tramburghs-Erben Hamburg 1862, Durrsche Buchhandlung Leipzig, Beyfuss Hannover, Priebatsch Breslau, Zschiesche & Köder – Leipzig, and Wuttig Leipzig, all from 1863. The very beautiful, much enlarged coloured pictures of stamps published by Rühl of Leipzig in 1864 deserves particular mention. The most widely used in Germany has been Moschkau's handbook, which has always been published by the firm of Senf in Leipzig, for the first time in 1874, then in 1876, 1877 and 1880. the fifth edition in 1884 was produced by the well-known chairman of the examinations board, postal secretary Waldemar Herrmann of Berlin. The Brothers in 1888. For the 7th, 1891, R. Senf produced the first volume on Stamps, Cover and Postal Wrappers, and Theodor Haas the Second Volume on Postcards, Postal Packet Addresses and Postal Undertakings. A postcard handbook by Louis Senf appeared in competition with the latter in 1891. S. Friedl used this division much earlier in his catalogues: he published Stamps in 1877, Postcards 1878, and Covers and Wrappers also in 1878, with these supplementary catalogues to 1880. S. Friedl published a more extensive catalogue which did not use this division. His world Post appeared in instalments in 1883 and 1884, but only got up to the letter J. In 1880 Lietzow followed the plan with the first part, Stamps, of his handbook of Philately. The second part, Entires, followed in 1882, in 1885 the 3rd, as a supplement on postage stamps, and in 1886 the 4th as a supplement on entires. In 1888 there was a second edition of the first part Postage Stamps: Lietzow's Seltenheiten und deren Preise appeared in 1884, 1887 and 1889, and could be classified as price catalogues. To these we might add the catalogue of the stamp collection in the Reich Postal Museum by Lindenberg, the learned Legal advisor to the Reich Postal Museum. There is also The Tapling Collection of Stamps and Postal Stationary at the British Museum by Fred J. Melville 1905. Of the French handbooks I will mention Pierre Mahé 1863, Baillieu 1863 and Maury 1865. Messrs Mahé and Maury are still active in philately today, and their books have gone into numerous editions. Maury's section on cards is particularly good, and its 43rd edition appeared in 1904. The Roussin catalogue also included cancellations and appeared in instalments as the main content of L'Ami des Timbres from 1874, in such a way that when the original editor had reached a number containing the letter Z, he began again with A the next issue. This was repeated six times until Roussin's death in 1902. According to Suppantchitsch, the handbooks by Mount Brown and Dr. Gray, the Director of the British Museum appeared in England in 1862, as well as that by Booty, the first with illustrations, and several others. The latest number of The Philatelic Record of June 1905 deals with this Booty book, giving title and pages, and state that this catalogue dates from April 1862 and thus must be the oldest English one, not that by Mount Brown as has been assumed hitherto. The account of Booty and the contents of the old introduction make very pleasant reading. The Gray catalogue went through six editions till 1876, and is a model of the kind, though it had a worthy rival in Pemberton's Handbook, first edition 1874, second 1878. The third major English handbook was by Major E. B. Evans, and just appeared in 1882. I was first called a catalogue, then in 1885 a handbook. The handbook by Oppen in 1865 was continued by Dr. Viner and went through 20 editions Suppantchitsch again says that in the United States the first handbook is that by A. C. Kline in Philadelphia 1862. I will also mention the names of Lincoln London, J. & A. Fischer Christiania (Oslo), Croiser-Haag, Seebeck New York, Durbin and Durbin & Hanes Philadelphia, and Bogert New York. With the Catalogue for Advanced Collectors by Collin & Calman 1892/1901 from the firm of Scott Stamp and Coin Co., the Americans offer something quite extraordinary and inimitable. They have also provided a magnificent work, that was completed in two years. However, much of the original plans was gradually abandoned, so that the number of art plates, though perfectly brilliant and sometimes in colour, was limited to 235. This is a very good work, and worth purchasing if the high price of 25 dollars is not a deterrent. The aim of publishing a supplement seems to have been abandoned for lack of subscribers, at least I have had no further answers to my enquiries.

Postcards were often treated as a separate branch of collecting, the first time by Dr. Kloss, Verzeichnis und Beschreibung aller Postkarten mit Nachträgen. Prietsch did the same for postal covers in 1875. Unfortunately only the first volume, Europe, was published of the most outstanding work Catalogue des Cartes Postales by Campbell & Schöller, 1889. All About Postcards was written by W. J. Scott in 1903; this is not however the well-known New York dealer but a gentleman of Leeds in England, other catalogues or handbooks on postcards are those by Frey, London, 1885, Bogert, New York, 1889 and Watson, New York, 1889.

If I talk here of catalogues in conjunction with handbooks, I must say in advance that catalogues followed on from dealers' price lists, and that in earlier days the expression catalogue was used interchangeably for a handbook or a dealers' price list, so that it is not usually possible to tell from the name alone without examining the book which of the two it actually is, what we call catalogues today originate from the firm of Senf Brothers in Leipzig 1892, with their Illustrierten Postwertzeichen-Katalog. This shows a characteristic pattern in that it does not completely ignore science, but its principal object is above all to make everything readily accessible and give for everything a monetary value and a price, usually the firm's selling price, with estimates for individual pieces. The Senf catalogue was the right book for the overwhelming majority of philatelists, concise, good, cheap and what is most important giving tens of thousands of prices every year, so that everyone could tell from the latest Senf what his prized stamps were worth. An unexpected result was the payment of Richard Senf, the proprietor of the firm of Senf Brothers, for this Successful work. It was also unheard-of in philately and on the book market to have the annual sale of 25,000 copies of a book that nobody was compelled to buy. Altogether there were about 300,000 copies in 14 editions. It is particularly worthy of note that the firm retained its section on entires in contrast with all other catalogue publishers, with the single laudable exception of Maury in Paris. This entires section has been most recently under the careful hand of Dr. Kalckhoff, the Chairman of the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub. Whatever catalogue has appeared since, from whatever country and in whatever language, has an unmistakable resemblance inside and out to their Leipzig predecessor. Before the Senf catalogue Anslem Larisch of Munich ruled the field. His widow and son are taking part in our meeting today. His catalogue of postage stamps, which he himself only called a price list, appeared in six editions from 1887 to 1893. Price-hungry philatelists waited for their Larisch with the same tension that they have today for the latest edition of their favourite catalogue. The latest edition of the Larisch catalogue was prepared by Dr. Rommel. Theodor Haas also worked on it, as he does today on the Senf catalogue, when he moved his sphere of operations from Munich to Leipzig in 1890. The Larisch catalogue of postcards in 1891 especially is due to him. Before the philatelist Larisch put out price lists, what are called the special offers from Dr. Vedel and then from Ruben in Copenhagen acted fairly generally as a philatelic exchange list. A number of competitors to the Senf catalogue appeared in Germany, such as the handbook from Heitmann, written by Paul Lietzow 1894/95 and 1895/96, the Kohl catalogue since 1900, and the Baumbach catalogue, which was however much smaller in the same years as the Hartmann, the Kohl catalogue was preceded by a fine catalogue in album form of Germany, Europe and the English colonies. The Kohl catalogue, for stamps alone is more a handbook than a catalogue, since it gives all possible scientific details with marvellous accuracy, and has many advertisement, and naturally also has the price for each and everything. It is brilliant and is particularly highly esteemed by scientific collectors. Overseas, the two most extensive catalogues are those from Stanley Gibbons in London, which has two volumes, British and foreign, but has unfortunately given up entires since 1902, and the Standard Catalogue of the Scott Stamp and Coin Co. of New York. Both have existed as handbooks or price lists since 1866 and 1868, but later took on the format of the Senf catalogue. Naturally there is also in England a whole series of smaller catalogues, such as those from Whitfield King & Co. in Ipswich and Bright & Son in London. In America, Mekeel, J. W. Scott and Albrecht were in competition for a time. In France, the catalogue from the old champion Maury is still well regarded, the one by Yvert & Tellier of Amiens is also well liked; it also appears on the market as the catalogue of Th. Champion in Paris. The Gelli & Tani catalogue appears in Brussels. The wish often expressed by collectors for a standard catalogue has led the Société Française de Timbrologie to issue its official catalogue for the first time in 1904. it was compiled from the work of 64 philatelic authors in and outside France: Messrs Bernichon, Layus and Montader were the worker bees in this case. This is a really good catalogue, but it is not a standard catalogue as no-one is compelled to take these prices as standard. There had been a still earlier effort to compare the prices in different catalogues, the 1903 La Fare catalogue for average and expensive stamps. In England, auction results were compiled with this in view: I will mention Hilcke's Auctions Summary 1895/96, and Skipton's Auctions Epitomy 1888-96, also Auction Prices 1892-95 by R. F. Albrecht in New York. However, the price details obtained in this way are often described as misleading. Thus, all the "cheap" claims in the standard catalogue, like the overall prices for world postage stamps and various others are simply not possible. Earlier, catalogues by Barbarin, Robert, Lemaire and Planus in France, and by Belin in Belgium, were esteemed. The Jaman and Champion catalogue appeared in Switzerland, and the Gelli Dictionary already mentioned, in Italy. For many years the good Galvez catalogue has appeared regularly in Spain. This also has a wide circulation in Spanish-oriented areas outside Spain. The thick price lists from our major dealers can be included naturally here, as they are catalogues to a certain extent. However I will not try to decide how far, since I have not studied the topic enough to be certain about it. However we see to our delight there are many gentlemen coming up behind us and we are all ready to help you if you will only give us your address, and you will always get good service from our genuine dealers when you buy.

I mentioned just now the third division of our philatelic library, the special works on individual postal jurisdictions, or individual issues, or even individual stamps. Since time is extremely limited, I shall have to be as brief as the material allows, since the monographs are our best books as regards both content and format. I will first mention that there is work dealing with the stamps of all Europe, begun in 1891 and finished recently by the author Westoby, and then start with Germany, and will again give first place to the Handbuch der Postmarkenkunde with its own photographic tables from the firm of Hugo Krötzsch. We also have from him an illustrated catalogue of the postage stamps of the German States 1896. This is the best and cheapest that I know: it costs only 1 mark. I think its possession is as necessary for every collector as a catalogue. This book was written in a competition with Dr. Rommel's Spezialkatalog Deutscher Postbezirke, which again had a predecessor in the Old Germany Catalogue of Dauth of Frankfurt; Gobbert 1891 can also be mentioned here: Die Briefumschläge der Deutschen Staaten by Lindenberg appeared from the Krötzsch firm 1893-98, but it did not manage to raise much interest in entire collecting or the possibly most interesting subject of our old German postage stamps, but it is such a fundamental work that it should not be absent from any society library or from any serious old German collection. Unfortunately the author has been hindered by professional commitments in recent years from finishing the last two parts, Prussia and the German Reich, but it is hoped both will appear shortly and thus complete the work. In 1891 Alwin Zschiesche published a quite short catalogue of all covers, postcards and postal wrappers of the German States to 1891. In 1891 A. Reinheimer published a small two-volume illustrated work on cancellations with the illustrations in the original size. It is unfortunately out of print. The author met the need for price details with his Illustrierten Preiskatalog der Deutschen Postalischen Entwertungsarten, 1894, published by the Internationalen Philatelistenverein of Dresden, in this field we again get Glasewald, who has overseen the Society of Collectors of Stamps by Cancellations has supplied us with an index of the place, etc. cancellations of the individual German states and colonies. Six instalments have appeared so far. There is another book on the German Colonies, equally worthy of attention for its content and its philatelic interest. This is: Die Aushülfsmarken von Tsingtau und their Fälschungen, 1902, published by the Senf Brothers with Friedemann of Leipzig as the author. We should also mention the the plan for a collection of German Ships and Marine Post cancellations, by member of the board of Health Dr. Knopf, a reprint from Glasewald's Philatelisten-Zeitung, and Dr. Kalckhoff, The Postcards of the German Protectorates, 1902, and also the illustrated Special Catalogue of the German Colonial Stamps by the Senf Brothers in 1904, which really comes under the heading of price lists.

In considering the stamps of the individual German states we shall start with Bavaria, which in 1849 issued the first German stamp, the black Bavarian one-Kreutzer. Its stamps have however always aroused special interest; I will recall here only the pleasure we have today from the Elster Bavarian ground, and are delighted at the hearty welcome we have received in Bavaria. In 1880 appeared a paper by S. Friedl as a reprint from Wiener Philatelisten-Klub. A major history of the Munich postage stamps has been appearing in instalments for a year, and a catalogue of the postage stamps of the Kingdom of Bavaria by Joris & Sedlmayer, which unfortunately was broken off in 1893 when Brummer took over in Munich. In 1901, the painter A. Chelius put out his fine work, The Special Collector of Bavarian cancellations.

For Baden, a paper appeared in 1880 from the then chairman of the Vienna, now Oesterreichischen Philatelisten-Klub, Gustav Reitz, the knight of Bollheim. In 1893 there was a comprehensive work on these stamps as an offprint from Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung by Lindenberg. This was published in connection with the German Philatelic meeting of 1893 at the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub. A numbered list was put out in 1891 by the father of our Philatelic Meetings, Captain Wagner, and in 1898 appeared Glasewald's exhaustive work Die Abstempelungen von Baden.

Bergedorf was covered by Pfaff in Hanover in 1891, and in 1892-94 Dr. Rommel published four volumes on the same subject. Moens' work on Bergedorf, which was included in his 1884 Schleswig-Holstein, was cast into the shade by Kröttsch, whose Bergedorf was Section IV of his Handbook.

Brunswick of course could not be dealt with better than by Ludwig Berger of Brunswick, whose Society published an outstanding work on this topic in 1893. The roulette of Brunswick stamps from the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde Frankfurt-a-Main 1891 was the result of a controversy that stirred up a great deal of mud in its time. The question of the Brunswick roulette is perhaps the most difficult in the whole field of the old German postage stamps.

The most outstanding symbol of the Bremen stamps of Berhard Blanhuth in Leipzig is a much more extended reprint from Der Philatelist.

In 1880 appeared a paper on Hamburg from the Vienna dentist Heksch, and today we have an advertisement for a comprehensive and splendid work that the Ruhr Verein für Briefmarkenkunde von 1885 has planned on the basis of the unique collection of its chairman, Architect Vicenz, with the help of the studies by Captain Ohrt. We wish them all success with it.

As yet, Hanover has attracted no special studies. For Heligoland, on the other hand, Arthur Wülbern produced in 1892 a really good study, though it has now been superseded by the studies of Rosenberg and others. It had the further advantage of being extraordinarily cheap; it cost only 50 pfennigs. In 1897 Moens published Heligoland et ses Timbres.

For Lübeck there is a reprint of the work of the teacher Wilde, then chairman of the old society for Friends of Philately in Lübeck, from the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal 1889, and a book by Dr. Rommel which is an offprint from Postwertzeichenkunde.

Meckelenburg has been dealt with by Moens in 1879 and by Kröttsch in 1894.

Die Postmarken des Norddeutschen Postbezirks by Ohrt was in the 1894 volume of the Kröttsch Handbook, also Die Postmarken von Oldenburg by Ohrt, the author's favourite topic.

Timbres de Prusse was written by Moens in 1886, Preussen by Ohrt appeared in 1896 as Volume XIII of the Kröttsch Handbook.

For Saxony there is a work by Moens in 1879, a paper by Beschoren in München 1880, and the work by Dr. Kloss still standard today: Geschichte der Postwertzeichen des Königreichs Sachsen, 1882. The most famous German Stamp, the Saxon 3-pfennig red newspaper stamp, was given long and interesting treatments by Dr. Rommel, which appeared as reprints from the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung.

Schleswig-Holstein was given a pamphlet by Moens in 1884. In 1891 the well-known specialist A. Rosenkranz, Kiel, published the Schleswig-Holsteinische Post und deren Posthillinge 1848-1852 from his own firm, and in 1897 Die Postmarken von Schleswig-Holstein appeared as the 15th volume of the Kröttsch Handbook.

The stamps of Thurn and Taxis were dealt with by Moens in 1880, and the cancellations by Glasewald in 1884. Unfortunately this excellent book is out of print.

For Württemberg there is a two-volume work by Moens, 1881.

Now let us turn to our friendly ally the Austria-Hungarian Monarchy. Its postage stamps are dealt with in the catalogues by Eissen 1879, by Fraulein Prückler 1886, that of Rudolf Friedl 1897 and a permanent and a special catalogue by the well-known Austria specialist Eduard von Neulinger. There is another little book on the stamp of the Hapsburg Monarchy by Jaessel, which the critics did not like. In contrast there is the major work by Engineer Hans Kropf, the chairman of our 4th German Philatelic meeting in Prague, with the publication of which the Deutscher Verein für Briefmarkenkunde created in Prague in 1902 a memorial for all time, particularly since he sacrificed all his society work to this certainly very laudable aim. In 1899 the Austria-Philatelist published another outstanding work by Kropf on the cancellations of Austria-Hungary and Lombardy-Venetia. Both books should be in the permanent stock of every philatelic library. Unless my memory deceives me, about two years earlier the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, which is generally well-informed about literature published something in the Magyar language on Hungary by Count Dessewsky. The little work on the Stamps of Austria by R. Croome is not well known.

Swiss Stamps have had a greater number of publications than those of any other country. The first was a very sound work on cantonal stamps, 1879, though only a typescript. It was by the recently-deceased Züricher Adolf Schulze who was the first special tester and also published first rate articles on Switzerland in Der Philatelist. In 1889 the special catalogue by de Leman appeared in French and German, then in 1889 and 1890 the cantonal stamps and their forgeries by Baron de Reuterskiöld, again in French and German. In 1890 came Das Handbuch der Schweizer Postwertzeichen mit Beigabe von Postamtlichen Erlassen by Hans Kirchhofer. Also in 1890 came the handbook from member 1 in St. Gallen, otherwise Otto Pfenniger, now living in London. In 1893 came the most useful work on Swiss stamps 1843-54 by Cavalry

Captain Baron von Girsewald of Zürich. This was an offprint from Postwertzeichenkunde. Mekeel of St. Louis published an English translation of it in his Philatelic Journal of America, which also exists as an offprint. Die Schweizer Postentwertungs-stempel 1850-54 have been dealt with by Otto Pfenniger. In 1850 a book with four authors appeared in Zürich: Die Entwertungsarten der Schweizerischen Briefmarken 1843-63, with special imprints used on letters at that time. The four authors have only given the initial letters of their surnames, or first names. I have it from Daeniker of Zurich that this is first-rate. All these works have naturally been cast into the shade by the outstanding work mentioned at the outset of my paper, that by Mirabaud & de Reuterskiöld with contributions from Chenevière. "Swiss Stamps, 1843-62" is the finest book we have in philately, but also the dearest, as it costs 120 marks. There are 500 numbered copies of it, 200 in French, 150 in German and 150 in English.

There was a book on Luxembourg by Moens in 1879.

The main item for the Netherlands is a scientific work from the Nederlandsch Vereeniging van Postzegelverzamelaars. They published this standard work in four parts: Netherlands 1894, Dutch Indies 1895, Surinam and Curaçao 1895. The principal author of this, M. J. Mijer, published a work on the Dutch East Indies stamps of Batavia in 1889. Designs and trials of the Netherlands were described in 1898 by Jonkheer van Kinschot, plus a supplement. There is a very fine illustrated book on the Netherlands cancellations by Schreuders 1897.

Belgium has been dealt with in two volumes by Moens in 1880

A study of Denmark by Customs Controller O. Riise, the chairman of the Kopenhagener Philatelistenklubs appeared as a special reprint from Postwertzeichenkunde 1893; this dealt with cancellations. In 1897 the Kopenhagener Philatelistenklub itself put out a catalogue in Danish on the stamps of Denmark, Iceland and the Danish West Indies. In 1901 Koefoed put out an official work. Dansk Postfrimærker 1851-1901, which is quite remarkable with examples of official new issues, nevertheless I will not say that these details are perfectly satisfactory from the philatelic standpoint.

There is a similar excellent official work, also including new official issues to be published by the Sveriges Filatelist Forening: since it will appear in a few days, I can unfortunately not show it to you today. In England I see Sven Lindhe Postage Stamps of Sweden often on offer.

Finland's interesting postage stamps have been dealt with in an 1880 paper from Heksch in Vienna. In 1896 and 1904 the Helsingfors Frimarksamlare Forening has published a handsome and commendable little work which is provided with fine tables. Haas in Berlin 1905 mentions in his textbook Die Ganzsachen Finlands by Richard Granberg, but it is quite unknown to me.

The stamps of Russia have been given an exemplary treatment by Dr. von Bochmann of Riga as a foreign volume of Kröttsch's Handbook. In 1893 appeared Timbres de Russie by Moens.

Rumania was dealt with in 1894 by Roggenstroh on commission from the Vereins für Briefmarkenkunde Magdeburg. As early as 1897 Dr. Legrand published Timbres de Moldavie et de Roumanie under his pseudonym Dr. Magnus.

A work on the stamps of Serbia has been put out by its Government: I have no more details.

Glasewald gained his first laurels as a philatelic writer and researcher with Greece, under the pseudonym Erdmann. He brought order to unruly Greece with his scheme, and with his studies of Greece in many editions since 1886.

The authorities themselves put out a small brochure on the stamps of Crete in 1905.

Katalog der Postwertzeichen des Ottomanischen Kaiserreichs was the title of the excellent first work by Ferdinand Meyer in 1875.

The stamps of the old Italian states have attracted special interest from the beginning. Moens published a little volume on Naples and Sicily in 1877, and two more in 1878, one covering Parma, Modena and Romagna, the other Tuscany, San Marino and the Papal States. Pio Fabri also dealt with the Papal States in 1878. The best works are however those by Dr. Emilio Diena of Rome, the curator of the State Postal Museum and the greatest Italian philatelist. They are: Modena, in Italian 1894, Romagna in conjunction with Moens in French, 1898, and the most elegant: Sicily, published by the firm of Stanley Gibbons in England and translated into English by Evans.

Spain has repeatedly attracted attention. I seem to recall there is a good older work by Duro in 1881, but I do not know it and unfortunately can give no further details about it. In 1891 there was a very highly valued, well-designed work by Moens: Histoire des Timbres-Poste et de Toutes les Marques d'Afranchissement Employées en Espagne, suivie de l'Histoire des Timbres Fiscaux Mobiles depuis leur Origine jusqu'à nos Jours. This monograph is one of the best, if not the best, from Moens, and so it is very flattering and elevating for us Germans to find it is equalled, and perhaps even surpassed, by a German monograph on Spain. I mean the outstanding book by Major Rudolf Friederich, Die Postwertzeichen Spaniens und seiner Kolonien, published in 1894 by the firm of Dr. Brendicke, now Kröttsch. A smaller work by Friederichs with the same title was published in 1890 by the firm of Karl Cl. Sauer in Mährisch-Ostrau. The Friederichs work on Spain inaugurated a new epoch of special studies for us, both as to content and as to format, and it was a forerunner of the Kröttsch Handbook. The work made such an impression that the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub decided to present it to all their members from Society funds. Something similar was done by the London Philatelic Society and earlier by the Société Française de Timbrologie of Paris, but this good example has had only one sequel with us – the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub has never repeated it – the Deutsche Verein für Briefmarkenkunde Prag, gave all its members the Kropf work on Die Postwertzeichen von Oesterreich-Ungarn at the Society's expense. The large Stockholm society is currently doing the same with the Jubilee work on Sweden. So as not to appear unfair, I will ask whether it is not actually the same thing when at various times the Internationale Philatelen-Verein of Dresden has recommended the Kröttsch Handbook to its members, the Braunschweiger Philatelia has done the same with the big Handbook and the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub with its Festschrift, a collection of scientific papers. It should also be mentioned here that the internationale philatelisten-Verein of Dresden is the only philatelic society that has published a series of books itself, apart from the German in Prague and the Magdeburg Society. Smaller works on Spain and its colonies are the 1886 Lopez catalogue, which had its eighth edition in the Galvez catalogue, the one by Vives in 1897, of the Club Filatelico Madritense 1902, which was not so popular as the very good work, published in 1903 by the Madridider Colleccionista de Sellos, by Doctor José C. Ceballos of Madrid, with the title Catalogo Regulador Ilustrado de los Sellos de España y Colonias I will mention Bartels on the Philippines under the United States.

As far as I know there is just one small pamphlet on Portugal by Mangold, which appeared as one of the three parts issued by the Dauth Handbook on the basis of official reports – Union Postale Universelle should be its title. This Handbook only found three subscribers, which was rather too few for herr Dauth. On the other hand, the admirable Stanley Gibbons Handbooks opened the ball for Portugese India in 1893. The Verein für Briefmarkenkunde in Hamburg might well put this out in German if it can find a publisher.

For France, the first to appear in 1863 were the Histoire du Timbre-Poste et en Particulier du Timbre Français by Boyer and Histoire du Timbre-Poste by Lecroy, 1892. In 1897 appeared a fundamental work by Dr Marconnet of Nancy, Les Vignettes Postales de la France et de ses Colonies, one volume of text and one of really outstanding illustrations. This work, which was not for a long time valued as it deserved, was published like most of the following ones by Yvert & Tellier in amiens, and can be heartily recommended. One can be more critical about Signes de Controle sur les Timbres de la France 1849/99 by Dr. Valois. French cancellations also from the prephilatelic period have been dealt with by Maury & Doë. The first of these issued Marques Postales de la France et de ses Colonies 1898, with a second edition in 1899 then a supplementary volume almost as big in 1905. The work by Doë is entitled Les Estampilles Postales Françaises, from Yvert & Tellier 1900. Both books are really good. Lesser works, e.g. Schaupmeier, Katalog der Marken und Abstempelungen”, French 1894 and German 1893, and from Fremy 1898, show a relative falling-off.

With the lively interest of English people in philately, Great Britain and its Colonies have been frequently dealt with, practically always in excellent works. Particular service has been given in this respect by the London Philatelic Society, the Philatelic Society of India and the firm of Stanley Gibbons Ltd. Of the works on the stamps of Great Britain, I will name first Philbrick & Westoby, The Postage and Telegraph Stamps of Great Britain, 1881. Then Martin Wears Stamps of Great Britain, 1884, Descriptive Catalogue of all the Postage Stamps of Great Britain and Ireland by Westoby, 1891, H. Mackwood Millington & Gilbert Lockyer, Postage Stamps of the British Empire, 1894. The most important work is A History of the Adhesive Stamps of the British Isles by Hasting E. Wright & A. B. Creeke Jr., with an introduction by Gordon Smith 1899, published by the London Philatelic Society. A supplement then appeared in 1903. A smaller work on the stamps was written in 1904 by F. J. Melville, the Chairman of the Junior Philatelic Society, and is a paper given to the London Philatelic Society in March 1904 with the gracious permission of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales on the stamps of current reign (i.e. that of his father). Other smaller works were published by L'Estrange Ewen in several editions from 1893 translated into German by Frank of Frankfurt in 1894, and into French in 1896. The latest edition on stamps is dated 1904, and on entires in 1905. the plate numbers have given rise to a special literature: we find them covered in Hilcke's Complete Priced Catalogue of Great Britain 1894. From E. B. Evans in 1891 came The Mulready Envelope and its Imitations Caricatures etc. Cancellations were dealt with by Daniel 1895 and Hendy 1905. the latter closes with the year 1840. The work still appearing by Thomas Whitworth begins with 1844.

British Colonial Stamps is the title of a handsome work by Gilbert Lockyer 1887.

British India and Ceylon by the London Philatelic Society appeared in 1892. A large Handbook on the Postal and Telegraph stamps of British India by L. L. Hausburg & C. Stewart-Wilson, supported by the London Philatelic Society, is announced by the Philatelic Society of India. In 1897 and 1898 the latter published two volumes, British Indian Adhesive

Stamps Surcharged for Native States by C. Stewart-Wilson of this in 1904 an improved edition by C. Stewart-Wilson & B. Gordon Jones appeared. Then in 1899 came Bhopal by Anderson in 1900 and 1901 Jammu and Kashmir in two volumes by D. P. Masson, then the work mentioned earlier on Indian Post and Telegraph stamps by Crofton & Corfield. All these fine works are still available, with the exception of Anderson on Bhopal. The agent for the Philatelic Society of India outside India is W. T. Wilson, Birmingham the Straits Settlements with surcharges was treated by William Brown of Salisbury in 1894.

Australia and the British Colonies in Oceania is the title of the first major handbook from the London Philatelic Society, 1887. It published Tasmania by A. F. Bassett Hull in 1890: in the same year came the work by Dr. Andrew Houson, The History of the Post and Postage Stamps of New South Wales, published by the authorities in Sydney. In 1890 Robert C. H. Brock in Philadelphia published a little work on the Sydney Views, after his fellow-countryman had preceded him on this topic as early as 1884. South Australia by Francis H. Napier & Gordon Smith appeared in 1894 from the firm of Stanley Gibbons Ltd. The London Philatelic Society intends shortly to publish a new work on Australia, to which Hausburg especially will contribute, and for which he has collected official material from all the post offices. Naturally he has also contacted the bigger collectors and dealers and has reviewed their Australia collections with a critical eye.

For Africa, i.e. the British possessions there, two volumes have been put out by the London Philatelic Society in 1895 and 1900. The third is in preparation. I must mention here a work by Moens on Mauritius in 1878, and one by L. H. J. Walker & Moens on Natal in 1883, both written in the French language.

British North America was published by the London Philatelic Society in 1889, British West Indies including British Honduras and British South America by the same body in 1891. Here too belong the following volumes of the Stanley Gibbons Handbook by E. D. Bacon & Francis H. Napier: Saint Vincent 1895, Barbados 1896 and Grenada 1900.

We close with the united States of America. On this there have been three volumes, 1883 of a work by J. K. Tiffany published by Moens: Les Timbres des Etats Unis d'Amérique. In 1887 in St Louis came the History of the Postage stamps of the United States of America From the Scott Stamp & Coin Co. of New York came the Catalogue of the Stamps Envelopes and Wrappers of the United States and Confederate States of America by Collin & Calman with the help of Luff and Toppan. In 1903 we had from the same publisher the excellent work by John N. Luff, The Postage Stamps of the United State., The Plate Numbers of United States Adhesive Postage Stamps appeared in 4 editions since 1896 from J. M. Bartels and Co. of Boston. Specialised catalogues have come from Sterling, in several editions since 1880, C. H. Mekeel 1889 and a Comprehensive Catalogue for the United States and the Confederate States from Gremmel in 1896. The covers of the United States are so multifarious and are often so difficult to distinguish that they have attracted a really numerous body of writers. In 1880 Dr. Kloss published a List of Covers and Wrappers of the united States of America: Dr. Horner published The stamped Envelopes of the United States in 1879, second edition 1884. the year 1892 brought a masterwork from John K. Tiffany, R. R. Bogert & Joseph Rechert, The Stamped Envelopes, Wrappers and Sheets of the United States", published by the Scott Stamp and Coin Co. of New York, this also gave us a numbered list. In 1895 the London Philatelic Society published The Nesbitt Stamped Envelopes and Wrappers by Gilbert Harrison & E. D. Bacon. In 1897 and 1899 appeared E. M. Bartel's Complete Catalogue and Reference List of the Stamped Envelopes, Wrappers, Letter Sheets and Postal Cards. He was then in Washington. In 1904 the third edition of this Bartels catalogue, edited by the able philatelist V. M. Berthold, with the addition: also those of the Philippines, Porto Rico and Cuba. This was outstanding in both content and format, and well fulfilled its author's wish of throwing so much light on American covers that the collector can easily find his way round them. At the same time appeared Berthold's pamphlet The Nesbitt Die Varieties with Special Reference to the "Three Cents Rose".

In line with the existing political conditions, I will close here with Hawaii by Brewster C. Kenyon 1899 and Postage Stamps of the Philippines by S. Murray Bartels, F. Apthorp Foster & Captain F. L. Palmer, U.S.A. The latter made himself known to us via a book he found in Manila, a little work by Mencarini, 1896, whose title I have not yet managed to learn. There has also been a little work on Hong Kong by the same Mencarini. The outstanding work on the Philippines was by Murray Bartels. It is to be hoped that he will make the next edition, especially the artistic tables, somewhat bigger, so that it will not sell out so quickly and you will have a chance of obtaining it. I will take this opportunity to say that it really should be accepted to publish philatelic works in an edition of at least 500 copies, since editions of 200 and 300 are usually quickly sold out.

Turning to works on independent countries, I will name Friedrich Schüller: Die Persische Post und die Postwertzeichen von Persien und Buchara, this is polemical but in spite of its specialised approach it is still readable today. There are also Afghanistan, seine Post und seine Postwertzeichen by Ferdinand Meyer 1879, with a French edition in 1881, Postage Stamps of Siam by Alex Holland, published by the Boston Philatelic Society 1905, Shanghai by W. B. Thornhill 1895 from the firm of Stanley Gibbons. The Emissions of China, Shanghai, Korea and Japan was issued by W. Alfred Werner in Chicago in 1889. Les Timbres de Japon by Dr. Legrand, appeared as early as 1878, whereas the Japanese authorities themselves put out a very important work in 1894. Great Japan Empire Stamp History, the 300 examples of which were simply given away, usually to postal authorities. However, a few copies have come into commerce and have been eagerly bought. I cannot unfortunately show you a copy, but I know that Captain Ohrt and Johannes Elster both own a copy of this work, which is written in Japanese and English, Japanese origins are dealt with in Japanese Postage Stamps etc. by Kowtsoo Shokwai & Co. in Tokyo 1896.

Timbres d'Egypte et de la Compagnie de Suez is the title of a work by Moens from 1880. It is not known to me but from its price of 4d it is obviously only a small pamphlet. Stamps of Egypt is a title from the monthly literature survey of the Philatelic Chronicle and Advertiser of Birmingham. In 1902 appeared Egypt by J. C. Auf der Heide in Amsterdam. Die Administrationsmarken Aegyptens by G. Koch, Cairo, 1890 was also included in the general section.

For Mexico we have a work from the firm of Scott Stamp and Coin Co., New York, by Collin & Calman with the assistance of Albert E. Lawrence. I have found in the Dresden library a work by Marco del Pont published in 1903: Los Sobrecargos de los Sellos Postales de Mexico.

The Postage Stamps of Haiti by Fred J. Melville appeared in 1905 from C. Nissen & Co. in London. For Panama there recently appeared a Reference list of the Stamps, by John N. Luff; I will note here that the most zealous European researcher of the stamps of Panama, Dr. Dominic von Biasini of Budapest, is staying amongst us. His articles on this topic appear especially in the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal.

A list of the Postage Stamps of the United States of Colombia 1859-80 by J. J. Perez appears in the library catalogue of the Dresden Society. Timbres de Pérou by Moens appeared in 1878. This was followed in 1890 by Studie über die Postwertzeichen von Peru by Dr. Rommel, from the firm of Larisch in Munich. This is related to the philatelically very much discussed surcharges by the Chileans in their war against Peru and Bolivia, and is based on the pamphlet on this subject by the Sociedad Filatelica Sudamericana of Lima, which was for a long time the most flourishing philatelic society in South America. This book appeared in 1887 and bore the title: Catalogue Générale et détaillé des Timbres de Pérou. The same subject was treated in 1887 by J. Gutmensch of Brünn, published by Karl Cl. Sauer in Mährisch-Ostrau, and A. Huart at the order of the Netherlandsch Vereeniging van Postzegelverzamelaars. This latter has the title Geïllustreerde Catalogus aller Postzegels enz van Peru. H. J. Dauth was in direct communication with the authorities, but it is naturally not certain whether this was conclusive: it is always to be feared that only a part of this interesting material was published, since the Dauth undertaking on Peru was given up in the middle on the grounds already mentioned.

Investigaciones Sobre la Emission de Estampillas del Coronel Seminario en Tumbes en Marco de 1895 was written in 1895 by a Dr. phil. A. T. Lista who wrote to us from Chile currently provides a continuously produced and expanded History of the interesting Chilean postage stamps in individual sections. This can be ascribed to the active mind of herr. Dr. phil Jerman Greve, currently in Berlin, and his philatelic students in Chile. His scientific work can bear competition with the leading philatelic societies of the world.

Something similar applies to Argentina, where Dr. jur. Marco del Pont, has done very much the same for this country in the unfortunately ceased Revista de la Sociedad Filatelica Argentina of the in Buenos Aires. Timbres de la République Argentine is the titles of a little work in two volumes from Moens in 1882. In 1887 the Société Française de Timbrologie published a book by Dr. Wonner: Les Timbres de la République Orientale de l'Uruguay; C. Ottoni Vieira published a work in 1894: Catalogue Historique des Timbres-Poste et Entiers du Bresil. Also in 1894 came an illustrated catalogue of Brazilian stamps in the German language by Bruck in Rio de Janeiro.

This brings me to the end of my lecture. Thank you for your kind attention, and I apologise for detaining you so long. You will see however long it takes for even a cursory stroll through the rich garden of philatelic literature, even when just the books and nothing else are dealt with. I have not given individual descriptions of the books, and have hurried from country to country and from work to work with what will strike any friend of literature as a critical, one might even say superficial, manner. My account does not even claim to have named all the books that have appeared on our hobby, but it does cover the great majority of them. To get even more, I again make my earnest request: you could review the stock of albums and aids issued by the majority of our philatelic publishers. Originally I intended to devote a few introductory words to this purely practical end, but the time is already so advanced that I must leave them out, all the more so as the publishers who have exhibited here and are even present here, are quite ready to give all the desired information much better than I could.

It would probably be a good idea to have a sample collection from our very active philatelic publishing firms at every philatelic meeting. Plenty of people would see new and useful items, and might be persuaded to acquire them. I would be happy if my paper and the displays did something to increase interest in our abundant philatelic literature. I will close with the wish that the information contained in our philatelic books will lead to scientific work, in contrast to the mere accumulation of stamps, and will crystallise our hobby, the pursuit of stamps.

GERMANY'S PHILATELIC LITERATURE

As early as 1870 I gave to the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung a compilation of German specialty papers, which was followed in 1871 in my magazine by a compilation of all the German literature known to me. By the year 1874 an amendment was already required, which I published in the Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal, and today I would like to offer the honoured readers of these pages once again an inventory of accumulated literature, which has increased so much since 1871 that I hope I don't annoy you by presenting it.

The first very incomplete compilation at all of philatelic literature was made by the *Birmingham Philatelist. From Germany was listed what was known or personally owned. That same journal completed its work two years later and gave me the impetus, partially using the early studies, and considering the works kept in my philatelic library, to publish the compiled results in the magazine, very incomplete as it was. The Philatelist was followed up in the literature table of The American Journal of Philately where the author limited himself to an offering of American philatelic journals which, nonetheless, contained some very detailed information.

The preliminary works now mentioned lead to a work in the year 1874 in St. Louis (America) which, with respect to completeness and splendid presentation, stands alone in its class. I mean with that The Philatelic Library – A Catalogue of Stamp Publications of which, being of value only to the man of knowledge, only 150 copies were produced. Six sheets of large quarto size in length, it contains besides a recitation of the totality of foreign literature the most complete listing of German literature. While I reserve a review of this beautiful work and its contents for later, I should allow that it lists German literature systematically arranged and complete to this day.

All those who hold high the banner of our cause will now recognize that our literature has become a considerable one which we may regard with justified pride. Our foes also must at least admit that this "playing around", which might have expired already more than a decade ago, developed doughtily and now stands there more vital than ever and demands in competent circles the value to which it is entitled as a young field of knowledge. We owe this latter result however almost entirely only to our literature, so well developed over time, whose furtherance I herewith cordially commend to all like-thinkers, as their powers permit.

In conclusion, be it noted that, in spite of the use of the best sources and my own large library, something may have been forgotten here and there, or some errors regarding edition dates, etc., may have slipped in. Every correction is, therefore, welcomed in advance with thanks, and will be conscientiously used in following editions as occasion permits.

 Translator's note It is not known which periodical is meant by this title. There were no early publications with the title Birmingham Philatelist and The Philatelist was not published from Birmingham. However, the latter did publish lists of philatelic publications in 1867 and 1869.

Editor's note: Moschkau appeared to write from memory and seemingly gave the titles of journals and handbooks as he remembered them, rather than accurately. They have been corrected by the editor wherever possible. (BJB)

WHY AN HOW DO I FIND PHILATELIC LITERATURE?

Federation Department for Investigation and Literature

Otto Gleixner

HOW AND WHERE DO I FIND PHILATELIC LITERATURE?

At the beginning of my remarks I should like to put a warming to the effect that the search for philatelic literature is usually drawn out and difficult. Only he who in part can take upon himself many efforts and naturally expenses for travel to the corresponding institutions can find something, at times unfortunately also little or nothing at all.

Aggravating as well is the fact that philately is not a science as is numismatics. Thus, if you go to a large library or archives and state that you are a stamp collector, most of the time you do not have chance. If, however, you say that you are investigating some problems of postal history, the situation becomes more favourable and you can count on a degree of support. The study of history – in opposition to philately – occupies a higher place of value.

For the moment, a provoking question: does one require for the collecting of stamps literature at all?

Looking at many a collector, one can simply negate the question, as one who merely saves the stamps he obtains from sources, does not in fact need any. And one who puts his stamps aside without order or one who keeps stamps from his own viewpoint is not in need of any, either.

But the slightly demanding collector who desires to establish a certain order and chronology does require literature, to wit, a stamp catalogue. You may be astonished when I count a catalogue as literature, but that can easily be justified, as for instance our Michel catalogues furnish a great deal of information. Besides, they include very comprehensive and useful introductions with which not all philatelists are familiar by any means.

The topical collector, as well, will probably acquire a book which will let him read about his topic. In other words: anyone who is not at the very lowest level of stamp collecting has to use philatelic literature.

Well now, what kind of literature is there?

I do not refer to the several ways in which knowledge is imparted to us, i.e. not books, magazine articles, etc., but refer to origin, that is to say primary and secondary literature.

Primary literature is “first-hand” literature, as the name says, thus, laws, regulations, deeds, contracts, printing contracts, bills, lists. Documents as well, such as the appointment of a postmaster or happenings such as the establishment of a post office belong to this category.

These sources are authentic and therefore best liked of all, as we can trust them absolutely. This, however, applies to the sources only, because their different application and interpretation (e.g. in the case of laws) is surely influenced individually.

Everything else is secondary literature, because here a person informs about something. Even when a real investigation is involved, or when that person was eye witness, the reports are written up subjectively or else an opinion is formulated which may or may not be correct.

Where now does one find this literature?

Obviously, the post office itself is the first source one appeals to if there are records in libraries, archives, or museums. In Germany one cannot find anything at all for the period of the Federal Republic. With the postal reform and the change connected with the transformation into a stock company, every single document without exception was destroyed by all postal installations in Germany. Thus, you need not go to the nearby larger post office or the former postal service – excuse me, that is no longer the designation – to seek anything there; nothing is left. Regrettably this is a negative example that does not serve you, but you should know.

There are still, however, a few possibilities to locate direct postal documents. Outstanding stocks can be found in the Berlin postal museum. Many legal documents and a good amount of books are there, stored away with Prussian close examination. What is there goes as far as the thirties but are not easily accessible.

The former West German postal museum in Frankfurt was, of course, rebuilt only following the war, and was inaugurated as late as 1958. As a result it lacks old, growing materials, and has only what could be collected since then. Even though the main interest there is focused on the transmission of news, nevertheless one finds a considerable literature collection which can also serve philatelists.

The service library of the former German Federal postal service in Bonn was attached with the postal reform to the Telekom. One would expect to find there, in addition to official publications, of neighbouring states as well, all other documents issued by the postal service. Whether indeed and just how that library is accessible to us is a question beyond my knowledge.

The information centre which is being built by Cologne by the German stock company, supposed to be a substitute for the former service library, can be ignored. Two years ago I was told there “we are in no position, nor are we willing, to inform philatelists. We exist for the postal service only”.

Additionally, there is still the possibility to seek in the respective State libraries and archives.

Where, in fact, do you find the literature?

At this point I wish to say beforehand that philately has become strongly specialised during the last three decades, as the deluge of stamps from all countries has made it just about impossible to be a universal collector. I must add that, unhappily, the specialisation has progressed so much, due to many issues which no one can collect any more, that most philatelists no longer understand each other unless two of one mind discuss the sphere of their collecting. The fact also affects literature: the works are becoming more and more specialised and often shed light upon a tiny terrain only. The consequence is that the information one seeks is frequently so dispersed that it is found only in many different works.

If now you are in a library or in an archive, inquire at first at the information desk how the institution is organised and arranged. Do not assume that you need not know that, just because you have been at similar institutions and that you can, therefore, go immediately to the catalogue boxes. That would indeed be an error, as every institution is organised differently, has other foci and tasks and is, therefore, systematized in different ways; usually not as we philatelists might wish. Consider also that even philatelic libraries do not cover every special area because they have to include every phase of philately!

As a next step, attempt to clarify to the information desk what you seek. You must assume that you do not have in front of you a knowledgeable philatelist but a total layman – a librarian or archivist or a similar figure who thinks in very different categories, not as we do. You must clarify in clear and simple terms what your philatelic problem is. If your difficulty is understood, you will get assistance, and how and where you must seek. One thing is certain: you must search yourself – and probably a long time and in various sources. The personnel there cannot look for you, neither in catalogues nor in books; it has other tasks and has no time to help. If you yourself lack the time or the inclination to research, you need not even begin.

Libraries generally have three different catalogues: the alphabetized one, the systematic, and the subject catalogue. They are constructed in accordance with very strict library precepts which are totally unrelated to philately. The alphabetized catalogue is for each library the most important. In it, the books are ordered in accordance with the author. For us it is of no particular significance as we rarely know where something was written. We wish to know what there is about a certain area. For that purpose the systematic catalogue should apply as it indicates the works of a determined area. In the subject catalogue, finally, the works are ordered according to specific concepts. Always consider, however, that the catalogues are not arranged according to your philatelic wishes, but rather from the viewpoint of the librarian.

When now you start your search, consider that the area you seek does not in certain cases appear at all, or else under a different name. Regrettably there is not until now any binding philatelic definition or definitions, so that the same themes or topics are designated by differing names. As an example I mention here only Porto, fees, or Franko.

Clearly stated, you have to search among similar or related concepts. Consider furthermore that the titles of books or of magazines tell very little about the contents. Behind a “catalogue” or “manual” all sorts of things can be hidden. Thus, if in a certain area the title suggests an odd work, look into it, nevertheless, because it was placed there for a reason!

It is my view that in philatelic libraries at least there are at work demigods who dominate perfectly the philately from Aden to Zululand, and whose know-how is so comprehensive and unfailing that they therefore know everything and are thus able to order all works correctly. Gaps in knowledge do not exist, nor are there personal preferences or individual opinions; everything is being treated objectively and neutrally. Because this is a wish dream you must live with the inaccurate and inadequate work – from your point of view – of the library or respectively archives personnel. Those who work there cannot be specialists, all at the same time, for the Federal Republic of Germany, the old German states, China, or the pre-philately or Norway, for example. And that means, one again:

Seek – seek – and seek once more

That for one's research not just books but magazine articles must be allowed for should be self-evident. Only in these does one find the very latest discoveries, as much information never appears in books but in the specialized press only.

In this connection I wish to put an end to the frequently heard view: you have everything in the computer, and all you have to do is consult it. What can be consulted today by way of the personal computer is nothing but the data that were entered formerly on catalogue cards. Additionally, one can seek on the computer entire titles or words appearing therein, or also place of publication or dates when printed, i.e. everything belonging to correct cataloguing. To that extent it is, in fact, of help. What is not possible, however, though desired by many persons again and again, is the detailed utilization of the contents of magazine articles and even of books. Not even in philatelic libraries can a co-worker spend hours over a book in order to grasp some 20, 30, or more concepts. Leaving aside the fact that there is no one who possesses such comprehensive knowledge of the most various areas of philately. The recourse to the computer is thus limited to library data such as author, title, taxonomy, subject, etc. A rational utilization with regard to the contents is not possible today, nor in the future.

When finally you have found something, don't stop looking at once, because you might be dealing with a wrongly copied or badly interpreted contribution, or with one that is out of date. Try therefore to gather whenever possible all the information about a given area. Only then can you devote yourself to the utilization. And even then you should reach exclusively realistic conclusions and characterize assumptions very clearly as such.

BAPTISM

Isn't it strange that over the six or seven years that people have been studying and relaxing with postage stamps no-one has thought of giving a name to this attractive occupation which gives pleasure to some and fortune to others? It is impossible to accept the word Timbromania as a suitable designation. This is in fact a rather insulting term, as certain people, trying to be clever, utter in a sarcastic tone what was meant to be quite innocent. Hence it has been used so far for want of a better name but the time has come to banish it ignominiously from our vocabulary. Even more, as readers and writers we should make ourselves forget this odious expression and even blot it out of existence. However, assuming the beast to be dead along with its poison, we have to find a successor which will have nothing in common with it and will, if possible, have as many good points as it has bad ones. But where shall we find this rare bird? Since everyone can have an opinion on this serious topic and fortune favours the bold, we will take this opportunity to put our view forward.

Everyone must have noticed that the majority of new words have classical words for their roots, doubtless because of the affinity that extremes have for one another. Now as neologisms tend to borrow their elements from Latin and Greek, we too shall try an incursion into one of these languages. We already hear the voices of a hundred critics crying

"Who will deliver us from these Greeks and Romans"

We shall ignore these vain clamours and continue on our way according to the sayings of Baour-Lormian and we shall state that as numismatics took its name from the Latin numisma, a medal, and sphragistics (the study of seals) from the Greek  I seal, we too may borrow from this rich language and put forward to enthusiasts the word Philately to express the idea which the odious term we denounced above has tried to make ridiculous. Philately is formed from two Greek words:  friend, enthusiast and  (speaking of an object) free, having no charge or tax, prepaid. The substantive form is . Philately thus means: love of studying anything relating to the prepaid post.

Now the word has been released and the new-born has seen the light, we will straightaway beg our young and charming lady readers to be its godmothers, so as to increase its chances of health and prosperity. What's this, someone will say, you're talking Greek to young ladies? This is a queer way to please them and ask for their patronage? Perhaps this is not such an odd idea as you may imagine. Who knows whether the very oddity of the request might not be its best recommendation. Moreover, where can new ideas, new words ask for protection if it is not from young ladies who like new things and whose generosity is rarely appealed to in vain by the weak? Indeed, we are not attaching to the name of Greek any of the silly pretensions of Vadius in our Molière. Thus, without rashness but equally without embarrassment we solicit the approval of the most beautiful half of the human race, sure that if we get this we will soon have that of the other half

To sum up, we are not trying to impose anything: simply, the lists being open, we hope and even beg for letters on this subject, whilst stating in advance our entire readiness to follow the advice of a more-inspired Philatelist.

Translator's note I have not bothered to reproduce the Greek text from the original which has been replaced by three asterisks ***.

Philatelic and postal history literature in Westfalian libraries

PHILATELIC AND POSTAL HISTORY LITERATURE IN WESTFALIAN LIBRARIES

I had set myself the task to find out what philatelic and postal history literature is available in Westphalian libraries. The libraries were very obliging in sending me lists of available literature. Most libraries have the most recent publications on philately available.

That is great, as it presents the readers with the newest findings. This suffices for the average collector. It is more difficult for the research philatelist, who most likely specialises in a certain area or theme. Specialised literature is often expensive. There also exists an agreement between the town libraries, that each collects a certain area of science. They have libraries, which concentrate on collecting and working in specific areas. That's why it is hard to find any scientific-philatelic writings. You can most certainly request that kind of literature, which will be ordered from other libraries immediately. But the normal library's inventory does not include philatelic literature, which will satisfy scientific enquiries.

This is even worse, where postal history is concerned. Postal history is a specialised area for postal workers and a few other history buffs. You would think that at least postal history of the local area would be available. But that is not so. You might find some in local literature, but only as an add-on. The post office used to be secretive and would not part with their documents.

So the local postal history fared like a step-child. Current literature dealing with local postal history is ignored. Nobody seems to know about the Gesellschaft für Deutsche Postgeschichte [Association for German Postal History] and the bulletins of their branches, which are specialised in local and regional postal history. At least they were not mentioned to me. You rarely find the magazine Archiv für Deutsche Postgeschichte, which often deals with specific regions, in Westphalian town libraries. Philatelic magazines and periodicals suffer the same fate. Nobody seems to know them - not even the Deutsche Zeitung für Briefmarkenkunde. The libraries mentioned need to improve a lot ...

THE FIRST POSTAGE STAMP EXHIBITION

Only a few words are necessary as an explanation of the picture: “Un coin de l’Exposition Vandermaelen à Bruxelles en 1852”

The great exhibition in London this year seemed to give me the opportunity to establish one fact which is important for the history of Philately, namely that already in 1852 in Brussels, a public show of stamps as a subject for collecting had taken place.

As a boy I had seen the frame, freely reproduced from memory, in which this (probably the very first) stamp collection was displayed and that awakened in my brother and me the biggest interest so that we at that time came back to this subject again and again in our conversation and decided to also start a stamp collection. No sooner said than it was done. In 1862 this collection consisted of almost 1000 pieces and was put into an album specifically ordered for this. Each stamp was mounted in a loose relief frame and each page had a gold-edge, accompanied by the crests of the countries. The names of the countries were done in water color with ornaments, flowers, figurines, etc.

This album of 1862, with the number of the year gold-embossed on the cover, must be unique. I still have it today.

In 1863 J.-B. Moens wrote in the first year of his Timbre-Poste (page 29) some enthusiastic words about the Vandermaelen Exhibition, where nothing fascinated him as much as the 100-150 stamps at the show.

In April of the same year Moens assured me that he had seen the stamps at Vandermaelen in 1852.

Furthermore, I received a card from a book dealer Demenlenaere in Brussels who, with certainty, remembered admiring the sets of stamps at this show.

Because I was also successful finding in the still well known paper L’Indépendance Belge under the date of 24th September 1852, a note which refers to a visit by King Leopold I and his sons to the Vandermaelen Museum, this date can now be officially, in the history of philately, considered as the first public appearance of stamps as an object of collection and to verify that it was, as said before, the real reason for my participation in the London Exhibition.

Naturally it is not impossible that there was somebody before Philipp Vandermaelen as a stamp collector: Because he, as a geographer, belongs among the famous Belgians of the 19th century, it can well be presumed that because he traveled worldwide, he may have had the thought to include the stamps he saw and used, among the ethnological, mineralogical and other exotic pieces.

The fact that the Earl of Crawford in his speech, by recommendation of the Prince of Wales, mentioned my picture as historically interesting at the opening of the show in London, shows satisfactorily that England not only thought of the financial side, but also stimulated interest in all philatelic questions, and that is more than just encouraging.

A Reinheimer

Note: The original that was shown in London now has a prominent place in the famous library of the English philatelist, the Earl of Crawford.

LITERARY

Dr. Diena of Modena kindly sent us a most interesting edition of a German Technical Magazine, which has not been mentioned anywhere else, dealing with the infancy of stamp collecting.

It is a single autographically duplicated sheet, 46 x 27.5 cm. Its title, Der Briefmarkensammler [The Stamp Collector], is printed boldly in large letters across the whole top of the sheet, which is divided into 5 columns for German, French, English, Italian and Spanish. Under the title there is a subtitle for each column, which in German reads Autographischer Anzeiger der Neuigkeiten im Markensammeln [Autographic Informer of News about Stamp Collecting], new issue on the 15th of every month in the German (etc.) language. Below it follows across the whole width the name of the publisher: Otto Windisch in Nuremberg; below it the subscription price for Germany and 19 additional countries. Germany was 1.70 Mark (1 Gulden 17 Silbergroschen). The price in foreign countries was as high as 20 Piastre in Turkey, 10 Drachma in Greece, $1 in America etc. The price had to be submitted in currency not stamps. Under those statements was printed the date: Nuremberg, November 15th, 1864 in every column.

Below it followed news: Baden 1kr. on white background. Stamps of Scottish Railroad Companies. Canada 2 cents. Confederate States $1 blockade stamp. Venezuela 1½ Real and 2 Reales green of the Steamship company St. Thomas, La Guaira, Porto Cabello. Under the list of news the prices follow, specified prices are in Silbergroschen (centimes, pence, centesimi, cuartos) with same conditions.

Miscellaneous follows on the second page, containing firstly a short illustrated instruction about Austrian additional stamps which were used as return stamps in those days and secondly the news that Egypt would issue stamps, for which samples had been produced in Paris. This is continuing with correspondence varying in every column. The correspondents live in Neu Strelitz, St. Petersburg, Bukarest, Bordeaux, Le Havre, Lisbon, Port au Prince, Glasgow, London, Manchester, Borga (Finland), Bridgetown (Barbados), Turin, Genoa, Rome, Modena, Naples Palermo, Madrid, Barcelona, Valencia, Granada, Havana, but all signed with initials only.

This is followed by advertisements, in which the publisher offers an album (for Germany at 20 Silbergroschen), a cheap collection for beginners = 100 different stamps from almost all countries of the world for only 7 Thaler; single rare stamps (noted as Nr.28 of the catalogue), complete collections of Switzerland, Bergdorf, Belgium, Bremen, Hanover, New Zealand, with 15% discount, and finally for Spaniards a Windisch album with 300 stamps for 12 pesos is offered.

The name of the publisher is mentioned only under price lists by Suppantschitsch. Neither his catalogue nor his album (which contains, besides geographical and genealogical remarks, the exact spot for each stamp in a small frame) are mentioned there. Can anyone give us any information about these? Have any more issues of Der Briefmarkensammler been published and how many?

AICAM FLASH : FINAL NUMBER

We wanted this last issue of Aicam Flash to be the biggest, too. There are 64 pages, 56 more than the first issue, which came out in December 1982. So now we say farewell, not without some regrets, to this publication, which has kept us busy for almost 15 years.

The change in title, as you know, has become necessary to allow us to present a new publication, duly registered with the authorities. We are calling this new magazine Aicam News, and its goal will not be much different from that of its larger sister publication, which opened the road through the virgin territory of metered Italian postage.

For Aicam Flash and its great repository of information, we expect soon to issue an index that we do not hesitate to consider exceptional. Gianni Bertolini, with the help of Manlio De Min (who has surveyed the material in all the special numbers) and Franco Cappabianca (who has catalogued the titles and the contents of all the Aicam publications), has been working on the index for months. The result will be a book of more than 150 pages that will be sent free to all the members of Aicam in 1997.

Aicam News will continue to highlight articles and brief items, including more extensive pieces from time to time like those in our special numbers. The most important change will be to group in one publication a wider range of authors and a wider range of related studies. On the other hand, once the supply in hand has been exhausted, we will begin to phase out the pieces we had labelled "Block Notes", where a single author had offered a selection of items on various topics. While preparing the index, it became evident that such a scattershot approach made it far more difficult to gather research on any given topic. Aicam News will maintain the brisk approach and timeliness of Aicam Flash, while making more extensive research much easier.

Fortunately we do not have to plead for material because the editors have an abundant supply. That said, we always welcome new writers and the presentation of new research, especially because active participation in our publication stimulates us all and strengthens ties among members.

Aicam Flash has faithfully documented the first 15 years of our Association. Aicam News will continue to do so with energy, scope and determination: informing you of developments new and old, investigating new uses of meters, linking members with one another and with the Association. This is the only way to maintain our cohesion and hold your attention. We plan to publish on schedule and not make excuses for delays - indeed to give you always more than we promised.

Thanks to all for your loyalty to Aicam Flash. Now, welcome Aicam News with the same co-operation and friendship.

The Editor [Nino Barberis]

POLISH POSTAL AND PHILATELIC PERIODICALS

In 1984 we brought out the first volume of the catalogue entitled The Polish Philatelic Periodicals, as part of the E series of the cycle of the scientific documentation of the collections of the Posts and Telecommunications [P&T] in Wrocław.

In view of the considerable interest in this subject, the same catalogue has now been re-edited and enlarged, this time with [additions from] Polish postal periodicals as well as new titles and new years of philatelic periodicals acquired after 1984. The volume thus comprises all Polish philatelic and postal periodicals brought together by the Museum from 1921 to 1989.

At the time that the catalogue was being completed we took into consideration the publications put out by the administrations of the diverse P&T services, the postal employee unions, and finally by all the organisations of the Polish Union of Philatelists such as the central office, the regions, the sections, the circles and even the philatelic clubs existing in some of the regions of the union. For the most part these writings turned out to be in the form of mimeographed sheets as well as information bulletins, communiques and internal-use circulars. They dealt not only with organisational problems but also with fundamental questions which have deepened and broadened the knowledge of stamp collectors.

Also taken into consideration in the catalogue were several foreign periodicals containing interesting articles about the P&T. The titles of those articles and their authors' names are mentioned in the notes in the bibliography.

As the basis of the description of a periodical we have acknowledged its first edition year (its first issue) which is in the P&T Museums' library. In our catalogue we have attempted to apply the most minute detail to a bibliographic description.

The philatelic periodicals published by the Polish emigres in the United States, Great Britain, Australia, and Canada have been presented separately.

POLISH PHILATELIC PERIODICALS

During the International Philatelic Exhibition "Soephilex"-Wrocław 84", the museum's library prepared the catalog of polish philatelic journals. The catalog is a subsequent edition from the series of scientific documentation from a Postal and Telecommunication collection in Wrocław and it starts series E. This edition contains journals and collections of the library's holdings until the end of 1983. The next volume (Volume II) will contain foreign philatelic journals that are arranged in alphabetical order. Each listing contains the title, description, frequency of appearance, name and address of publisher, and the period of time the journal was published. Following the years and volume numbers are notes which include all changes that appeared during publication, i.e., change of title, publisher, and frequency of publication. Lastly, the catalog numbers are presented. We think that the catalog numbers will be helpful to many people using the museum's library.

We thank manager Helena Wiecek for her useful suggestions during the publication of this catalog.

POLISH PHILATELIC JOURNALS

The publication of philatelic journals depended upon the development of stamp collectors, post offices, and the exchange of information with those who described the collections.

In Poland, philatelic organizations began slightly after those of other European countries. Their origins were noted at the end of the nineteenth century in Małopolska (Little Poland) during the Austrian occupation. The political and social relations were more liberal there and it was possible to arrange cultural and educational organizations. In other parts of Poland, this was impossible because the Russian and German occupants forbid it.

The first philatelic organization began January 1893 in Cracow under the name, "First Polish Philatelist Club (Pierwszy Klub Filatelistów Polskich)." The founders were Maksymilian Mikołaj Urbanski, a civic philatelic leader and the owner of "Krakowski Bazar Marek Pocztowych (Krakowian Bazar of Postmarks)," and Stanisław Skapski, the first club president and Chairman of the Cracow Post Office. The development of the first philatelic organization led to the publication of the journal, "Polski Filatelista (Polish Philatelist)" in April 1894 which was published on a monthly basis by the editor, M. M. Urbanski. It was subtitled, "wylacznie umiejetnosci marek, calosci pocztowych i stempli (only markings from postage stamps and postmarks)." The journal was published from 1894-1900 with a break in 1897. The journal collapsed due to financial problems. There were too few subscribers to the journal to offset the publishing and distribution costs. Similar situations occurred later with other philatelic journals.

The second journal, published monthly beginning 1898 in Cracow was titled, "Filatelista (Philatelist)." It was the main function of the Cracow Philatelist Club. This journal was published only for one year.

The third journal began 1908 in Rzeszow. It was titled, "Filatelista (Philatelist)" and published by Alfred and Eugeniusz Szczerban (brothers) of the International Philatelist Association called, "Unia" with many breaks until 1933. The company was involved with selling foreign stamps.

Proper development of philatelic organizations in Poland began after the liberation in 1918. More collectors began memberships in different philatelic organizations thanks to Zygmunt Klemensiewicz's journal, "Filatelista Polski (Polish Philatelist)," which began in October 1919 and was published in Cracow by the company, "Filatelia" in the European standard. Here the most famous modern philatelic writers published their works. Among them were Jan Ductzinski, Stanislaw Adamski, Wlodzimierz Polanski, Wlodzimierz Rachmanow, Kazimierz Gryzewski, Jozef Biatynia Chlodecki, and Jozef Tislowitz. Unfortunately, the journal ended in 1922 due to too few subscribers. The journal, "Nowy Filatelista (New Philatelist)" published in Warsaw by Wlodzimierz Rachmanow also suffered the same fate in 1924. This journal was the main function of the Warsaw Philatelist Society and was independent and managed by amateur collectors. Wilhelm Berstein, Zygmunt Klemensiewicz (pen name: Alfred Gorecki), and Kazimierz & Tadeusz Gryzewski were also cooperating with this journal.

Other short lived journals were "Echo Filatelistyczne (Philatelic Echo)" published by Jerzy Kryzanowski in Lodz (1924-1925) and "Przegląd Filatelistyczny (Philatelic Review)" published by Ryszard Braus of the Philatelic Office in Lodz, then in Zgierz (1921-1922).

In Kielce (1924-1926), "Swiatowy Filatelista (World's Philatelist)" was published and edited by Mieczyslaw Gustaw Niznik a founder of the International Philatelist and Correspondents Club, "Mieguni." The journal was discontinued upon his death.

Journals published in 1925-1939 had a longer life span. Professor A. Laszkiewicz said that the journal, "Ilustrowany Przegląd Filatelistyczny (Illustrated Philatelic Review)" published by the Philatelic Editorial House of Henryk Kaminski in Torun and the Polish Philatelist Society in Warsaw for almost four years (June 1925-March 1929) was the most interesting because of its graphic illustrations. Besides the well-known authors like Polanski, Rachmanow, and K. Gryzewski, other lesser known authors such as, A.B. Piaskowski, Stanislaw Remblinski, Leopold Siwiec, and Stanislaw Mikstein published their works as well.

The journal, "Ilustrowany Przegląd Filatelistyczny (Illustrated Philatelic Review)" changed to "Ilustrowane Wiadomosci Filatelistyczne (Illustrated Philatelic News)" which was published from 1931-1939 by Jan Witkowski a philatelic businessman and known exhibitor in Poznan.

The longest running journal between World War I and World War II was called, "Kurier Filatelistyczny-Ilustrowany Kurier Filatelistyczny (Philatelic Messenger-Illustrated Philatelic Messenger)." This journal was published February 1924 until August 1939. It was edited by Jerzeg Zaduwowicz. He was a civic leader and president of the Lwow Philatelic Society (1932-1934). Later, he published two monthly journals, "Filatelista Bytomski (Bytom Philatelist)" and "Filatelista Slaski (Slask Philatelist)." He also published the "Biuletyn Informacyjny PZF w Katowicach (Informational Bulletin of the PZF [Polish Philatelist Association] in Katowice)."

In the journal, "Ilustrowane Kurier Filatelistyczn (Illustrated Philatelic Messenger)" (year 1933, number 98, pages 33-34) an outline was written on how to write a book on polish postage stamps by Stanislaw Mikstein. The book was edited by the publisher of the journal, "Ikaros" which was located in Bialystok. Later, the book was published in 1935 as a common work with Antoni Laszkiewicz. This was one of the most valuable achievements of polish philately during the period between World War I and World War II. The journal was an official function of the Association of Philatelic Societies. The journal, "Ikaros" published many valuable works of known polish philatelists such as, "Pieczecie Pocztowe na Ziemiach Polskich w XVIII wieku (Postal Seals on Polish Lands in the Eighteenth Century (1762-1800))" by Stanislaw Mikstein; "Stemple Pocztowe Ksiestwa Warszawskiego i Krolestwa Polskiego (Postmarks from the Warsaw Duchy and Polish Kingdom (1808-1870))" by S. Mikstein and W. Rachmanow; "Trabka i Sygnaly Pocztowe (Postal Horn and Signals)" by W. Polanski; and "Poczta Polowa Legionow (Field Post of Legionnaires)" by Jan Dudzinski. It was published from May 1926 to August 1939. World War II put an end to the journals, "Ilustrowane Kurier Filatelistyczn (Illustrated Philatelic Messenger)," "Ilustrowane Wiadomosci Filatelistyczne (Illustrated Philatelic News)," and "Ikaros."

Polish philatelists owe a great deal to the philatelic buyers before World War II. These were the pioneers of the first philatelic associations, editorials, and exhibitions. Among them were Maksymilian Mikolaj Urbanski, one of the founding members of the "First Polish Philatelist Club (Pierwszy Klub Filatelistow Polskich)" and the publisher & editor of the monthly journal, "Polski Filatelista (Polish Philatelist)"; Alfred and Eugeniusz Szczerban (brothers), publishers of the journal, "Filatelista (Philatelist)"; Jerzy Kryzanowski, publisher & editor of the monthly journal, "Ilustrowany Przegląd Filatelistyczny (Illustrated Philatelic Review)"; and Jan Witkowski, publisher & editor of the journal, "Ilustrowane Wiadomosci Filatelistyczne (Illustrated Philatelic News)."

During the occupation of Poland during World War II, all philatelic activities were discontinued.

In 1945, the philatelic organizations began to reemerge. The polish philatelic societies resumed their activities in Cracow, Wroclaw, Kielce, Rzeszow, and Tarnow. The Cracow society published "Komunikaty (Announcements)" and later "Biuletyn Informacyjny (Information Bulletin)."

In April 1945, the journal, "Pionier Filatelistyczny (Philatelic Pioneer)" was published for a short time by a Cracow company named, Pionier (Pioneer). It was edited by Professor K. Lepszy who later became the Dean of the Jajellonian University. In 1945, Wielkopolska (The Great Polish) Philatelist Club in Poznan and Lodz Philatelic Society were reactivated. These organizations began publishing a monthly journal in 1948. Wielkopolska (The Great Polish) Philatelist Club published, "Filatelista Polski (Polish Philatelist)" and Lodz Philatelic Society published, "Przegląd Filatelistyczny (Philatelic Review)" which contained a summary of the most important articles in English. Therefore, this journal was read not only in Poland but, in many other countries as well. These two journals were discontinued in 1950.

Formally, the Polish Philatelist Society in Warsaw was reactivated at the end of 1946. The society also assumed some of the roles of the former Polish philatelist associations (PZFs) in Poland (which were active between World War I and World War II) until the official Polish Philatelist Association (PZF) was formed in 1950.

A huge advance in stamp collecting, were the so called, philatelic corners, which were published in daily and weekly journals because there were no independent professional philatelic journals available. These philatelic corners were later published in professional weekly journals like "Przegląd Pocztowy (Postal Review)," and "Łącznik Pocztowy (Postal Connection)." They were also published in a monthly journal named, "Pocztowiec (Postman)" which was published shortly after the end of World War II. This journal was the main function of the Zarząd Okręgowy Zw. Zaw Prac. Poczty i Telegrafów (Administrative Division of the Postal & Telegraph Union) in Łódź. Later, this union published, "Łączność (Connection)." Presently, almost all the journals carry these philatelic corners which inform readers about philatelic news, editorial changes & corrections, and upcoming events & exhibitions.

In 1954, the PZF published its first monthly journal, "Filatelista (Philatelist)" which was later published biweekly. This was the most popular philatelic journal in Poland and was distributed in other countries as well. The publisher had many well known and valued modern journalists like, Fabian Bura, Czesław Damowski, Tadeusz Grodecki, Tadeusz Hampel, Maciej Perzyski, Cezary Rudziński, Stanisław Żółkiewski, and many others.

Shortly in 1951, the main function of PZF was publishing the "Biuletyn Informacyjny (Information Bulletin)," and in 1953, "Filatelista (Philatelist)." After a long break, in 1977 the "Biuletyn Informacyjny (Information Bulletin)" resumed publication. This journal is a direct connection among all branches within the PZF and between its members and leaders.

Between 1967-1969, the Commission of Organization & Propaganda and the Polish Philatelist Association (ZG.PZF) began publishing a monthly journal, "Komunikat Polskiego Związku Filatelistów (Polish Philatelist Association Announcement)." Independently, they published a biweekly journal, "Filatelista (Philatelist)," which was read in many countries. Almost every division was publishing their own local journal. Even active clubs of the PZF were publishing their own journal on a mimeograph (a copy machine). For example, the Bytom Club was publishing a newspaper from 1955-1961 called, "Filatelista Bytomski (Bytom Philatelist)" which later was changed to "Filatelista Śląski (Śląsk Philatelist)." The division of PZF in Katowice took over the publication of this journal in 1962 and changed the publication to "Komunikatów (Announcement)." From 1964, it was called, "Biuletyn Informacyjny (Information Bulletin)." Then, in 1974 it changed to "Katowicki Biuletyn Filatelistyczny (Katowician Philatelic Bulletin)."

The journals published by other divisions were, in Wrocław, "Wrocławskie Wiadomości Filatelistyczne (Wrocławian Philatelic News)"; in Poznań, "Wielkopolskie Wiadomości Filatelistyczne (The Great Polish Philatelic News)"; and in Warsaw, "Biuletyn Filatelistyczny PZF (Philatelic Bulletin of the PZF)." They were very clearly written and brought interesting articles and well-designed graphics to their readers. They also inserted many valuable works written by known Philatelists. Journals of other divisions such as, in Gdańsk, "Biuletyn Polski Związek Filatelistów Okręg Gdańsk Klub Marynistów (PZF Bulletin in Gdańsk-Maritime Club)," in Szczecin, "Biuletyn Filatelistyczny Okręg Szczecin (Philatelic Bulletin, Division Szczecin)," and in Lublin, "Biuletyn Informacyjny Polski Związek Filatelistów Oddział w Lublinie (PZF Information Bulletin, Division Lublin)," were also written. These local journals were published in very small quantities of 500 or less.

In 1976, the philatelic press was reorganized in Poland. Instead of the PZF Divisions publishing bulletins, they decided to publish journals called, "Filatelista Tematyk (Philatelist Themes)" in four parts. These specialized parts or themes were designed to cover almost all of the subjects of philately. The main administration of the PZF published these four different Themes: Theme A, in Wrocław, contained subjects such as, the military, environmental protection, social matters, political topics, sports, and tourism. Theme B, in Katowice, contained subjects such as, mining, chemical, metallurgy, railroad, airplane, car, communication, and space exploration. Theme C, in Gdańsk, contained all maritime subjects. Theme D, in Poznań, contained subjects such as science, culture, and art.

Other divisions also published journals such as, in Szczecin, "Młody Filatelista (Young Philatelist)" for young philatelists in Cracow, and "Informator Filatelistyczny (Philatelic Informator)" which was edited by Lucjan Piekarczyk in April 1981 and published quarterly.

Only the journal, "Biuletyn Filatelistyczny (Philatelic Bulletin)" published by the Łódź Division is still active. However, the name was changed to "Historycznobadawczy Biuletyn Filatelistyczny (Bulletin of Historical Philatelic Research)." It was originally published from 1960-1961 as the "Biuletyn Oddziału PZF w Łodzi (PZF Division, Bulletin in Łódź)." From 1965-1969 it was known as, "Biuletyn Filatelistyczny Oddziału Łódzkiego Polskiego Związku Filatelistów (PZF Division, Philatelic Bulletin in Łódź)." Currently, it is one of the best philatelic journals published in the country. This journal publishes most all of the scientific research, dissertations, and historical works. It has a beautiful graphical form and is clearly written on a European Level.

Articles written by Poles of the Polish philatelic press on immigration into the United States, North America, Great Britain, Australia, and Canada are also included. Between 1947-1948, in London, there was a monthly journal called "Wiadomości Filatelistyczne (Philatelic News)," published by the Polish Philatelic Section and edited by M. A. Bojanowicz. From 1949-1954, the Philatelic House published, "Thistle Stamps," and "Filatelista (Philatelist)" in Edinburgh. These journals published between 1949 and 1954 were the main function of the Polish Philatelist Society in Great Britain. The news and articles were published in English. From 1958-1967, they published "Komunikat Filatelistyczny (Philatelic Announcement)" and "Biuletyn Filatelistyczny (Philatelic Bulletin)" from 1967-1976. They have been publishing the journal "Polish Philatelic Review" in English since 1956.

The oldest surviving monthly illustrated journal published on immigration is the "Bulletin of the Polonus Philatelic Society." This journal was first published in Chicago, USA 1942 in English as the main function of the Polonus Philatelic Society. In Australia, the Polish Philatelic Society in Melbourne published a monthly journal called, "Bulletin of The Polish Philatelic Society of Australia" in 1959 in English. In 1974, a wonderful journal appeared in English that was titled, "Hejnal (Reveille)." This journal was published in English by the Polish Philatelic Society of Canada.

Polish philately developed under very difficult conditions that were not apparent in other countries. However, presently this level is equal to general European standards. This is a result of hard work by many talented leaders, researchers, journalists, exhibitors, and countless stamp & postmark collectors.

One can often recognize the friend of the book based upon his external relation towards it.

He looks at it differently, he takes it to his hand differently, he touches it caressingly, carefully cuts its pages, when he reads he does not indent or break its spine, after a careful reading he puts it aside on a shelf or enclosed bookshelf, he protects it from dust and the sun which when penetrated will burn and destroy it irrecoverably. After entering a strangers home, it is enough to glance at the first book which lies on the table to ascertain its condition, to recognize if this home is a friend of the book, an enemy, or if only the home pretends by its ostensible culture to cover his barbaric soul.

In this matter, books are telling us more about their owners much more often than other objects taken from their owner's immediate surroundings. They betray their passions and affections; they uncover secrets of their spiritual life and uncover their needs for thoughts and feelings.

Zdzislaw Debicki

Meaning of Ex-Libris

Ex-Libris is a Latin word which means from the library of. This refers to a bookplate, which is prepared similarly to a postmark by an artist's hand. Usually it is pasted on the inside cover of the book in the same place as the owner's signature or the stamp of the library.

Ex-Libris is a certain kind of artistic stamp of the owner's book collection and placed next to the word Ex-Libris is his name and surname or the name of the institution.

Other than letters, Ex-Libris contains drawing motifs and therefore it is also an ornament of the book. Ex-Libris motifs are always connected with the character of a book collection, profession, or interests of the book owner or his tastes.

The size of Ex-Libris is small, often similar in size to a postmark. Therefore, to compose Ex-Libris is not easy. Each part must have a purpose or the symbol describing the owner or institution together with an inscription that may be contained within miniature borders. It is no wonder that the art history of Ex-Libris is a separate field of graphic art.

Ex-Libris may appear trivial for someone but in reality this triviality was not and is not treated with disregard. It determines the contribution to the history of libraries, love of books and history of engravings.

History of Ex-Libris

Ex-Libris has his own beautiful and extensive chapter in the history of graphic art. Many scientific papers were written on the Ex-Libris topic and there are many passionate admirers and often fanatical collectors of these small "trinkets". In those collections, one could find the famous names of great artists and Ex-Libris engravers: Durer, Holbein the Younger, Cranach and others.

The Predecessor of Ex-Libris was a supralibris, which appeared in Poland in the 16th Century and was embossed on the book cover. At the end of this century Ex-Libris appeared engraved in wood- mostly as a coat of arms, enlightened magnates, high clergy, scientists, rich noblemen, churches and monasteries. In the second half of the 17th Century, the printed Ex-Libris spread and from this time its development began. The most beautiful development of Ex-Libris began in the 18th Century because of the development of librarianship and libraries in Poland.

Polish Ex-Librises are made in various styles and graphical techniques. Most Ex-Librises were engraved on wood and sometimes those small wood engravings became masterpieces. The most remarkable amongst the many Polish graphic artists and painters who were passionate about creating beautiful Ex-Librises are: Bukowski, St. Ostoja, Chrostowski, Husarski, Jakubowski, Kielesninski, Miekicki, Skoczylas, Tom, Uziebla, and Prof. Sopocki.

In Poland before World War II, the Ex-Libris was very popular in society. In 1922, there was even a journal, Ex-Libris which was for lovers of books with a special regard for bookplates.

Ex-Libris were not fashionable during 10 years of the PRL (Polish People's Republic). However, because of increased reading and the creation of serious book collections in almost every home the problem of bookplating came back.

Philatelic Book Collection

There exists a different kind of book collection depending on the interests and desires of the owner, for example: Technical, Natural Science, Hunting, Theological, Judicial, Medicinal, Theatrical, Musical, Numismatical, Philatelic, etc.

Concerning a philately only book collection, very few people own them. Only those in close circles knew about them. Such a collection originates accidentally by subscription to professional journals (national & foreign), which were subsequently bound in an annual set and every year the necessary catalogues and price lists must be renewed.

Serious philatelists studied thoroughly all the philatelic material before including them in a specialized collection, trying to learn primarily the history of the Polish Post. For that purpose they tried to obtain suitable scientific works, historical monographs, debates and investigations concerning past Posts and postmarks. Such a collection is not catalogued, it is borrowed without any obligation to return- and offers no future protection.

In the period between the wars, more serious clubs and societies had the disposition of a serious collection of professional journals and scientific works. However, because of the war some of this valuable material was lost. Fortunately, a considerable collection of philatelic literature in Polish and foreign languages exists in the Museum of Post and Telecommunication. Some serious Polish philatelists have modest collections. However, they try to make them noteworthy.

Philatelic Ex-Libris

Philatelic bookplates, besides their inscriptions, contain illustrations connected with postage stamp collecting. Usually as a main background, a stamp or postmark is shown and most often drawings of a Post coach, postilion and messenger.

The first Polish philatelic bookplate was created in 1922. It belongs to Wł. Rachmanow. He was encouraged by the editor of Polskiego Filatelisty in Cracow, Zygmunt Klemensiewicz, a big fan of not only of bookplates but also of postage stamps. The pre-war philatelic society did not have its own bookplate. The same applies to the post-war Polish Philatelic Federation (PZF). Only few philatelists who are active in the field of philately own a bookplate.

As of today we have 14 Polish philatelic bookplates. The number is modest but it is an important contribution to the rich history of Polish philately.

BOOK PLATES OF POLISH PHILATELISTS

Bookplate of Wł. Rachmanow

Printed in 1924 by the Ludowa Print Shop in Krakow, according to the design of Zygmunt Klemensiewicz. It shows in the centre a 10gr. stamp of the Warsaw City Post of 1916 with a drawing of the Polish eagle (the stamp was not issued for circulation). Below the stamp is the inscription Księgozbiór filatelistyczny Włodzimierza Rachmanowa Nr. ... [Philatelic Library of Włodzimierz Rachmanow No. ...]. The composition is surrounded by ivy leaves imitating perforations. Size 10.5 x 8 cm. Printed on heavy grey paper. There exists another type of this bookplate as a proof, located in the Ossolińeum Library in Wrocław.

Wł. Rachmanow, longtime president of the Polish Philatelic Society in Warsaw, editor of Nowego Filatelisty, author of several articles, published in the local and foreign press. He owned a big philatelic library which perished in the Warsaw uprising. Before the war he donated 634 volumes from his library to the Postal Museum in Warsaw.

In 1955 he compiled and published an article in English about the first Polish stamp of 1860 in the Bulletin of the Polonus Philatelic Society of Chicago, who published the article as a booklet for their members. His collection of Poland's N^o1 stamp is known to be best and almost complete. At the International Stamp Exhibition in New York in 1956 he was awarded a gold medal for this exhibit.

Bookplate of Wł. Polański

Zincograph made in two shades. The theme is taken from past Polish architecture and folk art. In the baroque frame we see an old post office building and a post coach with four horses. Below scattered mail, post horn and monogram WP and below that, No. At the top of the drawing is the inscription Ex-Libris, and at the bottom W. Polański. Size 11 x 8.5 cm. Printed on light-cream paper.

The bookplate was designed and printed by the graphic artist Józef Tom in Warsaw in 1926. The original drawing is in the Museum of Post and Telecommunication in Wrocław.

Włodzimierz Polański (1878-1944), outstanding Polish philatelist, researcher of Polish postmarks and stamps of 1860. Author of the large monograph Znaki i Marki Pocztove w 18 i 19 Wieku. [Postmarks and Postage Stamps in the 18th and 19th Centuries.] (Geneva-Warsaw 1922), for which he was awarded gold medals at international stamp exhibitions. He published the illustrated monographs Jak Przewożono Poczte Polską w Dawnych Czasach. [How the Polish mail was delivered in olden days.] and Trąbka i Sygnały Pocztove. [Bugle and postal signals.] He presented his collection of books in various foreign languages on the subject of philately and history of the Post, to the Postal Museum. Included in his collection was a complete set of postal circulars of the Polish Kingdom, the original sign from the Post Office in Slonim from the 18th century, also a rare publication from 1860 - regulations of the Polish Post in Gdansk (Danzig). As the curator of the Postal Museum he was instrumental in the expansion of the Museum.

Bookplate of J. Krzyżanowski

Zincography according to his own design and drawing. It depicts a modified version of his own coat of arms Dębno. At the bottom, as a enclosure to the shield – an open compass and below an open stamp album. Above the coat of arms is Ex Libris, and at the bottom on a colourless ribbon Jerzy Krzyżanowski. Size 10.5 x 7.5 cm. Printed on blue paper.

Jerzy Krzyżanowski (1885-1956), member of Zw. Filatelistów [Philatelic Society], one of the pioneer publishers in the field of Polish philately. Among the published price catalogues and postage stamp catalogues, worthy of mention is his Informator Filatelistyczny [Philatelic Directory] (Łódź, 1922). In the year 1924-25 he published and edited the periodical Echo Filatelistyczne [Philatelic Echo] in Łódź, for which he received a silver medal at the International Philatelic Exhibition in Vienna (1925), and a diploma in Moscow. He was the owner of a magnificent collection (over 5,000 volumes) of philatelic literature in various languages. Part of this collection was purchased from the family by the Museum of Post and Telecommunications in Wrocław.

Bookplate of J. Bohdanowicz

Lithography in one colour. The drawing depicts a stagecoach pulled by two horses. Postilions in top hats. One sits in the carriage and blows the horn, the other rides on a horse. The drawing is enclosed by tall poplar trees. At the top, the inscription Ex Libris is located in such a way that Libris is located on a second line on a colourless ribbon. At the bottom is the inscription Juljana Bohdanowicza. Size 9 x 6.5 cm.

The drawing was designed and drawn by the graphic artist Professor K. M. Sopoćko in 1934.

Julian Bohdanowicz was an artist and Professor at the Graphic Industry School in Warsaw. He and his son perished during the German occupation and his home was destroyed. The lithographic stone, after printing a very limited number of bookplates, was ground off. There are only three existing copies - one in hands of the designer K. M. Sopoćko, one at the Ossolińskich Library in Wrocław and one in the Museum of Post and Telecommunications.

Bookplate of Prof. St. Mikstein

Woodcut made in two colours. The drawing depicts a perforated postage stamp printed in dark blue with a grey background. In the upper frame is the inscription Ex Libris and in the lower S. Mikstein. An owl is sitting on a big book in the centre with a background of the rising sun. Side frames show ornaments with stylized plants similar to the one shown on Polish stamps issued in 1932-1933 with the state emblem. The bookplate was designed and printed by Professor S. Jakubowski of Cracow in 1935. Size 8.50 x 7 cm.

There exists a modified version of this bookplate. The drawing is same but there is a picture of a postmark impression with the inscription Krakow and in the middle the date 13.XI.35. This is the date of the name day of the owner of the library.

Professor Stanisław Mikstein (1888-1956), most prominent Polish scholar-philatelist, creator of the basic Polish philately, known not only in Poland but also abroad. The most important of his philatelic works is the study of the Cracow issue, which was published also in German by the publishers of Die Postmarke in Vienna. His next most-important work is about the stamps overprinted Poczta Polska. In 1936 he published his study Pieczęce Pocztowe na Ziemiach Polski w XVIII Wieku. [Polish Postmarks of the 18th Century.] Together with Wł. Rachmanow he published a study of Stemple Pocztowe Księstwa Warszawskiego i Królestwa Polskiego 1808-1870. [Postal Cancellations of the Duchy of Warsaw and the Polish Kingdom 1808-1870.] Most of the other important works by S. Mikstein were about postage stamps:- 1st Polish Corps of Gen. Dowbor Muśnicki; The Local Post in Przedborza and Żarek; Gniezno issues of 1919; Block of six of the 1st Polish stamp of 1860. In addition, he published many works of a theoretical nature, which constituted a valuable contribution to the theory of philately. It is thanks to his work and publications that philately Poland is currently so advanced. He was the owner of a large philatelic library on the history and theory of philately in various languages.

Bookplate of Zdzisław Keller

Woodcut. The main theme depicts telephone lines on poles. There is a post horn, a swallow and a letter. In the right upper corner we see only the word Libris, for the Ex- the artist placed an express train. Below the bottom of the drawing is the inscription Zdzisława Kellera. The woodcut was made by the graphic artist Tadeusz Kluźniak in 1944 in a Prisoner of War camp in Murnau.

Zdzisław Keller is an employee of the Communications Department. In 1942-45 he was in charge of the camp post office in Officers Prisoners of War Camp VIIA in Murnau in Upper Bavaria. He wrote the chronicle of the camp post office and after returning to Poland, he presented the chronicle with prints of postage stamps to the Polish Postal Museum.

Bookplate of A. Śnieżko

Zincography in one colour. The drawing depicts a stylized stagecoach pulled by a pair of horses. On the stagecoach is shown a postilion with a post horn. In the curve of the road there is a cross and a willow, and in the background a town is shown. At the bottom between the inscription of the first and last name of the owner of the bookplate, a post horn and the crown of King Stanislaus is shown with the letter W.

All of the above is enclosed within a double frame. The first frame imitates stamp perforation. Size 7 x 8.5 cm. Printed on cream paper.

The drawing was made in ink in 1948 by Zygmunt Waśniewski, assistant in the State Higher School of Fine Art in Wrocław.

Bookplate of A. Śnieżko [Frontispiece]

Made using the typographic technique. It depicts a postilion in a top hat with a whip and bugle. The composition is enclosed within a frame made of squares. Large size 18 x 22 cm. Printed on white paper in limited quantities.

Aleksander Śnieżko, Director of the Postal Museum in Wrocław, publicist of post history and Polish philately, especially bibliography. He is the author of the monograph Polska Literatura Filatelistyczna 1894-1951 [Polish Philatelic Literature 1894-1951.], which was awarded a silver medal at the 6th National Philatelic Exhibition in Poznań. Recently, he issued the well-illustrated: Szkice z Dziejów Poczty Śląskiej. [Sketches of the History of the Silesian Post.]

Bookplate of R. Szuszkiewicz

Woodcut with typical motifs from postage stamp collecting. Behind an open curtain we see an aquarium with gold fish and volumes of catalogues. In front, an open stamp album and two envelopes. At the top, above the aquarium, there is the inscription Ex Libris, and at the bottom Dr. Roman Szuszkiewicz. The woodcut was made by the graphic artist Józef Szuszkiewicz, Director of the State Lyceum of Technology in Tarnów.

Dr. Roman Szuszkiewicz is a dentist, a philatelist, he works with young people interested in philately in Tarnów.

Bookplate of Otakar Hradecny

Woodcut made by graphic artist Tadeusz Tuszewski in Warsaw in 1955. It depicts telephone poles with insulators and telephone lines. A typical theme of postal telecommunication. On the sides are the names of the owner. Left - Otakar and right - Hradecny. At the bottom is Ex Libris. Printed in black. Size 5 x 6.5 cm.

Bookplate of Państwowy Dom Harcerza Pracownia Filatelistyki in Hrubieszów [Philatelic Workshop in the State Scout Centre in Hrubieszów]

The library is marking all of their books with a special bookplate designed by Wincenty Piątek. The Philatelic Workshop is the first institution studying how to utilize philately in teaching. The main theme of the drawing is borrowed from the 60gr. postage stamp from a set dedicated to rare animals in Poland, issued in 1954. At the bottom of the drawing, the coat of arms of the city of Hrubieszów is shown and the inscription Państwowy Dom Harcerza Pracownia Filatelistyki [Philatelic Workshop in the State Scout Centre]. At the top above the moose the word Ex-Libris is shown. Printed in two colours - brown and green. Size 5 x 6 cm.

Bookplate of W. Piątek

Drawing on a composition (borrowed main motif). It shows post coach from the middle of the 19th century. Under the drawing, a ribbon sign Bookplate Wincentego Piątki. Produced in two sizes - one 4 x 5cm, the other 6 x 8cm. The first was printed in brown, the second in green.

Wincenty Piątek, philatelist, author of many articles published in professional papers, edited and published a philatelic newspaper for young people. Manager of the Philatelic Workshop in the State Scout Centre in Hrubieszów.

Bookplate of the Polish Postal Museum

The library of the Postal Museum in Wrocław owns its own bookplate - woodcut designed by the well-known graphic artist professor Konstanty M. Sopoćko.

The drawing depicts an old wax seal. In the rim with a black background is the inscription Muzeum Poczty i Telekomunikacji. In the centre we see a postilion on a horse with a post horn. In the background is a post coach, at the bottom the inscription Wrocław and at the top, the words Ex Libris. Size 8 x 9 cm. Printed in black ink on white paper.

BOOKPLATES OF FOREIGN POSTAL MUSEUMS

Swedish Postal Museum

To mark their books, the Swedish Postal Museum uses a specially designed bookplate. The drawing depicts a postilion with a post horn on a horse from the 17th century. Above the drawing a royal crown from the Wasa dynasty is shown. The drawing is enclosed by an oval frame with the inscription Postmuseum Stockholm around the inside edge. the drawing is printed on white gummed paper 6.5 x 7 cm. The size of the drawing is 3.5 x 4 cm. It is printed in black.

The same drawing but in a smaller size (2.5 x 3 cm) is used on museum stationary.

Danish Postal Museum

The library is using for their books a beautiful bookplate made with a woodcut. It shows a postilion on a horse from the 17th century. Above the postilion, on a ribbon is an inscription in gothic letters Post-og Telegraf, and at the bottom Bibliotheket. Size 5.5 x 7.5 cm. Printed in black on thick wove paper.

Belgian Postal Museum

The Belgian museum uses an original bookplate printed on a large paper slip 13.5 x 10.5 cm in size. In a separate frame there is an messenger on foot from the 15th century. The inscription Musée Postal, the city and address are printed in gothic letters. To the side, a special dated postmark is shown with the picture of a stagecoach.

The same drawing and arrangement is used on the museum stationery.

It is interesting that the formation of a Belgian Museum was based upon the Postal Museum in Warsaw. As evidence we quote this paragraph of the article, Le Musée Postal de Bruxelles from the Balasse Magazine 1936, Issue 4. This is the paragraph in a direct Polish Translation:

More than three years were needed (from 1929 to 1931) by Mr. A. de Cock (Museum Director) to convince the public authorities. From the moment the current P.T.&T. Minister, Count Maurycy Lippens, became convinced about the advantages and positive aspects of such a post, the usefulness of which from the beginning was thought to be impossible, he continued with warm support of this project through his remarkable influence. This conviction the Minister obtained during his trip to Warsaw where he visited the Postal Museum in the company of Mr. A. de Cock. If, in a nation such as Poland which has suddenly risen from its ashes, with minimal funds and thanks to their inherited endurance and also enlightened very precautionary soul, found it possible to establish a wonderful philatelic institution with the possibility for further development, the more so that, Belgium as a wealthy nation with initiative should also realize the development of a Postal Museum...

French Postal Museum

The Paris Museum owns a bookplate designed in the shape of a circle with two rings with a diameter of 4 cm. In the centre kneels a medieval messenger delivering a message to an independent prince. In the rim is the inscription Musée Postal 4 Rue S^t Romain - Paris. Printed in black.

The same illustration is used on the museum stationery.

Dutch Postal Museum

To mark their books the Dutch Museum is using an original bookplate in the shape of a triangle. There is an inscription Het Nederlandsche Postmuseum. Below the inscription, a bird with spread wings is holding an envelope with five wax seals.

Size 3 x 7 cm. Printed in black on cream gummed paper. The same illustration is used on the museum stationery.

Swiss Postal Museum

The bookplate of the museum in Bern depicts a medieval city messenger. It is drawn in the form of an oval 6 x 6.5 cm in size. In the centre is a messenger in medieval attire. On his head he wears a hat with a large feather, in his left hand he holds a spear, in his right hand a scrolled letter. On his side hangs a mail bag and on his chest, the insignia of a messenger with a city coat of arms. On the edge of the oval is the inscription Schweiz. Post Museum.

BOOKPLATES OF CZECH PHILATELISTS

J. Leszetycki

Lithograph. It depicts a table with postage stamp and philatelic paraphernalia. Also, an ink bottle with a goose feather and bound volumes of philatelic periodicals. In the right corner is an eye looking through a magnifying glass with the inscription Ex Libris on its handle. On the bottom are unfurled ribbons with the inscription Filatelistici 1916 - J. Lešetický. Printed in black ink on heavy cream paper. Size 10.5 x 8cm. Bookplate designed by J. Urban and executed by J. Szymane in 1916.

Jan Špiryt

Woodcut made by graphic artist Wojciech Cinybulka. Main motif - postage stamp. On the stamp is the falcon symbol of Czechoslovakia. On the upper portion of the stamp is the inscription Ex-Libris and on lower portion Jan Špiryt. Over the stamp is a magnifying glass. Size 7 x 8cm.

Branch of Collectors Society of the North-West Region of the Soviet Union

Produced in 1926. Size 8 x 7.5cm. Lithograph. Main theme - postage stamp (triangular) of the Cape of the Good Hope from 1853. Around the stamp an unfolded ribbons with the name of the bookplate owner.

Bookplate of the East German Post Office

The main background is a post coach. Below it is the inscription: This book should provide joy to all readers. Because of this, treat it as if it would be your own. Return it as soon as possible. Do not be late returning it, because only then you will be able to receive another book. Do not give it to children to play with it. Also do not give it to unknown persons. The Library is only for people belonging to the German Post. Do not write any comments on it - the reader wants to know poets not you.

INTRODUCTION

Dear Readers,

ladies

and gentlemen,

Although philatelic literature is quite often neglected, it is still after all one of the supporting legs of philately itself. It is inconceivable to build a respectable and precise stamp collection without primary and secondary philatelic literature. Unfortunately, it is still quite often the case that the acquisition of a missing stamp in the collection is preferred over an important philatelic book. Consequently, in the clubs of the Association, more work needs to be done in clarifying this. It would be helpful for clubs to have their own libraries, but also just to simply advise where to obtain or borrow philatelic literature. A small display of literature within the club with the possibility to "page through" can build motivation. It is important in our clubs to offer not only general books, but also scholarly literature. Literature which is difficult to understand, can scare off some collectors and block their entrance to philatelic literature completely.

The visitors to IBRA '99 will have the unique opportunity to look through philatelic literature from 25 countries in the largest philatelic library ever set up at a stamp exhibition. There are literary contributions for every imaginable field of collecting. No one's search will come up empty. It is important to note that titles still found in up-to-date offers from the appropriate publishers can be purchased.

In addition to the literature in printed form, literature is also kept on floppy disks or CD-Rom and on video tapes. Here also one will find a large selection which can be examined with the help of a computer or VCR as the case may be.

All titles at the IBRA-Library were furnished free of charge by publishers, individual authors, and particularly, study groups of the BDPh. For this we express our gratitude.

We wish all the visitors to the IBRA-Library an experienced-filled journey through the world of philatelic literature.

Franz-Karl Lindner
IBRA Literary Commissioner

PREFACE

It is almost impossible today to get a chance to find something new from the past, such as, unknown works of earlier philatelists, whereby we can learn about personalities which have been forgotten for the past 130 years. Many do not believe that there are any new, extensive unknown chapters in philatelic history, especially when faced with the unique Geschichte der Philatelie [History of Philately] by Carlrichard Brühl.

So here is what happened to me, when my highly esteemed older friend, Dr. Heinz Jaeger, honorary president of the BDPh and internationally known philatelist, informed me of a cover from Baden sent in 1869. He spoke enthusiastically, not only of its significant content but also of its unique postage to the USA. I required several attempts to comprehend the uniqueness and finally learn to appreciate it.

What he held in his hand was a small historical, philatelic sensation. The only cover about the first German philatelic society, the Südwestdeutschen Philatelistenverband [Southwest German Philatelic Society], which existed only from 1869 to 1870. It was also unique in that it was the first German organisation/association to publish its own journal.

By chance, I was able, thanks to the State- and University Library of Dresden to find and obtain a copy of the original journal Bazar für Briefmarkensammler [Bazar for Stamp Collectors], which may be the only original copy remaining. Now it was possible to read, in an original document, the richly diverse history of the young law student Wilhelm Faber, who was briefly mentioned in Carlrichard Brühl's Geschichte der Philatelie and also by Alexander Bungerz in the Grosses Lexikon der Philatelie of 1923. Because of the importance of the find an extensive contribution could be made and published in the catalog of IBRA '99 for the World Exposition in Nürnberg.

This catalog and the reprint from Phil*Creativ Verlag in Schwalmtal, of this first journal compliment each other and make it possible for the reader to appreciate the time and problems, but also the wishes of Wilhelm Faber. He attempted to unite, at that time, the existing philatelic organizations, of which there were three (one in the USA, another, and today the only still existing active organization, in England, the [Royal] Philatelic Society, London). Thereby he became the forerunner and initiator of the idea of a worldwide organization for stamp collectors, which became a reality 50 years later with founding of the Fédération Internationale de Philatélie (FIP). The young German student deserves full merit for the pioneering achievement, but not the success.

Wilhelm Faber, the restless and adventurous student from Heidelberg was lured to the country where one could still be a pioneer. This was possibly due to the German-French war and also due to the conservative, narrow-mindedness of Germany, which is understandable. So he left in 1870 for new shores, where any trace of him was lost, just as the organization he founded in Heidelberg was lost.

One year of the journal remains for study, which we recommend to any appreciative reader. We ask to be excused concerning the reproduction faults, but the modest print run made better print quality not possible.

INTRODUCTION

Philatelic literature - a possibility of increasing specialized knowledge and a source of information for every serious philatelist – has been available since 1862. To use it should become the public good in our Society in that it promotes the education of the individual and also his outlook.

The beginnings of our Society-library started in the 80s of the last century when the founding-chairman of the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde Zeitz, the head baker Gustav Erfurth, transferred his private philatelic library to the Society, upon this stock the library was partially built.

In the chaos after World War 2, the Chairman Paul Karthe served to safeguard that stock. However, additions of newer literature were very few. The value of good philatelic specialized literature was also underestimated in Zeitz. Only after 1990, that is 100 years later, more importance was given to obtain new items in the interest of the membership. The jubilee-committee under my presidency gave itself the job of obtaining all newly available philatelic literature which appeared in the DDR, for the library. Thanks to the financial support of the Culture-Federation (Arts-Council).

We could buy at bargain prices a large amount of bound magazine-volumes. A second bookcase became necessary. Its capacity was soon reached; I could donate to the Society 3 teaching-aids cases (after 18 years of use) through the clearing of our club-room in culture-house Weltfrieden [World Peace] in 1992. Luckily we found a location for the library in the Haus am Schützenplatz.

Another steel case will become available in December. However, because the stock increased so much, even without financial outlay for literature, that in the foreseeable future all three cases will be almost full. Through donations by the City and County of Zeitz as well by the Philatelic Society of Saxe-Anhalt we could purchase items in 1993 which otherwise we could not have. We remain part of the Regional Society so that the Society functions as the center for philatelic literature for the Regional Society.

The stock has increased since 1990 from ca. 350 to ca. 1750 titles - a sign of the efforts of the Board of Directors. Not to be forgotten are the donors of literature which will be named in the annual report in the Zeitzer Philatelisten-Kurier. Without these donations some philatelic works, even the smallest brochure, would not be in the library.

Donations are always welcome to enlarge our library. With the publishing of the first printed catalogue of the entire stock of the library, a basis was created on which future Society-Boards can build.

I would like to thank here personally all helpers and especially the active co-worker and friend of the Society, Hertha Wolfsohn, who catalogued the entire library and, therefore, made the publishing of the library list possible. My thanks go also to Mrs Solveig Schneider who finished the print-proof manuscript. May the critical reader be mild in his judgment if mistakes are discovered and consider that this is the first effort by beginners at library cataloguing.

I hope and wish that future Boards may bring the needed understanding of the importance of the philatelic literature in general and especially of the Society library.

May the presentation of this catalogue also encourage the use of the library by Society members and interested philatelists - that is my honest wish.

The Philatelic Society, 1878, a registered Association
Frankfurt on Main Part V
Inventory as of 01.01.1992

Introduction: page V

Since Part I of our library catalogue appeared at the time of our 1988 anniversary, I have more the great pleasure to introduce part V to our members and to the public.

Exhibition catalogues and commemorative publications, national as well as foreign, are included. For easier orientation, the catalogues are listed chronologically. In addition, all library resources for the topic "philatelic" and "federal" are presented in a separate chapter.

This catalogue contains about 1300 pamphlets. The topic and location of the events or anniversaries determine the size or content of the publications. The range from simple exhibitions guide books to philatelic and postal-history reference works. They represent a rich source for philatelists since many of the articles do not get published. At present, we are not able to list the contents of catalogues and articles.

Although the Association at the present time faces serious problems with the financing and housing of the library, it was possible to expand and complete the inventory.

Our thanks go first of all to both our librarians: Mr. Aans-Hermann Mette and Mr. Petros Tiberius, who provided the requirements for this catalogue, or rather made it. Any person who knows this type of work knows how much care and toil is required.

All patrons and other helpers are also cordially thanked for their support and work.

LIBRARY CATALOGUE

Dear Members,

Shown below is a list of all the periodicals, books, catalogues, etc. in our library. It is already an extensive collection, but we are missing quite a few items. If you own a book or volume of a periodical that you seldom, or never, use any more, please donate it to the Society or offer to sell it to us. Every addition, large or small, will be gratefully accepted. Our Society should have the largest philatelic library in The Netherlands because we are the largest society in the country.

Please adhere to the conditions in the Library Handbook shown below. When you keep the material too long, other members have to wait.

I hope that you will enjoy the many items in our library and wish you pleasant philatelic hours.

FOREWORD

Philately gains in world wide importance by the expansion of postal connections and the speed of postal transmissions. With the increased demand for postage stamps, the number of philatelists throughout the world rises. Collecting becomes differentiated and more difficult. The stamp, as a small mirror of the times and the civilising and cultural peculiarity of its land of origin, is not only a commercial collecting object but also the carrier of information in all areas of knowledge, as mediator between all continents and peoples, and as small graphic works of art, of all-encompassing educational value.

The philatelist depends more than ever on specialised literature. The Philatelic Library of the city of Munich obliges by publishing the Overseas Catalogue and therefore making available a substantial part of their inventory to researchers, collectors and aficionados. It is my duty and pleasure to thank the head of the Philatelic Library of Munich, Otto Gleixner and his assistant, Mrs Lieselotte Jackson-Lindner for establishing this catalogue with knowledge of the subject, love for the matter and self-sacrificing courage. A thank you also to the cultural adviser of the state capitol of Munich, Dr. Herbert Hohenemser, whose intervention makes possible the yearly budget of DM 115.000 for the Philatelic Library.

There is one painful restriction in connection with the publication of this catalogue: In the near future the Philatelic Library of Munich will not be able to provide long-distance loans or information and copying services. The reason for this decision is that the branch, staffed with only 2 people, is not able to cope with the rising demand. All efforts to engage additional personnel have faltered owing to the community financial crisis. Other than the existing services the city of Munich cannot provide any additional help. The library is mainly a communal library with communal obligations. As long as there is no subvention by higher authorities or institutions, it has to limit its services to the communal areas.

Therefore I can only ask your indulgence that the two person team of the Philatelic Library of Munich is forced to concentrate their efforts on the communal demands on one hand and cataloguing their inventory according to subject on the other. It is this subject catalogue that serves the user.

The Philatelic Library is the newest speciality collection in the city library of Munich, which encompasses besides a research central-library a monacensia-branch, a manuscript branch, a law library and a music library. Add to that a widespread net of 26 suburban libraries, 6 mobile libraries and 18 in hospitals and retirement homes.

The foundation of the Philatelic Library was laid in 1931 under the supervision of the many-faceted library director Hans Ludwig Held, by Munich art dealer Friedrich Heinrich Zinkgraf, who donated his private library and the inventory of the Munich Stamp Club to the city of Munich. Additions in the following years, donated by several organisations - including Bavarian researcher Hugo Schroeder - expanded the collection so much that impassioned philatelist Christoph Otto Müller was installed as official director of the Philatelic Library. He not only initiated the systematic inventory structure, but also mentored the important periodicals' index which now contains 80 000 cards.

His successor Walter Merkle continued the work, which now lies in the hands of Otto Gleixner. The Philatelic Library encompasses the literature of philately, postal history, catalogues from auction houses and exhibitions as well as periodicals from all over the world. With its 22,000 books it is the largest and most comprehensive research facility in Germany for culture historians, postal historians, collectors and fanciers.

The Philatelic Library at 5, Sparkassenstrasse, in the middle of Munich is of course open to everyone, easily reached by subway, tram (station Marienplatz) and is in a pedestrians-only zone. Maybe this offering of the Overseas Catalogue will prompt a study at home, which will result in including a trip to the Munich Philatelic Library during a trip to Munich for other purposes. Philatelists all over the world are cordially invited.

POSTAL AND TELEGRAPHIC MUSEUM LIBRARY

PHILATELIC CATALOGUE

The Library at the Postal and Telegraph Museum offers its patrons and readers the Philatelic Catalogue, a book compiled from the museum's library resources.

The Catalogue is arranged in alphabetical order by authors and includes 263 references to books related to Philately.

The SABINI information system was used to compile the information. The bibliographic terms have been set in accordance with the Cataloguing Rules of the Culture Ministry and the standards set by ISBD(M).

For requests, consultations, and more information, the library can be contacted by phone at: 22320 or 3962320.

SUMMARY

The Postal and Telecommunications Museum is placing in the hands of readers the Catalogue of documents for the years 1558-1826, produced as part of the edition of scientific documentation of the collections. After the catalogue of cards, it is a second publication belonging to the D-Series whose goal is to present the archives of the Museum. The term documents, designates here not only pieces on paper, whose content and form have the basic traits of official acts putting into force new legal situations, but also written material that represents facts and phenomena relative to the objective reality of manifestations of human thought. Among the sources thus conceived, we distinguish: contracts, privileges, proclamations, regulations, orders, circular letters, reports of oaths taken by senders from post offices and postilions, reports of visits of postal relays, official and private mail, papers accompanying postal relay material, postal receipts, and mail, certificates, extracts, etc. from ordinary post offices and relay offices.

The Museum's archives hold in their possession writings from the period of the Warsaw Duchy and from the Polish Realm, being certificates (Acts) drawn up by central authorities of the State administration. Certificates (Acts) of local authorities are represented here by documents of different content and points of origin, called Varia, postal business conducted by municipal and communal authorities as well as by Voivodia commissions in the Polish Realm. Moreover, they are represented by numerous circulars relating to the territory of the Galician Government created in the Polish provinces annexed by Austria.

However, it is the acts of postal institutions that make up the major part of the archives of the Museum. They are composed of:

- 1) Acts of the General Post Office of the Duchy of Warsaw, originally called the Administration of National and Polish Posts.
- 2) Those of the General Post Office of the Polish Realm.
- 3) Those from postal offices and relays.

All these documents constitute interesting sources for studying the history of postal communication. They take up diverse subjects, the construction and the modernisation of postal relays, the maintenance of the routes (roads) the sphere of activity of the postal offices and relays, complaints against the post office, privileges of postal franchising, etc.

The first bundle includes documents from the years 1558-1826, arranged in chronological order without any observations as to their relevance and their origins. We have assumed as a basis for the chronology the date of the establishment of one document and in the case of some copies, taking into account the importance of their content, the date of the original of a reproduced certificate (Act). The facsimile of the postal order of 1558 is the first item in the bundle. The letter from Hyacinth Młodziejowski, court treasurer, addressed in 1585 to Christophe Szydłowski, is the oldest authentic source. The regulation from the Mail Association of the Imperial City of Wrocław, drawn up in 1635, is the oldest of the few materials treating foreign postal history. The report of the oath of 1826 lent by a postal sender in Łódź is the last document in the bundle.

The present bundle includes 333 articles, each of which bears a description according to a system including the following parts:

- 1) Date and place of the establishment of a document.
- 2) Registry (Translator's note I don't know the French word "régeste", I can't find it in my Collins/Robert bi-lingual dictionary and I don't have my Robert dictionary handy. I am guessing that it means "registry" or "registrar".)
- 3) Exterior description of a document.
- 4) Complementary data: signatures, notes, drafts, etc.
- 5) Description of cachets.
- 6) Description of seals.
- 7) Means and source of acquisition.
- 8) Cost.

We hope that this publication will familiarise readers with the archival collections of the Postal and Telecommunications Museum and that it will enhance their availability to all interested parties. Subsequent bundles and volumes including documents up to 1978 will appear successively in the future as well as other publications devoted to plans of postal houses, to proceedings of the Municipal Post of the Civic Committee of the Principal City of Warsaw and to souvenirs, reports, and memoranda that will be edited in the form of separate volumes. We will also continue working on the catalogue of cartographic materials.

FOREIGN POSTAL AND PHILATELIC PERIODICALS

Volume II of the catalogue, dedicated this time to foreign philatelic and postal periodicals, is an additional publication belonging to series E of the cycle of scientific documentation editions of the collections of the Postal and Telecommunications Museum in Wrocław.

The bibliographical descriptions in this catalogue relate to periodicals which arrived at the museum between 1921 and 1985, mostly in the form of donations and transfers, but also, more recently, in the form of purchases (subscriptions).

The periodicals published by central philatelic organisations of European socialist nations arrive at the museum by subscription. Actually, in the interest of collaboration and exchange, the museum receives publications edited by both European postal & telecommunications administrations and other museums, notably those in Prague, Belgrade, Paris, Nantes, Stockholm, Frankfurt-am-Main, Hamburg and Vienna.

The oldest volumes of periodicals in German, French, Russian and Ukrainian, gathered together following the year of publication and beautifully bound, plus certain journals that have a complete set of numbers in the year, come from the collection of Vladimir Rachmanow (1886-1968), long-time president of the Polskie Towarzystwo Filatelistyczne [Polish Society of Philatelists], editor of the monthly Nowy Filatelista [The New Philatelist] appearing in the years 1922-1924, and a highly appreciated donor to the museum.

In the catalogue we have also taken account of several publications of State authorities and offices, for example that which is entitled: Amst-Blatt der Königlichen Regierung zu Breslau (Official Journal of the Breslau Royal Administration).

The bibliographical descriptions of periodicals were drawn up in conformity with the rules of the International Standard Bibliographic Description for Serials - ISBD(S) which was followed except in a few justifiable cases. Nor have we fully listed the minutiae of a description. The place of publication and the name of the printer were omitted, unless the name of the editor was not apparent.

We have listed, as the basis of a periodical's description its first year of publication (its first number) and have used the earliest year of the periodical in the library's collections if the very earliest issues were missing from our collection simply because of the impossibility of finding the necessary data from other sources. To aid in distinguishing between the numbers, the second number was placed in round parentheses.

The philatelic periodicals published through Polish emigration to the United States of America, Great Britain, Australia and Canada are presented separately.

FOREWORD

In 1944 an agreement was signed between the General Manager of the PTT and the Swiss Verbandes Schweizerischer Philatelistenvereine (Union of Swiss Philatelic Societies), in accordance with which, the Union's central library was transferred to the library of the PTT's General Management. The Union grants a yearly credit for new acquisitions, as well as a fee for book binding and preservation. In exchange, the library makes available to those interested parties, on a loan basis, all the Union's belongings and also all their own books or brochures that could be of interest to philatelists.

The catalogue includes therefore not only purely philatelic works, but also other publications that could interest a collector, such as studies of postal history, or books originally in the air mail archives of Dr. Paganini. What has not been included, so far, are auction catalogs or price lists, because these collections are still largely incomplete.

It is suggested, when ordering books, to indicate the author's name, the title and also the reference (letters and digits, e.g. B 307, Bq 1⁹) in a clear and easily readable fashion. For the details of the conditions for using the Library, we point out the regulations published on the 30th March 1944 by the Swiss Philatelic Journal.

FOREWORD

Since 1953, when the National Library was moved to Arnhem, the number of works was expanded extensively. Even though they had a card catalogue available in the library, an up-to-date catalogue in book form was not available. The catalogue issued in 1952 contained very little and had become useless.

Especially after absorbing the privately purchased philatelic library in 1959, there was a great need for a catalogue in book form which would be available for philatelists at a reasonable price.

With a lot of co-operation from the city of Arnhem and IBM in Arnhem it was possible to put a catalogue together. In order for the catalogue not to be too extensive nor too expensive, we had to observe certain rules which we mention here:

- 1) The title description has been kept very simple, subtitles and other extras have been omitted.
- 2) Books without interest for philatelic studies have been omitted.
- 3) All books are mentioned only once.

After a discussion with the library commission, to facilitate the search, a division is made, rather for practical than for scientific order. We strove to form groups to make it conveniently arranged and put works from certain areas together. This means that you may have to search in more than one group, but for philatelists we assume this would be no problem.

General catalogues and journals are not included. We are still working on a write-up of the journals in our possession and as soon as this is ready, we will also put a catalogue together for these.

In closing, may I wish that because of this catalogue, many philatelists will find the way to the National library and that they may enrich their philatelic knowledge.

CATALOGUE OF THE LIBRARY OF THE NEDERLANDSCHE BOND VAN VERENIGINGEN VAN POSTZEGELVERZAMELAARS
(Dutch Federation of Stamp Collector Societies)

The content of the library is divided into FOUR PARTS:

PART I. STUDY BOOKS. Green label. Identification mark A.

These are subdivided into two groups:

Group a) Comprises books concerning topics of general philatelic nature. These books are ranked in alphabetical order of subject topic as far as possible.

Group b) other study books, dealing with a specific country, ordered on country name.

A few reference books are included among these groups if it made more sense (in the opinion of the librarian) to include these in the study book collection than in the reference/catalogue collection.

PART II. REFERENCE BOOKS and CATALOGUES. Blue label. Identification mark B.

In case a reference book or catalogue relates to a special area or country, a notation to that effect is made following the item number.

PART III. JOURNALS and SOCIETY PUBLICATIONS. Yellow label. Identification mark C.

Because all of these are rather old, titles only were provided (for the time being) for the vast majority.

Journals have not been listed if only one or a few volumes are available.

PART IV. MISCELLANEOUS. White label. Identification mark D.

This category comprises exhibition catalogues, festival programs, philatelic programs, etc.

Ample space has been left for the necessary additions. In the catalogue and journal sections, space has been reserved to add issue numbers, year of issue, and to identify whether the volume is complete or not.

FOREWORD

The Regional library is located in the National Library, Koningstraat 26, Postbus 1168, Arnhem, Netherlands. (Remember, if you write to this address it needs a postal code.)

The Regional library is a continuation of the Netherlands Philatelic Library. The two libraries are working together for one common cause. The expansion of the library is done by:

- a) buying books, literature, collections, etc.
- b) donations and trades.

The library catalogue contains details of handbooks about philately, publications, etc. Also articles and items related to philately that are of interest to collectors. The catalogue consists of 3 chapters:

- A. Periodicals and magazines.
- B. Catalogues.
- C. Books, brochures, etc.

The following criteria were used in producing this catalogue:

- a) The inventory is only by Name, no sub categories, that way it was believed to be less complicated.
- b) By using the category, consideration was made to keep it simple and easy to find the subject. By doing this it was understood that sometime the same publication had to be categorised under several different topics.
- c) It was decided that this was more practical and didn't need exact knowledge to find the needed topic or subject.

FOREWORD TO THE 4TH SUPPLEMENT

Association library ???

Preface for the 4th supplement.

Because of plans to computerise the library there have been no supplements since 1979. The undersigned is of the opinion that the library should be computerised as soon as possible, but understand that this is a time-consuming enterprise, which should be done by professionals. Therefore I think it would be better to send you a list of the additions of the last four years.

I hope you may be able to find a way to include this list in the existing catalogue. Of the most important countries have made a separated page which you can include as is.

The Philatelic Literature Collector

Supplement to "Green Collectors' World", news, reports and advertisement magazine for stamp dealers, collectors and societies.

Editor: C. Schmittdiel, 45 Toruquiststrasse, Hamburg IG. Volume.1 July 1932 No.1

To all Purchasers and Lovers of Philatelic Literature!

To meet the wishes of numerous collectors of literature, the publisher has decided to add "Der Philatelistische Literatur Sammler" to his magazine as a supplement. The supplement will aim to review additions to the field of philatelic literature, report on the contents of specialist magazines and catalogues, and also to act as a clearing-house for exchange requests. A system of abbreviations and price indications to expand and complete their libraries by helping them to dispose of duplicates and publishing their lists of wants. The publisher and editor thus request all friends of literature to make full use of this service, since the more exchanges are offered, the more likely it is that wants will be met. Constructive advice will always be gratefully accepted, as the effort will always be made to adjust the supplement more and more closely to the needs of literature collectors. Editorship of the supplement "Der Philatelistische Literatursammler" has been accepted by Mr. C. Schmittdiehl, 45 Toruquiststrasse, Hamburg 19. Communications relating to the supplement should always be sent direct to this address.

PERIODICALS REVIEW

A not inconsiderable part of philatelic knowledge is to be found in the periodical literature. this is such a satisfactory state of affairs that it is quite regrettable that many collectors still do not really appreciate the value of good specialist literature. Of course, not all collectors can acquire and read every journal. Even so, a collector without magazines is not a collector at all, and everyone should take at least one or more magazines to enrich his philatelic knowledge by reading the specialist press. Since areas of collection differ very widely, not every journal will meet the needs of individual collectors, who naturally want to read the magazines most suitable for their area of collecting. For this reason, we shall give here a regular description of the contents of all magazines sent in to the Editor. Collectors will thus get an idea of the range of philatelic literature available, and will have a convenient means of getting hold of journals relating to their particular interests.

The following journals have been sent to the Editor:

Miscellaneous

Conference publications – advertising publications

Philatelic Conference in Heidelberg

The Heidelberg Stamp Collectors' Society has put out a volume to advertise. The Philatelic Congress to be held in Heidelberg this year from 29 July to 1st August. It is profusely illustrated on art paper, and is from every point of view a worthy advertisement. A "Welcome" from the host society is followed by a list of official committee members and a full programme of the Conference and Social events. We will only mention here: meeting of the International Stamp Dealers' Union, meeting of the International Stamp Dealers' Societies; 9th Society meeting; 38th German Philatelic Day; general meeting of the Fédération Internationale de Philatelie. Congress Post Office with its own Congress cancellation; congress postcards, stamps market, exhibition by the firm of S.W.Hess; floodlighting of east front of castle; tour of castle; illumination of castle interior; banquet in castle cellars; Alpine railway trip up the Königsstuhl; trip to Neckartal; castle trip: Heidelberg – Mannheim- Ludwigshafen. Bad Dürkheim – monastery ruins at Limburg – Deidesheim – Wachenheim – Speyer – Heidelberg. A "Short Guide to Heidelberg" by Fridolin Herbst closes the textual part. Every philatelist who wants to combine pleasure with profit this Summer should not fail to get in touch with the director, Herr W. Richter, 10a Schlosberg, Heidelberg. The wish to visit Heidelberg must be universal, so that further details are superfluous.

Get "Der Philatelische Literatursammler" regularly by subscribing to "Grüne Sammler-Welt". Subscription price only 50 pf. quarterly. Special rates for societies placing bulk orders on behalf of their members.

LUPOSTA Danzig, International Air Mail Exhibition, 1932, no.3

The exhibition committee has now put out its third and last advertising brochure. Everything now appears to be ready for the exhibition on 23-31 July of this year. The brochure follows the usual pattern of lists of committee members, prize jury, foreign participants, and details of medals, also classes, exhibition rules and programme of events. The exhibition stamps already announced in the specialist press and the Zeppelin visit are also given due attention. The honorary chairman of "Luposta" are Senator Dr. Blavier-Danzig, Dr. Hugo Eckener-Friedrichshafen, and Privy Councillor Zander-Danzig. The jury will consist of 15 members (Germany 5, Danzig 4, France 2, Great Britain, Poland, Switzerland and USA, 1 each). As well as 20 honorary prizes there will be 2 gold, 3 silver and 4 bronze official medals, the Victor Zander medal, and 1 gold, 13 silver-gilt, 8 silver, 3 bronze medals and some cash prizes to be awarded. All in all, it appears the exhibition organizers have accomplished what they set out to do. It is to be hoped that the hardships of the present time will not affect the course of the exhibition.

List of Abbreviations For Philatelic Journals

An abbreviation is given for every journal. The list is constantly updated. Abbreviations for journals not included here will be given when their details are available. No abbreviation is longer than three letters.

General abbreviations: first two figures before the colon = year (e.g. 09: = 1909); figures behind colon to next full stop = number of issues; a = all, b = to conclusion; k = complete; m= with; O = without; E = bound; O = original binding; T = title page and contents; U = jacket.

Advertisements

Prices: Exchange adverts (duplicates and wants lists): two-column 66mm wide Non pareil type (about 30 letters) 0.30 RM. small ado: Nonpareil type. 32 mm wide or equivalent space 0.20 RM. No discounts – prepayment. Business adverts according to rates overleaf. Abbreviations: lists of wants and duplicates can be held to lowest possible cost by using abbreviations to take up as little room as possible. The list of abbreviations is in No. 1, is constantly updated, and anyone interested can have a copy free for refund of postage.

THE LIFETIME OF PHILATELIC MAGAZINES

By C.Michailis, diploma farmer, Schleswig.

(Part 3)

We now come to the magazines that have medium lifetimes, i.e. those that have lasted 11-25 years so far. To begin with, a list of those that are still in existence:

1. Berichte des Vereins Leipziger Briefmarken – Borse
This was founded in 1913, but has only just reached vol.14 because of interruptions during the war and in 1925, and nos 1-11 appeared in 1913, nos. 12-19 in 1914, no.20-23 in 1921, nos. 24-26 in 1922, nos 27-37 in 1924, nos. 38-49 in 1925. Since then numbering has been within the volumes only.
2. Berner Briefmarken-Zeitung. Has appeared under this title since 1915, and reached its 8th volume in 1922. From 1923 on it suddenly began to include the numbering on “Schweizerische Philatelistische Nachrichten”, which the same publisher (Zumstein, Berne) had put out from 1909-1914, so that the volumes had a double number, e.g. 1923 = XV (IX).

By 1933 the magazine has reached its 25th (19th) year. During the first half of its existence the magazine published 10 issues yearly, later 12.

3. Donau-Post founded by Dr. V. Weinert in Pozsony (Pressbury) in 1918, is in its 16th. Volume in 1933. It is devoted mainly to Austria-Hungary and its successor states. Particularly in the first years after the end of the war, it was a reliable source of information on what are called revolution stamps and the occupation issues of Hungary.
4. Die Gausache, published by the Society of Entire Collectors (Ganzsacheu-Sammler-Verein) of Berlin, started with I/1921 from Robert Noske, Leipzig. In 1923 the title was changed to "Die Ganzsache, die Marke, der Stempel", and again in 1924 to "Deutsche Sammler-Zeitung". This magazine ceased to appear in 1927 as a result of the foundation of "Postwerthzeichen", and from 1928 on "Die Ganzsache" has appeared as a supplement to the magazines "Die postmarke" and "Sammler-Woche", and is in its 13th year in 1933.
5. Main-post, founded in 1922, is now in its 12th year in 1933. It ran to 24 numbers in 1924 and 1925: before and afterwards, each volume had 12 numbers. Octavo format for the first year, quarto afterwards.
6. Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm (since 1929 Der deutsche philatelistische Bucherwurm) was founded in 1921 by C. Beck and A. Bunge, the two great connoisseurs of philatelic literature, and is in its 13th volume in 1933. The number of issues per year varies between 2 (1929) and 7 (1928). In 1922 there was also a special issue on April 1st, "Der philatelistische Bücherwurm". The years up to and including 1928 especially contain important material for the literature collector. Up to and including 1928 the magazine was not printed but duplicated, and because of the smallness of these editions 1921/28 are very much in demand.
7. Die Postmarke began in 1919 and is thus in its 15th year in 1933. The parts are numbered consecutively to the present day: Nos. 1-9 appeared in 1919, the following years had 12 and then 24 issues. In 1921 the "universalanzeiger", of Vienna, was amalgamated with "Die postmarke", which then took the subtitle of "Universalanzeiger für Briefmarkenkunde". In Autumn 1926, "Sammler-Woche" of Munich was also amalgamated with "Die Postmarke". Both magazines continued to appear under their old titles, but with the same contents. "Die Postmarke" can be looked on as one of the best magazines of its period. The issues for 1919 are very rare, with no. 9 in particular being a rarity.
8. Rohrpost, founded in 1922, is in its 12th year in 1933. The years 1922/24 have no text, however, and are simply a price list from the issuing firm, Rudolf Rohr, Berlin. Most volumes consist of 6 issues.
9. Sächsische Briefmarken-Zeitung published by A. Kurth, Colditz, has appeared since 1915 and is in its 17th year in 1933. Volume I, 1915/17, covers numbers 2-5. No. 1 of 1915 had the same publisher as "Schweizer Briefmarken – Offerteblatt" of Romont (Switzerland). There were 8 issues in 1918, all later volumes had 12. The early volumes did not carry the above title, but were called "Sächsisches Briefmarken – Offerteinblatt", a title taken over by its advertising supplement.
10. Sammler – Woche, Munich, has appeared since 1918 and is in its 16th year in 1933, though it has not been independent since 1926 no. 18, when it merged with "Die ostmarke" of Vienna, and publishes the same text as this. It was for a long time the best German magazine, and is still valuable, though it has the same contents as 2 Die Postmarke". Its mode of appearance was very variable. Vol.I for 1918 consists of nos. 1-12, vol. II/1919 of nos. 1-5, 1920 nos 1-13, 1921-23 have 24 issues each, 1924 and 1925 52 issues each, and 1926 to the present day, again 24 issues each. Since the amalgamation it has followed “Die Postmarke” in publishing twice a month.

11. Internationale markenbörse Liechstein, was founded in Vaduz in 1920 under the title “Furstenum Liechtenstein”. Its name was changed to the above vol. II/1921 nos 5-6, and it has reached its 14th year in 1933. Originally there were 5-8 issues per year, now there are 12.
12. Briefmarken-Rundschau, Oettingen, was founded in Ditzingen in 1921 under the title “Deutschvolkische Sammler – Rundschau”. The 1921 volume contains nos 1 and 2, 1922 nos 1-10, 1923 nos. 1-15. From 1925 no.11 it is merged with the “Wurttemberische Sammler-Rundschau” of mergeutheium. It ceased at the end of 1931.
13. Das Blane Blatt, published by C.Herzog, Eschweiler, existed from 1899-1914, and thus went to 16 volumes. Consecutively numbered at first, it later went over to yearly numbering. Last issue no.15 of 1914.
14. Die Briefmarke (Gelseukirchen- Berlin) is interesting in itself, and for its changes of title. It started out as “Mitteilungen des deutsch-österreichischen Philatelisten-Verbandes”, which published 1915 nos. 1-3, 1916 nos 4-7, 1917/18 nos 8-11 and 1918 nos 12 + 13. The title was then changed to “Mitteilungen des Verbandes deutscher Briefmarkensammler”, of which V/1919 nos. 14-18 and VI/1920 nos 19-23 appeared. The title was then changed again to “Briefmarken-Post”, Essee, of which VII/1921 nos. 1-12 appeared, the magazine was then split up. One part retained the old title, but jumped a year and reappears as IX/1922 nos 1-10, to stop at X/1923 no.1/2. The other part is called “Die Briefmarke”, Gelesenkirchen: it continued with vol VIII, 1922, and went on under this title to vol. XIV/1933 (Sometimes appearing in Berlin). Its tradition was then apparently carried on by “Ipo-Nachrichten”.
15. Ungarischer (bezw. Schweizer) Briefmarkensammler.
is a double title from Bela Sekulab in Budapest (and Lucerne), and can be looked on as the continuation of “Schweizer Briefmarkensammler”. Up to 1918 it published 18 volumes with a total of 160 issues, all numbered consecutively.
16. Der Universalanzeiger, Vienna, appeared from 1907-1921 in 11 volumes with 134 consecutive numbers. The magazine was merged with “Die Postmarke” in 1921.
17. Die Weltpost, published by S. Friedl in Vienna, initially appeared in 1-48 issues (1876-1879) under the title “Wiener Illustrierte Briefmarken-zeitung” from the same publisher. The title was changed to “Weltpost” from vol. Vol. 6 1880, and 12 issues per year appeared during 1880-1884. From X/1885 to Vol. 21/1896, numbering was consecutive from 1-62, and the format was reduced at the same time. the last year, 1897, however, began again at No.1

Society of Friends of Philatelic Literature

Association for the Care and promotion of Philatelic Literature (formerly Union of Philatelic Literature Collectors)

Annual subscription 3 RM including magazine. Members can obtain bibliographic literature mentioned at reduced prices.

To prevent confusion between our Society and the “Interessegemeinschaft Philatelistischer Fachschriftsteller zu Hamburg e.V”, with which we are in no way identical, we have circulated our members with the change in our Society’s name. We thank our members for the keen interest they have taken in this matter, and have decided on the basis of various suggestions to adopt the title “Gesellschaft der philatelistischeu Literatur freunde” as from January 1 of this year.

The new year has begun. We ask for subscriptions to be sent as soon as possible to P.O. box 68046, Hamburg (under Carl Schmittdiel). Members involved in an exchange of magazines with the Society owe a subscription of only RM-1. Foreign members should send their subscriptions to the overseas P.O. box of “Grüne Sammler-Welt” (see inside front cover) with a note of what it is for.

the following new members have been received:

28. Privy Councillor Dr. Franz Kalckhoff, Berlin-Charlottenberg

29. Dr. Karl D. Becker, Karlsbad

Dr. Robert Paganini, Zweisimmen (Switzerland)

W. de Weerth, Berlin-Schöneberg

The Aerophilatelic Journals.

Dr. Robert Paganini, Zweisimmen, Switzerland

20 years ago, assuming that the then embryonic air mail was bound to increase in importance, I undertook to make a systematic collection of the relevant documentary material. I was inspired by the thought of preserving from the beginning, for future generations, the evidence of a cultural phenomenon of such importance for commerce. The material now amounts to about 1,250 books, pamphlets, advertising leaflets, collections of extracts, etc., and forms a "Historical Collection on Air Mail". This is probably the only archive on air mail in the whole world and I have given it to my homeland: it has been presented to the Swiss Postal Museum in Berne, and will be carried on by me. The archive makes it possible to follow and understand the historical development of air mail in all its phases.

I shall now give a listing of the aerophilatelic magazines that have been issued to date. I believe the list is complete. I ask the world of readers to be kind enough to inform me of any omissions or additions, so that the material can possibly be made accessible in the Air Mail Archive.

The independent aerophilatelic press first began in 1918. Earlier articles relating to air mail had to be found in the various publications of the general philatelic societies. It took years before they began to adopt the term "Air Mail", for the most part not until countries began to issue stamps exclusively for airmail. What are called the "precursors" were, I feel safe in saying, something handed down from above: indeed the collection of these covers is looked on as ridiculous.

The first expressly aerophilatelic magazine, the Airplane Stamp News was started up by A. C. Roessler, Newark (U.S.A.) in November 1918*. It was not a scientific journal as we would so much wish it to have been, but along with offers, it published an uncommonly large number of articles, most of them original. Roessler earned himself a reputation amongst aerophilatelists by setting up pioneering flights under very generous conditions. The magazine still appears unchanged today, though in the years of poor trade it had to take on rudimentary forms.

* It should be mentioned here that an illustrated magazine appeared in Germany in the year 1917, that arose from war psychosis to represent the Luftwaffe. This was also the title of the magazine. I mention this because when the war ended in 1918 it took the title Luftpost, and made an attempt to deal with our subject. However this name, which was inadequate for the contents, must have been very soon changed. The magazine has been called Luftweg [Airway] since 1919.

In 1922 Eugen Klein started his Air Mail in Philadelphia, but only two issues appeared.

The airmail societies then began their own journals. We can only admire the hard and unselfish work that the editors put into them, e.g.:

1923 George W. Augers, with the Aero Newsletters, of the Aero Philatelic Society of America. A new series began in 1926 under the shorted title Aero News: the last number appeared in September 1927. The later publications of this Society, which had meanwhile changed its name to the American Air Mail Society, appeared in the Weekly Philatelic Gossip, a general-interest philatelic magazine.

1923 Georg H. Jaeger, with Air Post Stamp, from the Association Internationale des Aerophilatélistes. This society collapsed a long time ago, as most of its members ceased to pay their subscriptions. The actual magazine only published a few numbers, changed its name repeatedly in later years, and vanished entirely in 1927.

Publications from dealers and collectors will be given chronologically. I will come back to these later, and for the moment will complete the list of periodicals from aerophilatelic societies.

Editors and titles are:

1924 Brigadier General R. Ridgway, Notes of the Month, from the Aero Philatelic Club of London.

1925 Stephen H. Smith, Monthly Bulletin of the Aero Philatelic Club of India, which later changed its name to the Indian Air Mail Society.

1926 R. Plechoyano (died 1931), Aviette Postale from the Association Amicale Aérophilatélique. This later combined with the Union Aérophilatélique de France, but the magazine retained its name.

1928 G. A. G. Thoolen, L'Internationale Revue Aérophilatélique, from the Ligue Internationale Aérophilatélique. This first appeared as a supplement to the Nederlandsche Filatelist, then appeared independently, with the title varying between Bulletin and Revue.

1929 L. B. Gatchell, Special Advance Air Mail Information Bulletin from the American Air Mail Society.

1929 Henry O. Meisel, the Bulletin of the American Flying Mail Association.

1931 Geo. D. Kingdom, the Airpost Journal founded in 1929 by H. York, which had passed into the ownership of the American Air Mail Society.

1932 Harold Applebaum, The Landing Field, from the Aerophilatelic Club of New York.

1932 Leo August, Sky-writing from the Newark Aero Philatelic Society.

The literature of Memel philately.

Survey by Ing. E. Becker, Anklam

Part 2

Supplementary or contradictory research results to the above monograph have been given in the journal concerned.

The strict journal sequence however has one drawback: it prevents a comparative treatment of the literature, which would give readers and collectors a much better guide to their reading. Anybody going deeply into the handbook literature is however doubtless also a specialist collector of stamps and postal stationery. However, people tend to read the journals they possess themselves, without trying to read systematically. It is quite obvious that the articles in magazines – as far as their sequence goes, - show only a random picture far removed from the valuable systematic arrangement that we expect from handbooks and specialised catalogues. Thus, anyone wishing to find out about the entire literature of a subject has two methods: buying or borrowing; the first one is often undertaken with negative results - especially as regards the older literature – and so his only way of getting information is to borrow the magazine he needs. But where can he look? We will not give detailed instructions about this here. On the whole there are only three possibilities, namely borrowing from a private collection, borrowing from the library of the local society – which is where it usually stops – and finally, yes finally? There are now places which will lend literature by post, namely the large official reference libraries in Berlin, Leipzig and many other big towns. However, one may still come up against obstacles, or be told that the issues for volume 10 cannot be made available. We may say in conclusion that a complete collection of literature relating to Memel can still be built up, since people interested in this topic were careful and forward-looking.

Now back to the Postmarke-Sammlerwoche!

Airmail forgeries I by G. Becker – Dortmund, 1925 N°19. Papers by this author on this subject can be found in Briefmarken-Rundschau (Oettingen) and Die Welt-Korrespondenz, the organ of the international society Weko, 1925/26.

Memel district forgeries, by A. Ebel, 1925 N°31/32: an exhaustive treatment in a few lines, and an almost unobjectionable performance.

A few words on Memel stamps, by A. Ebel, 1926 N°15. this short article met with less good fortune than the other. For one thing it was held up for a year or more before being put before the readers. When it appeared the catalogue number given was reassigned, and though the contents were all right, the printing left much to be desired.

The Sammlerwoche-Postmarke [sic], then had about 2 years of “quiet”, so to speak. The next thing to appear was a really definitive monograph on German local cancellations of the Memel region, by Ing. E. Becker. Its immediate predecessors were not so exhaustive in their treatment, but were in line with the stage of development of their own period and were able to meet the requirements of collectors for the time being. They were:

- a) Cancellations of the Memel region by Supreme Court Justice Dahmann, in Deutscher Sammler-Zeitung 1924 N°2
- b) Sammlerwoche 1925 N°6 (see original)

The monograph began to appear in Sammlerwoche 1928 N°s19 and 21 plus supplements to N°12/1929; Postmarke 1928 N°177 and 179, plus supplement to N°194 of 1929. For the continuation of this study, under the title German railway cancellations of the Memel region, see later under Filatelie or Offprints.

* A new and extended edition began to appear on the 22nd December 1932 in Memel Rundschau, N°5.

There followed in Sammlerwoche papers by H. Dietrich, W. Rotte and E. Becker:

News from Memel by W. Rotte, Wiesbaden, 1931 N°11 (241), with the sections:

- I. Memel – Airmail, 1st edition (p.131)
- II. Memel – machine cancellation N°56 1 (p.131)
- III. Memel region postal instruction (surcharged values)
- IV. Memel – forgeries (p.132).

Are there forged Memel cancellations by H. Dietrich, 1932 N°3 (postage stamp 257)

Two forged Memel cancellations and some others by Ing. E. Becker 1932 N°10 (264) (p.117)

This covers the work in Sammlerwoche, Vienna to the present day (November 1932)

Efforts have been made in the supplement Der Sammlerfreund by Otto E. Stiedl of Vienna to deal with the question of forgeries of the Memel Airmails by publishing comparison pictures.

Thoughts on the methodology of a bibliography on postal stationery.

Dr. A. Horodisch, Berlin.

The following article has been reproduced from Ganzsache, the supplement to Postmarke, Vienna, as what it has to say should be of interest to literature collectors as well.

The Editors

A bibliography of the literature on postal stationery, most of which is very rare and hard to get hold of, would be of inestimable service to many collectors and all researchers. However, one may doubt if it is really possible to draw up such a bibliography. The proper editorship of it would call for a thorough knowledge of the material plus a very great expenditure of time and effort. And even if someone does complete this arduous work, he might find it even more difficult to locate a publisher who would take the risk of printing a work like this, detailed and hard to sell.

However, we may permit ourselves to express a few thoughts as to the methodology of such a bibliography. Perhaps they will fall on fertile soil and help in the production of such a serviceable compilation of the relevant literature.

We are basically of the opinion that a bibliography consisting of nothing more than a bare list of titles will have only a limited value. The user is only really helped when every title is accompanied by even the shortest description of the contents and value of the work cited. It is quite obvious that the bibliography must cover articles in periodicals as well as books. Moreover, every bibliography should be numbered progressively – a requirement which most of them fail to meet, although this simple procedure makes them much easier to use.

Now to the actual methodology.

Catalogues must come in the first place, and they can be divided into two types: general and specialised (this latter for individual countries and types). The second place could usefully be filled by general literature on the science of postal stationery. The third main division will contain specialised literature on individual types of postal stationery and individual countries. A classification drawn up on these lines would therefore look as follows:

- I. Catalogues
 - a) General
 - 1. Scientific
 - 2. Dealers' catalogues
 - b) Special catalogues
 - 1. Scientific
 - 2. Dealers' catalogues
- II. General Literature
- III. Special Literature
 - a) On individual types of entires
 - 1. Envelopes
 - 2. Wrappers
 - 3. Letter cards
 - 4. Postcards
 - 5. Picture postcards
 - 6. Post instructions [?]
 - 7. Postscheine [?]
 - 8. Private postal stationery
 - 9. Others
 - b) On individual countries (in alphabetical sequence)

Special care must be taken with the references. A useful bibliography can only be produced when these are made as complete as possible. References will be particularly important in Part III, and will be of vital importance in Section a) 8 (Private postal stationery), and also in section b).

If an alphabetical index of authors is provided at the end, such a bibliography would be comprehensive and easy to use.

Part 4

If all periodicals in the earlier groups could not be listed, it is still more difficult to enumerate all those in the next group to be dealt with, those with a duration of 1-10 years. We shall restrict ourselves to those of interest from a particular standpoint, whether because their contents are particularly valuable or because they stand out in some special way from the other periodicals. It is to be hoped that of all these journals that are still in existence, many will survive to reach their 25th anniversary.

1. Archive für Briefmarkenkunde. Monthly supplement to the Dresdener Anzeigers. Appeared from 1925 with 12 issues per year. The supplements stopped after the death of their editor, the well-known Registrar Doenges. The last issue to appear was N°12 of 1931. The magazine was distinguished by its handy format compared with other supplements to daily papers.
2. Austria-Philatelist, Prague. Volume I, 1893/94, had a Christmas number for 1894 as well as its 12 regular issues. The second year had 12 issues, the third and fourth years (1895 and 1896) had 24, the fifth year had only 13, and the sixth (1899) had only 11 issues. N°1 of Volume 7, 1900 was printed, but never sent out. It is moreover, identical with 1900 N°1 of Die Post. Although it was never issued, copies are to be found in the hands of collectors.
3. Das Basler Taübchen, published by A. Hoffmann, Leipzig, a magazine for young collectors, unfortunately survived for only 3 years, each with 12 issues, from 1926/27-1928/29. The firm's copyright later passed to another firm, but a magazine so important for the recruitment of young people never appeared again.
4. Die Basler Taube, from E. Müller of Basle, also put its first issue out under the title Das Basler Taübchen, but changed it to the one given after protests from the one above. Its contents were extraordinarily valuable and distinguished, but it only published N°s 1-12 of Volume 1, 1928/29 and 7 issues of Volume 2, 1929/30. It would have deserved to reach its 25th anniversary.
5. Berliner Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung was initially edited by Georg Fouré, later unmasked as an ingenious forger, but he was displaced from Volume 2 onwards. Volume 1, 1878/79, N°s 1-12; Volume 2, 1879/80, N°s 13-24; Volume 3, 1880/81, N°s 25-27. N°s 28-39 appeared under the new title Berliner Illustrierte Philatelisten-Zeitung. With N°40 of Volume 4, 1882, there was another change of title to Deutsche Philatelisten-Zeitung, and there appeared under this in 1882 N°s 40-51, 1883 N°s 52-63, 1884 N°s 64-75, 1885 N°s 76-86, 1886 N°s 87-98 and 1887 N°s 99-106, then it ceased publication with Volume 9. What were in fact Volumes 7 to 9 were incorrectly numbered as 8 to 10.
6. Der Briefmarkenbote, from Fritz Polack of Bisamberg near Vienna, published 4 issues in 1918, only 3 in 1919, and a final one in 1920. There was also one issue of Volume 4 in 1922.
7. Briefmarkenecke of the Hamburger Fremdenblatts. This has appeared every 14 days since the 15th March 1924, and has been built up by its editor Schütt into one of the best philatelic supplements to the daily papers.
8. Briefmarken-Rundschau, from 1920 to 1922 as a supplement to the Danziger Zeitung, then published from 1923 N°35 by Der Osten. It published in 1920 N°s 1-29, 1921 N°s 1-52, 1922 N°s 1-52, 1923 N°s 1-42, 1924 N°s 1-52, and in its final year, 1925, N°s 1-20. So long as it was edited by Kaemmerer, it was a valuable source of information on the stamps of Danzig and the neighbouring states. It is very rarely found complete, partly because of its initially giant format, which was later reduced to half the size, and partly because it was printed on ordinary newspaper stock, which made it difficult to preserve and bind.

The importance of international postage stamp exhibitions, particularly WIPA, for philatelic literature.

F. Borger, Bielsko (Currently of Vienna)

Large international postage stamp exhibitions affect philatelic literature in two different directions. We may speak of these as the direct and indirect effects. The literature is indirectly promoted by such exhibitions, since visitors naturally develop an interest in the literature via the items on display, which can result in higher sales, to the commercial delight of the authors and publishers.

All literature which owes its existence to the exhibition can be looked on as a product of the direct effect. In the first place come the advertising pamphlets, exhibition catalogues, information sheets, etc., and in a slightly wider sense, articles about the actual exhibition. A second group includes those works not actually dealing with the exhibition, but whose writing or publication has been of decisive importance. Finally, a fourth group includes the literature published by exhibitors after the exhibition because they had received an award or had been urged to publish by other specialists.

The organisation of a large postal exhibition is thus a desirable thing for all friends of philatelic literature. The fact that one is taking place this year in Vienna, i.e. within the German-speaking world, should be of the greatest advantage to German literature. This exhibition, already very widely known by the abbreviation WIPA, promises to be the biggest of its kind if the advance publicity and reports so far available can be believed, and it should be more important for philately in general and philatelic literature in particular, than any other exhibition to date.

Even the literature put out by the organisers is more detailed and useful than that of earlier exhibitions. The first publicity appeared a full year before the exhibition, and more has followed in the course of time. However, the production of such brochures for every large exhibition has been brought to such a point that they need no further mention. The literature put out just before the exhibition, the catalogue in particular, is much more valuable. For the first time, this will contain only the details of the items being exhibited. Everything else, such as lists of awards, programmes etc. appear separately in what is called the festival book. The exhibition catalogue is thus relieved of these details and will finally contain text of lasting value. It will however give a more accurate and serviceable picture of the collections exhibited than most of its predecessors, since the organisers have not followed all earlier exhibitions in allowing every exhibitor to describe his collection in his own manner for the catalogue, thus producing a totally non-uniform picture. To overcome this drawback, a detailed questionnaire was sent to the exhibitors, and these were then used as the basis for the catalogue descriptions. All the descriptions are in three languages-also a novelty in exhibition literature. Finally, there will be a daily news-sheet during the exhibition, and if this is not a total novelty, it has hardly been done on this scale at a stamp exhibition.

As for the literature to which WIPA will give rise, its extent is not known yet, but numerous magazines are planning to publish enlarged special issues, and some, including the Postmarke will issue independent special numbers. A number of works which have been in progress have been speeded up because of the imminence of WIPA, to put in for prizes and attract the attention of visitors to the exhibition.

Finally, something should be said about the literature section of WIPA. According to information already received, this is going to be so extensive that even we collectors of literature are bound to find a good deal that is new. A detailed report on the literature classes and the prizes awarded will be given in Philatelistische Literatursammler after the exhibition has closed. It is to be hoped that the jury will award the prizes with the attention called for by their importance to philately as a whole. There have so often been disappointments in this direction. However, the well-known specialists in and creators of literature who are on the WIPA panel of adjudicators lead us to hope that literature will be taken more seriously this time.

Part 5

9. Der Briefmarkensammler by G. Bauschke (Schaubek), published in Leipzig, published a total of 52 consecutively-numbered parts from 1866-1871. It should be noted that N°31 was accidentally printed as N°30, and can only be distinguished from the real N°30 by the date.
10. Der Briefmarkenspiegel a new-issues paper from the stamp firm of Frischer, Vienna, was edited by Alexander Bungerz and appeared monthly from October 1927 to September 1931. Each year also has a special Christmas number. Each issue consists of 1-2 loose sheets of variously-coloured paper.

11. Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung was published in Teplitz-Schönau. N^{os}1-4 appeared in 1928, N^{os}1-12 in 1929, N^{os}1-7, 8/9, 10-12 in 1930, and N^{os} 1 and 2 in 1931. N^o1 of 1928 exists in two editions. N^o1 of 1929 is marked in error as N^o5 on the cover.

12. Der Deutsche Inflationsmarken-Sammler has appeared monthly since April 1931 from Moser of Immenstadt. Originally the issues carried no indication of number, but only of the month, but later they were numbered consecutively.

13. Deutsche Zeitung für Briefmarkenkunde, published by S. W. Hess in Frankfurt-am-Main, has appeared since 1925. The title originally read Frankfurter Briefmarken-Zeitung. From number 9 of 1926, the designation Deutsche Zeitung für Briefmarkenkunde appeared as the subtitle. From number 4 of 1930 onwards, these titles were changed round, so that the above became the main title, with the sub-title Frankfurter Briefmarken-Zeitung. The year 1925 consisted of N^{os}1-8; and all other years to date, N^{os}1-12. The year 1927 had in addition a number 1a, consisting of a single sheet. N^o1 of 1925, sought by many collectors, appeared in the catalogue of its publisher's 10th auction under the title Philatelistische Nachrichten (Frankfurter Briefmarken-Zeitung). From number 10 of 1932, it was published by Dr. Karl Höhn in Ulm, and from 1933 by the Zweigverlag Biberach (Riss).

14. Grüne Sammler-Welt is published by Johannes Klink, Niebüll. It published N^{os}1-11 in 1930, and then 12 numbers per year. Since July 1932, it has published a supplement Die Philatelistische Literatursammler with bibliographic articles and reports about everything that would interest the collector of philatelic literature.

15. Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler, appearing since 1864 in Leipzig from Zschiesche & Köder, is one of the oldest of the philatelic magazines. Unfortunately it only survived for 4 years from 1864 to 1867, with 12 issues per year, numbered consecutively from 1-48.

16. Mitteilungen der Firma Paul Kohl; published from 1908 in Chemnitz, was very highly thought of because of its valuable contents. It also published Ohrt's work on Oldenburg by instalments. Only N^o1 appeared in 1908, N^{os}2-6 in 1909, reaching a total of 42 consecutively numbered issues by 1914. Unfortunately this journal did not survive beyond then.

17. Mitteilungen des Philatelistischen Vereins der Buchdrucker was published from 1921 by the Verein der Buchdrucker (Society of Book Publishers), with from 6 to 10 issues per year. The issues were numbered consecutively, often consisted of only a single sheet, and changed their format very frequently, which makes things very awkward for the collector. Although its contents are not very significant, I think this magazine is very interesting from the collector's point of view, quite apart from the fact that complete sets are decidedly rare. 1921 N^{os}1-8, 1922 N^{os}9-19, 1923 N^{os}20-26, 1924 N^{os}27-36, 1925 N^{os}37-42, 1926 N^{os}43-48, 1927 N^{os}49 and 50. No further issues are known to me at present.

18. M.u.G. Zeitung, from the Marken und Ganzsachenhaus GmbH of Berlin, it published N^{os}1-6 in 1921, N^{os}1-12 in 1922 and N^{os}1-6 in 1923. It was very valuable from the contents point of view. Many of its contributions were from the recently deceased Rudolf Siegel, a man of great philatelic knowledge, which was unfortunately later put to wrong uses.
19. Neueste Briefmarken-Rundschau was issued from 1923 by G. O. Kaemmerer in Danzig. Its title had to be changed to Neueste Briefmarken-Umschau from 1923 number 4, at the request of the Briefmarken-Rundschau, also of Danzig. Issues published were 1923 N^{os}1-12, 1924 N^{os}1-52, 1925 N^{os}1-21. In 1924 there was one, and in 1925 3 issues of the supplement, Russo-Baltischer Philatelist; these were numbered consecutively from 1-4.
20. Die Philatelie, from the Wagner-Verlag, Neustadt a.d. Orla, unfortunately also survived only two years, publishing N^{os}1-12 in 1924 and 1-13 in 1925. A general index was compiled by Leitenberger and published in this magazine in 1925, which unfortunately contained only a few entries and a bitter afterword, In Memoriam. It is to be hoped that the literature supplement to the magazine Grüne Sammler-Welt will go on arousing interest in the literature, so that other literary efforts will not meet with the same lack of success, which was not due to the quality of the work, but to the indifference of collectors.
21. Philatelistische Miscellen, published originally in Augsburg, later in Berlin, and finally by Carl Beck in Berlin, it survived for 6 years from 1904 to 1909. There were twelve issues each year, but only 3 in 1909.
22. Philatelistische Mitteilungen, from the firm of Karl Hennig, Weimar, it published N^{os}1-4 in 1918, N^{os}1-10 in 1919, and N^{os}1-12 in 1920 and 1921. There was then a break, and the magazine reappeared with N^{os}1-12 in 1924 and 1-12 in 1925, then it closed again. The last year had a large number of coloured illustrations of stamps on art paper.
23. Philatelistischer Börsenkurier, Mährisch Ostrau, was from its 3rd year the organ of the Internationale Philatelisten-Verband (International Philatelic Society) of that place. It published 9 volumes with N^{os}1-18 in 1886, N^{os}1-12 for each of 1887 to 1890, N^{os}1-24 for each of 1891 to 1893, and N^{os}1-18 for 1894.
24. Philatelistisches Echo, from J. J. Arnd in Leipzig published N^{os}1-2, known as proof numbers, in its first year, 1904. The 1905-1907 volumes had 12 issues each. The publishing rights then went to Freyse of Hanover, who retained the title as a subtitle to their own Der Deutsche Philatelist.
25. Rundschau für Briefmarken-Sammler und Händler, published by Koch & Bitriol in Cölleda, is notable because it appeared as a loose-leaf system. The text was arrayed into groups, and all further articles, etc. could be arrayed and bound according to their group. Issues were N^{os}1-5 1919, N^{os}6-16 1920, N^{os}17-25 1921, and N^{os}26-31 1922. N^{os} 1-4 of a "New Series" (N^{os} 32-35) then appeared at the end of 1922 and the beginning of 1923.

26. Der Schwarze Einser, published by the Youth Section of the Nuremberg Stamp Collectors' Union, is a valuable magazine for young people, now in its 3rd year after publishing 12 issues each for 1930/31 and 1931/32. The magazine is produced by the duplicating method.
27. Weltpost-Echo, Teplitz-Schönau, proved to be a magazine with very valuable contents during the unfortunately only brief period of its appearance. It contains amongst other things for the literature collector an annual general index to all periodicals, by Bloch. After a prospectus issue, N^{os} 1-5/6 appeared in the year 1919, and N^{os} 1-15/16 in the year 1920, after which it ceased to appear.

The "next" paper will deal with a selection of what are called ephemera. The number of these is infinite, so that only a limited selection can be dealt with.

10 Jahre Thüringer Briefmarkensammler-Bund 1923-1933.

After its ten-years of existence, the Committee of the Thuringian Stamp Collectors Association, currently with 22 affiliates and 500 members and 50 individual members, has published a 32 page festschrift. This informs us of the aims and purposes of the Association. Beginning with the addresses of the Committee, it follows with a general survey of affiliated Societies, with the addresses of their Committee members, and details of meetings and membership.

A special section lists 34 social events and meetings that have been held during the 10 years. Talks and literary contributions printed in the Association proceedings are also mentioned. These are followed by further details of the Association's activities, such as provision of new issues, circulations, library, cash-free exchanges, reviews of literature, expertising, legal advice, advice on Legacies, youth philately and introduction to collecting. A list of Association members and challenge trophies complete the data. The last item is a chart which gives a good impression of the wide range of society activities in the Free State of Thuringia.

MEETING OF THE 3rd OCTOBER 1889

Monsieur Donatis presiding

The secretary read the minutes of the 19th September meeting, without making comment.

Correspondence included:

1. A letter from Mr. Chaïdopoulos who advised the society that green 5 lepta locally-printed stamps on watermarked paper were placed in circulation in Athens toward the end of the month of August. He similarly addressed a 1 lepton perforated stamp, printed locally on smooth paper. It seems that since they attempted to perforate stamps by machine, they perforated several values besides the 20 lepta already known. A sole sheet of 300 stamps, according to the information furnished by the post office, should have been found among the other sheets of imperforate stamps.
2. Various journals and publications.

Monsieur Emilo Diena attended the meeting.

Communications:

Monsieur Maury entreated the society members to guard firmly against forgers. Thanks to photogravure, one can imitate, or rather one reproduces, stamps with appalling exactitude. The same holds for surcharges. We must content ourselves with certain particular exact observations to distinguish the true stamps. But these observations must be kept secret so as not to give the forgers the means to make corrections. To that end, there exist certain details which cannot be reproduced here. The secretary supported this statement with certain details that he encountered on the 27-para stamps of Moldavia, imitated with the aid of photogravure, and placed into circulation several months ago.

Monsieur Schoeller placed under the eyes of the society members:

- a. The cards of Gibraltar with a black surcharge denominated in Spanish currency
- b. The new 3 and 4 kopek Russian cards, regular and reply paid
- c. The new type of 2 cent letter cards of the Argentine republic
- d. The 3 centavo red Mexican card; a 2 centavo carmine card with an error, the stamp being placed at the lower left corner; another of the same value with the inscription Tarjeta Postal, Carte Postale, in different type than the normal font

Monsieur Diena asked to update the society on the Stamp Directory [Index] project, on the important parts of which he had already briefed them in the past. He reminded us that the October 1887 issue of The Philatelic Record published a letter in English to build on the subject: the following November issue contained a letter from Monsieur Anderson responding on the same subject: that the society in their meeting of the 12th January 1888 took up the same issue but without resolving it, preferring to await the advice of the premier philatelic writers before deciding. In Germany, the question was also considered and the journal Das Postwertzeichen, in its January and February 1888 issues, reprinted Monsieur Diena's letter. According to him, the Germans appeared disposed to take on the work of the project, at least as much of it as concerns the philatelic literature in their nation. In America, Monsieur Tiffany protested the possibility of finishing this work for the reason that there are innumerable articles that would have to be summarized, and he completely rejected the project. The authority of Monsieur Tiffany is certainly weighty in the question, but all the collectors do not share his opinion, and Monsieur de Bosredon, in a letter communicated to the Society declared himself ready to take on the French part of this work.

An exchange of opinion took place between the members present. All believed in the usefulness of such a work, but few were disposed to concur, for various reasons. To demonstrate the necessity of the work, Monsieur Diena cited the following fact:

The Philatelic Society of London is about to publish a volume entitled The Postage Stamps, Envelopes, Wrappers and Post Cards of the North American Colonies of Great Britain. In the article entitled Newfoundland the author declared himself unable to furnish precise information on the dates of issue of the stamps. If this project had existed, he would have found an article in The American Stamp Mercury entitled Postage Stamps of the British North American Colonies where the dates of issue were plainly indicated, which would have filled this gap.

In summary, all of the members approved Monsieur de Bosredon's proposition that he prepare the French portion of the project, and promised to place at his disposal the documents and items to facilitate his work.

The meeting was closed at 10:30.

OVERVIEW OF THE PHILATELIC LITERATURE*

FROM ITS BEGINNING TO TODAY

If you take into account that there are millions of stamp collectors in the world, it is peculiar that only a few thousand of them are interested in philatelic literature. Most collectors possess a Senf or some other stamp catalogue, many subscribe to their stamp club's magazine or some other philatelic magazine, but it is unusual to encounter anything beyond this. And yet good literature would seem to be as important as the daily bread to those who collect seriously and scientifically, particularly to the specialist. That this assumption proves not to be correct is shown by the very small quantities printed of philatelic works. This is most clearly shown by the bibliographies, which form a key to the kingdom of philatelic literature. In 1874, John K. Tiffany of St. Louis, past President of the American Philatelic Association, had his excellent bibliography The Philatelic Library printed in only 150 copies, all of which were given away. Councillor Victor Suppantchitsch in Vienna has brought to the market a similar edition size of his work of 1901 Die Entstehung und Entwicklung der Philatelistischen Literatur [The Origin and Development of Philatelic Literature]. In this context I am reminded of the review in Vertraul. Korrespondenzblatt [Intimate Correspondence Magazine] of 1901 that roughly said It is a pity that not the entire edition of 150 will be sold. The person who wrote this six years ago deserves to be considered a prophet – the author gave me the 100th copy a few weeks ago.

With some help from:

V. Suppantchitsch: Die Entstehung und Entwicklung der Philatelistischen Literatur in der Zweiten Hälfte des XIX Jahrhunderts. Vienna, 1901.

L. König of Kiel's Talk on Philatelic literature at the XVII Deutschen Philatelistentag in Regensburg. 1905.

The libraries of the philatelic clubs are normally in a state that is little likely to give confidence; on the one hand, there may be no suitable librarian among the members, on the other hand there may be a problem with the leadership of the club, but in most cases it's the members themselves who do not have a great need to use the library. Thus, due to its little use, many philatelic clubs do not consider the library worth expanding. It is encouraging that Sveriges Filatelist-Förening [Swedish Philatelist Club] is very anxious to make the library in Stockholm ever more valuable and to fill the holes in it.

What is the point of philatelic literature and what use can a club make of its library?

Members that zealously study the literature become versatile and independent in the philatelic area and if the club issues a magazine, the contributions thereto will appear more often. Many who can write but have hitherto not done so will consider it an honour to contribute to the magazine and thereby bring their knowledge to the benefit of others.

There are not many great authors in the 65-year history of philatelic literature.

In the area of bibliographies, Suppantschitsch is the most prolific author. He is particularly notable for his Bibliographie der Gesammten Deutschen Philatelistischen Literatur seit ihrem Entstehen dis Ende 1891, nebst einem Abriss der Philatelie“ [Bibliography of the Entire German Philatelic Literature from its Beginning through the end of 1891, with an Outline of the History of Philately], 748 pages, published in Munich in 1892. This is the largest of all existing bibliographies and is, with regard to magazine articles, almost inexhaustible. He has also written the above-mentioned Die Entstehung und Entwicklung der Philatelistischen Literatur. This is very well worth reading; I can't recommend it strongly enough. He has also written about half a dozen other philatelic books and innumerable magazine articles.

In 1874, John K. Tiffany of St. Louis, past President of the American Philatelic Association, published his famous book The Philatelic Library, an excellent bibliography that covers every philatelic work published in the world up to that time. In 1877, Dr. Thebussem, a pseudonym for Don Manuel Pardo de Figueroa y Medina-Sidonia, followed his example with his Literatura Filatélica en España [Philatelic literature in Spain], published at Seville in 1876, and Guiseppe Leoni also followed his example with Bibliografia timbrologica dell'Italia [Philatelic bibliography of Italy]. A very solid and well known work was issued in Brussels in 1878, Bibliographie Timbrologique de la France et de la Belgique [Philatelic bibliography of France and of Belgium] by Philippe Bosredon. Albert Gottschalk of the Berliner Philatelistenklub devotes himself primarily to the German philatelic literature – he has made a particularly notable contribution in the Berliner Philatelistenklub's Festschrift of 1898 – and he also issues a magazine, Nachrichten aus Meiner Bibliothek, [News from My Library] of which hitherto 17 issues have been published. H. Fränkel of Berlin is the author of Chronologische Tabelle der Deutschen Philatelistischen Zeitschriften [Chronological Table of German Philatelic Periodicals], Berlin 1894, which distinguishes itself through great accuracy. Dr. Jur. Otto Rommel of Leipzig is also a very active bibliographer, whose philatelic articles regularly appear in Der Philatelist, he is also working on a Bibliographie der Internationalen Zeitschriften-Literatur, [Bibliography of International Philatelic Periodicals]; it would be great to see it published soon. Furthermore, he is the author of many other philatelic works, in particular a large part of the Krötsch-Handbücher [Krötsch Handbooks]. In England, the primary authors are Dr. F. A. Bellamy at Oxford and P. J. Anderson at Aberdeen; the former has for several years been occupied in writing a bibliography of the philatelic literature in English. In 1898 in America, the American Philatelic Association of New York established a committee chartered with writing an annual article on philatelic bibliography, to be published in the Association's year book.

Advancing from bibliographers to theoreticians, in addition to those already mentioned, the following deserve to have their names printed in golden letters in the book of philatelic literature:

In English:

E. D. Bacon, E. B. Evans, Stanley Gibbons, Ch. H. Meekel, F. H. Napier, E. L. Pemberton, F. A. Philbrick, Allan Taylor, W. A. S. Westoby and C. Stewart Wilson

In German:

A. E. Glasewald, Th. Haas, E. Heitmann, Paul Kloss, H. Kropf, Hugo Krötsch, Paul Lietzow, Carl Lindenberg, Dr. Alfred Moschkau, A. Reinheimer, H. Schwaneberger, Gebr. Senf, and Alwin Zschiesche.

In French:

Oscar Berger-Levrault, A. Maury, Paul Mirabaud, J. B. Moens, Baron A. de Reuterskiöld.

And the most important Italian:

Dr. Emilio Diena

Among the owners of the largest libraries, the Earl of Crawford, Vice President of the London Philatelic Society occupies the first position. Recently, he bought Tiffany's gigantic philatelic library for $10,000 and is eagerly expanding it. Not long ago, H. E. Deats of Flemington, New Jersey, the current President of the American Philatelic Association, bought Moens' library for $5,000. Victor Suppansschitsch of Vienna, Dr. Jur. Otto Rommel of Leipzig, and Circuit Judge Fränkel of Berlin also own large private libraries. The Société Française de Timbrologie, London Philatelic Society, Dresdener Internationaler Philatelisten Verein, Berliner Philatelistenklub, and the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde i Kiel own large club libraries (the latter includes L. König's library). To enumerate the many medium-sized club libraries would be going too far. I will, however, devote some words to the library of the Sveriges Filatelist-Förening, a medium-sized library. This is particularly rich in periodicals; these are well known to contain, at times, more valuable material than books.

In my opinion, it is necessary to inventory by category all the magazine articles in the library as soon as possible, so that this valuable literature becomes available to the members. Only in this manner will the periodical literature reach the permanence it deserves; if this is not done, the articles will remain dead and worthless capital.

In the following chapter I will try to give a general description of how the philatelic literature, primarily as catalogues, albums and periodicals, has arisen and how it developed during the first decades.

The first articles on stamps were published in the same year that stamps were first issued. The Spectator, the Art Union, and the London & Westminster Review of 1840 often published such articles. Also, advertisements from collectors appear in the newspapers of the day. In an advertisement placed in The Times in 1841, a young lady desires stamps to use in decorating her room. Many newspapers made fun of the crazy idea of collecting stamps. Serious collecting appears to have started in 1851. The oldest source for this and for that stamp collecting started in England is an advertisement in the London paper The Family Herald as follows:

Postage stamps: To collectors of used stamps, the advertiser will give 4 red penny stamps in exchange for one oval from the stamped letters. Anyone who wishes to collect any such is asked to contact T. H. Smith, Booksellers, 20 Brewer Street, Golden Square.

All these articles and advertisements can, of course, not be considered philatelic literature, particularly since they were not written by knowledgeable people and were published in papers aimed at the general public.

TO OUR READERS

Does it appear risky to you, dear reader, considering the large amount of material consumed every year in the service of philately by philatelic enthusiasts, real or imaginary, to add another specialised publication to the number of existing ones?

Consider however, that most of the publications of this nature do not appeal to the German reader because they are written in a foreign language or they are of limited local interest or the subscription rate is forbiddingly high.

At the same, time smaller publications emerge in large numbers, but their short-lived existence gives evidence that they are not up to the demands expected of them.

We will now attempt to assimilate the ample material which is offered to us, in such a manner that every reader will find at least something of interest. What we offer the reader shall be spelled out so that only sterling quality is presented, whereby we hope to reach our highest goal in making our publication indispensable to every philatelist.

First we want to enable the reader, with expertly written articles, to form perceptions and convictions about general questions in our field. Furthermore, we will try to give directions to the manifold philatelic literature. We will not ignore specific news, foremost - new stamp issues will be described, historical and statistical, geographical and ethnographical, heraldic and numismatic notes will be presented, and we will warn of fakes and alterations. In the advertising section we will create the opportunity to complete collections inexpensively and thereby help satisfy the demand, alleviate supply and enliven the market.

In our Mail Box we will reply to all questions of general interest. Our columns will be open to reports and requests of our correspondents.

And now one more word, dear reader. To err is human, we ask your indulgence if we don't always seem to follow without detours the course we began. The motto of Louis XIV can also be applied to us: "Nec pluribus impar". As long as you grant us your benevolence there will be no obstacles for us, and to keep it that way we will spare no pain.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE MOST IMPORTANT MONOGRAPHS ON THE POSTAGE STAMPS OF INDIVIDUAL COUNTRIES

FOREWORD

The following is basically a reprint of the bibliography I published in the year 1907 in the Svensk Filatelistisk Tidskrift (Swedish Journal of Philately) which was later published separately as a monograph. Since this received, a warm welcome from the critics in the philatelic press, I decided to publish the bibliography in a German philatelic journal, with the kind assistance of the editorial board of Der Deutsche Philatelist.

Improvements were made where possible: for example, I have quoted the format of all works accessible to me in centimetres, and have added the publisher and source of reference as far as I knew them. All bibliographic data are now given in German.

In the fall of 1904, I arrived at the thought that I would work on a Bibliography of the Monographs on the Postage Stamps of Individual Countries. I began with the thought that earnest philatelists would consider it most important to have knowledge of such works when they wished to study the postal issues of certain countries more deeply. Whereas the magazine literature had already been covered, on the other hand there was missing an overview of the book literature. Philatelic handbooks are listed now generally, but cover only the titles.

My thought is to work out a bibliography which would place the reader in a position to know the form, extent, pictures, number printed, date of issue, to know all points in advance to let him appreciate if the book is of interest. Even though my work is in no way exhaustive I believe that I have included a large part of the monographs which have appeared. I welcome addition of works I missed in spite of extensive searching. To include prices I have for specific reasons, declined.

I must state clearly that I did not have a large library at my disposal. I had to use the following ways to reach my aim. During the years 1904-1905, I cut out all book titles which appeared in the international philatelic periodical literature for I using the extensive facilities of the Sveriges Filatelist-Förening. Every title was carefully noted as it appeared in order to have it as complete as possible; all these titles became the basis of my work. The library catalogues of the International Philatelic Society of Dresden as well as the Library of Boston were of much help to me as was the talk by Dr. Ludwig König of Kiel, at the Philatelic Day in 1905 at Regensburg. Also, in order to check the material so assembled for correctness, I entered into correspondence with authors, editors, and philatelic friends.

I must now mention two gentlemen who have followed my work with great interest and who always stood ready to provide help; they are Senate President Victor Suppantshitsch of Graz and my friend, Hilmer Djurling, editor of Svensk Filatelistisk Tidskrift in Stockholm; the former with his extensive library, clarified many points and corrected many of the titles and always stood ready with advice. The latter with his extensive correspondence was always most helpful in spite of his many other duties.

Most helpful also were the following: Wilmot Corfield, Calcutta; Editor Theodor Haas, Leipzig; C. A. Howes, Boston; Rector L. Harald Kjellstedt, Scranton, PA; Fred J. Melville, London; E. Plotz, Dresden; and J. A. Tilleard, London with bibliographic information which made it possible for me to close gaps even in the last hour. Sveriges Filatelist-Förening paid for the costs and published the first reprint at its own expense.

State Counsellor Dr. Kalckhoff of Berlin has been kind enough to supply certain corrections for the present, second edition. All items marked * are due to him, and I am much in his debt for them.

My warmest thanks are expressed to all those I have not mentioned by name, but have helped me with advice and information.

TO THE USER

According to the by-laws, the Foundation is for the advancement of philately and postal history and the support of research in these areas. Resources for this purpose are to be found in the Herman Deninger Library within the Foundation. It contains about 440 titles of specialised philatelic and postal history literature (among them many items in foreign languages).

Now, the Library should be made open to the public. Therefore, the Foundation asked the Association of German Philatelists if it could transfer the Library as a loan to the House of Philately in Frankfurt-on-Main (address: Main, Mainzer Landstrasse 221-223) where it would be made available to users.

The condition of the old books does not permit outside loans or the copying of material.

The Library is always open to users and researchers of philately and postal history - on every Tuesday, except on holidays, from 8:30 – 15:00, for the study of materials.

We wish the users success in their efforts.

FOREWORD

Almost three years ago, in August 1996, I replaced Hartmut Kahrs as librarian of the Forschungsgemeinschaft Grossbritannien (FgGB) [Great Britain Study Group]. The members were so informed on page 135 of Newsletter 105. At that time, I presumed that my initial task should be a revision of the library catalogue, which was published in short order as an appendix to Newsletter 106. Since then, I think that the library has flourished unexpectedly well, which may be due to several factors:

First, there is the willingness of the members of the FgGB to donate material. Thus, I want to use this Foreword to thank the donors by name. This includes the following members, listed alphabetically: Werner Bauschke, Burkhardt Beer, William H. Blench, Theo Brauers, Hanns Jörg Fasching, Curt Fernau, Heinz Gierth, Hartmut Kahrs, Werner Kühn, Karl-Albert Louis, Johannes Michalowsky, Michael Möller, Heinz Reck, Philip E. Robinson, Gero Schmitz-Le Hanne, Heinz Weisser, Erhard Zietlow (in addition, Auktionshaus Heinrich Köhler and the Forschungs- und Arbeitsgemeinschaft Irland [Study and Working Group Ireland] also contributed). A further factor was the decision by the Board of the FgGB in late 1996 to provide the library with a yearly budget for purchases, for example.

But above all, the amazing estate of Heinz Reck must be noted here, who had bequeathed the entire Great Britain portion of his voluminous philatelic library to the library of the FgGB. The readers of this list can see for themselves how much the quality level of our library has improved. I venture to say that the FgGB now holds one of the largest libraries covering the philately and postal history of Great Britain anywhere in the German-speaking area. This is particularly surprising as our group does not have a separate office.

Moreover, the estate of Heinz Reck features a large number of biographies of Queen Victoria and her successors, as well as books about the English royal family in general. There are also some publications about heraldry. Even though a library specializing in the philately and postal history of Great Britain would not generally be assumed to include such publications, I have included and catalogued these publications. In my opinion, such literature gives our library a certain unique profile.

The specified reasons provided a ready answer to the question whether the library catalogue should be re-done from scratch or whether an appendix to the catalogue would suffice. In addition to showing the new acquisitions, errors in the last catalogue were also corrected. There were also several minor modifications. At this point, I want to mention specifically the modified description of periodicals and the changed lending rules.

I resigned as librarian in April of this year, Theo Brauers now handles the job and the library holdings are now in his hands. Thus, the present catalogue shows the status at the time of transfer of the library from Strack to Brauers.

Surely the job of librarian will continue to be a big job. For example, I see the catalogue in its present form as limited and I could see that a more detailed version should be prepared. There are also roughly 15 thick binders with articles cut from newspapers, etc. from the Reck estate that have not been processed yet.

At this point, I want to thank the Royal Philatelic Society London for permission to use the photo shown on the title page. I also thank Theo Brauers for the update to RB [Newsletter] 115 in Appendix 1.

I hope that the library catalogue will assist members in their literature research for their own collections.

Structure of the Catalog • Structure of Item Identification Introduction

1 Introduction to the Library Catalogue

1.1 Structure of the Catalogue

The present library catalogue consists of two main sections and an appendix, which in turn has three sections. The first main section lists the entire holdings of the library, specifically subdivided into books, catalogues, periodicals, auction catalogues and exhibition catalogues. The holdings are shown in chronological order within each subdivision. Books (name of the author(s)) and catalogues and periodicals (name of the catalogue or periodical) are shown in alphabetical order. However, auction catalogues and exhibition catalogues are listed by date.

The next section, 3 lists the books again, but now by subject matter. The listing is alphabetical within each subject heading. It is entirely possible that some books are listed under several subject headings, if a particular book covers more than one subject. Of course, it should be noted that such a classification depends on subjective judgments and that differences of opinion may or will be likely.

The first part of the Appendix is based on the index of the Newsletters of the FgGB, which Theo Brauers prepared and which was first published as an Appendix to Newsletter 104. Given that the original index only covered Newsletters 1 to 103, this index was augmented for the more recent Newsletters through Newsletter 115. Likewise, Appendix 2 had been published previously as an Appendix to Newsletter 110. It is published here without modification to give the reader access to all sources for literature searching in the library. Finally, Appendix 3 is a first attempt to provide addresses of other libraries relevant to the FgGB. There is surely room for improvement in this listing.

1.2 Structure of Item Identification

The FgGB library has no item identification, strictly speaking. Nonetheless, a loan request by mail does not require a complete listing of the last and first name of the author(s) and the full title. Rather, it suffices to give the last name of the author and the year of publication listed in parentheses. If this does not describe the book uniquely, small alphabetic characters are appended to the year of publication.

The items will maintain that identification, with a single exception, namely once a duplicate identification is encountered and a small alphabetic character needs to be appended. For example: The identification o. V. (1986) of the last listing has now become o. V. (1986a). The reason is the addition of two other titles with identical identification o. V. (1986), but which have been labelled o. V. (1986b) and o. V. (1986c). The following discussion will show which bibliographic data are ideally shown for the titles in the library, specific to auction catalogues, exhibition catalogues, books, catalogues and periodicals.

Auction Catalogues:

Auctions number (date): Title of the auction – subtitle of the auction [possibly explanation]

The item “subtitle of the auction” refers to the content description of the auction usually shown on page 3 of the auction catalogue in question. These descriptions are not always shown in total, if the information provided is not detailed enough to be useful. The disadvantage is a certain amount of inconsistency regarding the item “subtitle of the auction”. The “explanations” primarily refer to the availability of a list of prices realized.

Exhibition Catalogues:

Name of the exhibition (date and place of the exhibition) [possibly explanations]

“ALICANTE” LIBRARY

Dear ladies and gentlemen,

We are again pleased to offer you a broad selection of philatelic literature with the enclosed auction catalogue.

The selection is made up of ‘Handbooks and Catalogues’, with the focal point being the

‘Alicante’ Library

Its collection of about 2000 titles is being dissolved. This library contains almost all the rarities expected in a collection of philatelic literature. You will also find many of the frequently referred to standard works, a collection of short articles and some specialized literature. In mentioning highlights, special reference is appropriate to the heavily represented ‘Mediterranean’ and ‘Latin America’ areas.

Selections of other collectors complete the offering, with particular emphasis on the northern countries.

Admirers of philatelic journals will find something to their liking among the approximately 400 titles – we are auctioning off another part of the well-known Garratt-Adams inventory.

We are of the opinion that auction catalogues also form a part of the philatelic literature as much as dealer price lists, exhibition catalogues and special commemorative publications (festschrift). In addition, we are offering some maps even though they are not normally considered part of philatelic literature, but may provide collectors with lots of useful information.

For obvious reasons, it will not be possible to send photocopies or to send the material for inspection. However, we will be pleased to furnish additional information regarding the content or condition of particular titles. In the event that the regular viewing times are not suitable to you, mutually agreeable special hours may be arranged.

The complete catalogue with index of the titles may also be viewed on the internet at:

<http://www.schwanke-sohn.com> or <http://www.schwanke-sohn.de>

We wish you lots of pleasure in your review of the offerings and look forward to receiving your bids.

Philatelic Bibliography

For several years, I've been collecting philatelic publications of all sorts, published since 1862, in all languages, in France or foreign countries. This collection consists of:

Journals, catalogues, general treatises, monographs and special catalogues, official documents related to stamps, price lists, offers, circulars, auction catalogues; by-laws, annual reports and yearbooks of Societies; address books and merchants' almanacs; articles published by non-philatelic journals; and publications related to stamps not fitting in one of the preceding classes. Finally, works of philatelic biographies.

I have saved all the publications that have come through my hands. Consequently, I already possess a large number of journals and an extensive collection of catalogues. Often I lack only a few isolated issues of an entire publication.

I beg all persons who possess items of any categories below, to let me know, before sending it, the titles, issue numbers and editions of those same isolated [missing] issues, with an indication of the year or volume, and to include the asking price, [and whether payable in] cash, stamps, at the Paris market price, or exchange of publications.

THE ADVENTURE CONTINUES

Editorial

Welcome aboard! On the 13th October 1951, the first issue of the Le Monde des Philatélistes appeared in a four-page newspaper format whose entire printing totalled 1,500 copies.

On the 20th February 1984, Timbroscopie, the first French philatelic magazine printed in colour, changed publishing methods and rapidly became the new leader.

At the end of March 2000, Timbres Magazine made its appearance in kiosks.

Timbres Magazine is a creation of Le Monde, of which Le Monde des Philatélistes is the oldest of its specialized publications, and also of Timbropresse, the company producing Timbroscopie, Timbroloisirs and Timbrojournal, uniting their forces and their editorial expertise for the benefit of philatelists.

Four in one! Thus, Timbres Magazine, which you hold in your hands takes the place of Timbroscopie, Timbroloisirs, Timbrojournal and Le Monde des Philatélistes. The primary goal is to offer to collectors a monthly with which they will “feel at home”, which will coincide with their reading habits, will have their favourite features, and which they will anticipate impatiently each month:

- the Socrates column, featuring articles on the postal history of foreign countries; the column An Answer for Everything for example, for the readers of Timbroscopie;
- thematic journeys through cities and regions of France, traditionally offered in Timbroloisirs;
- economic and practical themes which were handled in detail by Timbrojournal;
- pages on military post, polar philately, postal cards, and exciting articles signed by eminent members of the editorial staff, for the fans of Le Monde des Philatélistes ...

To achieve this synthesis of the best features it was, first of all, necessary to increase the number of pages. The increase ranges from nearly 50% compared with Le Monde des Philatélistes; the first issue increased from 84 to 132 pages; and by 30% compared with Timbroscopie.

Changes have been based on several findings: Timbres Magazine has to meet the highest expectations of its readership, which represents nearly 80% of the present-day traditional readership of the philatelic press. Moreover, collectors at the present time need a medium which will represent their interests; one which will speak out.

Resulting changes include more space being allocated to letters from the readers, four pages in this issue; an updated line up, more consistent with a stronger stamp market (descriptions of items, auction sales critiques, page placement); and the continuation every other month of the supplement Collecting Ideas which helps collectors get started by recommending stamps ...

In order for this project to succeed the design was completely revised. All this was completed after several months of study, working with Vincent Lalu's team from the Clarinda Agency. We hope that this issue consisting of 80,000 copies will entice you.

A word of reassurance for Pierre Thomas of Mont-Saint-Martin, a subscriber of Le Monde des Philatélistes and Timbroscopie, as well as Jean Maroselli of Toulouse and Lucien Duquesne, President of l'Amicale Philatélique du Havre-de-Vie at Saint-Gilles-Croix-de-Vie and for Patrick Georgel, Treasurer of l'Association des Collectionneurs de Carnets et Publicitimbres of Paris: Our readers with subscriptions to two or three of the magazines will have their subscription to Timbres Magazine extended in proportion to their combined subscriptions to individual publications.

PHILATELIC MISH-MASH

(A free translation of the word Kladderadatsch)

3,417 lots with an estimated value of 300,000 DM (Translator: nearly $200,000) are being offered in a literature auction on the 10th March by Schwanke & Sohn in Hamburg. The focal points of the auction are offerings from the dispersion of the Alicante Library, which was assembled by a Spanish collector. It contains almost all of the important reference books of the past 100 hundred years.

The auction will include Lexica and handbooks, bibliographies, Post-related articles, reference books and almost 2,000 monographs ranging from 'old' German states to transatlantic subjects. There are reference books about geographic locations and official rules, as well as periodicals, auction and exhibition catalogues and also jubilee publications. Included is a Philatelistischer Kladderadatsch published in 1888 (50 to 60 DM).

POSTAL MUSEUM LIBRARY IS TEMPORARILY CLOSED

The library of the Museum for Postal and Communications Matters will close its rooms at Lübecker Strasse 1 (Berlin-Tiergarten) on the 30th June 1998 for a reorganization and transfer. The reopening of the Museum in a renovated building is planned for some time in 1999 at the former Reichspostmuseum (Imperial Postal Museum) at the Leipziger Strasse (corner of the Mauerstrasse).

Since 1971, the library has been located in a room at Post Office 21 at Lübecker Strasse 1 in Moabit. Now the books and archival material of the three former Postal Museums in Berlin (East and West) located at the Lübecker-Strasse, An der Urania, and on the Leipziger Strasse shall be combined in one single depository.

After the move into the new Museum for Postal and Communications Matters at the Leipziger-Strasse, the readers – male and female – will see a modern, beautifully equipped library and a very versatile offering of literature. The focal points will be the history of the postal and the long distance communication system, philately and communications. Apart from books, theme-related publications and journals, media such as CD-ROM, video and audio disks will be made available. Further plans include exhibits of studios with works of contemporary artists, as well as various other events.

FOREWORD

Because the Club's Library Catalogue of 1918 as well as its contents and form is out of date, the Directors have delegated me to prepare a new catalogue. The result is this catalogue, which besides showing the growth in the intervening 12 years, should give our members guidance in choosing material to borrow.

The catalogue covers both handbooks and journals that date up to the beginning of 1930. Price lists are only included in so far as they are thought to have particular interest. Auction catalogues are not included.

It is my hope that the catalogue will be of use to members and lead to increased use of the library.

CATALOGUE OF THE PHILATELIC LIBRARY:

PART I GERMAN LANGUAGE PERIODICALS

INTRODUCTION

After the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde was founded on the 6th June 1878 in Frankfurt am Main, much value was put from the very beginning on philatelic literature. The result was that by 1885 – just 7 years afterward, it was necessary to buy a new bookcase for 20 Marks as the old bookcase was no longer big enough to store the books (the old case was sold for 5 Marks).

In about 1900, the library had about 200 books and on the 1st January 1905 the first catalogue was printed. It contained 56 pages and listed about 800 books and periodicals.

The Library enjoyed particular care by members who increased the inventory time and again through donations of money and books.

It survived even the two world wars almost without damage. However, after WWII it was necessary to change the location several times. In this connection, Messrs. U. Häger, J. Frey and G. Kohl merit particular mention, because they looked after the wellbeing of the library throughout these years.

The present location is almost ideal but involves very high rental costs.

After so many decades the conditions for cataloguing the complete inventory were fulfilled. It is a particular pleasure for me to present the first portion of this project to the public at large. The publications in the German language, about 2000 volumes, take up almost 77 meters of shelf space.

The inventory of the other parts of the library – such as periodicals in foreign languages, handbooks, philatelic exhibition and auction catalogues – is expected to be carried out in the next few years. This is a big task since about 18,000 different volumes are involved.

After extensive preparations H.-H. Mette and P. Tiberius worked almost two years on this inventory. This activity exceeds by far the usual services in and for the Society. I congratulate both gentlemen heartily for their efforts and thank them not only in the name of the Association for the knowledge of philately, but also personally, very heartily.

PHILATELIC LIBRARY CATALOGUE

PART I GERMAN PERIODICALS

PART II FOREIGN PERIODICALS

FOREWORD

Just 10 years ago, we issued Part I of our Library Catalog entitled German Language Periodicals. All organized societies and research associations in the Federation of German Philatelists, appear in this catalogue. After this long a period of time it is now our task to update this catalogue. At the same time we have extended it to include foreign-language periodicals and have organized it as follows:

German Periodicals (Part I)

Foreign Periodicals (Part II)

We present the result herewith in a single volume in the 120th anniversary year of our society.

What effort and care such a comprehensive inventory of this type - in the age of computers - demands of the authors can actually be measured only by those who have already produced similar works!

Therefore, first we must thank our librarians, Friedo Giese and Petros Tiberius, for their great efforts. Our thanks also go to our young assistant, Hans-Joachim Thiele. They have put hundreds of hours of labour into the collective work.

In addition, we thank the Foundation for Philatelic Research and Postal History and the Federation of German Philatelists for their financial aid with the printing of our library catalogue and their free distribution to all BDPH societies and research associations.

May this catalogue serve all those interested in philatelic literature!

We would be grateful to you for additional suggestions and references, and especially for support of our endeavours in further completing our inventory.

LIBRARY CATALOGUE (BOOKS)

Foreword

This library catalogue is arranged in alphabetical order according to

- 1) Name of book (white pages)
- 2) Name of author (green pages)

As far as can be determined, the following will be shown:

a) Signature

b) Name of book

This part of the catalogue consistently includes opening articles and prepositions. If available, the following information is added:

Aufl (Auflage) – Number of copies issued

Bd (Band, Heft, Teil, etc.) – Volume, Number Part, etc.

Jg (Jahrgang) – year of publication

Ndr (Nachdruck, Neudruck, etc.) - reprint, new printing, etc.

Ntg (Nachtrag / Nachträge, Ergänzungen, etc.) – supplement, etc.

c) Author

If there are more than 3 authors, also for anonymous works, the name of the book index shows the publisher - those are not shown in the author section of the index.

d) Year of publication

e) Scope or range

This is subdivided into:

Anh (Anhang) – annex

Sp (Spalten) - paragraphs.

Blg (Beilagen) – Supplements

Tf (Tafeln) - tables

S (Seiten) - number of pages

f) Language

Not shown if language is exclusively or predominantly German.

Abbreviations for languages:

OUTSTANDING GERMAN PHILATELISTS.

The philatelists of Germany have included some outstanding researchers. As they are not so well known as they deserve to be, we shall recapitulate on the course of their lives and their influence on philately.

Beck, Carl

He was born on the 27th December 1879 in Heppenheim. He was an employee of the State Statistical Office. After 25 years he became Principal Secretary. He died on 9th July 1929. From 1905 to 1909 he published the Philatelistischen Miszellen. In 1924, along with other collectors, he founded the Society of German Literature Collectors. He published the society journal Philatelistischer Bücherwurm. He also collected the manuscripts of well-known philatelists and authors. He wrote monographs on the famous philatelists Suppantschitsch and Bungerz. He owned a unique private library of German-language philatelic literature.

Publications: Bibliography of the most important German specialist writings on the postage stamps of individual countries. – The State Postal Museum and its stamp collection. – Practical guide to the realm of philately. – The Bavarian cross hand stamps of the 1849-1875 issues. – The Bavarian millwheel hand stamps with price tables. – The layout of philatelic libraries. – On the importance of philatelic literature. – On the value of philatelic literature. – On the need for philatelic organizations.

Bungerz, Alexander

He was born on the 7th November 1874 in Munchen-Gladbach. He was very frail in health. He was a painter. He was also very musical and gave public recitals. To improve himself still further, he went to Rome in 1900. In 1913 he was diagnosed as a haemophiliac. He visited Middelkerke, Birkenwerder and Schliersee for health reasons. He was particularly interested in the colours of postage stamps and in philatelic literature. He has a comprehensive library of philatelic literature. He was editor of the Munich magazine Sammler-Woche. He published numerous works, including a major lexicon of philately. He also produced designs for Bavarian stamps. They were not adopted, but were used in the advertising for a dealers' convention. Bungerz died on the 1st November 1931 in Vienna.

Publications: Remarks on replacement bindings. – The stamps of Germany and Austro-Hungary in the war years 1914/18. – Philatelic journals of Germany, Austria, German-speaking Hungary and Switzerland 1914-18. – The German-language philatelic literature in the year 1919. – The hand cancelled Libau 1st and 2nd issues. 1920 – The Stamp Collector. – History and catalogue of the precursors of German colonial stamps. 1920 – Colour designations in philately. 1918 – From studio to letter box: The path of the postage stamp. 1920 – The stamp collector's friend. (64 original wood engravings of classic postage stamps) 1924 – Great lexicon of philately. 1923.

Friedemann, Albert

He was a dealer and collector. He published the Berichte für Briefmarkensammler. The Handbook of Postage Stamps and Cancellations of the German Post Offices in the Protectorates (Colonies) was also his work. He established a medal for services to philatelic science. The first winners were Albert Friedemann and Konrad Kraske. The medal was designed by Bruno Eyermann of Leipzig. Friedemann published other works on the German colonial post.

Glasewald, Arthur Ernst

Born on the 2nd August 1861 in Gössnitz. Up to 1880 he was a bookbinder, then changed to stamp dealing. He operated in Kassel, Hamburg and Frankfurt-am-Main. From 1887 he was independent in his hometown. He founded a stamp collectors' society, later the Mid-German Philatelic Union. He was very active in the literary field. His first work was a study of Greece. He wrote a book on the wartime post. He was an enthusiast for private postage stamps and the cancellations of Thurn & Taxis. He gave lectures on philately at society meetings and functions. He was awarded the Lindenberg and Wagner Medals.

Haas, Theodor

He was born on the 22nd September 1848 in Karlsruhe. He was originally a theologian, but then became a philatelic writer. His masterpiece was the Handbook of Philately that appeared in 1905. He was awarded the Lindenberg Medal.

Kalckhoff, Franz

He published his first philatelic work in 1880. He was editor of the Vereinsmitteilungen des Berliner Philatelisten-Clubs. He also collaborated on Teltz's Great Handbook of Philately. From 1891 he was editor of the Illustrierten Briefmarken-Zeitung. He gave the Senf catalogue its exact form and its model presentation. He gave scientific lectures at philatelic meetings. He fostered good relations with London philatelists, since he was active as a chemist in England. He was an official of the Patent Office, retiring in 1925. In 1911 he was awarded the Lindenberg medal for his activities. Kalckhoff was born on the 13th November 1860 in Berlin, and died in Einbeck on the 13th November 1955. He contributed to the Deutschen Briefmarkenzeitung from 1894. From 1911 to 1913 he was Chairman of the Commission for the German Philatelic Congresses. He was an honorary member of the Berlin Philatelists' Club.

Publications: Invention of the postcard and correspondence cards of the North German Federal Post. – Great Handbook of Philately. – The postcards of German Post Offices abroad. – Telegraph stamps and telephone tokens of the German Reich. – Illustrated index to all known reprints of state postage stamps – Postal Stationery of the German protectorates. – Postal Stationery of Prussia.

Kröttsch, Hugo

Hugo Kröttsch founded a philatelic publishing house on the 1st February 1893. He wrote numerous articles for handbooks and magazines. From 1896 to 1919 he published the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung.

Lindenberg, Carl

He was born on the 1st May 1850 in Wittenberg. His life's work was the arrangement and administration of the stamp collections in the State Postal Museum. He collaborated on many technical works. He put out a monograph on the stamps of Baden. He published a catalogue of the stamp collection in the State Postal Museum. He published the first volume of the Petschek Brothers collection of postal stationery. He continued the Great Handbook of Philately started by Teltz. From 1892 to 1895 he published a series of Postal Stationery of the German States, but it remained unfinished. On the 6th February 1905, he founded the Lindenberg Medal of the Berlin Philatelists' Club. It was designed by the noted engraver Max von Kawaczynski. From 1891 Lindenberg was a contributor to the Deutsche Briefmarken Zeitung, for which he wrote under the pen-name D. Richter.

Moschkau, Alfred

Alfred Moschkau was born in Löbau on the 24th January 1840. He was a doctor and writer on history. He died on the 27th May 1912 in Oybin bei Zittau. He was a philatelist from his 11th year. From 1870 to 1912 he was editor of the following journals: Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, Dresden; Magazin für Briefmarkensammler, Oybin; Der Philatelist, Oybin; Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal, Leipzig; Weltpost, Vienna; Germania, Oybin; Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung. In 1870 he organized the first German stamp exhibition in Dresden. In 1871 he founded the North German Philatelic Union in Dresden. He also started a stamp expertising facility. He was a honorary member of numerous philatelic societies in Germany.

Publications: Watermarks on stamps. – Handbook for the essays collector. – History of philately. - 1st Great German Stamp catalogue 1874. – Handbook for the postage stamp collector. – Stamp album. In 1915 O. H. Metzger wrote a bibliography on Moschkau.

Ohrt, Paul

He was born on the 1st November 1867. As a distinguished stamp tester [expertiser] he was awarded the Lindenberg Medal in 1923. He published the handbook of all known reprints.

Wagner, Hans

Hans Wagner was born in Wittenberg on the 18th September 1852. He studied at the Gymnasium. He then took up a military career. He finished up a captain. He won several medals. He collected stamps from his seventeenth year onwards. He published numerous papers in the philatelic press. In 1889 he was invited to the Rhineland, then the German, philatelic congresses. In 1896 came his election to the Federation of German and Austrian philatelic societies. In 1913 he became an honorary member of all the Federation societies. In 1909 the Mainz Collectors' Society founded the Hans Wagner Medal for services to philatelic organizations.

The driving force that pushed this piece of work to reach the publication stage was the wish to make known to as many people as possible all those who by their own personal will and desire have contributed, some more some less, to the development of philately in our country.

It was also as a debt of gratitude of a younger collector to the older collectors who with willingness, patience, and many personal sacrifices, have helped considerably the enhancement of this beautiful and educational hobby in our country and at the same time to the introduction of Greek postage stamps to the world.

In parallel, it is an attempt to fill an existing gap. As of today there is no publication that completely covers all the essential philatelic material. Even though over one hundred years have passed since philately has, timidly initially, but with a steady progress, appeared in our country.

Furthermore, this edition, wishes to honour for their valuable contributions those who are not with us as well as to those who are struggling today in the international philatelic circles in their effort to introduce Greek philately. The reader should know that among Greek philatelists there are some with an international reputation.

Therefore, in this dictionary I present the biographies of prominent Greek collectors, philatelists, stamp dealers and those who have shown philatelic interest and enthusiasm. Specifically, in this work are included those that have participated in exhibiting their collections at Pan-Hellenic or international philatelic exhibitions, those who have published scientific studies concerning Greek postage stamps, as well as those that have participated in our many philatelic societies.

Such a study appears for the first time in Greece and it might be one of the few – if not the only one – in the world. It is therefore natural that some errors and omissions might occur even though particular efforts has been expended to avoid them. I beg the reader to forgive such omissions or errors that he might find herein because of the extent and type of this study.

I owe warmest thanks to my co-worker at the Greek Embassy in Berlin Mrs Vana A. Lola, for her valuable assistance in editing and typing the material.

Finally, I would like to thank the printing house of Stratis Klapakis and Sons and their co-workers for the excellent presentation of this edition.

Dictionary Of Greek Philatelists

EXPLANATIONS

Most of the one thousand Greek philatelists that are included in this dictionary are listed in alphabetical order according to their last name. Each person is listed according to his philatelic areas of concern that are of public interest. To assist the potential reader who would like to create relationships with that person, we have included – whenever known – specific elements from the socio-professional dealings of the person listed.

For each person listed, the reader will find:

1. Information related to his participation in philatelic exhibitions and specifically, a description of the exhibited material, and the awards received.
2. Description of the title, place and date of his philatelic publications.
3. The name of the philatelic club in which he participated and his executive duties, the type of his duties and the time when he was first elected.
4. Any other philatelic experience that might be of use in this philatelic biography.

Due to the large number of philatelic clubs in our country it was necessary to use abbreviations, to avoid tiresome repetitions. For the older philatelic organisations an attempt was made to maintain the initials by which they used to be known in the Greek philatelic world. For the rest of the organisations, the author devised initials specifically for this work in order to facilitate the differentiation between organisations that use similar names. A table listing these abbreviations is included in the text to assist the readers.

It was also thought wise to include, at the end of the text, a series of photographs of Greek philatelists who are not with us any more.

Bibliographical sources for this dictionary, besides the listed references, were taken from philatelic publications, various articles in the newspapers as well as from catalogues of participants and catalogues of those who received awards in Pan-Hellenic or international philatelic exhibitions.

The events that are listed in this dictionary are as of the end of 1981.

PERSONALITIES OF PHILATELY

Philately as Art and Science

Philately is, without doubt, a way of collecting that has brought together many collectors and has spread all over the world. Since the beginning in 1840, when Sir Rowland Hill in England spoke of the use of the minute postal label, we can count in many millions the enthusiasts that have come together to enjoy this easy and pleasant way of collecting, spreading to the four corners of the earth.

Starting as a mere pastime, very early philately was a true art and even a science, and at the same time equally represented an important way to enrich the knowledge of man and to invest capital. Philately, in truth, besides constituting a notable way of collecting, has another important aspect – that of providing collectors with a great way of learning historic, geographic, political, and social events, connected to the evolution of humanity, to its uses and customs, traditions and cultures.

More than enough reason, therefore, to dignify this noble way of collecting and honour all those who for more than a century and a half have dedicated soul and heart to this art-science.

The volume that we are presenting now was born from the tireless pen of Paulo Sá Machado, a man who has dedicated a great part of his time and knowledge to philatelic activities, which was evidenced in his weekly page in O Comércio do Porto. Through dozens of pages, Paulo Sá Machado traced the character of 50 Personalities of Philately, most of them nationals, who remained very connected to stamps and to postal history and were followed by many afterwards.

The present compilation of Personalities makes accessible to the general public the personality and actions of so many men that gave to Postal History and Philately a development and impetus, showcasing this science and art which enriches and makes the spirit noble with the knowledge of human beings, bringing together at the same time the bonds of universal fraternity.

And as we wait for new Personalities to appear in the pages of O Comércio do Porto, we are printing herewith this notable gallery of 50 men who made philately their passion and left to humanity the legacy of an important testimony of cultural solidarity through this noble art of collecting that is philately.

Luís de Carvalho

Editor of O Comércio do Porto

Justification

This first volume of Personalities of Philately contains the first 50 personalities that we selected and give us an aspect of what the world of philately has been and very particularly the entities that personify philately in all its varied aspects.

We emphasize, as it could not be any other way, the philatelists, dealers, artists, responsible for the issuing of stamps and to all that were related in the philatelic world.

We also chose to only include in this Personalities of Philately people that unfortunately have already died, risking possible injustice by speaking about some and forgetting many others. We are aware in our conscience that in this series many personalities were left out, but we promise that in the second series we will try to make up for these absences.

We gave priority to Personalities of Philately of Portuguese philately or that were related to it, certain that we are continuing the work initiated many years ago, of writing a Portuguese History of Philately. At the end of the description of each personality, one will find the date on which it was published in O Comércio do Porto.

We need to thank the families of many of those included, since without them we would not have access to many facts that we consider of interest.

As we have already said on other occasions, we await data and suggestions for a second series to come out both here and in the prestigious newspaper O Comércio do Porto.

PERSONALITIES OF PHILATELY II

Philately in the Service of Culture

Raymond Weill wrote that a true collector dedicates himself to stamps primarily because he loves them⁽¹⁾. There are collectors who love 'primarily' their own stamps, but they also enjoy spreading the cultural experience and philatelic knowledge to related organisations and social communication.

Paulo Sá Machado set out to write many works about these subjects, and there were numerous titles that he worked on, his most recent initiative being to spread the word about the Personalities of Philately.

This second volume, which supplements the first exclusively dedicated to personalities, presents some important new aspects, as can be seen in the name index of some federations, associations, institutions, and banking entities, as well as club chapters connected to philately.

Having given this explanation about the structure of Personalities of Philately we can also add that the majority of these personalities and institutions are connected to history, to society, and to the Portuguese economy.

From here we can also discuss the importance of philately in the service of culture, which is actually an indispensable branch, to better comprehend the evolution of societies throughout time, pointing out obviously the political, monumental, scientific, literary and artistic ephemera, which mark most the life of people and humanity.

This historical and ontological nature would be reason enough to recognize how collectors are fundamental to the Portuguese culture, as was the case with Personalities of Philately which was compiled in dozens and dozens of pages of philately in O Comércio do Porto and which is dedicated to publishing this didactic work about this area of knowledge.

The huge work of Personalities of Philately, opening a large field of investigation, has contributed securely so that new collections may be started in a way that they are able one day also to participate in the philatelic and cultural development of this country.

Justification

The second series of Personalities of Philately contains more than 50 personalities, who marked the development of philately. They have a characteristic a bit different from the first series since, besides Portuguese figures, we present personalities of Spanish philately. They were philatelists, printers, engravers, artists and merchants, all profiled in the column Selo [Stamp] in the paper O Comércio do Porto over 50 weeks, and which we now compile into this book.

We provided a study for all the philatelists and then compiled the chronicles in this way to make it available to those who had no opportunity to read it every week.

At the end of the description of each personality, the date of the article in O Comércio do Porto is included. There were very few changes made to the published text, and when we did make changes, it was with the intention of making corrections to show the true facts.

We follow the same criteria adopted in the first series of Personalities of Philately as we only profile personalities who have died, in order to avoid possible conflicts and jealousies which unfortunately happen sometimes.

A last word of thanks to the families of this gallery of personalities that volunteered their precious collaboration, giving us a variety of information and even photographs as well as words of incentive that we are most thankful for. Very friendly thanks to all!

This time the name index is more extensive, not being too exhaustive, but we believe that we should not include personalities that were not related to philately in any shape or form.

PERSONALITIES OF PHILATELY III

Here Comes Number Three

This third in the series contains more than 50 personalities that are mentionable and faithful representatives in the development of philately. Unlike in the two earlier volumes, this is a bit different, since we present personalities that at first sight may look a bit distant to that which we call philately.

We represent here some foreign persons, some more modern than others, but all of them somewhat related to the world of philately.

We had the privilege to know personally many of them and others through writings or drafts of research in libraries, or even through some word we overheard.

We follow the previously adopted criteria, and we are sure that this way will allow students of philately a more profound knowledge.

We present at the end an index of all personalities who appeared in these volumes.

This volume is quite timely as we want to present a sincere and felt homage to Mother, who recently passed away, and who will no longer be reading, as she used to religiously do, this our last work. We remain with eternal longing.

WHO IS WHO IN PHILATELY?

The lexicon of important people in German philately in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries

On the Method

The entries follow in alphabetical order and umlauts (vowels with two dots) follow their respective vowels. Names written ae, ue, etc., are placed after ad, ud, etc.

Individual biographies contain entries for name, dates of birth and death, profession, collecting interests and area(s) of specialization, memberships, publications, exhibitions and awards, and honours, in that order. In a few cases, an evaluation has been added by the editors.

In the interest of brevity, simplicity, and ease of reference, some organisation's names or parts of names have been replaced by abbreviations. Thus, BSV means Stamp Club or Clubs (Briefmarkensammler-Verein or Vereinigungen), ArGe means working group (Arbeitsgemeinschaft) in BDPh (Federation of German philatelists; Bund Deutscher Philatelisten), and AG means working group of the now-defunct Philatelic Federation in the Cultural Office of the DDR (German Democratic Republic; Deutsche Demokratischer Republik).

Frequently-used abbreviations are according to the latest DUDEN [a common German dictionary]; in a few cases the distinction is according to the latest rules of spelling. We expect to have a complete list of abbreviations in the next edition.

Introduction

It is certainly no new idea to produce a list of deserving and, in their time, well-known philatelists; there had already been attempts in the first decade of the twentieth century. The World War, particularly the accompanying changes in political boundaries and alliances, the loss of literary and biographical materials, the development of philately into a popular movement, made it seem almost impossible to produce an updated list.

Philately, as a very popular hobby, lacks such a list. A Who's Who should contain the pioneers, living collectors, leading functionaries, and philatelists who have made a name for themselves.

It was decided to issue a Who's Who for the one-hundredth German Day of Philately at Soest in 1999, containing many of the philatelists connected to the German Federation of Philatelists and its predecessors. The support of the German Federation of Philatelists, represented by its President, Michael Adler, is evident in that many leading forces in the Federation are listed in the Who's Who.

The historical connection may be seen by the reader in that the listing contains people from areas that today are in our neighbouring countries that previously were close to the German Federation of Philatelists and who were the pioneers of philately, dating as far back as the middle of the previous century.

Thus, it was not easy to define criteria for inclusion and it was hard to stick to these criteria. The Who's Who should not be just a lexicon of philatelists, but a handbook of prominent philatelists that, in their time, not only left their signatures as collectors, but also as exhibitors, experts, dealers, or authors. The Who's Who should not list only the pioneers and the greats of philately, nor should it found a new "Top 100" club, it should also list the many "small people", the hitherto unknowns, the nameless many without whom the popular movement of philately never could have reached its present state.

It was not always possible to find enough information, dates, and other facts, for listing some people that should have been included. In some cases there wasn't enough correct information to justify putting it in print. Modern technology has come to the rescue, in that a separately issued CD-ROM contains an additional couple of hundred short biographies.

Of course, in the first edition of a work such as this, there will be errors of omission or fact. Furthermore, many biographies are incomplete; others are missing. Here I wish to ask all readers, particularly the connoisseurs and philatelists of today, to support our effort by sending us copies containing dates, facts, biographical information, pictures, etc. We are grateful for any corrections and additional information; these will be reflected in future editions.

I must not forget to thank all those who have supported this effort: Michael Adler for his call for support to the Federation of German Philatelists; Emil W. Mewes, Hans Paikert, and Hans-Georg Shlegel for copies of lists from the early twentieth century; Karlheinz Wittig and Wolfram Grallert for numerous enlargements and references; Wilhelm van Loo for the large number of portraits through which we can see what many of the people named herein looked like.

My particular thanks go to Dr. Udo Schwenk-Bresseler for his editorial work. He worked for almost two years in research, was responsible for the first draft of most entries, and gave form to the Who's Who. Also, his unique sense of humour is reflected in the effort. To him are due certain anachronisms and impossibilities. I must also not forget Norbert Röhm, who must be thanked for more than a hundred entries and even more pictures; these would not have been available to us, if he had not been there. He has accomplished the inimitable feat of preparing, in the shortest time, a row of historical philatelists and made them almost ready for print. A warm thanks!

OUTLINE OF A HISTORY OF POSTAGE STAMPS

AND OF STAMP COLLECTING (PHILATELY)

Dedicated most amicably to Germany's philatelists, most notably, however, to my honoured friends, worthy gentlemen devoted to the advancement of philately:

Gustav Schaubek in Dresden

Alwin Zschiesche in Leipzig.

If in what follows I endeavour to offer as complete as possible an indication and description of all watermarks found on postage stamps and envelopes, I do so for the simple but valid reason to offer to German collectors a protection, missing until now, to furnish authentic information in the face of an enormous mass of forgeries, often produced with artistic diligence, and when a watermark is present to have evidence of authenticity owing to the presence of the watermark itself in true copies.

Collectors in countries beyond Germany have been in possession of similar works for some time now. In their case, the activity of forgers does not blossom as with us (where, for example, a manufacturer of forged stamps in Ludwigshöhe near Lauf in Bavaria boasts in flysheets that he has in some 4-500 (!) places in Germany, branches and depots for his manipulations.), no doubt, these people know our weak spots, and, in connection with Swiss, obsessed by a spirit of speculation, take advantage of our ignorance, sending forgeries in abundance (with the watermark missing, as e.g. Natal, St. Helena, Tuscany, Spain, etc.), and because they find allies in unscrupulous dealers, realize huge sales, attracting collectors with deceitful similarity and low prices. The importance, thus, of the work under discussion should be made clear for the collecting world, its usefulness and becoming acquainted with a know-ledge of watermarks.

The Outline of a history of postage stamps and of stamp collecting (Philately) which I place in front of the chief content, should be of interest for more recent collectors and even for the layman, giving information on how philately evolved to the point where it counts on enthusiasts from pole to pole; also, the collector devoted to philately since its beginning will, upon reading, be reminded with pleasure of the stages philately has had to pass through before achieving its present significance.

I believe I have met a pleasing duty in dedicating this small work to my honoured friends Schaubek and Zschiesche. both have made themselves meritorious in the advancement of philately, in part by way of the publication of scientifically compiled albums and good catalogues, in part also as profound experts of philately as a result of steady activity with a literary connection.

With his best wishes for a further prospering of philately the author expects friendly acceptance of his small work.

Dresden, 1st May 1871

The Author

Outline of a history of postage stamps and of stamp collecting (Philately)

I

Postage stamps, which have come into existence due to ever increasing frequency of mail are evidence of value issued by governments just as paper money, and serve, as no doubt is well known, for the payment of postage on mail. The stamps are decorated partly with the portrait of the country's sovereign or other persons of merit, in part as well with coats of arms, emblems, allegories, numbers, etc. and likewise show an indication of value with diverse colours according to their differences. They are usually produced by means of steel engraving as well as with a special paper, as used by finance authorities for paper money. There are in fact many countries that have watermarks applied in the case of postage stamps as well as on paper money, in both cases to obviate falsification.

We distinguish from stamps the following additional types as well:

1. Essays and proof prints initiated by a postal authority when a previous issue is to be abolished and a new set of stamps is contemplated. Differing in type and in colour, the postal authority then selects the corresponding new stamps which will then circulate as officially issued;
2. The so-called proposals, sample stamps, which as a result of competition on the part of the postal authorities are submitted by private parties for the examination and possibly approval and acceptance.
3. Reprints, i.e., prints created using original plates and if possible similar paper, sold to collectors.

Other additional types can also be chemical falsification of official postage stamps and imitations, but these are in fact variations belonging to another document.

History of Postage Stamps

While the history of postal activity can be traced back into far antiquity, to the time of Darius I, Augustus, Constantine the Great (306-337 BC) we do not find traces of postal organisation until the beginning of the 17th century, notably in 1635 where, in Paris, a private person received from the government permission to establish a kind of municipal post. That person issued for the purpose, stamps on which the date of posting had to be noted down, so that repeated use was rendered impossible. In the year 1653 Postal authorities issued in Paris, in accordance with a regulation, stamps (also envelopes?) which had the value of one sou (halfpenny) and had the inscription port payé. These too were available for municipal mail only, and circulated, as the above, for a short time only. Possibly the reason for this was that under Louis XIV the French postal authorities leased the mail and yielded to the leaseholder arrangements, determination of the postage fees, etc.

From that moment on, all notice of stamp issues is missing until the year 1812 at which time, as reported by the Leipziger Magazin, shipping companies in Scotland are said to have made use of a type of letter and parcel stamp. We have more exact information regarding an envelope issued in Italy in the year 1818: on the front, was a stamp applied in blue colour by means of a manual cancel representing the three values of 15, 25, and 50 centesimos, and show (see the illustration of this rare stamp, to the left) a messenger on horseback in different frames. This issue was followed in 1820, by a second, coinciding exactly with the first, only here the stamps were colourless, in relief [embossed]. Both issues, it seems, had a short existence only. Of great value for the history of philately are the three envelope essays from England, created following Dickinson's idea on the 7th July 1837, along with the report of a Commission which had as a result the introduction of a reduced postage fee suggested by Sir Rowland Hill, submitted to Parliament and recommended by the Commission.

Though these did not circulate, in the strictest sense of the word these were the first stamps, followed by such an enormous number that asserted itself in the field permanently. Essay after essay surfaced until as a result of the acceptance of Hill's Penny franking system, on the 27th April 1840, there appeared the first official envelopes after the drawing of W. Mulready, and on the 13th May the first postage stamps showing the portrait of Queen Victoria. It was not long until the use of stamps found approbation: after England there followed with the issue of stamps Brazil in 1843, Finland 1845, North America 1846, Russia 1848; in Germany - Bavaria in 1849, in 1850 Saxony and Prussia, and later all districts and states as they were being touched by culture. The number of diverse stamps in existence then and to this day exceeds 4,000, surely a number that speaks for itself when one takes into account that its coming into existence occurred barely 22 years ago.

II

Philately The nature of postage stamp collecting for which, for a number of years the word philately has been adopted, stemming from Greek and translated occupation with that which serves for postage is said to be due to a bet, made years ago according to legend, by one who said he could procure so many stamps he could cover an entire room and denied by his opponent. Just how philately could come into being on the basis of so meaningless a bet is not clear to me; nonetheless, I found it necessary to mention this curiosity before other accounts.

After philately had found devotees in England, France, and Belgium for quite some time, one began in Germany toward the end of the fifties to find it to one's liking. Notably, it was the firm of G. Wuttig in Leipzig which, with the publication of the first German album and establishment of the first German stamp dealership, deserves praise and esteem. Collecting received fresh impetus in that rich and poor, old and young, without difference, participated, so that in the years 1861 to 1865 one could say that half the world was collecting.

There appeared in Germany, in addition to albums (that of Wuttig, 1863 in a 6th edition, [Bauschke], 1864 in a 9th, Claudius, 1864 in a 2nd, and Ludwig likewise in a 2nd edition) specialised newspapers and catalogues, as well. In reference to the former, I mention the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler (Magazine for Postage Stamp Collectors) (Zschiesche & Köder, Leipzig); the Börsenblatt für Briefmarkenhandel (Market Paper for Stamp Dealers) (Reichel & Co., Kaufbeuren); and as the continuation of the same the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung (German Postage Stamp Paper) (E. Roschlau, Coburg); further, the illustrated work Der Briefmarken-Freund (The Stamp-Friend) (Ruhl in Leipzig).

In the matter of catalogues, the one compiled by Bauschke (of the Literary Museum, Leipzig) and the one compiled scientifically by Oscar Berger-Levrault (Strasbourg), up to now never improved upon nor replaced. Commerce was established in all larger and smaller cities, frequently visited stamp bourses were founded in Leipzig and in Kaufbeuren, as the stamp had become merchandise for the purpose of starting collections the value of which rose and fell according to demand and supply, as any other commodity. Princes appointed Court Stamp merchants (Prince of Orange; in addition to him, other Royal persons collected also: the Emperor of Austria, Pope Pius IX, Princess Sophie of Saxony, etc.); composers (Hamm and others) created stamp polkas, and under Christmas trees were displayed stamp games of all kinds. In England and in France it was worse yet when the ladies wore ribbons with penny stamps printed on these, on their hats, and where carnival costumes were produced with stamps. Paris, London, and New York also had their splendid stamp bourses (Paris: Palais Royal) and with the dealers such as Moens in Brussels, Mahé and Maury in Paris, Young & Stockall in Liverpool, etc. To this day, none in Germany can compare, though we do possess some fairly large dealerships (such as, for example, B. A. Zschiesche, Leipzig; Hoch, Berlin; Dietze and Expedition der Deutschen Briefmarken-Zeitung, Dresden).

Regarding foreign literature, I list the journals Le Timbre Poste (Moens, Brussels), Le Timbrophile (Mahé, Paris), The Stamp Collector's Magazine ([Alfred] Smith & Co., Bath), and The Philatelist (Stafford Smith & Co., Brighton), etc., as the best, but the journals abroad, generally, exist by the dozens (among these the one by Maury, Paris; Jean, Wegmuth; Industria, Brighton, and so forth.) Among catalogues I cite the illustrated manual by Moens (Brussels), the Guide de l'Amateur de Timbre Poste by Baillieu, The Illustrated Catalogue by Dr. Gray as the most outstanding, and the albums by Justin Lallier, Moens, and Bauschke as the most practical. No wonder that the suddenly surfaced and enormously-advancing philately, often referred to as a mania, caused a sensation among laymen, and evoked attacks by opponents. Just consider the childlike, pitiful article in the *Gartenlaube which, to be sure, represented the opposite of the Bazar (which in its annual for 1864 brought us an illustrated description of all stamps) and which at the time threatened a real blow to the matter. Nevertheless, philately had established itself firmly because its benefits were so evident, and the struggle ended finally with a thorough defeat of the opponents, as shown by the philately of the present which I shall discuss further.

* Which, considering its changed political orientation in 1866, may well have modified its opinion about postage stamps and philately, as well. (Translator's Note: A popular family magazine in Germany during the 19th century.)

The seed scattered by men such as e.g. Prof. v. Volpi, W. Th. Clausius, Prof. Dr. Weiss, Th. Israel, Dr. Joseph, G. Wuttig, G. Bauschke; and abroad Moens, Pemberton, Dr. Magnus, Dr. Viner, Dr. Gray, Berger-Levrault, Consul Lesley, E. Régnard, et al. - collectors themselves then and now - and their support of the rich unfolding of philatelic literature did not fall upon dry ground by any means. It has prospered and borne the most lovely fruits.

Returning, however, to the use and worth of philately, can we quote a more applicable, more clever remark than that of the famous Dr. Gray, member of the British Museum who says: The benefit and attraction to collect any type of objects lies in that one educates spirit and eye to careful observation, precise comparison, correct judgment about similarities and differences, and to interest the collector in design or in art manifested during its creation and perfection as well as in the country and its history that has brought forth or used the collected objects. Stamps offer good objects for all spheres of study, as they are sufficiently different to offer broad outlines for their classification. The fact that one receives stamps from so many countries invites the question what conditions occasioned their introduction, the history of those countries that issued them, why indeed some countries as e.g., France, have found it necessary to undertake so many modifications in a few years of form and design, while other countries never had occasion to do so.

The changes that occur in these postage stamps indicate on the whole an important historical event, e.g., the accession to the throne of a sovereign, a change of government, or the incorporation of a smaller state into a larger one, some change in the coinage, etc. As a result, a stamp collection can be regarded in the same way as a coin collection, as an excerpt from the history of civilised peoples during the past quarter of a century; and at the same time as a collection of works of art on a small scale, showing deviations in design and execution which characterise the artistic style of the countries issuing them. The extent of a collection and the manner in which it is arranged and maintained speak for the zeal, sense of order and of cleanliness, and the taste of the collector:

I believe that I need not add anything to these words, as they characterise philately precisely in all its facets, and so turn now to the philately of the present.

The philately of the present

The philately of the present is different from that of the past, no poorer in terms of devotees nor of literature but a more serious one, cultivated by scientifically educated men, by youth eager to learn, equal to numismatics, and has become a science. This is proven by academies for philatelists existing in North America (vide the American Journal of Philately, 1869, page 83), by the museum installed in the Hôtel de Monnai in Paris for postage stamps, further by societies of philatelists in London, Paris, New York, and Heidelberg who strive to gain new devotees for philately and to pioneer new paths for it. They endeavour to create a place for it amongst other sciences such as that of coins, of heraldry, but also - and this is one of its principal goals - to work against the deceitful speculations for which philately is used, I mean, the fabrication and sale of counterfeit stamps to collectors.

Unfortunately, the fabrication of imitations and deluge of the entire stamp market has turned into a dangerous enemy of philately, recognized long ago by serious collectors and aimed at by seeking the extermination of that evil or so shameless and mean an attitude as that of those manufacturers (who, by the way, have their seat in Boston, Hamburg, Nurnberg, etc.) there is no remedy but the application of that old saying "I'll do to you as you do to me". Here we come upon a matter that cannot be possible on the part of philatelists for reasons of honour, so that those miserable fellows will be free for quite some time until their works will catch up with them. That such a thing will happen is a matter and duty for philatelic papers: (the Leipzig Briefmarken-Sammler (Stamp Collector), editor Kümmel, brings Remarks in outline about war sciences, etc.) which by describing these rotten manipulations cautions the collecting world in time. Support is not lacking by any means, brave fighters stand at their side, among them Pemberton, Moens, and the philatelic societies I have mentioned above. Alongside the philatelic society at Heidelberg, there was formed in the same city a Society for the Suppression of Anti-philatelic Elements, to whom we are indebted for the clarification of many a false product from Schweinfurt-Kissingen, Leitmeritz, Dresden-Express, Saxony-Bohemian Steamship Company, etc. but which regrettably seems to have disappeared, as for some time all news and signs of life are missing. One sees clearly from all this that collectors cannot afford to relax, must not relax, till a blow by a powerful fist puts a decisive end to this dishonourable and deceitful activity.

We now arrive again at literature and can proclaim with joyful satisfaction how it attained an amazing extension, brought about and supported on the one hand by previous, and on the other by newly-won followers. I name as such in Germany G. Schaubek, A. Treichel, Prof. Eltz, M. Trauwitz; in England Overy Taylor, Fentonia, J. C. Wilson, Dr. Boley, W. Dudley [Atlee], Thomas F. Erskine; in France, M. H. Boyer, G. Rampont; in America J. W. Scott, Walter C. Howard; in Spain M. P. de Figueroa, member of the Academy of History, etc., who deserve rightfully to be mentioned here.

I begin with the presentation of the most significant philatelic literature production once more with the albums, and can mention initially the album founded by Wuttig and edited by G. Bauschke, in 1866 in a French edition; in 1867 in an English one; in the German language, however, re-edited by Kümmel, toward the end of 1870 in a 19th edition, with each edition being 6-10,000 copies; the one by Claudius, recently re-edited by Alwin Zschiesche, came from the press in 1870 in a fifth edition; Lallier's in a 9th; that of Moens in an 8th; the one by Scott & Co. in a 3rd edition. It would lead us too far to mention all the small or worthless albums (by Rinsum, etc.), as these exist en masse, but I shall be mindful of a German album which reached the market just before Christmas 1870, surpassing all the previous ones in its usefulness and originality: the one edited by G. Schaubek, the Permanent Album. With it, a great step has been taken for the better, and the fact that in barely 3 months 5,000 copies were sold proves convincingly that the editor and compiler of this difficult problem "Improvement of Albums" has solved it with skill, recognised by all authorities with gratitude.

Of the previously mentioned German specialised publications none exists to this day, but in part they have been replaced by better ones. I mention the Briefmarken-Sammler (Stamp Collector) (Kümmel, Leipzig) in existence now for six years though more recently slightly insipid, and the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung (German Postage Stamp Newspaper) (Dresden) which enjoys a significant reputation; a specialised paper that appeared at the beginning of the year 1869, Bazar für den Briefmarken-Sammler (Market for the Postage Stamp Collector) (Heidelberg) is, unhappily, in a bad way while the Briefmarken-Anzeiger (Stamp Announcement) by v. Cordona (Trieste) has had a similar fate, just as a publication by the same name by Arthur Wild in Kassel, appeared in a few numbers only. In Belgium there appears now as always the admirably edited Le Timbre Poste, in Paris Le Timbrophile, in Bath The Stamp Collector's Magazine, and in New York The American Journal of Philately. Along with these there is a mass of philatelic papers, smaller than the others, that surface and disappear again, and to name them all would be useless.

Among catalogues in the German language the best are those by G. Schaubek (Dresden) and the Literary Museum (Leipzig) which, however, cannot lay claim to the mention of value (they are in a limited sense catalogues only) as is the French catalogue by Oscar Berger-Levrault (Strasburg, 1867) nor are they as complete as the Moens catalogue or the one by Mahé and others. In Germany one advances, as also in other matters, slowly but surely, as proven by Schaubek's album. Possibly one may expect from that quarter an equally valuable catalogue soon, by which means a very sensible gap would be filled.

Additionally are to be mentioned: A Descriptive Catalogue by A. Smith & Co., Bath (9th edition) and The Illustrated Catalogue by Stafford Smith & Co., Brighton (2nd edition); as handbooks, The Leader in the Labyrinth of Postage Stamps Issued so far by G. Schubert, Royal Saxon Commission Councillor (Dresden, 1867) and The Postage Stamp Collector's Hand-Book by S. Allan Taylor (Boston, 1867); as specialty items, however, Timbre de Moldavie et de Roumanie by Dr. Magnus (Brussels, 1869, 2nd edition); Timbres d'Offices Americaines by James Lesley, United States Vice-Consul (Brussels, 1868); Notice Historique sur le Timbre Poste by M. H. Boyer, Director of Posts in Marennnes, and Essais sur les Filigranes des Timbres Postes by Dr. Magnus.

To be sure, the previously-mentioned German stamp bourses are closed* and the composers have found for the compositions of the present moment suitable names, nor have there been appointments of Court postage stamp dealers (as far as I know, the King of Portugal, Princess Mathilde, the spouse of Prince Bonaparte, collect now), and quite possibly - I admit it freely - there may be fewer collectors now than before, but philately rests upon a more solid basis than ever. Even the past wars that convulsed almost all of Europe could not shake it, in fact, the war that contributed so much to Germany's renown the past year and beginning of this, has contributed to increase the number of devotees of philately, with a cover of the so-called balloon stamp in the hand of a layman, an opponent of philately, having attained priceless value! The public exhibition of his excellent collection by the author on behalf of the Field Post Office was supported by the highest postal authorities but visited as well by non-collectors. Even in the most remote parts of the world the press found it worthwhile to carry information on this unique exhibition, and as there was no lack of voices greeting this undertaking with pleasure, one also heard those of non-collectors who judged philately most favourably, as for example, on the part of the editor of the Dresdner Anzeiger, Dr. Springer amongst others.

* The Paris bourse seems to have been closed down even before war was declared although in the Champs Elysées there existed some postage stamp exchanges. F. C. Petersen, in his Genre pictures from the modern Babel, page 138 (Stuttgart, 1870) recalls these and in that connection remarks as follows: Initially, the chief centre in Paris of the stamp friends was the Terrasse des Feuillants in the Tuilerie garden. Young gentlemen and ladies promenaded in the shade of elm trees and chestnut trees, and in the open traded freely. Later there came into existence at the Palais Royal a formal stamp bourse where exchange prospered and business was conducted on a large scale. Finally, even the booksellers along the wharves and merchants selling writing paper took over, with more or less well-endowed albums and accompanying text - English, Spanish, Italian, French - and now even the grocers, for a long time representatives of photography, seem to have found pleasure with these coloured little things and the profit they yield. Surely, to complete the picture, only the exchange business in the Champs Elysées was missing!

And so I have arrived at the end of my attempt to present a brief outline of the history of postage stamps and of philately. Truthful and neutral, without eloquent adornments, just from my pen, may it find among the collecting world and among all well-educated men friendly acceptance and benevolent judgment.

OUTLINE OF A HISTORY OF POSTAGE STAMPS AND STAMP COLLECTING (PHILATELY)

Dedicated with sincerest friendship to all philatelists “Wherever the German tongue is heard”

When at the beginning of the past year I published my work on watermarks, I ended the Foreword with the warmest wishes for the development of philately. I had then simply no idea how soon I would have to extend and improve on this work, nor to what extent my expressed wishes would be fulfilled. It is an incontrovertible fact that during its almost two decades of existence, philately has extended its scope further and further. Its vitality, its real worth and its competent presence have also become obvious, but it has never stood so high, not even in what are called the mania years of 1862 to 1864, as it does now. With serious purpose, the scientific collectors who were the leading ones in Germany got together under the name Verein Deutscher Philatelisten (Society of German Philatelists) to exchange information on the whole range of philately, to extend philatelic endeavours and to eliminate abuses as far as possible by preventing forgeries and imitations from being sold as real stamps. All these are worthy aims in our opinion. Two new magazines have been added to the existing couple of well-read German philatelic papers. A. Moschkau's Magazin für Markensammler and L. May's Allgemeiner Briefmarken-Anzeiger. A hearty welcome is extended to them. Stamp bourses have also appeared, of which the one in Hamburg has attracted notice by the extent of its transactions, and where stamp dealings are carried out overnight on inspection. Collectors have also multiplied very satisfactorily, and there are numberless adherents of philately, including a large number of experienced and outstanding individuals.

Since the demands on our domestic literature are more extensive than before, how should they be met? To meet them is the principal task of the literature, and my contribution is this new edition of my little work, which had such an outstandingly favourable reception from the philatelic press.

Perhaps I should begin by explaining its value for every philatelist? If its purpose is not clear to everybody, it will be a real service to German collectors in giving them guidance on the enormous mass of often very artistic forgeries where the presence of a watermark may be decisive. Not only this, but the true philatelist will find it a satisfactory guide in his search for knowledge.

The brief outline of a history of postage stamps and stamp collecting (philately), with which I preface my main work, will be of particular interest to new collectors in particular and perhaps to lay people as well. It will tell them how philately has gradually spread from one pole to another, with adherents in castle and cottage. Veteran collectors who have embraced philately since its inception will recall past days on reading it, days in which flowers and fruitfulness alternated with storms and tempests, though our favourite pursuit was not harmed, thanks to its supporters and promoters. May they continue to bloom and grow!

Outline of a History of Postage Stamps and Stamp Collecting (Philately)

I

Postage stamps, which through the constantly increasing frequency of mail-carrying, are equivalent to the paper money issued by governments and, as is well known, serve to frank the correspondence. The stamps are partly decorated with the portrait of the sovereign or other deserving personalities, partly with coats of arms, emblems, symbols, numerals, etc. They also bear the indication of the value in various colors depending on their difference. They are usually made by means of steel engraving, and also a special paper, as used by paper money for finance; Yes, there are many states which, like the latter, also have watermarks applied to the stamps, in both cases in order to prevent any forgeries.

We distinguish between the following secondary types of postage stamps:

- 1) Essays and proofs arranged by the postal authority when it comes to abolishing an old series of stamps and issuing a new one. Different in type and color, the postal authority selects the most appropriate of them. which thereby are set on course as official stamps:
- 2) the so-called proposals, sample stamps, which, as a result of a tender for a contest, are submitted to the postal authority, by private individuals for examination or be submitted for acceptance;
- 3) New prints, ie prints made using the old original plates and paper that are as similar as possible, which can be sold to collectors;

Other secondary types would perhaps still be the chemical falsifications of official postage stamps and the imitations, but these are actually varieties that belong under a special heading.

History of Postage Stamps. While the history of the postal system can be traced back to the great antiquity, it is attributed to the times of Darius I, Augustus, Constantine the Great (306-337 BC), we only find traces of postage stamps at the beginning of the 17th century, namely in 1635, when a private individual in Paris received permission from the government to set up a kind of city post office. For this purpose, he issued stamps on which the date of posting the letter had to be noted, which made it impossible to use it again. In 1653, according to a regulation, the postal authority of Paris itself issued stamps (including envelopes?), which were worth one sous and bore the inscription “port payé”; They, too, could only be used for city post letters and, like the former, seem to have only circulated for a short time, which in the case of the latter was perhaps due to the fact that the French post office was leased under Louis XIV in 1676 and the leaseholder was entirely responsible for the facilities, postage regulations, etc were entrusted to them. From here there is no news of any stamp issues up to the year 1812, when, as the “Leipziger Magazin” reports, shipping companies in Scotland are said to have used kind of postage and parcel stamps. We know more precisely of an envelope issue from Italy in 1818; the stamps applied to the obverse by hand stamps in blue color represent the three values 15, 25 and 50 centesimos and show (see accompanying image of this rare stamp) a courier on horseback in different frames. This emission was followed in 1820 by a second one, exactly the same as the first one, only here the stamps were colorless in relief. Both emissions also seem to have had only a short existence. Those three cover essays of England, which were created according to Dickinson’s idea and presented to Parliament on July 7, 1837 at the same time as the Commission report, which resulted in the introduction of the reduced letter postage suggested by Sir Rowland Hill, are of great value for the history of postage stamps as recommended by the Commission.

Even if they didn't get into circulation, they were in the strictest sense of the word the first stamps that the now enormous number could follow, finally maintaining the field permanently. Essay after essay appeared until, following the adoption of Hill’s penny postage system, the first official envelopes based on W. Mulready’s drawing appeared on the 27th April 1840, and the first postage stamps with a portrait of Queen Victoria appeared on the 13th May. It didn't last long and using stamps was popular; England was followed with the issue of postage stamps in 1843 Brazil, 1845 Finland, 1846 North America, 1848 Russia, - in Germany 1849 Bavaria, 1850 Saxony, Prussia and so gradually all countries and states as far as they were affected by the advancing culture, so that the number of various postage stamps that have existed up to now and currently exist exceeds 4000, certainly a number that speaks for itself if one takes into account their actual origin scarcely 22 years ago.

II

Philately For a good many years now, the business of collecting postage stamps has been designated by the Greek-based word philately, which means “ardent concern with the means of franking”. It is said to owe its origin and existence to a bet that someone made some years ago, that he could collect enough stamps to paper a room, which his opponent denied. This anecdote is accepted today, but I am not entirely clear whether and why it gave rise to philately, and so I thought it necessary to look more closely at this curious story.

After philately had found widespread acceptance in England, France and Belgium, people in Germany began to take an interest in it at the end of the fifties.

The firm of G. Wuttig of Leipzig were very useful in this respect, as they put out the first German album and began the first stamp dealing, collecting was taken up by rich and poor, old and young without distinction, an unexpected development that left half the world, so to speak, collecting in the years 1861 to 1865.

Albums appeared in Germany (that from Wuttig in 1863, 6 editions, [Bauschke] in 1864 in 9 editions, Claudius in 1864 in 2 editions and Ludwig, also in 2 editions). There were also periodicals and catalogues. In this connection I might mention the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler (Zschiesche and Köder, Leipzig), the Börsenblatt für den Briefmarkenhandel (Reichel and Co., Kaufbeuren) and its continuation, the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung (E. Roschlau, Cobourg,) and also the illustrated work Der Briefmarken-Freund (Ruhl of Leipzig). Of the catalogues, there is the one by Bauschke (of the Literary Museum, Leipzig) and the scientifically produced one by Oskar Berger-Levrault (Strasbourg), no better one than which has yet appeared. Dealerships have been set up in all larger and smaller towns, and well-frequented stamp bourses have been started in Leipzig and Kaufbeuren, since stamps have become a commodity for collectors, with their prices rising and falling in the usual way according to supply and demand. Princes have become stamp collectors (the Prince of Orange: other high-ranking personages apart from him have been collectors. The Emperor of Austria, Pope Pius IX, Princess Sophie of Saxony, etc.) Composers (Hamm, etc) have written postage-stamp polkas, and a whole range of stamp games have appeared under Christmas trees. There has been a mischievous spirit in England and France, where ladies have worn ribbons stuck with penny stamps in their hats, and entire fancy-dress costumes have been made of stamps. Paris, London and New York also have big stamp markets (Paris: Palais Royal), and no German firm can rank with Moens in Brussels, Mahé and Maury in Paris, Young & Stockall in Liverpool, etc., though we have seen some big dealers (e.g. B. A. Zschiesche, Leipzig; Hoch, Berlin; Dietze and Expedition der Deutschen Briefmarken-Zeitung, Dresden). Of the foreign literature, I would rate as the best the magazines Le Timbre-Poste (Moens, Brussels), Le Timbrophile (Mahé, Paris), The Stamp Collector's Magazine (Smith & Co., Bath), and The Philatelist (Stafford Smith & Co., Brighton), though there are dozens of magazines published abroad (those from Maury, Paris; Jean, Wegmuth; Industria, Brighton, etc.) In my opinion the most admirable catalogues are the Illustrated Manual from Moens, the Guide de l'Amateur from Baillieu, and the Illustrated Catalogue from Dr. Gray, but the most practical are the albums from Justin Lallier, Moens and Bauschke.

It was surprising to find philately emerging so suddenly and progressing so widely that it has with reason been referred to as a "mania" amongst its supporters, whereas its opponents have thought of it rather as a storm in a tea cup? We need only think of the wretchedly childish article in the *Gartenlaube, which opposed the collection of stamps in its 1864 volume and appeared to deal philately a heavy blow for the moment. However, philately had so many obvious uses that it soon recovered its standing, and the quarrel ended with the total downfall of its opponents. This proves that philately has a future, of which I shall now speak.

* When this magazine altered its political affiliation in 1866, it also altered its view of philately.

The seeds sown by such men as: Prof. v. Volpi, W. Th. Clausius, Prof. Dr. Weiss, Th. Israel, Dr. Joseph, G. Wuttig, G. Bauschke; and Moens, Pemberton, Dr. Magnus, Dr. Viner, Dr. Gray, Berger-Levrault, Consul Lesley, E. Régnard, et al., who have all been and still are collectors aiding the rich development of philatelic literature with skill and perseverance, have not fallen on barren ground. They have grown and borne the most beautiful fruit.

However, to get back to the use and value of philately, let us look at a striking and polished dictum from the famous Dr. Gray of the British Museum. He says: The utility and charm of collecting any type of object lies in using one's mind and eyes for the exact comparison and correct evaluation of the difference and similarities they show, to interest the collector in the design and art that went at the time into their production and manufacture and in the history of the countries which produce or use the objects being collected. Postage stamps are good subjects for all branches of study, since they are sufficiently, different to afford broad outlines for classification. The fact that stamps are available from so many countries leads us to the question of the history of the countries that issued them, what was the reason, why certain countries (e.g. France) found it necessary to make many changes in the design and value of their stamps, whereas other countries found no need to do this.

The changes in these postage stamps relate mainly to important historical events e.g. the ascent of a ruler to the throne, a change in the government, the absorption of a small state by a greater one, a change in the value of the coinage, etc. Thus, a collection of stamps, like a collection of coins, gives an epitome of the history of civilized nations during the last quarter of a century. At the same time their great variations in design and production act as a collection of small-scale art works, since they are characteristic of the artistic style of the countries which issued them. The extent of the collection, the style and method by which it is built-up and maintained, is a signpost to the industry, sense of order, sense of neatness and the taste of the collector.

I do not think I can deal here with everything characteristic of philately in all its branches and ramifications, and so will pass on to: the Philately of the Present Day.

The Philately of the Present Day differs from the earlier; it is not poorer in active devotees, not poorer in literature, but it is more serious, well-provided with scientifically inclined men and studious young people, and now stands on equal terms with numismatics. In North America there are schools for philatelists (see The American Journal of Philately, 1869, p.83), there is a museum for postage stamps in the Paris Mint, and there are philatelic societies in London, Paris, New York and Heidelberg whose aim is to get new adherents for philately, to expand its scope on a level with numismatics, heraldry, etc. Also – and this is one of their main aims – to act against the fraudulent speculations that use philately, by which I mean the fabrication and sale of forged stamps to collectors.

Unfortunately, the fabrication of forged stamps and the swamping of the market with them is an internal and very dangerous enemy of philately, as serious collectors have recognised for a long time. Rooting out this evil must be a primary objective, but to deal with this shameless and appalling trade, which is located in Boston, Hamburg, Nuremberg, etc., there is no other way than to follow the old proverb which says “as you to me, so I to you”, and here we come up against the fact that philatelists do not like to risk their reputation, so every serious patron must be given his head for a short time before his work can follow him. The fact that it does happen however is the concern above all of the philatelic periodicals (the Leipzig Briefmarken-Sammler, edited by Kummel will soon publish Outline of a sketch on military science) which by describing every piece of concocted work has put the world of collectors on the right lines and warned them. They have on their side such spirited campaigners as Pemberton, Moens, and the societies named above. Alongside the Philatelic Society in Heidelberg there is also a Society for the Suppression of Anti-Philatelic Elements, which we have to thank for exposing many fake products (from Schweinfurt-Kissingen, Leitmeritz, Dresden-Express, Saxony-Bohemia Steamship Company, etc). Unfortunately though, this seems to have disappeared, at least there have been no reports or signs of life from it for a long time. We can see from all this that philatelists cannot afford to stand with their hands in their pockets until someone else puts a stop to this deceitful, dishonest activity.

We now have turn back again to the literature, and are happy to show how an amazing expansion has been achieved and supported on the one hand by earlier devotees and on the other by newer ones: amongst these I will name in Germany G. Schaubek, A. Treichel, Prof. Eltz, M. Trauwitz, in England Overy Taylor, Fentionia, J. C. Wilson, Dr. Boley, W. Dudley [Atlee], Thomas F. Erskine; in France M. H. Boyer, G. Rampont; in America J. W. Scott, Walter C. Howard; in Spain M. P. de Figueroa, member of the Historical Academy, etc., who have every right to be mentioned here.

I will begin by introducing the most significant philatelic literature again with the albums, and will mention first the one issued by Wuttig with the cooperation of G. Bauschke. There was a French edition in 1866, an English edition in 1867, and the 19th edition of the German version, edited by Kümmel, appeared at the end of 1870. 6-10,000 copies of this were issued. The Claudius album, re-edited by Alwin Zschiesche, reached its 5th edition in 1870, the Lallier its 9th, the Moens its 8th, and that from Scott and Co. its 3rd. It would be going too far to list here all the minor or worthless albums (Rinsum, etc), although a great many of them exist. However, I will mention one more German album that came on the market before Christmas 1870 and exceeds all the others in usefulness and originality. This is the permanent album from G. Schaubek. This represents a major step forward, and the fact that over 5,000 copies were sold in barely three months shows how well the publisher and editor had managed to solve the difficult problem of “improving the album”, as all authorities have acknowledged with gratitude.

None of the German magazines mentioned earlier has survived, but they have been replaced in part by better. I will mention Briefmarken-Sammler, which has lasted six years but has unfortunately become very stale in recent years (Leipzig, Kümmel), followed by Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung (Dresden) which enjoys a very good reputation, one appeared at the start of the year 1869, Bazar für den Briefmarken-Sammler (Heidelberg) but is unfortunately not doing very well, whilst Briefmarken-Anzeiger from v. Cordonna (Trieste) and one of the same name from Arthur Wild (Cassel) suffered the same fate, i.e. only a few numbers have appeared. Le Timbre-Poste, then as now excellently edited, appears in Belgium, Le Timbrophile in Paris, The Stamp Collector's Magazine in Bath, and The American Journal of Philately in New York. Along with these are a number of smaller journals that quickly appeared and disappeared, and to name them all would be pointless.

The best catalogues in the German language come from G. Schaubek (Dresden) and the Literary Museum (Leipzig), though they have no claim to providing a value (strictly speaking they are only lists) like the French catalogue of Oscar Berger-Levrault (Strasbourg 1867), or to be as complete as the catalogues of Moens, Mahé and others. As with all things there is progress, though slow in Germany. This is shown by the Schaubek album, which was followed quickly by a much more valuable one which met a much-felt want.

Others that should be mentioned are: A Descriptive Catalogue from A. Smith & Co. Bath (9th edition), and The Illustrated Catalogue from Stafford Smith & Co., Brighton (2nd edition): amongst the handbooks, Guide to the Labyrinth of Stamps Appearing to Date from G. Schubert, Royal Saxon State Commissioner (Dresden 1867), and The Postage Stamp Collectors Handbook from S. Allan Taylor (Boston 1867). Amongst the specialist publications are Stamps of Moldavia and Roumania by Dr. Magnus (Brussels 1869, 2nd edition); Stamps of the American Offices by James Lesley, Vice-Consul of the United States (Brussels 1868), Historical Notice on the Postage Stamp by M. H. Boyer, Postmaster of Marennes, and Essays on the Watermarks of Postage Stamps by Dr. Magnus.

Moreover, the German stamps bourses mentioned earlier have closed (The Parisian bourse also seems to have closed before the war, though there are some stamp exchange businesses in the Champs Elysées. In his Sketches from the Modern Babel (Stuttgart 1870, p.138) F. C. Petersen says the same and adds the following:

Initially the chief exchange place for stamp lovers in Paris was the Terrasse des Feuillants in the Tuileries Gardens. Young men and women strolled in the shade of the elms and chestnuts and swapped their stamps freely under the open sky. A formal stamp market then appeared in the Palais Royal, where buying and selling went on and the trade was on a larger scale. Finally the second-hand booksellers on the quays, and the stationers took up the trade and put out more or less magnificent albums with an accompanying text – English, Spanish, Italian, French, and now the fancy goods-dealers – for a long time lively advocates of photography – have realised what profit there is in these little coloured things. And to round things off, the exchange trade has now stopped in the Champs Elysées!

In addition, composers have found fresh names for their current composition, and there seem no more Royal recruits to stamp collecting (so far as I know, the King of Portugal and Princess Mathilde, the wife of Prince Bonaparte, are still collecting). It does seem - I admit this readily - that though collectors are fewer than formerly, philately still stands on a firmer basis than before. Even the late war, that affected practically all of Europe, did not manage to interfere with this. Rather, the past and present years, which have been so glorious for Germany, have seen the number of notaries of philately increase, and a cover with what is called a balloon stamp in the hands of a layman not fond of philately, is worth a price beyond belief!

When the author's extensive collection of Field Post Office stamps went on a display, it was not only supported by the highest postal authorities, but was also visited by very many lay people. The press of even distant parts of the world hailed the value of this unique exhibition and there was no lack of voices to praise it. There were also non-collectors who looked on philately favourably, e.g. Dr. Springer, the editor of the Dresdner Anzeiger and others.

And so I have reached the end of my attempt to sketch the history of stamps and stamp collecting. Accurate and non-partisan, and without any attempt at fancy language, I hope it will find friendly acceptance and favourable review amongst the world of collectors and also from every educated man.

HISTORY OF SPANISH PHILATELIC LITERATURE

I. INTRODUCTION

On the morning of the 6th May 1840, there was issued in Great Britain the world's first postage stamp, the one penny black⁽¹⁾ with the image of Queen Victoria, the equivalent to postage for a simple letter. Thus came to fruition a series of proposals, studies, and projects the purpose of which was to reform the organisation of the British postal system, to amplify it, and to be able to pay easily the postage on letters by means of postage stamps.

What no one could imagine in Great Britain that morning was that this small piece of paper printed with the image of the sovereign and gummed on the back⁽²⁾ to facilitate placing it on the address side of the envelope, would give rise to a revolution, and not just in postal administration but in the world of inclinations and hobbies, producing at the same time related activities and a business estimated at some 250,000,000,000 pesetas a year.

What seems to us so natural today and no longer creates a sensation began quite possibly with the idea of some persons who decided to keep the stamps that came into their possession and even to buy some of these at the Post Office. Some of these original collectors get to know each other by chance and exchange stamps. Several of these collectors decide to come together periodically in a coffee house or at a club, creating at a later time an association of stamp collectors.

- (1) The two penny stamp was issued in London on the 8th but in London only. See Robson Lowe: The British Postage Stamp of the Nineteenth Century., London, 1979, p.71.
 - (2) By Royal Decree of the 1st December 1849, giving instruction for postage in Spain, saying that the stamps "have gum on the back so that, for the purpose of sticking [them on], it is sufficient to moisten them."

The hobby has its principal development in Europe, and a clever young man of nineteen – let us remember that we are speaking about the middle of the 19th Century, to appreciate the matter fully – establishes himself as the first philatelic dealer in the world. It is the Belgian Jean-Baptiste Moens who began to sell stamps for collectors in the year 1852⁽³⁾ at a time when only 239 different stamps had been issued in the whole world.

Collectors are spreading all over the world. Constantly, there are more countries that have adopted the franking of folded postal paper by means of postage stamps, and collectors wish to know which ones have adopted this system and how many stamps each country has issued.

Thus there appears on the 17th September 1861, the first list of stamps, by the Frenchman François Berger-Levrault, though limited to those of which he had knowledge. The concept appeared to be of interest, and months later J.-B. Moens published in 1862 the first stamp catalogue in the world, of which he would publish a second edition, corrected and augmented, the same year. At the same time, the Frenchman Alfred Potiquet published two editions of his world catalogue of stamps.

In June 1862, another Frenchman, Justin Lallier, published the first stamp album in the world, by countries, showing on the sheets of every one of these the corresponding square with a reproduction of the stamp, mention of its face value, and the colour in which it had been printed. His success was such that soon new editions had to be made, and verifying the interest in his album on the part of Spaniards, the 3rd edition of his French [album] was translated into Spanish, which he sold for ten pesetas and which held some 1,400 stamps.

But the collectors desire more and are not satisfied to know the stamps that have been issued throughout the world but wish to learn which stamps are appearing, because in that far-away period postal administrations did not announce as they do now their next issues. Furthermore, they wish to establish contact with other collectors.

Thus there appears the world's first philatelic journal, even though the Frenchman Herpin⁽⁴⁾ had not yet coined the word philately. We speak of The Monthly Advertiser⁽⁵⁾ the first number of which appears in London [Actually, it was published in Liverpool.] on the 15th December 1862, with eight pages, soon to be followed by Le Timbre-Poste by the above mentioned Jean-Baptiste Moens.

On the 29th day of December 1865 the first philatelic auction in the world of which we have authentic knowledge takes place. It convenes in Paris, in the classical Hotel Drouot, realizing 800 francs for the auctioned stamps. In 1870 a new auction is convened, this time in New York, and in 1872 there is one in London, organized by the famous firm of Sotheby's, which is active to this day and is one of the most famous in the world.

- (3) The (Italian) Encyclopaedia of Stamps, edited by Fulvio Apollonio (Florence, 1968) considers Stanley Gibbons a Pioneer of worldwide philatelic commerce (page 699) - which is an error. He began to deal in stamps in 1856 and developed his business, which exists at the present time, in 1863 with the purchase of a bagful of triangular stamps from South Africa, from some sailors.
 - (4) He mentions it in the 4th number of the journal Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste by Maury, dated the 15th November 1864.
 - (5) In September 1862 there had appeared in Birmingham a journal, The Monthly Intelligencer, devoted in part only to philately.

Foreign collectors, we note, have albums, catalogues, and journals. What is happening meanwhile in Spain? The inclination for stamp collecting has captured Spaniards as well, evidence of which we saw above, speaking of Lallier's album. In Catalonia, the Spanish region always most open to European restlessness coming by way of France, there appears the first dealer, none other than José María Vergés de Cardona, established in Barcelona in 1854. This dealer is the author of the first stamp catalogue published in Spain, with the title Manual del Coleccionista de Sellos [Handbook for the Stamp Collector], in which he claims that there are more than two thousand types or varieties of postage stamps, envelopes, and newspaper stamps issued by almost all the countries of the globe, mentioning in it the prices at which they are sold at the Barcelona Numismatic Centre though we doubt that all these stamps would be available for sale there. The author appeared with the initials J. M. V. de-C., the reason why for many years his identity was erroneously attributed to another Catalan whose family name was Cerdá⁽⁶⁾.

The first journal appearing in our country is El Indicador de los Sellos, on the 15th July 1870. It is published in Madrid, and there was but one number. In the year 1879, Plácido Ramón Torres⁽⁷⁾ who had published in Italy their first philatelic journal⁽⁸⁾ and their first stamp catalogue, settles in Barcelona and publishes the first Spanish universal album of stamps with space for 3,982 stamps including postage and telegraph stamps, indicating the mint and cancelled prices for each item mentioned.

Two years later, Antonio Fernández Duro publishes his Reseña Histórico-Descriptiva de los Sellos de Correo de España⁽⁹⁾ which, despite its title, concerns itself also with our former overseas possessions, gathering also legislation and statistics of interest about the several postal issues, including postal cards.

In the year 1888 the Barcelona Philatelic Society is created under the presidency of Alejandro Pons who will be replaced years later by Francisco Carreras y Candi, an eminent collector and student of our stamps, Doctor of Laws, director of the Geografía General of España, and consul of the Dominican Republic in Barcelona, in addition to being a historian.

Coming to the 20th century we note as an interesting philatelic fact, the issue of our first commemorative postage stamps. We refer to the set issued in 1905 which commemorates the 3rd centennial of the first edition of Don Quijote de la Mancha, with the stamps showing different scenes from the work mentioned.

In the year 1908 there is celebrated in Zaragoza, on the occasion of the Centennial of the Sieges, the first Spanish Philatelic Congress, and the following year there is held in Valencia the first Philatelic Exhibition which also has, just as the Congress mentioned, a special cancellation, one of the first allowed in Spain.

Philately in Spain, along with the rest of the world, is in the process of augmenting its movement. One of its aspects is philatelic literature which we examine in what follows. Anyone desiring to know the fullness of the same in Spain must repair to the magnificent opus by Nathan & Gahl⁽¹⁰⁾, Bibliografía Filatélica y Postal: España y sus Ex-Colonias, 1500-1980, published in Madrid in 1982 by the Postal and Telegraphic Museum, and which contains references to all the publications related to those topics, including postal maps and philatelic and postal journals. Whenever from here on we refer to the work of Nathan & Gahl, it is this title we speak of.

- (10) Natalio S. Nathan and Norman Gahl were British real estate owners in Barcelona, both much devoted to bibliography, and the former to postal and philatelic topics, additionally.

II. SPANISH PHILATELIC JOURNALS

A) In the 19th Century

The first systematic study regarding our philatelic journals is due to Mariano Pardo de Figueroa, eminent polygraph, scholar of Cervantes and judge of good eating, better known as Dr. Thebussem⁽¹¹⁾ who gathers it in his Cuarta Ración de Artículos (Madrid, 1902) under the heading of Periódicos Filatélicos de España which he dedicates to the Count of Cerragería, and which begins as follows: I suspect that there is not a single catalogue of Spanish journals devoted exclusively to postage stamps. It is not my intention to form one but I do mean to rescue from oblivion the slips of paper which by coincidence I have gathered, in case some lovers of this field of stamp collecting should judge them worthy of expansion and of study. Thus, I begin in this matter by saying that the publications that have come to my attention are the ones that follow, chronologically arranged.

With the same intention as that of Dr. Thebussem we have undertaken to study the journals, discovering the existence of several that he does not mention, and also without the doubt that others may exist that we do not know about.

As an object of curiosity we must stress that several of these were published in very small numbers only (four published one only, two got to print two, three reached a third number). Some of these were published in small communities, such as in Manzanares (despite which fact 14 numbers were published), in Val de Santo Domingo, and in Villanueva y Geltrú. In contrast, there are important capital cities* such as Bilbao, Oviedo, and Granada where not a single philatelic journal is produced. A curious fact that will be repeated in the 20th Century with the journal El Defensor Filatélico published in Caminreal (Teruel). We must also point out that between the years 1871 and 1890 not a single philatelic magazine is published in Spain.

* Translator's note: Capital city in Spain does not refer to the Capital of the country but, rather, to the capitals of Spanish provinces.)

- (11) Thebussem is a play on syllables intended to convey a foreign (last) name which, read from back to front, comes out as em-buss-the, i.e. as embuste (Spanish for imposter).

A characteristic of 19th Century Spanish magazines is that their publishers are usually, physicians, judges, lawyers, and professors.

EL INDICADOR DE LOS SELLOS

The first Spanish magazine, published in Madrid, and its first and only number is dated the 15th July 1870, consisting of four pages only. Its editor and owner was Eduardo Gilabert. Dr. Thebussem pointed out at the beginning of the (20th) Century that it was very difficult to find a copy of this publication. Today the difficulty is enormous.

A fortnightly publication schedule was announced, and the annual subscription would cost 24 reales for Spain, 36 abroad, and 48 for our overseas colonies, clearly representing a discrimination. With facts such as these it is not surprising that a few years later we would lose the few we had. Its publication was justified by the publisher by the frequently mentioned excuse that he was filling a void, and one must acknowledge that on this occasion it was certain indeed: Today when in almost all families there is someone who has the good taste of following the fashion, collecting stamps, today when almost everywhere they are gathered so that some day they may be shown in an album (sic) in which those of all nations may be found, the need for a magazine that can solve successfully any doubts the collector may have is noted more than ever.

If, leaving aside all this, we observe that all written works are found in French, English, German, Belgian [sic], Anglo-American, etc., one will understand the great advantage which this magazine offers, which is not only cheap but has the advantage of avoiding expenses which are involved in the acquisition of those published works, the difficulty with the language in which they are written, and in most cases the lack of knowledge of the existence of these writings in order to be able to obtain them. He ends by offering to present a detailed description of all stamps, as well as the newest methods on how to place [mount?] them. He publishes an article about English stamps with a very curious terminology. According to the author, there existed in 1840 in Great Britain two different stamps of one penny and five different ones of two pennies. The first stamp was not punctured, that is surrounded by small drill-holes to facilitate its separation from the sheet of paper. He points out that at each side of the indication of value, there is found a letter that varies considerably. Every collector knows that the letters in question indicate the position of the stamp in the sheet⁽¹²⁾.

He mentions how to calculate the puncture, dividing a line of two centimetres in so many circles as shown by the number, which fact shows that he was familiar with the system created in 1866 by the Frenchman Auguste [sic] Legrand⁽¹³⁾. He concludes by studying the stamps of Spain, briefly describing the issue of the year 1850 and that of the six cuartos of 1851, with a (to be continued) but no continuation ever followed.

(13) The famous French collector who used the pseudonym Dr. Magnus. [Actually Dr. Jacques Amable Legrand.]

EL COLECCIONISTA DE SELLOS

A fortnightly magazine, its first number appears in Madrid with the date 15th February 1871, its editor being Balbino Cotter Cortes, the grandfather of the present-day Madrid dealer Antonio Cotter. In all, four numbers of four pages each were published.

In an article entitled General observations he proposes to aid the collector giving an idea as completely as we possibly can about the words or terms used the most and abbreviations of the most usual kind adopted by intelligent persons, including those in all the foreign publications up to today. This allowed him to analyse the different kinds of paper, watermarks, etc.

In his study mentioned above, Dr. Thebussem points out that El Averiguador published in its number of the 15th April 1871, a critical review so mordant and spiteful of El Coleccionista, showing that it was a very poor translation of foreign magazines, bringing about the demise of that paper which today is very rare.

Concerning these comments by Dr. Thebussem we want to note that the last number published by El Coleccionista has the date of 31st March, so that being fortnightly, the following issue would be dated 15th April. Thus, a comment published in El Averiguador on the 15th April could not provoke the death of the publication, which was dead already for whatever the reasons may have been.

The critical comments of El Averiguador are merciless. It affirms that the article Observaciones generales appears to be, on the whole, a translation of an introductory notice from the French catalogue by Maury, but is full of balderdash.

The critic compares the text of the magazine with the original French, pointing out a number of errors such as the translation of watermarks in letters [of the alphabet] for watermarks in letters [sent by post]; the French patte as pasta instead of nema [seal], and other errors in translation of less significance which do not terrify a single reader who in the modern Spanish papers finds the worst barbarisms in vocabulary and syntax.

The article in El Averiguador concludes with the following protestation: A dozen philatelists declare that they feel that El Coleccionista (...) fails to carry out its mission as required of a paper of its class; that they do not recognise that paper as an organ for stamp lovers in Spain; and that they find more pleasure, more instruction, more importance, and more friendliness in any one of the publications concerning stamps that see the light in Belgium, England, Holland, France, Denmark, Italy, Switzerland, Canada, and in the U.S.A.

Let us finish by pointing out that this bitter and violent censure of which Dr. Thebussem speaks and which was published by El Averiguador is signed by himself. Perhaps, when he alludes to the same in his Cuarta Ración de Artículos he regretted it and therefore, no longer mentions this detail.

(We must mention that with the very same title El Coleccionista de Sellos, there appeared in Madrid, in the year 1900, a new journal which we shall analyse in time, edited by José G. Ceballos.)

Following the disappearance of Cotter's magazine in 1871 we find that in Spain there is not a single philatelic publication till the year 1890. For a period of some twenty years the Spanish collector has to depend on foreign magazines in which, according to Thebussem, we assume that he finds greater delight.

EL COLECCIONISTA

This is a monthly journal published in Malaga by Juan A. de Aguirre, the editor of the same⁽¹⁴⁾. Dr. Thebussem refers to its existence in his previously mentioned study but we have been unable to locate it in any library specialising in this matter, nor in public libraries of newspapers and periodicals.

According to Thebussem it consisted of four pages. The first number was published in September 1890; its last, in June 1891. It calls itself An organ in Spain of collecting fondness, criticised by Thebussem as it fails to clarify whether of coins, arms, books, etc., although one can judge by reading it that it speaks of stamp collectors, according to him.

LA ALIANZA FILATELICA

It is published in Barcelona under the direction of Juan de Solo⁽¹⁵⁾. Its first number has the date of November 10th 1891, and the last one published, which is number 7, comes out in May, 1892. The current number sold for 15 centimos and back numbers for 25. It was able to count on outstanding agents abroad: in Belgium (one who, to be sure, lived in Geneva), in England, and France, and in Switzerland (Adrien Champion, of Geneva).

On the title page of its first number there is a note To the Press which reads: To the entire press in general we send the most kind greetings, notably to that of Barcelona and especially to the philatelic press of all countries It is surprising that in a country such as ours which is at the head of philately due to its many issues, and there are so many newspapers that are being published, no one would take charge, exclusively, to announce to dealers and collectors alike the changes which stamps undergo in all countries. England, Germany, Rumania, Italy, and France, above all, can count on a great number of these publications. Today we undertake the task of publishing one, trusting that the friends of philately will not be deaf to our voice, and will aid us to become equals of other nations.

Thebussem only knows number 4, corresponding to February 1892, for which reason he infers mistakenly and without a basis, that the appearance of the first number occurred in 1892.

This issue has eight pages already, a fact that shows that both enthusiasm and contents are growing. Here we see a considerable amount of announcements for exchange and sale of stamps, also a chronicle of new issues with illustrations of some of the stamps referred to.

(14) Aguirre was professor of Sciences at the high school (Institute of Secondary Education) at Malaga. (Discursos Académicos, 1992, Volume III, page 39.)

(15) Nathan & Gahl make the mistake of calling him Soto. Majó also, in the work quoted in note number 6.

EL ANUNCIADOR FILATÉLICO

The first number, with Francisco Carpintero as publisher, appears in Cadiz on the 5th April 1892, and the last in December 1892, and is the first magazine published in Spain without charge, to be distributed among dealers and collectors who request it, with an edition, so it says, of 6,000 copies - a fact to be stressed, as La Poste Mondiale, published in Vienna, printed 5,000 only. Nevertheless, in its 5th number it gives the price of a subscription, proof that it ceased to be free.

Though its title states monthly, the second number appears a month and a half later, changing its format from 21cm by 30cm to 16cm by 21cm.

In its first number it tries to justify its appearance, saying: For some time now we were conceiving the idea of publishing a periodical of the kind of this one, and today, having overcome the obstacles in our way, we have the pleasure of offering to our readers the first number of El Anunciador Filatélico whose mission in the press can be summed up, as its title indicates, to reveal to the collectors the stamps they may have contemplated acquiring from firms devoted to the sale of these, just as to facilitate the transactions of exchange so useful for all collectors, continuing with a panegyric of the journal, considering the economic price for advertisements and the fact that it is distributed free of charge among all collectors.

Its second number publishes a Historia de la Filatelia with some curious and mistaken etymological and historical interpretations. It alludes to Filatelia but prefers to call it Filotelia, as they do in America [?], because in Spain there exist other words with an o such as filosofía and filología. The author of such a history is Enr. Conr. Eberhardt⁽¹⁶⁾ who points out that between 1860 and 1865 people collected with real frenzy, virtually with a mania, notably among young collectors and students, who seemed to live for stamps only, to the point where, according to this author, there appeared in important publications articles attacking this tendency.

In the advertising section an entire page stands out, that of Faustino A. Martins of Lisbon who offers the new stamps of Portugal of 5, 25, and 50 reis for the year 1853 at ten pesetas⁽¹⁷⁾. And then there is an advert, in the words of a German, who offers 5,000 stamps and 500 cards for ten pesetas. Also on a full page, a Frenchman announces that he sells magnificent imitations of rare stamps, without a doubt a forerunner of Fournier, Seguí, and de Sperati.

LA REVISTA FILATÉLICA

The only reference we have comes from the work of Nathan & Gahl, mentioning that it was published at Cadiz with Eduardo Castulla as editor, with the first number having appeared in May, 1892. Thebussem does not mention this publication.

(16) This person is a collector of German origin living in Valparaíso, where he published in 1890 a Historia de la Filotelia [sic], that is to say the History of Collecting Postage Stamps, which he sold for ten pesetas.

Translator's note: The abbreviations Enr. Conr. represent Heinrich Konrad in German.

(17) Today they are valued at some 500,000 pesetas, depending on their quality.

LA UNION FILATÉLICA

Published in Barcelona, with its first number dated January 1893 and its first editor Hermenegildo Prats⁽¹⁸⁾. It had eight pages, and the following year modified its format, which was entirely usual in those days. It published 21 numbers, the last one corresponding to November/December 1894⁽¹⁹⁾.

Following the norm of its forerunners, it tries to justify its appearance in the following manner: Since, from the arena of the press La Alianza Filatélica has disappeared, we determined to continue the work it had begun, that is that collectors in Barcelona have access to a publication allowing them to reach foreign collectors and dealers, adding that they are not motivated by the desire to get rich, and that their principal object is to correct errors committed by editors of albums in relation to the stamps of Spain.

It publishes a chronicle of new issues without accompanying it with illustrations. It tries to make its contents friendly, publishing a number of studies, among these one covering the war stamps of Spain, also several letters by Dr. Thebussem to Miss Alba Tery concerning postal and philatelic topics. it also deals with a Londonese [sic] exhibition.

(In 1903 there appears in Madrid a journal which did not last long, with the title La Unión Filatélica Española.)

CÁDIZ FILATÉLICO

The precedent of El Anunciador Filatélico moved to a new publication in the capital of the Cadiz Province.

Its first number was published in August 1893, its editor being José María Adam, the annual subscription price being two pesetas. The odd element is that the price of the single number being 15 centimos, it would be more expensive to subscribe, which is a paradox.

Its purpose followed the line of those who had published previous journals, and the fact is that those who edit philatelic publications - even non-philatelic publications - are not known for their originality.

In the introduction he alludes to the great desire that animates us to attack the enterprise we are commencing, just as the obstacles in our way have been great, affirming that they were certain of at least one year's existence of Cádiz Filatélico, a publication of extraordinary circulation in the five continents of the world. Notwithstanding such goals only three numbers were published, the majority of its four pages being devoted to advertisements, the only relatively interesting contribution being an article about the naming of Dr. Thebussem as Honorary Postman, It publishes an article about what is not seen on stamps, saying that

(18) He published one of the first stamp catalogues of Spanish stamps, as we shall note later.

(19) According to Majó (op. cit.), 23 numbers. Nathan & Gahl state in error November 1895.

examining the first Portuguese issues it seems they are identical, but if one explores further, one can see that some stamps are denticulated and others are not, and that this is very important because the last mentioned are worth more.

An announcement by Mlle. Marie Laplanne, Gignas 9, Barcelona informs that having found in the Archive many good stamps of 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 12, and 19 cuartos, and 1, 2, 5, 6, and 10 reales, valid for the nations of the Philippines, Spain, and Cuba, I give them for half of the catalogue [price] in exchange for others she does not have in her collection.

TÁRRACO FILATÉLICA

Published in Tarragona, the first number comes out on the 1st October 1894, managed by Ricardo Besses. Two numbers only are published, with the title saying dedicated to the interests of universal philately. It claims to be an instructive and interesting magazine, as in addition to exchange and buying and selling there is the recreational and literary aspect, too. It will therefore contain a scientific section devoted exclusively to the "history of philately, its origin, its progress, etc.," and other articles along these lines; and another literary one in which will be found included stories, tales, poems, all of them in reference to timbrology; news, anecdotes, miscellanies, and notices of foreign firms as well as Spanish, in reference to the commerce in stamps.

ILUSTRACIÓN FILATÉLICA HISPANO-COLONIAL

Published in Barcelona, with the numbers we know consisting of sixteen pages, its editor being Ricardo San Antonio. It is dedicated to collectors of stamps, coins, photographs, lithographs, insects and antiques and considers itself the philatelic newspaper both the oldest and of the greatest circulation on the entire globe among all those published in Spanish. Thebussem does not mention the date of the first number, saying that the oldest he knows of are numbers 35 and 36 which correspond to August and September 1895.

The first number was published on the 15th April 1895, and, strange to say, is given the number 31, coinciding with what Thebussem had pointed out before. Nathan & Gahl attempt to explain this by saying that this came about due to the fusion of the Barcelona magazines La Alianza Filatélica (which only published seven numbers, Heraldo Filatélico (which began to publish toward 1895), and Filatelia Antillana (of which we do not know when it was first published nor how many issues it published). Majó⁽²⁰⁾ adds La Unión Postal.

In that first number 31 there is an interesting article about aerial navigation, alluding to tentative efforts to construct a flying machine, informing how the North American House of Representatives expect: to concede a reward to one who may construct it, with these conditions: it must be safe, speed not less than 30 English (sic) miles per hour, and have a capacity for transporting five tons, minimum.

Its editor, San Antonio, was a Catalan philatelic dealer who created the Sociedad Filatélico (20) Postas y Filatelia en la Barcelona del XIX., Barcelona, 1975, p.223.

Hispano-Colonial⁽²¹⁾, advising in his number 49 that it had 217 members, and that stamp collectors and dealers, also of coins, photographs, chromo-lithographs, banknotes, and antiques could join the same.

The title, pages varied from one number to another, and with the changes even the title changed, becoming the Ilustración Filatélico Hispano. He sold every copy at the price of 50 centimos, very considerable at the time.

The paper contained a good record of new issues and illustrated many of the new foreign stamps, sent in by correspondents.

His agent and friend in Italy was de Sperati, a philatelic dealer living in Pistoia, an older brother of Jean de Sperati, the famous counterfeiter of stamps. The latter relates in his autobiography: I was born at Pistoia (Italy) on the 14th October 1889 (...) I had three brothers (...) and the oldest became a stamp dealer⁽²²⁾.

San Antonio announced the sale of 100 different stamps of Spain at 7.50 pesetas, at a time when barely 259 stamps had been issued, including Carlist stamps, telegraph and official service stamps.

He announced, for 25 centimos, the so-called Libro Verde with a perforation gauge, guidelines on how to place stamps into an album, and a list of philatelic freebooters who kept money sent in payment or else stamps sent to them in exchange.

Its director, Ricardo San Antonio, purchased Spanish stamps, advertising that he would pay twice their value if still on the envelope, a fact that shows great commercial vision, not at all frequent at the time.

In the advertisements we could find not just those related to philately but automatic incubators and books, as well. He sold several of the latter at fifty centimos, with titles such as Secrets of the conjugal bed, Onanism, Sexual phenomena, Lesbian love, and Abortion, all that as part of a series of knowledge for the practical life.

This magazine has great philatelic interest because it printed on the occasion of the war of 1898 with the United States, some poster stamps for voluntary use, with different designs and the wording Ilustración Filatélica (a title used in its inner pages) which sold at five centimos per copy and whose total value was intended to help Spanish soldiers. It informed that during one month of sales 360 pesetas had been produced, and that the same were deposited in the Bank of Spain for the support of our war machine and fortifications of Barcelona.

(21) In one of his numbers he announces as follows: Bear in mind that it is the first philatelic society in the world, which was not true, as it was established in 1895.

(22) The work of Jean de Sperati, 2nd edition, London, 1956, p.3.
Subsequently matters did not go so well with his agent and friend Sperati, as we can prove, because in number 105 he publishes among the so-called electric announcements a note advising that Mr. de Sperati of Bologna, prior to that Pistoia, is a swindler.

According to Nathan & Gahl it ceased to publish in 1898, which is not the case at all. In that year it published member 107 with the title of Ilustración Filatélica Hispano-Americana, a title not mentioned by Nathan & Gahl and which it says corresponds to the tenth year of publication, which is not true. It announces that beginning with the next number it will be twice the size and decennial [published ten times a year], being the only Spanish journal with such a periodical arrangement, if in fact that would be the case.

EL HERALDO TIMBROLÓGICO HISPANO-AMERICANO

The first number appeared with the date of the 15th April 1895, and the last, which is number 6, in June of 1896. In that month it merged with Filatelia of Malaga, crossing this title in large letters on the front page and calling it now Filatelia, adding the initials EHTHA⁽²³⁾. Its director was A. Pulin.

It was published in Seville on Sierpes Street and distributed free of charge in the hope that it might reach ten thousand copies per edition. On its front page it combined stamps with the Giralda. On page 3 of the second number there is a view of the famous cathedral with a title below indicating it. As Thebussem writes, without clarifying it, it would have been difficult to identify such a famous monument. He was right, of course.

One of its numbers tells of a crime committed in Paris to steal the stamps of a French collector by the name of Emilio Delahelt [Delahaef], rather well known by our readers. It publishes an announcement by the Count of Albar-Fañez of Cordoba who desires to exchange stamps, making it clear that he never sends first.

EL HISPALENSE

The strange thing of this publication is that in number 1 there is no mention of where it is published, nor the exact date, because all it shows is first fortnight of June. Nevertheless, we can clarify that it corresponds to the year 1895, as proven by a cancelation on a copy sent by mail, and is published, one can deduce from the title, in Seville.

It Proclaimed itself a magazine of collectors and of dealers of postage stamps and said it would be circulated gratis and free. Dr. Thebussem is not aware of it in his previously quoted work.

The second number, also gratis and free, is dated the first fortnight of July without mentioning the year, and is the last one published, becoming for reasons we do not know, La Hispalense, the title referred to by Nathan & Gahl. Both one number and the other consisted of eight pages, and its articles were utterly exaggerated.

In one of these about dangerous stamps it was pointed out that soaking these in water, microbes from the mouth of the person moistening the stamps to put them on the envelope remained in the water and, as is logical, these microbes would float in the water, being transferred onto the hands of the collector with grave risks for the latter; which makes us think that in the past century one did not wash hands frequently.

Another danger arises from the gum of the stamps, pointing out in that connection that the stamps of Colombia - it does not indicate which ones, which leads one to believe that all of them circulating at that time - carry in their gum a virus which, when being moistened by the tongue, gets into the human body producing a disease in the scalp called the stone.

FILATELIA ANTILLANA

It is published in Barcelona. Nathan & Gahl mention it in their study saying that they do not know the date of its first number, and that its last is published toward 1895. We have not been able to locate it in any library or in any library specialising in newspapers and periodicals.

HERALDO FILATÉLICO

Also published in Barcelona, and its first number, according to Nathan & Gahl who are the ones referring to it, was published towards 1895. According to our knowledge, not confirmed, it published three numbers.

Apparently, this magazine absorbed the Filatelía Antillana and La Alianza Filatélica which had disappeared in 1892, to transform itself into the Ilustración Filatélica Hispano-Colonial.

EL ANUNCIADOR TIMBRÓLOGICO

Number 1 appears in December 1895 and is published at El Ferrol under the direction of Manuel Riva. Its last number carries the date of July 1896. It has four pages, and is devoted entirely to announcements. On the title page of number 3 it says that the editorship of this paper will reject all the advertisements of those who are listed in the black list of the newspapers that have an established exchange with El Anunciador.

It published advertisements in Italian, French, and English but full of errors of the worst kind. As a sample, note Le prochain numéro paratra au mois Fawier, Advertisin grates, and les timbres neuf des tous les pays sont admis en pagment.

In one of its numbers it informed that Juan Cardillas, a collector in Montevideo, had bought 10,900 5-centesimos stamps with the image of General Santos, and that he had burned these in the presence of the members of the Philatelic Society, declaring at the time that in this manner he had made sure that the stamp would be rare.

Dr. Thebussem does not mention this journal.

CRÓNICA FILATÉLICA

On the 1st December 1895, there appears in Madrid under the editorial direction of a well-known philatelist - Manuel Asenjo - yet another journal, short-lived like the previously listed.

It calls itself an International Organ for Stamp Collectors and Dealers but further on is more modest, considering itself a Journal d'annonces pour collectionneurs et marchands de timbres-poste. And, as a matter of fact, three quarters of its content are advertisements. It ceased publication in May 1896 with number 6.

Its program was to fill a great void, creating in the capital of Spain a magazine (...) in order to narrow more and more relations among collectors and dealers of stamps in the entire world, bringing to them all the news that may be of interest to them. It promises that Crónica Filatélica will be at the level of the best foreign journals and announces that with the next number it will give away, also with the numbers to follow, a fascicle of a catalogue of the stamps of Spain, with illustrations of all stamps and their market price.

In the numbers published, in addition to the abundant advertisements, there were interesting studies such as the one about the franchise stamps of Melilla, Carlist stamps, and Spanish postal cards.

It published a good number of studies and articles about the stamps of Portugal, pointing out in one of them that in the postal card of ten reis, of Don Carlos, *twenty-two types of paper can be distinguished, some so plain and thin as that used to make rolls- a statement that seems to us exaggerated, not so much in reference to the quality of paper as to all the varieties of the same.

 Translator's note: The thin paper to make rolls mentioned, probably refers to paper for coin rolls or to roll cigarettes.

(With this title, there appears in May 1984 another journal in Madrid which by now has published more than 100 numbers.)

FILATELIA

If until now the magazines had been published by individuals, this one is the Organ and property of the Philatelic Society of Malaga. Number 1 is dated the 31st January 1896, and it was sold at the high price of 25 centimos, two pesetas being the amount of the annual subscription. It ceased publication in the year 1898, with number 25.

The previously mentioned El Heraldo Timbroológico Hispano-Americano merged with it in June 1896.

In its introduction it stated among other things: Without a doubt, taking into account what little inclination there is in Spain to collect stamps, we shall be obstructed by natural obstacles with which must fight always those who undertake matters slighted by the crowd because it regards them, in their ignorance, to be without any importance. However, the perspective of these difficulties do not terrify us, because having foreseen them, we have balanced them with our good will, and that is superior, according to our conscience, to the hardships which the fulfilment of our task will bring. As one can see, this sounds more than the launching of a journal; it seems to refer to that of a political party.

It published a study about Spanish stamps as well as others concerning the Cuban insurgents and the stamps of the Republic of Cuba issued during Spanish domination, topics that were not well known then.

It also published a blacklist of collectors, but only of the foreign ones, in an effort perhaps to protect the national industry.

(In 1913, the Catalan dealer Francisco del Tarré, founder of a philatelic dynasty, published a magazine with the title Philatelia.)

EL FILATELISTA PENINSULAR

Published in San Sebastian, the first number appears with the date 10th April 1896⁽²⁴⁾, breaking with the tradition of carrying as the date, the 1st, the 15th, or the 31st as in some isolated case. It only published three numbers.

Both the fees for advertisements, as well as the annual subscription price are given in French francs, showing - oh, what times those - that a peseta was the equivalent of a franc, 70 [British] pence, and 80 [German] pfennig. It is published at San Sebastian, and its director is S. Echabarse.

On the title page it publishes a list of agents abroad (a total of 24) stationed in Mauritius, Reunion, possibly due to the influence of the rare stamps of these islands, and also in Switzerland, Scandinavia, Argentina and Mexico, for example.

In the three numbers published, there is a study of the so-called franchise stamps of Melilla, responding to a question asked by a reader, whether these have official character or not, having been produced by Miguel Rodríguez Sánchez.

It also gives an account of how a Frenchman had found in his house four stamps from Mauritius with a value of more than 30,000 francs, and to whom one may wish better luck than to his compatriot Delahelt, murdered to steal his collection, it adds.

It announces for its next number a blacklist of collectors, indicating that the unscrupulous are growing in number everywhere.

This is a journal not cited by Dr. Thebussem.

LA FILATELIA ESPAÑOLA

Catalonia has always had a great philatelic tradition which was characterized by not being centred in the Capital⁽²⁵⁾. It is, therefore, not strange at all that this journal should be published in Villanueva y Geltrú. Its first number appears on the 25th October 1896, its editor and owner

(24) Majó gives the date as the 1st April 1896. Nathan & Gahl make the same mistake.

(25) As an example we have the work by Dr. Tort, published in Reus.

being Joaquín Foradada Canalda⁽²⁶⁾ who deservedly stands out as a member of the Société Timbrophile d'Echanges of Paris⁽²⁷⁾.

The annual subscription costs two pesetas which can be paid, just as many advertisements, by means of cancelled stamps worth not less than one peseta, according to the Galvez catalogue.

Only six numbers were published, the last of these covering numbers 5/6, for February and March of 1897⁽²⁸⁾. As declared in its number 2, it had a circulation of 4,000 copies, a significant number, particularly when one takes into account that it is published in a small community. Its contents were mostly news and announcements.

It maintains a correspondence with several readers one of whom is called, strangely, Francisco Tarré, who resides in Guanabacoa, Cuba. One of its correspondents is the famous Sperati of Pistoia, Italy, who was a correspondent of other Spanish philatelic journals, as well.

(In the year 1900, as we shall see later, there appears in Madrid another magazine under the same title.)

EL ANUNCIADOR

The only references we have of this journal are: the ones by Majó and Nathan & Gahl in the works referred to. Its sub-title was Periodico Filatelista and its first number appears on the 1st November 1896, the last in April 1897. It is published in Santiago de Compostela, managed by Ernesto Carrera⁽²⁹⁾. Thebussem does not mention it.

MADRID FILATÉLICO

This journal appears in Madrid on January 1st, 1897, the owner being Miguel Gálvez Jiménez who was later followed by the well-known dealer Manuel Gálvez, his son. It is the only journal from the past century still in existence, even though, regrettably, its interest has declined a good deal, and with it, its circulation. It was not published at all during the entire year 1903, nor from May to December 1914⁽³⁰⁾. Later, it stopped publishing between September 1936 and January 1946.

The editor of the journal was Miguel Aleñá⁽³¹⁾, a brother-in-law of Miguel Gálvez. His domicile was at 1 Cruz Street.

(26) Majó (Postas y Filatelia..., page 226) calls him José, but shows a letter with a letter heading with the name of Joaquín.

(27) Majó calls him an educated philatelist, a lawyer by profession and local judge (op. cit. page 388).

(28) Nathan & Gahl mistakenly show March 1897.

(29) Majó calls him Carrero.

(30) Nathan & Gahl omit this last item of information.

(31) Nathan & Gahl, as well as Majó, write Aleña.

His first number contained a greeting to the press in general to whom one owes a debt for intellectual progress: During the previous century it was the encyclopaedia, in this one it is the periodical press that brings it to realization. He adds that all human manifestations have their journal, thus those devoted to philately must not be missing, philately not being a collector's mania: It is something more, it is much more. It is today, and will be in the future, a principal element for reconstructing the history of our times. Madrid Filatélico comes to ask for a place in this competition of intelligence, and in contributing with its colleagues to the popularization of this branch of human knowledge, it has believed that its first duty is to salute the press in general, as it is the press that carries out the mission of progress, and the professional press in a more restricted sense, because it shares its tasks with them.

In his number 16 which corresponds to the month of April 1898, and following the patriotic key-note of the country at war with the United States of America, he calls for a public subscription to contribute to the acquisition of the Cruiser España. Gálvez initiates it with fifty pesetas, and among other donors there is Pujalte with five pesetas more.

In one of the numbers there appears the announcement of a person who does not mention his name, who lives at 76 Serrano Street in Madrid, and buys stamps and collections at a high price. The hours for transacting business are somewhat odd: from 7 to 11 at night.

He also publishes a contest, very much in the style of those of the period, which we share with the curious reader: How many stamps must be used, placed vertically, to cover the distance of the meridian of Paris? The exact result is 254,647,840 copies.

The magazine was one more along the lines of the ones published in Spain but improved toward the year 1931 and printed interesting studies, such as, for example, about the postage stamp printing systems - a topic quite unknown amongst collectors - and a study by Carlos Lenze regarding the number of stamps printed in Spain between the years 1901 and 1931, based on an investigation about numbering. As an example, we can state that according to these data 65,000 stamps of 10 pesetas (of the Cadet), 100,000 of 10 pesetas (of the Medallion), and 500,000 of the same value (by Vaguer) had been printed.

It maintained disputes with other dealers and publishers of magazines, notably with Ceballos, the editor of El Coleccionista de Sellos⁽³²⁾ who tried to beat down his prices⁽³³⁾. This gave rise to Gálvez announcing a 75% discount on the prices in his Catalogue but only on current sets and not, as is natural, on rare sets and stamps.

The magazine continues to be published, and in the month of July 1993 has reached its number 1,020. It kept changing its title page and composition as the years went by, but the original must have impressed the public because of its beauty and simplicity. The design was the work of the Alcoy painter Matarredona.

(32) As a curiosity, we mention that a son of Ceballos fell from a high balcony, and that the very same Gálvez took an interest, according to El Coleccionista de Sellos.

(33) Ceballos attacked Miguel Gálvez in his journal, calling him an old orderly of the Overseas hall of the Audit Department.

A magazine mentioned by Dr. Thebussem, with the title La Propaganda Industrial, as having been published in 1897, he having learned about it by way of an announcement in number 4 of Madrid Filatélico, of April 1897. Majó (op. cit., page 386) gives it the same name as Thebussem, adding that the publisher was F. Vallecillo, and that he published its first number in Santiago de Compostela, on the 30th December 1895, ceasing the publication in June 1896. Information which is taken up by Nathan & Gahl, quoting the source.

We have not been able to locate the magazine, but in February and March of 1897 La Filatelia Española publishes an announcement with the title we have quoted, adding A Review of Arts, Sciences, industries and Inventions, and special organ of collectors of postage stamps, adding that it is published on the first day of each month⁽³⁴⁾ in Santiago de Compostela, and that it is distributed free of charge. The fact that this advertisement was published in March 1897 makes us doubt that it stopped publishing eight months before.

BOLETÍN DEL CÍRCULO FILATÉLICO MATRITENSE

With José G. Zabala as editor, its first number appears in Madrid in the month of July 1897, with graphic boastfulness which must have been annoying to the reader, as the pages were printed each in different colours (green, orange, blue, and violet), and elsewhere every column in one colour, or a different colour in the upper half and the lower, and all that on glossy paper, too.

In its first number it points out that there are 23,700 collectors in the world who place ads, 48,300 establishments devoted to the sale of stamps for collectors, and 480 philatelic publications; numbers which we regard as exaggerated, notably in reference to dealers.

In one of its numbers, it proposes the creation of a stamp of 5 or 10 centimos, to be used voluntarily to create a fund to aid soldiers returning from our colonial wars.

The stamp in question, it suggests, would show in its upper part the value of postage (say, 15 centimos) and in the lower the sales price, 20 or 25 centimos.

In another of its numbers it attacks the many *habilitado [stamps] of Fernando Po: If toward the end of the year 1896 it became necessary to qualify a 10 centavos fiscal stamp, it is because in Fernando Po a 10 centavos postal stamp was not available. One fails to understand why it was necessary to qualify a 5 centavo stamp if one was unavailable previously. It ends, trusting that when the new governor arrives in the colony, that postal normalcy will return. The new governor did indeed arrive but the result was that in 1898, twenty additional excise stamps were authorized for use, without counting errors and varieties.

* Translator's note: The word habilitado in a postal sense means that a fiscal (or excise) stamp is made available (i.e. authorized) to function as a postage stamp.

In its number of November 1897 it informs about an upcoming philatelic exhibition in Madrid which, if in fact it took place, would have been the first in Spain, several years prior to the one in Valencia.

(34) Majó, in error, calls it a fortnightly journal.

It shows a great deal of concern about the stamps of Fernando Po, and as its stamps are used also in Elobey, Annobón, and Corisco, suggests in order to avoid international problems that these stamps should be inscribed Spanish Possessions of the Gulf of Guinea.⁽³⁵⁾

Number 5 corresponds to November 1897 and the following one to January 1899, without the slightest explanation about the time elapsed without a publication. To be sure, from number 6 on the journal is printed in black only, making the reading easier.

In its number 8, under the title Muy bien [Very good] it applauds the decision that the two complete sheets of the first Belgian issue found at Antwerp should have been cut up and that they are being offered in small blocks. This would be regarded today as a real crime.

Also, in the November 1899 number it announces that the Belgian dealer Jean-Baptiste Moens gives notice about the general liquidation of his business, offering 20% rebates generally for stamps except the locals of Russia with a 50% rebate. Envelopes with stamps are for sale at a 50% discount as well, proof of the philatelic atmosphere of the period.

In number 14, under the title of A detestable stamp, it refers to that of the Catalan Union showing St. George, and which was sold at one centimo: The concept of native land must stand above all inclinations. We therefore believe that Spanish collectors will not allow that stamp in their albums, not even as a curio. As for us, we intend to destroy all those that reach us free of charge and shall never spend a miserable centimo for so unpatriotic a propaganda which reddens our cheeks with its memory alone. It ceased publication in June 1900.

EL MUNDO POSTAL

It makes its appearance in Barcelona in August 1897 as a semi-monthly journal, the publisher being Martínez Parra, announcing that it will be devoted to Philately and to its two great causes, Navigation and Commerce, stating that every two weeks it will circulate 5,000 copies in the principal cities of Europe, America, Asia, Africa, and Oceania.

He published a total of eight numbers⁽³⁶⁾, describing new issues with corresponding illustrations. among its advertisements, one by José Monge covering an entire page, stands out amongst the others: 100 six cuartos stamps of 1850 for ten pesetas.

One of its numbers deals with the oddity of the Bear and Madroño* stamp with its colour changed, giving the following explanation of something so uncommon: a young lady kept the letters that her fiancé had prepaid with a one cuarto stamp, carrying them in her waistcoat and taking them out from time to time to kiss them. Between the saliva of the kisses and sweat of the waistcoat, the colour had changed for the worse, and she refused to sell these pieces to a collector who had noticed them.

* Translator's note: The Bear and Madroño is the heraldic device of the City of Madrid.

(35) In 1909 Spanish authorities used the designation Spanish Territories in the Gulf of Guinea but not on the stamps of Guinea or of Fernando Po.

(36) A layman in philately, according to Majó (op. cit. p.388).

He published a blacklist containing almost a hundred collectors, sent by Count Ivanowitz de Tscherniadiett who clearly had not learned a lesson about exchanging with the unscrupulous⁽³⁷⁾. It is a journal which does not appear in Dr. Thebussem's narrative.

LA TIMBROLOGÍA ESPAÑOLA

It sees the light of day at Val de Santo Domingo, a village in the province of Toledo, in December 1897, published by José Álvarez Janáriz⁽³⁸⁾, a physician of the locality. According to Thebussem it is very well edited and uses a paper of very good quality. Nathan & Gahl advise that the last number came out in 1899 without indicating the month nor the number involved.

On the first page of one of his numbers he publishes a print of Antonio Fernández Duro, the famous author of the past century whom he calls Hernandez. The editor announces that he sells stamps of Fernando Po, the Philippines, and Spain, but the rare ones. Moens advertises the sale of his publication about the stamps of Spain, reduced from 20 to 10 francs a copy.

The numeration was somewhat unusual: in December 1897 he publishes number 1 of year I; on January 1898 number 1 of year II, and on January 31, 1899, number 1 of year III - the last one we know of.

BOLETÍN FILATÉLICO

Number 1 of this publication appears in January 1898, edited by Ruiz Cabrera⁽³⁹⁾ in Manzanares (Ciudad Real province). His enthusiasm led him to publish several numbers of which we know up to number XIV, for February 1899.

The contents consisted almost exclusively of advertisements but these were very quaint. A dealer in Ghent offered for 3 pesetas 11,000 addresses of collectors and dealers of the entire world. For the same price one could acquire a book from a postal official in Burriana, with recipes for fabricating liquors, wines, varnishes, toilet soaps, sealing-wax, ink, etc. And the same author, but now for five pesetas, offered El Tesoro Industrial to make, without need for appliances, 25 kinds of beer, advice about medicine and hygiene, and many secrets and useful recipes that can bring about great economy for families.

A certain Carreras y Candi, Vice-Consul of the Dominican Republic and a member of the

(37) The correct name was A. Iwanowitz, Count of Tscherniachieff, according to announcements of the period. Majó calls him Count Ivanowitz de Tscherniadiett in Postas y Filatelia en la Barcelona del XIX where more details can be found about that person (pages 177-178). A foreign collector of Russian origin who lived in Barcelona at number 161 Paseo de San Juan, and who offered in his exchanges all the stamps of Spain and Colonies, including the rare ones of 2 reales, of 1851, 1852, and 1853.

(38) In the Anuario Filatélico for 1898 by Bourman, he appears as Janáriz. Majó writes Janariz (op. cit.). In several advertisements he appears as Tanariz.

(39) This man owned a bookstore and a press, and was a philatelist (Majó, op. cit. page 391).

Royal Academy of History, advertised that he wished to purchase fiscal stamps of Spain (but not revenue nor excise stamps), seeking principally those from colleges for notaries and municipal lawyers, with low prices, as they lack value in the philatelic world.

In its number IV of April 1898 the journal adopts the idea of Madrid Filatélico to start a campaign so that Spanish philatelists contribute their grain of salt to the holy work of patronizing our navy at war, recalling the patriotic 5-centimos stamp from Alicante which was the first vignette of the war of 1898, first sold on the 23rd April by the Postmaster there.

The journal engaged in polemics with Ilustración Filatélica about such patriotic vignettes or stamps, publishing a letter from the editor of the magazine in question who asserts that even though another thought of their creation, I was the first in making them, as had in fact happened.

It devotes itself to selling other person's works with such unmatched titles as The Torment of a Priest; Pederasty; Studies on Diphtheria; The Pleasures of Venus; Law of Waters and Pornocracy.

(With a similar title, Boletín Filatélico Universal, another journal appeared in 1900, in Valencia.)

EL FILATÉLICO VALENCIANO

This magazine appears in Valencia in January 1899, the first in that region. Its editor-owner was José Sanchís. It was a paper that lasted a good time, till December 1901, publishing 33 numbers ending in September 1901. In January 1902 El Filatélico de Valencia took its place, reaching a total of twelve numbers

In its introduction it states that it will avoid the common-place, that everyone declares that its appearance is a necessity, that it is not motivated by gain, that it counts on superb sources of information, and that it will be a publication for which there is no substitute: The idea that animates us is not original, and thus brings no surprises. We follow the footsteps of those who with more talent and under better conditions have done what we endeavour to do from today on. The journal justifies itself because of the great number of Valencian collectors. The fondness for philately, somnolent for some time, has come to life, showing great enthusiasm.

It publishes news about the new issues of all countries, and does not keep silent about the frequent appearance of Fernando Po excise stamps: They know of no way to end the surcharges on the stamps of that island. Today we have to add to the many known, two new ones and it emphasizes that the one with the error HAELITADO, is in fact a variety, not a new stamp.

The second number, as happened also in the case of other publications, changed the front page somewhat, with the coat of arms of Valencia being more prominent.

To show that it is not motivated by greed, in its number 2 it announces a raffle among the subscribers, to take place publicly, in which the second prize is a 2-real used of Spain, 1855. (The first prize is a stamp of ten centavos of Amadeo 1872, used, which we assume is the violet-coloured one.)

In its chronicle of new issues it speaks of, among others, the newly-authorized habilitado stamps of Port-au-Prince, with the numbers issued, though this information is taken from L'Écho de la Timbrologie. Amongst other news, it points out the appearance in Brazil of an imperforate pair of the first issue, in which there appear as one a stamp of 30 reis and another of 60, absolutely authentic⁽⁴⁰⁾.

Among its advertisements there is one by Louis Huot of Paris who published post cards and official envelopes for the visit of the Tsar and Tsarina to France, selling the official envelope of 15 centavos. cancelled and addressed to their Majesties at the Embassy of Russia at 2,50 francs.

ANUARIO FILATÉLICO DE ESPAÑA Y COLONIAS

Its inclusion here is debatable, and if we do so it is because an annual publication expects to publish periodically, though in this case it did not happen.

Thebussem does not mention it, even though the Postal Museum in Madrid possesses one of the tomes amongst its papers. Nathan & Gahl refer to it amongst the books, not among the journals.

It was published in Malaga in 1898 by José R. Bourman, the librarian of the Philatelic Society of that city. It contains the addresses of collectors in Spain - grouped by Provinces, and within these, by location - in Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines. In some cases he mentions their profession, and so we can find a Registrar of property, a Notary, two Pharmacists, and a Priest. In Barcelona we find Carreras and Pedro Monge, and in Madrid, Ceballos and Gálvez.

He further gives an account of the publications and of philatelic societies. According to the Anuario, the Philatelic Society of Malaga was founded on the 25th September 1895, precisely one day before the Philatelic Society of Seville. The rest of the Anuario is devoted to philatelic advertisements.

ESPAÑA FILATÉLICA

With a modernistic title page, the work of Serra, its number one appears on the 15th May 1899, published in Barcelona, the editor-owner being Alexandre Contini, a well-known Barcelona dealer known as Alexandre, of Italian origin, who left Barcelona to devote himself to the antiquities of Italy and the United States, attaining to title Count Contini.

He does not speak of a program, limiting himself to stating his motto: to see and to judge, pointing out that no subscription will be accepted until after the regular publication of four numbers, as a minimum. According to our count he got to publish eleven numbers. The same as found by Nathan & Gahl, and Majó.

He reproduces articles from foreign journals on how to compare frauds among the stamps from the United States offered on approval on Bristol board; on re-gummed stamps that are recognizable by the bad taste of the gum that counterfeiters use in their deceit; about the mails in Manila during the war of 1898; and a reply to one who wants to sell his stamps, pointing out that we do not believe that Madrid is a good market for selling.

He published, as was habitual then, a blacklist of philatelic swindlers, almost all of them foreigners. Among these there was a pharmacist in Malaga, a fact which brought about an objection on the part of the College of Pharmacists of Malaga saying the person was not a member - the foolish spirit of corporation was in existence already in the past century - a dispute in which even Madrid Filatélico intervened.

Among the advertisements we find a very odd one on the part of a Frenchman who offers the stamps of the first issue of France in exchange for glazed jars of Spanish pottery for use in pharmacies.

There is an article, though exaggerated as all from the period, about the provisionals of Coamo (Puerto Rico). According to the article a Yankee soldier had one of these stamps for which he demanded a very high price, as he had been told that it was a jewel. A collector bought it, explaining that these came from Coamo, then went there to acquire the few copies that were left, and all the information he could get. There are four different types, printed in two rows of five stamps each. According to an official letter by the town hall secretary of Coamo which the enterprising collector obtained, such stamps were used only from the 13th August to the 4th September 1898⁽⁴¹⁾.

There is a reproduction of a drawing for the fourth centennial of Philip II, and in a period when these were very popular the journal attacks it, calling it *Stamps of Camama.

* Translator's note: Reference to Philip II who died in 1598. The word camama is colloquial Spanish, meaning humbug.

LA PROPAGANDA FILATÉLICA

It is published in Madrid, and its first number appears in August 1899, published by Antonio Riesco. The annual subscription price is 14 pesetas, and the moderation of the prices we have established will surely make [sic] that we shall be honoured by collectors everywhere, as proclaimed in the words of the introduction.

In its first number it publishes a list of the rarest stamps of Spain, considering those with a value of above 200 pesetas, and listing the following: 1851, 2 reales; 1852, 2 reales; 1851, 3 cuartos, of the Madrid city mail; 1854, 1 real; 1855, 2 reales blue error, mint; 1865, 12 cuartos inverted centre, perforated and imperforate; 1854, 5 cuartos from the Philippines mint.

(41) EDIFIL does not include these stamps, nor any other catalogue except the one by Gálvez.

This publication continued until the year 1905 in which it published its last number, viz. 62⁽⁴²⁾.

Its contents are mostly of announcements and advertisements, among these one by a Swiss selling 127 letters, ribbons, and envelopes with stamps printed in Switzerland, San Marino, Gibraltar, Brazil, etc. for 6,50 francs. Another offers the stamps from Greece of the Floral Games⁽⁴³⁾, and there is another who sells 50 different stamps, guaranteed, from the Italian duchies, for 2,50 pesetas.

EL FILATELICO ONUBENSE

Its first number shows the date of the 15th January 1900, and it is published in Huelva. We have seen the first two numbers (of the five published) which contain mostly advertisements. It was published by Carlos Mora, and the annual subscription price was a mere 75 centimos, the most economic of all those in existence.

In its first number, in addition to the classic greeting to all the colleagues of the philatelic press both national and foreign, it publishes an open letter to the publisher, offering congratulations on the task he proposes with his publication, because the subscription price is reasonable, and because Huelva - the part of the Peninsula which first receives the images of America, Africa, and generally of all countries - needed a faithful and impartial paper to unite all philatelists.

The open letter in question, signed by Dr. Noir⁽⁴⁴⁾, concludes by declaring that all the publishers of catalogues (Scott, Stanley [Gibbons], Senf, Maury, Belin, Champion, López, etc.) drive us mad with their catalogues and their whims. And what about the forgers and their accomplices? It is against these that one must fight.

LA BOLA DE NIEVE*

A journal no one mentions among those who have devoted themselves to the study of our philatelic literature, and one we have never seen. It is included here for the reason that in El Filatélico Onubense there is an announcement of the same, mentioning that it is a philanthropic and philatelic magazine published in Barcelona which reproduces pretty photogravures in forty-eight pages, of all the stamps issued in the world since 1840, with an elegant text. So much detail seems to indicate that the journal was a reality, and not a project.

* Translator's note: The Snowball in English.

EL COLECCIONISTA DE SELLOS

The title that had been used by Cotter for the journal he published in 1871, reappears in

(42) Nathan & Gahl do not specify the number in question.

(43) Without a doubt, reference to the Olympic Games set.

(44) An outstanding Catalan collector living at 63 Claris [Street].

Madrid with a first number dated the 31st January 1900, guided now by García Ceballos with the subtitle Bulletin of quotations and of philatelic novelties. It begins by being monthly, later fortnightly, though in a way *sui generi as every issue included two numbers: for instance, numbers 35/36 for 30th March/15th April 1903.

* Translator's note: A Latin expression, literally meaning of its own kind or genus, i.e. unique in its characteristics.

It was distributed free of charge, publishing its last number (numbers 52/53 dated 24th December 1903)⁽⁴⁵⁾. In the last issues it stated published on the 1st, 8th, 16th, and 24th day of each month, which was not true.

In its number 38 it announced a very original section entitled Opportunity of the Fortnight: the subscribers would send to the magazine the stamps they wished to sell, indicating their price. The magazine would announce these free of charge. The buyer could be certain that he purchased authentic stamps; the seller, that he would get his money by way of the journal. In several numbers it dwelled on what it called the greatest usurpation in the world, discussing the existence of thousands of used and washed stamps that are sold, to be used once again; a fraud which it calculated amounted to some 25-33% of the stamps used in the mails, and estimating the sum defalcated at between six and eight million pesetas annually.

Oddly enough - and this always happens in Spain - as, a result of this accusation the state Minister for tobacco, Martínez Tudela, orders a police search of the accuser's house and also those of Gálvez and Pujalte, all of them persons interested in persecuting the fraud. This action gave rise to harsh criticism in the journal: Assuming, then, that this Mr. Tudela had shown understanding, discretion, and tact, a matter which evidently we regard as the height of a hypothesis...

In its number of the month of January 1901 it reports the decline in the price of stamps, which has given rise to Gálvez giving discounts up to 70% and Ceballos up to 75% and collections being sold at discounts of even 85%. Nevertheless, collectors deplore the fact that this discount does not affect rare stamps such as the 3 cuartos of the Bear and Madroño.

It proposes to create a Warrant of Recognition to honour the persons and entities that justly deserve it with complete and absolute certainty. A few numbers later, it presents such a warrant to Francisco del Tarré and to Carreras y Candi of Barcelona and to Pujalte of Madrid.

In one of its numbers it denounces the Treasury Delegate of Madrid because of the Madrid Philatelic Society organizing auctions of stamps and retaining a 5 to 10% sales commission over sales price. The Baron de Hortega, President of the Society mentioned, brought judicial proceedings against the magazine for that reason.

In its number 3, and with the title of A stamp for the future, it deals with a vignette printed at Jerez de la Frontera on the occasion of the war against the United States, in 1898. The stamp in question, a voluntary gift from its holder, exists today in the two most valuable collections in the world, viz., that of the Prince of Wales and the Tsar of Russia, and is found also in the (45) Nathan & Gahl mistakenly give the date as December 1904.

International Register at Bern⁽⁴⁶⁾; it will figure also as a philatelic curiosity in the World Exhibition of 1900 in Paris where no doubt it will attain a considerable value. In the following number, the right atmosphere having been created, Díaz Casas in Jerez advertised the sale of this stamp at two francs each.

LA FILATELIA ESPAÑOLA

It published one number only, dated the 20th February 1900. It is Published in Madrid, the name of the editor being unknown, and is dedicated exclusively to stamp collectors. Dr. Thebussem does not mention it in his study.

An oddity that stands out is that the title page reproduces the 10 centimos of the Cadet set which was not available for sale until the following year, according to the catalogues we have consulted.

One of its numbers* published an article about the stamps of Cuba with the overprint Y ¼ of 1855, mentioning that a French collector, Mr. Audruin, has thought up an explanation to account for the surcharge the authenticity of which is questioned by many intelligent persons. According to him, the Y means Interior, and the fraction shows that its value has been reduced to a fourth of a real. Oddly, this perspicacity on the part of the French collector had been common knowledge, published by Antonio Fernández Duro in 1881⁽⁴⁷⁾, and the Order of the 15th November 1855, which established the interior mail and the tariff of a quarter of a real had been published by Friedrich, along with other resolutions, in the year 1894⁽⁴⁸⁾. Yet, our editors of philatelic magazines did not know this nineteen years later.

* Translator's note: It was said to have published one number in the first paragraph, later one of its numbers is mentioned.

(This journal must not be confused with another of the same title, first published in October 1896 at Villanueva y Geltrú, and whose last number is dated March 1897.)

CÁDIZ POSTAL

Its first number is dated the 1st March 1900, and it appears, logically, in Cadiz. Its editor and owner is José Juliá y Fernández⁽⁴⁹⁾. It managed to publish thirty numbers, the last dated the 30th August 1902⁽⁵⁰⁾, and proclaims itself as the one with the widest circulation in Andalusia.

(46) We assume it refers to the Universal Postal Union created in October 1875.

(47) Reseña Histórico-Descriptiva de los Sellos de Correos de España. (Madrid 1881, page 218) [Brief description of the Postage Stamps of Spain.]

(48) Die Postwertzeichen der Spanischen Kolonien. (Berlin 1894, page 17). [The postage stamps of the Spanish colonies]

(49) Nathan & Gahl call him José Julio y Fernández.

(50) Nathan & Gahl indicate 23 numbers only, and until January 1902.

In its first number it calls attention to the fact that the philatelic press carries out a task of culture and of congeniality, and proposes to contribute to that work without being moved by greed; rather, to simply tighten more, every day, the bonds between the amateurs of philately.

It alludes to the issuing of the 15 centimos of the Cadet in blue⁽⁵¹⁾, which stamp, according to some Madrid newspaper, looks very much like the stamps of the United States. In connection with that stamp, the journal mentions that the Secretary of Posts and Telegraphs met with journalists and had the kindness of distributing amongst them, the new 15 centimos stamps. Almost a century later, this impresses us as being almost amusing.

In its second number it refers to a machine for paying postage on letters automatically, so that stamps are in danger of disappearing, just as poetry itself and pork sausage. It fears that Postmaster General Dato expects to establish it soon in Spain, but there is a fact that consoles us, viz. that in Spain, Ministers last little time, so that Dato will fall before stamps will disappear.

The problem with those who exchange stamps and who lack a conscience, keeping stamps, is very frequent, and the journal proposes to punish these by making them read all at once the poems by Carulla, and if they still have any strength left, one will make them travel on Andalusian railways.

The Philatelic Exhibition of 1900 in Paris, is the object of commentary in one of its numbers. Two Spaniards only attended: Gálvez, with a complete collection of Spain and its colonies, with many rare items, inverted centres, etc., which he sold to Bernichon for 20,000 francs; and Monclús⁽⁵²⁾, with a superb collection of Spain and its colonies, and many rarities and an entire sheet of the 10 pesetas stamp of 1875.

LA CIRCULAR FILATÉLICA

Sees the light of day in Huelva in the year 1900, and the only reference that we have of it is the one given by Dr. Thebussem who says he knows of it by way of a letter dated the 25th April and signed by Robert W. Adam which we have been able to locate in the Papeles varios of Dr. Thebussem. It declares that it will be a monthly review devoted to collectors and dealers of stamps, the annual subscription price being a mere fifty centimos, entitling subscribers to one free advertisement of five lines, and announcing its first number for the 10th May. We suppose that it was in print already, though not a single copy of the journal is known.

BOLETÍN FILATÉLICO UNIVERSAL

Appears in Valencia, its first and only number with the date June 1900, edited by Eduardo Reig and containing mostly advertisements.

(51) We repeat the previous remark to the effect that according to the catalogues this set was not issued before the 1st January 1901.

(52) Tomás Monclús was a philatelic dealer in Barcelona, an outstanding specialist in stamps, who established himself in Paris for a number of years.

In the circular it sent, advertising its appearance for the 15th June, the journal assured that every issue will be accompanied by a stamp of Spain, old at times, and one of the other ex-colonies.

EL BOLETÍN TIMBROLÓGICO

Its first number appears in Huelva in June 1900 according to Nathan & Gahl⁽⁵³⁾, its publisher being Carlos Dominguez. The subscription price was only one peseta a year which entitled subscribers to an advertisement of six lines, free of charge.

It published announcements and listed new issues, and its second and last number shows the date of the 15th August 1900. In it, there is an editorial about counterfeits and on cheating of collectors. In exchanges of stamps, despite good references, not one has confidence in any other, nor takes chances on being the first to send, for fear of being cheated.

EL ECO DE MADRID

Appears in Madrid in October 1900, published by Eugenio Laso⁽⁵⁴⁾. It is the monthly publication of the Madrid Philatelic Circle which had already published between 1897 and 1900, the so-called Boletín del Círculo Filatélico Matritense, previously mentioned. Its last number as a philatelic journal is 20⁽⁵⁵⁾, corresponding to May 1902, as the following numbers were merely sales offers. It states that the offices of El Eco de Madrid sells stamps at true and important discounts.

EL FILATÉLICO ESPAÑOL

Appears in Barcelona in October 1900 at the price of one peseta for the annual subscription, the publisher being Tomás Remolí who was soon followed by Rafael de Sorarrain, Alfonso Sabadell, and Monge, among others. It states that it will be dedicated to collectors and stamps dealers.

It stopped publishing⁽⁵⁶⁾ from January 1912 to March 1913 inclusive, and from December 1929 to June 1932. Its last number is dated June 1936, at which time its continuity was cut short by the Civil War.

It was a journal with very interesting articles, having published studies by Carreras y Candi about Spanish postal cards, Carlist postal charges and Carlist stamps, the issues of Rio de Oro, also about the fiscal stamps of Spain and its Colonies, which were reproduced in their normal size.

(53) In August 1900 according to Majó, who is mistaken.

(54) Nathan & Gahl refer to him as Lasa.

(55) According to Majó it is number 21.

(56) Nathan & Gahl do not report this fact.

LA UNIÓN POSTAL

The 19th Century concludes with this monthly magazine which is published in Barcelona by Leoncio Hernando, Honorary Member of the Sicilian Philatelic Union, and whose first number comes out in December 1900.

Its publication continues until number 17 of year III, viz., June 1902, then continues once again in January 1906 with number 1 of year IV (second period), and comes to a definite end in July 1907 with the number 7 of the year in question, IV⁽⁵⁷⁾.

In the first period its sub-title is Revista mensual filatélica dedicada a todos los comerciantes y coleccionistas de sellos.* In the second, the title becomes *Revista mensual filatélica y filocartista dedicada a los comerciantes de sellos de correo y de tarjetas postales ilustradas

It publishes advertisements and information about pictute postcards, a report on countries that admit them, and on how to send them to countries that do not.

René Frank, a special collaborator from Chalons-sur-Marne, writes about postage stamps those small sketched papers which represent the most intimate sentiments of its respective peoples, have carried the affections of the human heart all the way to the remotest corners of the world in a prodigious manner. As one can see, not too much profusion in the phrase.

In one of its last numbers it informs that of the 697 stamps issued in the entire world in the year 1905, 140 belong to England and its colonies, and 85 to Spain and its colonies. The English may win over us in the matter of a colonial empire but in the number of stamps, proportionally, we are much ahead of them.

EL INDICADOR FILATÉLICO

Published at Zaragoza, it calls itself Revista mensual de propaganda filatélica: Órgano de la Unión Filatélica Aragonesa. Published its first number without any indication of date, and there is doubt whether it belongs to the 19th Century. We do not know more. Thebussem does not mention it in his work.

Translator's notes:

- * Monthly journal of philately devoted to all dealers and collectors of stamps.
-  Monthly journal of philately and postcards dedicated to dealers in stamps and picture postcards.
-  Monthly philatelic review to propagate stamp collecting: Organ of the Aragonese Philatelic Union.

(57) Nathan & Gahl mistakenly mention that it was published until August.

Independently of these philatelic journals there are other periodical publications which have concerned themselves with philatelic topics during the 19th Century. Among others, it is possible to recall the following, in chronological order:

Revista de Correos, Madrid, which in December 1867 published the first philatelic article appearing in the Spanish press.

El País, Madrid newspaper with the same head-line as the present-day publication, which on the 16th August and 23rd November 1870, dealt with themes related to philately.

La Crónica Postal. On the 23rd February 1871, it publishes a notice regarding stamps and postal cards.

El Averiguador, a very elegant weekly of Madrid which between 1871 and 1873 publishes several interesting philatelic articles, a number of these coming from Dr. Thebussem.

El Gobierno, Madrid daily which during the months of October, November, and December 1873 publishes far-reaching works by Dr. Thebussem about the Spanish postal card, and a reply by Pantaleón de la Peña, from Algeciras, which because of its style makes us believe that the writer is Mariano Pardo de Figueroa himself.* Some of these articles appear on the first page of the political daily in question which only has four pages.

Gaceta de los Caminos de Hierro, Madrid, which criticizes in its number of the 21st December 1873 the first Spanish postal card. (The subject of the Spanish postal card was the object of many references in the Spanish press of the period.)

La España Postal, fortnightly Madrid journal which publishes some advertisement and information about postage stamps, and which in its number of the 1st July 1890, publishes on the Title Page a likeness of Isaac Peral with a design of his submarine, asking whether some day we may have correspondence by way of the submarine. The reply – in the affirmative - came about in 1938 during our civil war, and in the Republican zone.

* Translator's note: Mariano Pardo de Figueroa (1828-1918) was the real name of Dr. Thebussem. He is shown on a Spanish air mail stamp issued on the 12th October 1944.

B) In the 20th Century

As an interesting phenomenon, we note that there appear several publications from collectors' societies, some of these being mere news sheets about social activities, others are of great philatelic interest due to the important works published.

COMMERCIAL MAGAZINES

The century begins with the appearance, in August 1901, of the magazine El Progresista Filatélico, published in San Sebastian under the direction of Joaquín Minondo, which in its first period reached number 6 in the month of February 1902. There is a second period comprising October 1907 to April 1908 at which time it ends definitely with number 3. Its front page, the work of Guevara, had modernistic pretensions, and in its second period it reduced its size. Minondo who was a philatelic dealer sold the 10-reales stamp of 1850 at 100 pesetas; the 1851 one, at 25; and the 1 cuarto with the Bear and Madroña tree, at 50 pesetas.

On the 1st November 1901, the first number of the magazine El Agente Administrativo, Filatélico y Anunciador, published in Malaga, sees the light of day. The reference we have is a notice sent by its editor and its administrator, which Dr. Thebussem preserved amongst his papers. This circular announces the appearance of the first number with a circulation of 6,000 copies at the date indicated, and which will circulate through Europe, Asia, the Americas, and the Pacific, excluding Africa for unknown reasons.

In January 1902, El Filatélico de Valencia comes into existence, ceasing its publication with number 12 in December of the same year. Its publisher is José Sanchís García who had been the publisher of El Filatélico Valenciano which disappeared in December 1901 and who had been in charge of the magazine in question. It is a large-size magazine, showing a simple front page in modernistic style. Its motto, it states, will always be Forward.

It shows itself as an enemy of commemorative stamps, and this despite the fact that in Spain none had ever been issued, and very few abroad. There was talk at the time, following an idea in Cádiz Filatélico, of issuing a stamp or a special set to celebrate the coming coronation of Alfonso XIII. And some toyed with the idea of a thirteen-stamp set which would begin with a ¼ centimo all the way to ten pesetas. It would be a set that would also apply to Fernando Po, Possessions of Río Muni, and North Africa.

On the 1st December 1903, there appears in Madrid, published by Vicente Moreno, the journal La Unión Filatélica Española which publishes a total of thirteen numbers, disappearing in January 1905.

In February 1904 there appears El Eco Postal, initially published by Carlos Llorca, later by Vicente Pallardo, with a total of 230 numbers, the last being in April 1923.

In 1904 La Verdad Filatélica makes its appearance in Barcelona, issued every two weeks and published by Miguel Martí. We know up to number 6. Number 4 is dated the 20th October 1904. The publication declares that it is an impartial echo of postage stamp collectors.⁽⁵⁸⁾

From January to March 1907 we find a new publication in Malaga, with the title Guía del Coleccionista, which published three numbers only and campaigned on behalf of Esperanto.

In February 1908 the first number of El Filatélico Aragonés comes out, a quarterly published by R. Gasca Ibarra in the small town of Morés (Province of Zaragoza). It only published two numbers, the annual subscription of which cost one peseta. It was a short-lived magazine, as so many others, but with an interesting content. In its first number it deals with the much discussed stamps of the Exposition of Industries in Madrid, stating that they are stamps that cannot be used as postage, but without them envelopes cannot be posted except in certain mail boxes.

58) Nathan & Gahl say of this review that they lack data.

In 1908, at a date not specified by Nathan & Gahl, the periodical Iberia sees the light of day in Valencia, a monthly publication which disappears in the year 1910.

In Alicante there appears in November 1909⁽⁵⁹⁾ the quarterly publication El Intercambio which comes to an end in February 1911, having published ten numbers. It declared that it was dedicated to favour and to facilitate collections of all kinds. It accepted correspondence in Spanish, French, and Esperanto (and from number 3, in English, as well). It published a List of Honour of its subscribers in which one name only is represented, His Royal Highness Prince Mayo, of 18 Mildmay Grove, London, and repeats that name in several numbers. It pays a great deal of attention to the collecting of illustrated cards with a stamp on the picture side.

In January 1913 the journal Coleccionismo is published for the first time in Madrid with a succession of addresses, publishers, and patrons. It appears and disappears more or less frequently. In one of its numbers it states that those who believe that collecting is a mania are much mistaken... Far from it: the activity of collecting is a science, as numismatics or branches of other sciences that lend a hand, such as philately, or it is simply an inclination, always instructive. The magazine has a section which it calls Iconophily, referring to the study and collection of commemorative stamps. In 1936, with number 197, it ceased publication, but resumed from January to September 1945, published by Antonio Martínez Bosch. In October 1952 it resumes once more with the same publisher but abandons publication in November 1961 with its number 233. In July 1960 Martínez Bosch transferred his rights to the Philatelic Society of Madrid of which it was the official organ with the title España Coleccionista, edited by Manuel Rodríguez Germes, and published its last number in November 1961 at which time it disappeared definitely. During that last period it published some interesting studies.

In the month of April 1913 there is published in Barcelona, Philatelia, the organ of the Catalan Philatelic Society, published initially every two months but later becomes a monthly under Francisco del Tarré, later still twice monthly, its last number coming out in May/June 1936.

It published a record of new issues, varied philatelic notices, among these is one about the auction of the Hind collection. It served as publicity for the firm of Tarré which offered the set of the Exposition of Industries in Madrid at 3.25 pesetas (when its face value was 6 pesetas), the regular set of the Madrid Philatelic Exposition of 1936 at 7.50 pesetas, and the air mail set at 30 pesetas. Some of his advertisements consisted of reproductions of blocks of four of the classic stamps without an indication of price but pointing out that he had a great many of these in stock.

In the following years new philatelic journals come into existence. In 1916 it is El Filatelista, published in Ibiza, of which we know that it published its first number in November. It called itself a monthly philatelic newspaper, and the price of a subscription cost 2.50 pesetas annually. It published many notices and articles originating in other Spanish and foreign journals.

59) Nathan & Gahl mistakenly give the year as 1908.

In the same year, Unión Carta-Filatélica Universal⁽⁶⁰⁾ is published at Reus with very few numbers, carrying articles in Castilian and in French. In one of its numbers it publishes an article by J. M. T. (possibly José Majó Tocabens) about What is the merit of a collection acquired by means of gold? and replies that those of us who lack the capital to invest in our hobby, and who can count only on goodwill to increase our collections, can in time succeed where others procure with significant sums.

In September 1917 Ramón Pujalte publishes the Boletín de la Bolsa Filatélica de Madrid, a commercial organ that was published until 1936. It was at first of small size and full of advertisements. Later it modified its size on two occasions and published a supplement to the Yvert catalogue, and also a history of the stamps of Spain. In it, the first stamp auctions were executed in Madrid, amongst the very first in Spain.

In 1918 and in Barcelona España Coleccionista comes out, publishing two numbers only. The Philatelic Society of Madrid utilized that title for its own journal in 1960 but it did not last long, as we have noted.

In December 1922 Mundial Filatélico is published in Madrid by Manuel Medrano⁽⁶¹⁾, the organ of the Hispano-Lusitana Society, disappearing in April 1923, having issued five numbers only. It published a list of new issues, with illustrations. In one of its numbers it refers to mechanized franking, a danger for stamps, though many years will pass until we see the total disappearance of postage stamps, as mechanical franking lacks the beauty of stamps, mentioning as an example those of the Exposition of Industries in Madrid in 1907, the most artistic among all those issued here.

On the 1st November 1924, there appears in Barcelona La Ilustración Filatélica with the subtitle Revista gráfica de información y técnica, published by the firm Llach which had begun in philatelic commerce a few years before. It is edited by Agustín Piracés, and states in its introduction, among other things, that we do not pretend to have come to fill a void in the philatelic press written in the Spanish language. The purpose is to stress for the wide public the beauty, which it does not suspect, of collecting stamps, exciting their interest and curiosity, and contributing thus to the formation of new adepts who may come to swell our growing ranks. Its last number is 69, dated May 1932.

In one of its numbers it publishes a full-page announcement by A. Gómez Cepeda who says that he has bought, among others, the collection of the 6 cuartos stamp of 1850 from Ramón Ruiz de Arcaute and others which they have asked me not to make public⁽⁶²⁾.

Number 64, which relates to the 1930 Barcelona Philatelic Exhibition is highly interesting, stressing the best collections on display; among these is one from Alfonso XIII who, showing an obvious love for philately, exhibited part of his valuable collection which included Austria to 1914, Sweden complete except for the tretio error⁽⁶³⁾, Yugoslavia mint complete and Japan

(60) Nathan & Gahl call it Unión Carta Filatélica Universal.

(61) Nathan & Gahl call him Madrano.

(62) Number 3 dated the 1st January 1925.

mounted on specially fabricated sheets displaying postage stamps and postal cards⁽⁶⁴⁾.

On the 1st March 1925, there appears in Barcelona, Cosmos, a quarterly, international journal devoted primarily to the collectors of postal cards, stamps, etc. It published some articles in English, and devoted much space to illustrated cards which it called postal cards. It ceased publication in July 1930, having been published by J. Prous.

On the 10th April 1926, Carlos Lenze, a dealer established in Madrid and a great student of stamps and postal history, publishes his review Boletín del Centro Filatélico of which only two numbers appear, the second in the month of June. In January 1950 he resumed its publication with the title El Centro Filatélico, until December 1951. In January 1952 the name became Boletín Mensual Ilustrado del Centro Filatélico, until January 1953 at which time the name changed to Boletín Centrofil. This publication, despite its commercial aspect, has been one of the most important published in Spain, as Lenze always wrote about cancellations, pre-stamp philately, postal history, aerogrammes, etc. Boletín Centrofil published its last number, 348, corresponding to the period July/August/September 1956, in which he takes leave of his readers for many imponderables, mostly his 75 years of age⁽⁶⁵⁾.

In May 1927 Puigferrat publishes España y América, with its last number, 46, in 1939, resuming its publication in 1952 to cease publishing definitely in September/December 1957. The fact that it is the only philatelic publication published in the Republican zone during the civil war makes it highly valuable for those who are interested in the issues of that period and that zone.

Some of its articles were published in Spanish and in French. In one of its numbers it gives emphasis to designs, amongst which it places, along with others which are truly artistic, the set of the 1936 Madrid Philatelic Exhibition which it calls vignettes to be remembered; the 1936 Barcelona Fair set that lacks absolutely any postal value; and the supposed stamps of the Constituent Assembly of 1931 which it had been pretended were to be accorded postal value, showing envelopes cancelled by favour, with the cancellation of the Congress.

Sellos (Revista Filatélica) appears in December 1929 in Saragossa with contents of supposed humour, announcements, various themes, etc. Its number 2 modified the title page as well as the format, reproducing - we do not know the reason - the image of Barre, the engraver of the first French issues. In one of its numbers it reproduced the plates of the 6 cuartos of 1850, following the study of Griebert. This title reappears in 1952, in Barcelona.

In May 1930 appears El Defensor Filatélico, a burden that, to be sure, might well be created. It is published in Caminreal, a small village in the province of Teruel, which at the time had 1,515 inhabitants. Its editor was Adelino Gómez⁽⁶⁶⁾, and it came out quarterly. It offered its first number at the 1930 Barcelona Philatelic Exhibition, and received a medal⁽⁶⁷⁾ which is mentioned in its second and last number.

It devotes itself to propagate exchange among all countries, defending at the same time the interests of the philatelist. Its second number refers to the Barcelona exhibition. Alfonso XIII, an exhibitor himself as we have noted, donated a cup for the best collection shown, which was won by Gonzalo de Segovia for his collection of Spain of the 1850 6 cuartos stamp and other rarities. In this last number it publishes a list of subscribers, a total of 122. Among these, 22 are from Caminreal, many of these the family of the editor, others from Calanda, yet others from Kenya, Fiji, and New Zealand (sic)⁽⁶⁸⁾.

(64) What happened to these collections subsequently, is unknown.

José Majó, a Barcelona dealer, publishes in May 1930 the first number of Publicidad Filatélica which for its first numbers is pocket-sized. Number 2 is published in 1931 without specifying a month, it then becomes a periodical publication until March 1936 at which time it ceases publication.

In October 1945⁽⁶⁹⁾ it resumes publishing, again with number 1, until it stops publishing with its number 77, corresponding to Year 65/66.⁽⁷⁰⁾ It was normally a quarterly review, and with the amenity typical of the works of Majó.

The Boletín de la Unión Española de Coleccionistas is published in Madrid, and we only know number 1, with the date of September 1932. Its home office is at Miguel Moya 8⁽⁷¹⁾ and it consists of four pages, reproducing the bylaws of the new Unión Española de Coleccionistas. Its article 2 stated that all its actions will be inspired by the encouragement of collecting which, far from being the mania of mentally unstable people, is a manifestation of culture, of the spirit of saving and love for a recreational activity. Article 3 established the expulsion of those who might speak of politics or religion.

In September 1932 there appears the Revista del Sello Español, published by Carlos Lenze who writes many of the articles that the magazine prints. Its front page reproduces a fragment of a cover with a pair of the 1851 2-reales and a block of four of the 5-reales, an exceptionally rare piece of great value. It published various studies and described varieties that Lenze had discovered, some of which he offered for sale in the pages of the journal.

On the 1st January 1936, there appears in Lerida Coleccionismo, a title that had been in use since 1913 by the periodical published by Martínez Bosch, and also by a magazine in Barcelona, as well. It was very well printed and got to publish three numbers only, though with interesting studies about numismatics, pre-stamp philately, and the stamps habilitados por la nación of Spain, ending publication in July 1936.

In June of 1937⁽⁷²⁾, though on the title page there is July by mistake, there appears in San Sebastian, while the civil war is raging, the Boletín Filatélico Español, published by Juan Mancheño. It is the organ of the Department of Philately of the Youth Organization of FET

(68) In 1948, in Iberia Cultural Filatélica, we find a letter from Adelino Gómez Latorre advocating the issuing of a set with a bullfighting theme. He could see his dream come true years later.

(69) Nathan & Gahl mistakenly indicate 1946.

(70) Nathan & Gahl erroneously state that it stopped publishing in 1968 with number 77.

(71) The Hortaleza 81 address shown by Nathan & Gahl was provisional. It is crossed out, and substituted for it in small print is the one we indicate for its number 1.

and of the JONS of Barcelona and of the A. F. H. A.⁽⁷³⁾ Its first number reproduces a photograph of General Franco and this text: The Boletín Filatélico Español honours its title page with the portrait of the Generalissimo who, at the head of the glorious army and heroic militia and aided by the good Spaniards, fights to create a unified Spain, Great and Free, that we dream of.

It varied its front covers, showing on one of these a perforation gauge. In November 1940 it ceased publication with number 40, resuming publication in January 1944⁽⁷⁴⁾ with its number 41, with the approval of the Section of Papers and Journals of the National Head Office for the Press, renewing the permit previously issued for the publication, without being any more part of the Falange or the A. F. H. A. The editor was M. Pozo, its seat Viteri 22, 1st floor, Rentería⁽⁷⁵⁾, disappearing in the year 1948 (August/September) with number 87/88.

In August 1937 the first number of Cádiz y América is issued, published by Pelayo Quintero, with the subtitle philately and tourism. Boasting in its second part, rather than its first, that it presented tourist itineraries around Cadiz. In philatelic matters one notes an advertisement offering fifteen expertised national stamps for ten pesetas, as if it were worth-while to expertise stamps that were selling at less than one peseta. Some numbers showed in the background of the front cover the flag of the Falange while others displayed the flag of Spain. All in all, it published fourteen numbers.

With the date of January-February 1938, number 1 of El Eco Filatélico Español is published in Coruna as a monthly review of great world-wide circulation. It is of interest on account of the news it can furnish regarding the issues of Franco's Spain. In one of its numbers, it reproduces vignettes of the UGT* and International Red Cross Relief (Agency) amongst others, under the title red stamps it writes just look at those stamps with the Catalan inscriptions and all [sic], and why not in Russian when they are destined to render homage to the Soviet Union? Its last number is the 11th of December 1938.

* Translator's note: General Union of Workers (a Republican organization).

In 1938 there appears in Barcelona, Barcelona Filatélica which published two numbers only.

In December 1938⁽⁷⁶⁾, in Malaga, and under the editorship of Juan de Rensis Marra⁽⁷⁷⁾, appeared the magazine OFILMA, initially called OFILMA Boletín de Informaciones Filatélicas, which was published until the 20th April 1941. The magazine was noted because

- (74) Nathan & Gahl mistakenly indicate January 1941.
- (75) Nathan & Gahl do not name the publisher of this second period and state that the office was Rentería Pozo Viteri 22. Furthermore they continue to consider it an organ of the philatelic department of the Falange O. J. [Translator's note: Youth organization.]
- (76) In September 1938 it had published another number 1, but without charge.
- (77) An Italian dealer, established in Malaga before the Civil War, who entered the city on the 8th February 1937 with the conquerors and re-established his business, which had been plundered during the war. To compensate for his losses he created many patriotic surcharges. He was known as Juan Marra.

of its disputes with other dealers of the period which it attacked and by whom, in turn, it was attacked. In one of its numbers it announced that an official of the Madrid postal authorities had contacted the magazine saying he had seen the set XIX Centennial of the Virgin of the Pillar, verifying that it contained two different stamps of the 4 and 10 peseta values, asking where he might obtain these⁽⁷⁸⁾. Marra asks how they are going to know in OFILMA where to locate these stamps if an official of the Posts does not know and laments that the information received and published by the magazine about the set should be incomplete, adding that it is deplorable that such matters can happen which only upset and confuse philatelists.

In the year 1941 appeared the Boletín de la Biblioteca PERCO del Coleccionista, issued annually, and which only lasted for five numbers. It was published by Pérez-Cortina. Of pocket size, its character was instructive, dealing with pre-philately, with the origin of postage stamps, how to know to which country certain stamps belong, and the value of the same, etc. In its number one or First fascicule, following its terminology, it proclaims that according to our information, it is the first time that there appears a publication devoted to philately with an instructive character: neither commentary nor publicity here. This indeed is the case with the first number but in the third there are advertisements by Filatelia Llach, Pous, Tarré, Filatelia Orbis, and Ricardo de Lama, aside from those of PERCO.

On the 15th February 1945, there appeared in Pamplona El Eco Filatélico which some years ago added the designation y Numismático, under the direction of M. de Luis Nagorra. It seemed that a magazine of few pages, published in a provincial seat beyond the great philatelic centres, could not prosper, yet it succeeded. The contributing factors were possibly the advertisements, rather than the articles it published, because the most varied dealers and traders announced themselves there. Twice a month at first, it later appeared monthly, reaching its number 1,000 in July of 1993, a figure reached by only one other Spanish publication. At the present time it is being published by Isabel Bengoechea, one of the few philatelic magazines in the world under the direction of a woman.

In October 1945, and at the low price of 50 centimos a copy, there appears in Madrid the first number of Hoja Informativa Filatélica the publication of which lasted until 1950. It was a kind of newspaper and held little interest. It usually did not date nor number the issues, which contributed to much confusion. In one of its numbers it published an article about the bullfighter Albaicín who was a stamp collector. In another it informed about the appointment of two judges, one for Madrid, the other for Barcelona, whose special task was to be philatelic crime. It attacked a great number the Spanish philatelic irregularities of the period, giving rise to a colleague suggesting that it avoid the topic to preserve the prestige of national philately, to which it replied that its articles by no means caused the greatest loss of reputation but rather, speculating with certain doubtful issues that had not had postal use.

In 1950 there appeared in Granada, under the editorship of Francisco del Darro⁽⁷⁹⁾, the journal Alhambra which, though the organ of the Club Alhambra, could be acquired freely. It published a great number of advertisements (among these one advertising the Hotel Sexi of Almuñecar), a review of news, and notices without any interest. In one of its numbers it reports a call from the Madrid Philatelic Group, asking that the condition of repaired stamps (78) He refers to the stamps of those values with changed colours.

In January 1952, a dynamic and inexperienced Catalan dealer, José María Vidal Torrens, initiated the publication of Sellos⁽⁸⁰⁾ in Barcelona, with its last number appearing in December 1958. It published interesting studies about a number of topics, primarily addressed to the collector.

In November 1957, with the Sputnik having been launched just recently, it published a prophetic article by Francisco Aracil about what, in his view, could become a new topic: astrophilately. Some articles by that author, pointing out the ignorance of those responsible for the Philatelic Service in certain exhibitions⁽⁸¹⁾ forced the director of the journal to go to Madrid to offer excuses to the head of the Philatelic Service, José María Francés. (This title had been utilised already in Zaragoza, in the year 1929.)

In 1958, managed by Emilio Fonollosa, there appeared in Barcelona Boletín Filatélico (a title made use of by a magazine published in Manzanares, in 1898) which disappears in December 1964, having published some five numbers per year.

In February 1961 there appeared in Valencia Cuadernos de Filatelia, a quarterly journal published by José María Gomis, an indefatigable philatelist, the creator of the prize that carries his name, awarded to the best philatelic studies and those who have sacrificed their time and money for philately. This publication changed its name in December of the same year to Correo Filatélico but in April 1967 was renamed Valencia Filatélica, languishing in its later years until it ceased publication with number 160, corresponding to October/December 1985. It was able to count on outstanding writers, publishing highly interesting and original studies about pre-philately, forgeries, Miniature sheets, information concerning modern issues, etc.

In July 1964 there appeared the first number of Tharsis, published in Madrid by José Pérez de Azor. It is a magazine especially for collectors and thus deals with whisky bottles, medals, numismatics, Sargadelos porcelain, weapons, and, of course, philately. Only five numbers were published, coming to an end in November 1964. In one of its numbers it published an article by the newspaper woman Pilar Urbano about the collection of the Duchess of Almazán. It is a journal not mentioned by Nathan & Gahl in their work, perhaps because it is not devoted solely to philately.

Dated January/February 1965 and as a special number, without any introductory remarks or prefatory greeting, there appeared in Barcelona Coleccionismo Filatélico. In January-February of the year 1966 it published its number 1 of year two. It ceased publication in March 1972, with its number 71.

In May 1965 there appeared Mundo Filatélico⁽⁸²⁾, published in Madrid by Arróniz &

(80) With this title there had appeared in 1946 a journal of the Asturian Philatelic Group in Oviedo, of brief duration but of varied and interesting content.

(81) As an example of such ignorance there is the case of an exhibition of anti-tuberculosis stamps in which one saw stamps dealing with the liberation of France showing the cross of Lorraine, a national symbol.

(82) A title utilized in 1952 by a magazine from Cadiz.

Balairón who, in their introduction declare that Mundo Filatélico appears with the desire to be a publication that deals as much as possible with subjects related to philately. In this monthly journal, which was to publish just thirteen numbers - the last being June 1966, one could count on contributors of great prestige, and it published interesting articles on varying topics, as stated in its introduction.

In one of its numbers, and under the title More spurious stamps, it wrote Where do these stamps come from? Well, at times from abroad but still more so from right here: from Spain, dear readers. Let's not blame the foreign countries. It is in Spain where the majority of counterfeit sets that exist are made, alluding to those of the Universal Postal Union Congress, Defence Council, and Journey to the Canary Islands.

Even though it is not of particular interest, as a matter of curiosity we wish to point out the Semana Filatélica, published on the 10th October 1966, in Granada by Francisco J. Rico⁽⁸³⁾ who only issued number 0, normally distributed free of charge but which was sold at the price of two pesetas⁽⁸⁴⁾. It was printed like a newspaper.

In September 1967 there appeared in Madrid Revista de Filatelia. RF, under the editorial direction of Ángel Laiz and with Pedro Arróniz as editor-in-chief, published by EDIFIL, a magazine that continues to be published regularly. This magazine is printed on excellent paper, permitting a better reproduction of the illustrations, and publishes interesting studies about several topics: pre-philately, maritime mail, cancellations, postal forgeries, aerophilately, postal history, etc. In March 1982 it initiated the publication of some postal studies about the Spanish civil war by Manuel Vázquez Enciso - the most complete and best documented which exists to date. As off-prints that can be bound, it has published among others the investigations of Martínez-Pinna about the stamps of Spain from 1931 to 1939; the work of Leoncio Mayo about how a stamps is made; that of Fernández Duro about facsimile reproductions; and finally the translation of the work by Friederich.

On the 10th January 1968, there appears in Madrid the fortnightly publication entitled Actualidad Filatélica, managed by Manuel F. Gálvez. Its last number covers the period January to April 1977 (it ceased to be fortnightly) and is number 127. In its final period Francisco Peñalba, a Madrid dealer, appears as its assistant manager.

In its introductory editorial it declared We want Actualidad Filatélica to be a dynamic, friendly, active, courageous, useful, open publication ... that is, journalistic, fundamentally independent, part of the present, and philatelic. It reproduced interesting studies, among these one about the Spanish set for submarine mail, and also several of the articles by Mateo Fernández published in the 1930s in ABC.

In 1973 another great lover of philately, Juan de Linares, unfortunately deceased, initiated in Barcelona the publication of Los Papeles Filatélicos de LA CORNETA, an ambitious project of a person who devoted a good deal of his time and money to the dissemination of philately. The first number corresponds to the months of January and February 1973; its last number published is the sixth, corresponding to November/December 1973. It was a very important and engaging publication that was more a book than a magazine. It is enough to point out that the first number contained 128 pages.

(83) He is the former publisher of Alhambra. Nathan & Gahl show J. F. Rice.

(84) Nevertheless, Nathan & Gahl say that the distribution was free of charge.

In October 1983, though without showing either a date or place, there appeared Cambio Filatélico, published by Eugenio Quesade, a publication of the newspaper type. In its editorial it claims that the title of the magazine will go further. It had varied writers and dealt with the philatelic treasure of the Spanish state, among other topics. In one of its numbers it reproduced a project about a miniature sheet for EXFILNA 85 to which Tierno Galván, the Madrid mayor, had given his approval. Eight stamps with an allusive vignette on the side were involved, reproducing the statue of Velázquez with the Prado Museum in the background. Only ten numbers were published.

In the month of July 1983 there appears Philos, published by AFINSA, under the editorship of Juan José Delgado. It could count on an editorial board with varied personalities, amongst them José Luis Cela Trulock, the brother of the two authors. It continues to be published, and in June 1993 number 21 had come out. It has a section devoted to philately.

In February 1984 there appeared in Pamplona number 1 of the Boletín Informativo y Cultural de Filatelia published by José Javier Sanz Irigoyen. It is a monthly magazine that continues in publication, having reached number 106, with interesting and diversified articles, though nonetheless it is not distributed widely and is not well known at all amongst philatelists.

In May 1984 there appears in Madrid a new, well-printed journal which reproduces many illustrations in colour, entitled Crónica Filatélica⁽⁸⁵⁾. Its first editor was Joaquín Amado, followed by Leoncio Mayo. It publishes most interesting works and studies as well as separate publications on interesting subjects. In the month of May 1993, it reached its number 100, having published initially a number 0, distributed free of charge.

AFINSA, always concerned with art in all of its aspects, and with investments as well, published in May 1993 Coleccionismo with a section devoted to philately, edited with the quality that characterizes all the publications of AFINSA.

(85) Another journal with this title had appeared in Madrid in 1895.

C) SOCIETY PUBLICATIONS

A description would be extensive and of little interest, as many of them deal only with affairs related to a given Society or information about coming exhibitions or new philatelic issues. Several are found mimeographed. Anyone wishing to know them all can find an account in the previously mentioned work by Nathan & Gahl, pages 436 to 454.

It is to be noted that some of these are true magazines of philatelic societies and can be acquired only by those who are members, while others, even though an organ of a society, can nevertheless be acquired by persons who are not members. Following this introduction we shall point out the most important ones chronologically.

In the year 1917 there appeared in Barcelona, Coleccionismo, the organ of the Club Universo, with three numbers only published, and which in 1918 changed its title to España

Coleccionista⁽⁸⁶⁾, publishing only two numbers more before disappearing completely.

In 1918 the Boletín Oficial de la Asociación Filatélica Internacional came into being in Madrid, publishing a total of 24 numbers which were distributed gratis among the membership.

In 1919 there was published in Barcelona the Revista de la Sociedad de Filatelistas, edited initially by Agustín Piracés⁽⁸⁷⁾ and later by Ricardo de Lama, publishing a total of 62 numbers and disappearing in 1927.

In Madrid, in the year 1919, with Manuel Medrano as editor, there appeared Mundial Filatélico, the organ of the Sociedad Hispano-Lusitana, publishing five numbers only.

In the year 1926, in February, the first number of the Boletín del Círculo Filatélico y Numismático de Barcelona is published but ceases publication in 1927. Between 1955 and 1958 it reappears with the name Circular Informativa, rising once more between 1960 and 1965 with its original, i.e. 1926 title; and again, between 1972 and 1973 it is published with the name of Circular Informativa. In 1973 this dynamic Catalan Circle, through its Study Circle, begins the publication of Información de Filatelia e Historia Postal, of which it published five numbers. It has been one of the best Spanish philatelic journals due to the variety of its articles, the depth with which they were studied, and the originality of many of these. In the year 1977 it changed its name once more, calling itself Información de Filatelia y Numismática, under the guidance of the prestigious Catalan philatelists Colobrães, and later Campderrós, specialists in postal history.

In 1932 there was published in Madrid the Boletín de la Unión Española de Coleccionistas, its first number being issued in September, but no further details about it are known.

Between March 1933 and April 1935 the Boletín de la Sociedad Filatélica Aragonesa was published in Zaragoza. The Society published the Cuadernos de Divulgación Filatélica in 1948 and 1949.

In January 1941 there appeared number 1 of AFHA, an organ of the Asociación Filatélica Hispano-Americana, which, following its number 31 of December 1943, ceased publication until April 1945 at which time it reappeared with number 32, after more than a year of interruption, in larger size. In one of its numbers it informs about the detention of Juan de Rensis Marra in Malaga due to philatelic matters.⁽⁸⁸⁾

In the year 1946 there appeared in Barcelona Iberia Cultural Filatélica, published until October 1957 and distributed free of charge among the members, and exclusively to them. In January 1958 it joined Cambio y Correspondencia Internacional which had appeared in Zaragoza for the members of ITYCE which had a number of editors and was published later

(86) A title which will be used in 1960 by a journal widely offered for sale, an organ of the Philatelic Society of Madrid.

(87) Nathan & Gahl give the name as Piraces.

(88) Antonio Alcalá states that he (Marra) had forged the stamps of the Defence Council and sold them in connivance with some tobacco and newspaper stands as genuine. (Discursos Académicos, 1992, Vol. III, pages 44-45.)

in Lerida, disappearing in May 1967.

The Philatelic Society of Seville published the Boletín de la Sociedad Filatélica Sevillana which has a fourth period from 1948 to 1958, according to Nathan & Gahl⁽⁸⁹⁾. In the year 1978, and under the editorship of Ramón Cortés de Haro, it appeared as the voice of this Society, now called Atalaya Filatélica [Philatelic Watch-Tower], one of the most important society journals owing to the interesting studies it publishes, among these Zeppelin stamps and labels, Spanish railway cancellations, latticed numerals, the handstamp Por Vapor [by steam ship] of the Carlist wars, accounting for the different dates when used, and even some indications regarding rarity.

The Philatelic Group of Reus, with a great tradition and as publishers of the Guía del Coleccionista de Sellos de Correos de España [Collector's Guide to the Postage Stamps of Spain] under the editorship of Tort Nicolau, published in 1950 its Boletín Informativo which disappeared the following year, returning once again in the decade of the sixties, disappearing finally in 1963.

The Valencian Society of Philatelists published Filigrana in January 1952, with the sub-title Revista Filatélica Internacional, a periodical issued every two weeks and of which just six numbers appear. It was edited by Enrique Fermín de los Ángeles, brother-in-law of Renato Critikián, and published some studies by the esteemed philatelist Senabre, among others, about the Habilitados por la Nación de España stamps. It also dealt with numismatics and with bookplates.

In the same year Mundo Filatélico appeared in Cadiz, publishing a total of twelve numbers and disappearing in November 1953⁽⁹⁰⁾. It was edited by Juan Pérez Rodríguez.

Between the years 1956 and 1960, the Gerona chapter of the Philatelic and Numismatic Circle of Barcelona published in Gerona the review El Postillón at irregular intervals, as is usual with these publications.

In March 1962 the Club Internacional Colón published Información Filatélica, edited by Roberto Martín, which continues to be published, though irregularly, as an organ of the European Philatelic Society. (Nathan gave it the number RF 143 but places it later in Zaragoza, Madrid, San Sebastian, and once more in Madrid, which is in error.) There was a period of six years without publication between 1968 and 1974, at which time it reappears with number 48.

In the year 1972 there appears on the 1st October FESOFI, the organ of the Spanish Federation of Philatelic Societies, still in existence though irregularly issued, and mostly with information about the Federation and exhibitions. In its initial period it was very interesting, publishing studies about tramway cancelations, the 30-centimos stamps of the Catholic Queen Isabella I, even about the counterfeit Quijote set, though taken from La Revue Postale of Brussels.

(89) Ramón Cortés de Haro, president of the Society, when consulted, stated that the Society lacked all information concerning the three previous periods.

(90) A magazine appeared in Madrid with the same title in 1965.

The Galician Federation of Philatelic Societies initiates in April 1976 the publication of Porteo⁽⁹¹⁾, edited by Juan Ramón Díaz, publishing interesting studies, notably of postal history in reference to Galicia, Canary Islands, the Indies, stage-coaches, etc.

Its first number declared that after many years of privation Galicia can count once more on a philatelic publication⁽⁹²⁾. Porteo published an interesting study about the postal history of Galicia, Canary Islands, America, stage-coaches, royal post-houses, etc. Its last number is 35 which came out in March 1986.

In June 1976 the Spanish Aerophilatelic Society (SAE), with its seat in Barcelona, published the Gaceta Aerofilatélica, edited by Antonio Ripoll, publishing interesting information about this area of philatelic collecting until its disappearance.

One must stress, finally, the publication, in Madrid, of the Boletín Informativo del Club Filatélico Agromán, one of the best printed society journals, and of a convenient size. It began publication in the year 1978, and reached number 142 in December 1990, thanks to the efforts of José Gascón y Marín and others. It has published interesting studies about the railways and philately, amongst many others. It is a publication not mentioned by Nathan & Gahl.

Also, within the publications of limited circulation we have the Group of Naval Investigation which has published Poseidón since 1979 under the guidance of the tireless José Pedro Gómez-Agüero⁽⁹³⁾, still appearing at regular intervals with news about naval postal subjects and interesting studies about the same.

Temática Española sees the light of day in 1980, in Oviedo, with F. Montero as editor, being the organ of the Spanish Association of Thematic (topical) Philately, and dealing with matters of so varied a field.

In the year 1982 the Philatelic Circle of El Ferrol publishes Posta, edited by Calvo Otero.

(91) Nathan & Gahl call it El Porteo.

(92) Galicia had Anunciador Timbrológico in 1895; El Anunciador in 1896; La Propaganda industrial Filatélica in 1897; and El Eco Filatélico Español in 1938.

(93) Nathan & Gahl indicate Gómez-Guero by mistake.

III CATALOGUES

GENERAL CATALOGUES

As we pointed out in the introduction, the first catalogue of Spain is published in Barcelona in the year 1864 by José M^a Vergés de Cardona, and which, rather than a catalogue, is a list of prices of the stamps issued in Spain until that date. Although later the catalogues improve and reproduce drawings of the stamps, they are really only price lists or, in any case, criteria of value as given by the editors. The proof of this fact is that the lists are published by philatelic dealers with some very rare exceptions. An authentic catalogue demands that a number of technical details be given for every issue, of varieties and defects in the printing, counterfeits, and many other aspects that are not covered in dealers' lists; or, if perchance these are mentioned partially, in a specialised catalogue.

Plácido Ramón de Torres publishes in 1873 his universal catalogue of postage stamps in which, logically, appear the stamps of Spain, and which has the characteristic of reproducing for the first time some stamps on the front page of the same.

Though we are going to refer to catalogues published in Spain, we must mention the publication of the Catalogue of Postage Stamps, Stamped Envelopes, and Post Cards⁽⁹⁴⁾, published in London without a date though actually in the year 1878, by the Philatelic Society, [London] (today the Royal Philatelic Society [London]), the first true catalogue of Spanish stamps that appears in the world. As a curiosity we point out that in the section on stamped envelopes it refers to the controversial Carlist stamp of Cantavieja printed on the envelope^(94a), those of the siege of Bilbao with the impression POR VAPOR which is absurd as the envelopes had to pre-pay postage, and the stamps for franking by Diego Castell for sending his work Cartilla Postal de España [Postal Notebook of Spain]. Nevertheless, despite lacking illustrations, it is very well documented.

In the year 1890 Leopoldo López (predecessor of Gálvez) publishes his Catálogo de Sellos de España. According to Nathan & Gahl, this is a first edition which consists of 64 pages, to be followed by a second in 1891 with 169 pages, a third edition in 1892, and a fourth in 1894. Our investigation leads us to different conclusions. As a matter of fact, what López calls Segunda edición del Catálogo Descriptivo de los Sellos de Correos de España y Colonias, Organizado según la Reseña Histórico Descriptiva de los mismos Publicada de Real Orden bajo la Dirección de D. Antonio Fernández Duro, Jefe de Administración del Ramo de Correos (Second edition of the Descriptive Catalogue of the Postage Stamps of Spain and Colonies, Organised in accordance with the Historical-Descriptive Report of the same, Published by Royal Decree and under the Direction of D. Antonio Fernández Duro, Chief of Administration of the Postal Branch) is printed in the year 1890.

Proof of this fact is the copy preserved in the Postal Museum of Madrid, dedicated to Dr. Thebussem, on which the author has placed his personal cancellation, showing the date 8 SETI 90 [8th September 1890] and which contains 69 pages. Nor can one believe that the edition is previous to that date, as it includes sets from Cuba and other former colonies issued and sold in 1890. There is a statement in the Catalogue that it was awarded a silver medal at the Philippines Exhibition of 1887, making us suppose that the first edition is that of a previous date, or else that the author may have published it as an offprint from some magazine and later, in 1890, as a catalogue.

This Catalogue is interesting, and it must be noted that it assigns values to new and used stamps but only gives prices of those offered for sale, which are usually the most frequently seen, and in cancelled condition only.

This catalogue appears in 1896, under the name Gálvez⁽⁹⁵⁾ who publishes it regularly. In the year 1898 it develops into a universal catalogue, the first published in Castilian, with the simple title of Catálogo Gálvez. Sellos de Correos y Telégrafos, indicating within that it is a (94) Nathan & Gahl mistakenly name it Spain and Colonies: 1850-1878.

(94a) The references concerning this stamp are of a historical nature. This very controversial stamp appears to belong to the Royal Army of Catalonia.

Descriptive Catalogue, first edition of the Universal, and sixth of the Catalogue of Spain and Colonies. The classification is arranged in alphabetic order but the stamps of the different colonies are placed after those of the metropolis. This publication, intended to show the presence of Spain in the philatelic world, is not described by Nathan & Gahl who simply state that it is an offprint of the world catalogue, i.e. that the Gálvez catalogue of Spain and Colonies is a section only. He continued to print editions of the Universal, with the eleventh edition corresponding to the year 1922. In the years 1917, 1950-51, and 1954 he published catalogues exclusively of colonies and ex-colonies, with the 1950-51 edition being the most complete in existence to date. The last edition of the Spanish Catalogue is the 1962/63 one which, had it been numbered, should have been the 31st.

The nineteenth century comes to an end with the appearance of numerous catalogues. In 1892 we have one with the title Descripción de los Sellos de Comunicaciones de España by an anonymous author and published in Saragossa.

In 1891 Hermenegildo Prats publishes in Barcelona his Catálogo Ilustrado de Sellos de Correo de España which in 39 pages⁽⁹⁶⁾ claims to describe all the varieties, colours, reprints, and fiscal stamps used postally, as well as all the cancellations and other evidence of annulment and counter-marks.

He has explanatory notes such as one calls used stamps those which, when in circulation are invalidated by means of a cancellation. He mentions curious facts such as the set of 1876 watermark castle, was printed in London under the auspices of the Stamp Society. In the matter of prices we can see that the two-reales of 1851 is valued by him at 500 pesetas, new as well as used, and the one of 1853 at 150 pesetas, new or used⁽⁹⁷⁾.

He does not give a description of Dr. Thebussem's franchise stamps, perhaps because these are labels applied to envelopes. He does deal with cancellations, indicating that there are mute and talking ones, classifying among the former those which, even when including a word such as Franco or Annulato, do not show the postal origin of the letter. He furnishes a detailed description of the different Spanish cancellations in order to remove any doubts amongst collectors.

In 1896 Manuel Asenjo publishes in Madrid his Catálogo Descriptivo de los Sellos de Correos de España which he sold at 50 centimos and which came with illustrations of all the stamps issued up to that year. It was of pocket-size and had 32 pages. Also in the same year, there appears in Manila the Catálogo Descriptivo de los Sellos y Tarjetas Postales de las Islas Filipinas by Juan Mencarini who points out the varieties of postal cards he knows⁽⁹⁸⁾.

In 1896 there appears in Barcelona., though without a date, the so-called Catálogo de Todos los Sellos de Correos ... emitidos en el Mundo hasta el día. Its author is Ricardo San

(95) At that time, it belonged to Miguel Gálvez, the father of Manuel Gálvez.

(96) Nathan & Gahl show 40, including one for publicity.

(97) Today, the 1851 stamp has a value of some 2,000,000 pesetas mint and 1,000,000 if cancelled, whilst the 1853 stamp is valued at approximately 1,000,000 and 300,000 pesetas, respectively.

(98) Juan Mencarini was a philatelist, of a Spanish family, who for many years lived in the Philippines and in China.

Antonio, who explains that he is publishing this first edition as an essay, so as to correct any possible errors in a new edition, planned for 1897. Despite its title, he refers to the stamps of Spain along with possessions only. As a historical curiosity, he observes that the prices are in pesetas, francs, liras, or their equivalent in gold at 20 centavos⁽⁹⁹⁾.

In 1897 Balbino Cotter who had published in Madrid the magazine El Coleccionista de Sellos in 1871 publishes in Manila, in collaboration with Francisco de Quinto, a catalogue of postage and telegraph stamps, and of postal cards as well, of the Philippines.

And, in the same year, in Madrid, Antonio Vives publishes his Catálogo de los Sellos de Correos y Telégrafos de España y Colonias which he sells at one peseta or 1.50 pesetas if bound. He combines as the same issue, the stamps of Cantavieja and of Vistahermosa, and reproduces the five franchise stamps of Dr. Thebussem. An original feature, he reproduces enlargements of forged and authentic stamps of the known philatelic forgeries, but since the reproductions are blurred and do not show the characteristics clearly, the result is unsatisfactory.

In 1898 there is published in Madrid the so-called Catálogo General de los Sellos de España y sus Colonias usados en Correos y Telégrafos desde 1850 a 1898⁽¹⁰⁰⁾. It is published, as is stated in the catalogue, by L. Harris & Compañía, and sold at his establishment in Carmen Street at 75 centimos. The Catalogue contains nothing of particular interest.

In the year 1900 Francisco Laguna publishes in Madrid the Catálogo General de los Sellos de España y sus Colonias usados en Correos y Telégrafos, bringing up to date Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines, which had separated from Spain in 1898. It is a catalogue without illustrations which renders it relatively impractical. The 6-cuartos stamps of 1850 and 1851 are valued at 4 pesetas if mint and 15 centavos if the copy is used.

If the nineteenth century ends with three new editions, the 20th begins with four distinct catalogues, all four being published in the year 1902. The first among these is the Catálogo de Sellos de España y Colonias published in Guipuzcoa by an unknown author whose first edition contains 30 pages, in contrast with the fifth, published in 1914, which contains 566 pages, according to Nathan & Gahl⁽¹⁰¹⁾.

The second is the Catálogo de los Sellos de España 1850 a 1901 with an edition of 25,000 copies, as it points out, published in San Sebastian by Joaquín Minondo, a dealer and head of the magazine El Progresista Filatélico which published six numbers. Two additional editions were printed in 1903 and 1905. In the year 1906 he publishes a new edition, the first in French, under the title of Catalogue de Timbres-Poste et Télégraphe de Espagne et Colonies de la Société Philatelique Internationale de San Sebastian⁽¹⁰²⁾ which he sold at the price of one franc. A new edition in French appears in the year 1911 but no longer mentions

(99) Nathan & Gahl do not mention this catalogue.

(100) Nathan & Gahl mistakenly say ... desde 1850/98.

(101) We have not found this fifth edition but believe that the number of pages mentioned is in error, taking into account that the 1993 edition of the EDIFIL catalogue has only 293 pages.

(102) Nathan & Gahl call it Catalogue de Timbres Poste et Télégraphes d'Espagne et Colonies.

the Société Philatelique. Both these editions were compiled totally in French except for the preface which came in Spanish and the conditions of sale which were in both languages.

The last edition does not include the commemorative set for the third centennial of Don Quijote de la Mancha, issued in Madrid only and to be used for interior franking between May 1 and 15, 1905, adding that This issue is purely speculative, and its value is subject to fluctuation.

The third catalogue is the Catálogo de los Sellos de España, Cuba, Puerto Rico, Filipinas y Fernando Poo, the work of the Madrid Philatelic Circle, limited to one edition, with 64 pages and nine copper-plates.

The fourth, with 200 pages, is entitled Catálogo Regulador Ilustrado de Compra y Venta de los Sellos de Correos, Telégrafos y Fiscales de España y Colonias, the work of García Ceballos, the publisher of El Coleccionista de Sellos. In its introduction, To the Curious Reader, he stresses the great need of Spanish philately of a catalogue that must be more than a plain price list, which is what this kind of publications usually are in this country and abroad. As a matter of fact, we are dealing with a very complete work. He establishes the prices he considers fair for each stamp, and as a guarantee of his evaluation he commits himself to purchase the stamps in question at 75% of the prices quoted; a discount he regards as a logical gain of the object in the transaction involved. In 1903 he published a second edition with 208 pages.

A curious fact, for which he gives no explanation whatsoever, is the following: The Spanish issue of 1875 is characterised by having printed on the back, in large blue, framed numbers the position the stamp occupies in the sheet from 1 to 100. Evidently there must exist an equal number of stamps, so that their value must logically be identical. Now then, the 2 centavos. he values normally at ten centimos, but if it is copy no. 17 its value is given at 55 centimos, and if the number is 27 he estimates its value at 70 centimos⁽¹⁰³⁾. Why these differences? No one knows. But the oddity is that the study he makes of the 100 stamps he justifies by analogy with the study of England, with the plate positions, confusing the position of the stamp with the issues of different plates.

In Barcelona José Monge had been publishing his Precio Corriente since 1900, in which he showed the stamps he had for sale of both Spain and her Colonies, and pointing out in some cases the price of large quantities. Thus, in the case of the six cuartos of 1851, cancelled, we find these prices: 0.10 pesetas per stamp, 0.90 pesetas. for ten, 7.50 pesetas. for 100, and 70 pesetas. for one thousand. In 1915 he publishes his Catálogo de Sellos de Correos, Telégrafos y Fiscales. He usually gives only the type of the stamp, without varieties nor errors except for the one he calls inverted centre⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ 12 cuartos of 1865, both perforated and imperforate. He does not include in his catalogue the stamps of the Exposition of Industries in Madrid of 1907 nor the franchise ones of Dr. Thebussem, as these are not truly stamps but a visible impression of a canceller.

In the year 1916 Francisco del Tarré publishes in Barcelona his Catálogo de los Sellos de España Colonias Ex-Colonias emitidos hasta la fecha. In 1920 he publishes a second edition which includes postal cards, of which part he later made an offprint. In the year 1935 he publishes his Catálogo Básico de los Sellos de España, with new editions until the year 1942. In 1945, he changes the title to read Catálogo Especializado de los Sellos de España the last edition of which he published in 1956 and which appears simultaneously with the Catálogo Básico de los sellos de Colonias y Oficinas Españolas en el Extranjero, which he published in 1941, 1943, 1947, and 1953.

(103) All this without the excessively valued stamps showing any variety or printing defect.

(104) In reality it is the frame that is inverted.

In the year 1920, on the occasion of the Congress of the Universal Postal Union celebrated in Madrid, the so-called Catálogo de los Sellos de Correos y Telégrafos de España y sus Colonias is published and is accorded official character. It is merely a special edition, under that name, of the Gálvez catalogue of Spain and its Colonies, printed furthermore at La Rafa⁽¹⁰⁵⁾.

In the year 1921 Gálvez published what he termed Catálogo Especial which today we would call a Specialised Catalogue, of Spain and its Colonies. It was so well received that in 1923 he published a new edition in two parts, of which only the first, comprising Spain (with commemorative cancellations, proofs and essays, fiscal and university stamps, etc.) and Colonies then existing, was printed. A second part would be composed of the former Colonies, lost as a result of the war with the United States in 1898.

The Catálogo Especial of 1923 is the most complete made in Spain, and is also the most conclusive in the matter of our colonial stamp issues until then. It reproduces and identifies several types of the overprints used in Fernando Po, Guinea, Rio de Oro, and Morocco, and points out many varieties and printing defects in stamps, which for inexplicable reasons no other catalogue in Spain has dealt with subsequently.

In the year 1950 he produced a special edition on the occasion of the centennial of our first postage stamp, and in 1960 he published his Catálogo Especializado which he regards as the 25th edition of those published, and which is the next-to-last of those published by the Firm of Gálvez. It includes many of the overprints classified as patriotics, also the local surcharged stamps, preceded by the letter R if these apply to Republican Spain. The catalogue was reprinted in the year 1970.

The Civil War results in the interruption of the catalogues that were being produced in Spain. Some of these disappear forever and others, new ones, come into existence. The latter incorporate at first only the stamps issued by the authorities in their zone, ignoring the stamps of other zones.

In 1938 Juan Marra initiates the publication of his catalogues of the stamps of Spain and its Colonies, or of Spain exclusively, known as the Catálogos OFILMA⁽¹⁰⁶⁾, with the first of these covering National-Syndicalist Spain. The fourth and last edition corresponds to 1941/42.

Between 1938 and 1939 the journal Boletín Filatélico Español publishes in San Sebastian the Catálogo General de Sellos de Correos de España, consisting of the sections 16, 17, and 18 of that journal, dated November and December 1938 and January 1939, respectively. In it, not a single one of the stamps issued under Republican control appears, whilst the surcharged patriotics of the zone under Franco stand out. As a curiosity we note that the controversial set of the 1907 Exposition of Industries in Madrid is listed, with all the stamps valued at five centimos, regardless of their face value⁽¹⁰⁷⁾.

(106) OFILMA was the abbreviation of the Oficina Filatélica de Málaga (Philatelic Office of Malaga.)

With the civil war concluded, there appears in the year 1940⁽¹⁰⁸⁾ the Catálogo Mancheño de los Sellos de Correos de España, antiguas Colonias, Colonias y Protectorados, published in Renteria (Province of Guipuzcoa) in which for the first time, are listed the stamps of both zones, and also giving an account of the fiscal stamps that have been used postally. It gives very authoritative and interesting information.

In 1941, we find the first edition or the catalogue published by Ricardo de Lama, later followed by annual editions, the last of pocket-size and with the stamps shown in full colour, based on the numbering of Yvert.

In that same year, the Hispano-American Philatelic Association (AFHA) publishes its Catálogo AFHA de los Sellos de España 1850-1940⁽¹⁰⁹⁾, sponsored by the Youth Front of the Phalanx of Barcelona. When foreigners receive our stamps, as stated in the introduction, they will feel fondness toward this Nation which carried civilisation across the seas and gave a religion - the true one - and a language - Spanish - to half the world. Despite its small size and artless presentation, it was an interesting catalogue due to data regarding postal history, pre-philately, cancellations, etc.⁽¹¹⁰⁾.

In 1944 the Madrid dealer Renato Critikián publishes the first edition of his Catálogo de España y Colonias, an edition which he repeated for four years and which was becoming very popular among collectors because it has some really fair prices. Of the Spanish Colonies he published four editions. His success moves another Madrid dealer, Manuel Hevia, to publish in 1947 his Catálogo de España y Colonias, participating in the market that had acquired the previous publication, and also publishing several editions, the last being that of 1957. Of both size and press-work quite similar, their prices did not differ a great deal either from each other⁽¹¹¹⁾. He also published catalogues of Colonies and Ex-Colonies, the last edition being that of 1957.

In the year 1964 appears the Catálogo EDIFIL de los Sellos de España y Colonias, with a new edition each year, reproducing the stamps in colour and issuing every few years a specialised edition. At the present time they are printing what may well be termed a super

(107) These stamps were in circulation for approximately a month and had franking power for mail circulating only within the ambit of the Exposition, located in the Retiro Park, Madrid.

(108) The front page shows the year 1939 and San Sebastian; the inside specifies 1940 and Renteria.

(109) Nathan & Gahl indicate in error 1850-Dic 31/1941 as stated on an inside page, but in reality the year is 1940.

(110) For instance, in cataloguing the set or the Exposition of Industries of Madrid in the year 1907, it says that the plates of the issue were sold to the foreign dealer Adalberto Szekula.

(111) In those days the prices were fairly generous and varied, rising from year to year, so collectors eagerly awaited the appearance of the catalogues in September.

specialised work for the period 1850 to 1900.

The EDIFIL catalogue with its numeration and criteria for classification all of its own, had a great deal of success among Spanish collectors, and is a reference work utilised by foreign auctioneers.

Years later, two other very popular Madrid dealers, Francisco Peñalba in 1962⁽¹¹⁴⁾ and José Vicenti later, publish their own catalogues.

The one by Peñalba, for the stamps of Spain, had several editions. In 1968 Vicenti published his Catálogo NETO: Spain – Postage and Telegraph Stamps 1850-1968, which was very simple. Later, it published a new catalogue with the title Catálogo NETO: Spanish Pre-philately and Philately 1700-1970, which had the originality to relate by categories the pre-philatelic marks then known, to which 81 pages are dedicated, in front of the 91 pages dedicated to stamps. The pre-philatelic section unlike that of the stamps, didn't appear with any values.

Translator's note: There are no footnotes (112) and (113) in the original text, although (114) appears again later.

(114) The first edition by Peñalba, of 1962, mistakenly shows it as the fourth edition.

SPECIALISED CATALOGUES

They customarily limit themselves either to a period or to a certain type of Spanish philately. The Spanish Civil War began, to a certain extent, the publication of some specialised catalogues limited to the stamps issued by the authorities of its territory.

So in 1938, Ángel Jiménez published in Bilbao his Catalogue of the Stamps of Nationalist Spain with few pages, understandably, because there were few stamps in circulation. That same year, Juan Marra, published in Malaga the Catalogue of the Stamps of the Post Office of Spain Issued After the 17th July 1936, limited to the stamps from the Franco controlled region. A second edition of the catalogue exists from the year 1939.

The stamps with a surcharge for the City Council of Barcelona, in order to cover the expenses of the Universal Exhibition of 1929, and which stopped being used in December of 1945, are the subject of a catalogue by Francisco del Tarré in 1946. That same year Gálvez published one on the same subject.

The subject of special postmarks is the object of various catalogues. So we have the Catalogue of Special Postmarks and Postal Markings 1944-48 from Ediciones Ortín of Valencia, without a date, but including in its pages such markings up to the date of the 29th August 1948, and reproducing all of them in colour.

In August of 1948, and also in colour, Difusiones Panfilatélicas de Lérida published The Catalogue of Approximate Prices of Special Spanish Marks and Postmarks 1944-1948.

In Valencia, José M^a Gomis published in 1950 his Catalogue of Special Postmarks and Marks of Spain, with a second edition in 1953, a third edition in 1968, and new editions in 1970, 1972, and 1978, with the addition of the marks and postal marks relative to our colonies. Gomis is also the author of The Catalogue of Propaganda Postmarks, 1900-1982, in which are reproduced all that are known, and he gives the criteria for classifying and presenting them in albums.

In 1958, Alert y Pobla published in Barcelona, its Catalogue of Special First-Day Postmarks, Air Mail and First Flight Cancellations of Spain and Colonies 1940-1957, with annual supplements in order to bring them up to date. The postmarks are reproduced in black and white and as a side note, we should emphasise that it catalogues some of the many private commemorative marks of old air flights which appeared in the Barcelona Sunday Queralt.

(Other works concerning Spanish postmarks, of great importance, are the more advanced studies treated under the works of Spanish authors.)

Even though the stamps of Andorra had hardly awakened the interest of collectors, Francisco del Tarré published in Barcelona in 1953 his Catalogue of the Stamps of Andorra: Spanish and French Offices, which was only 16 pages long. In 1957, the Madrid dealer, José Delgado, published the Specialized Catalogue of the Stamps of Andorra (Spanish and French Post Offices), in which he describes some of varieties of Spanish stamps, and the deluxe proofs of the French.

The interest in the stamps of Andorra was already increasing, so that in 1977 Abad in Andorra published his first edition of the Catalogue of the Stamps of Andorra, which he updates each year, indicating all of the varieties of both the Spanish and French Offices. It is written entirely in Catalan, which is the official language of Andorra.

The fanciful issues of the Canaries during our civil war were the subject of a small catalogue titled the Catalogue of the Stamps of the Canaries, a work by Emilio Aurióles, published in 1968 as a supplement to number 1 of the Actualidad Filatélica. Small in size, but large in content, it gave a lot of information about these issues, the composition of miniature sheets, varieties, etc. On the same date, José Vicenti published his Specialized net Catalogue. The Canaries. Air mail issues 1936-38, with a better presentation, but without bringing anything new to the subject.

The debated Military Franchise stamps of our war of Melilla at the end of the last century was the subject of a small catalogue in 1968, a work by Emilio Aurióles, entitled Spain, Military Franchise. It's made up of a pocket-sized pamphlet of 20 pages. This was the subject of a new paperback edition in 1979, reproducing many stamps in sheets in colour and with interesting information about how to collect these franchise stamps.

Taking advantage of the interest which collectors had shown in collections called thematic, but are better defined by design, Vidal Torrens in Barcelona published in the 50s some catalogues of sports, flora and fauna stamps, which had great success. Although not properly part of Spanish philately, we don't want to touch upon these further, because they helped to foment interest in these types of collections, in our country, as much as in philately.

OTHER CATALOGUES

Other catalogues exist, which are not usually considered as being commercial, are those that are of stamp auctions. While there is more interest in the stamps themselves, than in pictures of stamps, it is necessary to emphasize that some catalogues of auction sales can not only be considered worthy of representation in a philatelic library, but also ought to be present in the same. So we have in Spanish catalogues, magnificent illustrations, dedicated exclusively to the 6 cuartos of 1850, to the acreage of the Canaries, to the seals of General Franco, to the overloaded patriotic issues, as well as others of a general character but which reproduce from time to time really extraordinary philatelic pieces and postal history.

Other catalogues which we can't forget about, are those which are published on the occasion of philatelic exhibitions. Although the majority lack interest, occasionally catalogues are published that include interesting postal studies or that contain a description of more-interesting exhibited pieces. In this sense, we want to emphasize that of the exhibition of the 25th anniversary of FEFOSI, which was held in Madrid in 1988, in which each exhibitor placed the most interesting pieces of their collection on view and provided a brief description of the same.

This system was followed by EXPOFIL 89 in commemoration of the 4th Centenary of Maria Pita, celebrated in Coruna in September of 1989, and also by the Exhibition of the Centenary of the stamp of Pelon which was held in Madrid in October of 1989, it is to be desired that this example continues to spread among organizers of future exhibitions.

IV. Works by Spanish Authors

The first references to philatelic-postal studies can be found in two works of Mariano Pardo de Figueroa, better known as Dr. Thebussem, and sometimes referred to as E. D. Aleman⁽¹¹⁴⁾. Entitled Kpankla⁽¹¹⁵⁾, published in 1870, and Klentrron, published the following year, they went on to become, in 1876, his Literatura Filatélica en España: Apuntes para la redacción de un Catálogo [Philatelic Literature in Spain: Notes on Compiling a Catalogue], in which he makes welcome comments on legal issues. At a time when the philatelic literature available in our country was rather scarce, only two philatelic journals came and went.

But before continuing it would be useful to examine, however briefly, the aforementioned author. He was regarded as one of the forerunners of Spanish philatelic literature, a Cervantes specialist, a highly regarded gourmet⁽¹¹⁶⁾ and an expert on a wide variety of subjects, writing in a distinctive witty style. One of his obsessions involved struggling for years to get the post card introduced in Spain, eventually publishing his own cards⁽¹¹⁷⁾, some of which circulated through the postal system with an additional 5 centime stamp, subsequently becoming great rarities.

(114) Meaning "the German doctor." See Dr. Thebussem: Un pliego de cartas [A bundle of letters] Madrid, 1891, page 159.

(115) The title is taken from an inscription on the wall of a village in Seville. Upon questioning what it meant, the answer given was Capánealá, or whitewashed limestone.

(116) According to him, he could tell the right thigh of a partridge from the left.

(117) It was said that The Government went out of their way to issue Doctor Thebussem permits for this run (May, 1873) for his own use and to give to his friends.

His work had great value, made more significant when one realizes that at the time there existed no methods of making photocopies. Therefore, all of his work had to be copied by hand. We should also keep in mind the difficulties in communication at the time, which could hold up the exchange of information for months.

Many of his works appear in compilations with others, such as Miss Alba Terry, Eduardo de Mariategui, Eduardo de Capelastegui and Navasqués. It should come as no surprise that, in an age where the telephone did not exist, the practice of writing epistles was very common, and many articles were published in this form.

His most interesting philatelic topics can be found published in the form of letters in the El Averiguador, a periodical from the last century, and one of the most interesting and curious to have been printed.

Finally, one very important aspect to point out about him was his careful attention to language, always using the appropriate word and the correct syntax. And this was at a time when politicians, publishers and writers generally tried to use correct Spanish, with actual results to the contrary.

The previously mentioned works do not cover strictly philatelic topics, but rather the use of terminology (whether to call something a stamp, a franking, to attribute it to the Post Office, or other agency of communications, etc.), or they offer a study of the foreign philatelic journals of the day⁽¹¹⁸⁾, at a time when there had yet to be any published in Spain. In one of his chapters, he examines the reasons behind stamp collectors being scarce, attributing the cause to legal stipulations, citing the Royal Order of the 18th November 1860 that prohibited the resale of stamps, classifying such an act as smuggling, and the 27th May 1862 Circular⁽¹¹⁹⁾ that proclaimed that when a letter or document, even when sealed, appeared to contain used stamps, it would be opened, and if stamps were found, sent to the Director of the Post, with the sender being charged under the law.

Before we continue, and although the study of our stamps can be limited to a particular period of time, we should focus the study on those of a certain date or subject.

GENERAL WORKS

The first work exhibiting such characteristics that we come across is called Apuntes para la Historia y Descripción de los Sellos de Correos, Telégrafos y Tarjetas Postales Emitadas en España y sus Posesiones de Ultramar [Guide to the History and Description of Postage Stamps, Telegraphs and Postal Cards Issued by Spain and Her Overseas Possessions], published in Zaragoza in the year 1879 by Esteban Argilés. It was a short 58 page work, plus an additional 14 pages outside of the text.

Looking beyond this short reference book, we should point out that besides such general works, we find three influential texts pertaining to the study of Spanish stamps, one of which also covers former colonies. They are written, chronologically, by Fernández Duro, Tort Nicolau and Martínez-Pinna.

In 1881, Antonio Fernández Duro published his Reseña Histórico-Descriptiva de los Sellos de Correo de España [A Historico-Descriptive Summary of the Postage Stamps of Spain] which, in spite of the title, also reviews the issues of the Antilles, Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Philippines and Fernando Po up to that point, and not just their stamps, but also postal cards. He writes in the prologue: Although there are already many stamp collectors in Spain, we can join them simply by studying these tiny pieces of paper that detail the progression of international communication, advance the arts, the development of the postal system and a thousand other particulars ... until now, collections of Spanish stamps lacked the main component necessary to reasonably and systematically organize them.

He points out that albums printed in foreign countries would be full of errors easily incurred if one were simply looking at a stamp without knowing the official measures resulting in the issue of it.

He goes on to say that these various [official measures] are discussed, although some issues had circulation greater than intended and it was difficult to track down some of them, it is therefore not surprising that Mr. J. B. Moens⁽¹²⁰⁾, a very competent specialist in this area, who has had the postal history of many European nations published, was not able to write the one about our country.

He published many writings considered to be essential to the study of postage stamps and their use. He describes each issue, reproduces a drawing of each stamp and points out the different values and colours of each of them. He indicates which have been forged, describing the denominations and characteristics of the forgeries.

He deals with overprints, or surcharges as he calls those of Habilitado por la Nación, resulting from the September 1868 Revolution which overthrew Isabel II, what denotes each type, the height and width of the letters, and the separation of each letter and line of type with respect to the others.

He mentions the Por Vapor [By Steamship] marking used during the siege of Bilbao in 1873, during the Second Carlist War, reproducing the notes of the Junta de Comercio de Vizcaya [The Commercial Assembly of Vizcaya] which established this maritime service, and making many comments concerning the event.

It is very interesting that the staff of the Cuenta General del Estado [General Accountant of State] from the first years of use of Spanish postage stamps recorded the different quantities of each value, of those sold, of those used, of those returned. Although several dates are mentioned in the Anales de las Ordenanzas de Correos de España [Annals of the Ordinances of Spanish Stamps], with the publication of his third book in 1880, Fernández Duro had established himself among collectors.

He devotes several pages to a description of the different frankings used by the Congress and

(120) The famous Belgian dealer who studied and published works on the stamps of the majority of European countries.

Senate, providing reproductions and listing the period during which each one was used.

Everything is further enhanced with stories and anecdotes. In spite of dating from the 19th Century, the Century of enlightenment, this was an dark period in Spanish history. Fernández Duro hints in his work, for example, of the dangers of moistening the gum on stamps, as doing so could cause small cuts on one's tongue, and he advises first wetting the envelope and then affixing the gummed stamp to it.

He discussed the alleged Philippine first issue of stamps in the year 1847, giving as much information as possible, with quotations from Rondot, Moens and García Mauriño, amongst others, providing the reader with references to works on this subject, and their location.

Fernández Duro, Jefe de Negociado de 2^a clase del Correo Central [Supervisor of the 2nd Class Department of the Central Post Office], goes on to say that *considering the usefulness of the book ... His Majesty the King (q.D.g.) * has authorized the publication of the book mentioned ...* and that he bestowed, for a period of six months the use of a special franking. He reproduces the franking in his book, and says that it Is the only privately created stamp legally used in the Peninsula he adds⁽¹²¹⁾ (It is extremely rare today).

* Translator's note: que Dios guarde (whom God protect).

Given the great interest in this book by the Spanish philatelic world, EDIFIL published a reprint, a supplement to the Revista de Filatelia between November of 1981 and April of 1983.

The second great work by a Spanish author was published in Reus with the title Guía del Coleccionista de Sellos de Correos de España [The Stamp Collectors' Guide to the Postage Stamps of Spain], published by the Grupo Filatelico de Reus, but whose author is Dr. Tort Nicolau, a medical doctor whose passion for philately started when he was young and who was the alma mater of this magnificent work. The aforementioned Dr. Tort appears at the end of the first volume as a contributor, signs the epilogue to the second volume, and as author of the third and final one.

The three volumes cover the periods 1850-1854, 1855-1869 and 1870-1900, respectively. He possibly intended to continue the work, but his death in 1950, when the third volume was in the process of being published, prohibited this from happening and established him as the architect of this influential work.

The first volume was published in instalments beginning in January of 1935, but was halted by the Civil War, and completed in the year 1942, for the suggested price of 75 pesetas, which was very expensive at the time. The second volume was published in 1945, and the third in 1950.

The first lacked organization and we see that after studying the issues from the years 1850, 1851, 1852, and 1853, and those from the mail from Madrid, he further examines the 1850 issue with an extended chapter of notes comprising 162 pages, when the original was only 50. The other two volumes are in the correct order chronologically.

(121) A stamp that never achieved the category of a rarity, and that can be purchased for about 3,000 pesetas, new, and for much less used.

All of the issues are studied in as much detail as was possibly known, including information on proofs, essays, quantities sold, printing defects, varieties or errors, forgeries, known cancellations, existing laws concerning particular issues, and any interesting dates having to do with an issue. Stamps and cancellations are reproduced in their actual colour, and each chapter ends with an appraisal of each example, which in the last volume is replaced by an index of rarity.

It was an amazing work, full of interesting facts, and after its first print run, was republished by Filatelía Llach in order to make it available to new generations of collectors. The Royal Philatelic Society, London awarded it the Crawford Medal, which is given every two years to the best philatelic work in the world.

The third great work of Spanish philatelic literature carries the modest title of Manual de las Emisiones de los Sellos de España [Manual of the Issues of the Stamps of Spain] and its author is Álvaro Martínez-Pinna. It also comprises three volumes, quite impressive in spite of being printed in only black and white, and being published as inserts in the Revista de Filatelía which was published by EDIFIL.

The work encompasses the years 1931 to 1939. The first volume is limited to the stamps of the Republican era and was finished at the end of 1986. The second volume considers the war-time Republican issues, and the third covers the issues of the designated Nationalist zone of that same period of time. The second volume was finished at the end of 1988, and the third at the end of 1990.

Álvaro Martínez-Pinna, who knew the history of Spanish philately like no other⁽¹²²⁾, organizationally and methodically wrote a historical introduction to each one, transcribes a great deal of legislation, much of it generally unknown to collectors, such as that referring to the flights of the Zeppelin and its postal tariffs, the routes of Spanish air mails, the different Spanish postal tariffs, etc.

He details the legislation relating to each postal issue, describing the different characteristics of each issue, known varieties, perforation varieties, proofs, essays, known forgeries and errors, and a description of how to identify them from each other and a wealth of detail on the different types of postmarks used during the different eras.

In the first volume he does a thorough study of stamps with overprints⁽¹²³⁾ of the Spanish Republic of Almería, Barcelona, Madrid, Tolosa and Valencia, reproducing interesting documents that allow the reader to become familiar with the numbers of authentic Almerian stamps.

In order to cover the stamps of the designated Nationalist zone, he tells the history of the Año Julibar Compostelano de 1937 peseta with the inverted centre, which was made especially for a well-known collector, and printed exclusively in Logroño, in order to create a monopoly, and that when the collector went to collect their orders, several stamps that had been sold to members of the Italian troops that fought with Franco were missing, among them those used

(122) Including the philatelic underworld, which has always been very important in Spain.

(123) We refrain from using surcharge, although it has already appeared in the D.R.A.E. [Diccionario de la Real Academia Española.]

to frank their letters.

The work of Martínez-Pinna was a Philitex '92 award-winner, in the most important exhibition of world philatelic literature, taking a gold medal and a second Grand Prize at the Exhibition.

This leaves for last, two works that cover the diverse issues of Spanish stamps. The first of these is the Historia de los Sellos de Correos y Telégrafos de España [History of the Postage and Telegraph Stamps of Spain], published in Madrid in the year 1901, and written by Miguel Aleñá, first editor of Madrid Filatélico, dedicating 160 pages to Spanish stamps put into circulation during the 19th century.

The second of the works is the Historia del Sello Postal Español [History of Spanish Postage Stamps] published in Bilbao during the years 1982 and 1984, written by Montalbán y Cuevas. It is made up of five volumes, which cover the following periods, respectively: 1850-1874, Alfonso XII and Alfonso XIII, the Spanish Republic, 1936-1949, and the Second Centenary. This last one covered 1950 to 1957. The work failed to generate interest, its biggest downfall being that the illustrations showed off-centre stamps and used stamps with heavy cancellations, mostly from modern, easily acquired sets. Choosing unused, well-centred, full colour stamps would have cost the same to print, and given a much better impression.

There remains, to the reader, an important period of time not otherwise represented by major works. From 1900, when the work of Dr. Tort Nicolau was completed, to 1930, when that of Martínez-Pinna had not yet been started, is a period of time of some interest. Thirty years that, like the famous characters of Pirandello, is searching for an author⁽¹²⁴⁾.

(124) Revista de Filatelia began publishing in October of 1993 the study of the 1901 to 1930 issues, written by Álvaro Martínez-Pinna.

SPECIALIZED WORKS

Setting aside Dr. Thebussem's writings, the first specialized work that we come across is that written by Francisco Carreras y Candi. Published in Barcelona in the year 1903, Las Tarjetas Postales en España [The Postal Cards in Spain], consists of 110 pages, in which there are twelve pages of illustrations.

In studying the catalogues published in previous years, such as the one published by Francisco del Tarré in 1920, we see the common style of stamp catalogues. In 1973, he uses facsimiles for the section on postal cards.

In the same year, Antonio Cotter published a catalogue dedicated exclusively to Spanish postal cards, including private issues, post cards, and stamped envelopes, issued on the occasion of the Centenary of our first postal card.

In Barcelona, in 1981, Francisco Graus, José M^a Sempere, José Soler and Ricardo Viñas published the Catálogo de Enteros Postales de España y sus Dependencias Postales [Catalogue of the Postal Stationery of Spain and its Dependencies], which was the most important and thorough work published up to that point.

It was only ever surpassed in the section relating to Spain (and excluding aerogrammes) by Javier Padín's work entitled Enteros Postales de España (1873-1973) [Postal Stationery of Spain (1873-1973)], which was published in 1990 by the Dirección General de Correos [General Post Office]. In it, he describes countless varieties and errors of our postal cards.

There were a number of works published in Spain dedicated to individual issues. The first of these appeared in Madrid in 1924. It is Julián Zuazo's El Sello Seis Cuartos 1850 (The 6 Cuarto Stamp of 1850), in which, under the title Ex-libris he published several pages of the history of stamps and of the mails. In it he says In Egypt, priests and pharaohs since 47,000 before Christ, (sic) had couriers delivering written and verbal messages on foot. He states that his work didn't actually present any information that wasn't already known, but because the English writings of Griebert were rather questionable, and the works of Ruíz d Arcaute weren't actually published, they were only familiar amongst his colleagues, he decided to publish his. He continues by studying 35 varieties of the Type II, with 5 in great detail. He reproduces the commonly known postmarks of the 6 cuartos, and the great lot Gálvez sold in a Belgian auction consisting of 195 copies of Type I, made up of 13 rows of 15 specimens from the 17 rows which make up a sheet.

Upon seeing that Zuazo had reproduced part of his work, Ramón Ruíz de Arcaute published El Sello de 6 Cuartos Negro de España de la Emision de 1st de Enero de 1850, [The 6 Cuartos Black Stamp of Spain of the Issue of the 1st January 1850], the same year, in which he summarizes the varieties that Griebert covers in detail, and includes his own drawings. It is a very short, although very important, work of only 45 pages.

We now arrive at the year 1940⁽¹²⁵⁾, in which Antonio de Guezala published under the imprint of the Grupo Filatélico de Bilbao, [a book] with the title 6 Cuartos 1850. The title was formed using the upper and lower parts of the stamp, and the subtitle Planchas, Defectos y Retoques, Matasellos [Plates, Flaws and Retouches, Postmarks]. The book was written in Spanish, French, English and German, and consisted of 355 very well explained pages, and more than 2,500 illustrations.

In his preface, the author, in order to emphasize the name of Hugo Griebert, states that, with a show of gratitude and admiration, we are obligated to lead off our book with the name of this distinguished British philatelist. His master work THE STAMPS OF SPAIN 1850 TO 1854 (London, 1919) awakens our enthusiasm for the 6 CUARTOS 1850 and gives some indication of the extraordinary philatelic interest surrounding this stamp and the direction to take to study it. It seems daring to wish to build upon the great legacy Griebert left upon his death, and to, subsequently, amend some of his theories, but later investigations have supported this, and we, his humble disciples have thought it necessary to divulge these rare discoveries.

He continues with some words of thanks to Ruíz de Arcaute who, upon learning of the idea for the book, supported it with philatelic enthusiasm. Mr. Hugo Griebert showed us the way, and Ruíz de Arcaute followed conscientiously and unwaveringly, thereby enriching the masters' work."

Guezala's book is extraordinary, possibly the most comprehensive that exists on the first Spanish postage stamp.

Other works dedicated solely to a single stamp or issue are Estudio de la Emisión de 1865 [Study of the 1865 Issue], by Luis de Blas, published in 1962, Estudio sobre el Sello de Homenaje al Ejército Emitido de 1939 [Study of the Armed Forces Tribute Stamp Issue of 1939] in 1969 by Peyró and Martínez-Pinna; in 1970, Estudio de la serie de Correo Aéreo La Cierva, Emisión Fournier de Burgos (1939), [Study of the Cierva Airmail Series, Fournier de Burgos Issue (1939)] by José M^a Gomis and Martínez-Pinna, and in the same year, Estudio de los Sellos Urgentes de 1937 [Study of the Express Stamps of 1937] by Guillermo Peyró and Isidro Payá.

In 1987, Los Sellos del General Franco de Perfil [The General Franco Profile Stamps], by Francisco Aracil, was published. Examples of this work are rare and limited to non-commercial editions. It covered type varieties, errors, printing defects, etc.⁽¹²⁶⁾.

In 1921, Pedro Monge started publication of his writing on Spanish cancellations. He entitled the volume Matasellos Españoles [Spanish Cancellations], and presented a study of postmarks used to cancel stamps on Spanish mail between 1850 and 1869. It was enhanced by transcriptions of several circulars and decrees. Monge continued this work for a number of years, particularly after 1945, when he focused his study on the early philately of different Spanish regions and populations.

There was an extensive study of the cancellations of the 6 cuartos of 1850 by Jorge Guinovart in the year 1984 in his work El 6 Cuartos Negro de 1850. Matasellos sobre el Primer Sello de España [The 6 Cuartos Black of 1850. Postmarks on the First Stamp of Spain]. In addition to reproducing in true colour the known varieties, he details a number of rare examples, some of which are the only known specimens.

Matasellos y Marcas. Estudio sobre los Sellos de 4 Cuartos de las Emisiones de 1856-1860-1862-1864, [Postmarks and Frankings. A Study of the 4 Cuartos Issues of 1856-1860-1862-1864], by Ángel Laiz, 1976, is worth pointing out as one of the works dedicated to the study of postmarks of these stamps, known colours, values as singles and on cover. It is the most complete source for this material.

It is necessary to point out Sellos y Marcas de Puerto Rico [Stamps and Frankings of Puerto Rico] by José Antonio García Lomas, published in 1977, and Prontuario Filatélico de Puerto Rico [Philatelic Handbook of Puerto Rico] by Francisco Massísimo, published the same year.

Finally, Matasellos de las Carterías Españolas [Postmarks of the Spanish Mail] by José G. Sabariegos, published in Madrid in 1980, studies the different official and private mail systems by province and how they relate to the different values given to the Alfonso XII stamps, showing different stages of his life.

(126) This work was distinguished at the time by the prestigious José María Gomis Prize.

Nathan's work⁽¹²⁷⁾ Ambulantes y Marcas Ferroviarias de España y Colonias [Railway Markings of Spain and Colonies], published in Madrid in the year 1979, had to do with the railways, a subject not yet discussed in Spain in such great detail. It was written in Spanish and English.

Tomás Dasí studied the subject of railroad postmarks, although he limited himself to only one type, in his book entitled Los Fechadores Octagonales de los Ambulantes de Ferrocarril [The Octagonal Date-Stamp of the Railways], published in 1979 by the Sociedad Filatélica Sevillana [Seville Philatelic Society].

Guillermo Álvarez Rubio, author of Los Correos Ambulantes de la Comunidad Valenciana, 1855-1985 [Travelling Post Offices of the Valencian Region, 1855-1985] in June of 1993, with the idea of dedicating one book to each region, and having ready for immediate publication those for Aragon, Asturias and Madrid. The work reproduces many cancellations, maps, schedules, photos of stations, and is very interesting.

In 1987, Francisco Garay published his three volume work Correos Marítimos Españoles [Spanish Maritime Mail]. He dedicated the first of these to the mails of the West Indies and Spanish America (1514 to 1827), the second to Cuba, Puerto Rico and Santo Domingo from 1827 to 1861, and the third volume (published in 1991) to the Philippines, Mariana Islands and Indochina. The work is incredibly documented and is very interesting.

In 1983 the first volume of a work from the journalist and great Galician collector Armando Fernández-Xesta appeared. It explored the subject of Militaria, a topic rarely studied in philately (save in reference to our Civil War), that is, the topic of war. Militaria can be defined as a postal study of the armed forces and the wars of Spain. The first volume, entitled Militaria 83, covers our Carlist Wars, Militaria 84, dedicated to the Napoleonic Wars, followed, and Militaria 85 comprised two volumes. The first of the two dealt with the pre-philatelic era and makes reference to the War of Independence and the first Carlist War. The second covers the Second Carlist War, that of Melilla of the XIX Century, and those of Cuba, Puerto Rico and the Philippines. The work is magnificently printed, presents a multitude of interesting facts, not to mention reproducing interesting postal specimens in colour from the author's collection.

In terms of works about pre-philately, besides those from Pedro Monge, we have Manuel Lagos' Prefilatelia de Galicia [Pre-philately of Galicia] in 1967, which reproduces many documents and some, until that point, unknown markings. On a curious note, the books' prologue is by Camilo José Cela. There is also the Introducción al Estudio del Primer Matasellos Oficial [Introduction to the Study of the First Official Postmarks] by Juan de Linares, published in 1978.

In 1976, Andrés García Pascual published Marcas Postales de Galicia (Hasta 1870), [Postal Markings of Galicia (to 1870)], as a special issue of the magazine Porteo, in which he details the various markings, their years of usage, and various known colours corresponding to date-stamps and postal administrations. In his second work, Marcas Postales de la Coruña. S. XVIII-XIX Notas Históricas [Postal markings of Coruna. XVIII-XIX Centuries Historical Notes], published in 1992, he covers the subject indicated in his title, and has an interesting (127) This time without Gahl's collaboration.

chapter on official postal frankings, a topic studied very little by other authors.

We have purposely left for last the great work of Spanish pre-philately published in 1971 by Jorge Guinovart and Manuel Tizón, with the name Prefilatelía Española [Spanish Pre-philately], that, although an extraordinary work, was surpassed in 1983 by its second edition, with two volumes dedicated to Spain, a total of 1,107 pages, and one volume of the pre-philately of our former overseas territories (which were not covered in the first edition), with 471 pages, adding a chart of rarity for all of the markings, describing their colours. All of this is accompanied by many postal and geographic pieces of information about each region and each territory.

Another topic which is the subject of study and publications is that of forgeries and how to recognize genuine stamps. The first known work is Manual del Experto en Sellos de Correos de España. Siglo XIX 1850-1900 [Expert's Manual on the Postage Stamps of Spain. 19th Century 1850-1900], by Luis de Blas, edited by Aguilar⁽¹²⁸⁾ in the year 1961, in which the characteristics by which genuine stamps can be recognized are described. To this work, he adds Manual del Experto en Sellos Falsos de España Siglo XX (1905-1938), [Expert's Manual on Forged Spanish Stamps 20th Century (1905-1938)], with excellent illustrations. Luis de Blas' works conclude with Cómo Caracterizar los Falsos Sperati de España [How to Distinguish the Sperati Forgeries of Spain], with many clear examples of this particular subject.

But, the fundamental work on this topic is Introducción al Estudio y Relación de los Sellos Falsos Postales de España [Introduction to the Study and Relation of the Postal Forgeries of Spain]⁽¹²⁹⁾ by Francisco Graus and Enrique Soro, which illustrates the different types of known forgeries along with the corresponding authentic stamp indicating the differentiating characteristics. Later, in 1986, Francisco Graus published the Guía-Catálogo de Falsos Postales. España-Cuba-Filipinas [Catalogue-Guide to the Postal Forgeries. Spain-Cuba-Philippines] on his own, using an original transparency system that allowed immediate identification of forged stamps. Unfortunately, the work is unfinished, and, in spite of its title, would have covered the stamps of our colonies, of which, until now, little has been published.

Each year FESOFI [Federación de Sociedades de Filosofía = Federation of Philosophical Societies] publishes a study on philatelic topics. The first is Maximofilia by Manuel Monterrey. A study by Ramon Cortes de Haro, Marcas y Fechadores de Madrid hasta 1900 [Markings and Date-Stamps of Madrid to 1900] followed, in which he makes an exhaustive study of their use in Madrid, indicating their colours, dates of use, varieties, etc.

The third volume is the Catálogo Temático Colombino hasta 1982 [Thematic Columbus Catalog to 1982], although it didn't actually appear until the year 1991, and therefore was somewhat outdated. It is the work of Francisco Piniella. Finally, the last work, by Antonio Perpiñá, is El Correo Certificado [Certified Mail], a magnificently documented study about a rarely studied topic in Spain, worthy of so great a collector, with facts and statistics and authentic colour plate reproductions from 1850 to 1901.

(128) It is the only work by an important non-philatelic publisher, with the exception of a few by Sopena.

(129) The name on the title page and the spine is Sellos Falsos Postales de España [Postal Forgeries of Spain].

Since 1983, The Hispanic Philatelic Academy has published the speeches of their fellows at their initiation ceremonies. Four volumes have already been published, and as would be expected, the topics are wide-ranging⁽¹³⁰⁾. Some of them form interesting and original studies on their chosen subjects.

Although entitled Catalogo de Sellos Perforados en España [Catalogue of the Perfins of Spain], the work of Florentino Pérez Rodríguez, published in Madrid in 1986, and edited by Antonio Torres, is more than a catalogue. It is an authentic study, reproducing the known perfins, indicating to whom they pertain, giving facts about the dates of authorization, their postal use, and their relative scarcity. The second edition, from 1992, surpasses it, and attests to the indefatigable investigative spirit of its author.

There are other works of great interest to the collector that deal with topics that may be unfamiliar, such as graphic arts. The first of these is included in the collection La Corneta, published in 1969. Its author is José L. Sánchez-Toda, and it is called El Arte de Grabar el Sello [The Art of Stamp Engraving], a subject which he dominates more than any other, as one of the greatest stamp engravers of the Fábrica de Moneda [Spanish Mint]⁽¹³¹⁾. Among other topics, he discusses the different methods of printing stamps (typography, lithography, tracing, photogravure etc.) It is an interesting work with many illustrations and a proof by the artist of the Venus de Velasquez.

The second work is called Como se Hace un Sello? [How is a Stamp Made?] and the author is a reporter and editor of Madrid's Cronica Filatelico, Leoncio Mayo. He also studies the main methods of printing used in making stamps, dedicating a chapter to each one, and pointing out the different types of stamp perforations (comb, line and plate), and is a work that should find a place in the library of every collector who boasts of being a good philatelist.

(130) Luis M^a Marín Royos' De la Historia Postal de Navarra. Estafetas, Tarifas y Porteos [On the Postal History of Navarra. Postage Conveyances and Rates] is an interesting 169 page work that comprises the whole of Volume IV.

(131) He engraved, amongst others, the Maja de Goya stamp and the Franco profile stamp, which he said was the most time consuming.

GENERAL WORKS

Serious stamp collectors most often start out with their own approach to the hobby, and, if the occasion should arise, will take advice from a veteran collector. Philatelic education has been, for the most part, passed orally from generation to generation, from collector to collector, along with the experience that comes from making mistakes, and feeling disappointments, but also from making good choices.

Generally, such published works limit themselves to giving advice on methods of affixing stamps in an album, how to use tweezers and which type are the best, measurements of different varieties of perforations, etc. Some works present stories of certain stamps or collectors to make a more readable text. Others touch on economic factors, or cover the great collections of the world, or point out the worlds' rarest stamps. Some dedicate plenty of space to the origin of the word philately, which our Diccionario de la Real Academia (Royal Academy Dictionary) included with errors. All of this lead Rowland Hill to discuss stamps as a means of payment, accompanied by stories of fraud⁽¹³²⁾ and mishaps caused by the sender⁽¹³³⁾.

There is no one book to prepare the collector for the confusion that they will encounter, one to teach them how to tell the true from the false, how to detect re-gummed stamps, re-perforated stamps, and about the many other forgeries that exist in philately. But, we would have to realize that such would be a very extensive work. Neither should we forget that many of the methods used to detect forgeries require means not at the disposal of the average collector.

The first general work found in Spain was published in Villafranca del Penedés in 1893 and was written entirely in Catalan. Its author goes by the initials A. C. y T. In a 1948 reprint by the Agrupación Filatélica del Panadés [Panades Philatelic Association] it is clear that the author was Dr. Antonio Comas y Torregrosa. It is a curious little pocket-sized book of 32 pages, entitled Filatelia⁽¹³⁴⁾. It gives statistics on the total number of stamps used annually worldwide, some 21,000,000,000, and adds that a statistician has calculated that the saliva used to affix stamps equals 125,000 kilos. It lists the most important collections worldwide, and amongst those are Ferrari, Tapling and Rothschild (sic), and that of Dr. Legrand, he includes that of M. Lopez⁽¹³⁵⁾ of Madrid, which he says was sold to a Marquis from Havana for 50,000 francs.

The first comprehensive Spanish work, Yo Hago Colección. Guía Elemental del Coleccionista de Sellos de España. [I Start a Collection. A Basic Guide for the Collector of Spanish Stamps], was published in Barcelona in 1932, and is in reality a small 10-page flyer with a few philatelic maps.

Post-war Spain, with all of its inherent problems, is flooded with this type of publication. In 1940, José María Llerendi⁽¹³⁶⁾ published his Manual de Filatelia [Philatelic Manual], the most extensive Spanish publication of any era, with more than 340 pages of text and illustrations. It covers the history of philately, the manufacture of stamps, points out errors and varieties like forgeries, and ends with a chapter on the present and future of philately, stating that to be a philatelist you don't have to be rich, nor powerful, nor refined. But to be intelligent is essential.

In 1944, José Majó, the well-known Barcelona stamp dealer, published in that same city Cómo se Forma una Colección de Sellos [How to Start a Stamp Collection], a short 49-page pocket-sized work that is, in reality, a lecture by the author with stories about how various people got started on their collections.

Majó also published Por el Mundo do los Sellos. Vademecum del Filatelista. [The World as Seen Through Postage Stamps. Handbook for the Philatelist] in Barcelona that same year. It is a very comprehensive work, with the same friendly tone the author lends to all of his writings, with philatelic terms explained, correct definitions of terms⁽¹³⁷⁾, and useful information about fakes and forgeries, and with many interesting facts throughout.

In 1949, a popular, but even narrower in scope, work by Majó appeared. Breviario del Coleccionista de Matasellos [A Postmark Collectors' Compendium] was published in Barcelona. It covers the various types of postmarks, including marks found before the development of the postage stamp, their history, and guidelines on how to assemble a postmark collection.

In 1949, the Guía del Filatelista Principiante [Guide for the Novice Philatelist] appeared. It was written by Emilio Escuaian, and published in Cartagena. Its 164 pages make a very useful guide for the collector.

In 1950, the work entitled Sellos de Correos [Postage Stamps], by Luis Jordá, was published in Barcelona, consisting of 96 pages, including both text and illustrations, and is a guide for beginners.

The work entitled Orientaciones Filatélicas. Los Sellos y las Misiones [Philatelic Courses. Stamps and the Missions], by the Jesuit author Ramón Gaviña⁽¹³⁸⁾ appeared in Bilbao in 1959. In the first section, he discusses the Mission's interest in stamps⁽¹³⁹⁾, how to remove stamps from envelopes, how to soak them without them losing their value.

The remainder of the work covers the story of a stamp, from its initial idea until it goes to the printer. He discussed fakes and forgeries, tools of the stamp collector, mounting a collection, and methods of acquisition (exchanges, buying, and as gifts), in which he gives tips on the etiquette of exchanging stamps.

Enrique Puigferrat published Orientación Filatélica, [A Philatelic Course] in Barcelona in 1960, a short 56 page work. Also in Barcelona in this same year, José A. Lázaro published his book Como Iniciar Mi Colección de Sellos [How I Started My Stamp Collection], a more extensive work than the aforementioned one.

In 1965, Eduardo Cativiela, the enthusiastic Zaragozaan philatelist, published his informative work Filatelía para Todos [Philately for Everyone] in the collection of La Corneta, in which he discusses the educational aspects of the hobby, and includes topics such as the condition of the reverse side of stamps, examples of rare specimens of the world, the Sperati forgeries, among other very useful topics for the novice collector.

The Sociedad Valenciana de Filatelistas, in collaboration with José M^a Gomis, the (138) The only religious order that has published a general work on philately.

(139) In the 1940s and 50s, it was normal to ask for stamps for the Missions, with the belief that for a donation of a certain number of stamps, you could save the soul of a heathen. It would seem that these sinners, therefore, wouldn't be able to save themselves, or wouldn't find it worthwhile to save their own souls.

publisher/editor of Valencia Filatélica, published the Curso Elemental de Filatelia [Basic Course of Philately], in 1968. Each author was in charge of one instalment aimed at young collectors. Although a very interesting work, it unfortunately remained unfinished.

José Repolles published La Filatelia [Philately] (from Editorial Bruguera) in 1972, containing similar chapters to those previously written, above all, those of Llerendi. Curiously, this work was not cited by Nathan.

In 1979, the most original and best-known instructive work of all those in Spain appeared. Curso de Filatelia [A Course in Philately], by Álvaro Martínez-Pinna, Juan de Linares and José M^a Gomis was published in Barcelona by the Centro Educativo del Ocio y Entretenimiento [Educational Centre for Leisure and Entertainment]. One volume is comprised of text, and another of (very impressive) illustrations. There is a workbook included, in which to write notes and answers. The content of the work was very inclusive, pointing out different types of collections, paper and perforation varieties, different printing types, errors, varieties, reprints, etc.

Everest Editorial published Coleccionismo de Sellos [Stamp Collecting] by Serrano Pareja in 1979. The quality of the printing was very good, but it was written by a person lacking any philatelic background, and filled with pages of what one person or another had said. One chapter is dedicated to the stamps of Spain, and another to those of Monaco, but none on the other countries of the world. He uses the wrong term to refer to postal cards and stamped envelopes, and uses this sentence to refer to pre-philately: Stamp collecting begins and pre-philately ends under the scrutiny of expert instructors, perhaps because he had previously written that in order to expertise postmarks, one had to have access to a microscope.

The aforementioned José M^a Gomis, an enthusiastic philatelist like no other, and one who sacrificed time and money in support of the hobby, published Coleccionar Sellos es Fácil [Stamp Collecting is Easy] in Valencia in 1980. A 160-page work, it presented ideas to jump-start collecting, but it was written more for very young collectors as it uses fictional characters.

In 1988, Javier de Linares⁽¹⁴⁰⁾ published El Apasionante Mundo de la Filatelia [The Thrilling World of Philately], a very nice edition by AFINSA, containing inserts on postal or philatelic curiosities that add nicely to the text.

Francisco Aracil published La Filatelia, Qué y Cómo Coleccionar [Philately. What and How to Collect] in 1991, published by EDIFIL, it contains superb reproductions. In this work the author points out the many avenues a collection could take, giving practical advice to get one started collecting. In spite of its being so brief, it is interesting.

Finally, José Luis Montalbán Álvarez, one of the authors of the memorable Historia del Sello Postal Español [History of the Spanish Postage Stamp], published, in 1992, the first volume of El Sello, ¿Arte o Cultura? [The Postage Stamp. Art or Culture?], in which historical themes are very nicely combined with popular philately, and is a highly recommended work.

V. FOREIGNERS & SPANISH PHILATELY

The first thing that catches one's attention when studying Spanish philatelic literature is that foreigners have, in many cases, pioneered the study of our stamps. It is worth mentioning Moens' work with revenue stamps and professional groups, and Griebert's study of the varieties of the 6 cuartos stamp of 1850.

We find, within the last five years, Michel Colas' study of the Spanish Civil War, Heller's study of censor markings, Ian Hamilton's⁽¹⁴¹⁾ of Queen Isabella I (Isabella the Catholic), and Dr. Gordon Ward's study of the Franco stamps⁽¹⁴²⁾.

All of this work is made that much more remarkable when we take into consideration the difficulty these writers encountered in locating any quantity of these specimens, in obtaining large enough sections of sheets to make studying the different varieties possible, and also in some cases, the lack of knowledge of the language that would prevent interpreting information correctly.

As previously mentioned, the Catalogue of Postage Stamps, Stamped Envelopes, and Post Cards 1850-1870, was published in London in 1878. This was the first true catalogue of Spanish stamps to appear.

Rudolph Friederich published the first edition of his work Die Postwerthzeichen Spaniens und seiner Kolonien [The Postage Stamps of Spain and its Colonies] in 1890. It was intended to be made up of two parts, the first dedicated to Spain, and the second to the Colonies. Friederich's book only covered the first part, and ended up as a small 72-page pamphlet with only brief information about Spanish issues, although it contains rare bibliographic details.

In 1894, Friederich published a new work in Berlin with the same title (written as Die Postwertzeichen Spaniens ... and leaving out the previously inserted "h"), divided into two parts. He dedicated the first 160 pages and 13 plates to the stamps of Spain, and the second 176 pages and 7 plates to our Colonies, in addition to the various illustrations appearing throughout the text of both sections.

Friederich studied the stamps, their design, proofs, varieties, colours, the postal cards of Spain and her Colonies, all of which would hold a great deal of interest for philatelists. His work is very valuable, in particular because he was the first to concern himself with our Colonies, and considering the difficulties in communication in the past century, he was able to obtain information on Cuba and the Philippines, amongst others.

This interesting work hadn't been translated into Spanish until recently, when EDIFIL undertook this huge effort. They published the translation using a similar type to the original, with notes by Javier Padín on the section on Spanish stamps, and by Francisco Aracil on the Spanish Colonies section, and with revisions throughout by Álvaro Martínez-Pinna.

(142) The London Philatelist, July/October 1952.

Between the two German publications, the Histoire des Timbres-Postes d'Espagne [History of the Postage Stamps of Spain], by the aforementioned famous dealer Jean-Baptiste Moens, came out in 1891 in Brussels. It covers the period between January 1850 and December 1890. This richly illustrated work of 564 pages is the most complete published outside Spain. Moens sets forth the most important work on Spanish postage stamps in French, reproducing the stamps themselves, their errors, proofs, and anything else relative to the issues. He covers the famous 2 reales blue error of 1851, although at that time, the only known example was owned by the famous collector Philippe Ferrari de la Renotiere [sic]. The author goes over forgeries and dedicates much space to the Carlist issues, including the controversial Cantavieja stamp. He studies the various postmarks of the Congreso de los Diputados (including the CONGRESSO error, which was used for only a few days) and the Senate, and dedicates 240 pages at the end to revenue stamps, including those of the notary, parliamentary and bar associations, money orders, receipts, advertisements, etc. All of this was available 18 years before Carreras and Candi published their catalogue in Spain. His work has been fundamental in the study of Spanish postage stamps. The French edition is very hard to come by, making it even more regrettable that it was never translated into Spanish.

The 20th century began with few studies of our stamps. A study of Philippine stamps appeared in 1904, entitled Postage Stamps of the Philippines including a list of the Telegraph and Revenue Stamps issued under Spanish Dominion, the 107-page work of Bartells, Foster and Palmer. This last author published The Postal Issues of the Philippines in 1912, an 84-page work covering their stamps, but excluding revenues.

In 1919, Hugo Griebert published in London a fundamental study on our classic issues. It is referred to as The Stamps of Spain 1850 to 1854. As indicated by the title, it is limited to the first five years of issue of Spanish postage stamps. For the first time, we have a detailed study of the 6 cuartos issue of 1850, describing the characteristics of the 24 stamps comprising the type I block⁽¹⁴³⁾, and their relation to their corresponding panes. Although it contained a small error, it was of great value, opening up avenues of study to Spanish philatelists, in particular those interested in postal history and other philatelic specialties.

The great number of Spanish stamps, such as the many local surcharge issues, the patriotic overprints, for which a profitable underground industry existed, the various censor markings, military markings, postal substation cancellations, foreign occupation markings of one sort or another, are, like the words of Antonio Machado, plentiful, and the basis of important and interesting works. Many foreigners have published in philatelic magazines, and others, which we will examine, wrote longer works.

In 1939, Hermann E. Sieger, the German specialist of the study of Zeppelin flights, published his Katalog der Marken National Spaniens 1936-1938 [Catalog of Spanish National Stamps 1936-1938]. This 80-page work detailed the known local stamps and surcharges appearing in Spain during the rebel occupation. In 1940, a study by Dutchman Karol J. Heymans appeared. Entitled, Speciaal Catalogus van de Postale uitgiften van Republikeins Spanje-Tijdens de Burgeroorlog uitgegeven 18 Juli 1936-31 Maart 1939, it covered the period 18th July 1936 to the 31st March 1939.

(143) Griebert considers 35 types to exist, with 5 more as a possibility.

With independence, there has been some study of the postal history of our Civil War. It is worth mentioning the work of the Frenchman Michel Colas Censures, Marques et Correspondances de la Guerre Civil d'Espagne et de ses Suites [Censors, Postal Markings, and Correspondance of the Spanish Civil War and its Aftermath] covering the period from July 1936 to December 1945, which in addition to discussing topics relative to our Civil War, also presents items of interest concerning Spanish refugee camps in France, and the Blue Division, amongst other topics, up to the year 1945.

Colas addresses each area separately, studying and appraising the various military markings, censor markings, those from refugee camps and those from military occupation in Spain, primarily the many cancellations of the International Brigades and the Italian Cuerpo de Tropas Voluntarias. He studies the Intervention Committees of the enterprises of Republican Spain, the International Red Cross, and the HISMA Society, created to direct German assistance to Franco, etc.

In 1985, following the Spanish Civil War, another Frenchman, Gerard Apollaro, published the most comprehensive study yet, as a prologue to Colas. Entitled Histoire Postale de la Guerre Civile d'Espagne [Postal History of the Spanish Civil War], it is the most extensive study in book form on the subject⁽¹⁴⁴⁾.

In 1980, Ronald G. Shelley, well-known British expert on all areas of our postal history, and whose greatest achievement was to become a member of the Academia Hispánica de Filatelia [Spanish Philatelic Academy], published The Postal History of the International Brigades in Spain, a very important and interesting historical and philatelic study.

The same author began publication of A Guide to the Postal History of the Spanish Civil War 1936 to 1939, in the 1990s. His plan was to publish chapters serially; it remains unfinished. The author studies the Republican and Nationalist sectors, foreign intervention, the repercussions of the Civil War on our Colonies, and ends with the Blue Division action during World War II. Within each topic, various sub-topics are discussed, such as the Republican Zone prison ships, currency stamps, concentration camps, the uses of revenue stamps, worker unions, telegraph cards, the Non-Intervention Committee, etc.

Shelley is also the editor of the Spanish Philatelic Society's publications on Spanish topics, in particular one about the censor markings of E. Heller, entitled Town Censor Marks of Spain 1936-1945, a very important effort concerning military censor markings. Along with this one, he edited others of varying topics, such as The British Legion in Spain during the First Carlist War 1832-1839, written by Shelley, The Message Carriers of Cadiz 1830-1860, by Nathan, The Post Office Marking of Madrid 1757 to 1900, by Anthony Crew, which he continues in another book to cover the years 1901 to 1931, and The Spanish Separatist Stamps also by Nathan, which covers the Separatist issues from the end of the 19th century and beginning of the 20th century. Also quite important is The Republican Local War Tax Stamps (1936-1939) by Félix Gómez-Guillamón, an extensive study of Republican Civil War Issues.

(144) This work is the most complete and concise work on the philatelic and historical aspects of the Spanish Civil War, based on the articles by Manuel Vázquez Encisco in the journal RF from March 1982, mentioned previously.

In 1962, the German, Hans von Rudolphi, published posthumously a short and interesting work on Carlist stamps entitled Carlistische Post brevee (Spanien 1873-1876) [Carlist Post in brief (Spain 1873-1876)]. It featured a historical introduction, a study of the various Carlist stamps, their printing, plate position, varieties, cancellations, proofs (one of which was previously unknown in Spain), and errors.

Another foreigner interested in Spanish stamps, the American Theo Van Dam, published in 1965 in one of the Billig's Handbooks, his study The Postal Markings of Spain. It is a small work in which many facts about Spanish cancellations are compiled. It covers the pre-philatelic to the modern, providing the evolution of many types of cancellations, such as air post, Carlist, maritime, etc.

The greatest works by foreign authors, although published in Spain, still remain to be discussed. The first of these, fundamental to whoever wishes to study Spanish philately and the Spanish post, is called Bibliografía Filatélica y Postal. España y sus Ex-Colonias. 1500-1980. [Philatelic and Postal Bibliography. Spain and her Former Colonies. 1500-1980]. By Natalio S. Nathan & Norman Gahl, it has often been cited and offers every possible detail on these topics, including maps, exhibition flyers and catalogues, etc. Their effort was extraordinary and garnered the recognition of our postal authorities by being published by the Museo Postal y de Telecomunicación, Madrid, in 1982. This is a bilingual edition in both Spanish and English, containing more than 2,380 bibliographic references.

The other work, published in 1981, by the Dirección General de Correos y Telégrafos is by Dr. Oswald Schier and is entitled Sellos y Hojitas Defensa de Madrid 1938-1939 [Stamps and miniature sheets: Defence of Madrid 1938-1939]. A voluminous 826-page book dedicated to the study of the aforementioned stamps, which actually includes all regular stamps, and the two types of commemorative overprints. These are airmail stamps and miniature sheets of regular and airmail stamps. All of the characteristics of each airmail sheet, along with its number, the likelihood of finding it mint or used, its incidence on cover, etc. are given, along with illustrations of the majority of items discussed. We believe that there has never been such an exhaustive study of such a few issues, if not in Spain, then certainly not in any other part of the world.

One also finds the post of Andorra to be intricately related to Spanish philately. This was the topic of an exhaustive study by W. A. Jacques in 1974, entitled Andorra-Andorre, The Story of its Stamps and Postal History, published in London by Robson Lowe.

A great number of works on our postal issues or history have appeared in foreign magazines since the last century. We want to point out two foreign magazines, published in Great Britain, which have been dedicated exclusively to our philately. The two publications, although no longer in business, were entitled, Cruzada, which had to do with our Civil War, and Spain, which covered Spanish philately in general.

EPILOGUE

The author ends this brief study of Spanish philatelic literature with two conflicting feelings. The first, which is negative - sadness in realizing that, in many cases, it has been foreigners who were the first to study our philately and postal history, and if not the first, then with the greatest depth.

The second sensation is one of satisfaction to see in the last few years the emergence of many authors of philatelic works in Spain, some truly interesting and extraordinary.

Another feeling emerges, somewhere between the other two, when I realize there are many areas of philatelic literature that have yet to realize their potential. We find that we are lacking a study of the first Spanish flights, including those departing from our country, those arriving from foreign countries, or those entirely within the country. This is all the more lamentable because there are many excellent collectors interested in this topic.

Among many other topics, there are also studies missing on our former African Colonies, the Moroccan Protectorate, or of our sovereign territory – but not a Colony – of the forgotten land of Ifni. Many varieties of these unknown stamps exist, such as surcharges, plate varieties, reprints, all very important facts in determining possible forgeries.

THE HISTORY OF PHILATELY

Foreword

During the last decade I have made several more voluminous contributions to "The history of postage stamps and the art of collecting them" in German periodicals, some of which have been deemed worthy of publication in foreign languages. But they are scattered here and there and some of the periodicals are antiquated and no longer for sale.

The circumstance that many of these articles remain valuable and that I have been reminded by friends to not let them be forgotten, made me venture to combine the most interesting ones into Volume IV of my Philatelistische Bibliothek and send them around the world.

This volume will contain material worth reading for every collector – young and old - and even the owners of newspapers from which diverse articles were taken, will not want to be without it, because of its handy form and continuous series, which will eliminate bothersome lookups.

Finally, it should be mentioned that most of the works have been reread, enhanced and revised. This new volume forms in many ways a useful commentary to last year's third printing of my History of Postage Stamps and Philately and if it were lucky enough to find as much resonance as that, it would only encourage me to continue in my resolution to build on and enhance our entertaining and beautiful science without looking left or right.

With philatelic salutations

An important legal decision for authors and publishers.

Unfortunately we do not live in Paradise, but in this not always beautiful world of tears, and so the relationship between author and publisher is not always paradisiacal; rather, the charm of harmony is frequently missing. For example, an author sends a publisher on request a manuscript dealing with a current question, the publisher stores it away more or less carefully in a cupboard, leaves it for a time then sends it back on the grounds of "lack of space". The author is disappointed, as he can no longer sell his article as it is not then topical any more.

Another case: the author works up a subject of general interest and sends it to a publisher, who does not get it into print at once. Meanwhile, a similar paper by a different author appears in another periodical, and the first paper is now unsalable.

Again another case: the author has supplied a paper on request but the publisher decides to close down his magazine instead, which he must have known about in advance. The manuscript stays with the publisher, who does not send it back. The author, who suffers the loss, does not know how to help himself in this and similar cases, nor does he want to go to law over every trifle. One might say that a commissioned work should be paid for as the publisher undertook to do this and it seems the least he could do, but the publisher often, conveniently, takes another point of view. This is wrong and the first viewpoint is the correct one, as is shown by the following decision, which we make known here for the use and profit of writers and the information of publishers. The circumstances were as follows: 'A' was engaged by the editors of the philatelic journal and undertook to supply manuscripts regularly for the next issue. He fulfilled this undertaking punctually. the publisher then met with a crisis, and he let the manuscript for the last number lie without printing it. A previous undertaking to return the manuscript or bring the arrangement with the author to an end was not adhered to. Since the publisher did not pay for the numbers already printed, or for the one that did not appear, ‘A’ went to law with the publisher ‘B’. The judgement went completely in favour of the plaintiff, and went as follows:

“The defendant publishes the periodical The plaintiff supplied the manuscripts for numbers 1 to 5 of the year 1924. The plaintiff should have received an honorarium of RM... for each number. The plaintiff only received this honorarium in part. Since he has had no more, he made the following proposals:

1. The defendant should be required to pay the plaintiff RM... plus 2% per month interest from 1st September 1924, and to pay the costs of this action.
2. The judgement to be executed provisionally.

The partial compensation of 28th February 1925 obliges the defendant to pay the plaintiff RM... plus 1% interest from 1st September 1924.

All this related to the numbers that had appeared. As for the last, unpublished number, the publisher declined to pay, since “the manuscript was not delivered and the number did not appear”. Also “he informed the plaintiff that the issue would not appear”, which was not in accordance with the facts. The reasons for the judgement were thus also the following:

The plaintiff has submitted a copy of the letter of 9th August 1924 that accompanied his manuscript for N°5. At the same time he produced a certificate of posting with a date-stamp for the same day. Hence the Court decides that the manuscript reached the hands of the defendant, particularly since the plaintiff stated on oath that the manuscript accompanied the letter.

Moreover, the defendant did not tell the plaintiff that the number would not appear. He did, in fact, give some idea of his financial difficulties and said it would not be easy to bring N°5 out. However he always claimed he was trying to master these difficulties and was resolved to keep the magazine going. This could only spur the plaintiff on to further activity. By no means could it suggest he should give up his work. If so, he would have ceased to support the defendant, whose difficulties he knew.

The defendant for his part had engaged the plaintiff to supply a manuscript every month. Every manuscript was to attract an honorarium of RM... . If the defendant had informed the plaintiff in good time that he need not produce a manuscript for N°5, the legal position would probably have been different. However this was not done. Hence, as regards this manuscript there existed a contract between the parties that only the plaintiff has fulfilled. The defendant is thus obliged to pay and is sentenced according to §631 B.G.B.

however, an interest rate of 2% per month must be considered unreasonable in the present state of the money market. The Court has thus reduced the interest rate to 1% per month in accordance with §91, 709, 24ZPO.

-----oooOOOooo-----

We can expand this case as follows from our own experience.

A publisher asks for “sensational” articles (we do not know what he means by this), gets manuscripts in, prints some of them promises to pay up to a certain limit, however, does not do so and allows the paper to cease publication after three or four issues. Before he would at least return the unused manuscripts, he had to be threatened by a legal letter. Naturally the author never saw money from the firm!

With yet another paper, the editor was “everybody’s girl” but as it later turned out, only as far as it suited her own interests. The contributors got sand in their eyes; they got letters promising the payment of their honoraria, but in fact got nothing, though they had carried out their part of the bargain. The “editor” owed her place to these writers but the firm went bankrupt after six months, so their money became unobtainable. The publisher too played a very peculiar double role as well.

Or again, a firm does not pay for lines of print, but just the manuscript, which the author wants to protect. The day of reckoning is put off by every possible trick: letters get “lost”, an account already delayed is spun out further, and the term of settlement is extended from 8 days to 8 weeks.

Finally, a publisher ordered a certain manuscript to be delivered as soon as possible; this wish was met. Weeks went by, then the publisher wrote to say he was reading through the manuscript; after more weeks the proofs were corrected; the understanding was then that it would probably appear in N°4; after a reminder finally came the actual true state of affairs, that the project had been “given up”; the payment thus stayed up in the air.

A firm agrees on a monthly fixed sum with a contributor, prints his contributions, after three months begins to criticize and find fault, obviously to get out of the payments; lawyers’ letters naturally go unanswered.

The same firm agrees with an author for regular reports on novelties for a monthly lump sum. All at once he finds he has no further use for them and sends the manuscript back to its author without warning. Naturally the payment is also refused.

Another magazine again promises payment, and even writes that it will be sent the same day, the recipient goes to work and then finds there is no follow-up.

In another case the firm knows that the payment should be made, and even names a payment for papers printed, but pays neither directly or otherwise and, of course, opposes any claim for payment, and who has the money to carry on a case against the publisher?

These are some of the complaints that have reached us, but by no means all. They do go to show that philatelic publishers are all alike, and we cannot be surprised when they do this sort of thing and prefer to remain inactive about them. It is more than high time some order was brought to this state of affairs, and we can only be glad that a discussion with the publishers attending is planned for the Hamburg Philatelic Meeting. We can only hope it will produce the necessary result.

The literature at the Stamp Exhibition, Hamburg 1925.

Although we may assume that all “Bookworms” have already had various reports on the 31st German Philatelic Meeting and the 3rd Meeting of the League of German Philatelic Societies, including the associated stamp exhibition in Hamburg, as a literary journal we obviously must bring some interesting questions to the notice of our readers. This appears directly necessary in the present case, since this exhibition shows again how much in need of reform our overall exhibition technique actually is.

As far as we are concerned, the balance of the exhibition was as follows:-

Number of literary objects exhibited	22
Number of exhibitors of literature	19
Number of gold medals awarded	1
Number of bronze medals awarded	2
Number of diplomas awarded	8
Number of “half and half” prizes awarded	2

11 awards to 19 exhibitors is a really satisfactory result – but we do not like it. We will now explain the why and wherefore:

We can eliminate the personal motive from four cases, namely the Gold Medal for the Kohl Handbook, the Bronze Medal for the new edition of Ohrt, and the diploma for Dr. Ascher as editor of the Deutschen Sammler-Zeitung. There is hardly one serious philatelist who would deny the highest award to Dr. Munk for his magnificent work – however the prize is not given to a work in progress which has hitherto been passed over, whereas Ohrt’s has been brought to an end. If the contents of both works are evaluated, the conclusion must be that in every case there was a gap between gold and bronze. Although there can be absolutely no sympathy for Ohrt as a person, scarcely anyone will deny his stature as a researcher and scientific editor. And there is a similar contradiction between these two works when it comes to Dr. Ascher's prize: Dr. Munk as editor of the Kohl Handbook, and Dr. Ascher as that of the D.S.Z. [Deutsche Sammlerzeitung], why is not the entire work taken into account, which both have carried out with other collaborators? And to round things off, the *Hamburger Fremdenblatt got a prize, whose editor is good old nobody?

* Translator's note: A Hamburg paper for visitors or "out-of-towners".

These insignificant distinctions can only be ignored, since the necessary division of classes is lacking for literature. The Berlin exhibition of 1924 is not a happy memory, but as far as literature went the prize judges found it easy to make their selections since periodicals were divided from books the latter were then divided by author and publisher. Library objects were also dealt with specially, and finally there was a miscellaneous section. Everybody got his desserts. Dr. Munk and the Kohl Handbook, new editions such as Ohrt, Dr. Ascher with the Deutschen Sammler-Zeitung. No-one was left without something, even editor Schmitt of the Hamburger Fremdenblatt.

Far be it from us to blame the jury, since they must also always be prepared to give "satisfaction" in carrying out their duties. And this is only the case when a correspondingly extensive class division is also installed for literature.

In the same way, the organisers must, in future, be clear about the prize-giving modalities. Moreover, literature is always only an appendix to the exhibition and whatever is left over from the medals is good enough for researchers hungry for honours and self-sacrificing publishers. Giving the jury instructions about the number of awards to be made deprives them of their independent capacity for judgement and leads to undesirable errors in judgement. Thus the prize jury must be completely free of commerce, all the more so when real golden medals are replaced by gilded silver ones and a division into upper and lower classes can also lead to material difficulties. Therefore, no abuse need be feared, only an attempt must be made to get a prize jury ready and willing to perform its task. A shower of medals is harmful, as is one of diplomas as they are nothing but a sticking-plaster or a makeshift. A diploma did not save Glasewald's literature, he was due a second medal along with that for his collection, like many exhibitors of two or more stamp objects, each of which got a prize on its own merits. Collecting and researching are different things but one needs the other and both need to be carefully measured.

In the main, these guidelines should have been applied to everything regarding literature shown at this exhibition. It is to be hoped that similar consideration will be given to future exhibitions.

For the sake of completeness we will list here all the exhibitors at Hamburg along with their objects and distinctions:

Alexander Bungerz, Tegernsee, with his works, distinguished by the bronze medal.

Carl Beck, Berlin, with his writings and the Bücherwurm, which missed an award.

A. E. Glasewald, Berlin, with his works and journals, which along with his Greece collection got a gold medal.

Köhl's Briefmarken-Handbuch, 11th edition, Nos. 1-6, which also got a gold medal.

Georg Bütow, Berlin, got a diploma for his own and his firm's works.

Ernst A. Walter, Freiberg i/Sa, showed his "History of old German postage stamps".

Dr. Wilhelm Schlechtriem, Dusseldorf, showed his latest work, which only got the bronze.

Mj. a. D. Paul Ohrt, Dusseldorf, showed his latest work, which only got the bronze.

Arthur Wülbern, Hamburg, got a bronze for his writings, including his collection of Hamburg private postmarks.

J. K. G. Wagner's Publishing Works, Neustadt, was distinguished by getting a gold medal for its published airmail catalogue, along with the Berezowski collection.

Die Postmarke, Vienna, had to be satisfied with a diploma here as compared with the Hague and Kristiania (Silver).

Karl Hennig, Weimar, showed the current volume of his journal.

Briefmarkenecke des Hamburger Fremdenblattes, the only supplement to a daily paper exhibited, got a diploma.

Dr. Ascher, Berlin, for Deutsche Sammler-Zeitung which he edits, a diploma.

A. E. Weigel, Chemnitz, for the Köhl Album, a diploma.

Paul Koch, Aschersleben, for the Ka-Be Album.

Verlag der Schwanenberger-Alben, Leipzig, for its articles, also a diploma.

Takahara Mitzi, Tokio, with his journal Jubinkitte Zasshi.

Heinrich Boyens, Altona, with various philatelic aids.

p.4

The leading article in N°3 of the Bücherwurm.

An important court decision for authors and publishers did not miss its mark, although it was not meant to have the results that it did in one case. It is well known that we introduce various things that were not meant to raise the reputation of a few publishers. One publisher took the paragraph number four on page three of issue three and applied it to himself, whether or not correctly he will know best, and because he also thought he had a [legitimate] complaint because we did not publish a review of his newspaper, which is published regularly, he announced his resignation from the Verein philatelistischer Literatursammler [Society of Collectors of Philatelic Literature], of which we, of course, obviously took notice. That is, for the simple reason that part of the whole situation was based on a complete misunderstanding – namely that we keep the members informed of newly appeared items in the newspaper market and bring reviews of literature that has recently appeared, but that we do not do it to make indirect adverts for occasional publishing house articles, for which the "want ad" section is available. As far as the other part of his reason for his resignation goes, one can only see it as an admission of a guilty conscience, because even the agreement reached on this topic, which was being prepared for [publication in conjunction with] the Philately Day in Hamburg, was not signed by the publisher concerned. Of course, the interests of philately demand that, in the field of [philatelic] literature as well, newly regulated conditions are mentioned, and the departure of one or the other members will not keep us from doing that. Nor shall we fail to report such events in the future as well!

Literature at the International Stamp Exhibition, Frankfurt-a/M. 1926.

J. A. Bosshard

When a reviewer and collector of philatelic literature visits a stamp exhibition, he will naturally direct his eyes particularly towards the specialist books and journals on display. Since a "Bookworm" will of course have a different point of view from a "Simple Collector", it is clear he will examine and study them differently.

Literature was poorly represented at Frankfurt. I missed in particular the major journals such as Germania-Berichte, Der Philatelist, Weltkorrespondenz, etc. This may have been because there was too little publicity for this “neglected dimension”, and the publishers were not sufficiently attracted. It is the old problem that for most collectors the philatelic literature is simply a make-weight, and the catalogue is the only thing worth discussing. Of course the collectors’ world is a guild of its own, and the less well-informed make their own discoveries, use no books and find it unnecessary to take any advice. They like to scoff at readers, but it is all too true that the least collector is a philatelist, so the collector ought to familiarize himself with a not inconsiderable amount of knowledge, and this can only be done by the zealous study of literature.

We may also assume that the Philatelistische Bücherwurm stand attracted the attention of many collectors not previously familiar with the journal, and the jury also distinguished our journal with a bronze medal. Carl Beck also showed various of his publications, and the important Lexicon from Alex. Bunnerz was also entered, and was given the diploma to gold medal. The Japanese Handbook of Philately by Dr. Tahahuru Mitsui won a bronze medal. The diploma to the gold medal went to Die Postmark, the Dutch philatelic journal from Amsterdam, and to S. W. Hess of Frankfurt for his magazine.

Naturally, the two special publications from Zumstein in Berne were also there, which left the competition with the diploma to the gold medal. Director Birnbach’s work on the Stamps of the Kingdom of Hanover was rated first-class, with the illustrations noted as outstanding. The stamps and airmail magazine from Oettingen, and the magazine of an exchange and correspondence club were also shown. The first of these is very well edited, and its articles on air mail are of particular interest. I was personally surprised that the Oettingen magazine gained no award, since its articles are definitely better than those of other specialist journals that were shown. The magazine from the international exchange and correspondence club in Frankfurt-am-Oder had not much significance either philatelically or bibliographically.

The magazine shown by Hess of Frankfurt actually contains few articles of value; it strikes me more as a local advertising sheet. I cannot at all see why it deserved a diploma to the gold medal, though naturally, I am not questioning the jury’s decision.

A very good entry was the Festschrift for the 75-year jubilee of Austrian postage stamps, produced by the Stamp Publishing House of Vienna. This is classic work, and the articles show the real knowledge of the authors.

Some outstanding manuscripts caught my eye particularly, and their authors seem to have taken great pains to produce valuable work.

What lessons can we now draw from the exhibition? Above all, that collectors concern themselves far too little with the specialist literature, and secondly, that publishers and authors pay too little attention to collectors. At first glance this is a contradiction, but this is not really the case, since publishers should above all not fail to cover the exhibitions. The well-known Hans Krötzsch of Leipzig did not hesitate to bring his works from the turn of the century along to the exhibition, so as to show collectors what he had published.

However, authors and publishers should also not forget to offer their works for review. I may refer to my article in the last “Wurm”, and repeat that one favourable review from a recognised authority has a better effect than hundreds of adverts, assuming naturally that the book is of some use.

However, these considerations do impose a duty on the friends of philatelic bibliography: to recruit for Bücherwurm, recruit for philatelic literature and science, and also to convince collectors that scientific collecting is no longer possible today without literature.

Sieger Prize for Philatelic Literature.

The Sieger Prize for Philatelic Literature set up by H. E. Singer in the year 1922 has just been awarded for the fourth time. The prize committee consists of Messrs Carl Beck, Dr. F. Kalckhoff, E. Pauli, Dr. Paul Pirl and Fr. Wilh. Thalmann. They found that for the year 1925 the Berezowski Air Mail Handbook was the outstanding candidate, and gave it the award. German literature has already had several writings on air mail, but in his work Herr Berezowski has given German Philately its first handbook and catalogue guide to this branch of collecting and has made it exceptionally useful, so that the Sieger Prize has again gone to a worthy entry. May this model prize spur Herr Berezowski on to further useful activity in this field.

Herr Berezowski, of Görlitz is also a member of our Society, and we send him our heartiest good wishes on this well-deserved distinction.

The First Catalogue from J. B. Moens.

Alexander Bungerz

One of the first names always mentioned in connection with philately is that of J. B. Moens, the editor of the magazine Le Timbre-Poste, the oldest specialist journal in French, appearing since 1863. Moens first appeared as a catalogue editor five years after the appearance of the first number of his journal, after various French, German and English publishers had preceded him in this field. However, the oldest Moens catalogue gained approval, since it was followed by other editions, seventeen to date, which have gained tremendous authority.

The title of the first catalogue that appeared in the year 1868 was Current Price Catalogue of Postage Stamps, Various Trials, Telegraph Stamps, Fiscal Stamps, Railway Stamps, etc. It was 18 x 12 cm in size, ran to 100 pages, and had orange paper covers. The editor is given as J. B. Moens, 7, Galerie Bortier, Brussels, and the typesetter as H. Thiry-Van Buggenhoudt, 42-44 Rue d'Isabelle.

It is clear from the Preface that the catalogue is based on the monthly sheets included in the magazine. This is followed by the Terms of Sale, thus leading to the 1st part, the Stamps and Entires. It is arranged alphabetically by countries, first Europe, then Asia, Africa, America and Australia. Then comes the 2nd part, containing the Trials, Telegraph and Cancellation Stamps, Railway Stamps and the like. In conclusion comes the information on the publications of his firm: Le Timbre-Poste, Les Timbres-Poste Illustrés and its English edition, The Stamp Catalogue of O. Berger, Heraldique Universel, The Forgery of Postage Stamps and its English translation, along with the albums.

This information is given on the last page of the cover, whilst the front cover carries the title and ten illustrations of stamps. The price of the catalogue was 1 franc 25 centimes.

Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler.

Alexander Bungerz

The oldest magazine for stamp collectors in the German language is the Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler [Magazine for Stamp Collectors], 48 issues of which appeared from the 1st May 1863 to 1st April 1867. It was published in Leipzig by the coin and antiques dealer Zschiesche & Köder, in a format of about 21 x 17cm. All issues included a title page carrying four stamp illustrations: Bavaria 1 Kreuzer; Saxony 3 pfennigs; Hong Kong 96 cents and Turkey 5 piastres. The volume consists of 12 numbers. N°1 of the first volume contains an Introduction, Some words on the older German stamps, Trials, forgeries and fantasies, Private stamps of the United States of North America, Antibies of Nevis, Miscellaneous and Literature. This advertised the two works by J. B. Moens, Manual and Illustrations to the Manual for Stamp Collectors, and announced that the Zschiesche & Köder Catalogue would be published in parts in the Magazin. It finished with six adverts and Correspondence. The number ran to eight sides, like every other issue of the first volume, which however gave no details of date or year: The issues are however dated from the 1st of the month, N°12 being the first of April. The volume closes with page 96.

The second volume begins with N°13 of 1st May 1864 and closes with N°24 of 1st April 1865. At the head of each issue is now the Year number 2 - 1864, or 1865. At the beginning of N°13 is the information that from then on the sections of the Catalogue would appear as a supplement. The first such supplement is actually in N°13, and covers two pages. Every subsequent issue again has eight pages of text. N°s 14 and 15 have a supplement First supplement to the third edition of the postage stamp Catalogue, pages 81-84 in a 17 x 11 cm format. N°17 has these supplements: the usual two-page insertion, a prospectus for the Postage stamp Album published by Gustav Bauschke of the Literary Museum in Leipzig, and an eight-page Index of Coins and medals available from Zschiesche & Köder, which carries the number 2. N^{os} 18, 19 and 20 have the usual two-page supplement, and the last also contains a supplement which gives the monthly catalogue of A. Thiele & Cie. of Mannheim. N^o 21 has a two-page supplement, plus Price List N^o 4 from Georg Sartori of Mannheim. N^o 22 has three supplements: four pages of adverts, a Stamps on offer from the Literary Museum of Leipzig and the eight-page Index N^o 3 of Coins and Medals on offer. N^o 23 has five supplements: 1 and 2 of six pages each, an announcement of the 4th edition of the Gustav Bauschke Catalogue with 4 small pages, Price List N^o 6 from Georg Sartori of Mannheim, two pages of offers from Zschiesche & Köder, and a two-page offers list from the Literary Museum. N^o 24 has an eight-page advertising supplement. The volume closes with page 192. It closes with a Register for Stamp collectors of N^{os} 1-24.

The third volume runs from N^o 25 of the 1st May 1865 to N^o 36 of the 1st April 1866. Again, each issue carries details of volume and year at the head, and every one covers eight pages of text. N^{os} 25 and 26 have eight pages of supplements, N^o 27 two, N^o 28 four, plus List N^o 4 of Coins and Medals available, in eight pages. N^o 29 has four pages of supplements, N^o 30 two, N^o 31 four, N^{os} 32 and 33 each have two pages of supplements, N^o 34 has the Supplement to the 4th edition of the Zschiesche & Köder catalogue, in four small pages in addition to the ordinary two-page supplement. N^o 35 has two pages of supplements, plus twelve pages of List N^o 5 of Coins and Medals available. N^o 36 has two pages of supplement plus the Register for Stamp Collectors N^{os} 25-36. The volume closes with page 288.

The fourth and last volume covers issues N^o 37 of the 1st May 1866 to 48 of the 1st April 1867. The details of year and volume are as for volumes II and III. Every issue has eight pages of text. N^{os} 37, 38 and 39 each have two pages of supplements, N^o 40 has no supplement, N^{os} 41 and 42 each have two pages, and N^o 42 has an announcement of the 70th lottery 1866. N^{os} 43, 44 and 45 again have two sides, N^o 46 has no supplement. The supplement to N^o 47 is the twelve-page List N^o 6 of Coins and Medals available. The only supplement to N^o 48 is the Register for Stamp Collectors N^{os} 37-48. The volume, and with it the journal, closes with page 384. The following notice appears at the end of the last number: We hereby notify our esteemed subscribers that the Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler ceases to appear with this, N^o 48 of the fourth volume. We also inform our respected customers that our stamp business will be carried on as before, and solicit your continued custom. Before long the 6th edition of our Catalogue will appear. Subscribers who have paid for a further term are requested to communicate with us with a view to compensation for their outstanding balance.

Bibliophiles will be interested in the adverts for other literature, e.g. the catalogue from Stafford Smith & Smith (in N^o 3), Börsenblatt für den Briefmarken-Handel, by Wilh. Reichel & Comp. of Kaufbeuren (in N^o 8), Briefmarken – Album von Richard Claudius, the bookseller of Durr (in N^o 11), Der Briefmarken-Freund from Moritz Ruhl (in N^o 12), Briefmarken-Album von Friedrich Ludwig by Friedrich Loewe (in N^o 12), Allgemeine Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung from Ernst Roschlau of Coburg (in N^o 15), Album für Briefmarken from G. Wüttig (in N^o 19), Le Timbrophile from P. Mahé (in N^o 20); Addressbuch Europäischer Briefmarkenhändler by Chr. Mann (in N^o 21), The Stamp Collector's Magazine by Stafford Smith & Smith (N^o 23), Katalog by the Literary Museum (in N^o 32), Der Briefmarken-Sammler by G. Bauschke (in N^o 34), Philatelist by Stafford Smith & Smith (in N^o 44). In N^o 36 appeared the first report that volumes I to III of the magazine were still available, with the exception of N^{os} 4 and 5 of the first volume: from N^o 39 on it was reported that N^o 3 of the same volume was also no longer available. These three issues sold out very early.

The acting editors are given at the end of every issue: C. Zschiesche and C. E. Köder of Leipzig; all issues were printed by Fisher & Wittig of Leipzig.

As the first postage stamp magazine in the German language, the Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler enjoys great popularity with lovers of literature. The technical articles are a source of study for the researcher, and the lexicographer will find there a first attempt at a Postage Stamp Dictionary.

The magazine is not particularly rare, the print run cannot have been insignificant, but all 46 issues are not easy to find nowadays. Examples with all the supplements given above were not kept by many collectors, and number amongst the real rarities today.

Sieger Prize for philatelic literature.

For the 5th time since it was set up, the Sieger Prize for philatelic literature was awarded to the best full-length work in our field of study. The Prize Committee, consisting of Privy Councillor Dr. F. Kalckhoff, Counsellor of Justice E. Pauli, Medical Counsellor Dr. P. Pirl, Fr. Wilh. Thalmann and Carl Beck; awarded the Sieger Prize for the year 1926 to the work:

Hollstege & Schmidt: The City Post of St. Petersburg and Moscow.

With this volume, the authors have given the world of collectors a fundamental work which deserves to become a classic, so that the Sieger Prize has again gone to worthy hands. May this ideal award to the distinguished authors inspire them to further prizewinning activity in this field. We express to both Hollstege & Schmidt our best compliments on this well-deserved distinction.

The problem of the Leipzig world treasury.

Carl Beck

A flyer is included with the entire press run of today's issue that indicates the progress of the work being commenced and that defines its goal, which is close to hand, thanks to the immense amount of preparation work. So I do not need to repeat what is said elsewhere.

German philately, as well as international philately, has amassed a stock of literature since 1862 that is unequalled in amount, breadth and richness compared with any other subject area. Regrettably, today's philatelist is not fully aware of this literature, such that the literature side of our science is underestimated, unappreciated and thus neglected. This leads to a loss of much valuable work or to repeated analysis of the same issues in the absence of knowledge about completed work. Thus, it must be a main focus of the new office to serve the philatelist, to provide him with advice, information, help, literature sources, documentation regarding scientific work and research as well as all literature – even if the nature and means of that help needs to be determined yet – and all this in a service mode without regard to recompense and competition or special interests.

Given that the transfer of significant treasure troves is already underway, the creation of a large philatelic library could also finally bring about the creation of an "inventory of world literature." In this instance, the ultimate dream of philatelists would not be smothered at birth, but could finally become reality. This would turn Leipzig into a world-wide unique and universal source of information on philatelic questions and problems of all types and levels of significance.

It should be obvious to any reader why Leipzig should be so chosen, the German city of books, where seven philatelic publications and the two German world catalogues are now being published.

Permit me to emphasize here that the Leipzig office will be required to be independent and not beholden to any party. Thus, it may not, must not and will not be competition to anybody; quite the contrary, in its specific and individual tasks, it will be "one for all and all for one." Keep in mind that serious philately is not merely a commercial object for profit-oriented entities, not merely a hobby for play and amateurish time-wasting fun, but that it has been accepted doubtlessly as a fully serious science in its work and its rich literature and that it has asserted itself as such.

So then: The foundation has been laid, now onwards to construction and completion! Let everybody contribute as he is able.

It would be premature with regard to the orderly development of the project to say more at this point. Walter Löffler, Leipzig C 1, Pfaffendorferstrasse 30 and the author of this note will be happy to provide further information.

pp.2-3

Literature discussions.

Carl Beck

Library Catalogue by J. Schütte, Magdeburg. Not every collector of books makes the effort to prepare a carefully designed listing of his library holdings; most collectors merely make random notes on scraps of paper to note the most important factors. Indeed, it requires a great deal of work and time and it is not a pure joy to make a detailed listing with the title, author, year of publication, etc., for each book, catalogue, etc., apart from the inherent drudgery. Thus, the collector of books is all the more overjoyed, when he receives the library catalogue of another collector, as in the present publication by J. Schütte.

Written by typewriter on reproducing foil, the listing encompasses 41 pages plus 1 page of a Table of Contents. The listing is structured as follows:

- A 1 German scientific publications
- A 2 Foreign scientific publications
- B German scientific journals
- C Foreign scientific journals
 - a in French
 - b in English
 - c in other foreign languages
- D Catalogues and price lists
- E Auction catalogues
- G Library lists
- H Exhibition catalogues
- J Club publications
- K Various (yearbooks, address lists, Post Office publications, want lists, etc.)

Given the interests of a German collector, most of the library consists of German literature, and most of the publications and journals that have been published are represented here. Of course, there are gaps in the older and oldest publications, as is normal for a library that has been assembled only recently. After all, the oldest publications are now in permanent holdings and are traded only occasionally, when a library may be dissolved. Any collector wishing to assemble a relatively complete library must have a great deal of luck, in addition to significant funds! Unlike any other such effort, money is not the only requirement here – luck, unwavering persistence and unceasing searches are all required to give merely the chance of success in the assembly of a literature library.

All collectors of literature will be grateful to the author, because any listing of a library must be received with joy, given that it will advance the interest in the subject. And we hope that other literature collectors will follow the example shown by Schütte and will prepare a listing of their holdings. Apart from the overall benefit, this will also give an overview of the material at hand. The full extent of the literature can be seen from the catalogues published by Crawford and Dr. Rommel, as well as from the special publications of the Philatelistische Bücherwurm, these are rarities, and the collector of literature needs to be informed in this regard, just as applies to a stamp collector.

Strasburg Letter.

Heinrich Birnbach

Strasburg, June 1927

Dear Mr. Beck,

You ask me for a report for Philatelistische Bücherwurm on the Strasburg exhibition, as far as it concerns literature. I will meet your wish, and report herewith:

Class XXI, Division I and Division II, in which a total of 49 books and magazines was shown, only 6 of which were from Germany. Of these 49 books and magazines, no fewer than 29 were awarded a medal. Of the 6 German items shown, no fewer than 4 got medals and special prizes (including the work on Hanover shown by me). If we compare this figure with that for the Dortmund exhibition last year, where only 4 of the 60 German items shown were distinguished, the contrast is far too glaring. We are thus unwillingly compelled to return to your criticism in Bücherwurm N°3 of September last year that your predictions there have been largely fulfilled. Your criticism ended with the statement the next exhibition will show how far this prize-giving will be extended.

The alteration/extension you feared has largely come about. Instead of 60 German exhibitors, only 6 ran the risk of exhibiting. These were the 6 mentioned in your criticism as unlucky to have come away empty-handed from Dortmund, This time they need not regret taking the chance, since they were amply rewarded in Strasburg, with the one exception of the firm of Concordia Kurt Kayssner, Charlottenburg. This firm, which found itself behind the four lucky ones, got a medal in Dortmund for its ten-language exchange codex, but was left with nothing for the two items shown in Strasburg. On the other hand, all the other entrants who went away with nothing from Dortmund, were awarded not just medals, but one special prize as well.

However, it should be borne in mind that the war of rivalry with the exhibition in Strasburg, which has far exceeded the last exhibitions in Brussels and the Hague, and was not far behind the New York Exhibition, was much greater than in Dortmund.

In view of the limited space you have made available to me in the Bücherwurm, may I mention just a few books which were in the competition here. The first outstanding work to appear recently was that by Edwin Mueller on the Stamps of Austria (silver-gilt medal). Alexander Bongerz, München-Gladbach, got the bronze medal for his Lexicon of Philately. Heinrich Birnbach, Berlin, who went away empty-handed from Dortmund with his Stamps of the Kingdom of Hanover (diploma to the bronze medal, and special prize in the form of the Lower Saxony medal for literature). Of the outstanding foreign literature I should like to mention first a very detailed work from the Stamp Collectors' Society in Amsterdam on the Stamps of the Netherlands Indies, with special respect to types, etc., (silver-gilt medal). This work had already gained a gold medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1925.

Ferdinand Serrane, Nice, (acknowledged to be the outstanding French author in the philatelic field), showed some of his principal works: The French Postage Stamps of the Bordeaux Issue; Reconstruction of the Plates of the Bordeaux Issue and, finally, Vademecum on Expertising all of the Stamps of Europe, a work of 480 pages with numerous illustrations. This work, which appeared for the first time this year, is looked on in France as the best of this kind (silver-gilt medal). Frank Godden, London, had a study on the reconstruction of the plates of the French stamps of the Bordeaux issue. The work contains numerous photographs of whole reconstructed plates (silver medal). Ferdinand Ceccarelli showed a study of the cancellations on the stamps of the Papal States. This study appeared in various issues of Post-Marke of Vienna (silver medal). This is the first time that a periodical article has been awarded a medal at an exhibition. German exhibitions are warmly recommended to follow this example, since this type of honour will incite the literary researcher to concern himself with literature again.

Apart from those mentioned here, there were naturally also quite a number of outstanding works that I cannot deal with for lack of space. I would like to point out, however, that the principal French, English and also Austrian journals were shown as well as books, all more or less distinguished.

In conclusion, I should like to express here my thanks to the committee members and judges, who deserve special appreciation for their work in the Literature Section. They are the world-famous authors Fred Melville, London, Dr. Munk, Berlin and Nils Strandell, Stockholm.

Philatelic literature at the stamp exhibition in Neu-Titschein, 1927.

Carl Beck

The topic of philatelic literature has always been neglected as regards announcements at most previous exhibitions, but at Neu-Titschein publishers and authors were encouraged to put forward their works by the efforts of the organising committee. In view of the short time available the plans could not be put fully into effect, but what was shown sufficed to give an adequate picture of the importance of our specialist literature. It is also worth mentioning that the literature class was sub-divided into authors, publishers, journals, catalogues and philatelic aids, so that the jury was able to judge each work separately by its purpose.

41 items were exhibited in this class, and it shows particular understanding of philatelic literature that the jury was able to award 9 medals and 9 diplomas amongst this number of exhibitors. The following exhibits received awards:*

* Translator's note: Details of the medal winners were not translated – see the original.

The literature of the firm of Zumstein & Co., Bern, was outside the competition, as were the publications of Dr. Viktor Weinert, Pressburg such as Donaupost, etc. These certainly were given fitting recognition, but had to be left without a prize, since the persons named were on the jury. For the same reason, Carl Beck, Berlin, did not get a prize for his catalogue of about 3,000 rare volumes from the 60s.

The examples given show that it is not all that difficult to get an adequate display of philatelic literature at stamp exhibitions; every visit will be useful to collectors and philatelists in showing that philately also can be learned, and no book is sealed. Understanding the literature is the mark of the collector. On the whole, the exhibition showed there is an interest in literature, and we hope that the more than sad experience that many authors and publishers must have had at earlier exhibitions now belong in the past.

As always, we ask all collectors to support our generally useful attempts to bring forward the good and necessary but not commercial items of literature, by joining our society. Only when everybody understands the importance of literature and contributes his might to its prosperity will the future of philately be ensured.

Authors and the philatelic press.

J. A. Bosshard

On the whole, one can assert, that for the most part, the publishers of philatelic journals have only a one-sided interest in regard to their authors. Publishers want articles, which take full advantage* of the intellectual product of the writers. The circle of philatelic authors, who are justified in bearing that name, is not very large. Writing philatelic articles means being an idealist, so it is not everyone's thing to be intellectually occupied after the day's work.

It seems unusual, that the publishers of the specialist journals do not think of supplying free copies to authors, to whom they might make a contribution in regard to their further knowledge and stimulation. Hundreds of complimentary copies are mailed to collectors, but most of the authors are quietly ignored. I believe that the authors should be given more consideration. It may be that a certain egocentrism is at work here, but is it not an advantage for all collectors, if their authors are up to date and maintain their enthusiasm? Doubtless philately has enjoyed an upturn, reaching today's high level only by means of the authors and the philatelic literature. I have as yet met no Croesus among philatelists and probably no contributor to philatelic journals has acquired a large fortune. Every author would certainly be thankful to the publishers for the issues that have appeared, because it is not at all possible today, for one to receive more than 2 or 3 leading publications.

Translators Notes: * Exploit seems implied.

 It is not at all clear, which issues are meant, but it appears to be at least the ones in which the author's article has appeared and possibly others.

Help for the Kohl stamp handbook.

F. W. Th. [Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann]

Unfortunately it has again to be pointed out that German collectors and dealers circles still do not have the right understanding of and interest in this unique work. These are still many societies and individual collectors who have never bought it for their libraries and a large number of dealers who have not bought it for in-house use. A similar state of affairs would be simply unthinkable in England or North America if the work were to appear in the English language. As proof of this we need only point out that of the 32 members of the Society of the Friends of the Kohl Handbook who have contributed DM1,000 or sometimes more to its financial support, 12 have been North American and 2 South American. This is almost 50% of the total membership. 4 others live in Czechoslovakia, Alsace and Belgium. Of the remaining 14 members, only 4 are German stamp dealers, 2 the publishers, 4 German collectors from the Berlin committee, and 4 societies, namely the Berlin Philatelic Club, the Nuremberg Society of Stamp Collectors, the Brandenburg section of the Germania-Ring, and another American society, the Collectors' Club of New York.

Where are the other main societies and clubs of the German speaking countries? Where are the many wealthy collectors and stamp dealers? Have all the appeals for financial help in various technical journals been useless? It would be an absolute disgrace for the world of German philatelists if this giant work, into which the editor has put his life's work, broke down half-way through for lack of financial means. It should also be borne in mind that it might not be possible again to find a philatelist with Dr. Munk's abilities and who is willing, like him, to devote himself entirely to the production of this work. The appeals mentioned earlier have brought smaller contributions than previously from individuals and societies. The Brunswick Ring Society for example recently gave RMK100. Individual donations of at least DM100, which should be the result of collections made, can be sent to the treasurer of the Society of the Friends of the Kohl Stamp Handbook, 16 Friedrichstrasse, Berlin W.8. These supporters will be recorded as “donors”. This type of collection could be made in the Society and its branches and in other German language clubs if a little zeal is aroused in their membership.

So, away with your indifference towards such an important topic you philatelists! Show that you can also support ideal aims and carry them out! It is simply not enough for this work to stay in Society bookcases where it can have no effect. It belongs in the hands of every collector who wants to be more than just a sticker-in of stamps. It will bear fruit in daily use and will show the understanding reader stimulating paths in collecting.

The parts that have already appeared (1-14) are supplied by the publisher at Friedrichstrasse 1621V, Berlin W.8. The quarterly appearance of the parts has made it possible to surmount the financial weakness of this standard work. With goodwill, the committees of societies and clubs could get a series of subscribers for this work, as well as getting donations for it. What has happened in Berlin must be extended to the rest of the country and the rest of the German region. The Brandenburg region of the Germania-Ring has members of only moderate means. Something could be done in these circles as well if the right impetus and the right conditions are available.

Certainly everything is not rosy, but we are dealing here with something very important and an affair of honour for the world of German collectors. Where there is a will, there will also be a way! Dr. Pirl said in his appeal at last year’s philatelic meeting in Berlin: Anyone who does not own and use a Kohl Stamp Handbook is no true philatelist.

The Monthly Advertiser

Who does not know at least by hearsay, The Monthly Advertiser, later The Stamp Collectors' Monthly Advertiser (N°2) and The Stamp Collectors' Review and Monthly Advertiser (N°3ff.), the first purely philatelic journal to appear?

Three months earlier indeed, The Monthly Intelligencer did appear in Birmingham but this was not a purely philatelic journal. Thus the Advertiser is rightly looked on as the first stamp magazine. It was published by Edward Moore & Co. (the first 18 issues), then by Alexander Perris, Liverpool, (N°19), when it came to an end. It appeared from the 15th December 1862 to the 15th June 1864. The Collector Club Philatelist recalled the oldest philatelic journal in a compact eight-page special issue which contained amongst other things a complete index to the Advertiser. When will we in Germany be in a position to produce such fine special issues on art paper dealing with the philatelic literature. Are our hands still tied so that we cannot even produce yearly periodical statistics, which have been omitted for the last two years for lack of money. Is there anyone amongst our members who could make this important special issue possible for us.

Authors and the specialist press: The tragedy part two.

Wilhelm Blank

In the November issue of the Bücherwurm, our fellow sufferer Bosshard addressed himself to a certain circle. It is to be hoped his suggestions will meet with success. Bosshard rightly remarks that a man must be an idealist if he wants to do philatelic research. However, no-one can live by such a "calling", and if anyone were to try, on the one hand even a specialist publisher will have a hard time, whereas others – unfortunately it has to be said – the products and names of a few authors are only utilized fully by rampant egoism.

A few examples from my earliest days may accurately illustrate the conditions prevalent in this field today. I take care not to give manuscripts to the world without a purpose, and yet it often happens that in spite of previous agreements with the publisher they are not seen again.

Recently a firm, without my permission, did not edit but made changes and permutations, which were then compromising to me as no-one realised the connection. A society journal prominent for several decades, whose parent society does several thousand marks worth of business, gives no honorariums on principle. They get free contributions, sell numerous subscriptions, and then pocket all the money quite shamelessly. I have been waiting for an honorarium for about 800 lines of print from one publisher for 10 months. After four months they wrote me that a cheque would be sent next day. A further six months went by and I heard nothing, I did not even get my bare expenses for typing and postage. Not long ago I found in a magazine an original paper of mine that had been copied word for word from another paper with only the author's name left out. Four written requests for an honorarium were met by threats of legal action. Thus, known intellectual property was stolen. On request and by commission I wrote a leading article which was of great (even material) advantage to the publisher. Usually I would have asked for after four weeks got 10 marks. Another publisher wrote that he would pay me 2½ pfennigs a line, if I undertook not to offer the work to any other journal. The honorarium would be payable eight weeks after publication. In working out the honorarium, lines with diagrams, tables, references, etc., would be omitted, and the whole honorarium would be rounded off to 50 pfennigs in favour of the publisher.

50 marks, however, I only expected 25 marks, and

However, enough of this experience, along came one even better. A stamp dealer who put out a “house journal” sent me for an honorarium of DM10 which was taken into account when I had asked for at least DM20 of stamps, the remainder could be sent by me in advance or could be deducted “in advance”. An editor in L asked me to prepare an article which, after inspection, he accepted for publication. A few weeks later I heard from the publisher in Honolulu that the “responsible editor” in L had no authority to accept work without the publisher’s permission, and that he was going to send my paper back.

This is a short and accurate section from a dismal journalistic experience, which would hardly be met with in any other subject field. To be fair, I was recently promptly paid an honorarium of 20 pfennigs per line after 8 days, I could hardly believe my eyes, but this was not a specialist journal but the publisher of a daily paper who ordered an article with a philatelic content from me. It should be pointed out that there is, unfortunately, a large number of would-be writers and chatterers who would do anything to make a name for themselves without having done any systematic study or having any soundly-based knowledge.

To separate the chaff from the wheat is perfectly possible for every publisher and is in the interests of his paper. However, every service deserves recompense and acknowledgement. Anyone who sees this will make the writer an offering for his work in the service of his ideal.

Mr. Publisher, hand on your heart. You now have this information, the ball is in your court.

Prize for philatelic literature

In the year 1922, H. E. Sieger offered a prize for the best philatelic work in the German language published during the previous year. For 1927 this was awarded to Edwin Müller, the editor of Wiener Postmarke, for a major work on the stamps of Austria. The prize committee consisted of Privy Counsellor, Dr. F. Kalckhoff, Justice Counsellor I. Pauli, Medical Counsellor Dr. P. Pirl, F. Wilh. Thalmann and Carl Beck.

We congratulate the new prize winner most sincerely on this well deserved distinction.

Literature at International Exhibitions.

Carl Beck & Alexander Bungerz

Previously, the organisers of exhibitions were influential, they solicited contributions and asked the major exhibitors of stamps and literature to contribute to their exhibition, arranged good premises and carefully guaranteed prompt return, etc., etc. It should not be necessary to mention all this, as it is obvious that foreign material trusted to friendly hands should be given careful attention.

Recently, conditions are unfortunately quite different in the exhibitions, and now we have poor packing and return of many objects. This exposes various unacceptable practices. We will ignore the stamps themselves, there are nevertheless great values on display, and one has unfortunately to accept that 'nothing suits'. But the literature. There were no closed cases, as was said before; the works were simply laid out on tables, often between pamphlets and prospectuses for the public to take. Some of the works can not now be found. The literature was not protected, which does not speak well for the organisers of the exhibition. The exhibitions themselves have often caused damage, which often cannot be made good. The same is true for the issue of medals and diplomas. The prize winners were soon notified, but there were other things to do than send on the prizes, the report was delayed and complaints remain ignored, etc., etc.

It really is time for this deficiency, naturally familiar to insiders, to no longer be looked on as unavoidable. It is high time to make it clear to the exhibition directors that their plainest duty is to fulfil their obligations and promises undertaken. The case may always occur when the management has lost an item. The loss must then be made good by replacement or suitable compensation. Every exhibitor will understand that in such a case the management is guiltless and has tried to put matters right.

However, when the exhibitors see that the management does not carry out its promises and does not advertise in all languages, then friendly feelings cease. Sins of omission like this makes the management lose the trust so necessary, there is a harmful effect on philately and the exhibitors who took part are scared off from any possible participation in further exhibitions.

That we are not threshing empty straw can be proved by a few examples. At the Frankfurt Exhibition of the 28th March to 5th April 1926, Alexander Bungerz showed nine of his own works, some of which had been long out of print. On return, three works were missing, naturally the most valuable, so that the author could not put them in later exhibitions. An immediate advert from Hermann Schloss, 41 Seilerstrasse, and a second inquiry on the 5th May and a third made on the 14th May, produced not the least response according to this gentleman.

The Philatelische Bücherwurm exhibited at the Luxemburg Exhibition of 4th to 8th September 1927: the medal awarded arrived on the 31st January 1928 only after repeated reminders; the diploma awarded to the Bücherwurm did not arrive until the beginning of April 1928, again after repeated reminders and without explanation.

The catalogue for the Monaco Exhibition, 18th to 26th February 1928, only arrived after numerous reminders, in spite of having been paid for.

Also, the literary objects exhibited are unobtainable. The insurance fees have been paid and accepted. However, there were no reports of missing objects. It is after all only literature! The money for the insurance was accepted, and that seemed enough for the German exhibitors. Only on the intervention of the Federal Protection Agency were the literature objects obtained, and they finally arrived here on May 3rd. We are still waiting for the bronze medal and the diploma after repeated reminders.

Possibly one or other readers sees these as insignificant – we however see alas only a symptom of the present view that the sanctity of foreign property no longer has validity. If we want to pass over the damage, we should no longer talk about the usefulness of exhibitions. Where there are shadows, there is also light.

If philately was not so close to our hearts, we could make a gesture over this deficiency. However as we know that only serious scientific work in all branches can safely establish the future of philately, there is a duty of self-preservation to bring the daylight in. Particularly as regards literature, we wish to direct our remarks to clever people, but also irrespectively towards the damagers.

Carl Lindenberg.

Carl Beck

Inexorable death has again torn a gap in the old guard, a gap all the more painful in that it has taken from us one of the best and greatest of our philatelists; Justice of the Supreme Court Carl Lindenberg. He ended his researches for ever in July. Let us take the opportunity of saying a few words about him that unfortunately can only give a slight impression of his importance.

Carl Lindenberg was born on the 1st May 1850 in Wittenberg (West Priegnitz). At the early age of seven he began stamp collecting a hobby, which would later make him one of the best-known and most important of the German philatelists. His childish beginnings were strengthened in 1862, when the first magazines on our topic were published.

Moschkau and Treichel came along, who were at that time the leaders in scientific philately, and Lindenberg obtained from these authors the knowledge that collecting was not simply a matter of piling up pretty little pictures, but was something to be taken seriously.

He chose the study of law as his profession, and as he was a keen and original thinker it led him to the highest position. In the year 1912 he was transferred to Posen as a Justice of the Supreme Court, where he stayed to the end of the war.

Always interested in statistics, he made a systematic study of official decrees and statutes and the minutely exact testing of the existing material for study purposes. Only in the presence of all the properties that distinguish the great researcher was it possible for him to reach the position he deserved: the most important philatelist, in the best sense of the word, that wrote in the German Language.

An absolutely colossal capacity for work enabled Lindenberg to deal with questions that have amazed and impressed us. His enormous memory and the incorruptible eye of the tester got him over difficulties that others would have found insurmountable.

Such powers were naturally not fated to remain in obscurity and so in the year 1880 he was appointed technical advisor to the Berlin Postal Museum. Here, he had to marry and build up the collection of stamps and entires. We see the just results of his activities in the publication of the Catalogue of the Stamp Collection of the State Postal Museum, which covers entires and forms as well as stamps.

What is today a huge collection, plus an exhibition and a parallel collection not to open to the public, is due principally to Lindenberg's years of intensive work.

In the year 1887 he founded the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde in Berlin, in the next year the Berliner Philatelisten-Club, which under his direction developed into the most important German society.

In these years the most important work up to that time, the Grosse Handbuch der Philatelie was put in hand by Teltz. It was not long before Lindenberg took this over, and edited parts 4-20. It is to be regretted that personal commitments caused the work to be broken off, and after a few more parts had appeared it ceased for ever with the letter N.

His assiduous manner of handling the material and his deeply penetrating research appear in his work The Postage Stamps of Baden and the subsequent Covers of the German States, as an article. Unfortunately, the section on Prussia did not appear. We must regret this all the more in that Lindenberg was the right man to deal with this still unhandled chapter in the history of German entires.

Perhaps the importance of Lindenberg can be better seen from his articles than from his published works. The Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung founded in 1890 by Dr. H. Brendicke soon published outstanding articles under the pseudonym D. Richter, behind which Carl Lindenberg hid himself. The outstanding position of D.B.Z. in these years and the fame it enjoyed till it closed, can be ascribed in the most part to Lindenberg's collaboration.

From bygone days was the title of a short autobiography which Lindenberg published in 1912. That his working powers did not decline with age is proved by the fact that after he returned to Berlin in 1918 he took over the direction of the stamp days of the Museum, and after a while took over as editor of the weekly Briefmarkensammler, a column in the Berliner Abendpost, later the Berliner Allgemeine Zeitung from 1921. His last major work, appearing in 1927 was the magnificent The Entires Collection of the Brothers Patschef, a work unique in philatelic literature. Lindenberg was a founder member of our society, and always played a vigorous part in its growth and prosperity, and in that of the Philatelische Bücherwurm.

Recognition of the outstanding services of Lindenberg to philately could not be better expressed than by the creation of the "Lindenberg Medal" by the Berliner Philatelisten-Club in the year 1906, and which was awarded only to the foremost leaders in the fields of philatelic writing.

So long as stamps and entires are studied in a serious scientific manner, so long will the name of Carl Lindenberg remain unforgotten.

A Home for Philately in the German Library.

Wilhelm Blank

It was already noted last year in the Bücherwurm (see issue 3 of May 1927) about the problem of creating a world treasury of worldwide philatelic literature in connection with the German Library. What was then received sceptically by timid souls, is today a fact much faster than expected through a large foundation.

It is possibly not known by many that the Vogel publishing house of Pössneck, which today publishes a long list of technical periodicals - and through the years attained worldwide recognition - had its starting point with the publication of the Internationalen Postwertzeichen-Marktes (International Postage Stamp Market), previously the Internationales Briefmarken-Offertenblatt (International Postage Stamp Offer Sheet), in the year 1892. The founder, and nowadays the senior boss Carl Gustav Vogel, celebrated his 60th birthday on the 26th September 1928, and because of that occasion his sons gave him a most significant specialised library, which was still residing in Germany and which was collected by Hugo Krötzsch of Leipzig, throughout his lifetime with much love and sacrifice.

In the setting of a modest celebration the collection known as the Vogel Foundation was presented by the Society of the Friends of the German Library in Leipzig on the 28th September. Besides the Vogel family and the Board of Directors of the German Library, guests included notable philatelists like Kalckhoff, Stenger and others. The celebration was followed by a viewing of the philatelic collection as well as that of the German Library and a communal banquet. Those present signed the Golden Book of Philately, in which, until now, only Victor Suppantchitsch's name appeared, following a visit to the Bugra of the 19th June 1914. The Krötzsch library has added to the German Library's already existing philatelic materials which has been newly arranged the basis of this collection. The 130 page long Katalog der Abteilung Philatelie in der Deutschen Bücherei (Catalogue of the Philatelic Section of the German Library) was been edited by him. Part of the collection was displayed in 12 showcases in the Conference Hall. You could view there, amongst other things Bacon's copy of the Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society 1911, including photos of the old and oldest periodicals, a selection of the oldest periodic annuals, book indexes of other libraries of our science, the commemoration of the Berlin Philatelic Club for their 25th anniversary in 1913, handbooks and the first catalogues as well as the first albums, Ruhl's giant stamps, the catalogue of the collection of the Reich's postal museum and much more. The name Moschkau alone occupied a whole showcase, also Lindberg, Louis Senf and Suppantschitsch's literary children were there.

The names Kröttsch und Vogel are connected with the Foundation, which was created to build a large scale international collection of philatelic literature on a scientific basis. Now comes the time to work with mutual interest, without petty annoyances, toward donations and endowment of the work started.

Since philately now has a permanent home in the German Library, the Society of Philatelic Literature Collectors will work diligently and collect more bricks for the foundation and will during the years to come report through a member in Leipzig.

The development of stamp newspapers.⁽¹⁾

Karl Huick

Office Director of the German Institute for Newspaper Science.

Stamp newspapers don't deal only with postage stamps in the narrow sense, but printed postal items altogether, for example postcards, envelopes, newspaper wrappers, etc. The stamp newspapers possess the characteristics of a newspaper: regular intervals, relevance and publicity. They are issued weekly, bi-monthly and every quarter of the year. There was even a stamp newspaper issued daily, i.e. Daily Stamp Item by Mekeel in St. Louis, 1896, which was issued from the 1st January to the 31st December, 285 issues in all. As far as content is concerned the stamp newspaper (naturally looking at its substance only) is closely connected to the daily newspaper, because it contains a political, light entertainment, economic and trade part. The postage stamp is after all a cultural and economic factor, with which almost all of us deal daily, be it mailing or receiving letters. While it is very difficult to set up exact statistics of daily newspapers⁽²⁾, the difficulty for stamp newspapers is much greater, because reliable material, which reaches into modern times, is nonexistent. The newspaper catalogues fail miserably. For example in the address book of multilingual periodicals and newspapers published by Archivist Dr. Vogelsang, 1927, there is not a single stamp newspaper noted.

To approach non-philatelists with the history of the development of postage newspapers, a few preliminary remarks about the introduction of the postage stamp, the collection of it and the reason for the origin of the stamp newspaper is necessary.

Naturally stamp newspapers could only come into existence after the introduction of the postage stamp. And that raises a question: Why was the postage stamp introduced? The introduction of the postage stamp in the technical literature is wrapped in a romantic cloak.⁽³⁾ Rowland Hill, who introduced the postage stamp to England - the inventor of the postage stamp, still customarily used today, must be attributed to James Chalmers - in 1837 in Scotland. Hill noticed that the chambermaid often received letters from London, at which she just looked and then returned, because the postage was not paid. When Hill asked her for the reason, she told him that she had to only look at the reverse of the letter on which her fiancé noted wishes by certain symbols. She did likewise and in such fashion they corresponded totally free of charge. He took this as an opportunity to think about misappropriating postage and the result was the introduction of the postage stamp. I found the same tale in number 13 (August 1879) of the Dominion Bazaar, Toronto (Canada). It really wasn't quite as romantic as that though, but the introduction coincided with the traffic upturn at the beginning of the last century.

Goethe was still able to have his citizen in FAUST recite:

I can't think of anything better on a Sun- and holiday,
Than to talk about war and war cries,
When far, far away in Turkey,
The folks beat up on each other."

In those times Turkey was far, far away from Germany. Meanwhile the steam engine had been invented and was used in transportation. In 1818 the Savannah ploughed the waves of the Atlantic Ocean as the first steamship. And in 1825, the first train between Stockton and Darlington was being built. Because this produced a busy traffic of goods and people, the requirement for faster and simpler dispatching of the mail with - possibly - standardized postage was needed. It was rumoured that in Denmark 4000 different taxes were used before the introduction of the stamp. The introduction of franking machines for today's massive traffic proves the real reason for the introduction of the stamps. It is significant that the year of introduction of the postage stamp in England - 1840 - coincides with the first shipping line (Cunard). There follows the introduction dates of the earliest postage stamps:

6 th May 1840	Great Britain
2 nd March 1843	Canton Zurich
1 st July 1843	Brazil
1 st October 1843	Canton Geneva
1 st July 1845	Canton Basel
1 st October 1847	Mauritius
1 st January 1849	France
1 st July 1849	Belgium
1 st November 1849	Bavaria (Germany)

Some countries issued not postage stamps but imprinted envelopes, for example Brunswick (Germany) 1844, Finland 1845, Russia 1845, etc.

Now the postage stamp was in use and garnered general interest. As early as 1840 there were articles in English newspapers about postage stamps. Stamps had a mysterious effect: they came from faraway lands, even overseas countries. Stamps provoked the imagination because of their different pictures. In short, people started to collect them.

There is no definitive information regarding the systematic collection of stamps, only some anecdotal tales have been saved. For example it was told that a school inspector, during his school visit, noted the outstanding knowledge of the pupils in Geography. When he asked about the reason, the teacher told him that he made his students affix stamps of the countries they were studying on the atlas, which piqued the students' interest. By and by this method took hold of other students also, and that is how stamp collecting came about. It is well known that stamp collecting was mainly pursued by youth in the beginning, although very early on, men followed the trend.

According to other information bets were the reason. This must have happened repeatedly, because in Punch of 1842 it was ironically remarked that the busy, idle English ladies were struck by the mania of collecting old penny stamps and showed more effort collecting queen's heads than King Henry VIII trying to lose them. Systematic collecting started between 1850 and 1860, because larger quantities of postage stamps needed to be gathered, if collecting were to be tempting enough. The first advertisement with philatelic contents appeared in the Family Herald in London dated 22nd March 1851. It reads like this Postage stamps: Collectors of used postage stamps: The advertiser will (in trade) give 4 red penny stamps for one oval of the cancelled envelope. Anybody who wants to collect some, will receive a thank you from T.H.S. Bookstore, 20 Brewer St., Golden Square. The next note is published in the French paper Annuaire Scientifique, anno 1855 and is addressed to Stamp Collector.

As soon as stamp collecting spread, the desire to receive a summary of published stamps was voiced. The first philatelic publications were catalogues and albums. The oldest philatelic printed catalogue on earth was by Berger-Levrault on the 17th September 1861. It encompasses 12 quarto pages and 973 stamps.

The desire to publish a technical journal was noted and was first published by Ed. Moore & Co. in Liverpool on the 15th December 1862, with the title Monthly Advertiser. With that the ice was broken and in a short time stamp newspapers were published in various countries. The oldest among them are:

15 th December 1862	Monthly Advertiser , Liverpool
1 st February 1863	Stamp Collector's Magazine , London
15 th February 1863	Timbre-Poste , Bruxelles
1 st May 1863	Magazin für Briefmarkensammler , Leipzig

The first German stamp newspaper (see above) was the Magazine for Postage Stamp Collectors published by Zschiesche & Köder in Leipzig, which brought for four years entertainment and education to the German collector. Not all newly published stamp newspapers can boast such a long duration. The majority were so-called "mayflies", which vanished after a few issues or even managed to only have a single issue. The newspapers were either autographic or hectographic. Most of them were printed by the letterpress method. It is understandable, that collectors also wished for photos of their stamps in periodicals. The production of single photos (because of limited editions) was too expensive. They improvised by drawing photos of the single stamp side by side onto a printing plate, copying the sheets, cutting the stamp pictures and gluing them in the empty spaces left in their newspaper. This procedure was employed, for example, by Ernst Roschlau in Coburg for their General German Stamp Newspaper (the 3rd oldest German newspaper)⁽⁴⁾. I also found this same procedure in some of the early American stamp newspapers. It would exceed the limit of this publication, if I were to list chronologically and in detail all stamp newspapers, but I do want to offer a general overview of newspapers issued before 1900. The information is given not by countries but by foreign languages, because in some countries newspapers were published in foreign languages - and are still to this day. For example, in the German language not only in the German Reich and Austria, but also in Argentina, Greece, Luxembourg, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, San Marino, Turkey, etc. Just to mention it, the Portuguese mother tongue encompasses Brazil also, while the Spanish language is used in Spain, its Colonies, and all additional countries of South and Central America.

There were about 200 newspapers published in the German language up to 1900, with approximately 7600 issues:

in French	150	5000
in Dutch	10	400
in Italian	36	470
in Portuguese	30	480
in Spanish	85	1300
in Scandinavians	23	430

I could not verify the numbers of stamp newspapers in English, but do believe it surpasses that of the German numbers. In England alone there were 42 newspapers published between 1862 and 1869.

German stamp newspapers occupy first place and they can also lay claim to fame as possessing the stamp newspaper with the longest uninterrupted publishing period. Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal has been published since 1874 by Senf Brothers, Leipzig.

Notes:

1. The works of Suppantchitsch, Haas & Fraenkel, were used. Noting the source of all data would be taking things too far.
2. Friedrich Bertkau: The Lack of a German newspaper Statistics., Newspaper Science, 15th September 1927, Issue 9.
3. Carl Beck: The Postage stamp as a Cultural Factor., Die Post, 1908.
4. This procedure was used for only part of the illustrations in the second German stamp newspaper published by Wilhelm Reichel & Co., Kaufbeuren, Stock Market Paper for the Postage Stamp Commerce.

From long ago.

A. Plaminek

State Attorney, Leitmeritz.

There is a small, thin little book lying before me that dares call itself Stamp collectors' Manual or General Name Index of all Accepted Stamps of the Various Countries of the World.

It has only 67 pages, this little book, and yet is a stamp catalogue of the stamps of the whole world, at least of the world in the year 1862.

The title quoted above is the translation of the Manuel du Collectionneurs des Timbres Poste by J. B. Moens, first appearing in 1862 in Brussels.

It would not be uninteresting for us today to find out what Mr. Moens has to say in his introduction to the Manuel. I shall present a translation of it as literally as possible:

As I recognized the advantages that accrue to the collector when he is immediately informed about the stamps created and used in individual countries and is able to find the stamps easily, I have crafted this manual based on reliable information and I can attest to its accuracy.

The announcement of June 4th of last year had implied that this manual would appear soon. However, the information was late getting to me so that only now do I have the pleasure of presenting this manual for the benefit of collectors.

To improve usability I have alphabetized each continental section.

If, as I hope, the first edition receives a favourable reception, I shall publish subsequent information and new stamp issues in the second edition.

Contacts that I have abroad have promised to keep me up to date on all stamps. Collectors who wish to obtain such information can contact me at any time in confidence. Brussels, January 1862. J. B. Moens.

The other content of this world catalogue is also fascinating. Europe has 40 countries, first the Austria issues of 1850, 1858, 1861-62 and second with blank stamps (timbres de retour), known as St. Andrew's Crosses. No illustrations or prices are included in the manual but the stamps are precisely described.

Asia counts only 2 stamp-issuing countries: Ceylon and East Indies – Africa, of which 6 are direct British colonies.

America is considerably richer, having at that time 28 countries; Brazil is still a kingdom, the only and the last.

Oceania-Australia presents 9 countries, among them the kingdom of Hawaii.

Stamp collectors really had it easy at that time!

The Literature Question - A Youth Question

Felix Schauf

Düren

First of all I want to mention that I believe the Literature Question is one of the most important tasks of our hobby. You can never stress enough how much good literature influences the young collector.

Instead of letting the young collector buy "Packets" (glassine envelopes containing an assortment of stamps), it should be suggested he subscribe to a good magazine. I myself did this and I must say that the philatelic education it afforded me was worth more than all the stamps in my general collection. I often regretted a stamp purchase but never the subscription to a magazine.

My personal situation demanded that I be self-sufficient and it doesn't warrant to go into details of my philatelic development. It is too personal to be of interest to the general public. By sheer coincidence I became a subscriber to the Sammlerwoche [Collector's Weekly] at the age of 17 and it is remarkable that it was my first scientific periodical. Of course, in the beginning it was difficult to follow the technical articles and a number of articles remained "undigested".

In those times the Sammlerwoche was issued promptly every Friday. I sacrificed half of my meager pocket money, but never regretted (mostly subconsciously) that the subscription was more valuable than, let's say, a package of 200 Poland or the urgently needed 1000 Balkan States. The Sammlerwoche meant so much to me that I would like to suggest that more mature young collectors should receive this publication. Starting at the age of 17, every eager collector can understand this paper and reap great benefits. It is really astonishing that there are still so many “collectors” who do not subscribe to Sammlerwoche. I still cannot quite grasp, why Das Postwertzeichen [The Stamp] was issued nationwide. Why not Sammlerwoche, which in times of the most dire distress continued under great sacrifice, which brings up the question why the founding of a “Bundeszeitung” [Federal newspaper] was necessary. The Sammlerwoche is offered to the Germania Ring at a preferred price of 7 Marks per year and this amount is so small considering what it offers, that every sincere collector should be able to afford it. Whoever thinks this amount too much can stay outside - he is not worthy to be an organized collector. Let’s drop the also-collectors.

Unfortunately it was impossible for me to subscribe continuously, especially since the price was raised. I had to cancel for 2 months and was without the paper - sheer excruciating pain for me. I looked for a cheap publication. The Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal [Illustrated Stamp Journal] of the Senf Brothers was an acceptable substitute. I say substitute, because I was so spoiled by the Sammlerwoche, that the more popular tone of the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal, which is probably preferred by the mature young collector who can grasp the story-like articles more easily, did not suit me as much as the “sophisticated” language of the Sammlerwoche. I still get a lot of benefit from reading the Sammlerwoche.

The accepted trade paper for the young collector is the Baseler Täubchen [Basel Dove]. This well-equipped paper is being printed in its 3rd year and has already attained a respectable level. The tone is adjusted to the age of the young collector and the articles of the Baseler Täubchen are prepared systematically for study as in the scientific press. To look into its content more closely would be to go too far. Besides the articles of renowned philatelists, those of the young collectors are remarkable. The latter have to be retained as they undoubtedly contribute a lot to the popularity of the paper. The Mail Box is a good feature. A number of collectors surely don’t know what is printed in it. The illustration of new issues could be better. The new issues are certainly the pulse of philately, and because of it, popular with the young collector, since new stamps are easier to obtain and as current issues are always topical.

But the meaning of the Literature Question for philately? The answer lies in the proverb Jung gewohnt ist alt getan [What you are accustomed to as a youngster, you practice when you are grown]. He who thinks he can do without scientific literature in his early years, is not going to subscribe in later years. The majority of collectors unfortunately falls into that category. These remain lifelong loyal “omnivores”, who remain happy with their accumulated stamps until one day, when they have reason to sell and discover that their holding is worth nothing. Sure, you can get a publication for the equivalent of 1,200 different stamps. The “leading” Michel catalogue will suffice. But beware the collector who reads no publications. He will vouch for his Michel. The Michel is the Jack-of-All-Trades. You exchange based on Michel or buy - very inexpensive - with 50-80% discount on Michel. Such collectors believe firmly that these stamps were bought with this discount and bask in their ownership.

Proudly the owner says that this collection is “worth” x-thousand Marks according to Michel. But the sad part is that the highest values in such an “also-collection” are missing and dealers have no interest in acquiring such collections. Like I said: what you are accustomed to ...

That is why it has to be the main task of youth group leaders to awaken the consciousness for philatelic literature in the earliest beginnings. In the clubs every older collector should be a mentor for a beginner. And he should pay for half of the subscription to the Baseler

Täubchen. To simply give away the publication is not an option. A collector will take care of the paper, if it was paid for. He has learned that it wasn't printed for free and therefore cannot be given away. The subscription to the Sammlerwoche should be made available especially to eager and talented young collectors. Other publications should be made available to be looked at. The beginner should also keep copies, since the bound annuals should form the foundation of his library.

While stressing the idealistic reasons for collecting to the young collector, we should not neglect to point out that now and later great material advantages occur and the subscription to one or more periodicals always pays for itself.

Many beginners prefer to purchase the "200 Poland" packet or something similar, rather than investing the money in a periodical. That is where the youth group leaders have to be insistent and demonstrate clearly how worthless the "packet" will be in the future, since he sooner or later will decide to specialize and in most cases he will be stuck with his accumulation of stamps. But the money invested in the periodical will never be lost (or do you want to be an "also-collector"?) The 'Knowledge of Things' makes the true philatelist and his knowledge is attained mainly through good periodicals. May all leaders of youth groups promote the literature idea and through it contribute to the growth, development and thriving of philately.

What we want to do!

J. A. Bosshard & Fritz Seifert

Due to the sudden death of Carl Beck, the Bücherwurm has not been published recently. The many inquiries regarding the future of the publication have induced us to re-start publication of this journal that is in demand among collectors. After all, there is a need for a news bulletin that informs collectors about new publications in print and that provides a professional critique of the output of individual authors. Our highest goal will be the professional critique of the latest philatelic literature.

What else do we want to do? Mainly to lead the modern collector to undertake more work in the scientific sphere! We live in an era of rationalization and specialization, and, after all, it is impossible to advance without knowledge of the literature; one has to read, if one wants to be above average and more than just "stick" stamps into albums. It is simply unthinkable to start to specialize in [collecting] a country without some knowledge. How often has it been said and written that the collector of antiques and coins knows his history, compared with the philatelist? Unfortunately, [this shows up] only in the catalogue, and then only insufficiently. This [sorry] state of affairs is probably the reason why ordinary mortals just have a condescending smile for stamp collectors and do not take them seriously. In part, this is justified, because the collector cannot report much of interest regarding his collecting area. The "sticker" usually does not know anything of interest about postal history, the development of stamps or other interesting philatelic topics. Thus, we want to make our contribution in giving the literature more exposure. We want to support the serious author and help to publicize his work. Then, it is also our task to inform the collector about sources of further information regarding his area of specialization, where he can add to his knowledge and increase his understanding.

We will also present a review article on occasion and we hope that this will meet the expectations of our readers. We will gladly aid researching philatelists, drawing from a large file of philatelic articles; thus, we expect to be able to find the literature being searched for, in specialty publications or to identify specialized publications.

But we also want to provide a link among the researching and intellectual collectors, and we hope that cooperators from among the readership will come forward to assist us in practical ways and to help us achieve the targets.

Rambling Around.

In philately, the summer months tend to be rather quiet. But that can not be said for this year, because there is a lot of work being done. Particularly noteworthy is a bibliography on the Netherlands and its colonies in De Philatelist. The author, the Baroness van Heerdt-Kolff, compiled everything with the greatest zeal. The only problem is that in the works cited there are yet more abbreviations.

It is reported that a quite good journal has suspended publication for the foreseeable future – the Basler Taube (Basel Pigeon) the house organ of the Müller Company in Basel. The paper was not bad and brought out many a worthwhile article. The Jugendzeitschrift (Young People's Journal), published by Fritz Seifert, and the official organ of the Young Collectors' Association, has passed into new hands.

But we also can announce what at least appears to be a very promising new philatelic journal. This is Grüne Sammler Welt (Green Collector World), issued in Niebüll (Schleswig). So far 3 issues have been published but there are more adverts than text and the latter is less than adequate. The titles found there do not lack humor, e.g. A Big Shot, Closed for Mourning, The Stillborn Child, Trade Secret; it almost sounds like cinema or a crime novel. We wish the paper all the best but it has a lot of work to do!

A very welcome development is that the Fédération Internationale de la Presse Philatélique (International Federation of the Philatelic Press) is going to publish a bibliographic index of all periodical articles appearing in 1929. Already the volume covering the first 3 months of that year has appeared. The compiler is the well-known French collector Prof. Francis P. Renaut. In the German philatelic press there has also been a request for collaborators on a bibliography of the existing specialized literature. This was issued by the well-known collector of philatelic literature J. Schütte of Magdeburg. Unfortunately, it appears impossible to find a publisher for this really essential work. The printing costs are too great and too few collectors would avail themselves of such a work. A great pity but we have already had experience with the work of Leitenberger, who in his time published a bibliography that unfortunately never proceeded beyond the first edition for want of subscribers. Such a work must come at some time; perhaps the Federation will take up the matter and make its publication possible.

The industrious Dutchman van Peursem has again recounted the history of individual countries through the vignettes of postage stamps. Are so many collectors really interested in history?

It is generally the custom with scientific works that citations be included so that the reader can do research. Oddly though, it seems that the philatelic researcher and writer meticulously avoids citing the works of other collectors – why? A work is incomplete if the author omits sources. We must be honest, no one creates works in a vacuum, one is often forced to resort to other books – so why deny this or keep it quiet? Of course there are those in philately who write about everything as if it were the result of their own researches and for them, naturally, citations do not have a place. For such writers are gifted philatelists, who master every area. Today they “publish a work” on Albania, tomorrow “issue a monograph” on Zanzibar. Actually, these writers should be called model builders because they are expert at remodeling articles they have read. The sentences are artfully turned around and grammatically juggled until the “work” is ready. The per-line fees must be fabulous!

As of the 15th April, the library of the Bundes Deutscher Philatelisten-Verbände (Federation of German Philatelic Societies) was transferred to J. A. Bosshard of Meiningen, the newly-elected librarian. Sadly, the library for the most part only goes up to 1914. With some gaps, the older literature is rather well represented. The librarian gladly accepts donations of journals and other literature.

We have heard that the philatelic literature exhibition in Berlin (sponsored by the Berolina-Ring) was very well attended. It is encouraging that such a show could be mounted by philatelic circles and we only hope that our specialty literature will get greater circulation as a result. Besides modern literature one could also see great rarities. Such an effective exhibition is most welcome and we hope that at future philatelic exhibitions as well, the juries will contain men with knowledge of literature. For it is usually true that literature is neglected.

The well-known, enthusiastic bibliophile J. Schütte of 9 Bismarckstrasse, Magdeburg, intends to compile a large literature index and is looking for appropriate collaborators. This is necessary because since the last index to philatelic magazines such a reference work has been lacking. For one of the best specialized journals, the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung (German Stamp Newspaper) by Hugo Krötzsch, there is a general index for only the first few years. The many other years have not yet been worked up. For other journals also, such a reference work is lacking. Hopefully these works will fare better than that of Leitenberger.

pp.[2-4]

New publications on the book market 1930.

J. A. Bosshard:

Translator's note: The few reviews that follow were translated in error.

The Czechoslovakian Plebiscite Stamps (S O 1920). by Jan Weiss, Mähr. Ostrau. Authorized translation from the Czech by Edward Fleischmann in Prague. reprinted from Die Briefmarke, Haida, 20 pages.

The author discusses in detail the origin of these stamps. By means of a geographic map, the plebiscite region in Eastern Silesia and the final boundaries as determined by the plebiscite, are brought to life. Also of interest is a tabulation of post offices as well as cancellations. The overprints are illustrated, directly from the overprint plates. It is clear that forgers have been at work in this area as well and the author dedicates a chapter to these shenanigans. The work would not be complete if it did not give the issue quantities; many collectors will be amazed to learn that the issue quantities were not as large as one is inclined to believe. Another very welcome feature is a table of postal rates.

50th Anniversary of Vindobona. Article commemorating the 50 years of existence of the Vindobona Austrian Philatelic Club in Vienna. Published by "Die Postmarke", Vienna. 20 pages of text.

This most attractive commemoration starts with the good wishes of several well-known personalities of philately. Edwin Müller & Anton Kumpf treat the postal history of Vienna in a rather long piece. The various postmarks are especially interesting. The renowned philatelist and stamp dealer Rudolf Friedl describes its development. Dr. Willer deals with the stamps of Ethiopia and shows that these stamps, though largely shunned by philatelists, are very interesting and doubtless have a bright future. Passer (of Prague) uses good illustrations to describe the postally-used stamps of Turkey. Dr. Sigmund Taussig uses good drawings to explain the secret marks on Montenegrin stamps. The drawings are strongly reminiscent of the French philatelist Serrane. (Vade mecum du Spécialiste Expert en Timbres-Post = Expert's Specialized Guide to Postage Stamps) A. D. Jenny, the well-known collector of British Colonial stamps chats about how he assembled his large collection and we learn that he built it with rather limited means. Particularly interesting is the monograph on collecting the errors in the vignette of the Austria 1850 issue. Josef Sturany describes the existing errors, varieties, plate errors, etc.

De Geschiedenis van Tonga op de Postzegels. By J. H. van Peursem. Publisher Haagsche Postzegelhandel, Noordeinde 90, Den Haag. 8 pages with many illustrations.

First, it must be said that the printing as well as the paper used in these publications by Mr. Peursem are good. The work, like the others, is interesting and worthwhile. But one can't help doubting that so many collectors are interested in the history of so many countries. It is heartening when a philatelist has a good knowledge of history and in addition to collecting stamps tries to expand his knowledge of geographic and ethnographic matters. But such birds are indeed rare...

Ukraine Manual. By C. Svenson, Wiesbaden. Part I. 1930 Supplement. Price RM6. 298 pages with many illustrations.

It is fun when you come face to face with a good work and Svenson's work is truly exceptional! Above all, the author makes an honest effort to separate the wheat from the chaff. That was especially lacking with Ukraine stamps, as it is no secret that there was much mischief with overprints, etc. However, it is unfortunate that the catalog editors have unfairly judged various official issues and thereby caused much harm to collectors. One would think that Swenson's work would attract more attention from the catalog editors and that they would take into account the things that such an important expert has researched and documented. Not only does the author have a large amount of material at his disposal, but he also traveled to Ukraine and completed his studies on the spot. Printing and paper are of good quality. But truly outstanding are the highly instructive illustrations. Anyone who knows the Manual will doubtless enjoy the work contained in the supplement. A good and highly commendable publication.

Precursors and Contemporaries of the German Colonial and Foreign Post Offices. (Specialized Catalog) by Hans Schlubohm – Hamburg. Published by Walter F. Hellberg, Hamburg.

With values of all known cancellations, this catalogue provides a useful basis for the collector of colonial precursors. The author made every effort to put values on the cancels. The arrangement enables the collector to quickly find his way around. A few errors did slip by the author but these will be discovered by the minimally educated user upon working through the volume. The exact description of the cancellation types gives the researcher a valuable tool. This little volume is indispensable for the formation and expansion of a specialized collection and it is to be hoped that it will be augmented as much as possible.

Outlook.

If one reads the reports on exhibitions in past years of the philatelic newspapers or in the Philatelistische Bücherwurm, it is easy to reach the conclusion that literature does not have much of a presence in the exhibitions. It is only in the last few years that a change appears to have been started. Our specialty has been met with more interest and exhibited journals and books are no longer simply discussed in the aggregate without details.

If one digs a little deeper, one finds that the directors of exhibitions are starting to realize that it is worthwhile to appoint members to the jury that are knowledgeable regarding literature. The IPOSTA Berlin is just ahead of us as the most important event of the year. Once again, many authors and publishers have decided to exhibit their wares, even in the face of high fees, and we can look forward to the results. Let us hope that we will not be disappointed! But we do wish that it would be possible to help the authors and publishers, specifically in exhibitions, by lowering the fees for the literature exhibits in order to provide an incentive to exhibit. That would be an indirect subsidy for scientific philately.

The Deutsche Philatelistische Jahrbuch will be available just in time for IPOSTA. It includes many changes that make the book very attractive for collectors as well as for dealers. As an example, one may point to the list of philatelic sales windows in the various countries. Very important today, given that a high proportion of collectors are starting to collect mint stamps and do so without any choice in the matter, given that their funds are simply no longer sufficient to enable them to collect the so-called classical material. It is also a pleasure to see that the Jahrbuch lists the philatelic literature issued during 1929, grouped by country. It is also undoubtedly an improvement to have an index, rather than having to thumb through the year's issue for a journal – and even then there is no assurance that the editor received a copy of the publication for review.

Our comments regarding the omission of German language publications in the Répertoire Bibliographique of the Fédération Internationale de la Presse Philatélique were taken up by the Bundestag [meeting] in Altenburg, and many members are now contemplating whether to renew their membership or not.

Among the new publications, the very excellent work by Friedemann covering Lamu and Zanzibar stands out. It is known that the Arbeitsgemeinschaft Deutscher Kolonialpostwertzeichen-Sammler [Working Group of Collectors of the Stamps of the German Colonies] mailed out a questionnaire to its members in this regard some time back, in order to assess the material listed. Friedemann, the specialist in Colonies with world-renown, has the most experience in these matters and has several decades worth of research notes regarding these areas, which he studied in great detail, and his latest publication shows the reader clearly how much knowledge he has amassed. It is a typical Friedemann job, complete with a geographical map and with references to literature, which almost every other author fails to provide.

Edwin Müller's exhaustive research on cancellations on the 1867 issues continues to make progress; shipment 9 is now available, and it likewise represents painstaking work. The publishing house of the Germania-Ring produced a special publication, written by Mr. Schulz, a retired Captain from Stolp, regarding the postal system of Stolp, its cancels and forms. The completed work provides insight into the local postal history, and it would be desirable for other clubs to do similar work. Surely that would unearth much of interest and we philatelists would get a more complete view of the development of the postal system. Many clubs do essentially nothing, but the field is open for much worthy work.

N°135/6 of Friedemann's *Berichte für Briefmarkensammler has been published. The available reports contain the specialized treatment for East Africa, Lamu and Zanzibar, Deutsche Post. Furthermore, Friedemann reports on the forgeries of the stamps of Cameroon and Turkey that are circulating in Paris.

Alexander Berezowski is working on a new handbook of air mail stamps, which appears to be quite exhaustive. Zeppelin mail will take up much room here. Two instalments have been released to-date. Major Ohrt has been quite busy; he published a revised version of an article in the Berner Briefmarken-Zeitung regarding cancels of Bremen as Germania Handbuch VII. And the publisher of Die Postmarke in Vienna released a new instalment of his handbook regarding reprints. In addition, the Germania-Berichte finally included a Deutsche Stempelzeitung once again. It is unfortunate that Ohrt often takes such a long time between publications, because there is no doubt of his knowledge.

The various publishers of catalogues report that the catalogues are in production and will be published soon. Zumstein announces that the release is planned for early September. One can hope that the new issues will reflect a good look at prices so that they are consistent with the current financial situation.

Scarce items of German philatelic literature.

Friedr. Wilh. Thalmann

Anybody working to assemble a larger library over a long period will learn quickly that there are a number of books that are more difficult or even impossible to obtain, unless funds are no constraint, as well as the publications in good supply. Normally also, clubs and associations are quite stingy, when it comes to spending money on enlarging their libraries.

If I am now asked to discuss the scarce objects in our literature, I can discuss only German literature, as I indicated in the title, and furthermore, given the limited space, only the most desirable literature among German publications, which is not always the oldest and not always the thickest bound book. Thus, there are many reprints from our journals, even from recent issues, that are out of print, closely held and thus, all but unavailable. This also applies to publications by clubs, which normally have just a small press run. All of these valuable smaller items, which a large library simply must have, should not be listed here. As I said previously, I need to restrict myself to a small set of publications, which I will list in alphabetical order. I do not want to talk about pricing, because prices are difficult to determine in general terms, given that the specific characteristics of the purchase are relevant. In order to note the age of the publication, I have added the year of publication in parentheses in most cases.

One of the most significant German publications shows the plates of the Rothschild Sicily collection, published by Friedl around the turn of the century. Friederich's History of the Stamps of Spain and its Colonies, which was published by Brendicke in Berlin in 2 volumes (1894), has also become quite scarce. Glasewald's Cancellations of the Stamps of Baden (1898) is very scarce, and it is also difficult to obtain his similar publication on the Stamps of Thurn and Taxis (1894); the same applies to the Handbook of German Private Post Stamps (1889) jointly authored by Sattler & Wagner, which is unfinished, regrettably.

This list should also include Kalckhoff's Illustrated Listing of all Known Reprints (1892); Kloss' History of the Postage Stamps of the Kingdom of Saxony (1882); the earliest publication by Kropf on the Postage Stamps of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy (1902), published in Prague; most of the Krötzsch volumes on the Stamps of the Old German States, particularly those with a complete set of illustrations (1893 -1908); publications by the long-term specialist C. Lindenberg on the Postal Stationery of the German States (initiated in 1892), which lacks the volume on Prussia, of which a draft was found in his estate and which is supposed to be readied for publication by well-known collectors of postal stationery from Berlin; his publication on the Stamps of Baden (1894); finally his last magnum opus on the Collection of Postal Stationery of the Petschek Brothers Volume I A-L (1927), which is not available in bookstores; Ferd. Meyer's Handbook for Stamp Collectors (1881), which was published in 4 volumes by Zechmayer in Nürnberg, plus its 7 appendices, and also his publication on Afghanistan (1879); the beautifully prepared work by Mirabaud and de Reuterskiöld on the Swiss Stamps 1843-1862 (1898), published with 150 copies in German, 150 copies in English and 200 copies in French; the first editions of the Moschkau publications; Ohrt's Handbook of all Known Reprints, at least the first volumes (initiated in 1907); from the same researcher, the Postmarks of Oldenburg (1911), which was published as a bonus to the Kohl newsletter; this also includes his treatment of Oldenburg and Prussia in the Krötzsch collection mentioned above; Reinheimer's short description of the Collection of Essays of Martin Schroeder (1903); the massive work by Schmidt and Fabergé on the Stamps of the Russian Rural Post Offices (starting in 1912), of which a dozen of parts have been published, but which was cut short by the World War; Senf's Contributions to the Study of Postage Stamps, which was published in five volumes starting in 1893, is difficult to assemble today; among German club publications, the first publication (1898) of the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub has become scarce.*

I do not need to say much on the subject of periodical publications, because Suppantisch covered it all in great detail in his publication on the Scarc Issues of Philatelic Periodical Literature to the End of 1900, which is a great scarcity as a bound book, as is his "Bibliography" (1892), and this list can be found in the 1903-1904 issues of Der Philatelist (Dresden). I will concentrate here on the scarce issues of the most important recent periodicals still being published or of high popularity. There is first the Berliner Briefmarken-Zeitung (Kosack) issues for 1905/6; Borek's Neuheitenliste (1906/1910); Der Deutsche Philatelist 1907-1912 (first six months) with its inserts: Deutsche Stempel-Zeitung and Illustr. Zeitschrift für deutsche Kolonialmarken-Kunde; Der Ganzsachen-Sammler (Kosack) 1912; Der Philatelist (Dresden) 1880-1885; Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung 1890-1896; Friedemann's Philatelistische Berichte 1906 to 1910; Germania-Berichte 1897-1904; Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal (which is our periodical with the longest publication record) 1874-1883; M.- u. G.-Zeitung 1921; Mitteilungen of the Paul Kohl firm, 5 volumes ending in 1914; Neueste Privatpost-Nachrichten 1888-1892, which became the Mitteldeutsche Philatelisten-Zeitung and the Philatelisten-Zeitung still in publication; Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung 1894-1900; Vereinsmitteilungen of the Berliner Philatelisten-Club from 1888 to 1904; Vertraul. Korrespondenz-Blatt 1891. Likewise, C. Lindenberg's Briefmarken-Sammler, the insert of the Berliner Allgem. Zeitung, in a complete set is now a scarcity that is very difficult to obtain.

I want to say even less on the subject of catalogues. Bibliophiles search very diligently for the old price lists of Beyfuß published in Hannover in 1863, which Suppantisch was overjoyed to find with my help, only in 1908 for his then probably largest library of German philatelic books (now in the library of the Collectors Club of New York). I happened to obtain a second copy by accident for the circulating library. When I offered it for sale, I received many frantic offers. I could sell it only once! It was probably our most important bibliophile, who was at the head of the line. Another catalogue that has become scarce is the excellent catalogue by Krötzsch for the Old German [States] Stamps (1896), likewise the similar catalogue by Rommel of the same year is sold very infrequently. It is now also difficult to obtain the first years of Senf and Kohl, not to mention the Larisch lists that were so popular in the 1880s. Finally, I should point out the mounting difficulty in procuring the first auction catalogues of Köhler starting in 1913 and even those of Stock starting in 1918, which should be housed in all larger libraries for their valuable illustrations for research purposes (which also applies to later issues, including those of other firms).

So, I want to end my present discourse with the wish that many lovers of books may be successful in procuring many of the scarce publications listed above, but not from me.

New issues from the book market 1930.

J. A. Bosshard:

Handbuch der Tschechoslowakischen Poststempel Österr.-Ungar. Herkunft by Friedrich Leitenberger, 116 pages, 200 illustrations, 1 photo page, 1 map. Price paperback 6 RM, hardbound 8 RM, with pages for notes 10 RM plus postage. Publisher Fritz Seifert, Leipzig C 1, Dresdner Str. 79.

The present handbook is a perfect example which shows that not only cancels of the classical era, but also cancels of more recent periods are of particular attraction and will permit extensive collecting. 160 different cancels, where the inscriptions of $\frac{1}{3}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ of them were changed repeatedly, which increases the number of varieties to more than 200, and which were used in a politically unsettled period often for only a few days or weeks, moreover on stamps of Austria-Hungary as well as of Czechoslovakia – those are the headlines of the attraction for collectors of this area with a bright future for collections, but which has not been explored in the literature. Based on the numerous cancels that are shown and on the many illustrations, we must classify the treatment as thorough and very easy to understand in its structure, even for somebody who does not collect cancels, such that the publication is well positioned to see wide distribution. The approach to the explanation of the subject and its treatment must be described as a perfect solution to this difficult question and a perfect basis for the completion of such a collection, augmented by suggestions and hints from the personal experience of the author. – A lengthy introduction, which discusses, among others, the development and significance of the collection of cancels, is followed by a short exposition of the historic, geographic, political and postal factors in the CSR, followed in turn by a discussion of the forms of cancels and ending in a set of suggestions regarding the structure of a collection, treatment of the pricing issue and other topics. – The presentation is pleasing, thanks to a cover in five colours, but also fully meets the requirements in terms of paper, typeset, illustrations and print. The purchase is recommended for collectors of cancels, particularly those of the CSR.

Friedemann's Berichte für Briefmarkensammler, No. 135/6. Price 4.00 M. Issued by Albert Friedemann, Leipzig C 1.

The well-known researcher of the Colonies publishes once again very valuable new research results in this issue. The double issue contains also the essay by Albert Friedemann and his son Fritz Friedemann regarding Lamu and Zanzibar in the light of the early postal history of German East-Africa, which makes the double issue particularly valuable. Friedemann is right to criticize in this issue that the IPOSTA grants only Silver-Gold status to the Forerunners of German Colonies and Mail Abroad, whereas German Mail Abroad and German Protectorates have Gold status. Regarding Friedemann's publications, any collector of philatelic literature must know that it is very difficult to locate Friedemann's publications. It is all but impossible to obtain many of the older issues. We would advise the collector of Colonies to obtain all available issues as soon as possible.

Das deutsche Schutzgebiet Suaheli-Land. Die Postwertzeichen des Suahehli Sultanats. By R. Lerche, Naumburg. Reprint from Germ.-Ber. 1930. With illustrations, 86 pages.

The interesting expose by Lerche, previously published in Germ.-Ber., has been printed separately. Even if not all collectors are lucky enough to possess stamps of Suaheli-Land, the present publication is very interesting for postal reasons, as well as from the colony angle. The writer has managed to present a clear picture of the history of the local mail system. We learn about the work of the German pioneer Denhardt and see what invaluable service they provided. The booklet is highly recommended to anybody interested in colonial history.

Das Deutsche Philatelistische Jahrbuch 1931. Prepared with the assistance of Amtsgerichtsrat Herzog, editor Pellnitz, J. Schütte, F. W. Thalmann, published by J. A. Bosshard & Fritz Seifert, 143 pages, price RM. 3.00 plus postage. Verlag Fritz Seifert, Leipzig C 1, Dresdner Straße 79.

Compared with the last issue, the yearbook has grown by 16 pages and given that many projects did not actually come to fruition (no wonder, in light of the present economic situation), this represents a substantial augmentation of the textual content. Among others, we find the following new information: Fédération Internationale de Philatélie, new publications in philatelic literature, listing of stamp sales windows, and the exhibit commission of the Bund and its rules. Of course, the previous topics were augmented throughout, such that the publication is totally up-to-date. Paper, typeset, printing and cover are flawless. — The yearbook will be a valuable source of advice for philatelists active in philatelic clubs, but also for interested general collectors, and not the least for dealers, given that it represents the only modern source for German and in part also for international philately.

Review.

J A Bosshard

Meiningen.

The year 1930 draws to a close; for many a very bad year. It seems, however, as if the philatelic literature, regarding new publications anyway, was not affected strongly by the economic depression, at least not if one considers the new publications, or it might be that the publishing houses and printers belong to people where there is still something to be earned.

The IPOSTA was undoubtedly a strong incentive for authors. Many publications appeared also at the time. In the paper forest of philatelic literature it thrives still and one is surprised only that again and again new specialised magazines appeared. The Basler Taube has announced its reappearance, however, I am still doubtful. And that's a shame because this magazine was not at all bad.

Some outstanding works appeared in the past year, the following should be named: Friedemann: Lamu und Zanzibar; Brönnle: Beiträge zur Kenntnis der Postanstalten Deutsch-Ostafrikas (Contributions to the knowledge of the postal institutes of German East Africa); Lerche: Die Marken des Suaheli-Sultanats (The Stamps of the Swahili Sultanate); Svenson: Nachtrag Ukraina (Ukraine Supplement); then from Edwin Müller more work, further from Ohrt: Bremer Abstempelungen (The postmarks of Bremen); Leitenberger: Tschecheistempel etc. (Czechoslovakian Stamps, etc.). Also from the Kohl Handbook came some more deliveries into the hands of collectors. Here it is only to be wished that this comprehensive work would appear more regularly and more frequently. Collecting groups have often wished that for the specialized German collector special publications in their areas would be available, and indeed this must be done, and the publishers could be certain that many philatelists would acquire these valuable books.

Most welcome is the news that the Fédération internationale de Philatélie has decided to produce an annual bibliography. With the range of the today's literature, it is, nevertheless, very hard to find those particular articles in which one has a special interest.

Often one does not know at all that somewhere in a magazine a valuable article, which one would happily read, has appeared. Harris Publications remains mute about its standard work, where are the continuations of the bibliography already begun? I wrote to the publishing house months ago, the further Parts are to appear... but I remain doubtful.

The large international exhibitions received many literature submissions. I cannot resist thinking, that that the juries in the area of literature are more or less wearied by the evaluation of so many publications, and dismisses the published works lock, stock and barrel in a somewhat step-motherly fashion, or does not trouble itself, to weigh the issued works individually against each other.

Nevertheless one must be fair, there is also an improvement from former times to be noted. Literature from the exhibitions is not to be treated negligently any more. IPOSTA has already taught us that the specialist periodicals were duly appreciated.

One thing plagues the philatelic sheets. Such good reviews one often reads about the published books. Reviews, long and short; and the book is always recommended. Only suicide could prevent a good review! [Translator's note: Sorry, this must be an old idiom in use here and I am not exactly certain how to translate it today.] Criticism is necessary. And constructive criticism is always endurable.

Captain Schulz in Stolp i. P., shows with his special edition, how one can treat local post office history, and it is only to be hoped that the many "Skat" of stamp collecting associations take this as an example for themselves and will also contribute something to the history of their home postal services. There are still quite a lot of problems which await a solution.

The more precisely philately is operated, the more we specialize, the greater are the demands one makes of the new literature. It is completely incomprehensible why authors are too modest or just don't trouble to make known the consulted sources. All works should be based on the work of our predecessors, and it is absolutely no dishonour, when one includes from where one takes the notes, or who already wrote about the material. Every scientist knows that literature quotations are absolutely required.

About copywriters and columnists there are no discouraging words, they flourish and prosper still and we hope will carry on also into the year 1931, so that the small philatelists also get some "brain" food and the lesser publications do not lose their contributors, the fees remain also usually in proportion to the intellectual work ... pecunia non olet!

*We sincerely communicate to all to our readers that with the availability of N^o.4 of the German Philatelic Bookworm the year 1930 comes to a close. In the coming year the Bookworm will appear every two months as indicated. We politely request the subscription price of 3 RM. payable to the publishing house, Herrn Fritz Seifert, Leipzig C1, Dresdner Str. 79. Post Office Giro account Leipzig 50444.

Who is the philatelist?

Fritz Seifert & Max Ton

A Biographical Almanac

Philatelic contemporaries of the 19th and 20th century (Phila-Almanach)

Adapted and published by Fritz Seifert & Max Ton

In this issue we begin with the print of our announced work of reference Phila-Almanach. In it, all former and current philatelists will receive a short sketch of their biography going back to 1863. Besides stamp collectors and dealers, there will be curators of stamps, stamp experts, designers and engravers of postage stamps, stamp repairers and counterfeiters, philatelic authors and publishers, as well as philatelic literature collectors.

We start our short biography in our advertised style. But, so that our readers' interest does not wane, we will create a variety of offerings. We will try to take into account all letters of the alphabet in each instalment. Some letters will appear less, some more within our limited space. But that does not matter.

It is our opinion that our readers would be bored, if we - for example - published extensive material only beginning with the letter A. On the other hand our readers will be kept in suspense, if we offer in each edition of Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm a variety of contributions of Short biographies of philatelic contemporaries of the 19th and 20th century. This procedure is necessary because, we could receive at any time corrections and additions from our readers, which we need to take into consideration in a timely fashion for the planned book edition in the future. In the interest of the whole philatelic world locally and overseas we are asking again for lively participation and support by collectors and dealer circles, but especially by our "Bookworms". All correspondence regarding Phila-Almanach should be directed to the editor Max Ton, Herbststrasse 21, Weimar.

Translator's note: The remainder of the page carries a series of biographies from Aarts to Aguinaldo as examples of what is intended.

The Air Mail Archive in the Berne Postal Museum.

J. Wey

(Continuation and Conclusion)

The archive had attained significant dimensions over the years. My small house could no longer contain it. My advancing age also led me to think of ensuring the safety of this material for all time. I decided that the simplest way was to present it to my home country. The Federal Council of the Confederation accepted the gift and passed it over to the Postal Museum in Berne.

Hence, Switzerland possesses the only air mail archive in the world. When the first historical studies of air mail begin at a later date, the documentary bases are already available to reveal the struggles and hardships of an earlier epoch.

Extracts from the catalogues of Dr. Paganini are given in detail. I did not feel able to go exhaustively into the joys and sorrows of the collectors and organisers set out there, but it does give a fair picture of the difficulties and obstacles they met with day by day, which counteracted their research activity in large as well as small undertakings. Certainly the conviction of producing something useful and permanent, employing energy and persistence and overcoming resistance – leads to success. The layout is masterly, and does its organizer great credit. He has made the fruits of his long years of activity available without any pay, which shows his unselfishness and public spirit.

Of his numerous cuttings from newspapers, sporting, technical and philatelic journals, the following deserve special mention: papers on balloon post and zeppelins, on most of the Swiss air mail facilities of the pre-war period, air mail of most European and overseas countries; field air mail during the war, and the air mail of Przemysl; taxation policies, future and perspectives of air mail: propaganda and information services by air during the World War: world flights and glider post: a total of over 90 volumes of greater or lesser extent.

The collection of literary productions covers about 300 books and pamphlets, of a mainly philatelic nature, over the whole range of air mail from all regions of the world. Next to the newspaper cuttings this is the section that shows the greatest growth and thus gives an immediate picture of the range of publications in this field.

There are also a significant number of individual issues of periodicals and magazines, which cannot be filed along with the cuttings but need special treatment because of their make-up.

Next there is a special section devoted to propaganda material for air mail, 350 items including timetables, flight plans, route maps, etc.

At the moment, the small-format cuttings number 34 volumes, the larger-format 11, and 2 volumes in newspaper format, with another 3 volumes on air travel. Here is a brief survey:

Vol. 1, Air Mail 1870-1917, carries the subtitle A knowledge of the historical and cultural bases of the phenomenon reveals the scientific importance of the pastime of collecting. It begins with general outlines of postal services and air mail in times gone by and then goes on to carrier pigeon posts far and wide: Our only hope lay in the pigeons, by means of which we find out what has happened in the rest of the world, so reads an entry in the Paris Chronicle of 1870, which is worth remembering. We then go from the first postal services by aeroplane between London and Windsor and London and Southampton in the year 1911, the air mail from Bork to Brück in 1912, to Rhein and Main (1912), the introduction of postal service stations in the Zeppelin airships and the long series of air mail arrangements in Switzerland in the year 1913. There are also the major events such as Bider's Alpine flights to Sion and Milan, the extension of the air mail to the whole of the Reich postal region and the first plans for a world-wide air service using Zeppelins. Obviously the air mail services of neighbouring countries will occupy an extensive place in the collection. Overseas countries also have extensive and very interesting material. The last section is the war literature, with field post deserving a special mention, the frightful air propaganda and finally appreciations of the pioneers of air travel: Bider in Switzerland and Count Zeppelin world-wide. It should not be forgotten that a considerable part of the articles in this quarto volume contains pictures. It extends to 396 pages.

The volumes in intermediate and large formats have still more illustrations, but deal more with foreign than with Swiss topics, and are often in foreign languages.

The cuttings were taken from numerous periodicals and newspapers. Aerophilately alone is served by 68 journals from all over the world, this section is complete.

Special sections are devoted to the covers of the earliest magazines forwarded by air mail. The first air mail letters and the literature dropped during the World War, all of which are present in the original.

The historically important correspondence carried on by Dr. Paganini during the fulfilment of his task fills 10 extensive volumes, and bears eloquent testimony to the care and work involved. Naturally, they contain valuable and sometimes also very detailed accounts of individual events in air traffic, along with many types of suggestion and proposal, projects, diagrams, plans, etc. It also contains the rare autographs of famous airmen and the most important pioneers of aviation which increases its value.

The only people he did not cater for are those - not infrequent ones – who wanted to locate philatelic treasures in the air mail archive. The aim and purpose of the archive is not philately but documentation.

The collection and exhibition of “bygone” post is the purpose of the Postal Museum.

Important Works on Postal History.

In recent years, works on postal history have been used more and more in philatelic studies, and a large proportion of the authors of such works have been philatelists as well. We thus find it necessary to mention not just the regular research literature in our magazine, but also the works on postal history. An interesting paper under the title The History of the Postal Service appeared in Deutsche Postzeitung, Berlin, 1934, N°4. This gave a listing of significant works on postal history, which we cannot withhold from our readers.

Philatelic Libraries: History, Formation and Use.

(3rd continuation and conclusion)

Dr. Johannes Schubert, University Librarian, Leipzig

Thus, for example, the philatelic library of Alexander Treichel (died at the age of 63 on the 8th August 1902 at Hoch-Paleschken, East Prussia), must have been incorporated in what is called the Deutschen Philatelistischen Bibliothek (German Philatelic Library). Unfortunately I have not been able to find out any more about this.

Here too belongs yet another very important library, the Bücherei Glasewald at Gossnitz (Glasewald Library) in the District of Altenburg. This was founded in 1890 and went at first by the name of Bücherei des Deutschen Philatelisten-Verbandes (Gössnitz) (Library of the German Philatelic Society of Gössnitz). It contains about 6,000 volumes, mainly philatelic literature in German, and also does inter-library loans. Catalogues appeared in 1900, 1907 and 1928. They were drawn up by Ruprecht Glasewald. Material has been supplied by people not known to the firm of A. E. Glasewald.

An example of how a society library can pass into private hands is given by the collection of the Bayerischen Philatelisten-Vereins München (Bavarian Philatelic Society of Munich), which went into private ownership in Berlin after the society broke up. However, I do not know who got it.

Finally should be mentioned the American William R. Ricketts of Forty-Fort, Pennsylvania, distinguished for his bibliographic work, a zealous collector of the relevant literature, who took over the library of the American E. B. Power of New York, amongst others.

Apart from these libraries which have migrated to a greater or lesser extent, there are naturally many other private libraries of more or less extent. Of modern collectors of this type I might mention Spohr in Paris, Michaelis in Schleswig, Schütte in Magdeburg (there is a type-written catalogue of this Library), plus the two names of Körner in Leipzig and Schmittdiel in Hamburg. The first of these has an outstanding collection of German language works in an ideal arrangement. He goes in for depth rather than breadth in his collection, i.e. he places the greatest value on getting complete sets of certain journals. The other book collector, C. Schmittdiel of Hamburg, is a very active person whose exact scholarship has, it appears to me, caused Die Philatelistische Literatur to become steadily more popular. Schmittdiel lays particular emphasis on bibliographical literature.

This brings me to the end of my survey of philatelic libraries. It is only an attempt, but I hope it will be of service to anyone interested in this field. For the rest I would also like to mention that the Fachbibliothek des Reichspostmuseums (Technical Library of the State Postal Museum), the Bücherei des Reichspostministeriums (Library of the State Postal Service) and the Fürstl. Thurn und Taxis'sche Hofbibliothek [St. Emmeran] (Library of the Principality of Thurn and Taxis [St. Emmeran]) in Regensburg have many rare items of value to philately and not relating to postal history alone.

ADDENDUM - 1

A change is underway as regards Point V of Group A (p.15, left-hand column). The Bund Deutscher Philatelisten-Verbände im In- und Auslande (Federation of German Philatelic Societies at Home and Abroad), at its meeting in Aschersleben on 18th to 21st August, decided its Library should be transferred to Munich – in fact, to the City Library. According to the original agreement by Pfingsten in 1933, the books were to be kept in Leipzig, and were kept in the University Library. They were taken from Meiningen to Leipzig, and because of their fragmentary character as an individual library, were used to supplement the two collections of philatelic books already in the University Library.

As far as the holdings under Group A, N°II, in the Preussischen Staatsbibliothek (Prussian State Library), Berlin, are concerned, Paul P. Lindenberg informed me on 20th August 1933 that they had not been catalogued and were thus not usable, because the DM10,000 needed for cataloguing was not available. His letter closed with the words thus, in spite of the considerable holdings in Berlin we are left quite miserable.

ADDENDUM – 2

(This addendum will only appear in the journal Die Philatelistische Literatur)

■ = Supplement

◆ = Correction

Following the appearance of my article in the journal Die Philatelistische Literatur (February 1934, Volume 3, Issue 2 - containing the first part only) various letters were sent to me and Schmittdiel, which were kind enough to correct one or more previously unclear or incorrect points. However, I had already stated that my work was only a first attempt, i.e. that one or more points still awaited clarification, at the end of my paper in Berichte des Vereins Leipziger Briefmarkenbörse, October 1933, Issue 10.

In what follows, I will set out the relevant sections from the communications that have reached me to date about my article:

■ Philatelic literature collection in the Munich City Library

From communications from City Inspector Chr. Otto Müller, 54 Kaulbachstrasse, Munich
3rd and 8th February 1934

... because of this inconvenience the undersigned (i.e. Müller), as Librarian of the Münchener Ganssachensammlervereins (Munich Society of Postal Stationery Collectors) and the Tauma – Tauschverbindung Münchener Briefmarkensammler (Exchange Club of Munich Stamp Collectors) entered into negotiations three years ago with the Committee of the Münchener Sammlervereine (Munich Collectors' Society) about their philatelic literature and agreed that to centralize philatelic literature for South Germany in Munich, the following would give up their Libraries:

1. The Münchener Briefmarkenclub (Munich Stamp Club) (President Zinckgraf), its entire book stock complete
2. The Tauma (Exchange Club of Munich Stamp Collectors), everything except their indispensable reference books
3. The Münchener Ganssachensammlervereins (Munich Society of Postal Stationery Collectors), all literature not relating to postal stationery
4. Herr Zinckgraf, art dealer)
5. Herr Larisch, stamp dealer) Their extensive superfluous
6. Herr Mühl, stamp dealer) private holdings
7. The undersigned, (i.e. Herr Müller))

Since the Bavarian State Library was too full to take them, the chairman of city library services in Munich, Bürgermeister Küfer, accepted them for the Munich City Library.

The conditions for use in the Munich City Library are as favourable as possible: no charge, borrowing or use of the philatelic literature in the Reading Room is available to every Munich collector on proof of identity without membership of a society or club being required.

The staff of the City Library have made their expertise available for classification ...

The library of the Münchener Ganssachensammlervereins (Munich Society of Postal Stationery Collectors), remains as a specialist collection for the field of postal stationery ...

◆ Glasewald Library – German Philatelic Society

From a communication from Ruprecht Glasewald, Gössnitz, District of Altenburg
5th February 1934

... in connection with the removal of the Glasewald Library, it should be noted that the Deutsche

Philatelisten-Verband (German Philatelic Society) has never had a library of its own. My father, A. E. Glasewald, the founder of the Society, allowed his own to be used as the Society library in the interests of publicity. What you said might lead people to think we sometimes bought books and the like, which was never actually the case ...

■ Private Library of the firm of Philipp Kosack & Co., Berlin

From a communication from the firm of Kosack to Schmittdiel

7th February 1934

... we ... wish to point out that we have one of the most outstanding libraries for our field of commerce ...

◆ Library of the Berlin Philatelic Club e.V., Berlin

From a communication from the Librarian of the Club, P. Baruch, Berlin, to Schmittdiel

7th February 1934

... I should like to point out that along with the Beck and Bungerz Libraries, a considerable part of the duplicates in the Club Library, plus part of the foreign literature, was indeed given to the State Library but nevertheless the greater part of the library remains in the Club's possession.

I should also like to stress that in spite of this transfer the Club Library is still one of the largest in Germany, whether in private or Society hands. The catalogue supplied to you last year will certainly prove my point. I ask you to make these facts known on the continuation of the article in your journal, to correct any possible misconception that the Berliner Philatelisten-Club (Berlin Philatelic Club) no longer possess a Library ...

■ Private Library of Nils Strandell, Lidingö (Sweden)

From a communication from Strandell to Schmittdiel

1st April 1933

... my Library is without doubt the largest in private hands in Northern Europe, and I have practically everything published for the last 25 years in all languages ...

Wishes for the philatelic press.

Part II

In N°12 of our journal for the year 1933, we published under this title some details of the wishes expressed by numerous collectors over the course of the previous year. They were the various suggestions made to the editors of philatelic journals. Since we have now done a survey for the New Year, we think it a good idea to print a few lines on the results of our efforts.

First we can state that Die Postmarke of Vienna, has responded to requests by giving the year number in brackets as well as the running number they have used for years. This makes it easy to see how many issues have been published in a year, as with most German language journals. Collectors of literature find it particularly convenient. We are delighted that the publishers of the leading specialist journal in the German language have met the wishes of literature lovers, and would be very pleased if the publishers of other journals who do not yet use this system of numbering would follow this example in the interests of literature.

For the systematic bibliographic treatment of a journal, it is absolutely necessary for the pages to be numbered. Up to now there have been two German language journals which have not done this. Thankfully, the Mainpost of Würzburg has now introduced page numbering, but Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm of Leipzig, has not met our wishes. One might have thought that this magazine, which is meant to encourage philatelic literature, would meet the wishes of the friends of literature in future years. However, it seems obvious that our journal is completely unknown to our respected rival – if we may call them so in all friendship.

The use of continuous numbering of pages was also suggested, so that there can be uniform bibliographic treatment of the philatelic press. Unfortunately, this wish has only been met by the Deutsche Zeitung für Briefmarkenkunde of Biberach, whereas Concordia-Post of Bad Buckow, Sieger-Post of Lorch and Der Ukrainische Philatelist of Vienna, appear to have overlooked this particular wish. Would it really be so hard to comply with? It would only need one instruction and the thing would be done. We will only say that we sent our recommendations to all of the relevant magazine editors in case they had not seen them, and we really hope that in coming years a uniform treatment will be introduced.

It is also gratifying to find that the journal Der Deutsche Inflationsmarkensammler of Immenstadt, has met our request and now publishes its supplement Memel-Rundschau separately. Neither the journal nor its supplement is harmed by this, and both can be collected and bound separately.

The wrapper business has also undergone desirable improvements. Many journals now do not reach the purchaser in the damaged condition that they often once did. It is in the publisher's own interest to tell them this, since the outside of a journal carries important information; people do not buy it and say the contents are what matter. We have already had many views about this.

It can well be said that some publishers have met the wishes of collectors and literature lovers, whereas others still think they can follow the old methods. We think this point of view is mistaken and we ask magazine publishers to follow the wishes of their readers as far as possible, if it does not involved them in additional costs.

I will take this opportunity to repeat the request for our readers to let us have further suggestions. If you have any practical ideas for improving the appreciation of literature, we shall always be ready to publish them in our journal.

Philatelic daily press. An appeal.

Our magazine aims to cover the whole range of German philatelic literature. As well as books, catalogues and specialist journals this includes the “stamp columns” in daily papers. Some daily papers have been included in our bibliography, but by no means all. We should like to include a detailed index of such papers and their stamp columns in the bibliography. We know there are some lovers of literature who are already well informed in this field. Our present request is addressed to them particularly, but to all other readers of our journal as well. We ask for your help in naming the daily papers in which stamp columns are published. Please address letters to the editors, including an example if possible. We already know of the following daily papers:

Stamp column in Hamburger Fremdenblatt, Hamburg
Stamp column in Leipziger Neueste Nachrichten, Leipzig
The Stamp Collector in Berliner Allgemeine Zeitung, Berlin

The Glasewald Library.

The Glasewald Library was founded as early as the 1890 by the well-known State Examiner, A. E. Glasewald senior (deceased). It is thoroughly useful, since from that time to this all German language philatelic works (including a few very expensive ones), and many foreign ones, have been acquired.

A catalogue arranged by subject of the individual German language items was reissued in 1927 and three supplements have appeared since. A fourth is in preparation. The price of this catalogue is 1.50 RM.

Each special field is dealt with separately in this catalogue, so the collector need not do much searching. It is printed on one side only, so that titles can be cut out and stuck on index cards. A catalogue of the periodicals has not been printed because of the cost.

The literature is loaned to anybody (references are required!). The charges are moderate, amounting to 0.20 RM per volume towards the cost of postage.

New publications for the last six months are not loaned, to protect the publisher.

Since most extensive libraries went abroad during the inflation period, and public libraries – which did not permit external loans – were changed because of a lack of space or money – everyone must applaud the existence of the Glasewald Library. Requests for loans should be addressed to: Ruprecht Glasewald, Office of “Philatelisten-Zeitung”, Gössnitz, District of Altenburg.

The Air Mail Archive in the Bern Postal Museum.

Reprinted from Post-Zeitschrift, Berne, with the permission of the Postal Museum

The Air Mail Archive of the Postal Museum consists of a single collection. Dr. Rob. Paganini, formerly of St. Gall and now in Zweisimmen, a learned and productive collector. He undertook to document the origin and development of the air mail service by collecting all the available publications in a chronological sequence. Starting with the consideration that scientific philately has taken infinite pains to trace the development of the early postage stamps, he thought of doing the same for the latest part of the subject, the hitherto neglected air mail. We owe him thanks and appreciation for this and if his valuable pioneering work leads to more attention and interest, his aim will have been achieved.

Not that he has lacked recognition hitherto: he is very well known and highly regarded in collecting circles as an expert, is a corresponding member of a number of international societies, and an honorary member of numerous aero-philatelic societies, etc.: still, the proverb that a prophet is without honour in his own country applies, very unfairly, to him.

I will say at once that Dr. Paganini makes his work available to everybody by presenting it to the Swiss Confederation, thus creating an institution whose further development offers a range of perspectives. At the moment his work includes well over 1,000 books, pamphlets, posters, etc., and under his learned hand it is constantly being added to and improved.

Obviously, a work like this cannot be set out in a couple of columns of a magazine. It would also be far too much to give a superficial volume-by-volume account. Dr. Paganini has himself produced a catalogue which fills 64 pages and has a preface from which the following is quoted by way of a summary:

The first Swiss air mail service was set up in Basle in 1913. The whole thing was of the nature of a popular entertainment to support Swiss military aviation. The air mail was set up as a special attraction. Older philatelists shook their heads over this development and cheerfully left the fun to the younger people, who took it up happily with the consent of their elders. It was something of a drawback that air mail was taken up by the younger set. I have wondered at this handicap for many long years.

The Flying Day at Basle, featuring the famous pilot Bider, made a deep impression on me. I saw how things were going and decided to follow this development and not just from the philatelic stand point. I must be frank that air mail covers to me were the evidence of an achievement, with or without the blessing of the State. Air mail stamps were simply a characteristic secondary phenomenon. I was relatively indifferent to their being perforated or imperforate, with or without errors in the printing, with a normal or reversed impression. My main aim was to follow the development of the aerial post historically and by documents. I began to collect everything I could get hold of, in whatever form.

As a private person, it was not easy for me to deal with states and postal authorities, since information was not available from the official side: not even in the military could I attain my end. Nevertheless the archives contain a nice number of official letters. I was pleased to find that official convenience was not always the deciding factor. Correspondence with private individuals was much more productive. I obtained a good deal of historically valuable information in this way. Original letters from many well-known proponents of air travel, right up to Count Zeppelin, could be of great interest in later years.

I have always tried to inspire my friends to help with my archive. Not all of them did so. Some collected documents, mainly press reports, on their own initiative. I had the pleasure in time of getting hold of all these small collections of cuttings, illustrations, etc. Also in the course of time I was able to take over some intensive individual collections. It should be mentioned here that my work was affected to the greatest degree by the World War. Above all correspondence lapsed, partly because the censor would not let many of them through and partly because information on air travel was either avoided or forbidden outright. Valuable information was lost beyond recall. My original aim was to collect only documents relating to the postal side of air travel, but I had to give this up. It is not possible to draw a sharp boundary. Many publications appeared relating to air races/sports without reference to their postal connections, then it turned out later that they had carried letters and postcards along. Thus, I collected all notices about air travel along with actual air mail items. Only in this way could a complete survey of the entire development be obtained. A good deal of technical data can also be found in the Archive. I must also be allowed the indulgence of including humorous items relating to this topic. My work should give an accurate picture of a very important cultural phenomenon. It would be impossible to view the material except chronologically. It would be desirable for the whole thing to be funded along scientific, commercial and philatelic lines. This would, however, need a great deal of further work which I cannot carry out. I am, however, completely confident that younger forces will come forward to undertake the historical research to produce reports and dissertations, over individual parts if not of the entire range.

I have made it my duty not only to survey and arrange the historical material systematically, but also to pick out a few typical events and publish monographs on them. Also, I decided as an aero philatelist to make a chronological survey of the individual postal flights. I began in 1914 with a hand-written catalogue. This first attempt was soon overtaken and rendered useless: it was replaced by the one started afresh in 1918. Soon afterwards I began to look for a publisher who would take the risk of printing it. After various refusals – the number of aero philatelists likely to buy it was minute – Edmund Stein of Potsdam expressed himself willing. The little work – the world's first air mail catalogue – first appeared in Autumn 1920. I could not attempt to price air mail covers, as there was simply no basis for doing so. This was undertaken a year later by Champion of Paris. Since my compilation was no longer suitable for extension after the year 1918, I began in 1922 to draw up the 3rd hand-written catalogue. This was used by Berezowski to draw up his 1925 catalogue. I have kept on with the manuscript copy. It contains an enormous quantity of adverts and references to mail flights.

Philatelic Libraries. History formation and use.

Dr. Johannes Schubert

University Librarian, Leipzig

Part 2

A further collection of philatelic literature has recently been set up in Leipzig, in the Leipzig University Library at 6 Beethovenstrasse. Currently, this contains two large collections which are available to the societies concerned. The first was the library of the Vereins Leipziger Briefmarkenbörse e.V. (Society of Leipzig Stamp Dealers), the Dephilei - De(utsche) phi(latelistischer) lei(h)-bibliothek (German Philatelic Lending Library). The other is the outstandingly good collection of the Germania-Ringes, (Union of German Philatelic Societies). In 1910 this organisation acquired the library (about 500 volumes) of Ludwig Berger of Brunswick. This was purchased for 700 marks. These collections in the University Library contain both German-language and foreign-language literature from all branches of philately. At the moment, both collections are regularly added to by the societies concerned. More recently, the library of the Bundes Deutscher Philatelisten-Verbände im In- und Auslande (Federation of German Philatelic Societies at Home and Abroad) has also been brought in, so that here too, the user will find a good deal of material needed for his research. The collections are individually, systematically, arranged. Use of the collections is free to everyone, in accordance with the wishes of the Societies. The books are sometimes allowed out on loan, including external loan. Users in the building have at their disposal the main reading room and the new periodicals reading room, both again free of charge. The University Library is also naturally included in the inter-library loans system of the German Libraries.

It is not only in Berlin and Leipzig that societies have made their collections available in open libraries: the same has happened in many other places. (See List of Names, N°36, and N°26 of Index Section A, Group VI – List of Names N°91. Also N°99: Index Section A, Group VII – List of Names N°35. Also N°51: Index Section, Group VIII – List of Names N°56.)

For example, as early as the 19th April 1907 the Philatelisten-Verein Essen-Ruhr (Essen-Ruhr Philatelic Society) gave its library to the Essen City Library. However, America was even earlier: as early as 1899 the American Philatelic Society gave its collection to the Carnegie Library founded in Pittsburgh (USA) in 1895. This was a public library maintained by the city. Anyone could borrow provided they met the stipulated conditions. I do not know whether the books could go out on inter-library loan. A catalogue entitled Books in the Library of the American Philatelic Society (i.e. all the Society's books available in the Carnegie Library) was shown to me in 1910 (it ran to 20 pages).

In England, the Croydon Central Public Library, in the Town Hall in London, had the library of the Croydon Philatelic Society. This consisted of 140 volumes up to 1927. The library of Aberdeen University in Scotland also contains philatelic literature. A university professor, P. J. Anderson, took on the care of it and has produced a catalogue of this literature.

As the index will show, (Group B) I have located 5 collections in the possession of societies (See List of Names N°87, N°s13 + 7 + 68, Index Section B Group IX – List of Names N°53. Also N°s44 + 47 + 42. Index Section B, Group X – List of Names N°89. Also N°84. Index Section B, Group XI – List of Names N°28. Also N°8, Index, Section B, Group XII – List of Names N°74. Also N°s71 + 72 + 73: Index Section B, Group XIII.)

A very painful recollection for German people is the thought of the library of the Collectors Club in New York, in their 4th Avenue clubhouse. This outstandingly excellent library contains three valuable German collections. The first is that of Baron von Mutzenbecher, who collected a great deal of literature and which was taken over by the well-known philatelist and writer Theodor Haas (born on the 22nd September 1848 in Karlsruhe; died on the 8th July 1911 in Leipzig). Haas probably also became the owner. The Haas library did not in fact cover the latest literature (about 1900-1911) but was all the more complete for the period from the beginning of philately to the end of the century. After the death of Haas, his collection was bought for 1,500 Marks by Victor Suppantisch, the President of the Austrian Senate (born on the 31st October 1838 in Laibach (Carinthia), died on the 2nd March 1919 in Graz), who is familiar to every philatelist, who was very keen on his library. Suppantisch could claim with pride to own the largest German philatelic library with more than 30,000 individual items and 3,037 volumes of periodicals. He collected this literature over a period of 50 years, and amongst his books were about 1,800 from the period 1861-1900, including rarities missing from even the Lindsay (Earl of Crawford) collection. Anyone who visited the “Bugra” [Exhibition] in Leipzig in 1914 (in the “Collecting” section, Group 25c, “Philately” in the “Library” space in the central hall on the upper storey of the main “German Publishing” building) will have admired many items from the Suppantisch collection, representing German philately. However, this magnificent collection was sold by Suppantisch's heirs in 1922 to the Collectors' Club of New York. Of course the Library is available there, but whether only to club members or to other people as well is outside my knowledge.

As far as the library of the Royal Philatelic Society of London is concerned, it need only be said that it was based on the library of one of its oldest members, namely Image, and was later extended by the collections of Philbrick (see above, Dispersed Collections) and Castle.

The Boston Philatelic Society (USA), already mentioned above, was for a long time the private library of the American John F. Seybold as well. Unfortunately I cannot at the moment establish whether this library, now called the Seybold Library is currently available in the City of Boston Public Library (see above).

Another Library that has been enriched by major acquisitions is that of the Chemnitzer-Philatelisten-Vereins (Chemnitz Philatelic Society). Towards the end of the year 1932 this took over the collection of its very active member, Paul Kleeberg (died on the 29th September 1932 in Chemnitz), well-known to stamp collectors as a China specialist.

In Czechoslovakia, the literature collection of the philatelic writer Max Bloch was bought by a man named Passer, a member of the Deutschen Vereins für Briefmarkenkunde in Prag (German Society for Philately of Prague). When the Society moved its Library, Passer gave his to the Society, which was an example for the President F. Walenta, who made over his own library to the Society.

This concludes the group of libraries which I have marked with B in the index. However, before I go onto Group C, a few other societies should be mentioned which have earned a mention in the relevant literature (see List of Names N^{os}21, 29, 30, 31, 32, 39, 50, 52, 61, 64, 65, 68, 69, 70, 90). For 5 of them, a mere reference to the name should suffice (see List of Names N^{os}21, 32, 59, 61, 69). Catalogues of another 9 Libraries have appeared. (See List of Names N^{os}29, 30, 31, 39, 52, 64, 65, 68, 70). Of them I will mention first the Catalogue of Handbooks, Journals, etc. in the Library of the Herts Philatelic Society dated Christmas 1910 (published in London, total 53 pages). This Library had existed since 1898 and, according to the introduction to the catalogue (p.5), was the second largest philatelic library in England in 1910. Another catalogue (only available in typescript) is that of the library of the Vereins der Briefmarkenfreunde in Hamburg (Stamp Lovers' Society of Hamburg). It has the title of Literaturverzeichnis der Bibliothek (Literature Index to the library). Other details can be readily obtained from the bibliographies, so I need not go into them here. The only important point as regards this group is that certain books from the Newark Stamp Club (USA) (see list of names N^o90) were given by Deats, if I am not mistaken, to the Free Public Library in Newark when the Society was dissolved.

Group C of the Index, which we have yet to deal with, mentions some cases of libraries in private possession, i.e. in the ownership of individuals. (See List of Names N^o20, N^o17, Index, Section C, Group XIV. List of names N^o6, N^o25, Index, Section C, Group XV, List of names N^o27. Index Section C, Group XVI. List of names N^o83, N^o81, Index Section C, Group XVIII.

Introduction.

Franz-Karl Lindner

I am writing this preface whilst still under the influence of the just completed IBRA'99 in Nuremberg, which will undoubtedly pave the way for the manner in which philately shall be presented in the future.

The success in general of IBRA'99 can be measured by the unusually high numbers of visitors to the Literature Garden. Besides the three large philatelic libraries of Hamburg, Munich and Frankfurt and the two philatelic publishers, there was a large library for visitors to browse and read publications right there with about 1,500 philatelic works available. It was surprising to all of us to see, how popular this was, demanding at times the attention of all four co-workers. Our final statistics show that 1,500 books had been borrowed. An unexpected success for us.

At the same time this means that philatelic literature can by no means be called a stepchild any longer. It is and remains a constant without which philately could not exist. Our experiences tell us that there are no crucial points, but that all literary areas of philately are equally in demand. We cannot fail to mention the "simple collector". For him there have to be adequate philatelic works. Maybe they will encourage him to become more specialized.

The now presented two volume edition of the Literatur Nachrichten (Literary News) shows once again the literary activities of the many individual authors as well as the working groups in the BDPh in the year 1997. I am especially thankful to all authors for their mostly unselfish engagement in philatelic research. I can only suggest to all philatelic researchers that they preserve everything in a written form, although I am very well aware that printing costs are mostly disproportionaltely high. But maybe in such cases electronic data like diskettes and CD ROMS should be considered as a genuine alternative in today's high-tech world. They are cheaper to produce and easier to market. Printouts can then be obtained by those who desire them.

Finally, I would like to express my admiration and thanks to Bundesstellenleiter Franz-Josef Lindauer for compiling and editing these Literatur Nachrichten. Judge for yourself the enormous task in this book of reference.

Closing remarks.

Franz-Josef Lindauer

Dear user of the Literatur Nachrichten, this edition as well as those starting with the year 1991 can be ordered as electronic data from Philatelie Verlags- u. Vertriebs GmbH, Mildred Scheel Strasse. 2, 53175 Bonn.

Despite the efforts of my former colleague, Mrs. Johanna Finger, and my wife to find all mistakes when editing, it can be assumed that you will still find some.

That is why I am asking every user to inform me of any typos or factual errors. If an edition of a magazine or article has been omitted, please also let me know. Those mistakes can be corrected in the electronic data.

Thanks in advance to all who communicate with me.

Last but not least let me thank all my helpers in the working groups, who tended to the evaluation of their publications and those responsible for foreign magazines as well as the editors, especially (See the original for the long list of names). Without their work the Literatur Nachrichten would be worth only half.

Thanks again!

Introduction.

Once again you have a new edition of the Literature Nachrichten in front of you, once again in two volumes and again with more pages than before. This clearly shows that the need for philatelic research is as strong as ever. The results of this research are listed in this edition of the Literature Nachrichten. Our Federal Chairman for research and literature, Franz-Josef Lindauer, has with great zeal gathered and written down the data, so special thanks are due him.

These thanks are naturally particularly due to the authors of the listed works. These authors come not only from the various workgroups under BDPh [Federation of German Philatelists] with their manifold themes but also from the many authors of monographs, all of whom have brought their knowledge onto paper. One can only wish that as many people interested in philately as possible use these literary works to improve their collections, because only collections that have been carefully worked in regard to postal history or thematics have a chance of success at exhibitions or at a later valuation for sale. Philatelic literature is a good investment in the philatelic and economic future of a collection.

Considering the ever increasing wealth of information in the area of philatelic literature, the BDPh will have to make greater use of electronic storage media. These have the enormous advantage that extremely large amounts of data can be stored in a very small space at a low cost. At the same time, it's quick to find the desired title through the use of various search tools. Thus, Literature Nachrichten will, starting in 2000, only be published on CD-ROM. The BDPh hope that it will be possible to publish more information that, at the same time, is easier to access.

Also, other collections of literature, such as the Denninger Library or the permanent library of the BDPh in the House of Philately at Bonn, will be made easier to use through the use of electronic means of storage. This may make it possible to entice philatelists to actively use individual titles from the various libraries and to widen their philatelic horizons.

Finally I would like to thank the Foundation for Philately and Postal History for their great support of the current Literature Nachrichten.

Postscript.

Dear user of Literature Nachrichten, this and the other issues, starting in 1989, may be ordered on electronic media from Philatelie Verlags- und Vertriebs GmbH, Mildred-Scheel-Strasse, D-53175 Bonn, Germany.

My female colleagues, led by Mrs. Johanna Finger, and my wife have expended a great effort at proof reading to remove all errors. Despite these efforts, some errors may still be found. Thus, I ask all readers to inform me of every omission or typographical or factual error they find. These errors and omissions may be provided to me by electronic means. In advance, I wish to thank all that write me.

Finally, I would like to thank all my co-workers in the working groups, that have evaluated philatelic literature, particularly the following: Hartwig Danesh of Schwelm, Jutta Fulrich of Winsen/Luhe, Rudolf Hofer of Leichlingen, Ulrich Jobsky of Wiehl, Jörg Maier of Munich, Rainer von Scharpen of Mainz, Christian Schunck of Cologne, Gerhard Trögel of Leverkusen, and Jürgen Zalaszewski of Manching. These and the editors are heartily thanked. Without their work the Literature Nachrichten would only have been half as valuable.

Once again, thanks!

Introduction.

Again two volumes of the Literatur-Nachrichten were necessary to put together the philatelic literature of the year 1996. Obviously, the thirst for new philatelic knowledge is unbroken and there are still always philatelic question marks worthy to explore and the tendency is increasing. For example, it appears that in natural science like in philately the solution of a problem also raises a whole bunch of new questions. This means for me that I am not afraid of the future with regard to new philatelic discoveries. We will still have many problems to solve. The results are all so important that they will have to be written down. Therefore, at this juncture again, my call to all researching scientists: Don't let your research results disappear in the drawer. Publish them separately or through philatelic magazines, of course most of all in our Philatelie.

An anniversary is connected with this edition of Literatur-Nachrichten, which is known only to insiders, I believe. It is the 10th edition, which has been published under the tutelage of Franz-Josef Lindauer, Head of Research and Literature. He has collected and written a total of 6,486 pages since 1987 in painstaking and detailed work. Only a few can imagine how much voluntary time Franz-Josef Lindauer had to invest. He did this for all those philatelists in the BDPH for whom philatelic literature does not only entail postage stamp catalogues, but who are prepared to delve into the depths of philately.

On this Jubilee, Franz-Josef Lindauer, I offer not only my thank you, but may I be allowed to stress this in the name of all users of the Literatur-Nachrichten. I hope and wish that Franz-Josef Lindauer's work will be available to us for a long time, so that future editions of the Literatur-Nachrichten will be published under his direction. Again, thank you very much to him.

To the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History, thank you for the generous support of this edition of this work.

End Word.

Dear user of the Literatur-Nachrichten this and also the editions starting with the year 1991 can be requested on electronic data carriers from the Phil*Creative Verlag, BDPh*PHILA*SCHOP, P. O. Box 10, 41366 Schwalmtal.

Although several of my co-workers - mainly Mrs. Johanna Finger - as well as my dear wife have tried to correct all mistakes, we can be reasonably sure, that you will find some.

That is why I would like to ask users to let me know about typos and other mistakes. Should an edition of a magazine or an article not have been analyzed or mentioned, please let me know that also. Those mistakes can be corrected in the electronic version.

Thank you in advance to all who write to me.

In closing, I would like to thank all my helpers on our team who analyzed the publications, namely Hartwig Danesch, Schwelm; Rudolf Hofer, Leichlingen; Ulrich Jobsky, Wiehl; Jörg Maier, Munich; Rainer von Scharpen, Mainz; Christian Schunck, Cologne; Gerhard Trögel, Leverkusen and Jürgen Zalaszewski, Manching, who are responsible for many international magazines; as well as all editors. Without your labour the Literature-Nachrichten would only be worth half as much.

Again, thank you.

[HISTORY OF] PHILATELY (STAMP COLLECTING)

Preface to the Third Edition

Even a superficial look into this work, now in its third edition, will attest that it presents itself in a new garment corresponding to the demands of the time.

The Watermarks, their Description and Illustration claim, in contrast to previous editions, minor space only in the work, as these, since the year 1872, constitute a part of every good album and catalogue, and have been considered exhaustively in the latest, third edition of my Handbook. The descriptive text could thus limit itself to a concise description of the illustrations which this time have been increased significantly.

On the other hand, I was motivated to pay very special attention to the History of Postage Stamps and of Philately as, so far, the hoped-for attention to the same has not been forthcoming and the gratifying situation of our young science surely demands that we be mindful of its development from the days of its origin to the present, forming a general picture of the same, even though still sketchily. With what I offer I expect to have walked the middle course, i.e. not having forgotten that which matters, maintaining however the proper extent in everything. I believed that I had to deal with the philatelic literature of Germany exhaustively, as the present work will be read by a large number of German philatelists, and literature after all merits our full appreciation in its function as carrier and support of philately.

Everything else worth knowing regarding watermarks has been noted at suitable spots. It is necessary to add only the remark that the dates of issue described in the text are in accord with the third edition of my Handbook. I shall gratefully take into account in future any wishes and suggestions.

Two of the most renowned German philatelists, Secretary of the Posts (ret.) W. Herrmann and Lord of the Manor A. Treichel, were gracious enough to accept the dedication of the present work. The names Herrmann and Treichel are impressive and known everywhere; the dedication to them is sufficiently justified. In the acceptance of the dedication on the part of these gentlemen, my work was honoured so much that I appreciate it fully and am obligated for all time in gratitude.

Should the collectors of Germany welcome this work in its new aspect as they did with the second and third volume of the Philatelic Library and my manual for essay and postage stamp collectors, I shall be glad indeed.

With philatelic greetings

Gohlis-Leipzig, New Year 1878.

The Author

Philately (Stamp Collecting)

Philately. If initially we ask, What is the meaning of the word Philately, as the friends of postage stamp collecting have designated this activity for more than a decade, we are in a position to give a very exact reply thanks to an etymological treatise published by Treichel.*

* Philatelie: An etymological correction by Law Candidate A. Treichel in Moschkau's Magazin, 1872, N°8. In N°9, page 39, the explanation is questioned. Treichel's derivation was defended as early as 1866 by an unknown writer in the Briefmarkensammler, N°2.

The word Philately is a purely Greek one, with the first part the stem phil (philos = friend), the second syllable pair by means of the letter a, the privative alpha of Greek grammar, to be translated into German as free or ready, plus the term telos (i.e. toll, tax, tariff). Hence, in a somewhat free rendition, the friendship or the occupation with that which is free from tax or toll - an interpretation that satisfies and, with the exception of France and Belgium, counts since the year 1866 all over the world with adherents among current stamp collectors as well as in dictionaries. The fact that in Germany, notably only in Hamburg, the plausible and meaningful Greek a is ignored, along with the derivation of philos and telos, should be pointed out here at all events. More applicable and appropriate than Philatelie is, however, without a doubt the customary Timbrologie, i.e., Science of Stamps, decided upon definitively by the Société Française de Timbrologie, although till then, in addition to Timbrologie the term Timbrophilie (Stamp friendship, fancy) had had acceptance. And yet, the French names show spurious designations borrowed from the French and Greek languages - sufficient reason for favouring the purely Greek term Philatelie or Philately.

 Those of Hamburg seem to lean towards a definition by Baron Gutmann, also in Moschkau's Magazin, 1872, N°10, who however, advocates Philotelie.

So much about the name under which the stamp collectors of the world united as a community of hundreds of thousands. We now turn to postage stamp collecting itself.

Origin and Diffusion of Postage Stamp Collecting.

Stamp collecting, as considered in the manner by which it is practised at this time and the literature in reference to it to have risen in a sense to a kind of science, is said to have originated (according to a known tradition) as a wager going back decades, according to which someone asserted he could procure enough stamps to cover an entire room, denied by an opponent. The story goes that the former gathered a huge amount of stamps by way of announcements and that the champagne they had bet was drunk in the drawing-room papered by stamps. Just how and why this bet could become a part of philately - it means nothing any more nowadays - is not clear to me; but since every cause that makes a stone roll is based frequently on something absurd, I did not wish to omit this curiosity here.

The year itself where the origin of philately might be placed can hardly be determined with certainty, though it is certain that one cannot speak of collecting in the true sense of the word prior to the years 1858-1862. We do not mean to deny that there were collectors at an earlier time, say 1854 to 1857, as is affirmed, in fact, by some.

The cradle of philately stood in the capitals of England and France, indeed also in Belgium, where it was protected and cultivated, until, as a young boy, it moved across the ocean, across the Rhine, soon to find the same interest in the major cities of America and of Germany, as in its original homeland. Here, with true passion and real interest, adults of every class were collecting, with us initially the young people who soon saw in the stamps to be gathered, a favoured object for exchange. In Paris, they collected in all circles, at court and in diplomatic groups, in the schools and play grounds: stamp collecting became a mania that knew no frontiers. The Terrasse des Feuillants in the Tuilleries garden served for a long time as the chief gathering point of stamp collectors, and in the shade of elm trees and high chestnuts, under the open sky, young ladies and gentlemen were actively engaged in their exchange business. Later, at the Palais Royal, there arose a formal stamp bourse where business was conducted more on a wholesale basis, and soon the booksellers along the river banks, dealers in cigars and in writing materials and the like seized on the business which achieved a certain basis now.* Similarly in England and in Belgium, and although we do not have detailed reports at our disposal, we do indeed know that particularly in the former country large stamp dealerships arose, simply as a result of enormous demand. In Germany, philately spread with the speed of lightning, with Leipzig, as still today, the central point of the activity, finding eager representatives in the book dealer G. Wuttig and the antique dealers C. C. Zschiesche and C. E. Köder. However, not in the major German cities alone, in the smaller communities as well and in industrial villages philately was well-received, and I daresay with confidence that in 1862, in Germany, 50% of all students in schools of higher learning and in the middle schools were collecting stamps. This fact might adequately explain that here, recognising the value and the future of this matter, "Albums for Postage Stamps" were published, even before they were published in Belgium and France. G. Wuttig in Leipzig deserves the fame to have published the first German album which, starting out as an album of cardboard with loose text-free and simply red-chequered leaves, went through a series of phases until by 1870 nineteen editions had been made under Bauschke and Kümmel. The first German catalogue, by Zschiesche & Köder in Leipzig, 1863, followed this album, and also in this year and in following years a considerable number of price lists of stamps for sale by German postage stamp dealers. Thus, by G. Bauschke, Leipzig 1864; J. Braunschweig, Berlin 1863; E. Heim in Vienna; Oskar Jann in Breslau, etc. 1864. The fact that in Germany at the time the interest in all circles for philately was lively, that adults had become passionate followers, is due quite considerably to the daily press which with few exceptions had given its approval in this matter. In that connection one should mention especially an illustrated description of all stamps in the fashion magazine Bazar (1862-64), with a large circulation even then and further, a very interesting, neutral, article, Die Briefmarkensammlungen in the Leipziger Illustrierten Zeitung N°1014, 1862.

* Petersen: Genrebilder aus dem modernen Babel., 1870, page 138.

As in Germany, the press spoke even earlier concerning philately in France, England, America, etc., and the articles notably in the Annuaire Scientifique (London, 1855) and in Monde Illustré (Paris, 1864) as well as in the Union Review (1862) impress me as being most worth reading.

If France can claim the first history of postage stamps written for collectors (Boyer: Historie des Timbres Poste, Paris 1862), England may boast the first postage stamp magazine [Actually this was an early catalogue], with the title The Stamp Collectors Guide, on the 1st January 1862, by F. Booty in Brighton* (published by H. and C. Treacher). This venture was a signal for general imitation, and the first day of January of the following year brought us in Belgium the Timbre-Poste by Moens (which still appears today, after fourteen years), in England the Stamp Collectors Magazine by A. Smith and Co., in Germany the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler by Zschiesche & Köder in Leipzig, and in France on the 1st January 1864, Le Timbrophile by A. Maury [Actually P. Mahé] in Paris.

* Translator's note: With reference to non-German titles and names, a good deal of inattention on the part of the printer (or author?) is evident. In general I have given the version used in the original German, correcting only those where the error was glaring.

At that time the literature - in consequence of the significant growth philately had experienced - shot out of the soil like mushrooms. Albums, Catalogues, Monographs devoted to single countries, about forgeries, watermarks, etc., Musical compositions about stamps, Artistic prints and photographs, Lithographs, Wood engravings - in a word, anything and everything that might sell came into existence and found buyers in considerable numbers. To satisfy this enormous demand became the goal of stamp dealers everywhere which, in keeping with the volume of business, published price lists in catalogues or on sheets and realised, more or less, sales which in the view of opponents "were worthy of better things".

And so, just as philately arose suddenly, it spread equally across the entire world, finding acceptance by the thousands, among young and old, high and low.

The Value of Stamp Collecting

Was it surprising then, when in reference to this mania the question was raised here and there Just what does all this mean, why collect stamps, is it not child's play?, etc.; and now philately had to pass the test, because on all sides, rightly or wrongly, the dissecting knife was applied, scholars and pedagogues scrutinized it, and both seekers and finders differed in their views. While the pedagogues condemned stamp collecting as corrupting children, inciting them to barter and keeping them from working, and let this opinion be publicized in the *Gartenlaube while prohibiting stamp collecting in schools, others - on a different and no less competent side - lifted philately toward heaven as being stimulating, instructive in so many ways, and entertaining.

* Translator's note: A popular family magazine at the time, known for the sentimental novels it printed.

The golden truth, however, lay in the middle. Several voices that shed light, free of prejudice, on the question of the value of philately may testify verbally in the matter: they reduce the condemnation as exaggerated, as well as the homage to proper proportions, showing in clear terms proof about the intrinsic worth and usefulness of philately. On the one hand there is the consideration of the elements of philately as a science; on the other, philately as a mania, the unplanned, aimless, purposeless collecting.

Dr. John Edward Gray, director of the British Museum, says: The use and attraction of gathering any kind of objects is in educating the spirit to careful observation, precise comparison, good judgment about differences and similarities, and to stimulate interest in the drawing or art that produced the creation or fabrication; to bring to life the history of the country that produced the collected object or that puts it to use. Postage stamps offer good objects for all the branches of study, being sufficiently varied to furnish broad outlines for classification. The fact that one receives stamps from so many countries leads to the question; Which were the conditions that led to the introduction of these, what is the history of the countries that issued them, why some countries (for example France) deemed it necessary to order in a few years so many changes while others never had reason to do so?

The modifications occurring in the case of these stamps points toward some important historical event as, for example, the accession of a monarch, a change in government, or the incorporation of a smaller state into a larger one, a change in the standard of coinage, etc. As a result, a postage stamp collection can be considered as a coin collection, a process in the history of civilised peoples during the past quarter of a century; and equally also - as they show great variation in design and execution - as a collection of works of art on a small scale, characterising the artistic style of the countries that issued them. The extent of the collection and the manner by which it is planned and cultivated will indicate the industry, sense of organisation, cleanliness, and, finally, the taste of the collector.

A similar view is expressed by the author of the interesting article Die Briefmarkensammlungen in the Leipziger Illustrierten Zeitung N°1014, 1862, as he states, regarding the remark that one should finally make an effort to bring order to collecting, so that stamps may occupy a rightful place among the collections of coins, coats of arms, autographs, seals, etc.: When stamps are regarded as a kind of paper money, their accumulation and preservation may well be part of a coin collection, it might also, if it contains clean and well-preserved specimens, be added to a collection of portraits and heraldic devices, be expanded in time into a miniature gallery of Royal houses, laying claim to historic, heraldic, and genealogical interest. Understood and dealt with from this view-point, a good and systematically prepared stamp collection is more than child's play, and merits consideration, compared with other amateurish elements of the day.

Divergent opinions resisted and resist the voices based on fact, notably the views of educators who during their meetings have made this issue one of criticism, also in the previously mentioned short article in the Gartenlaube (1864), publicly. One, attempting to put an end to the matter, alleged that as a result of collecting, small business activities among the young are promoted and exchanging can lead to dishonesty. And yet, the representatives of this view appear to ignore totally that in the schools, long before the emergence of the stamp hobby, they were bargaining with pictures, small objects used in games, balls and a hundred other items - though it must be acknowledged that these exchanges and dealings in the schools must be prohibited most vigorously.

If now, as a matter of fact, the collecting of stamps has become an ineradicable occupation among the young, one may well draw a parallel between stamp collecting and the collection of beetles, butterflies, coins, seals, and coats of arms.

As regards these last-named collecting objects we already have informed above on the competent judgment of Dr. Gray, et al., who speak of the relationship and meshing of the respective collections. It is a different matter, however, in the case of beetles and butterflies which - leaving aside the recognised advancement of the natural sciences in schools - should be placed largely under the control of protective animal societies. The youthful collectors make use of the most crafty means in order to kill the newly acquired objects during beautiful summer days, and the burning match plays the same favoured role as does the glowing needle. Just what use the childlike spirit finds in such unheard-of cruelties is clear. Who can deny that crudeness, heartlessness, and insensitivity are elements youngsters will become accustomed to?

How much more innocent and also instructive is the collecting of postage stamps? Dr. W. Faber says: *In no better way can one awaken in maturing youth a sense for cleanliness and of order than by means of a stamp collection. An unclean collection is an absurdity, a disorganised one is a contradiction. No one will deny that a meticulous cleanliness and painstaking order demands a fair degree of industry and care, which will manifest itself in beneficial results also in other matters. To be stressed above all, is that the eye will be opened, the ability to focus sharpened, the outlook from the daily circle will be drawn away into far-away lands and zones. In the most entertaining and at the same time penetrating manner, geographic and ethnographic knowledge is presented, and the desire to know is guided thus in the direction of a commercial terrain that is closely related. The memory records more easily and effectively by looking, for instance, at a map, far more vividly than by rummaging through a dead book!

* Bazar, Heidelberg, 1869, page 2.

In his discussion about the value of stamp collecting, Dr. Faber reaches this conclusion: Philately can not only be cultivated as rewardingly as numismatics and heraldry, it offers far more that is stimulating than either of these. Though not of equally high birth, it is nonetheless their popular basis.

More than three decades have gone by since the Annuaire Scientifique published the first known article about stamp collecting. Since then, philately has experienced a rise that had never been anticipated, has in fact become a science, a scientifically maintained occupation whose value is recognised universally as witnessed by factors of the most differing kind which we shall have to discuss more extensively later.

Stamp Literature

The fact that this is the case we owe to a rich literature that considers and deals with all of the branches of this science. A splendid and unique work, one of a kind, The Philatelic Library. A catalogue of stamp publications by John K. Tiffany (St. Louis, 1874) recorded this literature with diplomatic precision, we consider it our duty to recall it in greater detail.*

- * Tiffany's distinguished work, fourteen sheets in large quarto, only appeared in 150 copies which the author presented to his friends. The writer of this had the very good fortune to receive a copy for his philatelic library whose pride is this beautiful book.

The literature of foreign countries flourished earlier than in German lands where philately made its appearance at last, though finding there countless friends. We shall therefore discuss the literature of foreign parts first, as briefly as feasible, according to its extent and significance.

England*

Next to America, England surely exhibits the richest literature. As remarked above, it merits the fame of the publishing of the first stamp magazine (Liverpool, 1862) by Messrs. Moore & Co., the Stamp Collectors Review, followed to date by more than sixty specialised periodicals among which the most significant shall be cited in what follows: The Stamp Collectors Magazine by Alfred Smith & Co., Bath (1863-74) the best of all English magazines! Its eleven [Editor: Actually 12] years of publication comprises 138 numbers and 2300 pages. The Stamp Collectors Magazine was also the first specialised periodical which used the magnificent Mulready envelope as a vignette on its title page. Of equal quality can be mentioned The Philatelist by Stafford Smith in Brighton which was published from the 1st January 1867 to December 1876, thus, for nine [Editor: Actually 10] years. The fact that these ever celebrated specialised publications came to an end, following such laudable existence, is regrettable and, to us, inexplicable, but both had successors which presented themselves in a more modest configuration. These are Alfred Smith & Company's Monthly Circular and The Philatelic Quarterly by Stafford Smith, which at the moment are the only English specialised publications still being read. To be emphasized among these also, is Edw. L. Pemberton's Philatetical Journal which brought illustrations in colour but appeared for one year only (1872), despite the editorship of the celebrated name; further, the Stamp Collectors Journal (1863) and Werninck and Company's The Stamp, also with a colourfully illustrated chronicle [of new issues].

- * Translator's note: In Germany, the word England is frequently used to denote all of Great Britain.

Among stamp catalogues in England, F. Booty produced in the year 1862 the first one, under the name of The Stamp Collectors Guide which, despite the new edition of 1863 with the new title Aids to Stamp Collectors, occupied a second place when Mount Brown published his Catalogue of British Colonial and Foreign Postage Stamps, the first edition of which also appeared in 1862, with a fifth edition in 1865 already. Collecting activity in England at that time was so lively that the catalogues mentioned were by no means satisfactory. Simultaneously (1862) Dr. J. Edw. Gray, the Director of the British Museum, offered his excellent Hand-Catalogue of Postage Stamps, a publication that appeared in 1865 in a third edition, in 1874 in a sixth edition, and now has the title The Illustrated Catalogue of Postage Stamps. Not only is it the most illustrated but the only leading catalogue of England as well. Neither Dr. C. Viner's Postage Stamp Collectors Catalogue and Guide (1869) nor J. B. Moens' Postage Stamp Illustrated could compete with it; only Edw. L. Pemberton's Stamp Collectors Handbook (1874) can be mentioned as being of some significance. By the same author, the Philatetical Catalogue (1874) is to be included, as it was intended to become a kind of ideal catalogue, with excellent presentation and completeness, with collotype illustrations of originals, but unhappily, due to the elevated price, appeared as one edition only, which nonetheless shows Pemberton's great knowledge and good will most brilliantly.

England was least productive in the manufacture of postage stamp albums, a fact that explains why editions in English were made in Belgium, Germany, and even in the Netherlands, and sold in large quantities. The first place in English albums is without a doubt that by E. S. Gibbons, Imperial Postage Stamp Album, of which at this time the third edition is at hand. Richly illustrated with coats of arms and reproductions of stamps, it has the one disadvantage that it is printed on both sides which, as is well known, does not allow the insertion of supplementary sheets. Enjoying much popularity also is the Postage Stamp Album by Edward A. Oppen which appeared in 1862 in a first edition, 1866 in an 8th and 1873 in a 17th. One may mention further Johnson's and Rowe's Postage Stamp Collectors Paquet Album as the first in England, and H. Stafford Smith's Permanent Stamp Album (1869), intended as was Stanley, Gibbons and Company's Improved Postage Stamp Album for the incorporation of envelopes, cards, etc., preferably for permanent use. In translations, the best known to be mentioned are J. Lallier's Postage-Stamp-Album (Paris and London, 1862; 9th edition 1870); J. B. Moens' Postage Stamp-Album (Brussels and London, 1864; 10th edition 1874); v. Rinsum's Permanent Stamp Album, in four languages (Amsterdam 1869); and Bauschke's The Illustrated Postage Stamp Album (Plymouth and Leipzig, 1867).

Forgery, which was soaring in England already at the beginning of the 1860s, gave rise to the following special writings: E. Doble, On the Falsification of Postage Stamps (Falmouth, 1862); Th. Lewes & Edw. L. Pemberton, Forged stamps (Edinburgh, 1862); Thomas Dalston, How to Detect Forged Stamps (1865); and J. M. Stourton, Postage Stamp Forgeries (London, 1865): works which at the time no doubt were a good thing but which in time became superfluous as specialised periodicals focused entirely on forgeries. Really, how useful might the book be that described to this day all the falsifications conveyed into commerce? How soon would it be incomplete, taking into account the agility of the forgers? What else England produced in literature rather belongs to art, and will receive there suitable treatment.

If now we cast a brief backward glance upon England's specialised literature, generally, we must note, with the demise of both of its best periodicals, that regarding its specialised press she is in the worst position of all the countries that pay homage to philately. On the other hand, one cannot deny that the perfection of its albums makes the sale of English translations more and more difficult, and the use of these would diminish greatly if one were to insist on "timely-economic prices". Outstanding merits for English specialised literature were won, in addition to the named authors and publishers, by Edw. L. Pemberton, further by Dr. J. E. Gray, Dr. C. Viner, W. Dudley Atlee, Dr. Boley, Overy Taylor, Rev. R. B. Eareé, J. C. Wilson, C. H. Coster, M. P. de Figueroa, Herbert Camoens [Pseudonym used by Adelaide Lucy Fenton] and many others whose names we meet frequently in English specialised literature.

Let us turn now to a closer examination of French (including Belgian) literature.

French philatelic literature

Admittedly, less profuse than that of England, it is on the whole, more scientific than that of England or of any other nation. To France (and to Belgium, respectively) one must concede the honour, having produced the most solid literature, so seminal that to this day it sustains the entire literature due to its investigations and results, while at an earlier time literature was a mere echo of the same. Yet, the notable creative power has moved from Paris, the central point, and is concentrated in Brussels where the Regent of all French specialised literature is active most recognizably on behalf of the improvement of philately.

Among the specialised periodicals, the merit belongs of right to J. B. Moens' *Le Timbre-Poste (Brussels) which appears regularly to this day, since the 1st January 1863, being not only the oldest and the one that has appeared the longest but also the most significant of all the specialised periodicals in the world. Its fourteen years of publication constitute an imposing huge volume, filled with the most valuable material of philatelic science, and is popular and read widely beyond the frontiers of the French-speaking lands. Additionally, there appears at this time a specialised sheet in French language, the L'Ami des Timbres by Charles Roussin in Paris, now in its third year and characterised by a copious chronicle [of new issues] and a regular supplement of a very complete illustrated catalogue (see below). Le Collectionneur de Timbres Poste by Maury Fils (Paris, 1864-74); Le Timbrophile by P. Mahé (Paris, 1854-71); La Gazette des Timbres by the same (Paris, 1864-76) were for years much read and desired specialised publications which ceased to exist along with others, less significant.

In the matter of French catalogues, the Catalogue de Timbres-Poste (Paris, 1862) by A. Potiquet was the first known although in the year 1861 Laplante's Catalogue (Paris) and J. B. Moens' Manuel du Collectionneur de Timbres Poste (Brussels) had appeared. The last named work appeared this year (1877) under the somewhat changed title Catalogue-Prix-Courant des Timbres Poste in a fifteenth edition, representing the most complete of all existing catalogues and manuals. Its completeness borders on the minute, hence its popularity and circulation everywhere. Among older catalogues, the following are worth mentioning: Valette's Petit Manuel de l'Amateur des T. P. (Paris, 1862); Baillieu's Guide de l'Amateur de Timbres-Poste (Paris, 1863); Moens' Illustrations du Manuel du Collectionneur; and Nicolas' Catalog de l'Amateur de T. P.; among the more recent ones, except the ones previously named: Charles Roussins Catalogue de tous les Timbres (Paris, 1874, 2nd edition '77) which, as that of Moens, paid attention to not only postal stamps but postmarks as well, taking great pains in the matter of accuracy; further, A. Maury's Catalog Complet des Timbres-Poste (Paris 1865, 6th edition 1876) and P. Mahé's Guide-Manuel du Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste (Paris 1863, last edition 1870). As handbooks, without indication of price, J. B. Moens published in Brussels his Timbres Poste Illustres, a work which until today stands unrivalled in its presentation - 45 plates of illustrations, engraved on copper; and in 1866, Oscar Berger-Levrault in Strasbourg, his Catalog methodique which until then represented the most reliable source and today is still a work of much value indeed. In Belgium, furthermore, were published diverse specialised works. I mention the following: Timbres d'Offices Americains by Consul James Lesley (Brussels, 1868); Timbres de Moldavie et de Roumanie by Dr. Magnus (Brussels, 1860); and Les Timbre-Poste Ruraux de Russie by Count S. Kaprowsky (Brussels, 1875). Of significance for serious collectors, furthermore, was the work on watermarks by Dr. Magnus, Essais sur les Filigranes des Timbres Poste (1867) and also - timely because of the activities of counterfeiters - Moens' Falsifications des Timbres-Poste (Brussels, 1862 and also in England) both, however, have become obsolete and useless as a result of the absence of new editions.

Few stamp albums appeared in France but those that did were excellent with few exceptions and are popular and esteemed to this day. Justin Lather's Album Timbres-Poste et Cartes Postales competes with J. B. Moens' Album Timbres-Poste (Brussels) for pre-eminence in the matter of presentation and completeness. Both appeared in a first edition in 1863, Lallier during the first decade produced 14, Moens in the same period 11 editions and by 1876, the 17th. In addition to these two albums which still appear in quarto volume, France brought to the market A. Maury's Petit Album des T. P. (Paris, 1876) and by the same author Album Universel (Paris, 1876), being the only ones worth mentioning. Hence, one had to accept that Holland (v. Rinsum) and Germany furnished translations, among these notably G. Bauschke's Album Timbres-Poste (Leipzig, 1867; 2nd edn. 1869) worthy of mention, and also a verbatim reprint in France, in addition to this translation.

We have nothing to add to our judgment of French literature whose complete tabulation has been reported by the Bulletin of the Societe Franc. de Timbrologie (Paris, 1877, sections 5-8). It is a model literature the study of which is a clear duty of every philatelist, no matter which language he may speak.

One must not fail to mention that by preference the collecting of postal-fiscal stamps is embraced in France, and that, as a stimulus of the same, a special journal has been edited, Le Timbre Fiscal (Moens, Brussels 1874 and still being published). A Monographie des Timbres Fiscaux Mobiles de la France et des Colonies Françaises, compiled by Ph. d. B., appeared in 1875 in the work of P. Mahé, and by the same token the catalogues by Moens and Roussin list with great accuracy all the known fiscal stamps of the world. Finally, J. B. Moens published in 1869 an Album Timbres Telegraphes which is now a part of his great Album Illustre pour Timbres Poste et Telegraphe. Meritorious activity in the literary field of France has been shown prominently under the pseudonym Dr. Magnus (Dr. Med. Legrand in Paris) and Oscar Berger-Levrault in Nancy, further still on the part of Baron A. de Rothschild, E. Régnard, E. de Rives de Seine, Ph. de Ferrari, Mahé, Maury et al., most of whom continue actively in the advancement of domestic literature.

North America

Turning now to the specialised literature of North America whose precise inventory was published by the American Journal of Philately in its fourth year of publication (pages 127 and 172), the situation is characterised by excess. The desire to publish specialised writings has developed into a mania as best evidenced by the publication of some eighty periodicals since 1862 of which more than half were printed during just half a year, many in fact appeared in a single copy only.

As to the better journals one should consider Scott & Company's American Journal of Philately (New York) and J. J. Casey's Coin and Stamp Journal (New York), the former existing since 1868, the latter since 1874. The American Journal of Philately was, one may add, the first specialised publication that offered for a number of years a colourful illustrated chronicle of new issues. Among the remaining periodicals, only those that follow deserve to be mentioned: E. A. Craig's The Postman's Knock (St. John, N. B., 1867-70); The Philadelphia Monthly (Philadelphia, 1870-71); The Stamp Collectors Guide (Meriden, 1870-73); The Stamp Advertiser (1873-73); and Mason's Coin and Stamp Collectors Magazine (Philadelphia, 1867-72).

Catalogues appeared as well in countless quantities but without exception these were simply price lists that are really of no value for our science. For the sole purpose of not seeing this heading quite devoid of contents, we cite the following best-known catalogues of America: F. Trifet, Descriptive Price Catalogue of the Postage Stamps of all Nations (Boston, 1877); Fr. King, The Postage Stamp Collectors Handbook (Boston, 1867); Kline, The Stamp Collectors Manual (Philadelphia, 1862; 3rd ed. 1875); and Scott and Company's Postage Stamp Catalog (New York, 1876, 3rd edition). Since there, too, there are friends of revenue stamp collecting, Trifet in Boston published in 1877 a Catalog of the Revenue Stamps of all Nations which deserves mention as a diligent piece of work.

To be listed among American albums are Appleton's Postage Stamp Album, the first at the time (New York, 1863), and as the best Beifeld's Postage Stamp Album (Chicago, 1876); Scott and Company's Common Sense Postage Stamp Album (New York, 1877) and, by the same, Permanent Postage Stamp Album (1877). The last named firm also launched recently a post card album, The Post-Card Album; it is, in fact, very active in the field of literature, and no doubt deserves applause for its promotion of philately in America.

Among America's philatelists these stand out: J. W. Scott, W. K. Fremann, R. Dinwiddie Jr., Dr. J. A. Petrie, L. W. Durbin, Joseph Casey, Walter Leo Brown, and John K. Tiffany, notably the latter to whom we owe thanks for the precious work The Philatelic Library.

Italy

The specialised literature of Italy was represented until a few years ago only by G. Brecker's Guida di tutti i Francobolli (Florence, 1864). Since the year 1873, however, it has attempted to compensate for the neglect, notably with journals, published with considerable variety. Initially there appeared La Posta Mondiale by P. R. de Torres (Leghorn, 1873) followed by E. Carlo Usigli's Il Raccoglitore (Florence, 1874) which, however, gave limited space only to philately, alongside antiquities, coins, etc. Both had a very short existence. Leopoldo Quatini's L'Etoile d'Italie, a monthly review, included a supplement from March of 1876 under the title L'Ami du Collectionneur Nouvelles faits divers et Annonces pour les Amateurs et Negociants Philatélique from which, however, we have learned little. More viable, on the other hand, are G. J. Morpurgo's Il Timbrofilo (Trieste, since 1876) and Th. di L. Mayer's Corriere dei Francobolli (Trieste, since 1874); similarly, the Guida Illustrata del Timbrofilo by G. Leoni (Bologna) appears now in its second year, offering its contents in both French and Italian.

Albums are represented once only, viz. by E. C. Usigli's Nuovo Album di Francobolli which appeared in November 1875.

In addition to Brecker's, catalogues were brought out by P. R. de Torres with his Catalogo descrittivo di tutti i Franco-Bolli (Leghorn, 1873), further, E. C. Usigli with his Catalogo di Francobolli (Florence, 1872), and by the Deposito Centrale Timbrofilo Italiano with a Catalogo e Guida Generale dei Francobolli (Florence, 1874). Beyond these, Italy produced nothing at all except for a number of usual price lists and an Address Book by H. Tartarini & Co. in Bologna.

Denmark

Denmark has recently come into prominence with the publication of two specialised periodicals. These are the Scandinaviske Frimarketidende by A. Philipsen (Copenhagen, 1876) and the Scandinaviske Frimarke-Journal by Bertini, both of relative value. Their predecessor, the Nordisk Frimaerketidende (Copenhagen) published in 1867 by Carl Lund, lived to see nine numbers. A better price catalogue was published in 1867 by Sophus Apel in Copenhagen, and a dealer and collector directory, Adressebog voor Scandinaviske Frimarke-Sammler (1877) by François Bertini in Copenhagen.

Norway

Of Norway, we are familiar only with J. & A. Fischer's Catalog over alle Bekjendte Postfrimaerker (Christiania,*1877), a work that served as a model for Moschkau's Handbook.

* Translator's note: The former name of Oslo.

Holland

Notably early in Holland, C. v. Rinsum brought about a limited literature. There are his quadrilingual The Permanent Stamp Album (Amsterdam, 1869) and the following three journals: The Continental Philatelic Magazine (1869), The Timbrofilist (1869), and The General Stamp Advertiser (1870) which, however, achieved without exception few numbers only. Except for Blokzeyl's Catalogue of Postage Stamps (Amsterdam, 1873) nothing further has been published in Holland.

Russia

In philatelic literature, Russia and Finland are known only for a few commonplace price-lists and so we turn for now to Spain.

Spain

In 1874, Dr. Thebussem published an especially interesting brochure, Literatura Philatelica en España which nonetheless is lacking in completeness. Thus, Tiffany records the following two specialised papers not considered by Dr. Thebussem: D. B. C. Cortes, El Coleccionista de Sellos published 1871 in four numbers, and Gilabert, El Indicador de los Sellos, published in one number in 1870. El Averiguador, a first-rate publication, came out in Madrid from January 1871 to February 1873, devoting a good part of its columns to philately, but at this present time Spain lacks literary representation.* Its oldest specialised periodical, Revista de Correos (Madrid, 1866) existed barely one year. Though Spain's literature is less outstanding, philatelists there are active in journalism in a number of ways, notably in the field of French philatelic literature. In addition to Dr. Thebussem, Don Francisco Lopez Fabra, Don Eduardo Gilabert, Don Aurelio Vasquez, Don A. Rentero, Don M. P. de Figueroa, and Dr. Diario of Cadiz should be mentioned.

* The Kpankler, a kind of magazine published in 1871, also contained a considerable number of philatelic compositions.

Germany

The philatelic literature of Germany, the review of which we postponed modestly until the end, was in the initial years of collecting of little significance to us, though it must be stated that in its development it surpassed every other literature in science and in excellence, with the exception of France and England. Only in the course of the last decade has it achieved full vigour, and it cannot be denied that at this time it produces much that is good, in part even exemplary, even though in all this profusion many a product of subordinate value must be expected. Foreign countries which earlier acknowledged German literature in rare cases only, or not at all, now pay due attention, discuss and use it in detail and often appreciate many a German work more even than German collectors who, oddly enough, were never satisfied from the beginning - an attitude less and less justified.

Precisely at this point, we hope that an inventory, complete as far as possible and ordered according to the different branches of German literature, will be welcomed, gathered, with the exception of addenda that have become necessary in the mean-time, from the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal, 1876 (Leipzig, L. Senf). We say beforehand that in 1870 already the Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung carried a listing of all German specialised journals; Moschkau's Magazin für Markensammler, 1871, a compilation of the total domestic literature; and the previously mentioned Journal by Senf, a supplement in 1874. The listing given here, compared with the one published 1871 in Moschkau's Magazin, should offer the best demonstration of the huge expansion of our specialised literature in the short time of five years.

Translator's note: The bibliography of German literature on pages 36 to 49 has not been translated.

The number of philatelists who support energetically the specialised press in Germany is considerable. In this respect Germany is virtually unique. We remember from former years W. Th. Clausius, Professor Dr. Weiss, Dr. Joseph, Theodor Israel, G. Wuttig, Baron v. Thümen, while at the present time above all Lord of the Manor A. Treichel, who for years has been an active and much-read collaborator, deserves to be cited among German collector-circles and enjoys a great deal of respect as the first to compile watermarks, his many strictly scientific specialised articles, discovery of the Cordoba-stamps, etc. Furthermore, in philatelic circles names such as the following enjoy resounding estimation as a result of their appreciable contributions: Dr. med. Eyselein, Ludwig Berger, Louis May, W. Enke, H. Hirsch, Th. Haas, F. Birgham, F. Michel, R. F. Albrecht, Instructor E. Huxhagen, Dr. Ehrentheil, Canzleirath Mödinger, R. Mosta, E. P. Schiffmann, Pharmacist G. Kauffmann, Bookseller P. Lietzow, and yet others. The authors of independent works were cited already above.

We may have spent a good deal of time discussing philatelic literature, but as we see in it the healthy foundation on which philately could develop so favourably, and the expansion and further growth in the future no doubt lies in the young science, we considered a special emphasis of the same as an absolute necessity to which we had to do justice for more than one reason.

Philatelists' Societies

A further support of philately is the societies of philatelists formed in the course of the years in the capital cities of all countries, and whose main purpose is the mutual instruction of the members in philately, broadening of philatelic efforts, and the possible eradication of mischief: forgeries and imitations of genuine stamps, the sale of which must be suppressed everywhere.

England

In that regard, England took the lead. The first information about the existence of an association of philatelists we received in November 1865 where in Bridlington, under the name of the Bridlington Fancier Society, a number of collectors of coins, seals, autographs, and postage stamps had gathered. The Society published its own journal which, had the following title: The Magazine and Journal of the British, Continental, and American Collector of Stamps, Coins, Arms, Autographs, and all kinds of Curiosities. Just how long this society existed we could not learn. On the 10th April 1869, the London club, The Philatelic Society London was formed, which to this day counts among the most significant specialised organisations. Its society reports are published to this day in The Stamp Collectors Magazine and The Philatelist. At the head stands as President: Baron Sir Daniel Cooper, as Vice-President: Advocate F. A. Philbrick, and as Secretary Professor de Joannis. Among the members we note Dr. Ch. W. Viner, Victoriano G. de Ysasi, Artillery-Lieutenant Speranza, Dr. F. Smith, Th. F. Erskyne, et al. The meetings of the Society are held at Great George Street.

America

America produced its first association on the 1st May 1866, viz. The Excelsior Stamp Association in St. Johns, New Brunswick, a society which in The Postman's Knock had its own publication. About the directors, membership, etc. nothing could be learned but we do know that on the 1st November 1866, the Society organised a great "Postage Stamp Lottery" which was to be repeated in the following years. On a firmer basis rested the group founded in February 1868, The Philatelic Society, New York, which meets at this time twice a month at the premises of 34 Liberty Street. The American Journal of Philately serves as the organ of the Society. Functioning as President is W. R. Fremann, as Vice-President B. Matthews, and Dr. Petrie as Secretary. Important members are Dr. Morley, Dr. med. Grafton, J. W. Scott, G. P. ten Bröck, Professor Bunger, Baron Münchhausen, etc. The Society has rendered many a service on behalf of philately, offering in 1871 the following prizes: a gold medal for the owner of the most complete album; a silver medal for the second and third largest collections, respectively; further, silver medals for the most appropriately arranged collections of stamps and of envelopes; and for the best editing of a catalogue of all North American stamps. The concept advanced by the New York society, the establishment of an International Philatelic Society, met with no approbation in England.

* Editor's note: This was simply the private firm of E. A. Craig, given this name to make it sound of greater significance than it was.

France

France only followed in December of 1874 at which time the Société Française de Timbrologie was established in Paris, an association which can claim respect on the part of all specialised organisations. In May of 1877, the Société had 66 members of whom 25 were French, the others representing countries from all over the world. It publishes outstanding Bulletins (as of this date, nine in all have come out) which above all include special catalogues of individual countries as well as important information also, normally as part of the very readable reports of the meetings. These reports are also reproduced in several French, English, and Italian specialised publications. The Société also owns a lovely library. For 1877 the President is Baron v. Rothschild, Dr. med. Legrand is the Secretary, and M. Bouchez functions as Editor. Among the members we might name Professors de Ferrari, E. Long and de Rosny, the Baron de Saint Saud, Ph. de Bosredon, Civil Engineer Cossmann, Schmidt de Wilde, et al. German members belonging to the Société are W. Enke, L. Berger, Director H. Hirsch, Dr. Moschkau, A. Treichel, v. Oppenfeld.

Italy

In Italy was founded in 1873, in the month of October, the Club Sociale Timbrofilo di Livorno, which holds its meetings in the Via Maggi N°1, in Leghorn. At the head of the Club are P. R. de Torres and Pini Alberto, the gentlemen who at the same time serve as the editors of the Club's organ, La Posta Mondiale. Whether this Club is still in existence we doubt, and by the same token the Società Timbrofila in Florence and the Club Timbrofilo Mondiale in Trieste seem to have remained projects only.

Spain

In the case of Spain, we know that philatelic associations exist in Madrid and in Seville, but that is known only by way of a seal in the form of a stamp in an oval, wavy frame which shows Hispania with mural crown and legend Sociedad del Timbre, Sevilla, and Madrid, respectively.

Austro-Hungary

Austro-Hungary has gone to much trouble to call to life an association. Despite the well recognized interest in philately which exists there, these efforts have been unproductive till now. In March 1875, upon the impulse of R. Odabassian in Vienna who called for participation in an Austrian society, thirty persons only sent word, and one believed that under the conditions it would be judicious to step back. On the 28th December of the same year, however, the Society of Postage Stamp Friends in Vienna came into existence, meeting with regularity at Schottengasse 1 in the first district, with Eduard Heim as Vice-President. As far as I know, the Society disbanded again in 1876. The First Hungarian Society of Philatelists in Pest, established under the presidency of Siegmund Stein, and the Philatelistika in Brünn (Moravia) presided over by Ignaz Veith have been veiled also in obscurity since then. Only the Literary-Philatelic Society in Agram (Croatia)* formed in 1876 is still in existence, led by the university theologian Oscar Simla.

* Translator's note: Modern Zagreb.

Switzerland

In Switzerland the first society developed only recently as the Berner Postage Stamp Society in Bern but we lack details about it at this time.

Germany

The need for a society of stamp collectors has gained the most favourable reception in Germany, though it must be acknowledged from the beginning that few among these societies were viable. The South German Society of Philatelists, founded in 1869 by the law student W. Faber in Heidelberg, was the first in Germany. Its articles of association contained 12 paragraphs; its organ was the Bazar für Briefmarkensammler. As a branch of this Society one created the Society for the Suppression of Anti-philatelic Elements, also in Heidelberg, which developed an outstanding activity, discovered many forgeries, and brought several falsifiers before the criminal court. The German War* reduced the membership - finally both societies came to an end.

* Translator's note: The Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71.

By that time already, Dr. Alfred Moschkau had made attempts to ascertain whether it might be possible to establish also a "North German Society" but his efforts remained without any success. (Following an appeal in Dresden, one single collector responded.) But in May of 1871, together with Law candidate Alexander Treichel and Dr. med. Arldt, he renewed his appeal in the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung which he edited, which lead on the 10th May to the establishment of a Society of German Philatelists with its seat in Dresden. Initially, its own organ was the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, later Moschkau's Magazin, finally one created in Der Philatelist an independent publication which could not, however, prosper without the support of the public. Only for its members, did the Society publish in four instalments the Vertraulichen Mitteilungen the contents of which were of interest and of use, and notably protected the members against pecuniary losses. In the last years of its existence, the Society made use of the Hamburger Briefmarken-Anzeiger for its announcements. As long as the Society existed, the Presidency was held first by Dr. A. Moschkau, then by Law candidate A. Treichel. In its period of greatest vigour the Society had 26 members, among these the more prominent collectors of Germany, such as for example, G. Gerdeisen, pharmacist von Hymen, Barrister Lindenberg, member of the mining board G. Pilz, Chamberlain Baron v. Schütz-Pflummern, Privy Counsellor of War Winkler, pharmacist Vigener, editor Louis May etc., collectors all of whom, without exception, are true followers of philately to this day. Following the Society of German Philatelists, a Philatelists' Club came into existence in Hamburg in the year 1871. This Club was established on the 12th November of the same year, and is fairly abundant in members and honorary members. The Club held its meetings weekly at 15 Pelzer street, uses as its organ the Hamburger Briefmarken-Anzeiger and owns, as property of the organisation, a beautiful photo album with pictures of all its members. Bandleader Hönecke dedicated to the Club his waltz The Philatelists. The Club is not inactive, announcing frequently well-attended meetings where lectures deal with philately. The President, Louis May, who at the time created in Hamburg a "Philatelic Journal Reading-Circle" is most active in advancing the development of the Society. On the 24th November 1876, the club celebrated the anniversary of the fifth year of its existence. One must not fail to mention at this point that the only philatelic congress worth mentioning, at Lubeck in July of 1872, was the work of the Hamburg Club. Regarding the philatelists' clubs at Bremerhafen, Kiel, Lübeck, and Schwelm, we lack precise information but mention that as their organ, all of them made use of the Hamburger Briefmarken-Anzeiger. The philatelic club Union in Brunswick, was founded in 1876 by Ludwig Berger who also served the Club as its President. Whether the last-named clubs still exist in their totality is questionable. The Philatelisten-Verein at Leipzig, which on the 19th February 1876 held its first meeting in the Restaurant Gehrike, Reichs street, enjoyed active participation initially only. The founder of the same, merchant Oswald Schroeder, was at the head of the Society which ended its existence after just one year. As its organ, the Leipzig society made use of Senf's Journal. As a matter of fact, at this time the following societies exist in Germany in addition to the Hamburger Club:

Verein Schlesischer Briefmarkensammler

Founded on the 1st April 1876, with its seat in Breslau, meeting twice monthly at 79 Ohlauer street and as the organ of the Society Senf's Briefmarken-Journal. It is guided in an admirable manner by railway director Kletke as President and J. Schlesinger as Secretary.

Verein für Briefmarkenkunde in Berlin

Constituted on the 1st January 1871, its gathering place at 2 Hausvoigtei Platz. The direction of the same is in the hands of language teacher G. Fouré as Chairman, postal secretary Besler as Secretary, and bookseller P. Lietzow as treasurer.

Philatelistenverein

Founded at Cöthen on the 17th February 1877, with a branch society Allgemeiner Deutscher Postmarken-Bösen-Verein since the 11th August 1877.

Verein Strassburger Briefmarken-Sammler

Since November 1877.

Internationale Philatelisten-Verein

It came into existence at Dresden, along with its respective organ, Union on the 1st January 1877. The President is editor A. Nieske of Dresden, the Secretaries are Dr. Schneider in Yeddo and H. Smith in London. We know nothing authentic about the number of members.

Let us hope that the societies now flourishing may continue in their activities so beneficial for our science, and that their usefulness may be recognised even more in the future.

Stamps as Merchandise

If we regard postage stamps as merchandise, as articles of exchange, we are compelled to admit that we ourselves could not guess that they would ever become so significant an article in business. If, however, we open any one of the many address books, and study the number of the stamp dealerships spread all over the Earth, we do face the fact that in this specific branch a business must be allowed for. Because it is a fact that during the last decade, corresponding to the demand, stamp dealerships have been created everywhere. On the Continent there is hardly a small town that does not have at least one place where “stamps for collections” are on sale, and thus the great demand for stamps explains itself.

From the beginning the chief business in stamps was concentrated in Paris, Brussels, London, New York, Hamburg, and Leipzig, cities which until now dominate. They are the seat not only of the most widely-read specialised publications but also of the most eminent commercial houses which frequently limit their activities to the sale and purchase of stamps, some partially however, also conduct other business, such as books and antiques. Great stamp dealerships, for instance, are among others J. B. Moens in Brussels and Maury in Paris whose stock represents no doubt enormous value. Significant as well are the firms of Stafford Smith & Co. in Brighton, appointed “Court postage stamp dealers” by the Prince of Orange. Further, J. W. Scott & Co. in New York; Julius Goldner in Hamburg and Louis Senf in Leipzig compete with the names above in the matter of turnover and inventory. Maury shows on the envelope of his price list a picture of his business premises, no less imposing than the business accommodations of the firm J. W. Scott & Co. in New York which were shown pictorially in the American Journal of Philately in 1876. Worth seeing as well are the great storage facilities at Senf’s stores in Leipzig which impress many a visitor with wonder.

The trade in postage stamps also gave rise to “stamp bourses” and it is said that the business realised in this fashion - notably earlier in Paris, with its seat at the Terrasse de Feuillants and later at the Palais Royal - was of fairly considerable importance. The Paris Bourse is now closed down, and only of the one that existed in Hamburg do we receive regular reports, while additionally in German lands there were bourses in Bremen, Lübeck, Coethen, Mannheim, Gablonz, Kaufbeuren, Leipzig, etc. that functioned or take pride in continuing still. Regular bourse and market reports are circulated in the Hamburger Briefmarken-Anzeiger, the Dresden Union, and the Trieste Corriere du Francobolli, the latter in three languages. A Börsenblatt für den Deutschen Briefmarkenhandel appeared for a short time only in Kaufbeuren, likewise Theodor Müllers Regelmässiger Wochen- und Marktbericht der Hamburger, Lübecker und Bremer Briefmarkenbörse, of which four numbers only have come to our attention.

There was an idea, to centralise the stamp wholesale commerce in England by means of a stock venture company, for which purpose was to have been created in London, in 1864, The London, Provincial, Colonial and Continental Stamp Company with the respected name of Dr. C. W. Viner at the head, but this remained an idea only; by the same token, the project that surfaced in Hamburg in 1874 of a Stamp Stock Company also came to nothing. On the other hand, stamp lotteries (as e.g., 1867 in St. Johns, New Brunswick, and elsewhere) and stamp auctions have been more viable and still take place annually in London (where the famous collection of W. Th. Claudius came under the hammer) and in New York where they are much frequented. Let us add here that we remember merchants’ congresses at Wolfenbüttel in 1873 and ‘74, and in Berlin in 1877, where common interests were brought up for discussion but whose essential results have remained unknown to us.

The Forgery Industry

This might well be the place to return once again to falsifications, their production, and corresponding commerce. The chief seats of the industry formerly were Hamburg and Nuremberg, at this time they are, rather, Boston, Liverpool, Paris, Brussels, and Dresden, and their reach and business have become so significant that neither warnings nor punishment are of use, and there is almost no collection in which such fabrications are not found. Since of course with these counterfeit stamps there is more profit than with originals which are frequently difficult to acquire, there are unscrupulous dealers who benefit, making the stamp business a confidence trick, and damage philately which thus loses prestige and a good number of friends and fanciers as well. In the history of postage stamps we have already shed light on the state of forgery, here the following may be noted additionally. The best fakes are furnished at this time by Liverpool and Paris. Liverpool, Persia, Shanghai, and Brazil and elsewhere have produced the finest, and their fabrications have inundated the market, with stamps by the thousands sheltered in albums, distinguishable from the originals by the fact that the forgeries are even better. Paris favours us with doubly dangerous goods, with deceptively fabricated imitations where even the watermark is not missing. We remember the old Tuscany stamps which leave little to be desired and come into the commerce neatly cancelled. That these excellent imitations produced in factories in Dresden, Hamburg, and elsewhere are merely pictures is well known, though one's attention must be directed increasingly toward foreign places. At the beginning of this year, an entire company of falsifiers in Philadelphia stood before a court of law and had to atone for their criminal activities; also in Berlin in 1873 and 1877, in Jassy (Romania) 1874, and in Vienna 1876 falsifiers were punished severely. One was able to caution the public, relatively, in the matter of common fakes which experts could often note at a first glance, likewise chemical falsifications (changes in the colour) could often be determined immediately. But since forgers do not hesitate to include watermarks in their fabrications we reach a point at which the matter deserves more concern than it receives in reality. From where, then, is confidence to come? The only protection in the matter of escaping financial losses is to purchase exclusively at recognised and well-reputed firms who might unknowingly have sold forgeries - always a possibility under prevailing circumstances - and who will repurchase or exchange without hesitation and voluntarily. Dealer and expert are not always in the same person, and therefore in the case of the purchase of good fakes it is possible that both purchase and sale take place involuntarily.

The writer who during several years laboured to examine stamps, and annually completed on the average 500 such consignments for expertisation, knows only too well collectors of long standing who let themselves be deceived. One intentionally built collection of fakes exhibits 2000 varieties, and is not even complete. The collector should therefore welcome the establishment of public expertising places even though he knows from experience that he cannot count on them for the final extinction of this cancerous damage. Postal Secretary (retired) Herrmann in Berlin, Ludwig Berger in Brunswick, Louis May in Dresden, and many others, have already declared themselves willing to scrutinise stamps sent for examination. Surely, many will join them in the fight against a profoundly damaging evil.*

* The author closed his stamp expertisation activity, as is well known, as his many-sided profession no longer allows him the time for that task.

Great Stamp Collectors and Collections

Who, then, really collects stamps? That is a question often answered with an ironic smile on their faces by opponents of this matter: Children collect stamps! And, in fact, these good people are not wrong. Just as children arrange herbariums, beetles, butterflies, rocks, pictures, and coins – collectible objects of as much interest to adults who enjoy such collections – so innumerable children like to accumulate stamps. But not children alone! As early as in 1876 in Senf's Briefmarken-Journal, I undertook the reply to the question above on the basis of my voluminous private correspondence, and was able to show adherents of philately from Princes on down, all the way to the labourer; from the general director of the Posts to the Post Office assistant, military officers of high rank on land and on the sea, representatives of universities to the rural teacher, scientists at all university faculties, notably in theology, to the Franciscan monk, officials at courts, in mining, customs, monasteries, nobility, merchants and booksellers, labour and industry - in short, philately won followers in every station and among those of every age! Often a father collects for, often with the son, and often both, as competitors. And the world of the ladies also embraced philately, and they frequently collect with sound understanding. The collections of Princess Auersperg, of Countess Thun, and others belong among the most beautiful and largest! It must be interesting to learn that notably in princely circles philately enjoys homage. That the Prince of Orange had his own Court Postage Stamp Merchant has been reported already; but the Emperor of Austria and King of Italy are said to be owners of beautiful collections, too. Pope Pius IX collected with his chancellor Antonelli also, and the Union (Dresden) has informed us of the collection belonging to the latter, speaking of veritable phenomena. That the King of Portugal collects with predilection is well known, and the many colonial issues of Portugal are to be regarded as a consequence of this special interest. The late Duchess Sophie of Bavaria and the Princess Napoleon were owners of precious albums, likewise Princess Auersperg. The grandson of the German emperor, Prince Wilhelm of Prussia, may well be in possession of one of the most remarkable collections, since he became a philatelist years ago and still collects eagerly. The writer was made happy at the time by Prince Wilhelm when he sent the Prince the first edition of the present work, the Prince responding with a gracious communication - an honour conferred as well upon the publisher of the Wiener Briefmarken-Zeitung, S. Friedl, this year for philatelic works transmitted. Finally, Prince Galitzin has taken great interest in the completion of his collection, and to this day shows great interest in it.

Great Collections

There are many significant collections, on the other hand truly complete ones in which no official postage stamp is missing, are few. There are stamps preserved in single copies only and accessible to a select few alone. Included there are the 27 para of Moldavia, one shilling envelope of Mauritius, the first issue of British Guiana, etc., stamps that few collectors only, can celebrate having seen. A really complete collection is owned, for instance, in Germany by Post Secretary (retired) Herrmann in Berlin; on the other hand, significant collections of the first rank by G. Hartig in Blasewitz near Dresden, with 10,000 copies and kept in a narrow, high bookcase in cartons that can be inserted; and by Chancellery Counsellor Möding in Berlin, kept impressively envelopes, cards, and postal wrappers in fifty portfolios; furthermore by Lord of the Manor A. Treichel in Hochpaleschken; hotel owner Nelböck in Salzburg; opera singer Perotti in Pest; bookseller P. Lietzow in Berlin whose holdings occupy the space of six large albums; language teacher Fouré in Berlin; director H. Hirsch in Berlin. Also by chief magistrate Goldfuss in Creutzburg and W. Fickert in Berlin. Of former great collections we may mention the ones by Professor Dr. Volpi in Munich, professor Dr. Weiss in Lemberg, Dr. Joseph in Breslau; member of the provincial legislative body Th. Israel in Eibau; W. Th. Clausius in Frankfurt-am-Main; Professor Eltz in Hannover; and the collection belonging to the writer which, as is known, served as the basis for Schaubek's excellent album and catalogue. At the gathering of the Geographical Society in Dresden, it was much praised during the discussions, followed in 1870 by a public exhibition in Dresden organised by field post officials. As informed already by the Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung 1870/71, this collection was made available upon their request to his majesty the recently deceased King Johann, the equally late Princess Sophie, Duchess of Bavaria, and his majesty King Albert, at the time Crown Prince.

Of great collections outside of Germany we shall mention only the ones of Baron Arthur von Rothschild, Dr. Legrand, Ph. de Ferrari, law student Schmidt de Wilde, Mr de Bosredon, all of them in Paris; that of Oscar Berger-Levrault in Nancy which in completeness probably has no equal, of Baron Cooper, Professor de Joannis, Dr. John Edward Gray, Director of the British Museum, et al., in London, Edw. L. Pemberton in Southampton, etc.

Finally, we find great collections in the possession of government bodies, chiefly in postal museums, in several museums, archives, etc., since even there the value of stamp collections finds undeniable acceptance.

Best known and most famous is the collection housed in the Berlin Postmuseum of the General Post Office which in April of 1876 amounted to some 4,500 pieces. It is mounted on 134 carton sheets and in 113 portfolios. At the Vienna World Exposition where it was displayed, it became the object of general attention, and at the German Parliament where its members were repeatedly given an opportunity to view it, the collection created no less an interest. The creation of this collection is one of the merits of the German General Postmaster Dr. H. Stephan who initiated exchange communications with postal authorities of all countries for the purpose of keeping the collection up to date. The stamp collection at the Hotel des Monnaies, the state mint in Quai Conti, Paris, also merits detailed discussion. In a side case, next to the coin collection, the mounted collection is found in a dozen large glass frames hanging from the walls, notably the stamps, while the envelope and postal card collection is displayed in entire, uncut specimens in a large glass container standing in the centre of the display cabinet. The stamp collection boasts thousands of pieces but is by no means as complete as the one at the Berlin postal museum. The archives of the General Post Office in London and in St. Petersburg, and the one of the state railway of Baden at Karlsruhe have spent major sums for the acquisition of beautiful collections. For the municipal museum in Brunswick, its curator, teacher Huxhagen, established a collection; A. Treichel donated to the Märkischen Museum* at Berlin a collection of all Prussian and North German postage stamps; and the Royal Institute of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg boasts among its valuable treasures the ownership of a balloon post letter from the siege of Metz.

* Translator's note: i.e., that of the German province of Brandenburg.

Postage Stamp Exhibitions

Stamps - these tiny and yet so important carriers of culture - have been regularly objects for world exhibitions, mirroring not only the art the engraver but the taste of the respective country just as much. Already in London, in 1862, they were held, also in Paris in 1867. We possess more detailed reports regarding the stamps exhibited in Vienna, in 1873, and in Philadelphia, in 1876. In Vienna, in reference to the philatelic branch of the collection of the General Post Office Department, the material was the crowning feature, and imperial postal inspector Adrian in Coblenz had to acknowledge openly that the greatest attraction for the visitors to the postal exhibition was the stamp collection belonging to the Department of the Imperial German General Post Office. In addition, Germany also exhibited in complete panels the stamps of that period, German essays, essays of the North German Confederation, the stamps for Alsace-Lorraine, fiscal stamps, etc. Bavaria was represented by a collection of the totality of its postage stamps; similarly Württemberg, Austria, Russia, Italy, Belgium, Holland, etc. Portugal had sent even the original plates of a previous issue. The American Banknote Company offered the most brilliant from its studios, the most beautiful stamps of the United States, Sandwich Islands, Newfoundland. As a curiosity there was a table the surface of which, covered by glass, represented a combination of stamps in a most tasteful grouping. In Philadelphia in 1876, the stamps were displayed less comprehensively. A choice tableau of the Banknote Company constituted the main element, further, J. W. Scott & Co. had a tableau of older New Granada and Mexico; Enschede & Son in Harlem an album with the stamps of Holland and its colonies; and the English General Postal Administration, their album in which England and her colonies, complete, were displayed. Stamp exhibitions were held notably also in Dresden, Munich, Vienna, and Berlin; in Dresden and in Munich during the 1870-71 war. The writer had exhibited his collection for the benefit of fieldpost official, G. Gerdeisen on behalf of the wounded in Munich. About the first exhibition the Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung (1870 N°3) printed a detailed report. The album on display contained some 6,000 stamps and was complete except for seven pieces. Along with the album of the owner, his philatelic library, books, magazines, musical literature, photographs, and Sir Rowland Hill's portrait were displayed. In the year 1873, S. F. Friedmann exhibited in Vienna an extremely valuable collection whose worth exceeded 25,000 francs, and in that same year P. Lietzow in Berlin exhibited his significant collection for the benefit of Russian wounded. This last-named collection enjoyed a special frequency. And we are mindful still of the Hungarian post-office box and map exposition at Nyiregházán in the spring of 1877, at which the firm of L. Senf in Leipzig showed its complete collection of philatelic publications, meriting the distinction of the judge's most favourable recommendation.*

- * L. Senf at the educational aids exhibition in Dresden, 1877, showed a superb display of stamps and of several philatelic articles it had published; also O. Petritz in Chemnitz had mounted a tableau earlier at a trade and industry show at Dresden.

It is apparent that such public exhibitions of stamps and of specialised literature are meaningful for philately, and it is necessary to stress that the actions of the German Post-master General Dr. Stephan with the acquisition of a collection, exhibition of the same in Vienna and permanently at the Berlin Post-Museum and displays at the German Parliament, have changed the mood about collecting very much in its favour, notably in Germany. Philately in Germany increasingly enjoys the sympathy of all circles, and will have to be esteemed more, as in France, England, Belgium, etc., also, to be sure, for its scientific value.

Stamps in art, music, poetry, and industry

Philately became a commodity, however, not merely for merchants, for collectors a pleasure; in art, also in music and in poetry, even in industry it found acceptance and utilisation. Photography has provided us with a good number of artistically finished pages representing postage stamps, as for example G. B. Brewerton in New York with visiting cards showing all the revenue and postage stamps of America; J. R. Grant & Co. in Dawlish, a representation of old California stamps; Moens in Brussels, a visiting card with reproductions of 108 North American private stamps; Torbechet, Allain & Co. in Paris, such a card with all North American postage stamps and the rarest stamps of Europe (Paris, about ten different numbers); and Moschkau's studio in Nossen released a "philatelic souvenir" consisting of six sheets representing balloon letters, pigeon post dispatches of 1870-71, proofs of North Germany, a grouping of postal cards, covers, and the best known specialised periodicals and their editors and collaborators. Under the name of Markotypie, a Parisian artist introduced the production of garlands, crowns, flower baskets, and other such trifles made with stamps (Fleurs timbrophiliques), attaining much popularity. Using scissors alone he knew how to fabricate by means of stamp segments and a good selection of colours, the most wonderful mosaics; in fact, he taught his art in England where it found much approval. In the same way, the table surface at the Vienna World Exhibition mentioned above was prepared in the same way.

In music, stamps have a good sound. Close to a dozen composers have rendered their applause and thus contributed to their popularity. Stamp polkas were composed in Germany by Doppler (1863), J. V. Hamm (1863), Hartleb (1874), and Ad. Müller (Vienna 1877); and Hamm's is so popular that to this day it is heard on barrel organs in Hamburg. V. Hönecke dedicated the stamp waltz The Philatelists to the Philatelists' Club, and a Correspondence Cards Medley created in 1874 by Fr. Zickoff is distinguished not merely by its melodious sound but by its successful title illustration: Amour, guiding a one-horse vehicle, leads an elegant pair of lovers across the space of a German postal card. The polkas, as well, show covers decorated with bright stamps, and Mailer's displays the portrait of S. Friedl. In the case of the latter, it is interesting to emphasize that both the composer and the publisher are very active philatelists. France is represented twice, with the Timbre-Poste-Polka by Emil Périer (Paris, 1864) and the Timbre-Poste-Polka-Mazurka by Gautier de Valhrey (1865). From America we know of two compositions only, the Stamp Galop by Oliver Dithon (Boston) and The American Stamp Polka by Maria Sequin (New York), the latter no doubt a passionate woman philatelist. Finally, we record Arthur O'Leary's Stamp Galop (London, 1863) which gives proof that in England one knew how to extract a "harmonic side" from philately in addition to the instructive, entertaining, and money-producing factors.

Philately has inspired poets in all languages to write poetry. Italian and English periodicals, in particular, frequently offer such. We have been especially pleased by Il Mio Album by L. Vindrola in the Guida Illustr. dei Timbrofilo (Trieste, 1877); Who Invented the Postage Stamp? in The Stamp Collector's Magazine 1868 (London); The Stamp Collector; Nelly's Collection; The Plaut [sic] of the Postage Stamp and Ye Connell in the Amerikan Journal of Philately (1869) and Timbromania in the Stamp Collectors Miscellany (1869). The fact that philately was glorified poetically in Germany is evident and goes without saying. The magazine edited by Zschiesche & Köder, Bauschke's Briefmarkensammler (in it, the strongly humoristic Philatelists' Hostel, Jamben), Faber's Bazar, Moschkau's Magazin, the Hamburg Anzeiger and others have repeatedly reprinted poems which fit admirably in these specialised periodicals.

Here, we cannot refrain from sharing two samples of German philatelic poetry:

Translator's note: Although I have translated the poems, they tend to lose their point in English and should be read in their original German.

My Franco-Stamp-Album

by W. Nöldecke

You little pictures, wondrous amulets,
Lead like a passport from Rhine to the Belt,
Through land and seas, through the chain of the Andes,
From the South pole to the tent of the Samoyeds,
What head and heart of man called up,
The striving of commerce, the complaint of love!

I collect you for the empty spaces of this book,
Filling them up with the industry of the bee,
And when I can place the new along with the old,
And order, inspecting, according to imprint and time,
I would not know what equals this delight,
I am a ruler in a self-created realm!

It is not honey that I thus gather,
When I collect, order, and sort over;
It is, though, wax for many a friendly light,
That shines bright on a cheerless winter day.

(Z. & K. Magazin, 1865)

One man's meat is another man's poison!*

by A. v. d. L.*

What makes you smile, that I am a philatelist?
That always in my leisure hours,
You have found me sitting with my stamp album,
That my album is valued and dear to me?

What makes you smile, that from early in the morning,
Not rarely until the hour of midnight,
I flee from the circle of friends, from the noise of the world,
In order to submerge myself in the science of stamps?

I do not smile at that which your spirit has prescribed for you, to satisfy it;
I am not angry that it could be your pleasure,
To smile about me, knowing how I am charmed.

But this much let me tell you, truly meant,
That I am happier by far with my album
Than you, playing billiards, cards, or dice games.
“One man's meat is another man's poison”, dear friend!

(Moschkau's Magazin)

Translator's notes: * an old. German proverb.

 A. v. d. L[ubota] A pseudonym used by Moschkau.

In novels, short stories, and elsewhere philately has been used often, as for example in Thekla von Gumpert's *Töchteralbum [Album for Daughters] which offered in its 11th volume a tale, Die Freimarken by Louise Höcker. In Bauschke's *Briefmarkensammler (1866), a modern robber story by John Retcliff IV has been reprinted with the title Marko Timbrosetti. The same journal also brought a very charmingly written sketch by G. A. Brandt Jr. of Saarbrücken, Adventures of a Postage Stamp, further, by Yo [A. Treichel] the European Stamp Dream and the humorous sketch Adventures of a Philatelist at the Leipzig Carnival (1868). In the Hamburger Briefmarken-Anzeiger there appeared the novel Leontine's Stamp Album, in the Wiener Illustr. Briefmarken-Zeitung, Die Briefmarke, an autobiography, and so forth.

As far as we know, industry created initially a packet tobacco by the name of North German Postmark Crunch, decorated with a large stamp, followed later by an Imperial Postage Stamp Crunch, followed by decorative Jewellery executed in enamel with stamps of all countries for cuff-links and for brooches; also small boxes for the storage of stamps made of metal with impressed English stamp; liquors with illustrations of stamps on the label; stamp games for youngsters, such as stamp dominoes, stamp bourses, etc. Then there are wrappers for chocolates, candies, and so forth, decorated with stamps of all colours. Also in fashion: In England, the ladies wore ribbons with stamps printed upon them on their hats, and at the Carnivals in Paris, London, Florence, Vienna, Hamburg, Löbau, and in Kroll's store in Berlin and elsewhere, one saw suits made of "stamps" which in Hamburg, for instance, found much approval. On the occasion of the Genoa carnival of 1870 the city had a special carnival post with stamps which were collected for a long time with their braided hair and three-cornered-hat heads.

Of the huge quantity of humorous philatelic compositions, short anecdotes, legends, puzzles, and the like, we can enumerate few only and refer, however, those who are interested to specialised literature for more precise study, as in it this kind of material is found en masse.

Funny in any case is the announcement taken from the Illustrated London News of 1850, informing that a father would confine his daughter in a convent if she could not procure for him a million cancelled postage stamps by the 30th April of the same year, and how, with the news having reached the public, people made an effort everywhere to keep the girl out of the convent cell. Boxes, packages, bundles in every form arrived in such quantities that they were forced to request a stop to the shipments of stamps, the girl's freedom having been secured a long time ago. Funny, too, is a notice in the newspaper Esztergomi Ujsag requesting the collecting of old stamps because in China one could purchase a child for 1,000 stamps, which could then be educated as a Christian person. Lastly let us remember a nice puzzle the solution to which should hardly be difficult for our honoured readers:

Though it bear coats of arms, shield, and crown,
It can be purchased by every child of this earth,
The one using it must first lick it.

This puzzle will tease you to your heart's content.

p.XXXI

Attempt at a catalogue of the philatelic periodical literature of the whole world from 1863-1896.

Dr Jur. Rommel

In accordance with the programme I set out in Die Philatelistische Litteratur N°5, p.16, I now present an arrangement of the periodicals of the Spanish Language group. On my own I came up against insuperable obstacles, which I could not overcome by direct application to Spanish philatelists since, even with postage paid, they either did not answer at all or were themselves very poorly informed.

Hence, I take this opportunity to ask the readership of Die Philatelistische Litteratur for help, and hope that everyone who is in a position to supply information will not withhold it but will give me their energetic support in the interests of all.

Of the major periodicals appearing in Madrid, I am not particularly interested in Revista de Correos, El Averiguador and La España Postal, since they are not devoted either to collecting as a whole nor to philately in particular. They simply publish philatelic adverts and articles now and again, like the 60-year-old ladies' fashion magazine, Bazar and many current daily papers.

According to Suppantchitsch's data in Postwertzeichenkunde, July 1893, Volume 4, N°7, p.104, the Revista de Correos began to appear in November 1866 and published philatelic articles in the issues of XII 67; V 68; XI 69, 1; III-VI 70; II; V; VII-IX 71; II-IV; VII; X-XII 72; I-IV; VI; VIII-XII 73; I; VI 74; II; VII 75; I; VII; VIII 76; etc. To which I can add N°s. 209-212 and 214 of 1883, which is marked as Volume 13 (!)

Translator's note: The list that follows gives details of the various Spanish periodicals, for which, reference should be made to the original.

Literature.

Postcard Verses is the title of a prettily produced little book put out by the firm of W. Fiedler, antiquarian of Zittau. It contains hundreds of verses for picture postcards, which can be adapted with little difficulty to every occasion, Since poetic greetings are very popular with our collectors circle, there is no doubt that the little book will meet with the approval of all collectors. Price 50 pfennigs.

Illustrated Postcards have been received from the following firms:

Otto Schäfer & Scheibe, Berlin 12; Excellent postcards (chromolithographs), artistic pictures of Aachen, Cleve, Crefeld, Drachenfels, München–Gladbach, Hornef, Lorelei, Neustadt a. H., Niederwald-Denkmal, Rolandseck.

Heinrich Fuhr, Berlin; Collection of aluminium postcards, very well produced but not likely to be everyone's taste as landscapes are less well suited than genre pictures to this new method of production.

H. Schick, Freiburg; 4 well-produced postcards in watercolour style (sepia) of Freiburg, Feldsee, Feldberg and Belchen. 2 views of Freiburg in 1589, lithographs, 1 card with a view of Freiburg and the arms of the various student societies there.

F. G. Walther, 13 Bahuhofstr., Leipzig; This picture postcard was issued in connection with the visit of the Moravian Brethren to Leipzig, with the motto "German Michael* has awakened".

* Translator's note: Michael was the personification of the German common man.

Ludwig Schaller, Stuttgart; 10 different cycling postcards in platinotypes, drawn from life. These cards should find wide popularity in cycling circles, especially as the production is outstanding.

Josef Selling, Munich; 12 humorous musical postcards of Richard Wagner, in autographic printing. The pictures are amusing. However it would have been better to replace this old-fashioned though very cheap method of printing by something newer, and attention should have been paid to getting a uniform format. Series 4, that was sent to us, was on 4 different sorts of pasteboard, and this also could have been better.

Philatelic literature at the German Stamp Exhibitions, Munich 1924 and Carlsbad 1924.

For the first time at German exhibitions, literature was not only given adequate space, but also received special attention from the Jury, which carried out its difficult task with all due care, as Professor Stenger said when awarding the prizes.

The importance of the specialist literature, whether journals or monographs, cannot be stressed too often. Dealers usually place little value on the literature outside handbooks, catalogues and price lists, though the literature benefits them by increasing demand for the pieces it describes. Practically always, it is only the collector and naturally mainly the researcher and specialist, who understands the importance and necessity of literature. The intelligent collector, particularly if he lacks great resources for collecting, obtains the works relevant to himself and makes good use of them. Today he is kept informed of all new publications. All the specialist papers agree that this is a valuable service from our society, the steady growth in whose membership has proved how right were the few who prophesied a bright future for it. Majority means madness, says Schiller, since intelligence is only found in the few. We will take this opportunity to thank the few who believed in us from the start, and the few found worthy of a prize by the Jury will be mentioned below along with their work.

The league of German Philatelic Societies in Czechoslovakia held its 5th meeting in Carlsbad from the 15th – 17th August. This was combined with an auction and a stamp market, along with a ten day exhibition of stamps. It is again very pleasant to be able to say that literature made a very strong showing here as at Munich, in relation to the other exhibits, so helping in its own promotion. This appearance in provincial circles is especially welcome, as they lack the permanent resources of the philatelic metropolises, and literature thus becomes all the more desirable as an aid. As far as possible this Society will neglect no opportunity in giving its support wherever necessary. Of course, it will always be more difficult to display philatelic literature than stamps. So few works are published that a definite value can be allotted only in the rarest of cases, and the result is often that items of literature are drastically under-rewarded. Moreover, exhibition classes are not broken down enough: thus every exhibitor is not always successful.

Awards were made as follows to the literature shown at Carlsbad.

Silver Medals

Rudolf Friedl, Vienna, for photographic plates on Sicily

The publishers of the above magazine have contacted one of our members with a request to write articles in return for an honorarium, which request was fulfilled. However in spite of several reminders the honorarium has not appeared, and all we have managed to do is get into our possession a manuscript that had been outstanding for three months.

We think it is our duty to make a particular example of this case, since when a magazine that claims to serve the interests of philately employs business tactics like these, it deserves not only correction, but even strong opposition from the rest of the specialist press, since it claims to be helping philatelists. We accept that the philatelic press like the rest of commerce has had to survive a severe crisis, but just as every publisher collects money from those who place adverts, so they should play fair by their contributors, always assuming that the publisher is putting out a proper magazine and not just a flysheet. Such papers cause both collectors and dealers to withdraw support from reputable magazines, and thus harm only themselves. In the interests of a sound specialist press we shall bring similar cases to the attention of collectors whenever they come our way.

Sieger Prize for philatelic literature.

Recently Director H. E. Sieger provided the Sieger Prize for philatelic literature for competition for the third time. The prize committee consisted of Carl Beck, Privy Councillor Dr. Kalckhoff, Privy Councillor E. Pauli, Dr. P. Pirl and F. W. Thalmann. They decided that over the last year the most worthy candidate was Zumstein's Special Catalogue and Handbook on the Stamps of the Swiss Confederation, and gave it the award.

Since Mirabaud's work went out of print a while ago, a new edition would be very desirable, and the firm of Zumstein would be the best to do this.

We offer the Berne firm of Zumstein & Co. our heartiest congratulations on this well-deserved honour.

Marvels of philatelic literature. (Continuation)

Carl Beck

The choice of material in issue 3 (1924) gained great applause from the circle of our members and readers.

Obviously the friends of philatelic literature will value philatelic literature highly, but many libraries still have gaps, and allowing for present economic conditions, it can only be welcome when critics point out which literary products should be bought to complete a library. It is well known in publishing circles that review copies of new works will be accompanied by a “laundry list”, and many journals do not take either the time or the trouble to do their own criticism of the book concerned. Finally there is also the case where the necessary specialist knowledge is lacking, so that the firm’s own review comes in very handy. It is hardly surprising that this will be mainly full of praise, since it is not meant just to gratify the publishers but to help make their living. On the other hand however, opinions do not always depend on the publisher’s review and thus surprises of the less pleasant sort are not at all rare. Thus, in line with our stated purposes, we think we must act in the interest of our members by giving further reviews of books put on the market, all the more so as we feel qualified to give proper reviews.

In connection with the Mirabaud-Reuterskiöld work we promised to cover the same material more extensively in a book by Zumstein, entitled Special Catalogue and Handbook on the Stamps of the Swiss Confederation. This is already in its third edition, which would not be possible unless the work had its value; this will naturally be considerably increased by the new edition, and few other literary creations are on a level with it.

It is bound in full cloth, 500 octavo pages, art paper, new textual material, a portfolio of 14 art plates printed in full colour, 1,300 illustrations – even this quick survey will indicate the value of the contents. No-one should have any doubt on this score. The arrangement of the material is exemplary: all of the items dealt with are appropriately placed, and what is especially important there is nothing, absolutely nothing, missing that is connected with the Swiss Post office. The price of 15 francs is also reasonable.

The material as a whole is divided into five groups, namely 1) general survey of the data, covering 280 pages, 2) specimen printing, trials; 3) entires on 70 pages; 4) private, telegraph, railways, soldiers’ stamps and hotel posts, and 5) cancellations on 67 pages. As a handbook it obviously describes all varieties fully in terms of colour, printing and the like, with excellent illustrations where necessary. Individual items are obviously arranged by date, and for thoroughness, they show the sale numbers for the Pro Juventute stamps, the records of the private, semi-official and official air mails from 1909. Pictures of the stamps and cancellations are also given, and finally we are given the issues from the War Economy Office, the League of Nations, the International Labour Office and even postage-due stamps, reply-paid cards and the coal advertisement stamps. There is less to say about the second section, since this is the high point for specialists. Also, entires are not very popular at the moment, but those who do go in for them are given an excellent account. There will be more interest in the fourth group, since it covers not only postage stamps by our definition, but also meets the present-day liking for soldiers’ stamps etc. Cancellations now get as much attention in their own country as Prussia, Bavaria or Thurn and Taxis have with us.

The work is also designated as a catalogue, and to a certain extent as a guide to value, and as the publishers are dominant in the stamp trade, their valuations can be taken as authoritative.

The notes relate not only to unused and used stamps, but in many cases also to pairs, blocks of four and other such items.

The space at our disposal obviously does not permit of a detailed description; This description of the system used and the principal points will have to suffice, and if we are to add anything else it can only be our appreciation and warmest recommendation. (To be continued)

Miscellaneous.

An idea that should be imitated.

At the beginning of July of the present year, the 11th English Philatelic Congress took place in Glasgow, and it was decided inter alia to draw up an “Index of Articles in British Philatelic Journals”.

This idea would be very advisable for German philately as well. An index like this, updated yearly and made available in volumes covering, perhaps, 5 years, would be a vital aid for the research collector who wants to look up articles and studies of interest to himself. Obviously such an index should be available as widely as possible, perhaps in the library of one of societies affiliated to the German League.

It would be particularly useful if the leading German language journals could publish not just annual indexes, but cumulative ones for longer periods, perhaps 5-10 years. Even the possibility of having the annual index available for quick reference would help many collectors who are not near a large library.

Another innovation that appeared first in the post-war years is to be found in the report of The Philatelic Journal of Great Britain, namely the “Roll of Distinguished Philatelists”. Three names have been added to this Roll during this year, including one Dutchman, P. Manus, who is well-known in Germany as well, as an old collector and researcher.

Kg.

We can obviously express only our fullest agreement with the ideas put forward from time to time by Mr. Einsender. The need for such an index is so obvious that it should need no further recommendation.

However the difficulties in the way such a complete reference work – and only a complete one would be useful for the researcher - are so great that no one person could achieve it. Unlike England, Germany and Austria have very few philatelists with the spare time for this; but the number of societies producing relevant material is hardly fewer. We have at the moment a dozen people who could compile such an index. These dozen do understand the colossal importance of such an index, and we are sure that they would be willing to take part in the good work: the outstanding question is can they find the necessary time.

The aim of these lines is to ask collectors and societies to take part in this work to get in touch with the editor.

Marvels of Philatelic Literature.

Carl Beck

Translator's note: The author has a peculiar way of expressing himself but I think I caught the gist of his remarks.

Switzerland and some of our own people are akin, and the designers of their stamps have used German work in them, but we should not take this as a compliment from abroad, or another instance of the proverb about prophets and their own countries. No, we must not forget the accomplishments of our own people, and will begin, in line with the date and current value of the work, with Friedemann's Stamps and Cancellations of German Post Offices in the Protectorates and Abroad.

Unfortunately again the scope of our journal does not allow us to treat this work as it deserves by describing its excellence, and so we will just deal with its most important features as an indication of its value.

There are 500 different German colonial stamps and there is practically a page for each with all its associated details. 18 collaborators are given, whose names by and large cover the entire region. The first glance at the book shows that practically no page lacks explanatory illustrations covering the entire range of the text. I would look on these three external signs as an indication and best recommendation. Everything else is on the same level.

After a historical introduction, we are given elementary and more advanced accounts of German colonial stamps, the types of cancellation used, and then statistics on the postal traffic that occurred. Each individual postal region is given a similar treatment, historical, geographical their colours, printing and special peculiarities, new issues, forgeries, bisects, cash price, charity usage and special cancellations. This is the system as a whole. As far as individual specimens are concerned, it is painstakingly accurate and relevant, and is specially useful for every collector of Germany, even the non-specialist, in view of the great attention paid to cancellations. This attention to detail cannot be valued highly enough and deserves to have special notice paid to it. Space is also found for all the usual colonial postal issues: ship posts, field posts, issue numbers, provisionals, entires. In short, everything related to the subject is given the attention it deserves in the fullest detail, and so this can be taken without any reservation as the standard work. Even allowing for the knowledge and basic capabilities that Dr. Munk will put into his Kohl Handbook, it still strikes one as questionable whether there can be any fresh research on German colonies that would supersede Friedemann's life work.

(maps), landscape (photographs), chronological account of the stamps issued,

Translator's note: The following paragraph is only a loose translation and I don't really know what the author is on about.

We should not be surprised to find that he allows the national impetus to die away in his book, since anyone who like him finds himself outgrowing his material must feel the blows of fate on his country strike him with the same power. We must doubt if he has really done wrong thereby, since his example brings to mind how often German philatelic science has remained without a definite aim. This is all the more reason for us to rouse and strengthen the consciousness of the nation.

It only remains to be said about the work that it was awarded gold medals at the Munich Stamp Exhibition of 1924 and at the 30th German Philatelists' Day.

The previous section dealt with a work relating to a region which we lost because of the war. A similar political, historical and philatelic phenomenon appears to us on occasion.

Austria and Kropf

We do not intend to go into political developments here: we feel them as far as our historical memory goes. Only the philatelic field remains, and in speaking of this our present lines remain "off limits", since the Kropf works can be taken as exhausted (out of print). In spite of that however it would be wrong to ignore them because even if they are out of print or partially superseded, they are works which still have a certain value.

The Stamps of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, The Stamps of the Austrian Empire and The Cancellations on the Stamps of Austro-Hungary are Kropf's imperishable works.

The first, as its title reveals, covers all the stamps of the monarchy, including Hungary and Bosnia. The use of the available written and special materials naturally makes it possible to document every issue: one's own knowledge is then used to analyse the material further, yielding results which are for the most part valid today. Also, Passer's Bosnian researches and Bela Payer's work on Hungary are both recent and should be used here and there to supplement Kropf's researches of 20 and more years earlier. This is really not surprising. As far as I know, Kropf never got round to dealing with the entires of Hungary.

On the occasion of the 60th Jubilee of the reign of Emperor Franz Joseph I in the year 1908, Kropf brought out a new edition of his original 1902 work under the second of the titles given above. The change in the name related to the contents, since Bosnia and Hungary are missing, and we get only the kingdom of Austria, though more thoroughly and in more detail. 33 tables in large quarto format exhaust the material made available by the Ministry of Commerce: it need not be stressed that scientific philatelic research goes well beyond what is available from official sources. The author's own publishing firm would produce a masterpiece if possible.

At the moment we are in the middle of the publication of the Müller-Mayer handbook of Cancellations of old Austria and Lombardy-Venezia. This will largely supersede Kropf's Third work, but Kropf still has the distinction of being the pathfinder here. Though his work only goes down to the year 1858, the presence of 71 tables with pictures of about 1,000 different cancellations is still impressive: this and the drawings of Austria-Hungarian post offices from 1850 to 1858 must be looked on as the foundation for further studies.

Kropf himself is not forgotten: philatelists awarded him the Lindenburg Medal, the highest German award, and he gained a further distinction when Emperor Franz Joseph I gave him a diamond brooch with his initials. To perpetuate his name, a group in Prague has recently started a Kropf Cancellations Society.

Hugo Kröttsch.

[Fritz Seifert (Editor)]

He completed his 79th year of life on the 26th February 1937 and passed away after a short illness on the 30th May 1937. It was the wish of the deceased to hold the funeral ceremony among family and close friends only. Some of his intimate friends followed his casket.

After graduating Hugo Kröttsch elected the graphical business trade and immediately showed his typographical feeling as a type-setter, which is shown in some of Vienna's landowner registers, which are impressive and point out his independent mind. His distinctive drawing talent was the foundation for his love of the small work of art - the postage stamp.

When he decided to found a book printing company in the 1890s, he certainly looked about for a suitable model. Not finding anything that suited him, he grabbed his pen and immersed himself totally in philatelic research - and never looked back at a printing house.

After his work Permanent Collections in Loose Leaves, he founded on the 1st February 1893, his still existing company Hugo Kröttsch, Philatelic Publishers, in Leipzig. After tireless research, he finished his well known handbook Bergedorf in 1896, which was expanded with the help of renowned authors into the comprehensive Handbook of Postage Stamps (Kröttsch Handbook).

In the year 1896 he took over the newspaper the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung from Dr. H. Brendicke. Under his objective and determined leadership the Zeitung evolved into a definitive collector's magazine, which was cherished far beyond the boundaries of the Fatherland.

The Krötzsch Library, which expanded over many years, was purchased on the 28th September 1928, by C. G. Vogel of Possneck, and was donated and housed in the German Library at Leipzig.

Owing to his advanced age, Hugo Krötzsch gave the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung to the Franz Junghanss company in 1919.

In recognition of his philatelic merits, he received several high awards, for example the Hans Wagner Medal (1920), A. E. Glasewald Medal (1929) and the Lindenberg Medal (1929).

The profound specialist knowledge is still evident in today's preferred quality products and is eloquently expressed. To promote the stamp collecting aid, proved a much rockier road than anticipated. The basic idea of the publishers was the establishment of a permanent album with loose pages, the "Black"-Album. Those loose pages had boxes without pictures, only marked with small numbers.

Aside from the major tasks, the company worked on a number of nondescript, but actually rather work-intensive and expendable things: which the dealer had prepared himself and used mostly for gifts, that is mostly gave away rather than selling them. Any spare paper was used for printing Perforation Gauges or Hinges for postage stamps, etc.

Many high and highest awards were given during exhibitions to show the general appreciation. The first award to the company was the First Place during the International Postage Stamp Exhibition in Zurich of 1893.

Highly regarded by collectors and dealers the company expanded more and more with their publishing business and in 1906 dared to publish twenty-seven different new publications - the Horn-Albums, simultaneously touting them as new issues. In this large selection every preference is being taken into account and the large popularity of the Horn-Albums is established.

In 1929 the publishing company transferred to the son, who had been working in the business for many years, because of the advanced age of its founder, continuing under the same basic principles.

Hugo Krötzsch kept in lively contact with philately until his death and the Black Prince took the pen out of his hand, while he was working on an unfinished task,

Honour his memory!

p.22

Genealogy and Philately.

Max Ton, Weimar.

If one has studied philatelic literature in detail, beside just stamp collecting, over nearly a century, you have received a glimpse, how versatile philately is. It has been pressed upon, even the collector just starting out, that the collecting of stamps is very educational. Because he who collects stamps learns effortlessly history, geography, currency, coats-of-arms and the like. And we have to note, that the currency and coats-of-arms add to the subtitles of history and are closely related to genealogy or family research. Now, you might ask, what does genealogy have to do with philately? This is best explained in this way: Philately is derived from the Greek philos - friend and ateleia — freedom from taxes, meaning love for things that make you free, in a closer sense, love of value objects or postage stamps. The expression has been used since 1860 in all technical magazines for stamps and has been common practice.

On the other hand Genealogy is the research of families and family names, a combination of genus from Latin and the Greek logos = family names learning.

Now if someone just collects stamps and glues them in the spaces of his album, by no means is he a philatelist. A true philatelist is someone, who uses his brain while admiring, collecting and gluing of the stamps. Now we get to the examination of the stamps of all countries. There we note that many heads of state, explorers, inventors, renowned poets and composers are depicted. Genealogical-philately could be expanded to include graphic artists and engravers of these colourful small papers. To look at these people in that respect is, together with the research of their engravings, rather interesting.

But I want to go even further. In the beginning of the fifties, stamp collecting developed. For the development of philately it is rather exciting to research, who all these people were, who rendered outstanding service in the introduction of the postage stamp and philately and which great and renowned collectors achieved so much in an exemplary manner.

This is a drastic example: I don't think I am wrong, when I say that 50% of all stamp collectors, if asked who invented the postage stamp, cannot answer the question correctly. And yet we have heard the names James Chalmers and Rowland Hill. Who were those people and what significance did they have for the Philately? Here the genealogical research has its start. Now we are going ahead step by step. The bridge that has existed between genealogy and the press for centuries now also exists between genealogy and philately through the technical press.

Many philatelic personalities have been mentioned in the philatelic press and for years extensively in the daily press. Because of this, many collectors spontaneously have the desire to get to know as many philatelic contemporaries as possible. That happens best through biographical research of these interesting people. From their biographies you can deduce all that has to do with philately. At the same time we get to know the stamp collector or dealer, their peculiarities, the construction of the collection, the favourite collecting interest and specialised areas.

In addition, we have the stamp counterfeiters, repairmen, experts and not to forget the authors and publishers, in short, all the people, who benefit (or damage) stamp collecting. But this cannot only be accomplished by sober addressing of these people, but you have to do biographic and genealogic research.

True to the philatelic principle: "A stamp stammers but a letter talks!" Today it is possible for each stamp collector with good written material to "Put philately into the service of genealogy". Louis Fischer, a baker, who lived in the small town of Arnstadt in Thuringia for many years, put this idea into action in the most ideal and wonderful form. For the first time he appeared in public in 1936 during the 43rd challenge cup of the Thuringia Association's Stamp Exhibition in the Adolf-Hitler-House at Arnstadt. It was a pleasant surprise. Fischer showed there his collection of Stamps on Letters his father's and grandfather's family property in Prussia, Saxony, Thurn und Taxis. In addition he enhanced them with a unique collection of interesting and valuable cancellations of the same states. The collection was awarded a gold medal of the Empire's Society of Philatelists during this stamp exhibition.

In addition to that, the grand collection of local history research categorized by the genealogical-philatelic postal system from 1801 until today by G. Otto Lehmann of Weimar was there. At the exhibition VIMARIA at Weimar in 1935, this particular collection had already received the Gaston-Nehrlich silver medal of the Gothaer stamp organization, which has recently been enhanced by the special collection Thurn und Taxis Postal Service in the Grand Duchy Sachsen-Weimar and the Duchy Sachsen-Coburg-Gotha, mostly on letters.

The advanced philatelist in today's nationalist state is more and more pressed into the idea of local history. To embody this into the stamp collection is a rewarding task, particularly since genealogic/philatelic prospects open up, as the manufacturer Schilling in Suhl recently reflected in a postage stamp advertising campaign in Sonderhausen (28th February 1937) on a "Family Tree" and garnered a silver medal from the state of Thuringia.

As you can see, a goodly number of collectors have already embraced the idea of genealogical/philatelic research. This beautiful idea will be carried on by the new philatelic generation, which today is mainly recognized in the stamps of the German Empire with a marked love of the Fatherland. With that, the bridge between genealogy and philately has been established.

Philatelic libraries: History, formation and use.

Dr.phil. Johannes Schubert, University Librarian, Leipzig

This paper appeared last year in the journal Berichte des Vereins Leipziger Briefmarkenbörse and is reproduced here in our journal so as to make its detailed, comprehensive and interesting information available to a wider circle of lovers of literature.

The editor

The value of philatelic literature and the associated need to set up philatelic libraries has already been described many times. I will refer only to the very fruitful work of the author Carl Beck in Berlin, particularly his two pamphlets On the importance of philatelic literature and Setting up philatelic libraries, paper given to the 5th German Philatelic Meeting at Carlsbad, Czechoslovakia, on 17th August 1924. Both these were published by Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm, Berlin, 1924.

Relatively few articles have been devoted to actual collections of books. So for once a few sidelights will be cast on the development and arrangement of philatelic libraries.

A philatelic library is a collection of books, magazines and special printed or hand-written matter which, by and large, deal with what concerns stamp collectors – or better, philatelists. Today there is such a great deal of this literature in the world that setting up a complete collection of such literature – even with unlimited funds – would hardly be possible, quite apart from the problem of “unique works”, i.e. books of which only one copy exists.

Philatelic books can be obtained – like every other form of writing of course – by purchase, exchange, review, gift, or in certain cases by what is called deposit, i.e. when the printer or publisher is as good as legally obliged to deposit a copy in a particular place.

The people who have collected such books to date have been almost exclusively stamp collectors, dealers or philatelic societies. The history of philatelic book collecting generally shows that individual collectors generally go over to collecting the relevant literature when:

1. They are seasoned collectors who want to make a more profound study of their collections
2. Their collection has reached a state where they have no more to wish for or collect
3. When they can no longer collect for some reason, as was, for example, the case with Theodor Haas, when he joined the stamp firm of Larisch, Munich, in 1883 and by the terms of his contract had to give up collecting.

More recently however, open access libraries, i.e. public and scientific libraries, have turned their attention to this field of collecting. I might also mention the collections of philatelic books in private firms and society libraries which are the opposite of open collections, though private collections, i.e. those belonging to individual collectors, rarely remain closed after the death of their owners. They are usually dispersed, sometimes by purchase, sometimes by auction, or even given away. Sometimes it is absolutely necessary for a private philatelic library to be broken up so that individual collectors have the chance to fill gaps in their own libraries, but it is without doubt more important for most collections of literature to be kept intact and made available for the widest possible use.

The possible movements of closed libraries can be shown by dividing them into three groups with four possibilities for each:

- Group 1: the private library passes to
- 1) private individuals
 - 2) firms
 - 3) societies
 - 4) an open library

- Group 2: the library of a firm passes to
- 1) private individuals
 - 2) other firms
 - 3) societies
 - 4) an open library

- Group 3: the library of a society passes to
- 1) private individuals
 - 2) firms
 - 3) societies
 - 4) an open library

This outline shows that the only collections likely to be permanent are those which reach an open library by one means or another. Apart from the possibilities already mentioned for the transfer of an entire library (or perhaps even individual books), there is another method, that of “permanent loan”.

Naturally it cannot be the purpose of this article to list all of the philatelic libraries of the world, although such a listing might be very desirable. A start on solving this problem has been made by the Philatelic Literature Society of London, who asked all known philatelic societies to send in information about their libraries, which it then made available. A résumé of the answers was given in the Notes section of their magazine The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society.

Here we shall merely give a survey of the most important or best known collections of this kind. Many of them have printed catalogues, though most are out of date. A large number of the libraries concerned are listed in the Great Lexicon of Philately by Alexander Bungerz, though his data are brief and scrappy. Very reliable and detailed information on this topic can also be found in the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung (abbreviated to D.B.-Z. in what follows) by Krötzsch, which is no longer appearing, to the grief of all serious philatelists. It was first-class and has not to date been replaced in the slightest degree by any other philatelic journal.
