The following list gives the names of people, firms, societies and libraries all of whom have a collection of philatelic literature. Let me say once again that this list makes no claim to completeness! There are 92 names from 11 countries: Germany (3), Belgium (11), Denmark (1), England (17), France (5), Italy (2), Netherlands (2), Austria (4), Sweden (1), Czechoslovakia (4) and United States of America (18). Many well-known names are included. Some of the collections of literature are still in the hands of their collectors, some have passed into other hands, i.e. some have been broken up and some are still preserved in a closed form. The names in the list are given in their shortest form, i.e. without forenames. These are only given where necessary. The full names with the corresponding data are given later in the text. The sign * in the list means that the collection concerned has moved or passed into other hands, Ø means the collection concerned has been broken up, i.e. sold or auctioned, K means a catalogue (written or printed) is available, in the case of the auctioned collections the auction catalogue is meant. Names in [] are not dealt with any further, since I do not know anything else about them at the moment.

GERMANY

Private

1	*	Beck
2	*	Berger
3	*	Bungerz
4		[Elias]
5	*	Fränkel
6	K	Glasewald
7	*	Haas
8	*	Kleeberg
9		Körner
10	*K	Krötzsch
11		Michaelis
12	Ø	Moschkau
13	*	Mutzenbecher
14	*	Rommel
15		Schmittdiel
16	K	Schutte
17	*	Treichel
18	*K	Vogel

Firm

19		[Senf Brothers]
----	--	------------------------

Societies

20		German Philatelic Library [?]
21		Stamp Collectors' Society, Kiel
22		League of German Philatelic Societies at Home and Abroad
23	*K	Germania-Ring

24	*K	Berlin Philatelic' Club
25	*	German Philatelic Society (Gössnitz)
26	*	Philatelic Society Essen-Ruhr
27	*	Bavarian Philatelic Society, Munich
28		Chemnitz Philatelic Society
29	K	[International Philatelic Society Dresden]
30	K	Society of Stamp Lovers, Hamburg
31	K	[Society for Philately Frankfurt-am-Main]
32		[Society for Philately, Hamburg]
33	*	Union of Leipzig Stamp Dealers

Open Libraries

34		German Library, Leipzig
35		Prussian State Library, Berlin
36		City Library, Essen
37		University Library, Leipzig

BELGIUM

Private

38	1	*	Moens
----	---	---	-------

DENMARK

Society

39	1	K	Copenhagen Philatelic Club
----	---	---	----------------------------

ENGLAND

Private

40	1		Anderson
41	2		[Bellamy]
42	3		Castle
43	4	⊙	Clark
44	5		Image
45	6	*K	Lindsay [Earl of Crawford]
46	7		[Melville]
47	8	⊙	Philbrick
48	9	⊙	Smith (Alfred)
49	10		[Smith (Bertram T. K.)]

Societies

50	11		[Birmingham Philatelic Society]
51	12		Croydon Philatelic Society
52	13	K	Herts Philatelic Society
53	14		Royal Philatelic Society

Open Libraries

54	15		British Museum, London
55	16		Croydon Public Library, London
56	17	K	University Library, Aberdeen

FRANCE

Private

57	1	⊖	Legrand
58	2		[Parés]
59	3	⊖ _K	Rueff
60	4		Spohr

	Society
61	5		[French Society of Philately]

ITALY

	Private
62	1		[Diena]
63	2		[Palmieri]

NETHERLANDS

	Society
64	1	K	["Hollandia" Society of Postage Stamp Collectors]
65	2	K	[Netherlands Society of Postage Stamp Collectors, Amsterdam]

AUSTRIA

	Private
66	1	*	Suppantschitsch
67	2		[Poell]

	Societies
68	3	K	Austrian Philatelic Club Vindobona
69	4		[Exchange Union for Postage Stamps, Vienna]

SWEDEN

	Society
70	1	K	Swedish Philatelic Society

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

	Private
71	1	*	Bloch
72	2	*	Passier
73	3	*	Walenta

	Society
74	4		German Society for Philately, Prague

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

	Private
75	1	⊖	Calman
76	2		[Cook]
77	3	*	Deats
78	4		[Jones]
79	5		[Luff]
80	6		[Phillips] [Translator: not Philipps]
81	7	*	Power
82	8		[Rich]
83	9		Ricketts
84	10	*	Seybold

85	11		[Stone]
86	12	*	Tiffany

Societies

87	13		Collectors Club, New York
88	14	K	American Philatelic Society
89	15	K	Boston Philatelic Society
90	16		Newark Stamp Club

Open libraries

91	17		Carnegie Library Pittsburgh
92	18	K	City of Boston Public Library

Five libraries may be mentioned which have been broken up and indeed auctioned. The first was the philatelic library of Clement Rueff, auctioned in Paris on the 13th March 1907 by Emil Paul & Son and Guillemin. The bookplate of this collection is shown in The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society (1911, Volume 4, between pages 10 and 11.) A twenty-four page auction catalogue was issued at the time. (Catalogue of a very important Philatelic Library.) The second library whose disposal I wish to mention is that of the American Henry L. Calman, a member of the Boston Philatelic Society, resident in New York, auctioned on the 12th May 1910 in New York. This auction is described by the American, C. A. Nast [Translator; not Nats] in Stamp Journal, June 1910. Another auction was of the library of Dr. Amable Legrand (born August 1820, died on the 6th June 1912) at Neuilly near Paris. He was one of the earliest stamp collectors, Secretary of the French Society of Philately, and wrote under the pseudonym Dr. Magnus. Unfortunately only a residue of his library was auctioned. The auction took place on the 27th January 1913 in London, by Glendenning & Company (see D.B.-Z., 1913, p.44). Then there was the sale of the extensive library of the Englishman Alfred Smith (a Priced Catalogue of the Alfred Smith Philatelic Library appeared from A. Smith & Company, [year ?]) sometime during the years 1916-18. Finally, the library of Herbert Clark should be mentioned. Clark describes the formation and contents of his library in The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society 1910, Volume 3, pp.2-7.) He was made a collector to some extent by his grandfather who collected coins and autographs, and his mother who collected books. Clark's library was auctioned by the well-known firm of H. R. Harmer of London, on the 18th and 19th February 1924. This firm also put out an auction catalogue, which ran to 31 pages and 553 items. The library must have contained many more works, since some copies of the auction catalogue had more pages. Details of this auction are given by Alexander Bungerz in his pamphlet The Auction of Herbert Clark's Library, Berlin, Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm, 1924 (17 pages).

Another library which has unfortunately not survived was that belonging to Trade Counsellor Dr. Alfred Moschkau (born on the 24th January 1840, Löbau, died on the 27th May 1912, Oybin). Only scanty remains of his collection of literature came up for sale. What became of the rest has remained unknown (see D.B.-Z., 1907). The fine collection of literature belonging to the English lawyer Frederick Augustus Philbrick (born on the 30th June 1835, died on the 25th December 1910, Bournemouth). His library contained standard works only. Fortunately many of his books came into the possession of the Royal Philatelic Society, London, and thereby into the library of this Society. (See below, under movements of libraries).

We will now turn to the existing collections of books, and their migrations (or movements into other hands). 17 groups can be distinguished in which a complete collection has moved into other hands. To make this clearer, a diagram of the library movements will precede the actual descriptions.

For table, see pages 15-16 of the original

- A) Collections moved to open libraries:
- B) Collections passed into the ownership of societies
- C) Collections passing into private ownership

I will begin with the philatelic collections which have gone into an open library, since, though they became the property of the library concerned, their ownership can never change again, i.e. it is settled for good.

On the diagram the name of the library concerned is given in bold type. The libraries concerned are the British Museum Library in London (see list of names number 54, of this 85 + 5 +38 + 76 + 45; Section A, Group I), the Prussian State Library, Berlin (see list of names 35, of this number 14 + 1 + 3 +24; Section A, Group II); the German Library in Leipzig (see list of names number 34, of this numbers 10 – 18, Section A, Group III); Public Library of the City of Boston (see list of names number 91, of this number 88, Section A, Group III).

One of the earliest stamp collectors and also the oldest collector of philatelic literature was the American lawyer John Kerr Tiffany (born on the 22nd February 1842, died on the 3rd March 1897) of St. Louis in Missouri, United States of America. From 1886-96 he was President of the American Philatelic Association. His outstanding library was uniformly bound in black half-leather (calfskin) for journals and separate works. Up to 1897, the year of his death, his library was the most complete in the world. On 1901 Tiffany's went by way of the well-known stamp dealers Stanley Gibbons Ltd., of London, into the hands of Lindsay, the 26th Earl of Crawford, a member of the London Philatelic Society and a zealous collector of literature. The collection filled 39 large chests, weighed over 2,000 kg and was purchased for $10,000. As early as 1874 Tiffany, who was a philatelic author in his own right, published privately a work entitled Philatelic[al] Library which described his book collection as it then was. Tiffany's bookplate is also shown in The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society (1911, Volume 4, between pages 10 and 11.)

pp.22-23

Philatelic libraries – history, organisation and use.

Dr. Phil. Johannes Schubert, University Librarian, Leipzig

1st Continuation

Another extensive collection of books is associated with the name of the Berlin District Judge, Dr. Heinrich Fraenkel (born in Breslau, date not known, died 20th September 1907 in Berlin). Fraenkel, who is known as a philatelic author, was also for many years the librarian of the Berlin Philatelists' Club. His private library was one of the most important on the Continent. It contained a very wide range of rarities, in particular many un-cut examples, on which Fraenkel – who was bibliophile – placed special value. (see D.B.-Z., 1907, p.202). After his death in 1907 the library was put up for sale. However, after a wealthy German philatelist had looked at it (see D.B.-Z., 1908, p.19) the collection was bought from the heirs "for a song" as was said in D.B.-Z., 1912, p.59. The purchaser was again the aforementioned Lindsay. He paid "a multiple of 1,800Mk" (see D.B.-Z., 1900, p.133).

A further collection worthy of mention here is that of the Brussels stamp dealer Jean-Baptiste Philippe Constant Moens (born 27th May 1833, Tournai (Belgium), died 29th April 1908, Brussels). However his collection of literature was bought in 1902 by a Mr. Laurie of Worcester (Massachusetts). However, he was a middleman and not a collector himself – which is why his is not in the list of names – and in the same year (1902) it was bought by the then secretary of the American Philatelic Association, the American Hiram Edmund Deats of Flemington, New Jersey, for $500, who incorporated it into his library. The bookplate of Deats is shown in The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society, Volume 4, 1911, between pages 10 and 11. This library, like Fraenkel's, came into the possession of the 26th Earl of Crawford (after 1907) (see D.B.-Z., 1909, p.148). Crawford had by then assembled the most outstanding specialist library in the world – almost 4,000 volumes.

This man, James Lindsay, 26th Earl of Crawford, Baronet Wigan (born 28th July 1847, died 31st January 1913) was from 1910 to his death 1913 the President of the Royal Philatelic Society of London. Before his death he donated his first-class collection to the English national library in the British Museum, which has existed since 1753 and is situated in Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.1. The library was transferred to this building on 14th and 17th March 1913. It was given the name Bibliotheca Lindesiana, i.e. Lindsay Library, with the addition of Philatelic Section, since the British Museum had another collection of books from Lindsay, this one purchased. The bookplate of the Philatelic Section of the Bibliotheca Lindesiana is also shown in The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society Volume 4, 1911, between pages 10 and 11. The books are in the cases in the gallery of the North Library. This North Library has its own reading room and holds the especially valuable books or books in costly bindings, plus all those which for some reason or other cannot be made available in the main reading room. The British Museum has added new publications to the Lindsay collection since the end of 1912. However, according to E. D. Bacon, the President of the Philatelic Literature Society of London, who produced the famous Catalogue of the Philatelic Library of the Earl of Crawford and its Supplement, the years 1913-25 have been very much neglected. As far as use of the library goes, the books are available to anyone meeting the specified conditions, but only in the reading room in the North Library of the British Museum. The library of the British Museum is for reference only and does not lend books outside. Thus the formation of an international philatelic library in this location, as Kröttsch proposed (D.B.-Z., 1913, p.71-72) is not feasible, at least not if books are to be lent outside and even abroad, as was suggested.

In conjunction with the famous British Museum Library, I should like to mention the best-known German collections of philatelic literature, those in the Prussian State Library in Unter den Linden, Berlin. The first major collection of philatelic literature added to the State Library (it already had some, obtained as deposit copies, or by gift, or more rarely by purchase) was that of the noted collector of philatelic literature, Dr. Jur. Otto Rommel (born 2nd November 1854 in Hildburg Lausen, died 1930?) in the year 1915 (see Zentrablatt für Biblio Metswesen, 1915, p.172). That increased the philatelic literature in the State Library by about 2,000 volumes. The other main accessions dated from the year 1931, as a result of IPOSTA. These were the two important collections of the philatelic writer Carl Beck (born 27th November 1879, Heppenheim, died 9th July 1929, Berlin) and the well-known artist and philatelic writer Alexander Bungerz (born 7th November 1874, Munchen-Gladbach, died 1st September 1931, Vienna). After the Berlin Philatelists' Club had given its own library to the State Library at about the same time, the latter's holdings of philatelic literature was scarcely second to that the British Museum. The Prussian State Library is available to anyone who can meet the required conditions. They are lent out at home and abroad. The State Library is, of course, linked to the German inter-Library loans system, so books have to be requested via another library at the cost of postage plus a mere 10 pfennigs a week for individual volumes. Of course the library requesting may make a charge as well. In Berlin itself, the books may be consulted in the large reading room of the library, as can the current issues of periodicals.

A third group consists of the philatelic holdings of the German Library in Deutscher Platz, Leipzig. The purpose of this library is to collect exclusively German literature since 1913, so it obviously obtains every new German work that appears and every new periodical regularly. Hence it should have a complete set of German philatelic publications since 1913. However, apart from this there is a closed philatelic collection in the German Library. This is the library of the well-known Leipzig philatelist Hugo Krötzsch, which passed to the possession of Carl Gustav Vogel, the editor of the Internationale Briefmarken-Offertenblätter of Pössneck. On his 60th birthday he gifted it to the Society of the Friends of the German Library as a study aid for serious stamp collectors and to promote philatelic researches. On the 28th September 1928 the German Library obtained the collection on permanent loan. In contrast to the usual mechanical arrangement of the German Library, this collection was specially kept together. The German books and periodicals have been added to by the German Library, but the foreign-language literature has been neglected, since it is outside the scope of the German Library. The foreword to the published Catalogue of the Philatelic Section of the German Library in Leipzig by Krötzsch expressed a wish for the further development of an international philatelic library but as with the British Museum, this will remain unfulfilled. Use of the German Library is open to everyone – if certain conditions are met – but again the books can only be consulted in the library reading room. At the moment the periodicals reading room takes 24 different German language philatelic journals. Since, on the other hand, the German Library is linked to the German inter-library loan system, some books can be borrowed for use in another library.

The fourth group of collections consists of the Public Library of the City of Boston (USA). This library collected philatelic literature itself, but has received valuable gifts from the Boston Philatelic Society, which resulted in a notable extension of its stock. To make its use easier, a 31-page Catalogue of Books on Philately in the Public Library of the City of Boston was published in 1903 by the firm of D. H. Bacon of Derby (CT). The cover of this catalogue shows a picture of the library building concerned. As we are dealing here with an open library, the widest use should be possible. More will be said about the Boston Public Library later.

For completeness, some further groups should be mentioned, including libraries that include philatelic collections. (see Name List No. 37, nos. 33+23+22, collection, Section A, group VI; Name List No. 90, no. 87, see collection, Section A, group VII; Name List No. 55, no. 51, see collection, Section A, group VIII).

pp.30-31

Philatelic Libraries. History formation and use.

Dr. Johannes Schubert

University Librarian, Leipzig

Part 2

A further collection of philatelic literature has recently been set up in Leipzig, in the Leipzig University Library at 6 Beethovenstrasse. Currently, this contains two large collections which are available to the societies concerned. The first was the library of the Vereins Leipziger Briefmarkenbörse e.V. (Society of Leipzig Stamp Dealers), the Dephilei - De(utsche) phi(latelistischer) lei(h-bibliothek) (German Philatelic Lending Library). The other is the outstandingly good collection of the Germania-Ringes, (Union of German Philatelic Societies). In 1910 this organisation acquired the library (about 500 volumes) of Ludwig Berger of Brunswick. This was purchased for 700 marks. These collections in the University Library contain both German-language and foreign-language literature from all branches of philately. At the moment, both collections are regularly added to by the societies concerned.

More recently, the library of the Bundes Deutscher Philatelisten-Verbände im In- und Auslande (Federation of German Philatelic Societies at Home and Abroad) has also been brought in, so that here too, the user will find a good deal of material needed for his research. The collections are individually, systematically, arranged. Use of the collections is free to everyone, in accordance with the wishes of the Societies. The books are sometimes allowed out on loan, including external loan. Users in the building have at their disposal the main reading room and the new periodicals reading room, both again free of charge. The University Library is also naturally included in the inter-library loans system of the German Libraries.

It is not only in Berlin and Leipzig that societies have made their collections available in open libraries: the same has happened in many other places. (See List of Names, N°36, and N°26 of Index Section A, Group VI – List of Names N°91. Also N°99: Index Section A, Group VII – List of Names N°35. Also N°51: Index Section, Group VIII – List of Names N°56.)

For example, as early as the 19th April 1907 the Philatelisten-Verein Essen-Ruhr (Essen-Ruhr Philatelic Society) gave its library to the Essen City Library. However, America was even earlier: as early as 1899 the American Philatelic Society gave its collection to the Carnegie Library founded in Pittsburgh (USA) in 1895. This was a public library maintained by the city. Anyone could borrow provided they met the stipulated conditions. I do not know whether the books could go out on inter-library loan. A catalogue entitled Books in the Library of the American Philatelic Society (i.e. all the Society's books available in the Carnegie Library) was shown to me in 1910 (it ran to 20 pages).

In England, the Croydon Central Public Library, in the Town Hall in London, had the library of the Croydon Philatelic Society. This consisted of 140 volumes up to 1927. The library of Aberdeen University in Scotland also contains philatelic literature. A university professor, P. J. Anderson, took on the care of it and has produced a catalogue of this literature.

As the index will show, (Group B) I have located 5 collections in the possession of societies (See List of Names N°87, N°s13 + 7 + 68, Index Section B Group IX – List of Names N°53. Also N°s44 + 47 + 42. Index Section B, Group X – List of Names N°89. Also N°84. Index Section B, Group XI – List of Names N°28. Also N°8, Index, Section B, Group XII – List of Names N°74. Also N°s71 + 72 + 73: Index Section B, Group XIII.)

A very painful recollection for German people is the thought of the library of the Collectors Club in New York, in their 4th Avenue clubhouse. This outstandingly excellent library contains three valuable German collections. The first is that of Baron von Mutzenbecher, who collected a great deal of literature and which was taken over by the well-known philatelist and writer Theodor Haas (born on the 22nd September 1848 in Karlsruhe; died on the 8th July 1911 in Leipzig). Haas probably also became the owner. The Haas library did not in fact cover the latest literature (about 1900-1911) but was all the more complete for the period from the beginning of philately to the end of the century. After the death of Haas, his collection was bought for 1,500 Marks by Victor Suppantschitsch, the President of the Austrian Senate (born on the 31st October 1838 in Laibach (Carinthia), died on the 2nd March 1919 in Graz), who is familiar to every philatelist, who was very keen on his library. Suppantschitsch could claim with pride to own the largest German philatelic library with more than 30,000 individual items and 3,037 volumes of periodicals. He collected this literature over a period of 50 years, and amongst his books were about 1,800 from the period 1861-1900, including rarities missing from even the Lindsay (Earl of Crawford) collection. Anyone who visited the “Bugra” [Exhibition] in Leipzig in 1914 (in the “Collecting” section, Group 25c, “Philately” in the “Library” space in the central hall on the upper storey of the main “German Publishing” building) will have admired many items from the Suppantschitsch collection, representing German philately.

However, this magnificent collection was sold by Suppantshitsch's heirs in 1922 to the Collectors' Club of New York. Of course the Library is available there, but whether only to club members or to other people as well is outside my knowledge.

As far as the library of the Royal Philatelic Society of London is concerned, it need only be said that it was based on the library of one of its oldest members, namely Image, and was later extended by the collections of Philbrick (see above, Dispersed Collections) and Castle.

The Boston Philatelic Society (USA), already mentioned above, was for a long time the private library of the American John F. Seybold as well. Unfortunately I cannot at the moment establish whether this library, now called the Seybold Library is currently available in the City of Boston Public Library (see above).

Another Library that has been enriched by major acquisitions is that of the Chemnitzer-Philatelisten-Vereins (Chemnitz Philatelic Society). Towards the end of the year 1932 this took over the collection of its very active member, Paul Kleeberg (died on the 29th September 1932 in Chemnitz), well-known to stamp collectors as a China specialist.

In Czechoslovakia, the literature collection of the philatelic writer Max Bloch was bought by a man named Passer, a member of the Deutschen Vereins für Briefmarkenkunde in Prag (German Society for Philately of Prague). When the Society moved its Library, Passer gave his to the Society, which was an example for the President F. Walenta, who made over his own library to the Society.

This concludes the group of libraries which I have marked with B in the index. However, before I go onto Group C, a few other societies should be mentioned which have earned a mention in the relevant literature (see List of Names N^{os}21, 29, 30, 31, 32, 39, 50, 52, 61, 64, 65, 68, 69, 70, 90). For 5 of them, a mere reference to the name should suffice (see List of Names N^{os}21, 32, 59, 61, 69). Catalogues of another 9 Libraries have appeared. (See List of Names N^{os}29, 30, 31, 39, 52, 64, 65, 68, 70). Of them I will mention first the Catalogue of Handbooks, Journals, etc. in the Library of the Herts Philatelic Society dated Christmas 1910 (published in London, total 53 pages). This Library had existed since 1898 and, according to the introduction to the catalogue (p.5), was the second largest philatelic library in England in 1910. Another catalogue (only available in typescript) is that of the library of the Vereins der Briefmarkenfreunde in Hamburg (Stamp Lovers' Society of Hamburg). It has the title of Literaturverzeichnis der Bibliothek (Literature Index to the library). Other details can be readily obtained from the bibliographies, so I need not go into them here. The only important point as regards this group is that certain books from the Newark Stamp Club (USA) (see list of names N^o90) were given by Deats, if I am not mistaken, to the Free Public Library in Newark when the Society was dissolved.

Group C of the Index, which we have yet to deal with, mentions some cases of libraries in private possession, i.e. in the ownership of individuals. (See List of Names N^o20, N^o17, Index, Section C, Group XIV. List of names N^o6, N^o25, Index, Section C, Group XV, List of names N^o27. Index Section C, Group XVI. List of names N^o83, N^o81, Index Section C, Group XVIII.

pp.39-40

Philatelic Libraries: History, Formation and Use.

(3rd continuation and conclusion)

Dr. Johannes Schubert, University Librarian, Leipzig

Thus, for example, the philatelic library of Alexander Treichel (died at the age of 63 on the 8th August 1902 at Hoch-Paleschken, East Prussia), must have been incorporated in what is called the Deutschen Philatelistischen Bibliothek (German Philatelic Library). Unfortunately I have not been able to find out any more about this.

Here too belongs yet another very important library, the Bücherei Glasewald at Gossnitz (Glasewald Library) in the District of Altenburg. This was founded in 1890 and went at first by the name of Bücherei des Deutschen Philatelisten-Verbandes (Gössnitz) (Library of the German Philatelic Society of Gössnitz). It contains about 6,000 volumes, mainly philatelic literature in German, and also does inter-library loans. Catalogues appeared in 1900, 1907 and 1928. They were drawn up by Ruprecht Glasewald. Material has been supplied by people not known to the firm of A. E. Glasewald.

An example of how a society library can pass into private hands is given by the collection of the Bayerischen Philatelisten-Vereins München (Bavarian Philatelic Society of Munich), which went into private ownership in Berlin after the society broke up. However, I do not know who got it.

Finally should be mentioned the American William R. Ricketts of Forty-Fort, Pennsylvania, distinguished for his bibliographic work, a zealous collector of the relevant literature, who took over the library of the American E. B. Power of New York, amongst others.

Apart from these libraries which have migrated to a greater or lesser extent, there are naturally many other private libraries of more or less extent. Of modern collectors of this type I might mention Spohr in Paris, Michaelis in Schleswig, Schütte in Magdeburg (there is a type-written catalogue of this Library), plus the two names of Körner in Leipzig and Schmittdiel in Hamburg. The first of these has an outstanding collection of German language works in an ideal arrangement. He goes in for depth rather than breadth in his collection, i.e. he places the greatest value on getting complete sets of certain journals. The other book collector, C. Schmittdiel of Hamburg, is a very active person whose exact scholarship has, it appears to me, caused Die Philatelistische Literatur to become steadily more popular. Schmittdiel lays particular emphasis on bibliographical literature.

This brings me to the end of my survey of philatelic libraries. It is only an attempt, but I hope it will be of service to anyone interested in this field. For the rest I would also like to mention that the Fachbibliothek des Reichspostmuseums (Technical Library of the State Postal Museum), the Bücherei des Reichspostministeriums (Library of the State Postal Service) and the Fürstl. Thurn und Taxis'sche Hofbibliothek [St. Emmeran] (Library of the Principality of Thurn and Taxis [St. Emmeran]) in Regensburg have many rare items of value to philately and not relating to postal history alone.

ADDENDUM - 1

A change is underway as regards Point V of Group A (p.15, left-hand column). The Bund Deutscher Philatelisten-Verbände im In- und Auslande (Federation of German Philatelic Societies at Home and Abroad), at its meeting in Aschersleben on 18th to 21st August, decided its Library should be transferred to Munich – in fact, to the City Library. According to the original agreement by Pfingsten in 1933, the books were to be kept in Leipzig, and were kept in the University Library. They were taken from Meiningen to Leipzig, and because of their fragmentary character as an individual library, were used to supplement the two collections of philatelic books already in the University Library.

As far as the holdings under Group A, N°II, in the Preussischen Staatsbibliothek (Prussian State Library), Berlin, are concerned, Paul P. Lindenberg informed me on 20th August 1933 that they had not been catalogued and were thus not usable, because the DM10,000 needed for cataloguing was not available. His letter closed with the words thus, in spite of the considerable holdings in Berlin we are left quite miserable.

ADDENDUM – 2

(This addendum will only appear in the journal Die Philatelistische Literatur)

■ = Supplement

◆ = Correction

Following the appearance of my article in the journal Die Philatelistische Literatur (February 1934, Volume 3, Issue 2 - containing the first part only) various letters were sent to me and Schmitt diel, which were kind enough to correct one or more previously unclear or incorrect points. However, I had already stated that my work was only a first attempt, i.e. that one or more points still awaited clarification, at the end of my paper in Berichte des Vereins Leipziger Briefmarkenbörse, October 1933, Issue 10.

In what follows, I will set out the relevant sections from the communications that have reached me to date about my article:

■ Philatelic literature collection in the Munich City Library

From communications from City Inspector Chr. Otto Müller, 54 Kaulbachstrasse, Munich
3rd and 8th February 1934

... because of this inconvenience the undersigned (i.e. Müller), as Librarian of the Münchener Ganzsachensammlervereins (Munich Society of Postal Stationery Collectors) and the Tauma – Tauschverbindung Münchener Briefmarkensammler (Exchange Club of Munich Stamp Collectors) entered into negotiations three years ago with the Committee of the Münchener Sammlervereine (Munich Collectors' Society) about their philatelic literature and agreed that to centralize philatelic literature for South Germany in Munich, the following would give up their Libraries:

1. The Münchener Briefmarkenclub (Munich Stamp Club) (President Zinckgraf), its entire book stock complete
2. The Tauma (Exchange Club of Munich Stamp Collectors), everything except their indispensable reference books
3. The Münchener Ganzsachensammlervereins (Munich Society of Postal Stationery Collectors), all literature not relating to postal stationery
4. Herr Zinckgraf, art dealer)
5. Herr Larisch, stamp dealer) Their extensive superfluous
6. Herr Mühl, stamp dealer) private holdings
7. The undersigned, (i.e. Herr Müller))

Since the Bavarian State Library was too full to take them, the chairman of city library services in Munich, Bürgermeister Küfer, accepted them for the Munich City Library.

The conditions for use in the Munich City Library are as favourable as possible: no charge, borrowing or use of the philatelic literature in the Reading Room is available to every Munich collector on proof of identity without membership of a society or club being required.

The staff of the City Library have made their expertise available for classification ...

The library of the Münchener Ganssachensammlervereins (Munich Society of Postal Stationery Collectors), remains as a specialist collection for the field of postal stationery ...

◆ Glasewald Library – German Philatelic Society

From a communication from Ruprecht Glasewald, Gössnitz, District of Altenburg
5th February 1934

... in connection with the removal of the Glasewald Library, it should be noted that the Deutsche Philatelisten-Verband (German Philatelic Society) has never had a library of its own. My father, A. E. Glasewald, the founder of the Society, allowed his own to be used as the Society library in the interests of publicity. What you said might lead people to think we sometimes bought books and the like, which was never actually the case ...

☐ Private Library of the firm of Philipp Kosack & Co., Berlin

From a communication from the firm of Kosack to Schmittdiel
7th February 1934

... we ... wish to point out that we have one of the most outstanding libraries for our field of commerce ...

◆ Library of the Berlin Philatelic Club e.V., Berlin

From a communication from the Librarian of the Club, P. Baruch, Berlin, to Schmittdiel
7th February 1934

... I should like to point out that along with the Beck and Bungerz Libraries, a considerable part of the duplicates in the Club Library, plus part of the foreign literature, was indeed given to the State Library but nevertheless the greater part of the library remains in the Club's possession.

I should also like to stress that in spite of this transfer the Club Library is still one of the largest in Germany, whether in private or Society hands. The catalogue supplied to you last year will certainly prove my point. I ask you to make these facts known on the continuation of the article in your journal, to correct any possible misconception that the Berliner Philatelisten-Club (Berlin Philatelic Club) no longer possess a Library ...

☐ Private Library of Nils Strandell, Lidingö (Sweden)

From a communication from Strandell to Schmittdiel
1st April 1933

... my Library is without doubt the largest in private hands in Northern Europe, and I have practically everything published for the last 25 years in all languages ...

p.40

Wishes for the philatelic press.

Part II

In N°12 of our journal for the year 1933, we published under this title some details of the wishes expressed by numerous collectors over the course of the previous year. They were the various suggestions made to the editors of philatelic journals. Since we have now done a survey for the New Year, we think it a good idea to print a few lines on the results of our efforts.

First we can state that Die Postmarke of Vienna, has responded to requests by giving the year number in brackets as well as the running number they have used for years. This makes it easy to see how many issues have been published in a year, as with most German language journals. Collectors of literature find it particularly convenient. We are delighted that the publishers of the leading specialist journal in the German language have met the wishes of literature lovers, and would be very pleased if the publishers of other journals who do not yet use this system of numbering would follow this example in the interests of literature.

For the systematic bibliographic treatment of a journal, it is absolutely necessary for the pages to be numbered. Up to now there have been two German language journals which have not done this. Thankfully, the Mainpost of Wurzburg has now introduced page numbering, but Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm of Leipzig, has not met our wishes. One might have thought that this magazine, which is meant to encourage philatelic literature, would meet the wishes of the friends of literature in future years. However, it seems obvious that our journal is completely unknown to our respected rival – if we may call them so in all friendship.

The use of continuous numbering of pages was also suggested, so that there can be uniform bibliographic treatment of the philatelic press. Unfortunately, this wish has only been met by the Deutsche Zeitung für Briefmarkenkunde of Biberach, whereas Concordia-Post of Bad Buckow, Sieger-Post of Lorch and Der Ukrainische Philatelist of Vienna, appear to have overlooked this particular wish. Would it really be so hard to comply with? It would only need one instruction and the thing would be done. We will only say that we sent our recommendations to all of the relevant magazine editors in case they had not seen them, and we really hope that in coming years a uniform treatment will be introduced.

It is also gratifying to find that the journal Der Deutsche Inflationsmarkensammler of Immenstadt, has met our request and now publishes its supplement Memel-Rundschau separately. Neither the journal nor its supplement is harmed by this, and both can be collected and bound separately.

The wrapper business has also undergone desirable improvements. Many journals now do not reach the purchaser in the damaged condition that they often once did. It is in the publisher's own interest to tell them this, since the outside of a journal carries important information; people do not buy it and say the contents are what matter. We have already had many views about this.

It can well be said that some publishers have met the wishes of collectors and literature lovers, whereas others still think they can follow the old methods. We think this point of view is mistaken and we ask magazine publishers to follow the wishes of their readers as far as possible, if it does not involve them in additional costs.

I will take this opportunity to repeat the request for our readers to let us have further suggestions. If you have any practical ideas for improving the appreciation of literature, we shall always be ready to publish them in our journal.

END

C. Schmittdiel

Various documents relating to the formation and early days of the Interessengemeinschaft Phil. Literatursammler [Society for those Interested in Collecting Philatelic Literature], which evolved quickly into the Gesellschaft Philatelistischer Literaturfreunde [Philatelic Literature Society] in Germany during 1932.

Translations produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
2000-2005

INTRODUCTION

In the Early 1930s, C. Schmittdiel worked hard to form a Philatelic Literature Society in Germany, which would produce a bibliography (index) of all German-language philatelic literature. Although it only existed for a few years, it left a lasting legacy of publications for those who followed in his footsteps.

In the late 1990s, I was lucky enough to obtain a small collection of papers produced by Schmittdiel relating to the Society: Interessengemeinschaft Phil. Literatursammler, later the Gesellschaft Philatelistischer Literaturfreunde. Since they shed some light on the formation and early days of the Society, they have been translated and are given below. I have tried to keep them in date order but many are simple typescripts, neither dated nor signed.

Stand alone publications in the collection, such as Newsletters or Circulars, were listed separately under their own Philat. Trans. number.

C. Schmittdiel
Foundation Protocol
[Gründungsprotokoll]
1st October 1932, n.pp. [1pp.]

Proposal for the establishment of a Society for Literature Collectors, written on Der Philatelistische Literatursammler letter heading.

DER PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURSAMMLER

Regular supplement to Grüne Sammler-Welt [Green Collector-World], Niebüll (Schleswig)
Chat, information and offers sheet for stamp collectors, dealers and societies
Society organ for over 60 societies and unions
Official journal of the Internationaler Sammler-Verein, e.V. of 1908, Hamburg

Editor: C. Schmittdiel, 45 Tornquiststrasse, Hamburg 19

From: Editorial Office: 45 Tornquiststrasse, Hamburg 19

Post Box: Hamburg 680 46, under C. Schmittdiel, Hamburg

1st October 1932

FOUNDATION PROTOCOL

My proposal for the formation of a society for the friends of philatelic literature has produced enough letters from interested parties expressing keen interest in this idea, and so it becomes necessary to explain how to join and provide co-operation. Thus, on this day I found the

Interessengemeinschaft Philatelistischer Literatursammler

[Special Interest Society for Philatelic Literature Collectors]

The founder members are Messrs:

J. Klink, Niebüll
R. Körner, Leipzig
C. Michaelis, Schleswig
P. Preuss, Leipzig
C. Schmittdiel, Hamburg
J. Schütte, Magdeburg
P. Simson, Berlin
J. Spohr, Paris

C. Schmittdiel

END

Document 2

Translated by Charles A Tuteur

Duplicated letter from Schmittdiel on Interessengemeinschaft Philatelistischer Literatursammler headed notepaper. 27th September 1932, 2pp.

Since the Society name had already been changed by this date, Schmittdiel may simply have been using up old letter heading.

Esteemed member

Our Society, whose task is the promotion of knowledge and collection of philatelic literature, cannot however, be inattentive to the scientific dissertations in the professional literature. Since at the beginning of the next year our publication will appear in an enlarged format, room will be created for the inclusion of pertinent critiques of newly-published articles. To guarantee the fact of expert discussion and to support the scientific side of philately, the cooperation of researchers and specialists in particular fields is necessary. The enclosed schedule* lists the members of our association who in my estimation will eventually be appropriate for cooperation. It is quite possible that the cooperation of one or the other member will not be required for a whole year, because no article of significance in that field appeared in the professional literature. Critiques of technical articles should be short and insightful. They should stress in particular, whether the article contains new research results, of what kind, whether the article was published earlier; if possible by mentioning the source, whether the article contains unclear or even false facts, or whether amendment or correction seems necessary, etc. A short discussion of a professional article will not burden the specialist but will render a service to scientific philately through the Society.

Management to be as follows: For example, say that among the journals received by the editor are four, each having an article pertaining to collection area X. These four journals will, together with an SASE for return mail, be sent to the member who works in that area, for perusal and critique. The journals ought to be returned as "business mail" together with the manuscript. Members abroad will be allowed the postage cost against their membership fee.

Politely and urgently I beg for your cooperation. For the benefit of scientific philately, I ask for this service in a good cause and to acknowledge your consent to cooperation on the enclosed postcard.

I extend my best thanks in this way for your friendly efforts and greet you with great esteem.

With Respect
C. Schmittdiel.

* The second page contains a list of philatelic specialties with one or more members names against each one.

Translator's note: Unfortunately this letter contains some misspellings, which make certain words rather unintelligible, therefore difficult to translate.

END

Document 3

Translated by Charles A Tuteur

Typescript with no date or signature, n.d. [1935?], 2pp.

It would appear to be comments on the responses received in reply to an article or earlier Circular. Although it gives only the response side of each piece of correspondence, in most cases, the contents of the original letter can be inferred.

Society of Friends of Philatelic Literature, Hamburg

Director: C Schmittdiel, 45 Tornquiststrasse, Hamburg 19, -- Organ: Philatelic Literature

New Address

Postal check account Eidelstedterweg August 1, 1935

Hamburg 7205 30 Hamburg 30

In regard to our journal of the 25th of May this year, we must unfortunately report, that in spite of prospects at hand, an arrangement for publishing items related to our interests in a philatelic periodical has not been realized.

The director of the society plans therefore to make available a member's publications in the area of philatelic literature in a different manner.

If there are members, who will actively participate in sharing articles about our specialty, publication of these shall begin shortly. Each item will be duplicated. Members will receive the publications free of charge. Nonmembers will pay the cost for each publication.

For this reason, we request that all members, who wish to participate in writing to support our organization, send us literary articles related to our specialty at the earliest possible date. Because the production of a publication is costly, we cannot, sadly, provide an honorarium for the work. Our communal spirit (esprit de corps) must be our strength. We will also always be grateful for good suggestions from our members.

We hope soon to receive the requested support from the majority of our members. We will publish the articles in the order in which they are received.

We suggest that members, who wish to serve by making suggestions, especially in regard to issuing the publication, contact the board.

The Society's Director, C. Schmittdiel
Society for Friends of Philatelic Literature

END

SOCIETY FOR THE FRIENDS OF PHILATELIC LITERATURE

INVITATION

Dear Members!

In order to get our society into the Register of Societies in the Hamburg Lower Court, we hereby invite you to our

1st General Meeting on Sunday, 15th October 1933, at 10 in the morning, in the Hamburg-Eimsbüttel, at the Charlottenhof Restaurant, 109 Fructallee (corner of Charlottenstrasse). (The venue can best be reached from the main Hamburg Station by Tram Route 33).

AGENDA

1. Opening address and welcome
2. Society and financial report (C. Schmittdiel)
3. Report on making our society an "e.V."
4. Acceptance of Articles of Association (text herewith)
5. Election of Committee
6. Selection of Auditor
7. Motions
8. Any other business

Reference should be made to §7 of the Articles of Association, which are valid for the first General Meeting.

Members resident in Hamburg at the moment are:

Heinrich Carl Kiehn, 24 Dimpfelsweg, Hamburg 26

Bank Director Ernst Koch, 5 Husumerstrasse, Hamburg 30

Teacher Hermann Lüdecke, 45 Eichenstrasse, Hamburg 19: from the 5th October, 38
Brietenfelderstrasse, Hamburg 30

Carl Schmittdiel, 45 Tornquiststrasse, Hamburg 19

With philatelic greetings
Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature
Schmittdiel

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION of the Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature

Founded on the 1st October 1932

§1. Name and Location

The Society has the name Gesellschaft der Philatelistischen Literaturfreunde (Society of the Friends of Philatelic Literature). It has its physical and legal location in Hamburg and has been legally registered.

§2. Aim

The aim of the Society is the promotion of the knowledge about and collection of philatelic literature.

§3. Membership

Membership is open to anyone of good standing who has completed 21 years of life. Applications should be sent in writing to the Chairman giving date of birth, occupation and full address. On entry to the Society every member agrees to abide by the Constitution. People who have made outstanding contributions to the Society, to philatelic literature or the science of philately, can be nominated as honorary members by either the Committee or the membership as a whole.

§4. Society Year and Subscription

The Society year is the calendar year. The annual subscription will be decided by the membership as a whole but can also be decided by the Committee if necessary. The subscription is due in January of every year and the full amount will be due for the calendar year from anyone joining later.

§5. Committee

The Committee will be elected at the Annual General Meeting. It consists of three people; the 1st Chairman, the 2nd Chairman and the Secretary-Treasurer. The Chairman in the sense of §26 BGB is the 1st Chairman: he represents the Society internally and externally, for all legal and extra-legal affairs. In the case of impediment, his place will be taken by his representative, the 2nd Chairman. The Committee as a whole divides up the work and can be expanded if necessary. Entire or partial re-election is permissible. All Committee members are honorary members. Committee members may stand in for one another. The Committee will meet as often as the 1st Chairman or his representative thinks necessary. Two auditors are to be selected at the same time as the Committee. These do not have to be members. When new auditors are chosen, one of them should not be re-elected.

§6. Annual General Meeting

The Annual General Meeting will be called yearly in January. The agenda will be as follows:-

1. Committee's Report
2. Treasurer's Report
3. Report from Auditor
4. Resignation of Committee
5. Election of new Committee
6. Election of new auditors
7. Any other business

Every member will be given the agenda for the AGM either by letter or by a notice in the Society's journal. An extra-ordinary General Meeting may be called on a resolution of the Committee or at the request of a tenth of the ordinary paid-up members. These may propose their motion in a letter to the 1st Chairman or his representative. Ordinary or extra-ordinary General Meetings will be called by the 1st Chairman or his representative, who will decide the time and place and draw up the agenda with the help of the Committee.

§7. Election and Voting

In ordinary and extra-ordinary AGMs, election is by simple majority. A tie means the motion is lost. Foreign members may be represented by a member resident in Hamburg; but no member may represent more than 50 foreign members at one time. Representatives must be regularly paid-up members. The resolutions must be recorded by the Chairman and Secretary.

§8. Society Publications

The society will issue a Society organ to its members. In this and any occasional special publications, the aims and objectives of the Society, plus all important occasions, must be set out.

§9. Resignation

Resigning members must pay their dues for the current year in full, and must give their resignation in full by letter at the latest by the 30th September to the 1st Chairman or his representative. They have no claim on the Society's funds.

§10. Exclusion

Members who act contrary to the interests of the Society or prove themselves unworthy, can be excluded from the Society on a resolution of the Committee after a hearing. The same applies to members more than three months in arrears with their subscriptions. The full subscription for the current year must be paid. On the whole, all rules and obligations remain valid till the next ordinary or extra-ordinary General Meeting, at which the excluded member can appeal against his exclusion. All resolutions as to the exclusion of a member must be approved by two-thirds of the membership. Excluded members, like resigned ones, have no claim on the Society's assets. The decision to exclude a member cannot be contested at law.

§11. Dissolution

The Society can only be dissolved at an AGM with the consent of three-quarters of the members present. Disposal of the Society's assets will be decided on at the dissolving meeting.

§12. Change in Articles of Association

These articles can only be changed on a proposal from the Committee or a written proposal from at least three members by a three-quarters majority at an Annual General Meeting.

END

SOCIETY FOR THE FRIENDS OF PHILATELIC LITERATURE

Society for Promoting the Knowledge and Collection of Philatelic Literature

Editor: C. Schmitt diel, 45 Tornquiststrasse, Hamburg 19
Organ "Die Philatelistische Literature"

PO Box Hamburg 7205
New Address: 33 Eidelstedterweg
Hamburg 30

26th September 1935

Paul Simson
60 Naumannstrasse
Berlin-Schöneberg

Dear Mr. Simson,

Thank you for your esteemed postcard dated the 9th of this month. I am only answering today because my lists of duplicates and wanted items were not ready, and I only got back today from Czechoslovakia.

The two lists are enclosed and I ask you to let me have them back when you have finished with them so that I can use them again. I hope we shall achieve a profitable exchange.

As for our Society journal, I am now doing my best to find a new publisher, but without success. I have contacted various publishers but their charges are too high for our little journal.

However, to keep our society alive, I have turned to another field of activity, and joined up with another larger and well-known philatelic publisher and reached an understanding.

Numerous collectors have, for years, wanted to see the publication of the reference work "Bibliography of Philatelic Literature in German" it will be printed if we can get literature collectors to take part in its preparation. Our Society has undertaken to produce it, and I will be the editor. As compensation for the missing Society journal, our members will be repaid their subscriptions for the year 1935, by the free supply of one or more parts of the "Bibliography".

I ask you to treat this matter as confidential for the time being, I will deal with the publication myself before long. You will soon hear more from me about this. I would not recommend leaving our Society, especially as our Society has undertaken a field of activity very important to it, and which will call for serious activity which will result in the end in the production of the work so long desired by friends of literature.

A proof sheet of the "Bibliography"

With German greetings
C. Schmitt diel

Document 6

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS OF PHILATELIC LITERATURE

Dear Members,

During the year we were forced to reduce the printing of our club newspaper. I am sure you feel disappointed the way we feel. The reason being the high cost of production. Our newspaper featured many rich and interesting subjects not seen anywhere. However, there is a possibility to enlarge our monthly newspaper with 12 to 16 or possibly more pages, if our hoped for help could become reality. The publication has, up to now, published with excessive expenses. A continuation of our newspaper on a present basis is unfortunately impossible.

If you wish to continue receiving our newspaper and, if possible, enlarge it as we hopefully wish, we must depend on our members as well as future members to help us to the best of your ability. Also, we would like to count on you in helping with the acquisition of new members. Up to now we never solicited for help, however, conditions force us to do so. The yearly membership fee will remain at 3 R.M. inclusive monthly delivery of our newspaper. If you wish, we would send you a prospectus of sample issues of our newspaper.

Also, we would appreciate to receive a listing of addresses of serious philatelists worldwide. Perhaps some would wish to join our organisation or to receive our newspaper. The bigger the effort, the more we will be able to accomplish and thereby will be able to be advantageous to our members. Our newspaper will, as always, appear every month with regularity.

The size of our paper will depend on our members as well as potential new members. The larger the distribution, the more informative our paper will be. If our members could bring a new member every month, the membership of our Society could increase to 1,800 members within one year. If we persevere we would enjoy the fruits of our labour.

In order to maintain our organisation we ask from our members as well as our associates, etc., to please forward the yearly payment of 3 R.M. Also, we ask of our members in case of advertising, to please consider our organisation. Our edition is high and has a following of prominent readers in philately.

Also, stamp dealers and publishing houses might be interested. Our club newspaper is not only of interest for readers of philatelic literature but also stamp collectors in general. With your help and endeavour we are hoping for a successful year.

Thank you
Gesellschaft Philatelistischer Literaturfreunde e.V., Hamburg

Original not found

Document X
Specimens

- x Aerophilatelistische Tagesfragen ("AT")
Airmail journal devoted entirely to aerophilately.
Publisher: Adolf Davirtz, Constance.
I. 1932 No 1 (no date)
- : Allgemeine Briefmaken-Zeitung.
Publisher: Bachmeier, Munich.
I. No 1, 15.3.1912
- ? Briefmarken und Ganzsachen.
Review of all Branches of philately.
Publisher: Rost & Gerber, Oberneusulza.
I. 1920 No 1
- ?x Der Sammlerfreund
Monthly magazine for collectors of stamps and postcards. (Journal for lovers of painting and photography, shorthand and correspondence.)
Continuation of "Die Ansichtspostkarte".
Publisher: Fritz Hergott, Oranienburg.
I. 1920, May issue (No issue number)
- ?x Der Stammgast.
A small publication for stamp collectors and anyone who wants to become one.
Publisher: F. W. Anhalt, 1710 Belmont Avenue, Chicago. (I 11) Free.
I No 1 Jan. 1926.
- Der Vereinsbote.
See Philatelistische Jugendschrift.
- x Deutsches Sammler-Echo.
Publisher: Deutscher Sammler-Bund (Address: Ernst F. Will, Am Kirchberg 24, Eschersheim, Frankfurt-am-Main).
- § Communication from the Bamberg section of the Sammlerbund Union.
- x Sächsisches Briefmaken-Offertenblatt.
Separate supplement to the Sächsischen Briefmarkenzeitung, q.v.
- :v Vereinsbörse der Intrernationalen Vereinigung von Ganzsachensammlern zu Leipsig.
Supplement to Mitteldeutschen Philatelistenzeitung.
Should appear monthly, actually appear only as needed.
I.1892....II.....III. No 24-31....IV. Nos 32-37:1.1. -1.9.96....
V. Nos 38-43:1.1. -1.11.97.....VI. Nos 44-50:1.1. -1.12.98....
VII. Nos 51-52:1.3. -10.12.99

Symbols

- | | |
|---|-------------------------------------|
| 1 | Title |
| 2 | Subtitle |
| 3 | H: Publisher |
| 4 | I....II... Volume, number and date. |

Abbreviations

(These have been chosen by me, as they are available on my typewriter, Herr Preuss used different symbols in the original Schmittdiel)

- | | |
|---|--------------------------|
| ! | Ceased |
| § | Nothing else known |
| ? | Is still appearing ? |
| v | Reproduction permitted ? |
| o | I have seen one issue |
| x | I own one issue |

Alphabetical Arrangement

By the first letter of title.

Allgemeine Briefmarken-Zeitung
Briefmarkenverkehr
Concordia-Post
Das Basler Täubchen
Der Bazar
Deutsch-amerikanische Bfm.Ztg.
Deutsch-oesterreichische Bfm.Ztg.
Deutsche Zeitung f.Bfm.Kunde.
Deutscher Philatelist
Deutsches Sammler-Echo
Die Post
Fortuna
Grüne Sammler-Welt
Heitmanns Ratgeber
Etc.

N.B. My index also gives the sources from which I obtained the titles etc.

P.Preuss

Dear Member,

We are writing with regard to our general letter of 25 May of this year, and unfortunately we have to inform you that we were, in spite of the apparently likelihood, not able to close the deal regarding the publication of items of interests to us in a philatelic newspaper.

For that reason, the directors of the club are intending to provide the membership with publications dealing with the area of philatelic literature via another method.

Assuming that we have members who are interested in working on such an offering, we will begin in the near future with the publication of those articles about our special area. The individual issues will appear as mimeographed copies. Members will receive the issues, sent to them at no cost. Non-members will have to pay the appropriate price for each issue.

We therefore ask all of our members, who for the good of our aims, wish to become active in the writing field, to send us their literary works on our field very soon. Since it is very costly to produce these publications, we will not be able to offer any honoraria [for them]. Here the sense of community will have to provide the strength we need [to write these articles]. We will, of course, also be thankful for suggestions from our members.

We hope to receive from the greater part of our membership very soon the support which we are seeking. The articles will be published in the order in which we receive them.

We recommend that those members, who with their good advice wish to assist in the publication of these issues, join the editorial board.

The Society of the Friends of Philatelic Literature
An Organization for the Fostering of the Knowledge and Collecting of Philatelic Literature
Administrator: C. Schmittiel
Hamburg 19, Tornquist Street 45 – Newsletter – “Philatelic Literature”
August 1, 1935

Dear Honored Member:

In reference to our circular of May 25th last, we must sadly inform you that because of the existing situation a decision to publish our interests in a philatelic newspaper has not come to pass.

The management intends nonetheless intends to arrange to publish in another way on behalf of the membership in specific areas of philatelic literature.

If among our members there can be found energetic cooperation to share (with others) the publication of works in our specific areas can begin. The specifics will be detailed here. Those that are members will receive the publications free of charge. Nonmembers will pay the set price per copy. We therefore ask all of our members that are interested in the welfare of our endeavors to provide as soon as possible, articles in specific fields. As the preparation for printing is quite costly, we cannot provide any remuneration. With regard to this matter, our concern for the (philatelic) community must be strong. However, we are thankful to our membership for any good advice that they can provide us.

We hope that the majority of our membership will speedily provide the requested support. The works will be published as soon as possible after they have been received. Members that can provide solid advice are asked to join the working committee.

The Administration
The Society of the Friends of Philatelic Literature

END

Literatur - Nachrichten
1995, Issue 95

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2001

LITERATUR - NACHRICHTEN

1995, Issue 95

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of the article titles and general headings for a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical and includes full translations of all articles of interest to me.

p.4

PREFACE

In the year 1995 again numerous philatelic publications in the German speaking countries were printed, which are offered to you in a newly documented Literatur - Nachrichten. The Bund Deutscher Philatelisten e.V. (BDPh) thanks all authors and/or editors, who took care that the philatelic research discoveries in word and picture were collected and published. Because to keep back research results and withhold them from others would definitely be detrimental in the highest grade to the mutual interest of philately.

The Bund Deutscher Philatelisten will, with the support of the Stiftung zur Förderung der Philatelie und Postgeschichte e.V. reinforce their efforts to help authors publish their research results and conclusions in every respect. Because unpublished research results are lost results. Therefore. I appeal to all potential philatelic authors to turn to the BDPh, when it concerns the publication of new conclusions. You can be assured that every support will be granted.

I am concerned about the fact that a whole group of club chairpersons have not ordered the book of the Literatur - Nachrichten (free of charge). Is this a sign of lack of interest or only carelessness? It is my opinion that every chairperson of a club should be interested in making it easier for their members to have access to philatelic literature. In the BDPh, philatelic literature is and will be one of the main pillars on which philately is based. If this is neglected, philately loses stability and consequently quality.

In this context, I would like to point out that the collection of philatelic reports is also available in the form of diskettes. Modern techniques make it possible to seek and find desired articles quickly. Maybe this is an alternative for you?

I especially want to thank the leader of the Bundestellen Forschung und Literature, Franz-Josef Lindauer of Soest, who has gathered with much care and meticulous precision the data collection before you. Only a few of you can imagine, how many work hours had to be invested to complete this task - and this absolutely voluntarily! I am sure that Franz-Josef Lindauer will also work on the Literatur - Nachrichten in 1996 for which the BDPh is grateful.

Soest, 28th November 1997

Franz-Karl Lindner, German Federation of Philatelists

p.852

AFTERWORD

Dear user of the Literatur – Nachrichten, as you already read in the Preface, this and the editions since the year 1991 are available in an electronic version and can be requested from Phil*Creative Verlag, BDPh*PHILA*SCHOP, Postfach 10, 41366 Schwalmtal.

Despite the fact that several co-workers of mine - headed by Mrs. Johanna Finger - as well as my dear wife have tried to find all mistakes, you can be sure to still find some.

That is why I would like to ask users to let me know about typos and other mistakes. Should an edition of a magazine or an article not have been analyzed or mentioned, please let me know that also. Those mistakes can be corrected in the electronic version. Thank you in advance to all who write me.

In closing I would like to thank all my helpers on our team, who analyzed the publications, namely Messrs. Hartwig Danesch, Schwelm, Ulrich Jobsky, Wiehl, Jörg Maier, München, Rainer von Scharpen, Mainz, Gerhard Trögel, Leverkusen, Christian Schunck, Trier and Jürgen Zalaszewski, Manching, who are responsible for many international magazines, as well as all copy editors. Without your labour the Literatur - Nachrichten would only be worth half as much.

Again, thank you.

Franz-Josef Lindauer, Group Leader, Research and Literature

END

Wolfram Buddensieg & Jürgen Jänecke
Index of the Bahnpost Berichte 1973-1998
[Index der Berichte Bahnpost 1973-1998]
Schriftenreihe 1, Bundesarbeitsgemeinschaft Bahnpost, 2000, Germany

Translation of the Contents page, p.4, and the picture captions

Translation produced by Wolfram Buddensieg for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2000

INDEX OF THE BAHNPOST BERICHTE 1973-1998

CONTENTS

Chapters

- I. Editorial of the Chairman
- II. Notices of the editors
- III. TPO service of Germany, occupied zones, colonies
- IV. TPO postmarks, cancellations
- V. TPO departments
- VI. Highway Post Office, Seepost, Street car post
- VII. TPO service and instructions, orders, types of dispatches, sections, time-tables
- VIII. Mail cars and technique
- IX. Post and railway history, at home and abroad
- X. Reports of literature
- XI. Regional study groups in Germany (research)
- XII. TPO service and postmarks (cancellations) abroad

Appendix

Questions and Answers on all topics

Author Index

Pictures

A lot of post-markings and Swiss stamp with a TPO theme

Page 9	Our partners in England, USA and France
Page 12	Documents relating to the first TPO trip between East and West Germany after union
Page 13	Catalogue of TPO types in Germany
Page 18	Seal of TPO service Nr. 19 in Frankfurt
Page 19	Labels for bundles and bags
Page 22	Seals on bag labels (with strings)
Page 23	Time-table of a TPO section in Hesse
Page 24	Mail car (the Society is the owner) with original interior; at its stand in the Saarland (Railway museum)
Page 28	Literature (TPO France and Germany)
Page 29	Regional study groups of Hesse
Page 54	TPO covers from the USA and Japan
Page 55	Our two mail cars on route to the museum Street transportation of our mail car to the fair-ground inside Nuremburg for a stamp exhibition Railway mail clerks in front of their mail car in Basel, Switzerland (service to Frankfurt) Sorting letters from Switzerland on the route from Frankfurt to Basel.

END

Eduardo Escalada-Goicoechea
The Organisation of the Carlist Post (1873-1876)
[La Organización del Correo Carlista (1873-1876)]
Discursos Académicos, Volume 11, Academia Hispánica de Filatelia, Madrid, Spain, 2000

Translation of the author's biography only, pp.5-6

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2001

EDUARDO ESCALADA-GOICOECHEA

Born in Madrid on the 22nd February 1952, married with four children, studied Economic and Management Sciences at the Universidad Complutense in Madrid.

His love for philately started when he was nine, during a stay at a boarding school in Burdeos in 1961 and 1962. In this town, he paid his first visit to a specialized stamp store, L. Boscus. The attraction exercised by the small, transparent packets, full of mysterious stamps of the French colonies, started in him a fondness, that has never left him. In time, he put together a worldwide collection - which he still retains - containing stamps of exotic countries, from the farther away, the better. This first childish step gave rise to other, more methodical and orthodox ones, in which the specialized catalogues and books opened to him the enormous areas that still remained to be discovered. Two works, the Manual de Filatelia by José M^a Llerendi, the pseudonym of Agustín Piracés, Barcelona 1940, and the Manual del Experto en Sellos de España [Manual of an Expert on Spanish Stamps] by Dr. L. Blas, Madrid 1960, both pleasant and easy to read, awakened in him his first investigative eagerness. At this time, he became a member of the Sociedad Filatélica de Madrid (SOFIMA) and began what was going to become one of his more important collections: A study of postal and philatelic forgeries. Furthermore, of all the specimens that he was discovering, most were from such collections as V. J. Senabre, A. Guezala, R. Ruiz de Arcaute and King Carol of Romania, on the whole, it comprised more than ten thousand pieces before the project was complete. Other collections of his, those of the Carlist Wars, of which he kept solely those of the first war of 1832/1839, allowed him to acquire a deep knowledge of everything related to essays, designs, proofs, printing systems, papers, plates, postmarks and forgeries. However, the collection in which he has maintained without doubt the keenest interest, never dwindling in the last twenty-five years, is the one related to books and documents on the postal service and philately. This specialized library of Spain and her colonies is considered the most important in private hands and had the honour to be exhibited in the Court of Honour at the last World Exhibition in Madrid, España 2000.

In 1983 he started his professional activity in the philatelic trade as director of the Gabinete Filatélico de Madrid [Madrid Philatelic Bureau], a position that he still holds at the present time. He belongs to the professional associations APF, ANFIL, PTS & IFSDA.

Author of the Official Catalog of the Iberoamerican Collections at the worldwide exhibition Granada '92, for which he obtained a vermeil medal at the international exhibition in New York, Philitex '92, he has also collaborated with specialized magazines such as Cronica Filatélica as well as others of more general character Tribuna, Tiempo and Manifiesto, for each of which he wrote a weekly column on stamps, for over eleven years.

He was one of the judges at the worldwide exhibition España 2000 and is also a member of the Comité de Expertos de Madrid (CEM) since its foundation; the Association Internationale des Experts en Philatélie (AIEP); the American Philatelic Society (APS); the Collectors Club of New York; the Sociedad Filatélica Sevillana; the Cuban Philatelic Society of America and the Asociación Hispánica de Publicistas Filatélicos y Numismáticos (AHPFN). He has given lectures at the Postal Museum in Madrid and at SOFIMA and has been an elected member of the Academy since 1986 and (de número?) since 1992.

END

Adalbert W. Wiederholt
Infothek
Internationale Forschungsgemeinschaft Kirchenstaat mit Vorphilatelie und Vatikanstaat, Germany, 2000

Translation of the Introduction only, pp.(i) + 1-2

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2001

INFOTHEK

PREFACE

The INFOTHEK of the "IFG" (International Research Group Papal States with pre-philately and Vatican City) is a compilation of books, videos and photo copies of collections of its members. The objects are to be used for further research and deepening of knowledge regarding the Papal and Vatican States.

Construction started in 1996. A list followed in 1997. An expansion is anticipated in 2001.

All members of the "IFG" are called upon to submit more material to the INFOTHEK. Regulations for loaned objects are attached.

Admission into the INFOTHEK occurs after new additions.

Adalbert W. Wiederholt
Georgsmarienhütte, April 2000.

REGULATIONS FOR OBJECTS ON LOAN

Important tips for the use of "INFOTHEK" of the Internationale Forschungsgemeinschaft Kirchenstaat mit Vorphilatelie und Vatikanstaat:

All objects offered on loan remain the property of the supplier if no instructions were made to the contrary. The objects have been offered as a loan to the "IFG".

LOAN REGULATIONS FOR MEMBERS

- * Each member of the "IFG" can use the INFOTHEK free of charge.
- * The user will keep the loaned object in good condition.
- * Shipping charges will be paid by the persons who request documents.
- * Return mail takes place through pre-payments of postage.
- * Damaged documents have to be replaced by the user.
- * Loans are limited to four weeks.

LOAN REGULATIONS FOR NON-MEMBERS

Loans to non-members take place by reimbursement of costs and a loan charge of DM 10.00 as well as a deposit of DM 100.00. The deposit minus loan charges and postage will be reimbursed after receipt of documents.

- * The deposit has to be paid to the account of the "IFG". After receipt of funds, the objects are mailed.
- * After return to the "IFG" detailed calculations are returned (see page 1).
- * Apart from these regulations for loans, transactions for members of the "IFG" as well as non-members are treated the same.

Bank Account for the "IFG":

Address for loan objects:

Adalbert Wiederholt, Domaxen 2, 49124 Georgsmarienhütte
Telephone: 05401/6716

END

Alexander Bungerz
The Sale of the Herbert Clark Library
[Die Versteigerung der Bibliothek von Herbert Clark]
Verlag der Philatelistische Bücherwurm, Berlin, Germany, 1924, 17pp.

Translation of the introductory and end text only, pp.1 & 16-17

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2000

THE SALE OF THE HERBERT CLARK LIBRARY.

Since the disposal of the large Library of Alfred Smith in the years 1916-1918 no important libraries have been dissolved, as far as I know, until the well known auctioneer H. R. Harmer on the 18th and 19th February 1924, auctioned off the Clark Library. The catalogue contained 31 pages with 553 items, including some works by E. Heginbottom. All in all the quantity is not very high, however the numbers play a trick on you, since some contain numerous items, which definitely do nothing for their overview and clarity.

Which rules and regulations were incorporated in this catalogue has escaped my intensive studies. It seems that there is no systematic order, neither alphabetical, chronological or bibliophilical, just random pages of periodicals, books and compilation lots. Even the separation of different languages is missing, which makes it rather difficult - not to mention time consuming - to find one's way through this catalogue. A truly rewarding and instructive discussion is for this reason, nearly impossible. Nevertheless, I am going to try to communicate some of the results of its content.

Some of the lots have achieved considerable sums, even so - for us Germans, who are used to paying high prices - the results are often disappointing. And we have to consider, that during the time, when this auction was held, English postage stamps realized low prices in my estimation. It seems the eagerness to buy and the purchasing power in England have also suffered. To make the list not too long, I have noted only lots that realized one Pound or more. Realized prices are noted in parenthesis after the lot descriptions.

Lot 2. Ewen's Weekly Stamp News, Numbers 1 - 800, 1899 -1915 complete with all published issues. A very difficult series to complete in excellent condition, (2 Pounds).

Lot 5. Oswald March's [sic] Weekly Circular and its continuation. March's Weekly Philatelist, 1908 - 1917, Numbers 1 - 460, three volumes bound and the rest in parts. A very difficult set to obtain and containing much useful matter for English specialists. (1 Pound 8 Shillings).

pp.16-17

The above list shows that the rarities were sometimes auctioned off well below their value, sometimes appropriately. The highest price garnered, Lot 544, Japan, of which no other copy of this edition is known, was 15 Pounds and 10 Shilling. That shows that the English set great store on excellent conservation, existence of envelopes, attachments etc. The ideal is the totally uncut specimen, if possible unopened. Bibliophilic interests come into play, not study purposes. To our German book aficionados, who possibly have works in very badly kept condition, the results of the Clark auction should be a lesson to purchase books and periodicals as well as postage stamps only in pristine condition, if possible. The number and condition of the library works contribute not only to the value, but also its preservation. So he who collects not only for the pure study of philatelic literature, but does not want a disappointment in a sale later on, should be discriminating in the selection of his collecting objects!

It seems to be apparent, that some works were already sold before the auction, because Der Briefmarkenfreund (1864) by Moritz Ruhl which was part of the library, is missing. Of course it is possible that it failed to be recognized as a significant German work and was sold in a large lot, hidden under a number of handbooks.

There are hardly any German works, periodicals and books represented, although it can be assumed, that in compilation lots, which contained foreign speaking periodicals, some German rarities - except for lot 462 - were not recognized in the Clark Library.

END

Jürgen Andriesen
Inventory List of Literature
[Bestandsliste der Literaturstelle]
Arbeitsgemeinschaft Deutsche Notmassnahmen ab 1945, Germany, 1997, 32pp.

Translation of the introductory text only, pp.1-2

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
2001

10 YEARS LITERATURE LIST OF THE WORKING GROUP ON GERMAN EMERGENCY MEASURES AFTER 1945 E.V.

What all study groups of the BDPh had wished for a long while, but which had not been put into practice, was already begun in the year 1987 by the erstwhile study group LOKNOT and has now been expanded by the study group Deutsche Notmassnahmen nach 1945 - the construction of the Working Group's own library.

"Literaturstelle" does not mean only a collection of books, but above all evaluation of the total specialized literature published, which deals with our collecting field. An evaluation encompasses all relevant articles with author, title and source into a professional literature registration program, EDV-style, and with corresponding keywords. Because of that, the total holdings can be selected in all ways and for each individual theme, pertaining to all literature types.

The following pages list all of the holdings of the library. The largest space is reserved for the book titles. But the main focus of the holdings is the individual articles, especially from philatelic magazines from before 1945, and the newsletters of the relevant study groups in the BDPh, which deal with the history after the second world war.

In total - aside from about 450 book titles - 2500 individual publications with nearly 600 corresponding head words have been registered.

As has been mentioned in the past, every Working Group member can use the library for his own purpose. Send an inquiry and - reimbursing postage - you can get a list of the library items on your desired theme. The list contains information of the title, author and source. Using this information, you can decide which article is of interest to you and whether you might like photocopies. The source information gives you an idea about the size of the publication (page numbers). That will help you in the calculation of the desired copies. If you do want copies, please calculate expenses of DM 0.30 per page, which can be paid by stamps or paper currency. Add to that a flat rate of DM 3.00 for shipping and handling.

Unfortunately it is not possible to borrow individual items.

Please note: The library finances the office costs solely through postage and copy monies. So, please enclose with your questions and copy requests the above mentioned fees.

Finally, a few words regarding copyright and quotation rights. During the 8th Soester Meeting of 1988, Wolf J. Pelikan in his discussion of the article Copyright - Questions and Discussion quotes as follows (extract): It is permitted to produce single copy for your own private use. Individual copies for your professional use for example by industrialists, free lance persons, authorities, institutes of higher learning and researching may not copy without the permission of the author. The copying of complete books and magazines for your own use is permitted only with the agreement of the publisher.

In short, that's all. Even though the words are almost as old as the Working Group library, they still retain their validity. In this spirit, the copies provided by the library should be judged. It should be a matter of fact that the use of others' ideas and paragraphs in your own publications oblige you to add the author's and source's details.

Wuppertal, Fall 1997

Jürgen Andriesen

END

W. H. Hertfelder
Library Catalogue
[Bibliotheks-Verzeichnis]
Arbeitsgemeinschaft R+V-Zettel, Germany, March 1987

Translation of the introductory page only, n.pp. [p.1]

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
September 2001

LIBRARY CATALOGUE

To all collectors-friends who contributed to the start of the R+V library, we say our sincere thanks. They made it possible for the decision of 1986 - to create a Society-owned library - to become a reality.

We deliver this first listing of the still modest content to you for practical use and combine at the same time the plea that you will continue to actively support us with the on-going built-up and also with the use of the library.

Tuttlingen, March 1987

END

Ulrich Felzmann
The “Emil W. Mewes” Library
[Bibliothek “Emil W. Mewes”]
Auction 97, 2nd May 2001, Ulrich Felzmann Briefmarken-Auktionen, Germany

Translation of the Foreword only, n.pp. [p.1]

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar’s Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
2001

THE “EMIL W. MEWES” LIBRARY

FOREWORD

Dear Friends of the Felzmann Auction-House!

We are delighted to present a literature offer of the extra class, especially that of Emil W. Mewes, during our extensive spring auction of 2001 (auction 97).

Emil W. Mewes (1900-2000) was an enthusiast of philately par excellence. On the one hand he, the senior master of philately from Dusseldorf, dedicated himself to numerous collecting areas, on the other hand, he was above all an expert on philatelic literature. The distinguishing feature was Emil W. Mewes did not only collect philatelic literature, he created it! As editor of the Sammler-Lupe (1951-1974), as editor of the Merkur (1955-1964) and the Neuen Schriftreihe der Poststempelgilde Rhein-Donau e.V. (whole numbers 1-140), as well as advisor for numerous additional publications, Emil W. Mewes was the “Philatelic Literature Pope” in the last 50 years in Germany and other countries. In addition, he was the representative and member of the board of directors of the BDPh, other philatelic institutions and finally juror at international exhibitions. Because of these numerous titles and responsibilities, it stands to reason that the Mewes library grew to an extent, which a “normal” collector can only imagine.

This enormous philatelic literature inheritance is now going to be described and provides an unimaginable, incomparable offer for all possible collectors’ areas. Remarkable, are the big philatelic encyclopaedias, early stamp collecting periodicals of the late 19th Century, as well as basic works for all imaginable collecting areas of Germany, Europe and the new world, often in the form of special editions. Some outstanding titles are mentioned here: The legendary Crawford-Catalogue, Moens’ Catalogue Prix Courant de Timbre ... (containing all stamps, postal stationery and government issues of the whole world!) Fournier: Album de Facsimiles and Wilson: The Royal Philatelic Collection.

Of course it is worth the effort to use all of the literature titles mentioned, letters, government publications, circulars of the working groups and many monographs for your studies. The enormous volume of the Mewes library makes it necessary, to offer many country and theme-specific lots. The early lots are downright good value.

We wish you an interesting inspection of this catalogue and much success for your bidding!

Dusseldorf, April 2001

Ulrich Felzmann
Postage Stamp Auctions

END

Corneille Soeteman
The Corneille Soeteman Library
Part I, La Philatélie Corneille Soeteman, Postal auction, 26th September 2001, Brussels, Belgium

Translation of the introductory page only, n.pp. [p.1]

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2002

THE CORNEILE SOETEMAN LIBRARY

My library was begun a little more than 30 years ago.

It consists of about 9,000 works, and includes the great majority of bibliographic rarities in philately. It is characterised principally by the excellent state of conservation of the books, and the beauty of the bindings, carried out gradually by master bookbinders whilst retaining the original covers.

The section of works produced by Jean-Baptiste Moens is remarkable and extensive. There is only one collection as important, that of Georges Waroquiers who persuaded me to begin this fantastic collection 25 years ago.

The library will be sold in 3 parts, the second of which will be offered at the end of 2001. With a few rare exceptions, the asking prices are the cost prices, bindings included.

The sale of this collection is a personal decision, taken and announced several years ago. It was simply an initiative of forethought for a relatively important patrimony of which I am the sole administrator.

It is thus with a certain nostalgia that I part with my collection.

I extend heartfelt thanks to the many friends who have added to this sale certain high-quality items.

END

Hans-Jürgen Dobiāt
Foreword to the 1st edition
[Vorwort zur 1. Lieferung]
Katalog der Philatelistischen Bibliothek Wuppertal e.V., Wuppertal, Germany, n.d. (ca.2001), n.pp. [p.1]

Translation produced by Mark Anderson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2002

FOREWORD TO 1ST EDITION

Dear Friends of Philatelic Literature:

A little more than two years have passed since the founding of the Wuppertal Philatelic Library. We are now ready to present the first catalogue of works. It already comprises nearly 200 pages. Over 2,000 titles are available and presented in this catalogue. Naturally, some interest areas are more strongly represented than others. We are financed entirely by membership dues and gifts. At this juncture I wish to thank the following for their generous support: Wuppertal City Savings Bank (Stadtsparkasse Wuppertal), Wuppertal Spardabank (Spardabank Wuppertal) and the auction house Heinrich Köhler, Wiesbaden. Without this financial support the publication of this catalogue would not have been possible.

We purposely chose the loose-leaf format. This makes it easy to insert supplements and new additions - hopefully numerous ones. By means of the enclosed order forms you can order your binder and catalogue. By means of the same form you can secure a subscription to all future instalments. In this way you will always receive supplements as they appear.

We are always happy to receive gifts, whether in the form of literature or money. It is also possible to submit literature on permanent loan. If this interests you, please write to the Chairman Hans-Jürgen Dobiāt, Postfach 101507, 42015 Wuppertal.

We now wish you much pleasure in rummaging through our catalogue.

Wuppertal Philatelic Library

END

Abel Fontaine
[Abel Fontaine]

Cronista Filatélico, August 2001, Issue 240, pp.25-30

This is the first page of an article entitled Día de la prensa filatélica.
[Philatelic press day.], p.25

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2002

Thirty – eighth anniversary

PHILATELIC PRESS DAY

On Friday the 3rd August 2001, the Association of Philatelic Journalists of Argentina (ACFA) again celebrated its Philatelic Press Day. The celebration was held in its own headquarters, in the presence of a large gathering which filled the room. Authorities, members, officers and amateurs were present to take part in the annual fiesta of the ACFA.

ABEL FONTAINE

In line with a decision adopted some time ago, each report pays homage to those who have helped in the development of Argentine philatelic literature. This time the reports were on Abel Fontaine, a Belgian immigrant born in 1849, who moved to Argentina in the closing years of the 19th century, and who was named by maestro Bose as the first Argentine philatelic journalist. Abel Fontaine also occupied himself in collecting together all of the Argentine philatelic publications of his time (including overseas ones). Thanks to him, these pioneering publications have survived to our own days. On his death, in 1926 in Buenos Aires, his pupil (he was a teacher of French) and friend Pablo Ernesto Busch saved from destruction part of his collection, especially that relating to the Argentine philatelic press. The ceremony began with allusive words from the President of the Association, Lic. Giordano, who then extended a welcome to the gathering and then gave a brief account of the personality and work of Abel Fontaine, also recalling the Catálogo de Revistas Filatélicas y Cartófilas de la República Argentina 1874-1926 [Catalogue of philatelic and Postcard Journals of the Argentine Republic 1874-1926], by Pablo Ernesto Buch. Previously he had presented Dr. Julio E. Rey Ordóñez, the President of the National Assessing Commission for philately, to the meeting.

END

Burkhard Schneider

Literature Offer N°12 with the "Taunus Library" Part 4

[Literaturangebot Nr. 12 mit "Taunus-Bibliothek" 4]

Burkhard Schneider Postgeschichte & Antiquariat, Gelnhausen, Germany, November 2001, n.pp. [pp.i-ii]

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2002

LITERATURE OFFER N°12 WITH THE "TAUNUS LIBRARY" PART 4

Order No. 408877: Price DM 1,200

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm, complete journal, volumes 1-18, 1921-1938, founded by Alexander Bungerz and Carl Beck, and from 1929 onwards under their editorship, the Journal of the Vereins Philatelistischer Literatursammler (Society of Philatelic Literature Collectors).

Very rare, initially there were only between 35 and 50 subscribers(!), here completed from individual issues in differing states of preservation, partly supplemented by photocopies - very carefully prepared on special paper and trimmed to original format and bound into a single volume, the price-determining, almost unknown special issues numbers 1-5 from the Society, bound into a separate volume. The main volume also includes the continuation of Bücherwurm under the editorship of J. A. Bosshard and Fritz Seifert from 1930, some of these as copies only, from 1936, it was also the organ of the Saxony Society of the State Union, and finally the stamps issue of 1938 which appeared under the same name but is lacking from all other sets offered for sale, known to us. Outstanding value and in the case of the special issues, of high bibliographic value.

The contents to 1929 includes numerous papers, reports and communications from leading German collectors who were in the Society of Philatelic Literature Collectors from 1921. Many came direct from the pens of the still well-known authors Bungerz and Beck. Reports were given on philatelic libraries, society and federation libraries, for example that of Thalmann, the overseer of the library of the Germania-Ring, My philatelic library by Nils Strandell, Stockholm, on the literature exhibitors at the Postage Stamp Exhibition in Berlin 1922 and subsequent exhibitions, the conferral of the Sieger Prize for Philatelic Literature from 1923 on, with the help of the expert committee from the Society of Philatelic Literature Collectors, on new issues at home and abroad. Also published were reviews of literature and catalogues, etc., publications and magazines as they appeared, wants and faults lists, membership lists, etc. The special issues have the following contents:

No. 1: Die Deutschsprachige Philatelistische Literatur im Jahre 1921. (The German-Language Philatelic Literature in the Year 1921.) by Alexander Bungerz, 1923. (N°. 38 of 100 copies)

No. 2.: Bibliographie der Deutschen Sonderschriften über die Postwertzeichen

Einzelner Länder. (Bibliography of German Monographs on the Stamps of Individual Countries.) by Carl Beck, Third enlarged and corrected edition, 1923. (Nº. 89 of 100 copies)

No. 3: Die Deutschsprachige Philatelistische Literatur im Jahre 1922. (The German-Language Philatelic Literature in the Year 1922.) by Alexander Bungerz, 1923. (Nº. 45 of 100 copies)

No. 4: Die Deutschsprachige Philatelistische Literatur im Jahre 1920. (The German-Language Philatelic Literature in the Year 1920.) by Alexander Bungerz, 1923. (No details of copy number)

No. 5: Die Deutschsprachige Philatelistische Literatur im Jahre 1923. (The German-Language Philatelic Literature in the Year 1923.) by Alexander Bungerz, 1925. (No details of copy number)

ANALYSIS OF THE TAUNUS LIBRARY: PART 4

“All’s well that ends well”, with this proverb we could leave the International Stamp Exchange at Sindelfingen. Our literature offering was well received so that it was worth the trouble of putting the books together in exactly 50 book-boxes and treating all the books with distinction. Our aim was to let people handle a book they might already have heard of and let them estimate its usefulness. Our bookmark with our web address, available on our stand and picked up in great numbers, was a great success.

If you yourself are not connected to the Internet, then perhaps you could ask you son, daughter or friend to search our website again for you. They can get into any desired type of collecting and also print out the results. You can then work comfortably from the list, and also order by telephone or letter.

Because of all the preparation and clearing up needed for the Sindelfingen Exchange, our Catalogue has been delayed by 4 weeks. We ask for your indulgence.

In the current Catalogue we make a world-wide offer of philatelic literature, including rare books, postal services, auction catalogues, exhibition catalogues, festschrifts, etc. Much of it comes from the Taunus Library, and much appears for the first time.

If there is nothing here to interest you, please pass our Catalogue to a collector friend, or take it with you to your next club or working group meeting.

Our next Catalogue is planned for February/March 2002 and will then be in Euros.

With friendly compliments

Burkhard Schneider

END

Alfred Montader [Editor]
Philatelic literature
[Littérature philatélique]
Le Postillon, 1st March 1908, Volume 7, Whole number 322, pp.97-100

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2001

PHILATELIC LITERATURE

A Society for Philatelic Literature has been formed in England, which naturally has a special organ. The object of the Society is to encourage the study and collection of philatelic literature, and the publication of a bibliography of currently existing works. The most obvious result is to show its members the total lack of French production in comparison with Germany and above all England. Our only consolation is that other countries are even more negative than we are. One swallow does not make a summer and though the works of Dr. Diena and J. Marco are interesting and well documented, it does not mean there is an Italian or Argentine philatelic literature.

A subscriber to Postillon, an enthusiast, asked me to publish here an in-depth study of French philatelic journals. What journals?

1. Newspapers appearing at certain regular intervals, directed by a competent editor, abreast of the subjects it covers, thoroughly conversant with the philatelist, be they collectors or merchants, not only from the point of view of their names and personalities but also their intellects, their past and present (and probable future) actions and only giving publicity (if at all) to carefully selected announcements, and finally producing documents to support in-depth studies of stamps. This type of newspaper is a journal: there are none in France. The former Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie of Dr. Legrand's time was the only one to come near⁽¹⁾. Abroad, one may quote the Philatelic Record, the P.J.G.B. [Philatelic Journal of Great Britain], the Stamp Collector's Fortnightly, Mekeel's Weekly Stamp News, Der Philatelist, Deutsche Philatelist, the Nederland Tid., etc.

A journal like this calls for a level of production and high annual outlays incompatible with the amount that French collectors are willing to spend. They prefer, and perhaps they are right, to buy a stamp for 7fr.50 rather than a journal for the same price which will not add to the collection.

- Notes (1) The Postillon is like no other journal in the entire world. It has given serious, detailed studies, but perhaps these are what its readers appreciate least, although they are the ones that give the most trouble. What most people want here are arguments: if they see someone getting it in the neck they are happy; but it is a waste of time, as they laugh but take no notice. I have told them a thousand times that forged stamps abound, that most Exchange Societies are simply commercial houses and that commercial travellers in stamps cheat them outrageously; that they ought to shun them like the plague, but nothing happens. I have told them to have nothing to do with speculative stamps, they go on buying them, I tell them their collections are badly kept, they take no notice. On the other hand, they take delight in arguments and there are four hundred people who subscribe to Postillon just to read about them.

2. The periodical which is founded simply to serve the interests of a commercial house: however they are sometimes very well produced. The prototype is the Stanley [Gibbons] Monthly: there are four or five of these in France. I do not see why the Postillon in studying them (what on earth could it say) should give them publicity and thus publicise the firms themselves, when these journals never mention the Postillon, even though they sometimes take ideas, news and subjects from it.

3. Advertising journals: They are not forbidden to have articles: but even if these latter have value, this hardly matters at all to readers who never read them and laugh at them. L'Écho de la Timbrologie is the best known of the French journals here. It is also the manifest proof of what I have just said, for in the course of its already long life it has said awful things about people without anyone protesting and it has published interesting articles that no-one has read: readers skip over them and go on to the adverts, to see if by chance anyone is offering guaranteed authentic Post Office stamps at 0.60 or the 1f new vermillion at face value. Moreover the editors of the Écho are under no illusions: their journal could be a hundred times better and more sumptuously produced, which would be exactly the same, given the tendency of the mass of French collectors towards speculation and their love of lucky finds. These observations apply equally to other journals existing on adverts.

The principal drawback of such journals is that the directors are completely indifferent and wash their hands of the results. The collectors are robbed and robbed again, it is a matter of indifference to them. A topical example is that of Revue Postale and the Cochin China stamps that I quoted recently. Those who refuse an advert which strikes them as dangerous for their readers are very rare indeed.

It should be added that the advertising journal is not free and does not say anything that will displease the advertisers: from time to time one is started which announces a magnificent programme and will reveal everything: of course it buries everything and keeps prudently quiet because if it says anything it will not get a penny of advertising revenue. Does one see the Postillon for example, in the direct or indirect pay of certain of the fellows named in the circular I spoke about?

4. Finally, at the bottom of the ladder and a long way from the previous are the papers that under the cover of adverts, in reality exist by underhand dealings and more or less disguised blackmail: this consists, for example, of hitting at firms which do not give them publicity and fawning on the dealer who does, even if he is the biggest twister in the world. The editor-in-chief changes his views more often than his shirt, and for twenty sous he will say that black is white and white is black. The French philatelic press includes several specimens of this type. It is pointless to say that these gentlemen have no regard for the public.

This being so, I do not see that I can give an in-depth study of the French press, since either I do not tell the truth; which would be at once useless and dangerous, and moreover, I am incapable of minding my language; or I tell the truth and am pursued right down the line, with disloyal rivalry from the category of journals belonging to dealers, and slander from those whose principal occupation is to defame others.

Will the Society for Philatelic Literature collect all these mis-statements, or has it been formed to spread the taste for them?

END

Gesellschaft für Philatelistische Literatur – Rundbrief
September 1956, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2000

GESELLSCHAFT FÜR PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATUR –

RUNDBRIEF

September 1956, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of the article titles and general headings for a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical and includes full translations of all articles of interest to me.

p.1

Shortly before the currency reform of 1948, the then scarcity of money compelled us to cease publication of our hitherto regular weekly news-sheets.

After the existing Committee had been compelled to wind up their current activities, our Society's work came more or less to a stop, since it lacked collaborators. In the meantime our hobby had received a fresh impetus, and after long and persistent preparations we came to the conclusion that our work must be tackled from a completely fresh standpoint. Today we extend our first circular to everyone who we hope will support us once more. Further circulars will appear at regular intervals about four times a year. For the further advancement of our activity we are looking for collaborators in all fields of philatelic literature, and also ask for your letters with criticisms and suggestions. Our next circular will continue the survey of literature, and will appear at the beginning of December. "Baden" and "German overseas postal undertakings and colonies" are planned for subsequent publications.

Our Plans.

The particular tasks assumed by the Society for Philatelic Literature include the following:-

1. Promotion of all attempts to publish philatelic literature by advice, practical help, and sales promotion. Publication of good philatelic literature for which a commercial publisher cannot be found.
2. Promotion of valuable writings and publications of all sorts.

3. Warning against philatelic trash literature and fraudulent price lists.
4. Support and extension of literature review services.
5. Support for the work of the Munich Philatelic Library and other libraries. Help them to support and intensify their international importance. Lending negotiations.
6. Attempts to revive the FIPP (Fédération Internationale de la Presse Philatélique).
7. Ensure the production and distribution of Literatur-Nachrichten (Literature Reports), particularly by enlisting more collaborators with a knowledge of foreign languages, to compile the index to foreign journals subscribed to. Expansion of the circle of helpers.
8. Support philatelic handbooks, encyclopaedias and serials in every possible form.
9. More rational division of work on the index of the specialist journals between working parties and language circles.
10. Action to unify the abbreviations used in citations of technical articles particularly in the index of Literatur-Nachrichten, American Philatelist and Stamp Lover.
11. Attempt to get as far as possible uniform numbering of all known catalogues, so that articles and publications relating to a particular stamp can be brought together under the same index number.
12. Attempt to get financial help from German and international organisations towards a German philatelic index and a philatelic encyclopaedia.
13. Standardisation of format and method of production of all commercially important philatelic publications with the aim of building up a comprehensive body of work in the German language.
14. Creating and building up an archive of reports and photographs for reference purposes.
15. Solving interesting questions of law and supporting philatelic authors in asserting their rights.

p.2

Statutes.

p.3

Literature listing.

In this circular we began to print a list of German literature that will be continued in every number and is free to our members. Over the course of time this information will be collected together for every individual German region and steadily expanded. At the start, the aim will be to give above all, a survey of the outstandingly interesting publications, but later issues will also give the other, sometimes outdated articles. The publications are:-

Saar region Wurttemberg

Ernst Overmann, Duisberg
Christoph Otto Muller, Steinebach

If items mentioned are not available in local or nearby philatelic libraries, they can be borrowed via city libraries from:-

Philatelic Section of the Munich City Library, Room 365, Marienplatz, Rathaus, Munich.

under the usual conditions. Unfortunately we are not able to lend individual volumes at the present time. On the other hand, we are always ready to mediate sales or purchases on payment of our costs, and ask for your letters on this topic.

Important sources for the Saar region collector are the official pamphlets from the then Administration of the Military Government and the Control Commission for the Saar region, and after 1945 from the Military Control for the French zone.

These official pamphlets are, however, usually, unobtainable or very hard to obtain. After extensive searches we managed to get micro-copies of all pages of philatelic interest. These are:-

Official pamphlets of the Control Commission of the Saar region from 1920 to 1935

Also:

Official pamphlets of the French High Command in Baden-Baden, Germany from 1945 to 1950

Anyone interested can get photocopies of individual or all documents on payment of costs and return postage.

p.3

Membership.

We have not requested subscriptions during recent years, but a few of our old members have sent us voluntary contributions, but the Society has no powers in this direction. The present circular is financed by special contributions.

Dear reader and philatelist, may we ask you to support by your efforts the revival of the membership and to ensure future work by contributions or gifts. The members' meeting of the 1st May 1956 decided against setting an annual subscription for 1956: may we ask you to send a contribution of at least 5DM to cover our costs and the further financing of our circulars for the rest of this year. If possible, will you send the subscription for 1957 at the same time, it will be 12DM. As we are a registered Society, we have our own postal cheque account at Essen 68167. You will find a membership application form attached, please fill it in and return it to us. Please make us known to friends and acquaintances who you know might be interested in our work, or give them our publications and apply to us for replacements!

p.4

LIVEDI - Exchange of Literature.

1. Philatelic Literature Wanted

Aguirre, Mercado	The Stamps of Chile
Boggs, Winthrop	The postage stamps and postal history of Canada
Ey	Colonial handbook
Frank, P. F. de	The first issue of Austria and Lombardy-Venetia, 1850/56
Friedemann	Colonial handbook, 2 nd edition
Haworth	Chile, on outline of the postal issues 1766-1919
Kardakoff	Special catalogue from Bons & Goldschein for Russia
Kayssner, Kurt	Great German catalogue of rocket post 1934
Köhler & Leo	Royal Wurttemberg posts issued by postal authorities
Köhler	The Mete posts
Köhl	Stamp handbook, issues 27, 28, 31, 33
Krötzsch	Handbook Vol. 13, Prussia; Russia volume
Kropf	Cancellations on the stamps of Austria-Hungary
Mallet-Veale	South West Africa. London. Harris
Müller, Edwin & St. Mayer	Grand handbook of the cancellations of Old Hungary and Livonia
Nicolaides	Historical description and catalogue of Greek stamps
Nicolaides	History of the creation of the Greek stamps and description of all the issues
	Local description of the post offices in Greater Germany, 1944
Ramella	Catalogue of cancellations of the Pontifical State 1852-1870
Rudolphi	Handbook of the Br, sections 6, 7, 8, 9
Schmidt, Carl	Handbook of the Germany private postage stamps, Vols 1, 2
Schroeder	Check to forgeries
Schulz-Steinheil	Handbook of Swedish Tillfällighets cancellations
Simon	Baden handbook, Vol. 2
Smith	Rocket Mail Catalogue of the Imperial Stamps Co. of India
Tort	Guide to the postage stamps of Spain
Vanet	Handbook of Czechoslovak office stamps
Wanos & Belleville	Catalogue of French varieties of the white type
Journal	Friedemann reports no. 107-116; Vol. 8, nos. 58, 95, 103, 106, 108, 109, 110

2. Philatelic Literature offered

Barclay von Head	Historia numorum, A manual of Greek numismatics. Oxford, 1887. DM48 without postage, 807pp.
Journals	Stamps, Vols 81-84, 86-89, 92-94, DM 15 in all Welt-Ring. Year 5, DM30 Friedemann Reports, nos. 65, 71, 72-76, 79, 82-87, 89-94, 118. Contents index to Vol. 6 Friedemann Reports, 1-8 bound, 9, 10 unbound, DM185 in total
Zschiesche & Köder	Catalogue of all stamps issued to the end of October 1870, 8 th edition

Ohrt
Ohrt

Oldenburg stamps DM34 + postage
New edition, Vol. 4, DM12

Society Committee.

At the members' meeting of 1st May 1956, a committee ,made up as follows, was elected:

Chairman: Ernst Overmann, Duisberg/Rhein, Postal Department 789
Deputy: Christoph Otto Müller, Steinebach am Wörthsee, 84
Secretary: Otto Buckner, Duisberg/Rhein, Postal Department 1030
Treasurer: Josef Tönnies, Duisberg/Rhein, Mülheimer Strasse 144

We ask for all post to be sent to our headquarters Duisberg/Rhein, postal district 789. If you do not get an answer by return, please remember that all Society business has to be carried out in our spare time.

Miscellaneous

This circular runs to 16 pages. Because of this size – which we do not want to exceed – and for lack of time the detailed index of abbreviations for philatelic literature described in an early article will be published in the next circular. However, use of the abbreviations will be sufficient for consulting every work in a public library.

END

Die Philatelistische Literatur
June 1934, Volume 3, Issue 6, Whole number 24

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2000

DIE PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATUR

June 1934, Volume 3, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of the article titles and general headings for a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical and includes full translations of all articles of interest to me.

pp.49-50

On details of sources in philatelic writing.

Karl Th. Meyer, Medical student, Berlin

As well as the flood of new stamp issues, the collector is met year in, year out by an absolute torrent of philatelic literature, which really makes it impossible to fully comprehend the range of new publications. The individual collector has thus to rely on getting a general survey, such as he can get from review periodicals, and the descriptions of individual works in our journal.

Our major philatelic writing reveals another range of knowledge with every new publication, in view of the multiplicity and solidity of its learning, but suffers from an unfortunately general sin of omission in its basic avoidance of philatelic literature references.

By dealing intensively with a given partial section of the philatelic press, the author of defective surveys of the sources frequently comes over as unpleasant to individual authors. The omission of source data makes research more difficult, or even impossible. The work of a writer, which must depend in part on his knowledge of the results of earlier authors, thus loses its value to some extent when his readers are drawn to individual results and conclusions without the basis of the sources. Every writing activity that is meant to be fair to itself and its readers will often depend for its essential core on the work of an earlier researcher, is built on it, and must refer back to it if it is to be acknowledged and not just used.

The author was led to this line of thought by the conclusions to Prussian Studies by Lieutenant-Colonel D. Marbach of Kolberg (Die Postmarke, Vienna, 1931, N°240, p.119). Marbach too fails to give his sources, but he says (omitting the actual names, which are only of importance for that particular case):

As a rule few or even no sources are given in philately. However, here as in every other science exact data are necessary so that we can refer back to them as in the case of... given above. This is needed not just for original research and criticism, but for evaluating a given source. Also, the data in the ... Handbook go for decades without being questioned, are indeed elevated to a dogma: if they are to be contested, altered or extended, it can only be done by referring to the great unknowns and their inherent information. Moreover source data are not only common and necessary in science as a whole and it is simply an accepted duty to express thanks and acknowledgements to the earlier researchers on whose work we have built and will go on building, since the precursors of our own work often made it possible, just as later researchers will use ours. Honour, to whom honour is due. And today, when taking material property is described as theft, intellectual property can be looked on as free, which makes it all the more necessary to observe this authorial rule exactly. This cannot be sufficiently stressed to the kind of person who looks on this kind of ethical duty as outmoded; and to whom we can only say: to be good is not to possess, and possession is not good. Copying is also an art, of which we can say, to vary an expression, "By their mistakes ye shall know them", so that the source data are useful for these "authors" as well. Their sources must answer for the correctness of their statements, which is all the more desirable in the case of philately, because of the numerous inaccuracies it contains.

The lines and their content are acceptable enough. However, commentary remains to be added.

It is also of great importance for the collector of a certain area of the multifarious literature of philately to pay attention to the sources, which in part take the form of a great number of articles in volumes of periodicals. Exact sources and frequent references to other work can make it at least easier for the researcher to study his chosen field. A properly arranged reference will give the name of the author, possibly the title of the article, and the title, volume, number and page of the journal.

If philatelic authors care to undertake the task of giving references it will be to their own great advantage: it will be much easier for those interested to produce a relevant article, and publishers will certainly take a much greater interest in papers from well-known authors than in what are called ephemera, which are forgotten as soon as written.

The publishers and editors of individual journals can also contribute to clarity in their way. Anyone who reads the titles of articles in, for example, the review section of our journal cannot fail to notice that the same article by a particular author appears in the contents of two quite different journals (usually not at the same time). The same author and title suggests that the wording will be the same. Since every magazine has its own circle of readers, this duplication does not seem to matter in itself. The knowledge concerned will be communicated to an even wider circle of readers.

Every journal requires that reprints and translations from it to be properly referenced, so the publisher and editor must attend to this. The reader will be heartily thankful to them.

In conclusion, a word to our distinguished authors in connection with a concrete example. During the last year, a very well-reported German philatelic journal published an article that had appeared two years before in a foreign journal, with exactly the same wording. The editor of the German journal answered enquiries as follows (names are replaced by asterisks, the original letter was sent to the editor):

Obviously my contributors are told that only original papers never before printed will appear in . I did not know that the paper by  had already appeared in  magazine at the start of 1932. I had no time to check when the manuscript reached me from  and was accepted by me. Possibly  had sent his paper to a number of journals, but I have always stressed that I only take papers never published before.

Apart from the fact that the author had ignored what the editor said about only accepting original work for its first printing, the editor on his side should have informed the readers in the next issue that he had accepted a reprint, but he did not do so. Such events should very soon cease to occur, since the obligation has been laid on authors to inform editors when they have sent an article in to more than one publication for its first appearance. Receipt by an author of a double fee for one and the same article is a violation of the “authors’ rules of behaviour” (see above), quite apart from the fact that the author who does this, damages the reputation of the second firm to print it.

Conclusion

With reference to the paper by Lieutenant-Colonel D. Marbach, Kolberg, the author suggests that every new publication in the field of philatelic writing should be accompanied by the most accurate possible references. Authors and editors, intentionally or not, should also give precise references for reprints, or give them in the next number in some cases. If an author offers an article to several magazines simultaneously, he is obliged to inform the other editors once it is accepted for publication.

p.50

The Library of the Society of Friends of Philatelic Literature e. V., Hamburg.

As we have already reported, at their general Meeting on the 28th January 1934 in Hamburg, the Society of the Friends of Philatelic Literature decided to set up its own library. On speaking today on the value and formation of this library, we shall concentrate totally on the efforts involved.

First we must deal with the questions. Are there not enough philatelic libraries today? and Is there any real need for the Society of the Friends of Philatelic Literature to have its own library?

There are a number of philatelic libraries good and less good, large and small. There are specialist libraries of this kind in Germany as well. A detailed article, Philatelic Libraries - history, structure and usage, was recently published in our magazine by Dr. Phil. Johannes Schubert of Leipzig. This gave us interesting information. However we have to point out that these libraries are not always well organised. Sometimes the literature is packed in boxes, and is thus quite unavailable for practical use. We need only think of the outstanding and copious philatelic literature collection in the Prussian State Library in Berlin. Also, many libraries will only make on-the-spot loans, and are not available for external loans. And how do we stand with the other libraries, which are well organized and will make loans to external borrowers. This or that library may have a more or less adequate catalogue with subject, classified and author card indexes, but a comprehensive survey of the contents of the literature available is certainly rarely or never available. We should particularly mention a record of the contents of the many thousands of individual issues of specialist journals. Some lovers of literature, who have access to a carefully assembled collection of journals, have indeed drawn up their own index of their contents, but practically always with only their own interests in view. Note, too, bibliographical work on the content of the literature they possess is very often neglected in the bigger libraries, although this should be one of the principal tasks of the library administration. Since we can prevent our own library from having all these defects, we can see why it is desirable to create a library within the Society of the Friends of Philatelic Literature. It should carry out the principal task of every library – a complete bibliographical survey. We think that the provision of a detailed author and subject index available to all collectors is the most useful task our library can perform. This would also underline the difference between existing libraries and our own.

The second question: Is there any need for the Society of the Friends of Philatelic Literature to have its own library? can be answered by simply stating that there is a real need for our Society to possess a collection of philatelic literature. The numerous questions, suggestions and requests that reach us, not only from our members but from other collectors as well, make it absolutely necessary for us to have our own library. If a collector needs any literary information he will, in a great many cases as we can show, turn to us. The seeker after information assumes that we can supply exhaustive information, since they assume, reasonably, that we have available an extensive library and detailed reference material. Our members have always borrowed a great deal of literature in recent years, and want us to be able to meet their wishes every time. What else is to be expected of a literary society? The collector who becomes a member of our society will also hope to get satisfactory information from us all the time. Moreover, the further development of our Society organ Die Philatelistische Literatur means that we too need to have a carefully tended stock of literature available. The more extensive and solid our library is, the better we shall be able to treat the material in our Society organ. We are quite convinced that the provision of our own library for the Society is thoroughly justified.

Where does our library stand at the present moment? Firstly, the decision has been taken to set up our own library. The private library of our Chairman has acted as a stop-gap. Many members have already offered gifts of money or literature to build up the basic stock of a library of our own. It will also be our task to appeal to our members and all collectors to make donations of cash or literature for the library of the Society of the Friends of Philatelic Literature. The purchase of philatelic literature is not possible just now since the money we have is absolutely needed for the further development of the Society itself. We are quite sure that our own members and other collectors will have quantities of superfluous literature available, which could be turned to good account for the service of philately, in our library. Collections of literature have slumbered unused for years in boxes and chests in attics and cellars. It is particularly regrettable when philatelic literature is disposed of by sending it to a waste-paper merchant for pulping. It has even happened that a complete truckload of philatelic literature, including rare items, has been sent for destruction in this way. We have repeatedly found that collectors who are short of space, or are moving, have allowed useful and rare literature to be destroyed rather than passing it on to lovers of literature. However, we are not thinking only of quantities of literature like this, but also of the many duplicates in the hands of our members. We ask our members very sincerely to help us to build up the basic stock of our library and let us have all their disposable literature. We know that one or other collector still has valuable literature which he will never look at again in a chest in his cellar, waiting at best to go for pulping. If this literature were given to our library it could be arranged and indexed for the use of us all, even for the donor, since it can never be any use to him if it crumbles to dust in boxes and chests. We further ask that if anyone knows of a collector who has surplus literature, to let us know so that we can get in touch with him and so save much interesting philatelic literature from destruction. We also address a request to philatelic libraries to let us have their duplicate literature. We are quite ready to reciprocate by our own bibliographical operations.

The gifts we receive will be acknowledged in our Society journal, with the name of the donor and the extent of their gift stated. We certainly hope that our request has not been in vain, and that our efforts will be rewarded by numerous gifts.

The library should be available for use at the beginning of the coming year. A catalogue will be produced. Bibliographic extracts from the subject and classified index will be supplied on request. Loans will be free to all collectors on payment of the postage. Non-members must supply references. A detailed listing of our books will be printed in our journal presently.

And now forward contributors, so that our library can blossom, grow and thrive in the interests of philately.

p.51

Review.

Phila-Gotha.

Biographical Almanac of philatelic contemporaries of the 19th and 20th centuries. In the journal Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm by the blind author Max Ton, Weimar, in conjunction with Fritz Seifert, Leipzig, produces the outline for a philatelic biography under the title Wer ist der philatelist? [Who is the Philatelist?] Their suggestions merit wider circulation, and should give the magazine a new direction with special material for a long period. The type of philatelic literature covered hitherto in Bücherwurm should thus be abandoned, and the journal converted formally to a magazine with a biographical content.

Literature Preview.

pp.51-52

Newly-published philatelic literature.

p.52

Article selection.

Notable recent articles.

New foreign literature.

p.53

Gesellschaft Philatelistischer Literaturfreunde e. V., Hamburg.

We have recently received the news that our member:

Herr Dr. med. Karl D. Becher of Carlsbad

Died in February this year at the age of 77. Although he was ill for several years, he remained active as a many-sided collector. He was not only a philatelist, but also a knowledgeable collector of books, porcelain, glass and other fine-art objects. His special fields in philately were Baden, Bavaria, Old Austria 1867, Spain and its overseas possessions on letters (only the imperforate issues), and entires from Austria. His services to the Carlsbad Philatelic Day in 1924 are well-known. He also acted as a jury member, as an author in Austrian journals, and as an exhibitor, in which capacity his collections gained distinctions. He was an honorary member of the Carlsbad Philatelic Society and other well-known societies. He also possessed a carefully tended philatelic library, and was one of our first foreign members. German philately in Czechoslovakia has much to thank him for. In him, we also lose a zealous friend to our endeavours. We shall always keep him in affectionate memory.

Lovers of literature who would like to know more about our Society will be sent detailed information on request.

Periodicals Review.

Under this heading we list only those journals which are sent in regularly to our editors.

The abbreviations used are those of the Kohl Handbook or the German Philatelic Yearbook, so far as they are available therein. New abbreviations not given in the Yearbook will be looked on as definitive for a future new edition of the Yearbook.

The editors have received the following journals:

[See the original for this list]

pp.55-56

Advertisements.

END

Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm
September 1926, Volume 6, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2002

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

September 1926, Volume 6, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of the article titles and general headings for a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical and includes full translations of all articles of interest to me.

p.1

New mode of publication for the Phil. Bücherwurms.

To give our members faster information on events in the field of literature, Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm will appear every six weeks in future. If we are to keep the subscription the same we shall obviously have to keep the total yearly content of the journal the same, which means that forthcoming issues cannot have the same number of pages as formerly. This apparent loss will however be quite balanced out by the more frequent appearance. We believe this arrangement will be entirely to the benefit of all our members.

Editors and publishers of
Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm

The next issue will appear in November 1926

p.2

Literature at the postage stamp exhibition in Dortmund, 1926.

Philatelic literature has never met with such a fiasco as this time in Dortmund. But there was absolutely nothing in the arrangements to account for this. The classes were divided into scientific works (authors, publishers, libraries), periodicals (publishers, libraries and catalogues), ensuring a good range and ready possibilities for evaluation. Moreover the organizers of the exhibition made a most suitable space available, and the Prize committee, under the chairmanship of Dr. Franz Kalckhoff could be entrusted with the material with every confidence, but there were only four awards out of 60 objects. It is not easy to determine whether this is in the interests of promoting literature. Moreover, our literary researchers and philatelic writers have such scanty success that any recognition is welcome.

On the other hand, however, this sort of disappointment will give a completely false impression to the less well motivated collector. If this kind of thing is repeated, it will be difficult for newer writings to find a publisher, though serious researchers devote their energies to working out new material. Finally, the literature depends on the study of postage stamps, but a collection in its turn is generally based on the literature, so that it is not possible to rate one above the other. Or was it the case this time that some objects were not exhibited because they had gained awards on previous occasions. If this were the case, why were collections that had gained prizes in other cases again awarded small, intermediate and major medals. Of course there is bad philatelic literature, but in this case there were entries that were worth prizes, of course no jury can please all the exhibitors, but in this case there has been general amazement. It should also not go unmentioned that none of the album publishers was given a prize, though it must be admitted that a subject-based album is an education for the collector and leads him on to the use of more detailed literature. Also, it contains scientific work which goes disregarded. The further consequences of these awards may well be seen at the next exhibition. Unfortunately!

After these remarks we can go on to name the prize winners:

Berliner Ganzsachensammlerverein (Berlin Society of Postal Stationery Collectors)
Publisher Robert Noske, Borna, for Deutsche-Sammler-Zeitung, Catalogue of Entires, 1926, Festschrift. Large silver-gilt medal.

Paul P. Lindenberg, Berlin, for special publication of the Postmarke, Vienna. The Postal Service in Palestine Before the British occupation – a bronze medal.

Concordia, K. Kayser, Charlottenburg, a ten-language translation concordance – a bronze medal.

Deutscher Philatelistischer Verein, Buenos-Aires for its Mitteilungen in German and Spanish – a bronze medal.

Also exhibiting were: Beck, Berezovski, Birnbach, Brunner, Bungerz, Büto, Herzog, Hesse, Raay, Mitsui, Walter, Zumstein, Thalmann, Germania-Ring, Rachmanov, Postmarke, Bremer Briefmarkensammler-Verein, Schmittner, Hess, Jaeger, Köhler, Kranj, Kurth, Turyn, Briefmarken-Essen, Sammler-Woche, Briefmarkenbörse Leipzig, Michel-Katalog, Riep, Borek, Ka-Be, Kohl-Album, Lücke, Schwaneberger, Boyens – all more or less well-known names in literature. May they easily forget about this...

Carl Beck

p.3

Literature News.

pp.3-4

Verein Philatelistischer Literatursammler.

Lost owing to death. [in box]

p.4

[Advertisements.]

END

Dr. A. Moschkau
Philatelic Bibliography
[Philatelistische Bibliographie]
Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal, 3rd March 1888, Volume 15, Issue 5, pp.75-76

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2002

PHILATELIC BIBLIOGRAPHY

In the first issue of the new Munich Postwertzeichen, Emilio Diena mentions the publication of the new Munich Nachschlagebuches über Philatelistische Litteratur [Reference Book of Philatelic Literature] and gives a complete listing of all previously published works. His idea is not entirely new as about ten years ago Mr. Tiffany in St. Louis did the same thing fairly comprehensively, though in a way which was only available to a select circle. Diena, though, has wider plans for his ideas. He aims at a complete bibliography of philately, covering not only all the independent literature but also an ordered survey of all individual articles, no matter where and in what language they appear.

Carrying out this plan is a formidable task, far beyond the capacity of a single researcher, though it is a project of extraordinary importance, a task of international significance, and when it is completed would be a basis for philatelic science. Can willing helpers be found in the various countries? Can Diena's plan really be carried out? Is it time to address ourselves to this difficult task?

As far as the first two questions go we have high hopes that in every country where our science has borne literary fruit someone will be found who is willing to catalogue bibliographical notices, but we will answer the last question differently. There is always time to solve this problem, and now is the right time, and if the work is divided between a number of people it could be carried out in a relatively short time. As far as Germany is concerned, its philatelic literature could be completely covered by the libraries in Vienna, Dresden and Munich and some private book collections. Once this is started it only needs willing hands and the German component would be ready as a stone in the complete building.

However, bad news comes after this hopeful message! Would such a work, which must be very detailed and must have a relatively high price, also find purchasers? Will the philatelic world meet it with the interest which it must have? In which countries will it be published? Which publisher will sacrifice money and take the risk?

In view of the uncertainty about Diena's plan, only one of these questions can be answered. We firmly believe that there is interest in such a work in Germany – but not on the part of purchasers, who must be the publisher's first concern. With the exception of one copy for every society, the cost of production would hardly favour the publisher. Here again though there could be a way out if the German specialist societies provided the means between them to issue a bibliography of the German philatelic literature. We hope the effort to produce the work will not be lacking; if the societies will meet the cost, then the appearance of this work in our great Fatherland is assured.

The esteemed editors of this journal worked out a cost for drawing up and producing a work on the entire German philatelic literature. The preliminary work has been done. This has to precede the detailed treatment of the main materials. When this has been done and proof afforded that the editors of the main work can carry it out, the actual work can be started.

The aim of this chat is to show how we can take an active part in the Diena project, and all interested circles should exert themselves to bring it about. A bibliography of the entire philatelic literature would be a very important event in the field of philately.

END

John Siewert
Exchange
[Sprechsaal]
Der Philatelist, December 1887, Volume 8, Issue 12, p.151

Translation produced by Thomas Huber for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2001

EXCHANGE

Philatelic Smalltalk V

In the most recent issue of the Wiener Briefmarken-Zeitung I read an excellent article of Mr. Falck, entitled Cut out or postal stationery which should be reprinted in extenso by Der Philatelist since it deserves widest attention. Let's hope that in a not to distant future collectors widely realize how unproductive the collecting of cut-outs is. It's high time to shed the straightjacket of the latter. At this time, Koch of Vienna announced the publication of an album without cut-outs which is supposedly accessible also to younger and less affluent collectors, because Koeppé's is too expensive for them. Therefore, collectors would be well advised to wait for actual publication of the album mentioned before they voluntarily go under the old yoke of cut-outs by purchasing another one. They would damage their collections by un-aesthetic and un-philatelic cut-outs.

There was another article of rare interest in the Philatelic Record N°.105, E. Diena of Modena writing under the title A Manual of Philatelic Literature. Der Philatelist should reproduce it in translation. It is about no more and no less than the creation of, as I would call it, a general philatelic lexicon in two parts, a general one, and a special one. Part I would contain everything relating to stamps, collecting, history, etc. For instance, under the heading Arranging a Collection would be a list of those numerous articles which were published on this topic, classified in chronological order by language of publication. Next to the listing of each monograph or article should be mention the name of the author, the date and place of publication, as well as the title of journal(s) in which an item was published. In this part also should be listed articles on essays and on the significance of the collecting of various aspects, the different mounts for stamps, envelopes and cards, on the kinds of paper used for manufacturing stamps, watermarks, questions relating to colours and perforation of stamps selection of cancelled vs. mint stamps, etc. Part II would be more interesting, especially for advanced collectors, since it would list under the name of each country all those articles published on the stamps of the country, also in chronological order and by their original languages. Since the International Philatelic Union possesses an excellent library it should not be too difficult to select a committee and to start work on the manual.

In N°.11 of Der Philatelist I note, with a certain surprise, that Mr. Blossfeldt attacks in a brilliant article, exactly those weak spots which I dealt with in an article for Munich. I don't know whether the two clubs will be able to agree upon a joint publication but it most definitely would be a plus for us collectors. Also, the revenue from advertisements would be considerable for both clubs. Mr. Blossfeldt also should have mentioned, next to Timbre Post the Philatelic Record which is published by two dealers, Stanley Gibbons and Pemberton Wilson, who, however, do not interfere in any way, or promote their own businesses.

John Siewert

END

Bibliography of the German philatelic literature
[Bibliographie der deutschen philatelistischen literatur]
Der Philatelist, June 1891, Volume 12, Issue 9, p.170

Translation produced by Georgia Seitz for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
November 2002

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

The editor of the Philatelistischen Börsen-Couriers [Philatelic Exchange Courier] has sent a circular which concerns the publication of a letter from Judge Victor Suppantshitsch in Graz who has taken over the handling of the bibliography and requests the support of the present Society.

Since the "Offense and Defence" undertaken in the same affair was completely fruitless, this enterprise is joyfully welcomed, and we are resolved to support the effort and make the Society's library completely available to Suppantshitsch and direct at the same time, that a notice calling for subscriptions be placed in the Society's journal.

Club member Mr. Witt (1209) reports that at the end of April at an auction in New York the sum of $326 (1,370 Marks) was paid for one provisional Cauca stamp 1879, 5c black on white (Meyer United States of Columbia, N° 152t) on original letter. This report received with thanks.

Club member, the Vicomte du Fresnel (1524) proposed that every 3 months a lottery should be held only among the club members, with 3,000 lottery tickets at 10 pfennig each, to give a net profit of about 100 Marks after the expenses of 200 Marks. - The matter will be referred to the Board for consideration and the individual members and club committee members will be asked to convey their opinions about the proposal to the club Chairman.

Please be aware that the Philatelisten Zeitung, published by H. J. Meier in Stade, has been designated as the Society Organ by the Internationalen Postwerthzeichen-Sammler-Vereins Globus of Berlin and its affiliate in Vienna.

Translator's note: Please note in the original German printing there appear to have been many spelling mistakes and the translation above is my best guess at the intent of the report.

END

Gustav Weicke

The significance of the specialist literature of our science for the stamp collector
[Die Wichtigkeit der fach-literatur unserer wissenschaft für den briefmarkensammler]
Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal, 1st July 1884, Volume 11, Issue 13, pp.183-185

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2002

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE SPECIALIST LITERATURE OF OUR SCIENCE FOR THE STAMP COLLECTOR

Which of us stamp collectors has not had the depressing experience of lay-people mocking his loved and valued science and laughing at his passion for collecting. The scoffers at our science will never completely disappear, and there will always be people who shrug their shoulders at the mention of our favourite occupation, look on it as childish and consider stamp collecting as only fit for schoolboys. However, it can be proved today that stamp collecting has freed itself from the gales of laughter that have met it from all sides and has gained the respect of many of its opponents.

This has only been achieved by a hard struggle, and our philately has not yet reached the position we want for it amongst the sciences. The blame for this rests mainly with the English, who have made stamp collecting look ridiculous in the eyes of the world.

The passion that Englishmen devote to everything connected with sport: racing, yachting, hunting, fishing, gambling, and many others is often hardly understandable in otherwise intelligent men. However their mania for collecting is also unintelligible, since many pursue it to a degree unthinkable to us. Pictures, statues, manuscripts and books, porcelain, majolica and antiques, spears, weapons and clocks, practically anything that exists will inspire someone or other to accumulate it and forget everything else in the hunt for it. Only a few people collect with understanding and show any urge to study their chosen fancy. Very often they just accumulate at random, either because it is the fashion or out of a pure urge to collect. When this happens to some collector or other, this is still unusual. Stamp collecting is rather a science. What in fact is the difference between it and the other arts? Have they not many features in common? Music enlivens, elevates, and consoles the spirit with its strains. Poetry inspires and ennobles human endeavours. Painting and sculpture charm the eyes and the imagination by their truthful reproduction of nature. History unrolls a picture of the development of an entire people in its most important relationship and most significant happenings. Philately also has similar properties. It refreshes and consoles the spirit for many of the disappointments that life brings with it, and by the interest and charm of its objects guides the mind temporarily away from everyday concerns and carries it into a different world. It charms the eyes by the beauty and complexity of the objects of collection. Finally, it gives a picture of the steady progress of a culture, of the rise and fall of the art and commerce of every nation. Moreover, philately is accepted as a formal science not only by leading specialist writers but also by authorities in other fields. There are many good reasons hitherto ignored and only now being recognised why our science has produced an important literature over the last decade, so that the opinion appears valid: philately has advanced scientifically from small beginnings to its present height of development.

However, if philately is correctly called a science, basically it is only the concern of a few. Most people are merely stamp collectors. And this is the weak point at which our science breaks down, the Achilles heel at which it is vulnerable.

According to the excellent Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung in number 1 of the current year in an article from a knowledgeable pen, the schoolboy with this album or stamp book is also a stamp collector, and many young people grow up to make no further progress, reach no higher level than the schoolboy and never become (real) stamp collectors. They lack knowledge of the literature of our science, and so they cannot become real collectors.

The true stamp collector pays attention to all the scientific literature available to him, gets hold of all the books on his favourite topic and studies them: no specialist journal is too small for him, however insignificant. He learns to profit by this knowledge and as a result, he can often easily obtain missing items cheaply, so that the money spent on the specialist literature can be looked on as a profitable investment.

The literature of our science would be much richer if it were valued as it deserves. However, the publisher must be happy to cover his costs and the author must be satisfied with a few free copies, so that publication is not profitable and the damage that results from this affects in the first place the collector himself, as he is then far too easily deceived by forgeries.

Any collector willing to take part in the development of our common science, anyone who will support the serious research on which the future depends, he is a true collector who supports the scientific literature with all his strength. He will take to heart the following epigram by C. F. R., which should appear in every album:

Do you want to be happy and rich
In every time, in every place wish to do your bit
For every sport, every science –
Get reading!

Knowledge alone brings culture, which stamps you as a stamp collector

END

Die Philatelistische Literatur
July 1934, Volume 3, Issue 7

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
September 2002

DER PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATUR

July 1934, Volume 3, Issue 7

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of the article titles and general headings for a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical and includes full translations of all articles of interest to me.

p.57

Russian Philatelic Literature.

Walter Stephan Sonnenberg-Fedorowsky

1. Journals

To give lovers of philatelic literature information on the existence of Russian philatelic literature, I shall now give a few notes with particular emphasis on the life of Russian Philatelic magazines.

At the beginning of Russian philately, was Die Weltpost, a journal published by the stamp dealer J. J. Krewing under the editorship of A. E. Winnecke in St. Petersburg. It appeared monthly from its start in 1897 to 1898. From 1896 to 1899 a technical journal appeared in Kiev under the title Die Marken from the dealer named S. Solomkin, who also acted as editor. In 1902 A. Zaborwsky in Pskov brought out the first number of the magazine Le Collectionneur, but the second issue of this was also the last. On September 1903 the first Russian – German magazine, Die Briefmarken und Sammler was published in St. Petersburg by Julius Stauf and ran to only a single number. In 1908, a single issue of the journal Der Briefmarkensammler und Amateur de Bildpostkarten was published in Jaroslav by J. A. Kolodkin. The well-known stamp dealer Ewald F. Eichental published the journal Die Philatelie in St. Petersburg. This survived for four years from 1913 to 1917. The first editor in chief was B. Schwamberg, later it was F. Slotinow. In 1914 A. Bernstein published Der Russische Philatelist in Kiev this published 76 issues during its three years of life to September 1917. In July 1916 The Russia Collectors was published in Moscow by an anonymous firm. It appeared in various languages, and published 9 numbers in all. A fine illustrated journal, Sammlerbund was published in Odessa by its resident philatelist J. Landmann from August 1914. W. W. Tarassow published the journal Die Nordkorrespondenz in Archangel-Solombala from 1917 to 1923. At first this was issued as

Sammlerzeitung und Korrespondenz von Äussersten Norden, and was altered to the other title later. It was copiously illustrated and gave notes on Russian philately in various languages. It appeared annually for six years in nine numbers. A group of Moscow collectors' societies put out a few issues of a magazine Zwischen der Sammlern. In 1922, Der Russische Sammler by N. Donskoi and A. Kobjanow was started in Novo-Tscherkask but only issued 2 numbers and ceased to appear after two months. A good Russian stamp magazine was Der Sowjet-Philatelist, the official organ of the Russian Philatelic Society and the Central Stamp Market on behalf of the Central Committee for Famine Relief of the Society Executive. The magazine was founded in July 1922 the first number appeared in September of that year. F. S. Tschutschin was given as publisher and editor in chief. The magazine lasted six years, with four numbers in 1922, and nine in 1923 and 1924 and 1926 and 1927. There were six issues in 1928. The monthly, Der Krim'sche Sammler served as the organ of the Crimean philatelists, mainly in Sevastopol, the chief city of the Crimean peninsula. Editors and publishers were G. J. & A. M. Schwarz, later L. M. Fajans, all of Sevastopol. The magazine lasted only for one year with 10 issues. A few philatelists in Vladikavkas issued Der Sammler vom Kaukasus in the year 1922. Only number 1 of this journal appeared, whilst the later issues were published in combination with the magazine Der Russische Sammler. Der Sammler aus dem Uralgebiet was the title of a journal, some numbers of which were issued by the publisher A. P. Lebeden and the editor A. G. Ebersin in 1923 in Vyatka. A daily paper was published in October 1923 in Samara under the title Der Sowjet-Philatelist, in an edition of some 4,000 copies. Also at the beginning of the year 1923, again in Vyatka, was announced the philatelic journal Sammlerwoche. The publishers were A. & G. Lichatschew and G. Ebersin. However I know nothing of the further existence and development of this journal. In January 1925, Der Sowjet-Sammler was published as an independent journal. It appeared fortnightly and was the organ of the Russian Philatelic Society (W.O.F.). From January 1926, this appeared as a supplement to the journal Der Sowjet-Philatelist. The editor was A. W. Bessonow in conjunction with F. G. Tschutschin. From July 1926 onwards this has appeared regularly every month to the present day under the editorship of K. J. Dunin-Bornowsky, and is the official organ of the Russian Philatelic Society and the Soviet Philatelic Association. Radio de Filinten is a special supplement to the journal Der Sowjet-Sammler and was published from January 1926 to March 1928 in German, French, English and also Esperanto under the editorship of L. Eickfuss. The supplement later came under the technical leadership of L. Margolin. The supplement ceased to appear in June 1929. Bulletin von der Südlichen Abteilung der Sowjet-Philatelisten-Assoziation was the name of a magazine that appeared monthly in Kharkov from February 1928 to May 1929, in a total of 17 numbers.

(Continuation follows)

p.57

Our own affairs.

Although the editors have abundant material for publication, the high costs of production impose limitations. We unfortunately find it necessary to again restrict the scope of our magazine, and hope to restore it in coverage when the number of subscribers has risen sufficiently high. We ask all philatelists to support our efforts and introduce readers to the magazine.

Publisher and Editors.

p.58

Literature preview.

p.58

Newly issued philatelic literature.

pp.58-60

Look at periodicals.

p.60

Catalogues and pricelists.

p.60

Advertisements.

END

Burkhard Schneider
Dissolution of the "Taunus Library" Part 5
[Auflösung der "Taunus-Bibliothek" 5. Teil]
Literaturangebot Nr. 14 mit "Taunus-Bibliothek" 5. Teil.,
Burkhard Schneider, Gelnhausen, Germany, May 2002, n.pp. [Inside front cover]

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
September 2002

DISSOLUTION OF THE "TAUNUS LIBRARY" PART 5

In the present literature offer we deal with a further part of the "Taunus Library".

Particularly worthy of notice are the philatelic journals with some rarities, handbooks and special publications from Europe.

If this offer has nothing to interest you, please pass our catalogue on to a collector friend or take it to your next Club or Society meeting.

You can also find our complete catalogue on the Internet under www.philabooks.com. With over 8,000 available titles, ours is the most comprehensive catalogue of philatelic literature on the entire web. Just have a look! We also take orders from our online catalogue by phone, fax or e-mail.

Our next catalogue of literature is planned for the end of August. We will then give the last part of the Taunus Library, comprising postal service manuals, German postal history, handbooks and special publications from Europe and overseas, older exhibition and auction catalogues, and a very extensive Scandinavian section.

For Spring 2002 we have already announced the sale of the philatelic library of Dr. Hubert Böckmann. Dr. Böckmann was a historian and expert on China; including various historical literature and contemporary German publications on the Boxer Rebellion.

Also, we are always interested in acquiring other small and large philatelic libraries and individual rare items.

END

Burkhard Schneider
Dissolution of the "Taunus Library": Part 2
[Auflösung der "Taunus-Bibliothek" 2. Teil]
Literaturangebot Nr. 10 mit "Taunus-Bibliothek" 2. Teil.,
Burkhard Schneider, Gelnhausen, Germany, June 2001, [p.ii]

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2002

DISSOLUTION OF THE "TAUNUS LIBRARY": PART 2

As was announced in the last catalogue, the present offer covers the first part of the foreign journals. They include early, sometimes rare journals, for example the first philatelic journal from Italy and early ones from France, Portugal, Rumania, etc. You will find this offer from page 71 on, and also partially under the name of the country. Because of the great interest in historical literature, we have produced this part, and more foreign journals will follow in the next catalogue.

Our offer of historical literature are all worth attention and some are very rare early writings on the German postal service. You will find this section from page 11 on.

Amongst the bibliographic works we have used are the two following, which you really should possess if you are interested in these early periodicals. Unfortunately, we cannot offer them in bulk as they are now out of print and are no longer easy to obtain. However, we may have one or two in stock, so ask if you are interested. Otherwise the main philatelic libraries might help until you can formally obtain your own copies.

Wolpert: Review of the German Postal Service., 2nd edition, 1950.
 Contains writings up to 1870: the original 1937 edition contained only publications up to 1800.

Koch: Review of the German Postal Service: Supplement 1500-1964., Volume 2, 1969.
 Supplement to Wolpert, usually offered in 3 volumes.

Moreover we can offer numerous interesting works from old Germany, the German Reich and Germany after 1945, also European material. From Latin America we offer the remainder of the forgery studies from the "La Plata" library (p.49 on) which we sold last year. You will find rarer bibliographies from page 58 on.

On the occasion of the "Belgica" International Stamp Exhibition in Brussels 9th to 15th June 2001, numerous new publications on philately and postal history appeared. We have thus left the new issues supplement out of this catalogue and will publish a special supplement on new publications in July after they have all been perused.

Our literature offer N°11 will appear at the end of August 2001. We shall then concentrate on the postal services of Germany, papers and circulars from German [philatelic] study groups and more periodicals.

In ordering from this list you might wish to add alternatives in some cases, and mark them as such. In our experience, some titles are quickly snatched up. If there is nothing for you in this catalogue, please pass it on to a collector friend.

With friendly regards

Burkhard Schneider

Index to Contents:

Abbreviations used/conditions of supply	p.74
All prices are in Deutschmarks

END

Dr. A. MOSCHKAU

History of postage stamps and of stamp collecting (Philately)

[Geschichte der briefmarken und des briefmarkensammelwesens (Philatelie)]

In: Die Wasserzeichen auf Briefmarken, Couverts, Postkarten etc. Nebst einer Geschichte der Briefmarken und des Briefmarkensammelwesens (Philatelie), 4th edition, Philatelistische Bibliothek Volume 1, Louis Senf, Leipzig, Germany, 1880, pp.vi & 18-77

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2002

HISTORY OF POSTAGE STAMPS AND OF PHILATELY

(STAMP COLLECTING)

Editor's Note: The Foreword to the Third Edition is available in Philat. Trans. 458.

FOREWORD TO THE FOURTH EDITION

To the present edition has been added everything important that has happened in the course of the last two years which comes within the scope of this work. There has been a particular increase in the headings relating to the German technical literature and the life of the society. Illustrations of watermarks have also been increased.

The work can thus claim the description complete to the present day; may the collectors of Germany find renewed information and usefulness.

Oybin, 30th June 1880.

The Author.

Editor's note: This has been a rather difficult document to edit since the author does not appear to have referred to his renown library for all of the information on the publications he quotes or persons and organisations he lists, but rather appears to have written much of the work from his evidently prodigious memory. This has unfortunately resulted in the appearance of many spelling &c. errors. I have made numerous minor corrections, generally to the names of authors or titles of publications, as well as adding the occasional note. These were originally indicated by being placed in square brackets. However, the brackets were so frequent that they disrupted the text so I eventually simply made the corrections and omitted the brackets. No attempt has been made to check and correct everything, just the obvious mistakes that jumped out at me.

HISTORY OF POSTAGE STAMPS

Pages one to seventeen comprise a concise history of postage stamps which it was not thought worth translating since the information is readily available in many English-language handbooks.

PHILATELY (STAMP COLLECTING)

PHILATELY

We ask first what is the meaning of the word philately, which has been used for over a decade by stamp collectors for their avocation, and now, thanks to an etymological paper by Treichel, we are in a position to give a most exact answer to this*.

The word Philately [in German Philatelie] is purely Greek and its first part consists of the stem phil (from philos = friend), and the next pair of syllables consists of the letter a, which in Greek grammar is the privative alpha, which in our German is -able, free or without, and by the word telos from customs”, taxes, or tariffs. Thus, a rather free translation gives us a liking for or a concern with customs- or tax-free activities, a very satisfactory term which has been adopted in France and Belgium since the year 1866, and then over the entire globe wherever stamp collecting has adherents. It has also found a place in Lexica, etc. It deserves at least a mention here that in Germany, and especially in Dresden, there has been a further tendency to ignore the a that extends and explains the term, and to use the derivation of philos and telos to write Philotely instead of Philately.

Another more technically correct term is Timbrologie – stamp science – usually used in France and Belgium. The Société Française de Timbrologie decided in favour of this word. The word Timbrophilie – Stamp Friendship or Stamp Hobby, has also gained a certain amount of currency. However these French names are bastard terminology which has borrowed from the French and Greek language, which is good reason for the purely Greek word Philately to receive the most sympathy.

The same thing applies to the names which the stamp collectors of the world, now numbering a hundred thousand, use for themselves. Now to stamp collecting itself.

* A. Treichel: Philatelie. An etymological correction. Moschkau's Magazin, 1872, Issue 8. This interpretation was sharply questioned in Issue 9, p.39. Treichel's explanation was supported as early as 1866 by an anonymous author in Briefmarken Sammler, Issue 2; also by G. Kaufmann in Illustrierte[s] Briefmarken Journal, Issue 3 and in Issue 6 of the Philog Dr. J. Kümmel. [I can not trace this final reference.]

 This Dresden idea also appears in Moschkau's Magazin, 1872, Issue 10, in a definition by Baron Gutmann, who supports Philotely

ORIGIN AND EXPANSION OF STAMP COLLECTING

Stamp collecting can really be called a science now in view of the way it is treated and the literature, etc., to which it has given rise. According to the accepted story, it began as a result of a bet decades ago, in which one person undertook to collect enough stamps to paper a room, whilst the other denied this. The first person collected the necessary amount of stamps by advertising, etc., and the wine that was the stake was finally drunk in the stamp-papered room. Whether and why there are no more bets in philately at the present day is not quite clear to me; however, the action that sets a stone rolling is often quite comical, so I did not wish to leave out this curiosity here.

The actual year in which philately began can hardly be determined with precision, but it is safe to say that we cannot speak of collecting in the real sense before the years 1858-1862. However this does not exclude the possibility of collecting at an earlier period, 1854-1857, as has often been suggested.

The cradle of philately was in the capitals of England and France, and probably also Belgium. It was nourished and cared for there until it bounded over the ocean and over the Rhine until it soon arrived in the capitals of America and Germany and roused the same interest there as in its original homelands. There, people of every rank collected with lively interest and real passion, but in our case it was first young people who began the collection of stamps to give them a new favoured object for exchange. In Paris collecting took place on all levels, at court and in diplomatic circles, in schools and playgrounds. Stamp collecting became a furious mania that knew no boundaries. The Terrasse des Feuillants in the Tuilleries garden was for a long time a principal gathering point for stamp collectors, and young ladies and gentlemen gaily carried on their dealings under the open sky in the shadow of tall elms and chestnuts. A formal stamps market was set up later in the Palais Royal, where the trade was on a larger scale: now antique book dealers on the quays have moved in, along with cigarette cards and stationery dealers etc., and stamp collecting itself got a certain foothold*. Similar things happened in England and Belgium, and though we lack such detailed descriptions of them, we know that major stamp dealers soon arose in the first named, simply as a result of the enormous demand.

* Petersen: Genrebilder aus dem Modernen Babel., p.138.

In Germany, philately spread at the speed of lightning, and Leipzig, then as now, was the centre of activity and found zealous advocates in the bookseller. G. Wuttig and the antique dealers C. C. Zschiesche and C. E. Köder. However philately found its way not only into the principal German cities but also down to the small towns and the industrial districts, and I do not think I am going too far when I say that by 1862 in Germany 50% of all students in higher seats of learning and primary schools were collecting stamps. This should also be an adequate explanation of the fact that stamp albums were first issued here with a sharp eye on the value and future of the pastime, and before Belgium and France. G. Wuttig of Leipzig has the distinction of publishing the first German album. It began as an album-like carton containing only loose sheets of red-squared paper without text, gradually expanded, and reached nineteen editions up to 1870 under Bauschke and Kümmel. This album was followed in Leipzig in 1863 by the first German catalogue from Zschiesche & Köder, and in this and the following years a large number of German dealers put out price lists for the stamps they had for sale. Examples are from G. Bauschke, Leipzig, 1864, J. Braunschweig, Berlin, 1863, E. Heim in Vienna, Oskar Jann in Breslau, etc. in 1864. The lively interest in philately shown in all circles in Germany during this period, and the increase in passionate adherents is due not least to the daily press, which with few exceptions gave its vote to the science. In this connection we may mention an illustrated description of all stamps in what was then the widely read fashion magazine, Der Bazar, 1862-64, and also a very interesting unbiased article, Stamp Collections in the Leipziger Illustrierten Zeitung, 1862, Issue 1014.

As in Germany, the press in France, England, America, etc., had already written about philately, and to me the articles in the Annuaire Scientifique (London), 1855; the Monde Illustré (Paris), 1864 and the Union Review (1862) are worth reading in the first place.

If France can lay claim to the first history of stamps for collectors (Boyer: Histoire des Timbres Poste., Paris, 1862), England can claim the first postage stamps journal, which was edited by F. Booty in Brighton on the 1st January 1862 (Published by H. and C. Treacher) under the title The Stamp Collectors Guide. [This is a catalogue – see later for the correct information.] This undertaking was however the signal for general imitation, and the first of January of the following year brought us Le Timbre-Poste of Moens in Belgium (which is still appearing after 17 years), The Stamp Collectors Magazine from A. Smith & Co. in England, in Germany the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler from Zschiesche and Köder in Leipzig. On the 1st January 1864 Le Timbrophile by A. Maury [Actually P. Mahé] appeared in France in Paris.

In this period the literature sprang up like mushrooms from the earth in accordance with the significant expansion of philately. Albums, catalogues, handbooks on individual countries, on forgeries, watermarks, etc., musical compositions about stamps, artistic products such as photographs, lithographs, woodcuts – in short anything even remotely saleable – was produced and found plenty of purchasers. To satisfy this keen demand, all places with stamp dealers who put out catalogues or price-lists in line with the extent of their business, tried to a greater or lesser extent to get into this business, which in the contrary view was worthy of a better object!

Thus, philately arose rapidly and expanded just as rapidly over the whole of the globe, and found access to young and old, high and low.

VALUE OF STAMP COLLECTING

Can it be any wonder, if the question is raised here and there about this pure mania, in the end, is stamp collecting anything more than childish?, etc. The subject is taken to basics by scholars and pedagogues, and the finders differ in their conclusions as much as the seekers. Teachers condemned stamp collecting for ruining the pupils, leading them to barter and neglect their lessons, and this view was expressed in print in [the popular magazine] Gartenlaube, and at the same time, stamp collecting was also banned in schools. Philately was supported from other no-less competent sides as stimulating and informative in many ways.

The golden truth lay however in the middle. Many voices raised in a completely unprejudiced manner the question of the value of philately, and could thus speak for it. They brought both the total condemnation and the exaggerated praise, back to the right proportions, and also expressed in clear words the actual value and uses, etc., of philately. They refer to the foundations on which philately was built, and oppose stamp mania, the unplanned, pointless and aimless acquisition of stamps.

Dr John Edward Gray, the director of the British Museum, says The usefulness and attraction of collecting any kind of object lies in educating the mind to careful observation, exact comparison and correct judgement of their differences and similarities that they show, and in interesting the collector in the design or art that has gone into their creation or manufacture, and rousing interest in the history of the country which produces or uses the collected object. Stamps are useful for all branches of study, since they vary sufficiently to offer broad grounds for classification. The fact that we obtain stamps from so many countries leads us to ask about the circumstances which led to their introduction, what is the history they depict and why some countries (France for example) find it necessary to make so many changes in so few years, whereas others have never felt the need to do so.

The changes in postage stamps overall give an account of important historical events, such as the ascent of a ruler to the throne, a change in regime or the incorporation of a smaller state into a larger one, a change in the standard of coinage, etc. Hence a stamp collection, like a coin collection, acts as an epitome of the history of civilised people over the last quarter of a century. At the same time, it shows great variations in design and execution, like an art collection in miniature, characteristic of the country from which it comes. The extent of the collection, the kind and manner of its display and upkeep are finger-posts to the working methods, sense of order and cleanliness and finally the taste of the collector.

Similar views are expressed by the author of the interesting article Stamp collecting in the Leipziger Illustrierten Zeitung, 1882, Issue 1014, whilst adding to the remark: people try in the end to bring a certain plan and arrangement to collecting, so as to give it its rightful place along with collections of coins, weapons, autographs, seals, etc. He says: If we look on postage stamps as a sort of paper money, its collection and preservation could perhaps be looked on as a division of coin collecting. Also, if they are clean and well-maintained they can be added to a portrait or weapon collection, since they add up over time to a miniature gallery of the ruling house, and can thus lay claim to historical, heraldic and genealogical interest. Regarded and treated from this standpoint, a good, systematically maintained stamp collection becomes more than just a mere children's pastime and deserves to be taken into account along with many other dilettantisms of the modern age.

These voices in favour of the subject and based on fact, stand opposed to the divergent views expressed on the pedagogical side, not only against student collectors, but above all by the short article already mentioned in Gartenlaube, 1864. This tried to give the subject its death-stroke in a sideways sort of manner, as it stated that stamp collecting promotes inattention in pupils, and even leads to dishonesty in what is called "swapping". However the author of this article seems to have left completely out of account the fact that long before stamp exchanging became popular in the schools, and even in spite of it later, pictures, counters, balls and hundreds of other things were traded, in spite of the fact that the most vigorous efforts were made to ban swapping and trading in schools.

However, as must in fact be proved, since stamp collecting has become an unavoidable preoccupation of young people, perhaps a parallel should be drawn between the collecting of stamps and the collecting of beetles, butterflies, coins, weapons and seals.

As far as the last-named objects are concerned, we have already heard from Dr. Gray, etc., about their affinity of one for another, but the collection of beetles and butterflies is something different. They depend partly on nature study in schools, and for the most part they are under the control of animal protection societies. Youthful collectors use the most refined media to kill fresh specimens on fine summer days, and burning matches are as popular as red-hot needles. It is clear what satisfaction the children get from such direct cruelty, and that they are cruel, heartless and lacking in feeling, and who dares oppose it?

How comparatively blameless, and therefore more teachable, is stamp collecting? Dr. Faber says: In no better way can we awaken in the older pupil a feeling for cleanliness and order than to plan a stamp collection. A dirty stamp collection is an absurdity, a disorderly one a contradiction in terms. No-one could or would deny that maintaining the purity and precise order of even a relatively unimportant collection calls for a fair degree of industry and care, which can make their beneficial effects felt to some degree in even wider circles. Above all it should be noted however that the eyes are opened, considerations raised and attention directed from the narrow circle of the everyday towards distant lands and zones. Geographical and ethnographic data are presented in the most entertaining and impressive manner, and the thirst for knowledge is linked to directly connected regions of business. These impressions are much easier and more lasting than those gained for example by looking at a map or plodding through a dull book. (Bazar, Heidelberg, 1869, p.2.)

In his account of the value of stamp collecting, Dr. Faber comes to this conclusion: Philately is not merely as valuable as numismatics and heraldry, but is much more stimulating than either of these. If they are not on a level with it, it is the popular foundation for them.

More than three decades have passed since the Annuaire Scientifique published the first known article on stamp collecting. Since then, philately has grown in a way that no-one could have predicted, and is now handled as a scientific subject, which has indeed become a science, whose value is acknowledged on practically all sides as we shall demonstrate later by certain examples of widely differing types.

POSTAGE STAMP LITERATURE

It is thanks to an item so rich as to explain and deal with all branches of this topic, and which is unique of its type, the magnificent The Philatelic[al] Library. A Catalogue of Stamp Publications., by John K. Tiffany (St. Louis, 1874) distinguished by diplomatic accuracy, and which we can definitely take as gospel*.

* Tiffany's masterwork, 14 large quarto sheets, was published in an edition of 150 copies which Tiffany presented to his friends. The author was lucky enough to obtain a copy for his philatelic library, where it takes pride of place.

Literature came into flower earlier in foreign countries than in German countries, and philately took root there earlier and found true and numerous friends. Foreign literature will thus be dealt with first, with the briefest practicable account of its extent and significance.

After America, England has been able to show the richest literature. As mentioned above, it has the distinction of publishing the first stamp magazine, The Stamp Collectors Review published in Liverpool in 1862 by Moore & Co., there have been more than sixty magazines since then up to the present, of which the following may be designated as the most important: The Stamp Collectors Magazine by Alfred Smith & Co., Bath, 1863-74. The best of all English journals! Its 11 volumes comprise 138 issues and 2300 pages. [Actually 12 volumes, etc.] The Stamp Collectors Magazine was also the first technical journal to use the excellent Mulready cover as the masthead. Equal to this in rank should be mentioned The Philatelist, from Stafford Smith in Brighton, which appeared from the 1st January 1867 to December 1876, i.e. 9 years. [Actually 10 years.] The disappearance of these two famous journals after such long and noteworthy existence is regrettable and inexplicable to us, but both have had successors in a more modest style. These are Alfred Smith & Co's Monthly Circular and the Philatelic Quarterly from Stafford Smith; this last journal, the Philatelic Review (Butler, Maidenhead), and the Universal Postage Stamp Advertiser (Cox, London) are the most read specialist magazines in England at the present time. Outstanding amongst the English journals was Edw. L. Pem[b]erton's Philatelic Journal, which had coloured illustrations and was edited by an illustrious name, but nevertheless lasted only one year (1872). There was also the Stamp Collectors Journal (1863) and Werninck & Co.'s The Stamp, also with coloured illustrations.

F. Booty brought out the first stamp catalogue in England in the year 1862 under the name The Stamp Collectors Guide. Although as early as 1863 there was a new edition with the new title Aids to Stamp Collectors, it lost ground when Mount Brown brought out his Catalogue of British Colonial and Foreign Postage Stamps. The first edition was also in 1862, and the 5th appeared as early as 1865. However, collecting was so vigorous in England, that these catalogues did not satisfy for very long. At the same time, 1862, Dr. J. Edward Gray, the Director of the British Museum brought out his excellent Hand Catalogue of Postage Stamps, the 3rd edition of which appeared in 18[6]5, and the 6th in 1874, when it took the title The Illustrated Catalogue of Postage Stamps. It is not only the best illustrated but also the quite outstanding catalogue for England. Neither Dr. C. Viner's Postage Stamp Collectors Catalogue & Guide (1869), nor J. B. Moens' Postage Stamps Illustrated can rival it. Only Edward L. Pemberton's Stamp Collectors Handbook is worth mentioning as of importance, and the same author's Philatetical Catalogue (1874) can be represented as a sort of ideal catalogue, in a very large format and complete with reproductions of original photographs. Unfortunately, because of its high price only one edition appeared, though this showed Pemberton's great knowledge and goodwill in the most brilliant manner.

England was at its least productive in the issue of stamp albums, a circumstance which explains why Belgium, Germany and even Holland turned out English editions and sold them in quantity. The first place amongst English albums is definitely taken by the E. S. Gibbons' Imperial Postage Stamp Album, which is in its third edition at the present time. Rich in pictures of coats of arms and stamps, magnificently produced, its only drawback is to be printed on both sides, which makes it impossible to put in supplementary sheets. Great popularity is also enjoyed by Edward A. Oppen's Postage Stamp Album, the first edition of which appeared in 1862, and the eighth in 1866. We should also mention Johnson & Rowe's Postage Stamp Collectors Paquet Album, the first English one, and H. Stafford Smith's Permanent Stamp Album (1869), which, like Stanley Gibbons & Co.'s Improved Postage Stamp Album has no text, etc., and is designed for the permanent display of entire covers, cards, etc. Finally there is the same publisher's The Philatetical Album (1878). The best known of the translations are J. Lallier's Postage Stamp Album (Paris & London 1862, 9th edition 1870), J. B. Moens' Postage Stamp Album (Brussels and London 1874, 10th edition 1874 [sic]), Von Rinsum's four-language Permanent Stamp Album (Amsterdam 1869), Bauschke's The Illustrated Postage Stamp Album (Plymouth and Leipzig 1867), and L. Senf's four-language Internationales Briefmarken-Album (1879).

Forgery, which was in full swing in England as early as the beginning of the sixties, gave rise to the following special publications: E. Doble: On the Falsification of Postage Stamps., (Falmouth, 1862), The Lewes and Edw. L. Pemberton: Forge[ed] Stamps. (Edinburgh, 1862), Thomas Dalston: How to detect Forge[d] Stamps. (1865), and J. M. Stourton: Postage Stamp Forgeries. (London 1865). Works that established their value, became superfluous with time however, since the magazines turned their whole attention to forgeries. How big a volume it would take to describe all the forgeries put into circulation to the present day. How soon would it be made incomplete because of the activities of forgers? England's literary productions since belong more to art, etc., and will be dealt with correspondingly.

If we now give a short glance back at England's scientific literature, we must start with the cessation of its best journals and state that in terms of its technical press it is now the worst of all the countries that embrace philately. On the other hand it cannot be denied that the excellence of its albums make it harder and harder to sell translations, since they take part in the topic of “seasonally lower prices”. Outstanding services to the English technical literature have been performed, in addition to the above-named authors and publishers by Edw. L. Pem[b]erton (†1879), Dr. J. E. Gray, Dr. C. Viner, W. Dudley A[t]lee, Dr. Boley [?], Overy Taylor, Rev. R. B. Earée, J. G. Wilson, C. H. Coster [American], Don M. P. de Figueroa [Spanish], Herbert Camoens [Pen name of Adelaide Lucy Fenton.] and many others whose names will often be met with in the English technical literature.

Let us now go on to a closer consideration of the French (including Belgian) literature.

French Philatelic Literature

This is less extensive, but on the whole however, more scientific than that of England or any other nation. We must give France, including Belgium, the honour of having produced the most superior literature, on whose research and results the whole of literature largely depends at the present time, whereas earlier it was only an echo itself. However the active production has tended to move from the central point of Paris and concentrate more in Brussels, where the Regent is responsible for all French technical literature and is notable for the development of philately.

Of journals, J. B. Moens’ *Le Timbre-Poste (Brussels) has appeared regularly from the 1st January 1863, to the present day. It has the distinction of being not only the oldest and longest lasting, but also the most important of all the specialist journals of the world. Its 16 volumes build up into one majestic grand volume, full of the most valuable material on philatelic science, and is loved and read well beyond the limits of the French-speaking world. As well as this, another technical journal is currently appearing in the French language, the Ami des Timbres from Charles Roussin in Paris, which is now in its 7th year, and is distinguished by an abundant chronicle and regular supplements that build up to a very complete illustrated catalogue (see below). The Collectionneur de Timbres Poste from Maury Jr. (Paris 1864-74), Le Timbrophile, from P. Mahé (Paris 18[6]4-71), La Gazette des Timbres from the same (Paris 1864-76) were read and requested for years, but have gone under with many less important ones.

As for French catalogues, the first to get known was A. Potiquet’s *Catalogue de Timbres-Poste (Paris 1862), though the year 1861 saw Laplant[e]’s Catalogue (Paris) and J. B. Moens’ *Manuel du Collectionneur de Timbres Poste (Brussels). This last appeared this year (1877) under the slightly altered title Catalogue-Prix-Courant des Timbres Poste in its fifteenth edition, and is the most complete of all existing catalogues and handbooks. Its completeness depends on minutiae, but it is widely read and loved. Of the older catalogues, Valettes’ *Petit Manuel de l’Amateur des T. P. (Paris 1862), Baillieu’s *Guide de l’Amateur de Timbres-Poste (Paris 1863), Moens’ *Illustrations du Manuel du Collectionneur and Nicolas’ *Catalog de l’Amateur de T. P. are worth mentioning. Of the newer ones, on the other hand, apart from the first-named, is Charles Roussin’s *Catalogue de tout les Timbres (Paris 1874, 2nd edition 1877), like that of Moens, it includes not only stamps but also cancellations, and is extremely accurate. There are also A. Maury’s *Catalog Complet des Timbres-Poste (Paris 1865, 5th edition 1876), and P Mahé’s *Guide-Manuel du Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste (Paris 1863, last edition 1870). Of the handbooks without details of prices J. B. Moens put out in Brussels his Timbres-Poste Illustrés, a work which stands alone until today in its costly format – 45 tables of illustrations in copperplate, and in 1867 Oscar Berger-Levrault in Strasburg put out his Catalogue Méthodique, which was the most reliable source-work till that time, and can still claim a high value today. Various specialist works appeared in Belgium as well. I would mention the following Timbres d'Offices Américains by Consul James Lesley (Brussels 1868), Timbres de Moldavie et de Roumanie by Dr. Magnus (Brussels 1869) and Les Timbres-Poste Rureaux de Russie, by Graf S. Kaprowsky (Brussels 1875). In the years from 1877 to the present J. B. Moens has put out his large-scale Bibliothèque des Timbrophiles, a multi-volume work which covers the history of the stamps of individual countries in the best diplomatic manner, and Dr. Magnus's work on watermarks: Essais sur les Filigranes des Timbres Poste (1867) which, because of its high price would never be generally popular but is of importance for the serious collector, and – made topical by forgeries as in England – Moens's Falsifications des Timbres-Poste (Brussels 1862), neither of which have had new editions and are now out of date and unusable.

Not many stamp albums have appeared in France, but those that have, have been with a few exceptions outstanding, and are still highly regarded and used. Justin Lallier's Album Timbres-Poste et Cartes Postales (Paris) contends with J. B. Moens's Album Timbres Poste (Brussels) for superiority as regards format and completeness. The first edition of both appeared in 1863. Lallier's went to 14 editions in its first decade, and Moens's to 11 in the same period, but reached its 17th in 1876. These two still appear in cross-quarto. Apart from them, France only has A. Maury's Petit Album des T. P. (Paris 1876), and the same author's Album Universell (Paris 1876) as worthy of note. After that we have to go to Holland (v. Rinsum) and Germany for their translations, of which G. Bauschke's Album Timbres-Poste (Leipzig 1867, 2nd ed. 1869) is worth mentioning, as apart from this translation, a literal reprint was produced, followed by the L. Senf Internationale Briefmarken-Album (in four languages, 1879).

That is our initial review of the French literature, fully described in the Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie (Paris 1877, Issues 5-8), and we have nothing else to say on it. It is a model literature which every philatelist should study as a duty, whatever language he speaks.

It should also be mentioned that France also favours the collection of revenue stamps, and devotes a special magazine to them, Le Timbre Fiscal, Moens, (Brussels 1874 - on). A Monographie des Timbres Fiscaux Mobiles de la France et des Colonies Françaises by Ph. d. B. appeared from Mahé in 1875. The catalogues from Moens and Roussin also give exact details of all known revenue stamps of the world. Finally J. B. Moens again in 1869 put out an Album Timbres Télégraphes, which however, is now united with his major Album Illustré pour Timbres Poste et Télégraphe. Useful information on the French literary domain has been given in the first place by Dr. Legrand in Paris, writing under the pseudonym Dr. Magnus, and Oscar Berger-Levrault in Nancy. Also active are Baron A. v. Rothschild, E. Regnart, E. de Rives de Seine, Ph. de Ferrari, Mahé, Maury, Schmidt de Wilde, etc., the greatest part of whom are still active in the literature of their own country.

Switzerland

Switzerland came to life in philately only recently. H. Riesen in Schwanden put out the Schweizerische Briefmarken-Zeitung, but had no success with it. The Schweizer Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung from R. Deyhle & Co. in Berne is now in its second year and still appears to be viable, which is not surprising as its contents are rich and suitable. Switzerland has no special literature to report; handbooks, albums etc., are obtained from Germany and France. The Swiss dealers put out various price lists, but only one is worth mentioning here, that on Schweizer Cantonalmarken by A. Schulze in Zurich, since it gives a complete enumeration of the stamps named with the exact dates. These stamps are shown in a photograph that appeared recently in Zurich. A. Schulze moreover, obtained a silver medal from the Paris Society in 1877 for his work on Schweizer Cantonalmarken published in Le Timbre-Poste.

North America

Going on now to the specialist literature of North America, an exact list of which was published by the American Journal of Philately in its fourth volume (p.127 and p.172), the quantity is greater than the quality. The urge to publish specialist journals has grown to a mania, as can be best seen from the fact that more than eighty journals have appeared since 1862. Over half of them hardly survived for half a year, often reaching only a single number.

The better journals are Scott & Co.'s (New York), J. J. Casey's Coin and Stamp Journal (New York) and The Philatelic Monthly (Philadelphia 1879 and still here at present). The American Journal of Philately was notable for being the first specialist journal which for some years published a coloured illustrated chronicle. The only other journals worth a mention are E. A. Craig's The Postman's Knock (St John, New Brunswick. 1867-70), The Philadelphia Monthly (Philadelphia 1870-71), The Stamp Collectors Guide (Meriden 1870-73), The Stamp Advertiser (1872-73), Mason's Coin and Stamp Collectors Magazine (Philadelphia 1867-72), and the Guia Coleccionista de Sellos de Correos, which has been published by E. C. Eberhard since 1878 in Valparaiso (Buenos Ayres).

Catalogues also appear in countless numbers, but without exception minus price lists, which are of not practical value for our studies. So as not to leave this section empty for America, we think the following catalogues are the best known: F. Trifet, Descriptive Price Catalogue of the Postage Stamps of all Nations (Boston 1877), Fr. King, The Postage Stamp Collectors Handbook (Boston 1867), Kline, The Stamp Collectors Manual (Philadelphia 1862. 3rd edition 1875), and Scott & Co.'s Postage Stamp Catalog (New York 1876 3rd edition). Since there are collectors of revenue stamps here as well, Trifet in Boston has published in Boston, 1877 a Catalogue of the Revenue Stamps of all Nations, which deserves to be accepted as a standard work.

Of albums, the first in America was: Appleton's Postage Stamp Album (New York, 1863), and the best, Beifeld's Postage Stamp Album (Chicago, 1876), Scott & Co.'s Common Sense Postage Stamp Album (New York, 1877) and the same firm's Permanent Postage Stamp Album (New York, 1877), and Durbin's Youth Companion Album (Philadelphia, 1880). The last named recently put out a postcard album, The Post Card Album, it is very zealous in the field of literature, and has certainly given great service to the propagation of this in America.

Of American philatelists, J. W. Scott, W. K. Fremann, R. Dinwidde Jr., Dr. J. A. Petrie, L. W. Durbin, Joseph Casey, Walter Leo Brown and John K. Tiffany have taken up literature, particularly the last, whom we have to thank for the valuable work The Philatetical Library.

Italy's Specialist Literature

Up to a few years ago, this was represented only by G. Brecker's Guida di tutti i francobolli (Florence, 1864). Since the year 1873 however attempts have been made to make up for lost time, and a considerable number of journals have been published. The first was: La Posta Mondiale by P. R. Torres (Leghorn, 1873), it was followed by E. Carlo Usigli's Il Raccoglitore (Florence, 1874), which gave only some space to philately along with certain antiques, coins, etc., both had a very short existence. Leopoldo Quartini's L'Etoile d'Italie, a monthly review, has issued since March 1876 (and still?) a supplement under the title L'Ami du Collectionneur Nouvelles faits divers et annonces pour les amateurs et negociants Philatélique, about which, we know little. Longer-lived on the other hand has been G. J. Morpurgo's Il Timbrofilo (Trieste from 1876), and Th. di L. Mayer's Corriere dei Francobolli (Trieste from 1874), also the Guida Illustrata del Timbrofilo by G. Leoni (Bologna), now in its 5th year. Some years this magazine gives its contents in French and Italian. There has only been one album: E. C. Usigli's Nouvo Album di Francobolli, which appeared in November 1875.

Catalogues, apart from Brecker's, have been P. R. de Torres Desscrittivo Cataloge de tutti i Franco-Bolli (Leghorn, 1873), E. C. Usigli's Catalogo di Francobolli (Florence, 1872) and the Deposito Centrale Timbrofilo Italiano put out a Catalogo e Guida Generale dei Francobolli etc., (Florence, 1874). As well as a number of outstanding price lists, Italy has produced an Adressbook von H. Tartarini & Co. in Bologna and the Bibliografia dell Italia by G. Leoni, (1878, awarded a prize by the Paris Society), otherwise there has been nothing noteworthy.

Denmark

Denmark has also begun to put out journals in recent years. These are the Scandinaviske Frimærketidende by A. Philipsen (Copenhagen, 1876), the Scandinaviske Frimærke-Journal from Bertini, and the Nordisk Frimærkeverden Mannedsskrift from L. J. Jensen and S. Schmidt (Copenhagen, 1878) – all three of no particular value. Their predecessor, the Nordisk Frimærketidende (Copenhagen) published by Karl Lund in 1867 lasted for 9 issues. A better price catalogue was issued in 1867 by Sopus Apel in Copenhagen, and a dealers and collectors address book Adressebog voor Scankinaviske Frimærke-Sammler was issued in 1877 by François Bertini in Copenhagen.

Norway

All we know from Norway is: J. A. Fischer's Catalog over alle Bekjendte Postfrimaerker (Christiania, 1877), a work which in form and content appears to be a translation of Moschkau's Handbook für Postmarkensammler, and the small Brev-aller Frimaerker-Album published by L. Senf in 1879 (Leipzig and Nuremberg).

Netherlands

In Holland, C. v. Rinsum, mentioned earlier, has put out some literature. This consists of his four-language The Permanent Stamp Album (Amsterdam, 1869), and the following three journals: The Continental Philatelic Magazine (1869), The Timbrofilist (1869) and the General Stamp Advertiser (1870), but without exception these only lasted for a few issues. Apart from Blokzeyl's Catalogue of Postage Stamps (Amsterdam, 1873) nothing else has been published in Holland as far as we know.

Russia and Finland are only represented in philatelic literature by a few commonplace price lists, and so we are now left with only Spain

Spain

Of its literature, etc. Dr. Thebussem in 1874 published a very interesting pamphlet Literatura Filatélica en España, which however leaves much to be desired as regards completeness. Tiffany mentions the following two journals ignored by Dr. Thebussem: D. B. C. Cortes, El Coleccionista de Sellos, four issues of which appeared in 1871, and Gilabert, El Indicador de los Sellos, one issue of which appeared in 1870, El Averiguador, a first-rate publication, appeared in Madrid from January 1871 to February 1873 and devoted a fair proportion of its columns to philately, but at the moment Spain has no sort of literary publications*. Its oldest specialised magazine, Revista de Correos (Madrid 1866) lasted hardly one year. Spain produced no albums of its own, but its philatelists are active in many branches of journalism, particularly in the French literature. As well as Dr. Thebussem we may mention Francisco Lopez Fabra, Eduardo Gilabert, Aurelio Vasquez, A. Rentero, M. [P.] de Figueroa [Who used the pseudonym Dr. Thebussem], and Dr. Diario of Cadiz.

* Der Kpankler, a sort of magazine that appeared in 1871 has a considerable number of good philatelic articles.

Germany

The German philatelic literature, whose description we have deliberately left to the last, was of little importance to us in the first years of collecting, but it must be stated that its development exceeds all others, with the exception of France and England, in excellence and scientific method. It first began to have success in the course of the last decade, and it simply cannot be denied that it has produced valuable items which can sometimes act as examples even though there are so many that some are bound to be of lesser value. Foreign countries, which used to take no, or very rare, notice of the German literature, now tend to give it lively attention, discuss and use it extensively, award it medals and prizes, and often rate much German work higher than do the Germans themselves, who tend to have a feeling of we can't do it, which is less and less justified as time goes on.

At this point we hope to give as complete as survey as possible of the German literature arranged by its various branches, which, ignoring the supplements that have become necessary in between, we have taken from the Illustrierten Briefmarken-Journal of 1876 (Leipzig, L. Senf). However we shall accept that the German Briefmarkenzeitung in 1870 gave a survey of all German specialist journals; the Moschkau Magazin für Markensammler 1871 gave a survey of all the homeland literature and the above-mentioned Senf journal published a supplement to it in 1874. This, when compared with the survey in the Moschkau Magazin in 1871, should give the best idea of the progressive growth of our scientific literature in the short span of a decade.

Translator's note: Pages 37 to 54 provide a complete inventory of the German-language philatelic literature. There is no point in translating what is simply a list of publications so the translation resumes halfway down page 54, where the normal text continues.

There are in Germany a large number of philatelists who vigorously support the specialist press. Germany stands almost alone in this respect. From an earlier time we can think of W. Th. Clausius, Prof. Dr. Weiss, Dr. Joseph, Theodor Israel, G. Wuttig, Baron v. Thümen, etc. At the present time the first rank is occupied by manor owner A. Treichel, who for years has been a zealous and well-read contributor to our various specialist journals, particularly with his pioneer collection of watermarks, his many highly scientific articles, the discovery of the Cordoba stamps, etc., so that he enjoys high regard in German collecting circles. Other names that are well known in philatelic circles are Ludwig Berger, W. Enke, Th. Haas, Birgham, F. Michel, teacher E. Huxhagen, Dr. Ehrentheil, Chancery Counsel Mödinger, Dr. Eyselein, R. Mosta, E. P. Schiffmann, pharmacist G. Kauffmann, school inspector G. Wendtland, etc., because of their valuable contributions. The authors of monographs, which obviously also play a very important part in our specialist press, have been included in the above list. We have delved too long into the philatelic literature, though we have discovered in it the foundation on which philately was able to develop so successfully, and the expansion and further development of our young science definitely depend on it. Hence the attention we have devoted to it is absolutely necessary, which we can justify on more grounds than one.

PHILATELIC SOCIETIES

Another major support for philately is the Philatelic Societies which have grown up in the major cities of all countries. Their main aim is to educate their members in the field of philately, the extension of philatelic efforts and as far as possible the erasure of abuse: forgeries and imitations sold as real stamps.

England

England led the way in this respect as well. The first information we have on the existence of a philatelic society is from November 1865, when a number of collectors of coins, seals, autographs and stamps got together in Bridlington under the name Bridlington Hobbies Society. This put out a journal of its own: The Collectors' Journal for British, Continental and American Stamp, Coin, Coats-of-Arms, Autographs and all Curiosities. We cannot find out how long this society existed. On the 10th April 1869 the London Society The Philatelic Society, London came into being, which is still today the most important society. Its society reports are given in the Stamp Collectors Magazine and the Philatelist. This is headed by Sir Daniel Cooper as President, with lawyer [F.] A. Philbrick as vice-president and Professor de Ioannis as secretary. Amongst the members we may mention Dr. Ch. W. Viner, Victoriano G. de Ysasi, Artillery Lieutenant Speranza, Dr. F. Smith, Th. F. Erskyne, etc. The Society's offices are in Great George St.

North America

America got its first society on the 1st May 1866. This was The Excelsior Stamp Association in St Johns, New Brunswick, a society whose organ is The Postman's Knock. We can find out nothing about its committee, membership, etc., but we do know that on the 1st November 1866 the Society held a major Stamp Lottery, which was reported in the following years. The Philatelic Society founded in New York in February 1868 acted on a sounder basis, and at present it meets twice a month, at the Society headquarters, 34 Liberty Street. The Society organ is the American Journal of Philately. W. R Freman officiates as President. B. Matthews as Vice-President, and Dr. Petrie as Secretary. Important members are: Dr. Morley, Dr. Grafton, J. W. Scott, G. P. ten Bröck, Prof. Bunger, Baron Münchhausen, etc. The Society has rendered many services to philately. Thus, in 1871 it established the following prizes: a gold medal to the owner of the most complete album, silver medals for the second- and third-largest albums, and silver medals for the best laid out collection of stamps and covers, for the best production of a catalogue of all North American stamps, etc. The New York Society's idea for the formation of an International Philatelic Society found no response in England. As well as this society, a National Philatelic Society has existed in New York since 1878, and there is also a philatelic society in Wytheville, but we have no details of either. We found the name of the first secretary, Bogert, and the Stamp Journal was the society organ.

South America

South America has also had a philatelic society since the 24th November 1878 in the shape of the Sociedad Filotélica Sud America de Lima. The president is Paul Ascher, and the society organ is the Eberhardt Guia Coleccionista. Unfortunately I cannot find out whether the Sociedad Filotélica Uruguaya announced in October 1879 did come into being.

France

France followed for the first time in December 1874, when the Société Française de Timbrologie was constituted in Paris, and has gained a respected name. In May 1877 it had 66 members of whom 25 were French, and the rest came from countries in all parts of the world. This number has increased significantly since. It published first-rate Bulletins (15 of which have appeared to date), they specialize above all in special catalogues of individual countries, but issue other important material as well, particularly the readable meeting reports. Many of these have been reproduced in the texts of French, English and Italian specialist journals. The Society also owns a fine library. The post of President is still held at present by Baron Arthur von Rothschild, Dr. Legrand is secretary and M. Bouchez editor. Of the members may be named: Professor de Ferrari, E. Long, de Rosny, Baron de Saint Saud, Ph. de Bosredon, Civil Engineer Cossmann, Schmidt de Wilde, etc. German collectors belonging to the Society are: W. Enke, L. Berger, Director H. Hirsch, A. Treichel, von Oppenfeld, Ferd. Meyer, Dr. Kloss and many more. Many of them have gained prizes from the Society in the course of the last two years. Messrs Ferd. Meyer and Dr. Kloss have won medals. Messrs F. Meyer, Dr Moschkau and A. Treichel have gained diplomas of honour.

Italy

In Italy the Club-Sociale Timbrofile di Livorno, was founded in October 1873 and had its headquarters in No. 1 Via Maggi, Leghorn, as long as it existed. P. R. de Torres and Pini Alberto head the club, and these gentlemen also acted as editors of the Society organ La Posta Mondiale. We doubt if this club is still in existence, and the Societa Timbrofila in Florence and the Club Timbrofilo Mondiale in Trieste appear not to have got beyond the project stage.

The idea put forward in Florence in September 1878 for an Associazione Nazionale Timbrofila Italiana was officially objected to, since Issue eleven of the Corriere dei Francobolli, which published the suggestion in its columns underwent confiscation, an event unique amongst philatelic journals.

Austro-Hungary

Austro-Hungary has tried very hard to start a society. In spite of the known great interest taken there in philately, these efforts have been fruitless up to recent times. In March 1875 an attempt was made by R. Odabassian in Vienna to start an Austrian society, but only 30 members registered and with such weak support it was thought as well to retreat. However on the 28th December of the same year the Gesellschaft der Briefmarkenfreunde in Wien was started and held regular meetings at Schottengasse 1, from then on the Vice-President was Eduard Heim. As far as I know this society broke up again in 1876. Even more recently, the stamp dealer S. Friedl of Vienna finally managed to start a Wiener Philatelisten-Club. It was set up on the 25th April 1880 and the gentleman named was chosen as overseer. The Erste Ungarische Philatelisten-Verein, in Pest, under the Presidency of Sigmund Stein, the Philatelistika in Brünn (Moravia), Ignaz Veith President, finally the Briefmarkensammler-Club in Raab (Hungary) founded in February 1878 with A. Stierlitz as President, have been engulfed in silence ever since, only the Literary Philatelic Society in Agram (Croatia), founded in 1876, seems to be still in existence, and its long-time President was the Catholic Priest Oscar Simic (now in Vugrovec).

Switzerland

In Switzerland, the first society appeared in Berne in autumn 1877, but we have no details at present.

Germany

The need for stamp collectors to form societies was felt most strongly in Germany, though it must be admitted that few of these societies lasted long, and only in the last two years or so has the society trend become really important.

The Süddeutsche Philatelisten-Verein founded by the student lawyer W. Faber in Heidelberg 1869 was the first in Germany. Its statutes ran to 12 paragraphs, its society organ was the Bazar für Briefmarkensammler. An offshoot of this society was the Verein zur Unterdrückung Antiphilatelistischer Elemente, also located in Heidelberg, which has done outstanding work in uncovering many swindles and bringing many forgers before the criminal court. The German war thinned out the ranks of the members – finally both societies closed.

If Dr. Alfred Moschkau had at this time tried to find out whether it would be possible also to found a Norddeutschen Verein, his efforts would have met with no success (a meeting in Dresden attracted only one collector!) – up to May 1871. Then, in conjunction with trainee lawyer Alexander Treichel and Dr. Arldt he put out an appeal in the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung that he edited, and this led on the 10th of May, to the formation of the Vereins Deutscher Philatelisten, with its headquarters in Dresden. In the early days, the society organ was the Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung, later Moschkau's Magazin. In the end however they got their own organ in the Philatelist, which however could not thrive because of the lack of strong support from the public. For members only, the Society issued the Vertraulichen Mittheilungen, whose contents were interesting and useful, and protected the membership from many precursory losses. In the later years of its existence the Society used the Hamburger Briefmarken-Anzeiger for its announcements. As long as the Society lasted, the committee had Dr. A. Moschkau as its first President, and A. Treichel as its second. In its flowering season the Society had 26 members, including all the major German collectors, e.g. B. G. Gerdeisen, Apothecary von Hymen, Customs Official Lindenberg, Mine Director G. Pilz, Chamberlain Freih. v. Schütz-Pflummern, War Councillor Winkler, Apothecary Vigener, Editor Louis May, etc., collectors who without exception are still today real adherents of philately. As well as the Vereine Deutscher Philatelisten, the Philatelisten-Club appeared in Hamburg in the year 1871. It was set up on the 12th of November of that year and was comparatively rich in members and honorary members. It had its meetings every week at 15 Pelzerstrasse, and gave all of its members a beautiful photograph album with pictures of all its members. Choirmaster Hönecke dedicated his waltz Die Philatelisten to the Club. The Club was not inactive, it repeatedly reported major meetings at which lectures on philately were given. The President Louis May, who once ran a “philatelic journal reader’s circle” in Hamburg was very active in promoting the Society. On the 24th November 1876 the Society celebrated five years of existence. It should be mentioned at this point that the single noteworthy Philatelisten-Congress in July 1872 at Lübeck was the work of the Hamburg Club. This Club dissolved subsequently, but, as will be mentioned later, reappeared in a new form. We lack precise information about the Philatelic Clubs in Bremerhafen, Kiel, Lübeck, Schwelm, etc., but we can say that they all used the Hamburger Briefmarken Anzeiger as their society organ. The Union philatelic club in Brunswick was founded in 1876 by Ludwig Berger, who was also President. It is questionable whether these last clubs still exist. The Philatelisten Verein in Leipzig held its first meeting on the 19th February 1876 in the Gehrike Restaurant, Reichsstrasse. It found lively support only at the beginning. Its founder, merchant Oswald Schroeder was Chairman of the Society, which closed after a year of life, and was also not viable after rejuvenation in 1878. At first the Leipzig Society used the Senf journal as its society organ. A Verein für Briefmarkenkunde was founded on the 1st January 1871, with its leadership in the hands of language teacher G. Fouré and its location at 2 Hausvoigteiplatz, but seem to have gone the way of all flesh. The same applies apparently to the Berliner Briefmarken-Verein, which I found mentioned in 1878, with W. Bruseberg as Chairman. The Junge Briefmarkenverein der Provinz Posen in Bromberg was founded in 1878, but I do not know if it still exists.

The following societies actually exist in Germany at the present time:

Verein Schlesischer Briefmarkensammler

Founded on the 1st April 1876, located in Breslau. This has two meetings a month at 79 Oblauerstrasse, used the Senf Briefmarken-Journal at first, then later the Hamburger Briefmarkenzeitung as its society organ and is led by the Railway Director Kletke as President and J. Schlesinger as Secretary.

Philatelistenverein

Founded at Cöthen on the 17th February 1877 with the branch society Allgemeiner Deutscher Postmarken-Börsen-Verein since August 1877.

Verein Strassburger Briefmarkensammler from November 1877.

Internationale Philatelisten-Verein

Of Dresden, which with its official organ, the stamp magazine Union began its life on the 1st January 1877. The President of this important society was then the chemist A. Nieske of Dresden. Since May 1880 however the Committee of this society has consisted of Theo Thimäus as Chairman, Doctor of Law P. Kloss as Secretary, F. A. Schuhmann as Treasurer. From the 1st June 1880 the society replaced Union which it had used up to then by their own society organ Der Philatelist and the confidential magazine for members only, Vertrauliche Mittheilungen, appeared at certain intervals. At the moment, this society has 78 members, outstanding amongst which are Messrs: Court President Suppantschitsch of Adelsberg, Chancellery Counsel Mödinger of Berlin, Custom Officer Lindenberg of Spremberg, World Priest Simic of Vugrowec, Count von Ungern-Sternberg of Hapsal, etc.

Philatelisten-Club

Also at Dresden, which we first find mentioned in 1878, and which used the Allgemeine Briefmarken-Anzeiger as its society organ. In the year 1879 the committee of the society was L. E. Lorenz, President, and A. Liebscher, Editor.

Briefmarken-Verein

This society was restarted in 1878 in Hamburg and it now has a well-edited society organ in the Hamburger Briefmarken-Zeitung. Initially A. Owitch was President and D. G. E. Brasch Editor, but since the 24th May 1879 Adolf Sternberg has been President and Otto Meyer Vice-President and Editor. It holds its meetings in Kloth's Bierhalle, Kleine Bäckerstrasse. In 1878 the Society used the Senf Journal for society purposes.

Rheinisch-Reichsländische Philatelistenverein

Founded on the 1st May 1878 in Colmar (Alsace), the President is Dr. H. Fischer, Secretary Prof. A Frischbier de Raab, and the society meets in the Café de Globe in Cathedral Square.

Philatelisten-Verein

This society was set up on the 19th June 1877 in Wiesbaden, with H. Koch of Eltville as President and Th. Engel as Secretary. It meets in the Restaurant zur Union.

Verein für Briefmarkenkunde

Founded on the 6th June 1878 in Frankfurt. Until recently the committee consisted of Messrs G. J. Gerlach as President and L. Lücke Editor. However after new elections on the 8th December 1879 the names out of the urn were G. J. Gerlach, Chairman, F. H. Westphal, Deputy, G. Fries and O. Pajunk Editors. The Frankfurt Society not only enjoyed the reputation of being one of the most zealous specialist societies, but was one of the constituent members of the Verbands Deutscher Philatelisten-Verein, which we shall come back to later.

Philatelisten-Verein

The society was called into life in Hildesheim at the end of the year 1878. This meets regularly every Thursday at J. Bremer, Paradeplatz, with M. Isenstein as President, Ganz as Editor.

Verein Schlesischer Philatelisten

Founded shortly before the end of 1878, on the 14th November in Hirschberg, Silesia, under the leadership of G. Wende as President, O. Leopold and A. Neumann as the willing Editors. They use the Senf Journal as their society organ, and meetings are held in the home of the President.

Philatelie

This society joined the ranks of the German societies for Geithain and district on the 7th April 1879. The officers since then have been A. Mosdorf as Chairman and M. W. Wittrisch as Editor.

Verein für Briefmarkensammler

Founded a few days after, on the 10th April in Munich, it has met every Sunday evening since then in the Café Scholastika. The original committee was G. Wetzstein as Editor and Bank Official Deuerling, whereas at the moment First Lieutenant Count v. Eseback is President.

Verein für Briefmarkenkunde

Founded in Cologne on the 31st May 1879 with Fr. Böhle of Cologne as President. Meetings take place every Wednesday in the small hall of the Gürzenich. On the 1st December 1879 the society decided on a "Society Album".

Karlsruher Briefmarkensammler

Founded in July 1879, printed its Statutes and is presided over at present by Architect W. Fässy, with Layh as Editor.

Magdeburger Briefmarkensammler-Verein

Seems to have been started in spring of the year 1879. We have its duplicated Statutes, which name P. Schmuckert as President and C. Friedrich as Editor.

Essener Philatelisten-Verein

Founded in the year 1880. It started up on the 10th January, and had S. Preen as Chairman, L. Merländer as Vice-President, H. d'Alquen as Editor.

Philatelisten-Verein

I know nothing of when this society was started in Chemnitz.

Some of this large number of German philatelic societies have united to form the Verband Deutscher Briefmarkensammler-Vereine, which was brought about by the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde in Frankfurt-am-Main. This published a proposal in June 1879, and by December 1879 the societies of Frankfurt, Munich, Geithain, Breslau, Magdeburg, Hirschberg, Strasburg, Wiesbaden and Chemnitz had joined, whilst other German societies are confidently expected to join this union, which was set up on the 2nd October 1879. For the first two years the Frankfurt Society held the Presidency, and the union organ was the Senf Journal which serves likewise as the organ for most of the above-mentioned societies.

We hope that these numerous societies that have come into being recently may go on existing to the profit of our science, and that the purpose of these societies will be still better known in future.

STAMPS AS GOODS

If we look on stamps as goods, as trade articles, we have to accept that we ourselves never dreamt that they would ever become such an important article of exchange. However if we merely look at the first and best of the many address books, and study the number of stamp dealers all over the world, we are compelled to recognise that this odd activity must be called a business. In fact stamp businesses have appeared everywhere in response to demand. On the Continent there is hardly a small town which does not have at least a sale point for stamps for collectors, and thus its widespread expansion explains itself.

The principal trade in stamps was concentrated from the beginning in Paris, Brussels, London, New York, Hamburg and Leipzig, cities which still dominate without exception. They are the seats not only of the most-read journals, but also of the most important dealer-houses. For the most part they limit themselves to the purchase and sale of postage stamps, but some of them also go in for secondary trades (such as book and antique dealing). Large stamp dealers include J. B. Moens in Brussels and Maury in Paris, whose stock must be of immense value. Other important dealers are Stafford Smith & Co. of Brighton, named the Court Stamp Dealer by the Prince of Orange, J. W. Scott & Co. in New York, Julius Goldner in Hamburg and Louis Senf of Leipzig, which for business and stock rivals the first-named firms. On the cover of his price lists, Maury gives us a picture of his business premises, which is no less striking than the picture of the premises of the firm of J. W. Scott & Co. in New York given in the American Journal of Philately, 1876. Also worth seeing are the large impressive stock fittings in L. Senf's business in Leipzig, which are pictured in the first number of volume four of the Leipziger Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal, which have excited wonder in many researchers.

The trade in stamps also brought the stamp exchanges into existence, and businesses which operated in this way, first at the Paris market, which was situated in the Terrace de Feuillant and later in Palais Royal, became fairly important. The Paris exchange closed however a long time ago, and we still get regular reports only from the Hamburg exchange, though in the German countries Bremen, Lübeck, Coethen, Mannheim, Gablonz, Kaufbeuren, Leipzig, Dresden, Berlin, Ohrdruf, etc., claim either to have or have had exchanges. Regular exchange and market reports are currently given by the Hamburger Briefmarken-Zeitung, the Union of Dresden, and the Corriere du Francobolli of Trieste, this last in three languages. An Exchange Sheet for the German Stamp Trade appeared in Kaufbeuren but only for a very short time, as did Theodor Müller's Regelmässiger Wochen- und Marktberichte der Hamburger, Lübecker und Bremer Briefmarkenbörse, of which we only know four issues.

There was a plan to centralize the wholesale stamp market in England by a joint-stock undertaking, which led to the foundation in London in 1864 of The London, Provincial, Colonial and Continental Stamp Company, with the respected name of Dr. C. W. Viner at the top, but it was never more than an idea. The same is true of a project for a stamp joint stock company in Hamburg in 1874. On the other hand, stamp lotteries (e.g. 1867 in St John's, New Brunswick, etc.) and stamp auctions proved viable and still take place yearly in London (where the famous collection of W. Th. Claudius came under the hammer) and New York had extremely well-attended auctions. It now only remains to mention the Dealer's Congresses in Wolfenbüttel in 1873 and '74, and in Berlin in 1877. These were devoted to the common interest, but their actual result remains unknown to us.

FORGERIES INDUSTRY

This must be the right place to turn again to forgeries, their production and the trade in them. In earlier days the main locations of the forgery industry were Hamburg and Nuremberg, but recently these have been joined by Boston, Liverpool, Paris, Brussels and Dresden, and its business and extent has gradually become so significant that neither warnings nor punishments have been at all effective and in fact there can be hardly any collections into which this sort of production has not found its way. Since of course forged stamps call for totally different treatment than the often difficult to produce originals, it often happens to inexperienced dealers who are only used to this side and make the stamp trade one of confidence, they are taken in to their own damage, and confidence is steadily lost, to the constant harm of a considerable number of enthusiasts and friends. Already in the history of stamps we have dealt adequately with forgeries, and we will point out the following consequences. The best forgeries come from Liverpool and Paris at the moment. The first-named place, the home of the Persian, Shanghai, Brazilian, Centennial covers, etc. has supplied the most perfect possible, and the workshops there, which pretty well flood the market, have certainly got into albums in their thousands, often distinguishable from the originals only by being better made. Paris however delights us with doubly dangerous items, deceptive items not even lacking a watermark. We need think only of the rare old Tuscany stamps, which leave very little to be desired and come into commerce neatly cancelled. Against these excellent copies, the ones produced in Dresden, Hamburg, Zürich, etc. on a factory scale are only "pictures", as is well known and are increasingly aimed for sale abroad. At the beginning of the year 1877 a whole stamp-forging firm came up before the law in Philadelphia, and had to pay heavy compensation for their cheating, also, stamp forgers were severely punished in Berlin in 1873 and 1877, Jassy (Rumania) in 1874, and Vienna in 1876. The once common forgeries, which the expert could usually detect at a first glance, could easily be brought to the attention of the public, likewise chemical forgeries (alteration to the colour) could almost always be detected at once. However, before the introduction of watermarks into his products collectors had nothing to fear, we have now reached a point where we must take things less lightly than previously seemed to be the case. Who can we trust now? The only precaution against losing money in this respect is simply to buy only from firms with a good reputation, which if they do sell anyone an undetected forgery, as is easily possible under existing circumstances, will immediately and readily either refund the cost or replace it. Dealers and experts are not always the same people, and it is more than likely that good forgeries can be purchased and repurchased at will.

The writer of this, has for years taken on the task of checking stamps and deals with a yearly average of 500, and knows only too well how easily long-standing large-scale collectors can be deceived. A forgery collection which he build up contained some 2,000 varieties without even being approximately complete. He must therefore welcome with pleasure the establishment of as many test points as possible, even though he knows from experience that the ultimate removal of this cancer is not in sight. Postal Secretary D. Herrmann in Berlin, Ludwig Berger in Brussels, S. Friedl in Vienna, the Secretariat of the International Philatelic Union in Dresden have already decided to carry out free testing, but there is still much to be done to eliminate such a deep-seated evil*.

* The present writer has closed down his own testing [expertising] service, since the many calls on his time made it impossible to go on.

MAJOR STAMP COLLECTORS AND COLLECTIONS

Who is really collecting stamps at present? This is a question which the seeker after knowledge often finds answered with an ironical laugh and a simple children collect stamps! This is quite wrong and explains nothing. Children collect beetles, butterflies, stones, pictures and coins simply as pure items for collecting, and adults are a thousand-fold more-interested and collect the same things; likewise innumerable children also collect stamps. However, not only children: as early as 1876 I undertook to answer this question for Senf's Briefmarken-Journal on the basis of my own extensive private correspondence and I cover adherents of philately from princes to manual workers. Philately attracts devotees from every rank of life – from the Postmaster General to the Post Office assistants, higher officers on land and sea, university students to village school pupils. Staff of all Faculties, Theologians to Franciscan monks, officials of the law, mining, customs and monastic callings, court and nobility, merchants and booksellers, manual work and industry, and all at every age. The father often collects for, and often with his son, often the two of them have a wager. The world of ladies has even taken up philately, and some collect with a great deal of understanding. We have here the collections of Princess Auersperg, Countess Thun, etc., amongst the largest and most beautiful. It is interesting to see how eagerly philately has been embraced in princely circles. It has already been mentioned that the Prince of Orange has his own Court Stamp Curator, but the Empress of Austria and the King of Italy also have fine collections. Pope Pius IX collected with his Chancellor Antonelli, and the Union (Dresden) has told us wonderful things about the latter's collection. It has long been known that the King of Portugal has preferences in collecting, and certainly the numerous Portuguese colonial issues are only to be seen as a result of this predilection. The late Duchess Sophie of Bavaria and Princess Napoleon were the owners of costly albums, as was Princess Auersperg. The uncle of the German Emperor, Prince William of Prussia should possess one of the finest collections, since he has been a philatelist for years and was still an ardent collector not long ago. When the author of this sent the first edition to Prince William, he replied with one of his gracious letters, an honour also conferred on the editor of the Wiener Briefmarken-Zeitung, S. Friedl, for sending him philatelic works in the year 1877. Finally Count Galitzin has paid great attention to the completion of his collection, and still knows how to attract great attention to it today.

Major collections exist in great numbers, virtually complete, lacking no official postage stamps. A few even have stamps which only exist in single examples, and so can only belong to exceptional collectors. They include the 27 Para from Moldavia, the 1 shilling Mauritius cover, the first issue from British Guiana, etc., stamps which few collectors have ever seen and can only dream of. A totally complete collection in Germany belongs only to Postal Secretary D. Herrmann in Berlin, but significant collections of the first rank belong to A. Nieske in Dresden (previously in the possession of G. Hartig in Blasewitz near Dresden), which numbers 10,000 kept in loose-leaf portfolios in a tall narrow cupboard, and to Chancery Councillor Mödinger of Berlin, who is particularly strong in covers, cards and postal wrappers, which are kept in fifty portfolios. There are also estate owner A. Treichel in Hochpaleschken, hotelier Nelböck in Salzburg, opera singer Perotti in Pest, bookseller P. Lietzow in Berlin, whose collection takes up the space of six large albums, language teacher Fouré in Berlin, senior magistrate Goldfuss in Creutzburg, G. J. Gerlach in Frankfurt-am-Main, doctor of law Kloss in Dresden, H. Schwaneberger in Leipzig, W. Fickert in Berlin and very many more. Of earlier major collections we may mention those of Prof. Dr. Volpi in Munich, Prof. Dr. Weiss in Lemberg, Dr. Joseph in Breslau, member of the Diet Th. Israel in Eidau, W. Th. Clausius in Frankfurt-am-Main, Professor Eltz in Hanover and that of the writer. This last, as is known, served as the basis of Schaubek's excellent album and catalogue; it was given honourable mention by the Geological Society of Dresden, and it was given as the best of the German Field Post Offices after it was publicly exhibited in Dresden in 1870. After it had been exhibited to His Majesty King Johann, who has since died, the also deceased, Princess Sophie Duchess of Bavaria and his present Majesty, King Albert of Saxony, then the Crown Prince, at their request the collection was described in the Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung 1870/71. Of major collections outside Germany we may mention those of Baron Arthur Von Rothschild, Dr. Legrand, Ph. de Ferrari, law student Schmidt de Wilde, M. de Bosredon, all in Paris, Oscar Berger-Levrault in Nancy, who try to complete their collections, Baron Cooper, Prof. de Joannis, Dr. John Edward Gray director of the British Museum in London, though we do not in the least claim to have listed all important collections at home and abroad.

Finally, we find major collections still in the possession of the authorities, principally the postal authorities, but also various museums, archives, etc., since there is increasing acknowledgement of the indisputable value of postage stamp collections.

The best known is the Post Museum in Berlin which has the collection of the German General Post Office. This came to about 4,500 items in April 1876. It is kept in 134 loose-leaf binders and 113 portfolios and must have increased considerably since then. It was shown at the Vienna World Exhibition, and was the object of general attention, and received the same degree of interest in the Imperial Parliament when it was shown to the members. The creation of this collection was a service of the German Postmaster-General and State Secretary, his Excellency Dr. H. Stephan, who, to keep it current, has set up a lively exchange service with the postal undertakings of all countries. The stamp collection in the Hotel des Monnaies (State Mint) in Paris, Quai Conti, deserves a more-detailed description. A side room near the large coin collection a dozen large glass cases hanging on the wall contains the postage stamp collection specially, whilst, the collection of covers and postcards in entire untrimmed examples are in a large glass case in the middle of the room. The stamp collection contains several thousand items, but is nowhere near as complete as that in the German Postal Museum. The archives of the General Post Office in London and St. Petersburg, and the Baden State Railway in Carlsruhe have spent large sums on the amassing of fine collections. The custodian of the City Museum in Brunswick, teacher Huxhagen, has built up a collection. A. Treichel made a gift of a collection of all Prussian and North German stamps to the Stamp Museum in Berlin. The Historical-Ethnic Museum in Herrnhut has given an outstanding place to China's indigenous postcards. The Museum of Antiquities in Oybin has a fair number of balloon letters from Paris and Metz, and the Royal Grand Ducal Institute of Luxembourg prides itself very much on having a balloon letter from Metz amongst its valuable items.

STAMP EXHIBITIONS

Postage stamps, these so tiny but still so important bearers of a culture, were also the regular objects of international exhibitions, reflecting not only the art of the engraver but also the taste of the country concerned. They appeared as early as 1862 in London and then on a larger scale in Paris in 1867. We have more detailed reports on the stamps exhibited in Vienna in 1873 and Philadelphia in 1876. In Vienna the crown of philately was the collection of the German General Post Office and the Imperial Postal Inspector Adrian often had to state, The greatest attraction for the visitor to the postal exhibition is the stamp collection in the last division of the Imperial General Post Office. Apart from this collection, Germany also exhibited complete displays of the then Imperial postage stamps, German trials/essays, those for the North German Union, the stamps of Alsace-Lorraine, cancellation stamps, etc. Bavaria was represented by a collection of all its postage stamps, as were Württemberg, Austria, Russia, Italy, Belgium, Holland, etc. Portugal even sent the original plates of an earlier issue. The most magnificent items were from the American Banknote Company, from whose studios in recent years have come the most beautiful stamps, particularly for America, the Sandwich Islands, Newfoundland, etc. One curiosity was a table whose glass top was covered with a mixture of stamps in very tasteful groupings. A less rich stamp exhibition was held in Philadelphia in 1876. The principal exhibit was a splendid tableau from the Banknote Company, also J. W. Scott & Co. showed a tableau from old New Granada, Mexico; Enchedé & Sons in Harlem showed an album with stamps of Holland and its colonies, and the English General Post Office showed its album with a complete set of England and its colonies. Stamp exhibitions were found especially in Dresden, Munich, Vienna and Berlin, in Dresden and Munich during the war of 1870/71. The author of this had his collection judged the best from Field Post Offices. G. Gerdeisen of Munich was the best of the surprising ones. The German Briefmarkenzeitung, 1870, Issue 3, gave a detailed report of the first exhibition. The album exhibition contains about 6,000 stamps and was complete to within 7 items. Along with the album its owner showed his philatelic library of books, journals, music, etc., plus Sir Rowland Hill's portrait. In the year 1873 S. F. Friedmann showed a very expensive collection in Vienna, its value being over 25,000 francs. In the year 1873 P. Lietzow in Berlin showed his significant collection of the best of the Russian issues. This last exhibition nominally enjoyed a significant attendance. Also to be remembered is the Hungarian stamps and maps exhibition in Nyireghazan in spring 1877, at which the firm of L. Senf of Leipzig showed a complete collection of its philatelic publications, which was distinguished by the prize judge with highest recommendation*.

- * L. Senf also showed an outstanding tableaux of stamps and a variety of philatelic articles at the Learning Media Exhibition in Dresden in 1877. O. Petritz of Chemnitz, who had displayed earlier at the Trade and Industry Exhibition, also brought a stamp exhibit to Dresden.

The importance for philately of all such public exhibitions of stamps and their associated literature is obvious, and it must be stressed that the actions of the German Postmaster-General Dr. Stephan in planning a collection, exhibiting it in Vienna, finding it a permanent home in the Berlin Postal Museum by means of a bill in the Reichstag, etc., have contributed very much to the acceptance of stamp collecting, especially in Germany. Philately in Germany enjoys increasing sympathy in all circles, and this can only lead eventually to a higher estimate of its scientific value, as has already happened in France, England, Belgium, etc.

POSTAGE STAMPS IN ART, MUSIC POETRY AND INDUSTRY

Philately however, is not just a commodity for dealers, an amusement for collectors, but has found approval and profit also in art, music, poetry and even industry. Photography has supplied us with a great number of accomplished artistic works showing postage stamps. For example, B. G. B. Brewerton in New York has turned out a visiting card with all American revenue stamps and postmarks. J. R. Grant & Co. of Dawlish produced a tableau of the old Californian stamps, Moens of Brussels a visiting card with reproductions of 108 North American private stamps. Torbechet, Allain & Co. of Paris produced one with all North American postmarks and the rarest postmarks of Europe (Paris, 10 different sheets), H. J. Dauth in Frankfurt-am-Main a photographic tableau of the North American periodical stamps, and the Moschkau Studio in Nossen a “philatelic souvenir” of 6 sheets, showing balloon stamps and pigeon-post dispatches from 1870/71, North German trial essays, and also a collection of postcards of the most-read specialist journals and the best-known editors and writers. Under the name Markotypie a Parisian artist has made garlands, crowns, baskets of flowers and other ornamental products from stamps (philatelic flowers), and has met with great success. Using scissors alone, cutting up the stamps and choosing the colours with care, he was able to make the most wonderful mosaics and had given instruction in this art, which has found lively acceptance in England in particular. This was the art used in making the stamp-covered table mentioned above, which was shown at the Vienna International Exhibition.

Stamps have a good reputation in music. More than a dozen composers have given them their approbation and helped to popularise them. Postage stamp polkas were composed in Germany by Doppler (1863), J. V. Hamm (1863), Hartleb (1874) and Ad. Müller (1877), of these, the one by Hamm was so popular that it is still occasionally heard on a number of barrel organs in Hamburg. The postage stamp waltz The Philatelist was dedicated by V. Hönecke to the Hamburg Philatelic Club. A Postcard Potpourri, produced by Fr. Zickoff in 1874 was distinguished not only by its melodic sound but also by the good title illustrations: Amour, a coachman, driving a pair of Cupids across a German postcard. Three of the polkas have titles decorated with coloured stamps, and the one by A. D. Müller has a portrait of S. Friedl. In this latter case it is interesting to note that both the composer and the publisher were keen philatelists. France is represented twice, by the Postage Stamp Polka by Emil Périer (Paris 1864) and the Postage Stamp Polka-Mazurka by Gautier de Valhrey (1865). From America we only know of two compositions, the Stamp Gallop by Oliver Dithon (Boston), and the American Stamp Polka by Maria Sequin (New York), though the latter enraged philatelists. Finally we may mention Arthur O’Leary’s Stamp Gallop (London 1863), which attests to the fact that even in England there was a harmonic side in addition to the learning, conservation and commercial sides.

Philately has inspired the poets of all languages, the Italian and English journals in particular often publish this kind of item. We have come across Il Mio Album by L. Vindrola in Guida Illustr. del Timbrofilo (Trieste), 1877; Who invented the Postage Stamp in Stamp Collectors Magazine (London), 1868; The Stamp Collector; Nelly’s Collection; The [Plaint] of the Postage Stamp, and Ye Conelle in The American Journal of Philately, 1869, and Timbromania in Stamp Collectors Miscellany, 1869. Obviously philately is glorified in Germany as well. Zschiesche & Köder’s Magazin, Faber’s Bazar, Moschkau’s Magazin, the Hamburger Anzeiger, etc., have repeatedly published poems which passed for excellent within the scope of these journals. We cannot forbear giving two samples of German philatelic poetry here:

Translator’s note: The poems would not make sense in translation and should be accessed via the original document.

Philately has often been used in romances, novels, etc., as for example in Thekla von Gumpert’s Töchteralbum, which formed Volume 11 of a narrative Die Friemarken by Louise Höcker. In Bauschke’s Briefmarkensammler, 1866 a modern robber story by John Retcliff IV was published under the title Marko Timbroschetti. The same magazine also published a very well written sketch by S. A. Brandt Jr. of Saarbrücken: Experiences of a Stamp, also the European Stamp Dream by Yo (A. Treichel) and the humorous Experiences of a philatelist, at the Leipzig Carnival, (1868). The novel Leontinen's Stamp Album appeared in the Hamburger Briefmarken-Anziger, and The Stamp, an autobiography, etc. in the Wiener Illustr. Briefmarken-Zeitung.

So far as we know, industry's first product was a packet of tobacco under the name North German Stamp Canister, decorated with a big postmark. This was followed later by an Imperial Postmark Canister; there were also ornaments enamelled with the stamps of all nations, for example cuff-links, broaches, also pocket stamp holders made of metal and printed with English postmarks, liqueurs with pictures of stamps on their labels, stamps games for young people, such as stamp dominoes, stamp purses etc., wrappers for chocolates, bonbons, etc., were decorated with stamps, and fashions? In England ladies wore silk scarves on their heads printed with coloured stamps, and at the carnivals in Paris, London, Florence, Vienna, Hamburg, Löbau, and at Kroll in Berlin, etc., one saw complete costumes made out of stamps, which gained a good deal of applause, in Hamburg for example. For the carnival in Genoa in 1870 there was a special carnival post with stamps, which with their symbolic three heads were collected for a long time as a sort of actual postage stamp.

Of the available mass of philatelic funny stories, jokes, sayings, riddles and the like, with the best will in the world we could only give a few here, but anyone interested could refer to the more detailed studies in our technical literature, where there is an abundance of this kind of material.

There is one joke in a advert in the Illustrated London News of 1850, which reports that a father would send his daughter into a convent unless she gave him a million used stamps by the 30th April of that year, and that after this had appeared that people everywhere wanted to save the girl from the cloister cell. Boxes, bundles and packets of all shapes arrived in such great numbers that finally newspapers and circulars had to be used to ask for the supply of stamps to be stopped, since the young lady's freedom had long since been assured. Equal success was obtained by a note in the journal Esztergomi Ujsag which asked for the collection of old stamps since for every 1000 stamps a child could be purchased in China to be brought up in the Christian religion. We will close this with a nice riddle, whose solution our distinguished readers will hardly find difficult.

If they carry Coats of Arms, Shields and Crowns
They are available for everyone to purchase
Anyone who uses them must lick them in advance
This riddle will really tease you.

END

Burkhard Schneider

Dispersion of the "Taunus Library" Part 6

Auflösung der "Taunus-Bibliothek" 6 teil

In: Literaturangebot Nr. 15 mit "Taunus-Bibliothek" 6. Letzter Teil

Burkhard Schneider, Gelnhausen, Germany, 2002, n.pp. [p.ii.]

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

October 2002

DISPERSION OF THE "TAUNUS LIBRARY" PART 6

In our literature offer today, we can supply interesting titles of Germany, a large supply of Scandinavia, as well as various titles embracing other countries, which we note in subject list at the rear.

Amongst Scandinavian literature, the part of Denmark should be given your special attention. This part contains numerous, not very easily obtained titles, because the Danish publications are printed in small numbers since the Danish population is so small. However, the photos and diagrams enable the German-speaking user of the literature to succeed. Of special interest are the publications of the Kopenhagener Philatelisten-Klub, whose chairman Knud Mohr is also the chairman of the World Philatelic Association, FIP. Amongst the Danish titles there are several, which touch on German collectors' areas, such as Schleswig-Holstein, Hamburg, the plebiscite of North Schleswig, the First and Second World Wars, etc. Therefore we suggest intensive scrutiny.

With this extensive "Taunus-Library" literature offer, the dissolution is complete.

In the fall we will begin with the dissolution of the special library of "China and Southeast Asia" of the historian Dr. H. Boeckmann, as well as the literature stock of Emil W. Mewes, both of which we acquired recently. The Mewes literature stock contains numerous standard works on German philately and postal history starting about 1958(!) in absolutely mint condition, many of which have not been obtainable for some time.

We will again be at the International Stamp Exchange (Booth #2) in Sindelfingen. Please tell us what special wishes you have before mid-October, so we can bring them with us.

If this catalogue contains nothing you desire, please pass it on to a stamp collector friend or take it to your next club or working group meeting.

Yours truly

Burkhard Schneider

Table of Contents:

New Publications:

page 73

Abbreviations used for Shipping & Handling

page 76

All prices are in Euros. Catalogue subscription €6.00.

END

Dr. R. Schätzler

Bookplates also delight the collector's heart

[Auch das exlibris erfreut des sammlers herz]

Sammler-Express, November 1947, Volume 1, Issue 17, p.262

Translation produced by Martin I. Scheir for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

October 2002

BOOKPLATES ALSO DELIGHT THE COLLECTOR'S HEART

As a young student I had an bookplate prepared for myself. Around 1900, that was in great fashion. The illustrated slips of paper were soon affixed to the inner leaves of my small book collection. Since I had more slips than books, I looked to other library owners who were doing the same thing. I exchanged with them. So began my collection. Later I acquired all manner of things from South German antiquities dealers. Bookplates from the 16th and 17th centuries were expensive. Thus I also knew why, from many old books, which I also collected, the bookplates had been cut out. The modern bookplates from recognized artists also, like the etched ones by Max Klinger, were highly priced. My greatest find was acquired years later from a book wagon in Berlin, near the university: a complete collection of modern bookplates, all neatly and cleanly affixed to cardboard with stamp hinges. The considerable monograph Ex Libris by Walter von zur Westen, Velhagen and Klasing, Bielefeld and Leipzig, Germany, rounded out my deep understanding.

Though traceable in Germany to about 1470, this branch of diminutive art developed to full bloom originally in the 1500s. From the most frequent initial words Ex libris (from the library, followed by the Latinized name in the genitive, today mostly, incorrectly, in the first case, the nominative!) the whole genre of these library or book owner indicia takes its name. [In Germany.] We are familiar with a number of impressively drawn bookplates by Albrecht Dürer. There stands on a flyleaf for the city council member of Nurnberg, Willibald Pirckheimer, a friend of Dürer, underneath, quite simply, Liber Bilibaldi Pirckheimer (book of W. P.). But from the terse inscription Sibi et Amicis P. the great humanist's soul shines: Not to him alone, [but] also to his friends does this book belong. From the 1600s on, bookplates spread to Italy, France, Holland, England and Scandinavia. Around 1750 they appear in North America. For the period from 1820 to 1860 there are only a few good plates. Not until about 1875 did this beautiful custom revive robustly in this country. A lovingly drawn bookplate is an enchanting complement to the library of book lovers, who are inspired by the arts. Whether simply with a coat of arms, or delicate initials, or referring allegorically to the owner, his profession, or his hobbies, it always comes across as more intimate than an illegible signature or the pale imprint of a stamp.

The true collector of good bookplates is capable of reading in the little sheets not only a history of graphic art, but also a characteristic of the book owner. If my rich, long life as a collector in this and many other areas now lies behind me, as all my treasures went up in smoke and flames in 1944, then the glowing memory gave me the strong inner stamina to maintain an outlook to new shores.

Dr. R. Schätzler

Figure 1. Bookplate of Pirckheimer

Figure 2. Bookplate of a numismatist. 1947, von Ilgenfritz, Berlin

END

H. A. GERHARD

On collecting bookplates by topic

[Über das motivsammeln von exlibris]

Sammler-Express, April 1954, Volume 8, Issue 8, p.121

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

October 2002

ON COLLECTING BOOKPLATES BY TOPIC

First, just a note about what distinguishes bookplate collections from those of philately. The postage stamp collector strives to complete a collection. The etching of the bookplate of Hanns Heeren by Karl Blossfeld (Markkleeberg) shows that the complete collection of his stamps is the most important thing. That is easy for him because the postal entities of the countries have a known appearance and numbers. He will sometimes collect stamps that don't personally please him very much, and only in rare cases will he know the artist, who designed them.

This is quite different when compared with bookplate collectors, for whom a complete collection is not possible, since some items are never offered and others are printed only in limited numbers.

Because of the many used, the number of which can hardly be guessed, you can without difficulty collect thousands of bookplates, as long as you have exchanges to offer. Here is a single calculation as an example: Someone owns five bookplates, small wood-cuts, each about 20 to 300 copies, in total app. 1000 to 1500 items, which would result in approximately the same number of items being received in exchange.

The value of an bookplate collection cannot be expressed in the number of items collected, because there is always trash, which you don't want to collect. But very good bookplates be it etchings, copperplate engravings, wood-cuts and the like, of whom you know their producer personally or by letter, the designs of which you like to look at, such a collection is a great treasure, regardless of its extent. A bookplate of which the collector does not know who originated it, is valueless because he cannot integrate it into a collection.

In general bookplates are used for a very practical reason: to be glued into books to indicate who owns a book that was loaned and to remind the reader- often in a rather cute way - that it needs to be returned. Who would for example risk, as Richard Rother drastically shows in his wood-cut A book not returned which belonged to Karl Hartner, as a punishment to be doused in black ink and be taken away in hand cuffs by the Devil and then be roasted in hell? It is relatively easy to guess Mr. Hartner's profession: painter. Of the plethora of bookplates which Richard Rother of Kitzingen am Main etched in wood, there are two examples which show the job of their owners, the bookplates of M. Rabus, the director of a commercial college, and that of Wilhelm Kuhn, apprentice at a saw mill.

Bookplates are mainly collected by the name of their artist and separated by foreign countries. Similar to a postage stamp collection, you could limit yourself for example to German, Polish and Czech or Austrian, Dutch or others.

Some collectors desire only original graphic items, they swap only wood-cuts or copperplate engravings or etchings, because they only desire similar items. Therefore, a topical collection cannot be made, because you need a specific theme.

It is common knowledge that collectors often desire bookplates, which refer to their profession, their hobbies, their name or personal things. In the group of "Professional bookplates" which has been mentioned, there are such professions as doctors, where you can distinguish between medical doctors, dentists, veterinarians, etc., others are for architects, teachers, etc. And then there are those who work with music and those who adore music bookplates or ex-musicus. The pictured ex-musicus of national prize winner Prof. Hermann Abendroth, an etching of the deceased (†1944) graphic artist Bruno Heroux of Leipzig shows the erstwhile domain of the Leipziger Gewandhaus destroyed by American forces, surrounded by singing and music playing angels and the pictures of four great German composers (Bach, Beethoven, Brahms and Bruckner).

Since there is a lot of trading with foreign countries, as a result beautiful stamps come into the countries, so it is only natural that some bookplate collectors embrace philately. That is why Karl Blossfeld, Markkleeberg, etched a bookplate in 1949 for Hanns Heeren, which the owner says "pictures him admiring a 3 pfennig Saxony offered to him by little devils". It points to the fact that the ownership of this stamp is only a pipe dream and will never come true.

END

H. A. Gerhard Tag
Small bookplates – Servants of a great cause
[Kleines exlibris – Diener eines grossen zieleles]
Sammler-Express, December 1954, Volume 8, Issue 23, p.371

Translation produced by Francois Steichen for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2003 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

SMALL BOOKPLATES - SERVANTS OF A GREAT CAUSE

The Latin word Ex-libris means from the books of; it is understood that these are labels, such as bookplates, book crests, library marks, or book-owners' marks. Most often, these labels say, simply, my book, this book belongs to, or from the library of. As with stamp collectors, topics or themes attracts many bookplate collectors.

Topical collecting is especially popular because a complete collection of bookplates is simply not possible. As a result, collectors limit themselves to collecting bookplates in various categories. Particulars on building and valuing a bookplate collection may be found in a contribution to the August, 1954 issue of this magazine entitled On collecting bookplates by topic, which will also give you an insight into the creations of many bookplate artists.

The Ex-libris Pragensibus Adolf Malý [From the Prague books of Adolf Malý], an aquatint full of atmosphere, done by the Czech graphic artist Pavel Simon in 1946, appears to us like a charming greeting from the Golden City. This bookplate is found especially in books that report on the city of Prague, or rather, allude to life in Prague. In the same manner, there are bookplates that refer to other beautiful cities; for example, Gianni Mantero possesses a fine wood engraving done by the Milanese artist Italo Zetti, for his Florentine books: Ad usum Florentinos libros. There are also examples of bookplates conceived for one book only: the etching by K.O. Speth, Dr. Willy Tropp zu eigen [Owned by Dr. Willy Tropp] (1921), shows a scene from Cervantes' famous book Don Quixote.

Two pretty children's bookplates are the woodcut by Ernst Grünewald, of Bremen, which he made for his son Klaus, as well as the Dutchman Rozendaal's bookplate for Bianca Strens. The two striking faces on this bookplate stand on their heads - we see them over and over! In the original, this astonishing work is put into relief by coloured diagonal lines that alternate, respectively, between brown/white, red/white, and green/white. The lines touch and cross over two portraits that are exact, but inverted, copies of one another.

Typographic Bookplates, set with modern type and decorations, can give the collector no less joy of possession than the expensive original graphic plates. Unfortunately, such - often multi-coloured - prints constitute a rarity in the bookplate market. Here, two examples that represent the name of the book owner should be mentioned: the so-called redende Blaetter [speaking prints], made for Heinz Loewe (in the original, the lion appears in a different colour); [Translator's note: Loewe, the man's family name, means Lion in German.] and the Edith Halberstam bookplate were both manufactured from left over printing paper!

Thus, the topical possibilities open to the bookplate collector are far from exhausted, though there is insufficient space here to show examples of all of them. One is reminded, for example, of earlier, abundant heraldic bookplates (coats-of-arms). Often, the Grim Reaper is portrayed in these bookplates. Such bookplates, with death in the design, can produce a rich topical collection.

Books have their destiny – Donors' bookplates or memorial bookplates refer to book donors who mark the occasion of a gift by giving instructions that the book be marked with a lasting sign of its origin. We seldom come across such donors' bookplates; on the other hand, they are widespread in foreign countries.

The Areté Press in Copenhagen recently donated to the writer of this article an issue of their Exlibris series, entitled International Bookplate Art which was published in March this year. The month of March has particular significance as a symbol of Danish-Soviet friendship. This issue was published in an edition of 150 numbered copies, as were its predecessors. It contains ten pasted inserts, of which the bookplate for Ruth Schwartz is shown here. Emmerik Remmer wrote the foreword. The text is in Danish, to which a French and German summary are attached, in which the conclusion states:

The exchange of small graphic art is responsible for an important connection among peoples, and it can help fulfil the dream of humanity: the wish for peace. Persons with different outlooks and different languages who can still feel the bond of friendship serve the cause of peace through these exchanges. Because where persons speak with each other, weapons are silent. So do they see that the small bookplate serves a great goal: peace.

END

Dr. A. Moschkau
Philatelic Bibliography
[Philatelistische Bibliographie]
Illustrierte Briefmarken Zeitung, 1st September 1889, Volume 2, Issue 17, pp.251-252

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2002

PHILATELIC BIBLIOGRAPHY

The idea of Charles Diena concerning the issuance of a "philatelic bibliography" seems to proceed towards its materialization faster than previously thought. The value of such a work of reference is so evident that its earliest appearance is not only to be wished for but its promotion should be the duty of any serious philatelist.

* Editor's note: Actually, the idea was that of his brother Emilio Diena.

We ourselves, recognizing the importance of Diena's idea, never lost the opportunity to promote it in several articles demonstrating its importance and appealed for the collaboration of the great German societies. Fr. Blossfeldt lent his pen in this endeavour striving for its realisation and therefore this matter progressed so far that the publisher of this journal, E. Heitmann, decided in cheerful recognition to take over the publication of this opus, particularly the section concerning "The bibliography of the specialist German literature".

The next question now is: The organisation of the text in a uniform manner, not only for the author of the German version, but for the arranger of parts in foreign languages. Here it is necessary that the editors develop a procedure applicable to all parts of the opus. We admit freely that we envision as suitable arrangers the strength of the biggest societies; these societies ought not only take on this obligation in good faith but also vigorously commit themselves to it. The division of labour should also be left to them. Surely their libraries are so complete, that we can expect with certainty, a work without omissions, which is essential for the wished for value of the opus. Just as the uniform plan provides for all sectors and is uniform not only for the German part but also for others, such as the philatelic bibliographies of France, Belgium, Italy, Spain, England, America, etc., a main condition is that the publishers of the foreign parts agree on a common format and paper, so as to create a uniform appearance and enables the joint binding of the different parts. To achieve this uniformity is again the task of the societies. who, because they appointed themselves reciprocally corresponding societies, thereby stood in a certain brotherly relation, will easily find the right way to the goal. We shall neither anticipate nor make prescriptions about formulating the uniform plan to the societies - or arrangers. Competent forces will dedicate themselves to this work, who will surely accomplish this feat. The only thing we dare modestly to suggest is that such voluminous material requires striking keywords.

As Diena's idea takes on tangible form, but it will be some time before its realisation, and it will take some time, it is obvious that there will be other voices for this nice opus, not only to warm up the philatelic world and thereby to secure in advance a certain guarantee for the cost of the publication, but also to discuss the plan with regards to its execution, which in general has been explained clearly by several parties, needs still more explanation of specifics. Therefore good advice is solicited and will find thankful acceptance in all involved circles.

We once praised prophetically society organisations as one of the main pillars of the philately of the future. What were many of the first societies once? What eminent significance have they become now when they are cognisant of their high calling? If our societies will take care to work on the bibliography, advance this work assiduously, not only by recruiting collaborators from their midst, but also providing for the dissemination of the opus - then will Diena's idea become reality and succeed. May it be granted to us to proclaim soon, further progress in this significant endeavour

Dr. Moschkau

END

Dr. A. Moschkau
Bibliography of philately
[Bibliographie der briefmarkenkunde]
Illustrierte Briefmarken Zeitung, 15th November 1888, Volume 1, Issue 22, pp.318-319

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2013

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF PHILATELY

One of the main tasks of the major clubs is the publication of a philatelic bibliography. We certainly want to mention that in the German clubs the serious mission, beside feeding oneself and trading or purchasing stamps, is research. The tasks of the club leadership are not easy and grow steadily larger.

So it is with philatelic literature! Almost every month it expands. A complete collection, even in the last 10 years, proves it to be more than just simple work. Many a publication of major importance is amongst it, but also mayflies! As worthless as the latter are, a first glimpse will show that they are a part in a chain of the literature. And nothing is so worthless as a grain of gold that cannot be found. Nevertheless, the number of these independent philatelic magazines is not large enough to prevent an eager philatelist from absorbing them in his library. We do not know of any works which are extremely expensive. If a collector wants to quench his thirst for knowledge, he needs only the will power to acquire good works, knowing that a collector without philatelic magazines will only have half the knowledge.

Much of the educational and teaching works are encompassed in our philatelic magazines! These - from the first one of Zschiesche & Köder - contain in each number, page by page, a plethora of age-old and important additions to philately, which no one can deny may fall into oblivion. Don't think that somebody, who studies one or two philatelic pages, knows all there is to know about the core of our science, but will immediately realize that his piecemeal knowledge leaves much to be desired.

The more philatelic magazines we possess, the more we have on philately - in all its individual volume of the works - the more our authors will write down their ideas one brick at a time, the more we have a sense of duty to build on these bricks, so they do not vanish in the quicksand, but to build on them, knowing we can count on them quickly. This can be achieved only through a bibliography, through the publication of works, which give pure information, what kinds of bricks are available in our journal. The task is much too difficult for the individual, even if he limits himself only to the German magazines, but with shared work and a certain willingness to sacrifice it won't take long to put together the contents of all German philatelic magazines ordered by individual article titles, which could be put into groups by a knowledgeable editor.

How easy would it be, if a person who is dealing with special areas (for example the stamps of one country) no longer will search for articles on forgeries and does not have to check reams of newspapers individually, but would know simply because of these bibliographies and there will find what is necessary. That would be an important undertaking not only for the expert author, but for every researching collector. It would be the culmination of our philatelic literature.

We already once suggested such bibliography to our German Clubs, induced by Diena's pleas on this highly important question. But we heard nothing that made us believe the seeds fell on fertile soil! The importance of this matter for our combined benefit makes me take up my pen again to remind the clubs that this task be completed as soon as possible. Just try it, the results will be rewarding!

END

Victor Suppantschitsch

A bibliography of German philatelic literature

[Eine bibliographie der Deutschen philatelistischen literatur]

Illustrierte Briefmarken Zeitung, 15th August 1891, Volume 4, Issue 16, pp.330-331

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

October 2002

A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

The need for a bibliography of the German Philatelic literature is undoubtedly one of the sore points of philately today and a painful gap, which everyone more or less notices, who dedicates himself with seriousness and thoroughness to the early studies.

For a number of years the German technical press has noted this lack. Just look at the articles in Postwertzeichen (1888, Issues 1 and 2; 1899 Issues 7 and 8) in the Illustrierte Briefmarken Zeitung by Heitmann (1888 Issue 22 and 1889 Issue 15) in the Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal by Senf (1888, Issue 5) in the Philatelistischer Börsen-Courier (1889, Issue 3) in Der Philatelist (1889 Issue 10) and so on.

At one time, a bibliography of the total philatelic literature of all nations was planned in one publication. But soon the myriad of difficulties, which would foil the reality of such an idea, convinced people that the goal could be reached easier and more reliably, if each nation undertook the creation of their own publication.

Of course, it would be glorious if the German nation would be the first to publish the bibliography of her philatelic literature. For a long time my aspiration has been to turn this idea into reality and today I am able to step in front of the collectors with a plan to undertake such a publication myself, which will be difficult and laborious.

I refrain from entering into any discussion on what guarantee my experience of more than 30 years as an philatelic author offers, that the publication is current and will set a standard and be adequate to answer all of the requirements that a Bibliography of the German Philatelic Literature demands. I am of the opinion that my plan will find the fullest acceptance anywhere and that the German Philatelist will understand, that I decided to undertake this great proposition.

The publication will have the following four parts, namely:

Part I will consist of the entire philatelic history (postage stamp information).

Part II will add the history of German philatelic literature to date.

Part III will consist of an inventory of the entire German philatelic literature, including exact dates.

Part IV will consist of the entire German philatelic literature in the form of a dictionary.

This bibliography will contain and list all that is published in the German language on all aspects of postage stamp information, whoever wrote or published it. It will be arranged in such a fashion that it is easy for everyone to find in retrospect, a collector's subject or philatelic concept; to find what, by whom and where it was published. Every philatelic author will be listed individually, and all his publications, writings, newspaper compositions, etc. will be listed.

Relying on my accurate knowledge of the German philatelic literature, I will make a conscientious and careful selection so that on the one side, nothing will remain unmentioned which could be of importance to the philatelist, while on the other side, things will not be mentioned, in which no philatelists have any interest or (as with many thousands of new issues of postage stamps) can be obtained from every large catalogue or album.

The publication should comprise roughly 40 printers sheets and will be coming out in May 1892, in sections, with a mailing of 3 printers sheets every month.

It is up to the German collector to breathe life into this publication, because only if a substantial number of subscribers is found, so that half of the costs are being covered, will it be published.

My roll-call therefore goes out first of all to the German philatelic clubs, as well as to the philatelist in general, with the plea to subscribe in numbers in order to afford Germans a publication, which no other nation possesses.

At the same time, I am asking of the esteemed philatelic clubs, authors, editors and publishers of philatelic magazines and publications to please support me with my vast labour by submitting their composed or published philatelic works and magazines and notices together with their respective dates. And of the clubs, by submitting their philatelic publications, laws and annuals, club notices - without waiting for my request, as well as allowing me to borrow older German philatelic literature from club libraries, because only then, when all forces come together, something really good and complete can happen.

Victor Suppantschitsch

Judge of the County Court in Graz/Steyermark, Austria

END

Hermann Mittelmann

Specialist periodicals no longer published

[Eingegangene fachblätter]

Illustrierte Briefmarken Zeitung, 1st June 1891, Volume 4, Issue 11, pp.226-228

Translation of the introductory text only

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

October 2002 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

SPECIALIST PERIODICALS NO LONGER PUBLISHED

For several years, I paid special attention to combine philatelic literature and periodicals.

The following is a listing of some literature and periodicals which existed some fifty years ago but are no longer published. They existed in six languages:

German – 50; Spanish – 12; Italian – 7; Scandinavian – 3; French – 11 English – 91;
A total of 174.

END

Karl von Gündel

The projected appearance of a bibliography of German philatelic literature
[Das in aussicht stehende erscheinen einer bibliographie der Deutschen philatelistischen litteratur]

Illustrierte Frankfurter Briefmarken-Zeitung mit Universum, June 1891,
Volume 10, Issue 6, n.pp. [3pp.]

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 1992

THE PROJECTED APPEARANCE OF A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

Since Dr. Emilio Diena published his article Ein nachschlagebuch über philatelistische literatur [A reference book on philatelic literature] in issues 1 and 2 of the 1888 volume of Postwertzeichen, various philatelic journals have dealt in more or less detail with this topic. All clearly agreed that a work of this type would be very desirable and useful.

Diena's idea of a philatelic bibliography of all countries in a single volume was later abandoned, since insuperable difficulties meant it could not be carried out. Hence, the wish was expressed that every country would draw up the bibliography of its own philatelic literature and that in Germany this task should be left to the philatelic societies. However, this remained as a wish – nothing was done to carry it out.

Therefore, it is all the more gratifying that Supreme Court Justice Suppantschitsch, whose outstanding contributions to German philately are generally known, is willing to undertake to prepare this highly desirable philatelic bibliography. His preliminary work for this project has already reached the point where a prospectus for it could appear in issue 8 of Philatelistischer Börsen-Courier published in April this year. [Translator: It was actually published in Issue 9 of May.]

According to this, the work will be in 4 parts:

- | | |
|----------|--|
| Part I | History of philately (Postage-stamp science) |
| Part II | History of German philatelic literature |
| Part III | Classification of German philatelic literature in line with the most accurate data |
| Part IV | Actual bibliography of all German philatelic literature in lexicographic form |

In his paper A bibliography of German philatelic literature, in issue 9, 1891, of Philatelistische Börsen-Courier, he says amongst other things that the bibliography will be a guide to the entire German philatelic literature in which everyone who seeks information on any philatelic topic whatever, will find everything worth bothering with in German on this topic. Not included, however, will be the sort of thing currently available to every philatelist; plainly available in every handbook and that can be found without difficulty, since nobody would use a service if he had to look up and study several hundred articles and memoranda, to find that 70-80 are out of date and have been corrected and superseded long ago, or that 50 of the articles contradict one another. The book will not give simply the title and details of the reference, edition, etc., from which the actual contents of the article can not always be determined with accuracy; instead, details will be given of what information can be looked for and found in these articles, memoranda, etc.

The layout of the work will be such that everyone can easily follow how to trace every subject for collection or philatelic term, with how, by whom and when it has been described in German journals. Every philatelic author will be listed separately and all his books, writings and journal articles with details of their subjects.

There is no doubt that this will be of great interest to scientific philatelists, concluding on the scientific side with a history covering German philatelic literature and a complete survey of all German scientific philatelic literature. The most desirable aspect, however, would still be to have a bibliographic survey of all the German philatelic literature in dictionary form, which would be a mine of information for philately.

The value and usefulness of this 4th part of the bibliography to philatelists striving towards higher levels cannot be rated highly enough. The following example will make this clear. Suppose someone wants to know everything that has been published relating to the production of a philatelic bibliography in Germany. He need only look in the 4th (lexicographic) part under Philatelic Bibliography and will find there the exact title, volume and number of every German philatelic journal which has published anything on this topic, so that all he has to do is look up the ones he wants in the relevant journals.

Of course, there will be a great deal of useless material from earlier years, but it is always possible for there to be some valuable grain amongst the old chaff. Also, there could be much interesting and important material unearthed, which was not valued at the time but looked at now can cast light on hitherto dark corners of philately. An apparent triviality is sometimes enough to point the serious researcher towards very important facts.

The work will consist of about forty sheets in 8° and (starting from about May 1892) will appear in fourteen parts at intervals of about 1 month, each consisting of 3 sheets*. A part will cost 1 mark; however, anyone who subscribed to the entire work via Karl Cl. Sauer in Mährisch Ostrau before the 1st October this year will have a 50% price reduction.

 Editor's note: One can only presume that the author was referring to the original printing sheets which would contain 16 pages when printed in 8°. The book was eventually published in sixteen parts with 748 pages.

When we consider that these 14 marks (50% less for those who subscribe to the entire work via Herr Sauer) does not have to be paid all at once but gradually in 14 instalments (one becomes due after the appearance of each part), the price of this excellent, completely irreproachable – I might even say monumental – work cannot be beyond the reach of the least well-to-do. We may, therefore, really expect this work to find many purchasers in the world of German philatelists.

It will now depend on German philatelists whether they will support the publication of what can be confidently expected to be a truly epoch-making work, one which no other nation can show. If it is published – as can hardly be doubted – it will not only reflect credit on the German philatelic literature, it will also promote philatelic knowledge in unexpected ways, and take scientific philately a good way further.

In conclusion it may be said here that Suppantschitsch asks all philatelic societies, the philatelic press and all philatelists who have an interest in the appearance of this work to give him the support he needs to produce something complete and entire.

This support could be:

- a) the transmission to him, without a direct request, of future society publications such as statutes, annual reports, society proceedings, etc., by the chairmen of societies, and the loan to him of any book he needs from the society library
- b) the transmission to him of philatelic journals, by the publishers (including those dealing with German private stamps), and of copies of philatelic studies, by the authors.
- c) the communication to him by all philatelists of details of older or less known German philatelic publications
- d) the transmission to him, without a direct request, of details of their books, articles in German philatelic journals, etc., including title, volume and number of the journal, plus some data on themselves personally.

He needs this information to ensure the exact completeness of his work.

The reason for Suppantschitsch asking for material to be sent to him without a direct request is that he wants to devote all his time to preparing the work so that it will be ready at the given date, and he thus lacks the time to send special requests to the people concerned.

END

Magazin für Philatelistische Literatur
June 1950, Volume 1, Issue 1.

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2005

MAGAZIN FÜR PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATUR

June 1950, Volume 1, Issue 1.

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

Magazine and Sales List of PHILAK, the Philatelic Academy and Central Library, Proprietor: K. Scharfenberg, Berlin W. 30, Geisbergstr. 33, r. Erscheint vorläuf. n. Bedarf. Issued quarterly.

p.1

Introduction.

In order to draw as close a connection as possible between my knowledge, my collector friends and philately, particularly the far too little known and appreciated philatelic literature, I will, starting with today's issue, set out my ideas for a magazine of philatelic literature, something we have lacked for so many years since the cessation of the journals Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm and later, Die Philatelistische Literatur.

In the Magazin will be found everything to interest the friends and collectors of philatelic literature; descriptions of all important new publications, news of special literature, questions and answers thereon, advice for the practical assembly of philatelic libraries, literature wanted and on offer, along with much also to interest philatelists. In these pages I will tell you, as my good friends, all about my work, my plans and concerns and questions arising, and ask you all to reply to me with equal frankness with your views, wishes, questions and concerns. This kind of literature will be equally useful to all parties, correspondents and myself, and will make the Magazin lively and interesting.

I also urgently ask the publishers of philatelic works, catalogues, magazines, albums and handbooks, in their own interest, to supply me with their new publications as soon as possible after their appearance for mention in the magazine, inclusion in the literature catalogue and to build up a central library. Current market price (commission) expected!

The present unfavourable economic conditions in Berlin may make it appear risky to many people to undertake the sort of plans that I have in mind, and start a new magazine, where the needs of the times have led others to make sacrifices. I believe however that the worst period is behind us and “Readiness is all!” When all my friends, suppliers and customers support my endeavours vigorously, I hope that within a foreseeable time the Magazin will be a regular and much better journal to the joy of all collectors of literature and the service of all philately.

K. Sch.

Post free: Regular subscription 2DM for 4 issues. Reproduction, even of extracts, only with written permission. Edition: 700 copies.

pp.2-3

German Society for Philatelic Literature (DGPS).

Many older members have asked me to revive the Deutsche Gesellschaft für Philatelistische Literatur (DGPS) which after a successful start gradually faded out towards the end of the war because of my call-up for military service.

In the first 10 months of its existence the DGPS was able to set up a functioning exchange service, put in hand a catalogue and bibliography of German Philatelic journals with the help of a large number of voluntary and eager helpers, and initiate a whole series of preliminaries to carrying out its programme. The war and its consequences has unfortunately finally put an end to this work, and practical results, with the exception of the catalogue of literature, have been largely lost.

When I came back from my time as a prisoner of war and ensuing spell with the GPU (Editor's Note: Communist Political Police?) I tried to get in touch again with the members of the DGPS, but soon found out that taking up membership again was risky for everyone concerned, in the Russian zone. Perhaps more about this later!

Finally I had lost my property in the Eastern Zone and had to “relocate” to West Berlin. I had saved the greatest part of my collections and practically the whole of my philatelic library, so I now attempted to start a new existence with an institute for philatelic science and research in combination with a subject library and a philatelic service. The most valuable part of my collections had to go for financing. The currency reform made it for the most part impossible. To carry out my plans, at least for the time being. The money that had gone to the next premises was lost. What remained were the name PHILAK (Philatelic Academy and Central Library) as programme and guideline for the future the library, which had been considerably enlarged in the meantime, and finally my determination not to give up on my plans whatever the cares and obstacles. After the calamity of the recent currency reform and despite serious doubts and warnings, a working and promotional union was established with the firm of Eulen-Verlag, which gave me a heavy workload and much responsibility, and led to much aggravation, disappointment and loss. At the beginning of this year I therefore dissolved the partnership and am pleased to find PHILAK now on a firmer basis, even though the lack of money due to the two successive currencies was particularly apparent and still gave me much severe worry. You will understand that under these conditions I had neither the wish nor the time nor the interest in reviving the DGPS. All essential points in the DGPS programme were taken up by PHILAK and have been carried out to some extent already. The central library, now numbering about 8,000 volumes, is available for use by all philatelists – unfortunately only minimally used. I have worked the entire year on the catalogue of literature, and have now got about 40,000 books, volumes of journals etc., on cards, though unfortunately the planned publication in sections could not be started for lack of money. The task of providing literature is carried out by my specialised bookshop with its subsidiary lines: enquiry cards, tracing sources, supply of reprints and photocopies. The only completely new activity is the bibliographic survey of the German periodicals: for this I am still using a large number of reliable and interested co-workers.

Outside the programme of scientific work – which aimed at carrying out a research programme faster, better and with more prospects – the Society should aim to promote personal links between its members. Since the DGPS was not a local society, but had members all over Germany and sometimes abroad as well, those links could only be via the exchange of personal letters and the DGPS Rundschreiben (circulars). These links between people interested in philatelic literature will now be restored by the Magazin, which will be available to everybody. Everyone can also help in this direction by sending in contributions, questions and answers. Take what is given to you in the magazine and use it for your mental and material profit – but be prepared to share your own knowledge and experiences, since only then can the Magazin fulfil its task of being a link between the friends of philatelic literature.

Another way for you to aid further development of PHILAK, which will serve you all, is to use its facilities as often as possible: borrow from the central library, buy literature, albums and accessories from me, let me enter your desiderata and wants list on my search index, come to me with your questions on all philatelic matters, particularly those relating to philatelic literature.

pp.3-4

BREAK-UP OF MY GENERAL COLLECTION

To finance my plans for the further development of PHILAK, I needed money, even a lot of money. Since I have neither the time nor the means to carry on or extend my wide collections under the existing conditions, I shall use them now to finance PHILAK. I lack the time to sort through this very extensive material – an estimated 50-60,000 stamps, thousands of entires, letters, pre-philatelic letters, special cancellations etc., especially since most of the stamps are loose and unclassified in paper bags. Some of the better material and the duplicates were put up for sale before the currency reform in exchange packets and were catalogued (according to Michel, 1943 and 1942). The catalogue value of the stamps alone should come to about 40-50,000 marks, and they include several hundred items of more than 10 Marks. To give only some examples of the best items, there are the France No. 7 (x2), Nos. 32, 38, etc., although I have already sold my special collection of France. I now put together from the material available 1,000 lots from the lesser and average material, each with a catalogue value of about 20 M. the higher-value material made up about 500 of these lots. The material with special cancellations, entires, pre-philatelic letters, for which a catalogue value is not easily obtainable, was divided between the total number of lots. About half the lots could thus be valued at about 20 to 25 Marks, the other half at about 30 to 500 M, with an average of about 60 to 70 Marks (1943 or overseas 1942) per lot. The lots would thus be good exchange material for every collector, and for many of them they would be good value for extending their own collection. On top of that, the following prizes were allotted: the 1st, 250th, 500th and 750th person to order will get a coupon to buy anything they want from my Sales List in values of DM 20, 111, 222, and so on, up to 999. for every coupon above DM 10. The coupons are valid up to 31st December of the current year.

Every lot has its receipt, which I ask to be returned completed. The receipts are numbered in order of entry: anyone with the numbers 100, 200, ... to 900 will get a free lot. The receipts will be stored as a foundation for regular development, and every participant can inspect them here at the end of the sale.

Price per lot DM 3

(5 lots DM 14; 10 lots DM 26)

Sent only on receipt of payment or cash on delivery; post and packing free for 5 lots.

p.4

Duty on the German Imperial Post from 1871 to today.

After getting rid of my general collection I retained only the one I mentioned, divided up according to the period of validity of the individual duties. The development of the postage rate and the extra handling charges for all types of consignment (with the exception of telegrams, parcels and money orders). Also, the various possibilities for the exhibition of the postage rates within the individual tariff periods were studied and set out. For the further development of this collection I seek out examples of all types, particularly combined postage rates (e.g. letters, cards of all types with inscriptions, returns, fast mail, collection fees, "poste restante" foreign letters, letters containing money, railway letters, etc.). I ask for your offers or orders. – I have found that the postal rates shown in various catalogues and philatelic works are often inaccurate and misleading. Collectors, interested in working on this interesting and varied branch of postal history are asked to get in touch with me.

p.4

INFLA-BERLIN e.V. has again come into action in the place of its great past. On 29th March 1950 the first general meeting of the reconvened Infla-Berlin e.V. took place. After the great services done by the West German branch of "Infla-Berlin" under leadership of its chairman Sk. Gardy, in acting as the rallying point for West German Infla members and guardian of the Infla tradition in bad times, a committee was elected: Chairman K. Scharfenberg, Berlin W 30; Deputy Chairman Sk. W. Gardy, Homberg/Nrh; Treasurer Sk. E. G. Greve, Berlin-Charlottenburg, Westendallee 92a, Business Manager and Secretary Sk. J. v. Koschitzky, Berlin-Tempelhof, Alboinstr.43. In acknowledgement of their services to Infla, comrades W. Gardy and E. Peschl, Passau, were given honorary membership. Further details will be found in brief in the Society journal, the DBZ [Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung] (Kuhn, Dassel). Enquiries to Sk. V. Koschitzky, please!

pp.4-6

New literature.

This is simply reviews of new publications.

pp.1-13 (Unnumbered)

Editor's Note: These unnumbered pages would appear to be Scharfenberg's Sales List rather than an integral part of the magazine.

[p.1]

I. VOLUNTARY LITERATURE AUCTION OF "PHILAK", ON 15th JUNE 1950

AUCTION CONDITIONS

With the exception of those with an x before the number, all lots are offered anonymously and on commission.

[p.3- bottom]

If you have philatelic literature to dispose of, please get in touch with me. Because of the present market conditions, only readily saleable articles can be considered for cash purchase. All other items, albums and desiderata, will be exchanged for stamps or, for valuable items, will be sold on commission or disposed of in my auctions. Always state the price or an estimate of it.

[pp.4-7]

ALBUM SALES LIST: Nr.1; 1st April 1950

[pp.8-13]

SALES LIST OF PHILATELIC LITERATURE (New and antiquarian)

The appearance of this list (1st April 1950) coincides with the introduction of new, significantly lowered prices. For lack of space, only a part of the existing stock could be given. Less saleable literature, especially that of only bibliographic interest to the pure literature collector, has been omitted. In any case, I ask for your requests and wants lists to be put on my card index if I cannot satisfy them right away. Fee for entry: 0.10 DM per title. You will be notified immediately if I am in possession of the item you want: the search fee will be refunded on purchase.

To order you need only quote the order number.

[p.13]

Over 1,000 INDIVIDUAL NUMBERS of philatelic journals from home and abroad are available. The list cannot yet be prepared and given here. Let me have your wants lists. Exchanges also possible, please ask for the offers and wants lists.

Since in recent years I have often had very trying experiences, often only getting paid after months and numerous reminders, I am now compelled to my great regret, to adopt new conditions for order and payment, and I ask that you note them. I ask for your understanding, as I too have obligations to meet. The slowness of my debtors has again placed me in an awkward position. Under the stressful economic conditions of today, I simply cannot bear any more losses.

Conditions of Business

Offers always subject to availability and prior sale. Many of the offers in the list are only available as single copies: indicating possible alternatives is recommended.

END

Corneille Soeteman

The Corneille Soeteman Library Part II

Vente sur Offres [Postal Auction], 26th February 2003, La Philatélie Corneille Soeteman, Brussels, Belgium

Translation of the introductory page only, n.pp. [p.9]

Translation produced by Thomas Huber for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2003 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

THE CORNEILE SOETEMAN LIBRARY PART II

The second part of my library contains only a few standard works. They have been presented in the earlier sale and these [few] were added under exceptional circumstances.

On the other hand, there are about 3,000 volumes of anthologies, representing the world's philately which is listed today in this catalogue. Two new sections are also described in detail here. For one, international journals and magazines, for the other, named and famous auction catalogues.

There is a third and final section. It is by far the most voluminous because it lists some 4,000 titles. Prices realised globally are listed by the last know sale date.

Again, I wish to thank several friends who took advantage of the opportunity to add to the prestigious volumes currently for sale.

In particular, wish to thank my collaborator Vincent Schouberecht for his consistent work and meticulous attention to detail in the analysis of all these volumes which he described with obvious deep professionalism.

Corneille Soeteman

END

Editorial
[Éditorial]
Filatelìa, 1929, pp.iii-iv

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2003

EDITORIAL

Giving the most accurate possible account of the contents of the magazines in the world's philatelic press is certainly a very difficult task. Multiple difficulties get in the way of carrying out this obviously ambitious programme: on the one hand, the diversity of languages and the irregularity of publication and transmission, and on the other the need to hold a balance between a mixture of simple translations and the juxtaposition of tables of contents. There is also the difficulty of arranging this diversity of publications by their subject, frequency and contents. However, we think we have carried out our programme as well as possible, and though improvements have already been made during these months, it is possible that others will follow to make this publication still more useful to collectors.

Nevertheless it must be stressed that this Review of Reviews strives to be something more than just a list of titles: it attempts the tasks of making its analysis of the issues of magazines lively and readable; it hopes to leave its readers in a position to judge from its accounts the importance and interest of the papers mentioned.

Obviously, getting hold of an article can be difficult for anyone lacking the essential data on the magazine that published it. This is inevitable given the standard method used of classifying by nationality and language of the journal. It is thus appropriate to draw the attention of collectors anxious to carry out their own researches, to the existence of a publication complementary to Filatelìa. This is the Répertoire Bibliographique de la Presse Philatélique Mondiale, a catalogue of all the articles produced each month grouped by subject. All articles relating to a given country are grouped under the same heading and arranged by language: each article has its bibliographic data given according to the rules of international bibliography. It is thus a valuable collection which rounds off and completes our publication.

Casting an eye on the philatelic press world-wide, we may say that its activity shows no sign of flagging. In practically every country philatelic magazines are flourishing and giving signs of a long and brilliant career.

New journals are appearing all over the place: some have been interesting but short-lived (such as Lectures Philatéliques and Philatélie Universelle in France), others have shown every prospect of thriving (Il Mondo Filatelico in Italy, the Colombe de Bâle in Switzerland for example), still others are appearing in countries represented hardly or not at all in the philatelic press. In South America particularly we must respect the courage shown in publishing new titles when so many of their predecessors have fallen on stony ground; Chile

Filatelico in Chile, El Timbre Postal in Mexico, and many others.

On the other hand, there have been disappearances which often leave gaps difficult to fill; the Stamp Herald has gone under in Canada, to be followed by the Canadian Philatelist which is doing its best in difficult circumstances; what was practically a veteran disappeared in South Africa just after the Durban Exhibition. The Filatelía Portuguesa has vanished in Portugal, but Portugal Filatelico has arisen, still tottering, in its place. Romania has tried to show itself capable of supporting a philatelic periodical with Colectionarul de Marci Postale. Finally, the Far East remains fairly inhospitable to philatelic journals and does not enable them to multiply excessively.

Happily there is good stability overall for the philatelic press and the number of soundly-based publications goes on increasing from year to year. This enables us to predict a rosy future for the philatelic press, which is generally responding to a very real need.

The number of magazines dealt with in the following has been increased not only by the appearance of new titles, but also by the reception of long-established journals. Once can only hail this progressive increase in our field of action and hope there will soon be no magazines that do not want the honour of appearing in our columns. We wish to express warm thanks to all the magazines which have taken part in our scientific studies and have faithfully helped us to erect this monument of scientific research. Thanks to all the magazines which in doing this have worked for the good of Science and Philately.

END

Ferdinand Roschlau (Editor)

Postage stamp literature

[Die Briefmarkenliteratur]

Allgemeine Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, 1st October 1864, Volume 1, Issue 7, pp.57-58; 1st November, Issue 9, pp.73-74; 1st December, Issue 11, p.89
& 15th December, Issue 12, pp.93-94

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2003

POSTAGE STAMP LITERATURE

Under this heading we intend to give our readers a survey of all the literary products relating to the collection of and the trade in postage stamps, such as journals, catalogues, albums, handbooks, etc. We will first deal with the most important English, French and German philatelic journals, whilst making it plain that we do not claim to be giving an absolutely complete account. We hope to list any omissions in later supplements.

The first journal relating to stamp mania appeared of course in England, the land of ports, where above all the origin of stamp collecting is to be sought for. It was published under the title The Stamp Collector's Review by the firm of Edward Moore & Co.; after some time these gentlemen retired and their place was taken by Alfred Perris. The first issue appeared on 15th December 1862 and, as the first magazine, was tolerably well received by all circles of stamp collectors in England and also to some extent abroad. However, the publishers with tiresome stupidity constantly sent out insufficiently stamped specimen issues, subscription invitations and advertisement enquiries (sent out in postal wrappers, which naturally meant the recipient had to pay the postage as for an unstamped letter). The Stamp Collector's Magazine that appeared one and a half months later gave the magazine strong and successful competition. The Review appeared on the 15th of every month and gives both major articles on stamp collecting as well as a great number of short reports of more or less guaranteed accuracy. The adverts section is always relatively important, especially as the editors used the tactic of repeating adverts in all subsequent issues without asking the permission of the advertiser: And what is best, they went on drawing payment for these involuntary adverts or else simply took the amount from the sums left by dealers for stamps, as they can discharge their debts for preference with issues of their journals. From the 15th of January this year, Mr. Pemberton of Birmingham has been employed as chief editor of the journal: In my opinion he is the leading stamp expert in the world. He is now filling the magazine with endless articles on foreigners (the term used for all the stamps differing from current issues by the slightest variation in colour), and ranges extremely widely with his knowing remarks. More recently, the journal, like The Stamp Collector's Magazine mentioned above, provides addenda to Mount Brown's excellent catalogue, and we cannot withhold praise from this arrangement by which the editors of Brown's catalogue are saved the cost of every new edition. So far the magazine is the second-best organ for stamp mania in England.

Translator's note: Although it is shown as Conclusion, I think that it should have been part II.

Conclusion

The Stamp Collector's Review described in N°7 of our journal has been given competition by The Stamp Collector's Magazine with great success since 1 February 1863. The publishers, who also own the most respected and extensive stamp dealership in England in the firm of Stafford Smith & Smith, Foreign Stamp and Crest Depot, Queen's Square House, Bath, are the leading authorities on stamp collecting. The best known is Mount Brown, the author of the most complete stamp catalogue, but Dr. Viner, Dr. Grey, etc., also deserve prominence. The magazine always issues in our format. Eight of the pages are generally filled with advertisements, which are a very important source of revenue for the publisher. The lines of narrow pearl type are paid for at a rate of 6d – 5sgr. The subscription rate is 4d per issue (3.5 sgr.). Each issue will include free, an uncanceled stamp (e.g. Thurn und Taxis ¼ black, the new Italian 1c, Hamburg local post, Spain, etc.). The text of the magazine is of very high quality. As well as a report in every number, there are major articles on less familiar countries whose stamps we have in our albums, forgeries and copies (this section of the paper seems to have been taken over by Edward Pemberton when The Stamp Collector's Review failed), special matters relating to stamp mania, criticisms of new postal writings and magazines, which in most cases are all too little sound and scientific, additions to Mount Brown's catalogue, correspondence, a large number of new issue reports and a quite interesting letter-box. The diagrams take the form of wood engravings. Printing and paper are in very good taste and give the magazine a very pleasing appearance. The magazine is unquestionably the international exchange organ for all the stamp collectors of the world, particularly those who want to arrange an exchange with overseas countries – America and The British colonies – and its excellent contents and wide circulation make it in the highest degree valuable. We will deal with the next most important organ of stamp mania in England (Once a Month, or the Stamp Collector's Advertiser) in a later article.

III

The third place amongst the English stamp journals is taken unquestionably by the organ of the new limited company for the stamp trade, the Universal Stamp Gazette, a review of which we gave in the last issue of this journal. The excellence of this magazine is guaranteed by the names of its editors, who are familiar notables in the field of stamp trading. The aim of the magazine seems to be to provide competition for The Stamp Collector's Magazine. Although this has scarcely been achieved to the desired extent in view of the really excellent contents of the latter, the competition has led both magazines to make reciprocal strivings and efforts, and the wider public must benefit. It is an old axiom that competition with the originator leads to all the progress in the field of trade.

We will now return to Once a Month, or The Stamp Collector's Advertiser, published by the firm of C. and H. Gloyn, Acomb House, Manchester. This magazine does not seem to enjoy the wide circulation that it actually deserves. It has a high place in the literature of stamp mania, not least because of its elegant production and its outstandingly low price (2 pence per issue of 16 pages). The illustrations also leave nothing to be desired, like the beautifully produced "India proofs" (excellent reproductions) of rare stamps. As well as good leading articles, the magazine always has a number of small articles collected from all possible journals.

IV

Since they have only a limited circle of readers, we shall leave out the relatively small number of adverts actually paid for. (As the author of this article has found himself, the editors of a journal who know the trick very often put one and the same advert in 6 or more issues, and as often several times in one and the same issue, without this being ordered. However it should be said to the credit of the firm, in contrast to the firm of Edward Moore & Co. (now A. Perris) which published The Stamp Collector's Review, that they never charge afterwards for these involuntary insertions, or even make up for the charade by sending stamps for viewing. With the exception of personal communications, the editors of Once a Month are not very careful, and so the advice must be that in dealing with them get accurate information and then place an order. The editor of the Allgemeine Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, and the author of this article himself, have several times suffered from the lack of consideration of this gentleman.

A more pretentious advertising sheet, the Weymouth Stamp and Crest Advertiser appears at the same price. We call it an advertising sheet, as that is all it amounts to. All ostensibly new reports are copied from other magazines, and the few original articles usually have a great number of very poor remarks, not even reaching the lowest level of English literature. Whereas Once a Month appears on the 15th of every month, this one always appears on the 1st. The magazine deserves high praise for one feature alone: under the heading of The Honest, it gives a list of swindlers who will simply not answer for stamps on approval, naturally at the sender's responsibility. We are also quite ready to publish in our own journal the names of such gentlemen who are not ashamed to keep back things sent on approval and ignore all reminders, whilst naturally making whoever sent them as responsible for every article, and confirming this by naming them in the journal. It is quite obvious that anonymous inputs, which are intended to put suspected cheats in the pillory, will be ignored. Moreover this unmerciful exposure of cheats should also have the great advantage that German dealers know who to look out for in England – especially when sending things there, since the usual rules for protecting oneself from such cheating, namely to register all letters and use the receipt to guarantee its reception by the addressee cannot be used because of the cost. The editorship of the Weymouth Stamp Advertiser is in the hands of a certain Mr. Dean.

A magazine which is given away free and thus gives maximum publicity to the adverts which also make it viable, is The British and Foreign Stamp and Coin Advertiser. This appears on the 1st of every month, under the editorship of A. J. Johns of Manchester. This sheet can be distinguished from other free advertising sheets by the fact that as well as the adverts, it includes a large number of interesting articles. Naturally, very high claims cannot be made for something which is free, and we must be thankful for whatever we get. We do not actually know whether the magazine is appearing currently, but we do now that because of "a great shortage of adverts" (the usual euphemism for the non-viability of an advertising sheet) it was very close a short time ago to giving in to fate and leaving this world so ungrateful to honour and virtue – a fate suffered by so many other English journals, too many for us to name, particularly the National Stamp Express, published by Evans. We think it is beneath our dignity to waste words on this last magazine, whose principal features were the invitations to subscribe, along with rough abusive language about the German nation and arrogant, insolent overvaluation of the English.

Its greatest service to its subscribers was to tell them when it ceased to appear.

In our next article we will deal with a few more minor English journals, and then go on to the French and German ones.

Translator's note: Issue 12, from which Part IV above was translated, was the last issue of this journal. I have been unable to find any subsequent contribution to the literature from Roschlau.

END

The Library
[Die Bibliothek]

Berliner Philatelisten-Klub von 1888 – Mitteilungen, June 1988, Neue folge 62, pp.9-10

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2003

Librarians from the 1972 Archive

(See the original for the list of librarians from 1937 to date.)

The selfless work for philatelic publications, carried out by the people named, deserves thanks. They are expressed here on behalf of us all.

THE LIBRARY

Pretty well every club – ours included – was proud of its library. As early as the 3rd meeting of the Club on 13th February 1888, the foundation was laid for a collection of journals and catalogues. The first catalogue appeared in the year 1908, and was replaced by a second in 1933. In the year 1940 Dr. Karl-Th. Meyer issued, as no. 321 of the “old series”, a tribute number in honour of three veteran librarians of the club, all still alive then: Dr. Kalckhoff, Hoffmann and Pauli. Housing and constant attention was always a problem. This club library containing many valuable items was in storage because of the terror bombing, and was lost in Berlin at the end of the war in 1945. The personal library of Dr. Kalckhoff formed the basis of a new collection. This later Privy Councillor Kalckhoff Memorial Library was then joined in 1969 with the library of the Berlin section of the Society for German Postal History (Gesellschaft für Deutsche Postgeschichte), and the library of the local section of the Berlin Philatelic Society for Postal History and other Philatelic Libraries (Landesverbandes Berliner Philatelisten-Vereine e.V. zur Postgeschichtlichen und Philatelistischen Bibliothek). This library was housed at the time at 1 Turnstrasse, Berlin 21 (Moabit district), and was then transferred to the Berlin Post and Telegraph Museum. This still remains in Berlin and is always available to research philatelists in Berlin and the neighbourhood.

END

Sabine Schwanke & Hans-Joachim Schwanke

Very esteemed ladies and gentlemen

[Sehr geehrte damen und herren]

Philatelistische Literatur.*, Auction 277, Schwanke Briefmarkenauktionen, 22nd March 2002, Hamburg, Germany, n.pp.

Translation of the introductory page only

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2003

VERY ESTEEMED LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

Following a useful tradition, we again present an auction catalogue for philatelic literature in March of this year.

As in the previous year, the handbooks, catalogues and monographs, with nearly 1,900 items, form the bulk of the offer.

You will quickly see that several attractive collections have been made available for sale, for example on the subject of Organisation of the Post, or the major subject of Entires. As well as familiar standard works, you will find several bibliophilic rarities from the period before and after 1900, often in practically "mint" condition.

Our section on Philatelic Periodicals is as usual well supplied, with 400 items. There are many examples from the 19th century, some with wonderfully preserved titles – which, however, are often only nostalgic in character – and also valuable runs of desirable and reputable journals such as the Philatelic Record (London), the Philatelic Journal of India or the Collectors Club Philatelist (New York).

An increased demand for auction catalogues, which are necessary for every credible philatelic archive, is also reflected in this catalogue – there are again about 400 items available for purchase.

Sending items on approval or photocopies is not possible for obvious reasons. We are quite willing to give you further information on the contents or condition of individual titles.

If you cannot take advantage of our inspection period, it might be extended on request.

As usual, you will find our complete catalogue under our usual keyword system on the Internet under: <http://www.schwanke-sohn.de> or <http://www.schwanke-sohn.com>

We wish you much pleasure in reading our catalogue and will be very happy to receive your auction bids.

Sabine & Hans-Joachim Schwanke

Gerhard Tag
Bookplates of women and for women
[Exlibris von frauen und für frauen]
Sammler-Express, March 1960, Volume 14, Issue 5, p.99

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2003 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

BOOKPLATES OF WOMEN AND FOR WOMEN

On the 8th March 1960 the whole world celebrated the 50th International Women's Day. This important event gives us the opportunity to make the women artists who design bookplates known to a wider public.

A volume of bookplates appeared in the year 1955 (previous ones appeared in Germany between 1922 and 1925) and named a large number of female bookplate artists. From the German Democratic Republic came Wilfriede André of Hildburghausen (born 1912), with a copperplate engraving (Ex-libris Lulu Loewe – a “speaking” plate) and Lieselotte Finke-Poser of Leipzig with an etched plate (Ex-libris for the copperplate engraver Erich Claus). West Germany on the other hand gave us two woodcut artists: Wiltraud Jasper of Stuttgart (born 1915) from whom we have the Ex-libris Inge Vollmer and Renate Stoltenberg (Ex-libris Lotte Kasten).

Austrian women artists in particular devoted themselves to bookplates. As a prolific woodcut artist, we know Rose Reinhold (see figure), who died on the 17th September 1959. The following woodcut artists from Austria have become well known: Marie Bauer-Klimbacher (born in Vienna in 1911), whose favourite subjects are children at play, the Viennese Hedwig zum Tobel (born 1912) with her charming two-colour woodcuts, and Waltraud Weissenbach (born 1919 in Spittal-Drau) who is active in her homeland as an art teacher.

Other women bookplate artists are Bertl Nacken of Karlsruhe (Lino cuts) Hanna Nagel of Heidelberg (pen drawings), Christine Schulze of Lübeck (modern bookmarks), and Lisl Steppe of Munich (Lino cuts).

It is good to know that in the Leipzig College of Art, bookplate design is looked on as a distinct genre and several generations of women artists have turned out very beautiful examples of modern bookplates, as we can see from the Ex-libris Dorothy Vorhaus, illustrated.

We should also mention artists whose bookplates show women exercising their profession. The copper-plate engraver and stamp designer Heinrich Ilgenfritz (born 1899 in Nuremberg), teacher and vice-chancellor at the State College of Art, Leipzig, created the bookplate for Doctor Herta Uhlitzsch (see figure). Richard Rother of Kitzingen/Main, produced the woodcut bookplate for Margret Völker showing a woman cider maker.

END

Dr. E Diena

A reference book about philatelic literature

[Ein nachschlagebuch über philatelistische litteratur]

Das Postwertzeichen, July 1889, Volume 2, Issue 7, pp.66-67 & August, Issue 8, pp.80-81

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2003

A REFERENCE BOOK ABOUT PHILATELIC LITERATURE

John K. Tiffany, who is to be considered as the true father of philatelic bibliography, recently published a new work belonging to this genre, not less outstanding than his other writings which accorded him the name of the most significant American philatelist. This opus, The Stamp Collector's Library Companion, furnishes a list organised in chronological order of all philatelic journals published in the United States, indicating publisher, place of publication, years of publication and number of issues. The brochure also contains a listing of periodicals which had been announced but never appeared. Anyone who knows how frequently in the United States, stamp journals come into existence and again disappear can get a notion of the amount of labour and of investigation which this very comprehensive catalogue must have occasioned. On the one hand, one must accord all recognition to Tiffany's work; on the other, one must not lose sight of the Reference Book on Philatelic Literature which I have proposed. Involuntarily there arises the question why John K. Tiffany has not placed himself at the head of the movement that arose in favour of the project named.

I must confess that when at first I attempted to prove the value of such a work, my thoughts were initially of Tiffany whose valuable support would have contributed a great deal to the success of the project. It is odd that while I was honoured and congratulated by the most outstanding philatelists because of my idea, Tiffany alone appeared not to show an interest. In the minutes of the session of the Philatelic Society, London dated 6th January 1888, I note that the members present expressed unanimously their sympathy for the project. Nevertheless, Tiffany declared in a long letter to the very same gathering, read at the session of 16th March 1888, that my idea was not at all of the type that could be realised, and sought to show difficulties that would be encountered with such an effort.

I regret that I do not have the letter in question before me so that the reader might form a judgement more easily; though admittedly my project would be condemned to failure if judged by such an authority. Since, unhappily, I do not own his letter, I shall pass on Tiffany's reasons which he had been kind enough to address to me personally in two letters. In one of these he says that it would surely be pleasant to own a manual such as the one I propose; but, he adds, even when one has it, in most instances the respective works referred to are not available.

To this remark I reply that even though the real philatelist cannot procure all works, he will nevertheless be in a position to acquire a good number. Furthermore, many clubs own, as is well known, rich libraries - I mention here the Bavarian and the International societies - accessible to every member for his use against payment of slight postage expenses. As an example, no one who consults Meyer's Kunsterlexikon will believe that he can acquire all the books and journals contained in the comprehensive bibliographic opus of the history of art; and yet, the value and usefulness of the Kunsterlexikon is incontestable.

Without a doubt the publisher of the Reference Book would encourage the acquisition of further libraries which alone would constitute a valuable indirect use of the work for which I plead.

Tiffany, however, touches upon another point, highly unpleasant for every philatelist: he says that a great many collectors will not concern themselves at all with scientifically constructed works dealing with a knowledge of postage stamps and that for this reason little interest would be evinced in the manual proposed by me. Unfortunately I must acknowledge that this remark is correct and that a shocking number of collectors is satisfied with their catalogue and a pre-printed album, even when the album contains lots of pictures but errors and gaps, as well. Moens in Brussels, in a better position than I to recognise this sad truth, has discussed this in an article in Le Timbre-Poste in which he recommended to his readers the catalogue of the stamps of Peru which the Society in Lima had published. I can add here that the small editions of excellent works that constitute Moens' Bibliothèque des Timbrophiles prove that the philatelic science still does not have many devotees while, on the other hand, the collecting of stamps increases daily.

Nevertheless, I am convinced that one must not let oneself be discouraged and must hope that the limited number of those who seriously desire the progress of our young science and its literature will increase year after year; and indeed that the number of such collectors is adequate to ensure the financial aspect of the project, even today.

Tiffany further remarks, precisely in reference to the financial side, that the publication of the work would devour a significant amount of money. His calculation in this regard is as follows: Until this day some 500 specialised periodicals with altogether some 6,000 numbers have appeared in print. When now the reference work shows only the locations where every country is mentioned, about 175,000 citations would be required, and one would have to seek in at least 100 places in order to learn whether this or that stamp with which one is occupied at the time is mentioned or not. If, on the other hand, he adds, the places where every stamp is mentioned are denoted, there would be not less than 300,000 citations, assuming that approximately 6,000 stamps are in existence. On a two-column page, some sixty might be accommodated, and that would yield a total of 5,000 pages.

I do not intend by any means to question the correctness of the figures indicated; I believe, in fact, that they are rather higher even - not lower - than indicated. But the plan shown by Tiffany is by no means the one I am suggesting. I do not believe that it is useful to know where every stamp is mentioned; I do believe, however, that it would be important to own a list of special works, monographs, and articles about stamps of the individual countries. One understands that the volume of the tome would be reduced considerably and thus the work and expenses as well. For whom could it be of interest to have an index of chronicles of newly issued stamps as published in speciality periodicals when it is known that the information given there is often given without the specimen being present and based only on incomplete and at times incorrect news?

As I pointed out in my previously published article, the reference work should consist of two parts, the first of which dealing with stamps generally as well as collecting, while the second part would list works about the stamps of individual countries. Above all, one would have to indicate complete titles, names of authors and of publishers of the works dealing with stamps of particular countries, followed by a listing of the diverse articles; and could finally add other, important notices which are not exactly articles, yet of interest. In this way, country after country would have to be dealt with.

Evidently the compiling of the opus would have to be entrusted to experienced philatelists and to their judgement would be submitted the adoption or omission of certain data. Occasionally it might be valuable to cite minor items, news of a shorter kind, and similar information. Precisely as a result of the manner in which the choices are made the value of the Reference Work can be increased notably, and the drawing up of the same could not be regarded as a dry labour.

Originally I had proposed to issue one volume only (though, as indicated above in detail, divided into two parts) which would have incorporated the total philatelic literature of all languages. Now, however, I consider it more advisable to compose Reference Works for each language especially. Indeed, the works that have appeared in the United States might be distinguished from those of Great Britain, Canada, and the English [sic] colonies. As a guideline, the most recent work by Tiffany mentioned at the beginning of this article, The Stamp Collector's Library Companion, might be adopted, and the stamp societies of the different countries could prepare similar lists in accordance with his pattern - not only from speciality magazines but also from other works dealing with the science of postage stamps. The bibliographical catalogue which one or the other society could publish would be submitted by more or less members according to the size of the material, each member working separately but according to a uniform plan.

The protective alliance which exists among the international, Bavarian, Viennese, and Frankfurt societies should simplify the realisation of my project as far as German philatelic literature is concerned, and since, furthermore, Dr. Moschkau spoke favourably about my ideas in an article a few months ago, there is hope that in a short time the most outstanding philatelists of Germany and of Austria will initiate work on the Reference Book for German literature.*

* Note from the [journal] editor: on the initiative of Mr. Theod. Haas, the Bavarian Philatelic Society recently requested associated societies to take an interest in the project. For the objective, each of the four societies is to name a member for the purpose of forming a committee which is to determine the feasibility of the project.

As for France, the work of Mr. Ph. de Bosredon above all, viz. his Bibliographie Timbrologique de la France et de la Belgique which appeared in 1878 is to be continued further by adding to the list works published in the French language during the last decade. This task falls to the Société Française de Timbrologie in Paris which also published Bosredon's book and which unanimously recognised the benefit of the work (See Bulletin No. 47, p.39). Since I am just mentioning the name of Mr. Ph. de Bosredon, it is a pleasant duty for me to mention that this gentleman also spoke very favourably about the publication of a Reference Book and would even gladly agree to add his collaboration if in the near future he were not prevented by other urgent business matters.

Further encouragement came to me from Mr. P. J. Anderson of Aberdeen, whose articles covering English philatelic literature are much esteemed. One may hope that soon other English [sic] philatelists will take an interest in the project, as a result of which no doubt the Philatelic Society, London would be moved to take up the publication of the Reference Book as far as English literature is concerned.

I cannot avoid adding here that one of my friends had the opportunity to speak with Major Evans about my idea, and that this well-known philatelist has also expressed himself with much approval.

I must also remark that the American Philatelic Association at their annual meeting in Boston, on 15th August 1888, recognised the feasibility and usefulness of the project, appointing three members to make suggestions on how the matter might be realised in the most practical fashion. The National Philatelic Society in New York, too, weighed the plan carefully.

Thus there is hope that possibly in the United States initially, steps will be taken toward the realisation of the work to which the valuable basis given to Americans in Tiffany's previously mentioned works might well contribute, notably The Philatelic Library by the same author which, as the first bibliographic opus about philatelic literature, appeared as early as 1874.

END

Corneille Soeteman
The Corneille Soeteman Library Part III
La Philatélie Corneille Soeteman, Postal Auction, 12th May 2004, Brussels, Belgium, n.pp. [p.1]

Translation of the introductory text only

Translation produced by Lucien Joel for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

THE CORNEILLE SOETEMAN LIBRARY PART III

I herewith present the third and final part of my philatelic library.

It should not be surprising that some titles were presented for sale before, because sometimes I bought up to six copies of the same work. The very small number of unsold titles from the two previous sales are re-listed in this new catalogue.

A few totally new Sections are also presented, like thematic works, annual catalogues, newspapers and periodicals and numismatic works.

There remain no more than 600 works that never will be presented in an auction again. Piece by piece these interesting works are regrouped in several lots and made available for direct sale for attractive prices. These are mainly works of which I own several identical copies.

This means the end of a beautiful passion already replaced by two new loves which also have to do with collecting. On top of that, philatelic literature has also given me answers to the many puzzles that the science of postage stamps and postal history contains. I also found a lot of pleasure searching for and buying the works that were missing from my collection.

I also enjoyed choosing hundreds of books and having them rebound artistically by Belgian and French master binders. Skilled craftsmen are rare and in high demand. Sometimes it takes months of patience before the finished product is delivered, so it is not hard to imagine the intense joy when the end result is received.

Finally there is also the feeling of satisfaction, even though somewhat nostalgic, to leave a souvenir of my collection after thirty years of intense hunting. I hope that the three volumes that I have been able to publish will be used as a faithful guide for collectors who are just as passionate as I ever was.

Corneille Soeteman

END

Ulrich Felzmann
Literature Auction “Roland” Library
[Literatur-Auktion “Roland”-Bibliothek]
Auction No. 87, 16th January 1999, Ulrich Felzmann, Dusseldorf, Germany

Translation of the introductory text only, p.6

Translation produced by Charles J. Peterson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar’s Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2004 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

LITERATURE AUCTION “ROLAND” LIBRARY

The catalogue of our special auction of the Roland Library is in front of you.

Due to the comprehensive and meticulous description of the lots, the work on this catalogue has taken somewhat longer than was originally foreseen. The catalogue now appears in a more limited scope. Many additional literature lots still remain to be worked-up, and individual areas such as Scandinavia, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands, Great Britain, etc., are represented here poorly or hardly at all. Also, significant overseas areas such as Africa, Australia and North America, as well as parts of Asia, can only be covered sporadically at the moment. We hope that we will be able to present these areas to you in our subsequent auctions.

The catalogue at hand contains a number of sought-after and scarce literature lots, many of them not offered for years! In view of the overlapping of fields, we recommend your careful inspection.

END

Jadwiga Bartków-Domagala
Bookplates on Postal Subjects: Catalogue 1977
[Ex Libris o Tematyce Pocztovej: Katalog 1977]
Muzeum Poczty i Telekomunikacji, Wrocław, Poland, 1977, 42pp.

Translation of the introductory text only, p.4

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2004

BOOKPLATES ON POSTAL SUBJECTS: CATALOGUE 1977

The exhibition Bookplates on Postal Subjects, is a continuation of the cycle of artistic exhibitions presented at the Muzeum Poczty i Telekomunikacji of Wrocław. It includes vignettes intended for books, thematically tied to the art of collecting books, periodicals, postal souvenirs and stamps. We have come to the point where it is possible to recognize a bookplate with postal or philatelic themes. In the 1950s, there were just a little over some fifteen philatelic libraries in Poland that had their own bookplates for their books. Nowadays, there are more than 120. This bears witness to the increasing popularity of this area of the art of collecting.

At this show, we have presented exclusively those bookplates whose design included a postal or philatelic motif. There are therefore, reproductions of couriers, postmen, postal forgeries, letters, stamps, postmarks and also mail boxes and printing machines. The repetition of the symbols notwithstanding, the exhibition is not boring because in most cases, the philatelic or postal motif is accompanied by other elements related to the interests or the trade of the owner of the bookplate and besides, the vignettes are the products of artists having different personalities and employing different graphical techniques. Most-frequently, we have woodcuts, but there also etchings, prints on copper, linotypes, zincographs and lithographs. The visitor will certainly admire the prints on wood of Konstanty Sopoćko, Eugeniusz Pichell, Nasy Arpad, Antal Fery, and of Krystyna Wróblewska; the delicate drawing of the prints on copper by Wojciech Jakubowski, the linotypes and the etchings by Stanisław Dawski.

The oldest bookplate in the collection dates back to the year 1919; it has been produced by Zygmunt Klemensiewicz for the eminent philatelist Włodzimierz Rachmanow. Another bookplate dates from 1926; it was created by Józef Tom for Włodzimierz Polański, the founder and director of the Postal Museum.

The collection presented at the Exhibition comes in its entirety from the collection owned by the Museum. It includes more than 250 bookplates. It is divided in three parts. The first part contains the bookplates of postal libraries and museums, the second, the bookplates of Polish collectors and the third, those of foreign collectors. These pieces are shown according to a certain order that conforms to our tables, that is, we mention the ordinal number of the bookplate, the name of its owner and of its artist, a brief description, the date when it was made, its dimensions, and the catalogue number. To use the catalogue, one must start from the alphabetical order of the artists. The catalogue is the first scientific inventory of bookplates with a postal theme. We believe that our exhibition will interest all the collectors of this artistic domain and that it will promote artistic emotions in all visitors.

END

Victor Suppantschitsch
A bibliography of German philatelic literature
[Eine bibliographie der Deutschen philatelistischen literatur]
Philatelistischer Börsen-Courier, May 1891, Volume 6, Issue 9, pp.75-77
& August, Issue 15, p.132

Page 132 is an editorial comment on the progress of the subscriptions

Translation produced by Georgia Seitz for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2005

A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

When Emilio Diena in Issue 1 of the Postwerthzeichen of 1888 enthused over the drawing up of a bibliography of philatelic literature, this thought generally met with most joyful approval.

Also this article spoke to my heart all the more as my friends know, there is a similar work to be found in research in my portfolio.

This plan, the production of a bibliography of the philatelic literature of all peoples, as originally proposed was impracticable in my view, therefore I did not further concern myself with the idea.

This plan, however, soon fell through for the above reason and one had to be content with the desire to see developed soon a bibliography of the German literature.

Since the idea was proposed the desire to see it fulfilled remains strong but with the passage of the years it has not come to fruition.

It seems to me that the reason for this is that it is felt that such a work could only be completed by the German Philatelic Clubs.

So the matter was put off until the Greek calends [which means never, since there are no calends in Greek. A calend is the first day of the ancient Roman month.] since a joint agreement of all associations to do this work was hardly to be expected, from the outset.

In my opinion this way would have distorted the uniformity of the work since each subject would have been worked on in a different spirit.

However, the thought that it could be possible for an individual man to create this work in an reasonable time period with the help of the German collecting world, would not let me rest, and so at the behest of the publishers of this periodical I have decided to undertake this work.

Although after the death of my dear friend Ferdinand Mayer I gave up collecting myself, I still remain a Philatelist at heart and in particular I have turned my attention to philatelic literature, as my philatelic library with over 500 items in its catalogue attests.

I have followed up on all aspects, through which our study went since that time, most attentively, and I hope to produce a work which will satisfy all philatelists.

Concerning the contents and the arrangement of the work, I believe the data in the prospectus, which the previous issue of the paper put forth*, will suffice. Permit me to stress, that the Bibliography should be a leader in the entire German philatelic literature, where everyone, who wants to become familiar with a philatelic topic can with ease find which was written about it by the noteworthy philatelists.

 Editor's note: I could find nothing that resembled a prospectus in the previous issue of the magazine and must conclude that it may have been a loose insert.

That which was written about things which are common today to every philatelist, that which is contained in every larger manual, that which is fully presented and that about which there is no more doubt, this undertaking will not discuss since this would be a service to no one who looks for enlightenment about a subject if they had to wade through several hundred articles and notes in order to finally find that it contains seventy or eighty outdated notes which have already long since been corrected or disproved, or that fifty of such notes are repeats.

The German collectors may trust me in this case and rely on the fact that I will include only such publications which have a philatelic core and value.

Also the book will not state only the titles and headings of the relative articles, essays, papers, etc., from which their full contents cannot be safely inferred, but it will also indicate what information can be sought and found in these articles.

With these lines it is not my purpose to encourage a broad subscription since the general and vigorous agreement which Diana's idea has found everywhere leaves in me no doubt about it, that the response to the subscription will make possible the publication of the book and my conviction that this will happen, is so firm that I am already hard at work.

However, with these words directed at all philatelic associations, the philatelic press and all philatelists, who have an interest in seeing this work come to fruition, I request the support of all, in order to supply something complete and whole.

The work does not prepare a concurrenz (competition?) for anybody, harms nobody, but can only be advantageous for all Philately and all those which are occupied with it, such as dealers, collectors, philatelic writers, etc. They should, therefore, not shrink from any small sacrifice in order to support the work.

It is important above all that the entire German philatelic literature is made accessible for me.

Although my own rich library is at my disposal, there are naturally older publications and other ephemeral type documents which I do not have.

Also, no one should require of me that I acquire all magazines appearing at present nor all new issues or recently published books, monographs, catalogues, etc.

The internal publications, statutes (by-laws), annual reports, reports of association, etc., of the Philatelic Associations are less accessible to me

My plea, therefore, to the honoured executive committees of the associations, is to provide the aforementioned association publications to me on their own initiative, since I must devote all my time to seeing that the work is readied in order to appear at the time considered for it and there is no time for me to address special requests.

The publishers of philatelic magazines, among them also those which concern the German privately issued stamps, since they will be included in the bibliography, and authors, publishers and printers of all kinds of philatelic writings are kindly requested to provide to me a copy of those writings.

Authors are further requested to register with me their works, essays, etc. and to include also some biographical data.

Executive committees of the associations will want to fashion a statutory resolution about it now, that the contents of their libraries pertinent to my special work be made available to me free of charge, so that resolution is already adopted when I come to place my requests.

Finally, I request all philatelists possessing older or little known philatelic publications to kindly report the same to me.

If I find the support for which I hope and on which I will depend, then this work will become a credit and adornment to German literature.

The support of my difficult task will in part, however, hopefully also prove that German philatelists are not only accumulating collectibles but also that they have a warm interest in their literature.

May these lines not be written in vain.

Translator's note: The above article was written in a difficult manner and was rather awkward to translate.)

Page 132

ON THE BIBLIOGRAPHY

The subscription to the bibliography of the German philatelic literature, which was introduced by us, from Supreme Court Judge Suppantschitsch did not as yet have that success, which would secure the publication of this work, which is so extremely important for the science of stamp collecting.

In particular the Philatelic Clubs have participated but meagrely in the subscription. We are compelled, therefore, to extend the subscription date to the 1st October 1891 There will be no further extension. As of 1st October 1891 the 50% price reduction ends.

It would be really unfortunate, if the work does not come about because of non-participation by the German Philatelists.

Subscription - registrations are to be addressed to the publisher:

Mähr in Ostrau, 1st August 1891.

The Editor of the Philatelistischen Börsen-Courier.

END

Adr. Brinkoff

Notes: 2 – Johan Karel Koning

[Anmerkungen: 2 - Johan Karel Koning]

Arbeitsgemeinschaft Niederlande Rundbrief, 1981, Issue 100, p.63

Translation produced by Peter Bergh for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2004 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

JOHAN KAREL KONING

Johan Karel Koning (1862-1916), better known as Naret Koning, has exhaustively described the “official” stamp swindle under the heading Postzegelknoei [Postage-stamp mess] in Het Algemeen Handelsblad [The General Business Newspaper] of 20th August 1912. The text was reprinted in PhM 1912, Volume 1, pp.85-88. The article caused a question to be raised in [the Dutch] Parliament. See PhM 1913, Volume 2, pp.17-18: Philately in the Estates General. See also ibid, pp.26-27.

Naret Konig was a Fellow of the Royal Philatelic Society London and was a professional philatelist. He had, amongst others, been philatelic secretary to Baron R. A. Lehmann and worked on and expanded the Baron's collection. That collection was awarded the Grand Prix at the international stamp exhibition at Amsterdam in 1909. In the last years of his life, he gave private lessons in philately and called himself professor! It is told in PhM, 1912, Volume 1, p.135 that he was going to work on the British King's specialized collection of the Commonwealth and of the Netherlands and its Colonies. In 1913, he suggested that the Government should try to acquire the collections of Warren, Waller, Lehmann, Weremeus-Büning, Schram, Costerus, and Kersten, in order to open a Postal Museum.

Sadow had many contacts with Naret Koning.

END

Dr. Gerardo Álvarez

A short history of the Rivadavia Library of Cañada de Gómez

[Breve Historia de la Biblioteca Rivadavia de Cañada de Gómez]

In: Litfil Cañada de Gómez 2004., Asociación de Cronistas Filatélicos de la Argentina, Buenos Aires, Argentina, 2004, pp.14-16

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2004

Editor's note: This work is non-philatelic and was translated in error.

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE RIVADAVIA LIBRARY

OF CAÑADA DE GÓMEZ

Starting in 1920, a group of acquaintances restless with many social and intellectual ideas instituted a movement to create a public library, which they would come to call after Bernardino Rivadavia. The charter was drawn up on 22nd April of this same year. The objective of the organization's founders, many of whom were outstanding educators from the local public schools, was to support a public library, and at the same time, host public conferences, literary and musical auditions and, in short, act as a centre to promote the instruction and education of the public, according to its statutes, and the first Board of Directors: Sixto Suárez (President), César Bortolato (Vice President), Vicente Leoni (Secretary), Roberto Varela (Treasurer), Guillermo Aranda (Deputy Treasurer), and Manuel García Tiscornia, José González Cervero, María C. de Lucena and Delia Antonietti (Members).

The institution first functioned at 1034 Lavalle Street, with an evening and night time schedule, containing little more than 950 books and with Farancisco Giméniz as librarian. Lacking space, it was moved to locations in Félix Pagani and Manuel Aizpuru, 62 Félix Pagani and Ocampo and Moreno.

Spanning 8 decades of progress, the following occupied the seat of president: César Bortolato (1921-27), Abel Blasco (1927), Dr. José Sanz (1927-28), Vicente Leoni (1928-37 and 1955-67), Dr. Félix Pagani (1937-53), Valentín Terradez (1953-55), Dr. Alberto Gabriel (1967-69), Dr. Héctor P. Tonella (1969-99), and Estela Bondoni (from 1999 until today).

During the 1920's, the educator Pablo A. Pizzurno was given an honorary membership and Dr. Héctor Pedro Tonella received the title of Honorary President after 30 years of being President.

In 1935 the library received a Government Grant of 20,000 pesos for construction of its own building, which would be built on a lot acquired by public auction in 1928.

In January, 1937, work began at 232 Moreno, and dedication took place on the 5th November of this year, during the presidency of Dr. Pagani, who did an outstanding job directing from home for many years, and who was Minister of Public Works after 1958 and later of Education and Culture under Governor Carlos Sylvestre Begnis.

The Board of Directors is now made up of: Estela Bondoni (President), Lilia R. de Albertengo (Vice President), Gerardo Álvarez (Secretary), Susana Genre (Deputy Secretary), Gabriel Combina (Treasurer), Dora De Bernardo (Deputy Treasurer), Cristian Savy, Rosita Ondo Misi and Mabel C. de Ulloque (Members), and Florencio Guastavino and Olga M. de Álvarez (Editors).

Between 1929 and 1945, the library published the magazine Cultura edited by Vicente Leoni, which was distributed free, circulating within the country and abroad and in 1937 earned an honourable mention for its diffusion of ideas and valiant cultural work, granted unanimously by the Jury of the Grand International exposition of Public Periodicals in the Public Library of Matanzas, Republic of Cuba. Many prestigious writers had a part in this, among them Félix A. Chaparro, Lázaro Flury, Gáston Gori, Alberto Maritano, Diego Oxley, Fausto Hernández, Angélica de Arcal, L. Gudiño Kramer, Julio Barcos, Natividad Parodi, Juan Filloy, Juan Lazarte, José Cagnín, Carlos Carlino, María Aguilar de Bilicich, Félix Molina Tellez, José Berrutti, Antonio J. Bucich, José D. Forgione, Raúl Gardelli, Efraín B. Lura Villanueva, Salvador Merlino, José Ma. Sarobe, Ignacio Scapigliatti, J. Vidussi and Raúl A. Barca Moreno. The library was supporting much artistic, musical and intellectual work, which had turned it into the most active cultural centre in the city.

On the top floor of the building, there was a large assembly hall, which could accommodate some 200 people, which was donated by "The Swiss" in 1972 and named after Ricardo Romegialli, who at the time of the donation was director of this local firm, and who developed interesting and relevant cultural activities. In the exhibition room, artistic, historical and artisanal works were displayed, and in the auditorium there were two concert pianos, a Blüthner and a Bechstein. In the cultural season that lasted from March to November, three or four cultural activities were held each month, and due to the generosity of the collaborating Municipality, the Municipal Historical Museum, Independent Foundation and others, the majority of the programs were held free of charge.

The valuable bibliographic material of the library - some 35,000 volumes - could be taken home by the members, or consulted daily in the reading room, where newspaper archives, videotapes and the Internet service could also be accessed. After many decades the Vicente Leoni Memorial Library had been created to house books of dates and memoirs concerning missing persons. Many bibliographic treasures are preserved in the library and the reader can find, for example, the 5 leather-bound volumes of Los Siete Partidas de don Alfonso de Sabio, published by Benito Hortelano in Madrid in 1844, the Complete Works of Juan Bautista Aberdi, published by La Tribuna Nacional in 1886, the Archive of General Mitre published by the Library of La Nación in 1911, the fifty or so volumes of the Complete Works of Domingo F. Sarmiento, published by Luz del Día in 1953 or a valuable copy of the first edition of Fictions by Jorge Luis Borges. Also held in high regard is the album in which illustrious visitors have written their thoughts on this cultural centre. Those who have inscribed thoughts and good wishes include such esteemed intellectuals as Alfredo Palacios, Rodolfo Senet, Pablo A. Pizzurno, Juan Lazarte, Calixto Lassaga, Alfredo Castellanos, Alberto Maritano, Alberto Palcos, Arturo Marasso, Cortés Pla, Alcides Greca, Fausto Hernández, Ulises Petit de Murat, Mario Amadeo, Enrique De Gandía, Eduardo Gudiño Kieffer, Dardo Cúneo, Beatriz Pasquali, María Kodama, Josefina Delgado and Noemí Ulla, and relevant persons of the stage, such as Ires Marga, José María Vilches, Tina Helba, Onofre Lovero, Maria Luisa Robledo and Pedro Aleandro, Eloísa Cañizares, Arturo Bonín and Susana Cart, Ana Acosta, Edda Díaz and Rudy Chernicoff and innumerable musical soloists, duos, ensembles, choirs, orchestras and popular music groups.

Amongst the significant notes which are contained within, I would draw your attention to the expression in 1941 of Aturo Marasso In the Biblioteca Rivadavia de Cañada de Gómez, one finds the marvellous, the desire for perfection, the living fire within the spirit. Dardo Cúneo paid tribute, in 1979 with A very emotional homage to the memory of the founders, those stubborn pioneers, and equal homage to those working toward the future by probing the meaning of country and humanity. and more recently the eminent actress China Zorilla wrote in this album: How pleasing to see a library and a theatre forge a strong cultural unity! A great, affectionate hug.

Conscious of the prestigious past enjoyed by the establishment in the city and surrounding area, today we have the difficult responsibility of maintaining this position but also to find methods to continually improve the services that are offered to more than 200,000 members and to all of those attending lectures, knowing that this is the best way to continue igniting the living fire within the spirit, to continue in the cultural adventure developed over almost 80 years and so that the library and theatre continue forming an effective, fruitful cultural unity.

END

Dr. R. Sch[ätzler]

Coloured copper-plate engraving – a very appealing collecting topic

[Der farbige kupferstich – ein reizvolles sammelgebiet]

Sammler-Express, 1960, Volume 14, Issue 6, p.119

{This also includes a translation of the text under the bookplate illustrated within the article, although the bookplate is not related to the article}

Translation produced by François Steichen for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

January 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

COLOURED COPPER-PLATE ENGRAVING

A VERY APPEALING COLLECTING TOPIC

Unlike the graphic engraving techniques we have discussed in previous issues, the chromotype is not a special printing style, but merely a printing procedure that attempts to produce colour effects out of the graphics. Almost all chromotypes originated in the 18th Century, although their development started much earlier than that.

In the 15th Century, painters of miniatures made books that included copper-plate or woodcut engravings printed onto the page with heavy colours because the copper plates of that time were not suitable for chromotypes. At the time, the copper plates were only sparsely covered with lines. As a consequence, only coloured lines could be printed instead of coloured surfaces. In contrast, the colour woodcut, a relief printing method that could create surfaces, was already known at the beginning of the 16th Century.

By the 17th Century, etching had been combined with the woodcut to reveal a lightly-coloured effect. From the etched plate containing an outline drawing, a print was first made, on which one or two woodcut prints were added. The added woodcuts allowed the print to have various shades or tones.

The works of Hercules Seghers (17th Century) are regarded as precursors of the chromotype. He printed not only on paper, but also on canvas. The introduction of chromotypes with multiple plates is attributable to Jacob Christoph Leblon, born in 1667. On each page, he used three mezzotint (engraved) copper plates, each one containing blue, yellow or red, and which, when printed on top of each other, produced black.

Before we arrive at the unique particulars of the French and English colour print process, something should be said about the quality of a chromograph. A colour print that exactly reproduces the original must not be overloaded with colours. Above all the English, but also the French, graphic artists and painters of the 18th Century, gave their pictures a special charm by using a swollen style – that is to say, a style of thickly-applied colours. Reproductions using copper-plates now made it possible to attain the softness of the colours in the original. For this reason, plates especially made for colour impressions would initially be used to make only single-colour prints (for example, in red, brown, black, purple and also in blue). The light wearing of the printing plate achieved thereby allowed the printer to better approximate the softness and the harmonic transitions of colour found in the original.

After a production run of about forty such colour prints, the copper plate was often re-used to print single-colour pages, since it was no longer usable for the production of high-value impressions. Through wear, the lines at times became so thin that no colour at all could stick in them anymore. The result was that the colours in a print made from such a worn plate no longer corresponded to those of the original.

However, in order to stretch profits further by making yet another edition of chromographs, the printer switched to darker colours instead of the original ones, thereby bringing out the finer details that had earlier been softened out. An observer possessing little knowledge of the subject will often take such a darker-toned example for a print of quality, because there is no other print at his disposal against which he may compare. Here, collectors have a duty to exchange experiences in order to help one another. With such solidarity in mind, please be aware that from many collectors' perspectives, only printed, not hand-coloured, chromographs are worthy of collection. At the very least, such a collection is controversial because a collection built up of these pieces must, for example, do without the English stencil art prints, since they are almost without exception partially [hand] coloured.

The French chromograph of the 18th Century has earned a special place among other prints in its genre by virtue of its selection of subjects such as scenes of courtliness and gallantry as well as its production technique, whose method employed multiple plates. The French painters availed themselves most often of their own techniques in producing chromographs: that is, they used the aquatint and chalk techniques. The aquatint worked within the print like a light, fluid Gouache. The colours have a wonderful luminosity. Colouring by hand is not required in these flawless prints. It was also not essential to put on yet another colour after printing, since the printer used a special copper plate for each colour. The French aquatint print as well as the chalk print, which likewise were created using multiple plates, are therefore pure chromographs. In order for the aquatint to achieve the previously-described matt colour effect that is found in the original, the colours had to contain more wax than oil. For light and burnished tones, the printer took up simple water colours to which were added a small amount of egg white, honey, or rubber for better colour-fastness.

The printing process, and above all, the repetitive passes of the pages onto the various colour plates, demanded great skill and practice. The printer also had to understand the properties of paper above all else. For example, the elasticity of humid paper especially had to be taken into account. Unlike the French aquatint chromograph, the English chromograph - in spite of its pastel-like character - has starker colours and is not composed in as charming a manner.

The French artists chose more gallant and courtly subjects for their prints than did the English. Where the French depicted nature scenes and scenes of people, they represented them in refined, unreal form. The English masters, on the other hand, created scenes of all the social classes, in a far more realistic conception. The English painters also differentiated themselves in their choice of presentation from the French, who favoured pastels, gouache, chalk drawings and aquarelles. Oil paintings and miniatures of contemporary country folk served as the archetype in English chromographs. In order for the oil painting to represent colours as faithfully as possible, a large amount of oil was added to the colours, on the one hand, so that a strong impression was achieved. On the other hand, the English printers used the mezzotint process developed with such high mastery by the English graphic artists. This process was especially appropriate for conveying the velvety effect of oil paint in paintings.

A notable aspect of the English chromograph technique is that it used only a single plate. For the English copper-printer, therefore, the task of producing chromographs was significantly more difficult than for his French counterparts and their aquatint technique. He had to apply all the colours on one plate, which he then used as a presentation sketch-map. Using swabs, sponges and paint brushes, the printer swabbed and painted the colours anew on the plate after every impression. Only when the impression was made could the printer get an overall view of the cumulative colour effect of his work.

After the print was made, the colourist took over the further elaboration of the print. His task was to correct details that could not be executed - or that had been overlooked - by the printer.

In contrast to the large number of outstanding graphic artists that England and France produced in the 18th Century, only a few representatives of the chromographic art are known from among the German painters of the same period. At the time, Germany was going through the period of small-state absolutism that had such a hindering and corrosive effect on the development of art, as it did in all other areas of life.

Chromographs on stencilled copper plates would probably have developed further had they not been pushed aside by the arrival of another technique. This new technique was lithography, which was exceptionally well-suited for representing colours in print.

Exlibris – Frans Van Der Wee

In 1960, Issue 2, page 40, we created a New Year card with the Chess theme, in connection with the prospectus for the Chess Exhibition held at that time, incorrectly describing it as a bookplate. Today we want to show our readers a true Chess bookplate. It is a woodcut from the Dutch graphic artist Frans Van Der Wee.

END

PHILATELIC TRANSLATIONS

PRODUCED

BY

BRIAN J. BIRCH

Volume 4

Philat. Trans. 518 to 813 & S.E.P.S. Trans.
Series of Translations

© Brian Birch

Guinot - 3166 Route de Seyches

47350 Montignac Toupinerie, France

18th January 2022

Wolfgang Maassen

Collect Literature – Building Libraries: Tips for Those who Enjoy Books and Those who Love to Own Books

[Literatur Sammeln – Bibliotheken Pflegen: Tipps für Bücherfreunde und Bücherliebhaber]
 Ratgeber für Briefmarkensammler Band 4, Phil*Creativ Verlag, Schwalmthal, Germany, 2004, pp.3-14

Translation of the Contents, Foreword and Introduction only

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
 33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
 January 2005

COLLECT LITERATURE – BUILDING LIBRARIES:
TIPS FOR THOSE WHO ENJOY BOOKS AND THOSE WHO LOVE TO OWN BOOKS

CONTENTS

Foreword	..	..	..	..	4
Introduction
Collecting literature – building up a library
Questions and hints from and for practical applications	..				6
Literature in the internet era	..				7
Literature pleasure	..	..			8
Overview required	..	..			10
Aspects of Collecting Literature
1. Fundamental decisions and goals	..				15
2. Calculations: More than playing with numbers					19
3. Questions and problems of obtaining literature					23
4. The collection of technical journals	..				28
5. The keeping of books and periodicals	..				33
6. How to store your information	..				37
7. Filing and systems	..	..			42
8. Electronic help		..			60
9. Additional means of filing	..	..			91
10. Security above everything	..	..			108
11. From Egyptian hieroglyphs to the modern PC:
Philatelic libraries – by and for collectors	..				111
Appendices
A Catalogues and literature advice	..				131
B Libraries throughout the world	..				132
C Offers of philatelic literature	..	..			145
D Index	..	..	..		148

FOREWORD

A representative EMNID survey during the summer of 2003 indicated that the hobby of book collecting is essentially the most popular collecting hobby amongst Germans; it was listed by roughly 36% of the respondents. Even if the number may be surprising (was everybody owning two of three books classified as a collector?), the impressions from the book fairs in Frankfurt or Leipzig are a clear indication: Germans read a lot, or at least they buy a lot of books!

This also applies to philatelists, particularly for serious researchers and for the body of authors and book producers. Even though there is now a seemingly unlimited number of specialized books, journal articles and other publication media on all topics (not merely philately), the number of publications concerning the production and use of literature, specifically the collection, organization and mining of sources, is very limited. Such items are virtually unknown in the area of philatelic history, except for work done at universities.

Yes, it is possible to find guidelines for the production of books, for typography and proper language use and the issues of layout and production itself. But there is essentially nothing regarding how to collect the products thus created and how to store, archive, and mine these publications.

I started this book with the working title of Advice for Authors and Book Producers, but the progress on the manuscript uncovered voids not normally included under such advice (such as topics on time and organizational management). And there were also features seldom covered, but of significance to book and media collectors intending to work, write and publish in an organized manner, effectively and targeted: namely the structure and maintenance of their own libraries and information holdings.

These are obviously related, but are seldom treated together. This may be due to the complexity of the subject or to the conventional thinking that may hide the connection from view, but which I see as significant. Consequently, the work on the book led to the separation of the topics in order to keep the book from expanding excessively. As a result, the present Ratgeber für Briefmarkensammler (Counsellor for Stamp Collectors) Volume 4 concentrates on Collecting Literature – Building Libraries, whereas Volume 5 is devoted to Hints for Authors and Book Publishers.

I treat the topic in my normal manner: The first large section provides the reader with tips and hints based on my experience, but also moves beyond to the theory, defined here as the “history of philately,” regarding the early collection of books and the organization of libraries worth visiting. The subsequent section moves from the private sphere to the public sphere, from my own library to the libraries of others.

This treatment provides the reader with useful information, but also expands the horizon with cultural aspects that are still related to authorship and collecting, because it is only the incorporation of today’s work into the work done previously that provides this work and the whole topic generally with its proper significance and the importance that is its due.

The Publisher

INTRODUCTION

Collecting literature – building up a library: Questions and hints from and for practical applications

It is odd: I can collect whatever I want, whether the stamps of a single or several countries, postal history, even so-called specialties and esoteric topics. On each topic, at any time and for any motive, there are authoritative handbooks and/or catalogues; there are guides and even so-called research publications that tell you how to collect it, what to look for and what to search out or to avoid.

There is a whole genre of literature giving advice; there are catalogues that show and present the values of stamps, cancellations, postal stationery or even entire letters. But there is no such thing for that literature itself. There are no catalogues that show the value of particular well-known works of philatelic literature, and there are no handbooks to advise on how to collect, classify, organize, maintain or store such literature.

Germany, the country of poets and philosophers, the country of pioneers in philately, whose massive output and research is documented in stacks of literature, admittedly produces philatelic literature on a large scale even today, contains the largest producer of catalogues in the world, and publishes the largest specialized bibliography in the world, namely the Literatur-Nachrichten, but, I dare say, this same Germany has largely lost an understanding of the real value of such literature. We have lost the overview that Alexander Bungerz and Carl Beck had in the 1920s or that Victor Suppantschitsch had at the end of the 19th century. We are neither the real “bookworms” that Bungerz and Beck had been, nor do we have an international census of the literature of the ages (past and present).

Is a genuine scientific analysis precluded by the quantity, specifically the number of publications issued since then, which is certainly well into the tens of thousands, or are we simply short of capable persons amongst us, who have the knowledge and access to make recommendations and provide critical reviews? Do we lack the willingness and the honesty to differentiate useful publications from bad, to provide open and well-substantiated criticism, whilst also analyzing and evaluating new publications?

Are our philatelic journals, including the society journals, under pressure to admire, rather than review critically? Do the decreases in funding force writers to essentially copy the sales materials provided by the publishers, rather than to take the time to write a genuine review? Why do we lack the “bookworm” to consider the publishers and their “machinations” as critically as the books themselves?

Everybody claims that literature is important, that you are in an intellectual vacuum without literature – such talk is tiring, because it shows that literature is assessed without imagination and planning, specifically without linking it to the real world issues and to its usefulness. The author is reminded of the advertising claims at the book fairs in Frankfurt or Leipzig, which are often reprinted on artistic banners. It suggests that literature, specifically books, is useful only to line bookshelves in the living room in order to show off the presumed or actual intellectual level of the owner, and thus to raise his status and generate admiration, if not praise.

Literature in the Internet Age

Before getting deeper into the topic, the question is surely justified whether it still makes sense to collect publications at all, in an age marked by the Internet, PC and data files. After all, books are more and more often distributed in a digital format, and complete journals are now downloaded from the Internet as pdf data files – for a fee. Thus, does it make sense to produce a bound book or does the digital age not save space, thus alleviating a problem known to every collector?

This question is justified all the more, given that even small libraries are now starting to digitize old, fragile and often very valuable publications by scanning them, so that they can be read and used on a PC – similar to the way microfiches have been used earlier.

So will the library of the future consist (at most) of a collection of ring binders to give access to the printouts of literature needed presently, but otherwise restricted to a dictionary (which can also be found on the Internet) or a few basic reference volumes?

A reader, who approaches literature merely from this temporary usefulness criterion and relative to the immediate here-and-now use, will surely agree with the author that nothing more is needed today – and probably even less in the future. Essentially, this has been true for years, because a reader could always borrow the books required, possibly by mail, for a small fee from larger libraries, specifically specialized libraries. The PC and the Internet will serve this role in a virtual form more and more over time.

Thus, it may turn out that the function of a society library, which may be well maintained and organized, will shift into the virtual realm; the author even presumes that the former function of public libraries will change little by little, and the day may even arrive when certain types of publications (the author refers to auction catalogues, price lists, etc.) will only be produced digitally – but such developments are normally triggered by purely commercial reasons. Decreases in funding for library staff, for space leases and for other costs surely matter here and will occasion changes over time.

On the other hand, authors are also personally involved in this process, because some of them are starting to publish only in digital form in order to save money, whilst still facilitating publication in light of the small press runs for a decreasing number of interested readers and purchasers. Data files replace thick handbooks, which are probably precluded from publication in the current situation. Whereas it was feasible for a Senate President such as Victor Suppantschitsch to publish a bibliography – probably at his own financial risk – such undertakings are probably no longer feasible today. As a result, the largest international bibliography regarding persons of significance to the history of philately (which Brian Birch has amassed over many years) can be accessed only on the webpage of the FIP (International Federation of Philately) [Editor: Actually the FIP Philatelic Literature Commission]. This version will never be published in print (the current Word file already exceeds 1,000 pages).

Is that a loss? Essentially not; it may rather be a gain, given that such collections of data are useful for only a small number of interested readers worldwide. After all, they represent only the starting point for individual writing, for creative work. The future library of knowledge will be a digital library, it will be more expansive than we could imagine today in our wildest dreams. But it will facilitate coverage in detail and in breadth that will open new fields of work for a researcher willing to use his established competence in freedom and independence.

The Pleasure of Literature

No public library, no specialized library – particularly a library located in Berlin, Hamburg, Frankfurt or München – can replace the library in your own home. A book ordered by e-mail is not a library, but a book that you can read and then return. You cannot truly work with such a book; you can only draw from it for a short while. We all know the feeling of reading some sources repeatedly, perhaps even often, and always discovering and retrieving something new. That would not be feasible with a library book.

It is difficult to amass knowledge by long-distance loans. Long-distance loans preclude immediate access to quickly research a new topic or to refresh one's memory. Furthermore, books of others need to be protected: You cannot draw in them, underline something, not even turn down the page corner as a reminder – the book retains a certain distance.

The author saw an example of what real work in and with a book may imply in a copy of the Großes Lexikon der Philatelie by Alexander Bungerz, which an auctioneer lent to the author. Even though the author has had that particular book for many years, this particular copy was well worth the extra effort at information extraction, because the prior owner had made innumerable margin comments, additions, and corrections as well as adding numerous clippings from old philatelic journals of the period between 1925 and the 1970s, which were valuable additions to the written word. That prior owner had truly worked with "his" book.

Having been encouraged by his parents in the collection and use of publications from early childhood, the author had the chance in his college days to work as an aide and later as an assistant to a leading Professor in Bonn in his studies in education and philosophy. In that process, he worked not only on organizing his Professor's library, which covered the entire ground floor of the private residence, but also to take dictation to prepare "summaries", i.e. short reviews of the contents and critical evaluations of the week's new acquisitions. This process, which later led to his own reviews of publications, defined his approach to publications to the present day, even if methods and means have improved now, naturally.

Of course, these statements also apply to those sources derived from the Internet and with its assistance. There are many folders in the author's archive that contain print-outs from the Internet. It may be that these will increase over time, but one factor is constant: Research on the Internet requires time, much time, which is why it is useful to print out what had been found and to archive it – otherwise you will need to spend time over and over to repeat the process. Nothing replaces the direct access in your own home.

The pleasure of reading, the pleasure of owning a book, books, journals, documentation, photos and other materials, shares much with the enthusiasm that collectors generally bring to their collection, regardless of its nature. The important feature here is not the usefulness or practical considerations (otherwise a stamp collector would be satisfied with pictures of German stamps), but it centres on the original object. Moreover, the collector of books is often interested in valuable and rare originals. Their possession is as much a pleasure as the possession of the first stamp issued by Saxony or a Mauritius stamp, and many publications from the early years of philately are just as scarce, hardly seen today and all but impossible to purchase.

And neither the Internet nor a public library can meet this need, because no collector is satisfied by knowing that another collector owns these items; he wants to own them himself.

Thus, the following comments are directed at the connoisseur of publications, who not only loves books, but who wants to use them as well. The tension between the pride of ownership and the enthusiasm of practical use characterizes the topic and generates its significance for collectors of publications.

Overview required!

Anybody, including the author, who needs a current overview, for essentially professional reasons, for the twenty specialties of philately that he pursues, in addition to his focus on philatelic history, without losing the connection to other topics and specialties not currently actively pursued, has a problem: How do you obtain information on what is available in light of the flood of publications and how does one gain access to the best and most valuable publications?

The author lacks a real solution for this problem, given that there is no catalogue similar to a Michel catalogue, that caters to collectors of philatelic books and one that would solve at least one problem, namely an approximately realistic pricing of publications.

Bibliographies are of no help here, neither are reviews of new publications. The latter usually ignore old literature, the former list only the titles without providing information on their value and usefulness. Of course, there are ways of overcoming this problem, at least for books. For example, criteria could be established, as was done for computer software, that express the “value” of a book in points (comparable to marks in literature categories in exhibitions) and then define a related price. It might be surprising to see a “value” rather different from a favourable book review for some books.

The issue is, who would perform this immense task? Who would start it? It would be a start, if at least the books shown in exhibitions and their valuations could be listed in yearly summaries; such a list would be a valuable addition to the Literatur-Nachrichten and a factual help for collectors and buyers. But to-date, we have not even succeeded in archiving the Literatur-Nachrichten in a complete database – never mind the literature issued prior to WWII. However, it could be done quite easily, if a team of enthusiasts would sit down and systematically process the journals starting with the first issue, digitize the book reviews and titles and archive this in a database. The Internet as the connecting medium could provide the structure, which individuals working from their homes could use and augment on a steady basis. Anything is possible. Similarly, as is done in e-Bay or Amazon, the users of particular publications could add their comments and evaluations for each title read. Over the years, this would generate a collection worth reading.

That is the only option capable of providing a survey today and in the future. The age is past, when librarians would collect great amounts of data in the form of bibliographies in the traditional manner, because such collections cannot provide useful assistance in a reasonable amount of time, given that trash is co-mingled with treasures and outstanding insights with miserable failure. This appears to have been the reason why Peter Fischer and Harry von Hofmann, the authors of the new rules of the BDPh for exhibiting literature, raised the bar for exhibitors of philatelic publications by requiring that such items are first tested at the secondary level, rather than exhibiting immediately at the national level as before. That will separate the wheat from the chaff.

It is true that the author, while assisting in the drafting of these new exhibition rules with edits and many suggestions, did not accept this approach without reservation (due to the lack of international comparability and the obvious implementation problems), particularly as he preferred a larger role for the “philatelic committee” in the planning of the exhibition. But this would have led to other implementation problems that might be even larger hurdles, such that the idea of a preliminary competition won out, and it does make sense.

It is precisely this preliminary evaluation of quality that is missing in the present-day bibliographies and even in most current reviews. A comparison of current reviews with reviews published 100 years ago shows clearly how our ancestors spoke more-clearly. Back then the publications were denounced in no uncertain terms, even catalogues by Senf and Michel were criticized severely, the catalogue prices were criticised, and a number of specialty publications were rejected as completely inadequate. Today there is praise, adoration, reprints of the publishers’ press releases, in which the editor, publisher or author in each case talks of a completely new, ground-breaking and outstanding publication. Each catalogue is better than its older version, offers more and is unique. In truth, most so-called improvements are only minor changes, because they generally do not cover much. Prices are not adjusted based on a major review, but appear to be modified by a software step as a fixed percentage adjustment, which is artificial.

As to surveys of literature and its quality? They are nowhere to be found today. There are no literature clubs in German philately (but they do exist in the USA). Even the quantitative surveys, that is the lists of new publications, are a mere dribble, not a torrent. There is no coverage beyond national borders: German collectors do not find out what is published in England or in the USA, but the reverse is also true. And the situation is even worse in regard to other countries, such as Italy, Spain or France, and absolutely abysmal in the Asian area.

Despite the noteworthy advances of the last few years, the FIP Philatelic Literature Commission, which would have a wide-open field here, has failed in this regard, because it has shown a narrow focus on exhibitions. The interested literature specialist merely wants to know what is available and where. It would be a worthwhile endeavour to provide such information on a worldwide basis, in which the national associations could be of assistance, but which they fail to provide. The same comments apply to the AIJP, the Association Internationale des Journalistes Philatéliques, i.e. the International Association of Philatelic Journalists. Admittedly, there are reviews occasionally, whenever an author or a publisher is willing to send in a book for a review. But that is all incomplete, mere fragments.

Then there are the philatelic journals. But you cannot expect much from them either. Most of them review a few new publications, usually books they received at random, and even those journals that present several reviews in each issue give only a fragmentary selection, as is shown by a quick comparison of several German philatelic journals. This problem is even more obvious, when you include journals on postal history, such as the Archiv für Post und Kommunikation, because the reader sees essentially nothing about publications of general interest in postal history, unless there is an editor on a mission, but even such an editor must go to great lengths to obtain such publications for review and may even have to purchase them at his own expense.

More and more publishers are opting out of sending out free copies for review, given the high price of specialized publications that are produced at great expense, but with a limited press run. The costs hardly permit that extravagance. As a result, the author has purchased many books at his own expense in order to introduce them to his readers, and he is pleasantly surprised when he sees a professional discount (for which there is no provision in the new German law on fixed book prices). That keeps third parties from doing likewise and making a personal effort, which in turn hurts the book trade, as it sells fewer books. But it is hardly worthwhile to rant about the shortcomings and short sightedness of so many laws, which obviously placed the interests of the book trade over the usefulness for readers and book collectors.

The point has been made earlier that the individual book collector is on his own. It is up to him to put together a reasonably complete picture of new publications and their quality. Only by way of a summary, here are a few steps that may help, at least as a first approximation: Search through many relevant philatelic journals, catalogues of dealers in philatelic literature and Internet web pages, to mention the most important sources. Many auction houses also offer new literature on a regular basis, so the comparison is useful. In addition, there are roughly 20 to 30 philatelic publishers, who regularly release new issues, who send out e-mail alerts on a regular basis, even though it is otherwise difficult to hear about new releases, given that most of them are abroad.

The periodical Philatelic Literature Review is a truly valuable source for new releases, albeit with a concentration on US publications, that is highly recommended for book “freaks” (see the Appendix). It also contains a number of regular adverts from publishers regarding their latest releases. But it is a far cry from worldwide coverage.

A final word about older literature: After many years of dearth, today’s German philatelic field is again capable of supporting a surge in philatelic literature, with Burkhard Schneider, Matthias Kakarutt (Philatek), with a few auction houses, such as Sabine Schwanke (Schwanke-Auktionen, Hamburg), Ulrich Felzmann (Düsseldorf), Peter Feuser in Stuttgart or Bernd Jurkewitz in Kirchlingern (Pumpenmeier Company), to mention just a few. That is the good news. The bad news is that comparisons of prices remain problematic, particularly for older and scarce literature.

It may have pleased the purchaser when he obtained a copy of the book Die Ochsenaugen by José Kloke (translated from Portuguese into German by Wolfgang Maassen) for roughly DM 140 at the Roland literature auction in Düsseldorf a few years ago. But he would have been surprised and probably not pleased to learn that he could have purchased a new copy of this book for DM 18 from the publisher, Phil*Creativ Verlag in Schwalmthal. The author knows of many such examples, particularly now that book sellers and publishers sell their books through auctions and profit from the auction fever of a few buyers, who bid up the prices, despite substantial stocks in the warehouse.

This trend is not useful, because it leads to nothing but disappointment and resignation. Of course, the price is set by demand and supply. There was nothing wrong when the author purchased a relatively complete set of a philatelic journal of the 19th century in excellent condition in Germany for just under DM 400 a few years ago, which sold at an auction abroad a few months ago and in distinctly worse condition for five times as much. The owner of the cheaper copy may be pleased, but is that true for the other owner?

There are no real price data, even for the scarcest and most valuable items of early philatelic literature. In some instances, comparable prices of earlier auctions may serve, which some auction houses specializing in literature (such as Huys-Berlingin in Liechtenstein) often note in their description of new offerings, particularly as past record bids may precipitate even higher bids now. In the case of low past bids, these are not listed (of course), except for the “well intended” note of the auctioneer: The scarcity was not recognized or Undervalued in past auctions. So which is right?

Are the prices realized in the first Roland auction by Ulrich Felzmann at the right level, given that it was an auction that made available much sought-after material for the first time for many years? Or are the lower prices that were realized in the many large literature auctions of the last five years (the author knows many examples) at the right level, where in the most recent past many lots, even obviously scarce items, did not find a single bid? Were there not enough bidders or was the starting bid set too high? Perhaps both are true!

It is also true that there is no real comparison, which would require a catalogue of literature, at least to cover the most important philatelic publications. What is a proper price for a Senf catalogue of the early editions of the 19th century? How about a first edition of the Moschkau Handbook with its five volumes? A first edition of the Michel catalogue from 1911? What should individual year sets of journals cost? This should be feasible to produce, at least for the pre-war period prior to 1945.

A first attempt by the author in this direction was quite unsuccessful, when he asked a leading literature auction house for a computer file of the auction catalogue and the list of prices realized, so that he could integrate this into a data set for subsequent augmentation. The auctioneer demurred and indicated that he had no interest in such price catalogues. Does this indicate a fear of comparability information? Would not a catalogue be useful for all users to provide needed information? Not only when purchasing, but also when selling?

A publisher could see this as a risk to himself; thus, this is a call to action for associations, foundations and institutions, where the Internet could achieve much of benefit to all, given volunteer contributions.

END

Wolfgang Maassen

Philatelic libraries - of collectors and for collectors!

[Philatelistische bibliotheken – von sammeln und für sammler!]

In: Häuser der Philatelie: Eine Heimat für Sammler., Schriftenreihe zur Geschichte der Philatelie in Deutschland Nr. 4, Consilium Philatelicum, Bund Deutscher Philatelisten, Bonn, Germany, 2004, pp.53-64

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2005

PHILATELIC LIBRARIES - OF COLLECTORS

AND FOR COLLECTORS

The common question as to what came first, the chicken or the egg can be answered quite simply in this case. In the beginning, there were the stamps! Stamps were born in 1840 with Hill's postal reforms. The first stamp collectors may have begun with the new genre in this year in more or less funny ways, as seen from today's perspective. The fact remains that the true birth date of serious stamp collecting dates back rather to the 1850s than the 1840s.

Some few adults, but probably mostly children and young people saw any sense in collecting the small and manageable number of stamps. It's safe to see these projects as dilettante ones when compared with later periods, accumulations in cardboard or wooden boxes and envelopes, and it must be remembered that the latter were also then of recent date.

The victorious expansion of the stamp genre and the increase in numbers, no longer easily manageable, created first attempts at literature in the 1860s, more precisely in 1862: philatelic journals and catalogues, followed by albums a little later. The collecting public hadn't changed all that much; it was mostly young and inexperienced, if enthusiastic. Interest focused on stamps themselves and the literature of the period was more a tool to distinguish originals from fakes, to hear about new issues, or to find sources of material. Proliferation of stamps throughout the world did indeed create special problems!

In the German Empire there was an upsurge in philately only after about 1875, when it became somewhat organized. First clubs of early enthusiasts like Wilhelm Faber (Heidelberg, 1869) or Alfred Moschkau (Dresden, 1871) were followed by more serious attempts in other cities. With these foundations, the need for information grew too, even though it may have been a motive for the founding of the clubs. The need was met primarily by the aforementioned printed products. They were rather uncommon in the 1870s (e.g., the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal of the Senf Brothers after 1874, to name only one of about a dozen publications.) but expanded notably in the 1880s and became inflationary in the 1890s. There were new specialized journals, books and catalogues almost every quarter, but the majority of the journals did not survive very long.

When considering what primarily caused this upsurge within two decades, a few reasons begin to emerge:

- a) The young and youngish collectors of the 1860s (there was but little talk of women!) had grown into mature persons who looked after their professions and income, but then gave a seriousness to the former “children’s hobby” which gave it status and recognition in the population at large. The stamp as an “educational factor” was discovered, also (rarely) the stamp as a status symbol which from now on attracted even crowned heads and gave rise to truly princely collections.
- b) Because of the seriousness, closer attention to the stamps themselves followed, the consideration of the engraved image, perforation, watermarks, colours, paper, etc. In short, this is how “Stamp Science” came into being, the beginnings of which can be seen in the 1870s and mainly the 1880s. A special role may have been played by collectors, not yet called philatelists, to go beyond the common generalist. Quite a few of them laid claim to “scientific philately” which not uncommonly locked out others. The result was the creation of clubs which carried such claims in their program: the Royal Philatelic Society, already founded as the oldest club in 1869, as well as the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub, founded in Berlin by Carl Lindenberg and a few others. The latter club, together with its precursors in Berlin laid claim to the predicate “scientific” for its own use.
- c) As a parallel movement there was the clear distinction between collectors and traders. The first collectors, without exception, were also traders (Many years later, Alfred Moschkau claimed to have been the first and probably unique exception), the first traders also were collectors. This should remain so for many years, until the selective urge for a scientific base created a barrier between the two fields. There were club regulations, already in the 1890s, excluding dealers and traders. Lindenberg claimed for himself and others of an identical frame of mind an ethos of the non-commercial, honorary and purely scientific even though there was a general understanding that good dealers, i.e. professional philatelists, were also going to be good collectors.

This “mental division” found its expression in the literature: the dealers in general issued standard catalogues, less commonly specialized ones (great philatelists like Paul Kohl or Heinrich Köhler were rather exceptions here), collectors published monographs and special books which were normally printed in small runs of a few hundred copies. Of course, there were collectors who became dealers, dealers in literature or even publishers, but of course only in minute numbers. As a sole means of support, production and sales of literature even then brought but a meagre subsistence. Dealers who could stand on other “legs” had it somewhat easier which explains why many early dealers not only operated their stamp business, but also published journals, catalogues and albums. Each of these areas supported the others, and helped to produce income.

Undoubtedly, there were other factors, e.g. the protection of collectors and the war against forgeries the necessity of which literally gave wings to the production of literature, leading to thousands of articles and numerous books as early as the 19th century. The quantity of publications soon became problematic. In the same manner as with stamps, for which there were catalogues as common and well publicized tools for identification and evaluation at the turn of the century, the cry for catalogues of literature published to-date, that is, bibliographies, became ever louder.

While the numbers of stamp collectors in the last quarter of the 19th century was in the tens, perhaps even the hundreds of thousands, collectors of literature were rather rare birds. They were the “freaks” in the science-oriented elite, creating their own memorials in this manner. We will show that there were only two, perhaps three, collectors of German language literature in the 19th century, i.e. men who opened their hearts exclusively to philatelic literature; on a world-wide scale there may have been a dozen, hardly more than that.

From the First Collectors of Literature to Later Great Libraries

While a few literature enthusiasts collected books and journals for their own use, we must consider an especially noteworthy achievement of the early clubs that they made collected literature available to their members. This is documented in almost all statutes of the 19th century and it may have had a mercantile reason: if a club library could be used, a lot of money could be saved by collectors for the additional purchase of stamps! Therefore, parallel with the early private libraries there were club libraries, but a word of caution: they were not voluminous. Usually, one cupboard sufficed!

Whether usage was as scant as Dr. H. Brendicke asserted in 1895 – he stated blithely: All these beautiful volumes remain dusty and unread in the clubs' cupboards. – remains debatable. The statement of the literature-obsessed Brendicke (he was a writer and publisher of journals) may have held true for some, but others, and here we refer to the Philatelistenklub Berlin von 1888, took care of their holdings and used them. The fact remains that the so-called Club Library in many organizations was only a status symbol.

Only very few collectors, then as today, recognize the usefulness of the literature, especially in the journals. We must agree with Carl Beck's complaint of 1925: Is there nothing else but sales pressure, deliveries of new issues and catalogue science? In all the clubs, is there really no individual collector who dares to take the club library in hand to administer it properly? Is it really necessary that even large libraries of major clubs in their current state and general usefulness are no more than depots for storing old paper?⁽¹⁾

The third step, now clearly defined by its period was the development of society libraries. Sometimes, these were private libraries, called Library of the ... Society, e.g. the library of the Mitteldeutscher Philatelisten-Verband which used the library of A. E. Glasewald. But also the Germaniaring and the Bund Deutscher Philatelisten-Verbände im In- und Ausland had their own libraries which were disposed of when the associations dissolved in the 1920s and 1930s.

The fourth and last stage in the development of libraries, i.e. the organization of public specialist philatelic libraries, now institutionally carried by cities, has almost a century of history, thanks to noteworthy donations of individuals collectors. The first specialized libraries were connected with outstanding state libraries (Preußische Bibliothek) or universities (Deutsche Bibliothek, Leipzig). Collectors learned only from experience that highly valued donations to such institutions where philately was neither recognized nor truly cherished were really misdirected. The last example of this kind may have been the valuable collection of literature assembled by Hugo Krötzsch which had been given as a birthday present to the publisher Carl Gustav Vogel by his sons, which he then gave to the Universitäts-Bibliothek Leipzig, and the Deutsche Bibliothek there. It remained inaccessible to philatelists.

Far more serious was the sale of the large libraries of Alexander Bungerz (1874-1931) and Carl Beck (1879-1929). Bungerz, in financial straits, had sold his library to the IPOSTA-Committee which then also acquired Beck's library and donated both to the Preußische

Staatsbibliothek which in 1915 had already taken over the substantial library of Dr. Jur. Otto Rommel of Leipzig (1853-1907). The aim was to ... save it for Germany in this manner and make it accessible to the general public.⁽²⁾ The Berlin association had to note five years later that it had not been accessed and that the librarians' work hadn't even begun. And this in view of the fact that they were the two major libraries. On the 18th April 1936, C. Schmitt, Manager of the Reichsbundsstelle für Philatelistische Literatur was officially informed that because of new tasks the work on the libraries unfortunately had to be interrupted (and we do doubt that work on the enterprise had even started) and that it would be in the interest of the work in progress if an individual from collectors' circles could be found who would undertake the work on a volunteer basis. "Re-organizations" seems to have been going on elsewhere because other specialized libraries speak of "restructuring."⁽³⁾

It seems obvious that such experiences caused Christian [sic] Otto Müller to establish the Philatelistische Bibliothek in 1930 which a few years later was merged with the Stadtbibliothek München, i.e. a public library, accessible to anyone. Personal engagement and a sense of the future combined here in a most fortuitous manner. This new foundation became a true milestone which surpassed in scope and effect everything else in the field.

Large, Larger, Largest!

When the owners or private libraries, or the operators of public ones boast of the number of titles in their collections, we're again reminded of early philately times. As in the 19th century the collectors counted their hoards by the hundreds, then thousands, the literature-lovers imitated them with abandon.

The urge to be bigger does not only mirror personal vanities, no one is free of these, but it also provides useful pointers as to the importance, size, and hence the value of many a library. If there are public libraries involved, such numbers enhance the usefulness to the visitor by demonstrating the material available.

All of this is shown in some quotes from a recent copy of the journal of the American Philatelic Research Library (APRL), the Philatelic Literature Review in which Bonny Farmer notes: In fact, the APRL is one of the largest philatelic libraries in the world and is the largest such library open to the general public without an appointment. Gini Horn, the Director of the library, says about the library of the American Philatelic Society, now in its 35th year, that it is one of the fastest growing philatelic libraries in the world, if not the fastest one in absolute terms – also, considering cataloguing and electronic usability — the most easily accessible specialized library in the world.⁽⁴⁾

There is no doubt that in 2003 the APRL contained about 19,100 monographs and 5,100 journal titles. These are impressive figures, but are surpassed by some other libraries. Nils Strandell, who had been collecting literature since 1900 and who gave his famous library to the Swedish Postal Museum in 1943, had 15,000 volumes. The Postal Museum in Stockholm expanded these holdings to about 20,000 in 1955 and about 30,000 in 1980. As the author can state with confidence, the Museum did not rest on these figures!

We'll have to show later that German libraries should also be mentioned among the notables. In the English-language area one has to think of the library of the Royal Philatelic Society but especially of the one in the British Museum, the British Library of today, which, among other items, received the most valuable library of Lord Crawford. There are still stronger libraries, especially when one looks for early material from the 19th century. Carlrichard Brühl also included the library of the Collectors Club in New York, however, this library is not equally accessible to the public.

But let numbers remain numbers. In contrast, the names of famous philatelists are lasting monuments which are worth considering today. However, most collectors of literature are unknown quantities, there isn't much known about some of them, unless they themselves sought publicity. Some may remember the large-format auction advertisement published in DBZ by Peter Feuser who in the Fall of 2003 stressed the size of his specialized library as a qualitative criterion of his philatelic work. Also the professional philatelist Martin Eichele, who's been operating the Basel Stamp Authentication Office for many years identifies himself as the owner of one of the world's largest specialized libraries. Comparable with the Italian philatelic family Diena, he continues collections and libraries now in their third generation, as he states himself, even though there is no known catalogue of his treasures, as is the case with many private collections.

It is not uncommon that a catalogue is only produced when a collection is sold in one of the major literature auctions. The most recent example was the catalogue of the Josef Hackmey Library which was auctioned off in November 2003 by the Liechtenstein Auction House Huys-Berlingin. Since 1976 it contained the extensive library of the brothers Leon Norman and Maurice Williams from England. When Hackmey left Israel to take up residence in Britain, space constraints forced him to dispose of a large part of his library, and more than 7,000 volumes found new owners.

The majority of all of the great libraries go this way of all flesh and the question of space remains a basic problem, not only for private libraries. Stamps do have an advantage over books! Books lead the pack in size, and perhaps the ideal value, but rarely the commercial one.

Early Collectors of Literature

We already hinted that there were only a few collectors of literature whose life span was predominantly in the 19th century and who specially or even exclusively dedicated themselves to the collecting of literature. We'll have to leave researchers like Carl Lindenberg or Dr. Franz Kalckhoff aside, even though they left valuable and substantial libraries, because for them their books primarily served as tools, and were only collectors' items in a secondary way.

Since the beginning of Philately always links with the name Alfred Moschkau, he again will have to take front row in the following list.

1 Early Bibliophiles in Philately

Dr. Alfred Moschkau (1848-1912)

Moschkau's career began in 1870, at the age of 22, when he wrote his first article for the journal of the already-mentioned Wilhelm Faber (Der Briefmarken Bazar). In subsequent years he expanded his stamp collection substantially until he could claim to have presumably the largest one of his time. He also owned one of the old philatelic libraries, which was logical considering his work as editor and journalist, author and producer of albums.

Unfortunately, he lost both his collection and his library as the result of a lost lawsuit against a stamp dealer to whom he had to pay compensation, which meant a loss of all of his worth. His library was then purchased about 1880 by the Wiener Philatelisten-Club. He continued to collect but the later decades did not yield the degree of completeness of the earlier ones.

He must rightly be considered the first owner of a “large” philatelic library, even if its holdings of individual titles and journals by the 1870s remained manageable.

Theodor Haas (1848-1911)

Haas was actually the first author who made a profession out of his hobby. His biography is not unusual: he was born in Karlsruhe on the 22nd September 1848, and began collecting stamps in 1859, when he was 11. At the age of 35, in 1883, he joined the Munich firm of Anselm Larisch and was obliged – post office workers at this period had to do the same – to renounce collecting stamps! It appears the firm wanted to eliminate an unhealthy interest in their stock. Thus Haas turned to literature which offered a second home, not only as a collector but also as an author.

He first earned praise as the editor of Erdball und Merkur. From 1890 until 1908 he was editor-in-chief of the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal of the Senf Brothers in Leipzig. A year earlier, in 1889, he had displayed his library for the first time at the 2nd International Exhibition in Munich. At that time, it contained some 500 volumes! Today, it would be almost impossible to collect these treasures.

After 1891, there were numerous books from his pen, including the standard work of his period, the Lehrbuch der Briefmarken-Kunde. He retired from the Senf Brothers firm on the 1st January 1911 but was not able to enjoy his retirement, for he died on the 8th July that same year, in Leipzig. He’d been expanding his library steadily up to his death when it was sold to Viktor Suppantchitsch for the price of 1,500 Reichsmarks.

Viktor Suppantchitsch (1838-1919)

Originally named Suppantchisek, he was born in Ljubljana on the 31st October 1838. His studies of Law in Vienna led to the Germanisation of his name. He became a judge and later – comparable to the career of Carl Lindenberg — President of the Senate of the Superior Appeals Court in Vienna. Next to Haas, Suppantchitsch was probably the only one who turned away from stamp collection to the collecting of literature – following the death of his good friend, the pharmacist Ferdinand Meyer, in 1882. Already during the first decade he advanced to the post of editor of the outstanding Permanent-Welt-Briefmarkenalbum, published by the *Lahrer Hinkenden Bote. The album had a good name, but was not a resounding commercial success.

* Translators’ Note: A publication roughly equivalent to the American Farmer’s Almanac.

In 1890 he was called as juror to the Internationale Wiener Postwertzeichenausstellung and from the date on his publications kept coming, almost at the rate of a book a year plus articles, but also his private library kept growing. Philately on the continent must thank Suppantischitsch for the most complete bibliographies of the literature up to his time, but also some basic works, such as, for example, the Leitfaden der Philatelie (Leipzig, 1880) or the Grundzüge (Leitfaden) der Briefmarkenkunde (Leipzig, 1895, 2nd edition 1908).

Since Suppantischitsch published a catalogue of his own library, listing his collection up to 1893, we are well informed of his holdings. He only collected works which were published before the end of the 19th century and he could point to 27,200 individual journals, 1,170 monographs, 1,100 price lists and the publications of 300 clubs (statutes, annual reports). An incredible number for his time!

Unfortunately, this famous library could not be retained in Europe. After his death it was sold, reputedly for only $1.500, to Theodore E. Steinway who in turn donated it to the Collectors Club in New York. Thus, Steinway's [sic] library over night became the leading philatelic library in the world. It lost this rank later because ongoing completion of this once-leading library was not given priority. Still, when it comes to early literature, next to the library of the Royal Philatelic Society London, this one is amongst the world's best.

Suppantischitsch's achievements were recognized during his lifetime. For his professional work he was awarded the Leopold-Orden in 1904 by the Austrian Emperor. In 1906, he retired and moved to Graz. On the 9th February 1913 the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub awarded him the Lindenberg-Medaille for his research in and cataloguing of philatelic literature and on the 31st October 1918 he was awarded the Hans-Wagner-Medaille with the citation To the most important researcher and specialist in philatelic literature. He died a few months later in Graz on the 2nd March 1919, at the age of 80.

Heinrich Fraenkel (1853-1907)

Originally, Fränkel was also a Judge, but then turned to banking. He was known for his collections of postal stationery (e.g. the collection of envelopes of the Old German States which was valued at 60,000 marks), and also his collection of British Colonies. He was one of the early members of the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub in which he, together with Lindenberg and Kalckhoff, pursued philately as a science.

Beginning in 1881, he collected philatelic literature and in 1890 acquired the library of Sigmund Friedl of Vienna. This move made his library the leading one in Germany, surpassing that of Theodor Haas by far. As the librarian of the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub he then compiled the catalogue for its library, which he took care of for many years with great diligence.

Unfortunately, his library also did not remain in Germany after his death, it was purchased by Lord Crawford (James Ludovic Lindsay, Earl of Crawford) for an allegedly high price (Carlrichard Brühl speaks of 1,800 Reich marks). The duplicates were donated to the Royal Philatelic Society which responded by establishing a medal in 1914, the Crawford Medal. This medal is award bi-annually for special achievements in the field of philatelic literature.

Crawford didn't live to see all this, he died on the 31st January 1913. The catalogue of his library, prepared by Dennis [sic] Bacon, reminds us today of Crawford's private library, the largest in the world, in which Fränkel's holdings had also found their place.

Dr. Otto Rommel (1857-1933)

The jurist, born in Hildburghausen on the 2nd February 1857 may be known to readers of older specialized literature, since one encounters his name in many journals around the turn of the century. Time and again, his name comes up with regards to Old German States, Scandinavia and even Peru. His knowledge was based on the one hand on his own wide collections and on the other hand on his philatelic library which concentrated particularly on the collection of specialised philatelic journals.

The reasons why he offered his library for sale as early as 1913 are not known. From 1898 to 1911 he also regularly contributed to the periodical of the Dresdner Philatelisten-Vereins (Der Philatelist) on questions of literature. It is known that the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub refused in 1913 to purchase his library. We wonder whether this mirrors an ongoing feud between Lindenberg and Kloss which had climaxed in 1897/98 and later came to head with respect to the comparatively late clarification of Fouré case?

The fact remains that Rommel's library was acquired in 1915 by the Preußische Staatsbibliothek in Berlin; we'll return to this point.

Alexander Bungerz (1874-1931)

This name begins the list of the second generation of philatelists, i.e. those men who were born after Moschkau and Senf but also later than Lindenberg and many others. They still knew the first generation from meeting them. Bungerz was born on November 7, 1874 in Mönchengladbach and later worked as a commercial artist. Yet he dedicated his life to philately, especially writing, and left a rich literary heritage. Up to this day, his name is connected with the Großes Lexikon der Philatelie which was published in 1923 during a period of great economic adversity.

Bungerz wrote for almost all of the important philatelic journals of his time, for some time he was an editor (e.g. of Sammler-Woche, 1919-20). Together with his friend Carl Beck he founded the Bücherwurm, a philatelic journal for literature, but he also tried his hand at journals for the young. In 1925 he took over the editorship of the Schwaneberger Album, but a short time later he encountered serious economic hardship because of failing health and family problems. Finally, he ended up destitute, living in Ediger on the Mosel. His last work as an editor was the small Viennese journal Wir Briefmarkensammler, published by Norbert Fischer. Fischer and Heßhaimer gave a moving eulogy to Bungerz who died in Vienna on the 1st November, which was an accusation against those who have no interest in the cause and let writers starve.

Bungerz's legacy was an extensive special library of his own writings and also his artistic essays which he had submitted to stamp design competitions between 1920 and 1924. With the exception of 6 vignettes for the Bavarian Traders' Association none were realized. We can say for him as well as for Heßhaimer: that the artist-philatelist is not recognized in his own country.

His library was purchased together with the one of his friend Carl Beck, who had died in Berlin on the 9th July 1929 by Prof. Dr. Erich Stenger on commission from the IPOSTA-Committee with the proceedings from IPOSTA 1930 and donated to the Preußische Staatsbibliothek. There it was still in storage with that of Dr. Rommel in 1936 and even repeated queries did not prod the institution into processing the gift. This shows, better than any other example, what will happen with special collections in a library which has no interest in such donations. Not uncommonly, they are lost forever. It would be interesting to know what happened to these libraries and whether Bungerz's successors might be able to use them.

Karl Beck (1879-1929)

[Called Carl Beck throughout the remainder of this article.]

Whenever Bungerz is mentioned, Carl Beck must mentioned, too. He was born in Heppenheim on the 27th December 1879, trained as a merchant and later was a civil servant in the Imperial Office of Statistics.

He was active in the Office for Literature of the then Bund Deutscher und Österreichischer Philatelisten-Vereine, his specialty was philatelic literature. In 1921, he founded the journal Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm, which was continued after his death in Berlin on the 9th July 1929, by J. A. Bosshardt and Fritz Seiffert. He authored many works, including works dealing with the organization of philatelic libraries. As mentioned before under Bungerz, his library went to the Preußische Staatsbibliothek in 1930.

Other Well-Known Private Collectors of Literature

Of course there are many other names of well-known German philatelists recorded in the annals of the history of philately who owned large specialized libraries. First, we must mention Dr. Franz Kalckhoff (1860-1955) whose library was acquired by the Berliner Philatelisten-Klub after World War 2. Let us not forget Richard Kleeberg (1874-1932) whose valuable library went to the club in Chemnitz, or Ludwig (Lajos) Richter (1842-1917) from Budapest (he was examiner for the Bund Deutscher und Österreichischer Philatelisten-Vereine for Hungary) whose library also was quite renowned. Last but not least, the publisher and author Hugo Krötzsch (1858-1937) must be mentioned whose library was one of the most valuable of the period. In 1928, it was acquired by Carl Gustav Vogel and then donated, together with the library catalogue, prepared by Krötzsch to the Deutsches Bibliothek in Leipzig, or rather to the Gesellschaft der Freunde der Deutschen Bücherei.

Who knows all these names? In many instances, they are empty syllables. We still remember names like Emil W. Mewes or Joachim Frey, some of us remember Friedrich Heinrich Zinkgraf. They all become names in history, the history of those men who established a niche for themselves, or because of the literature they collected.

2. Well-Known Club Libraries

The really well-known club libraries are normally connected with the names of established, traditional clubs whose self-image also includes the care for literature and the use thereof.

Thus, it is no accident that there are only a few centres for philatelic literature where work of more than 100 years left their traces, and there are even fewer clubs today where we encounter truly notable libraries.

Berliner Philatelisten-Klub von 1888

From its very beginning, this elite German club saw the care of literature as one of its primary aims. Dr. Kalckhoff, who'd been the first librarian in 1888 took care of that and many notable philatelist followed him. Kalckhoff himself again served from 1935 to 1937 to maintain the library which had expanded substantially, and then expanded again in 1941 with the addition of the holdings of Carl Lindenberg. Two years later, after the death of club member Emil Julius Wilhelm Pauli on the 31st January 1943 his large library was added. However, less than a year later the precious library burned during an air raid on Berlin. One of the most valuable and extensive libraries on the continent had ceased to exist!

After the Second World War, the Berliners started up again, modestly, but it was only when they took over the large library of Dr. Franz Kalckhoff, which had survived the war, that more extensive work became possible. In 1971, for personnel and space reasons, the collection was turned over to the Landespostdirektion in Berlin. Today, it is located in the Museum für Post und Kommunikation Berlin at Mauerstrasse. Together with the surviving parts of older holdings, it's accessible in the public reading room.

Verein für Briefmarkenkunde Frankfurt am Main von 1878

Space concerns, as well as the search for willing librarians, are also known to this Club. Its history can tell a tale of such concerns. A modest collection of literature was begun in 1878, by 1885 a second storage cabinet had become necessary and after 1890 there were continuous listings of new acquisitions in the club's Vertrauliche Vereinsmittheilungen [Confidential Newsletter for Club Members]. In 1905, there was a first catalogue which listed 200 titles on 36 pages.

The library continued to grow, was loaned in 1935 to the Stadtbibliothek Frankfurt. In 1949, 1,200 items were returned, not all of them in the best of shape. The following history of moves due to space needs, or for reasons of rental charges can only be excerpted: in 1977 there was a move to a house in Frankfurt-Sachsenhausen which was held for a few years. In 1992, there was a space with 80m² near the subway station in Rödelheim where the library could be re-opened in 1994. In 1998, the library held about 15,000 titles.

In 1988, Part I of the library catalogue was published under the title Deutschsprachige Periodika, a new version followed 10 years later, then on 153 pages and also containing as Part II: Ausländische Periodika.

Off-site use is normally permitted only for Club members, but the holdings can be consulted in a reading room. Just think: 15,000 titles and 80 m² including a reading room – the good people of Frankfurt must be rather inventive to be able to house this much valuable material in such a small space.

In connection with the building and re-building of the Frankfurt library, we must mention

Joachim Frey (1927-1984) who for many years took care of the library and later was President and then Honorary President of the ArGe Frankfurter BSV and who always cared for the library in his heart.

Also Ulrich Häger (1910-1980) must be mentioned. He was not only the author and compiler of the Großes Lexikon der Philatelie as a follower of Alexander Bungerz, but he also worked as librarian in this library for many years.

It is no accident that the really great authors in the history of philately were always bibliophiles and caretakers of literature.

3. Libraries of the Societies

It's anyone's guess why the major German Societies never got around to having a large and well taken care of library, comparable with that of the American Philatelic Society. One may want to think of the tortuous course of history which furthered a shift in the central societies, but also caused a flourishing of large clubs and, as shall be shown, the growth of state- or town-run libraries.

The author questions whether a look at history alone suffices to describe the status quo, because also in the U.S. there were important club libraries – e.g. in New York and in Chicago, to name but two, there is also a National foundation, the Smithsonian Institute which furthers philately and philatelic literature, and yet the American Philatelic Society operates its own library with a high level of finance and personnel (5 librarians alone!) which has been built with great pride since 1968.

The fact remains, Germany has nothing comparable. There was a chance, because the original library of the Bund Deutscher und Österreichischer Philatelisten-Verbände had been orphaned when a successor organization was founded in 1926, the Bund der Philatelisten-Vereine im In- und Ausland. We'll show that the extensive holdings went in another direction.

Also the newly founded (1946, 1949 respectively) Bund Deutscher Philatelisten e.V. which considers itself the legal successor to the previously mentioned associations, but also of the Reichsbund Deutscher Philatelisten and its successor, the Nazi organization, had to re-start at zero. It took years before Hans Paikert, the then Vice-President of BDPh also recommended the inclusion of a library when looking at a new "House of Philately". There, on 420m², the editorial office of Philatelie and Philatelie und Postgeschichte, staffed with 2 full-time workers is housed, together with the Bundesstelle Forschung, including the archive and one full-time worker, the publishing arm of the BDPh with a number of full-time employees and all necessary archive- and storage facilities. As is known – some say, because of the lack of courage and vision, others say because of proper consideration – a smaller solution was implemented. A substantial library was never built!

However, the Stiftung zur Philatelie und Postgeschichte, founded on the 3rd June 1966, declared the furthering and acquisition of literature as a major target. In this, the foundation followed the idea of the first President of BDPh, Consul Hermann Deninger who helped to set up the foundation, but then died a year later. Deninger was the author of excellent handbooks on Bavarian cancellations. He owned a small but exquisite library which, after his death in 1967, was purchased by the foundation. It contained 440 titles with a focus on the postal history of the 18th and 19th centuries but less on philatelic themes; a catalogue was published a few years ago.

This special library is housed in the new Haus der Philatelie und Postgeschichte, occupied in 1998. There is also a small, non-circulating library with a series of journals and special monographs together with the latest catalogues, etc. The total holdings probably don't exceed the 1,000 mark. Harsher critics maintain, it is neither fish nor flesh, the usefulness of the library is limited by the space available for it.

To the best of my knowledge, it was a specific goal of the BDPH leadership not to enter direct competition with existing large libraries. On the other hand, the financial means available would hardly have supported such a venture. Instead, the expansion of existing libraries is supported.

Thus, from the point of view of a well taken care of and supported non-circulating library, the holdings in Bonn are rather scant. It may also be that in Germany, unlike England or the USA, there is no tradition of care and donations. With a hopeful glance to the Consilium Philatelicum of the BDPH we may wish that the members begin such a tradition in their circles of friends and acquaintances, even if the BDPH or the Foundation will raise the question of archival and/or library space.

4. Libraries of Other Institutions

The problems of earlier and current associations at the same time are the strengths of specialized institutions which in Germany for decades have supported the areas of the care of and dissemination of literature. One institution must be mentioned here in first place: the Philatelistische Bibliothek München is among the leading and best philatelic institutions of the world. How far the library in the Berlin Museum für Post und Kommunikation will be able to compete with it one day remains to be seen, if at all. However, in view of the rapidly growing loss of culture and tradition among the sponsors of the museum's foundation we rather expect that the area of the philatelic library will remain a stepchild.

Philatelistische Bibliothek München

It is to the credit of Christoph Otto Müller that philatelic literature found a home, which is unique. Müller was born on the 27th September 1894 in Munich, he later was a Section Head in the Munich Town Administration. The foundation of the library goes back to 1931. It was the period of IPOSTA Berlin, of a philatelic optimism which furthered literature and held the value of literature very high. Müller succeeded in starting a central philatelic library which could hold its own within a few years. The Preußische Staatsarchiv (!) contributed 30 packing crates of material, the former library of the Bund Deutscher und Österreichischer Philatelisten-Verbände, and also the private library of the Munich art dealer Friedrich Heinrich Zinckgraf found their way to Munich. Other notable donations came from the renowned postal historian and Bavaria specialist Colonel Hugo Schröder, (retired). Valuable materials in the form of monographs, books and journals from the early years of philately came from the estate of Berta Larisch, the widow of Anselm Larisch. These notable holding were later augmented by the club libraries of the Münchner Ganssachensammler Verein and another Munich club, TAUMA, and also by the private library of Christian [sic]

Otto Müller, who died on the 7th May 1967.

In 1934, Müller was transferred to the Volksbibliothek Rosental and therefore could combine his profession and his hobby. In 1937, he succeeded in moving the Philatelistische Bibliothek into the Stadtbücherei, in 1939, a first catalogue of holdings was published in 192 pages. During the Second World War, the 5,000 items were transferred to Traunstein and therefore could escape the fate of the BPhK library.

Work continued after the war. The library needed a new home, the space in the City Hall had become too constricted and the library moved to Possartstrasse 15. In this location, Müller for the first time was assigned office help in 1953 and now could tackle the production of the new Literatur Nachrichten of the BDPh. The term Haus der Philatelie dates back to this period as Müller liked to refer to his library by the term.

At this time, around 1960, the library held about 15,000 volumes, of which 30% were monographs, 50% periodicals and the remaining 20% were catalogues, handbooks, auction catalogues, etc. In 1984, the library held about 25,000 monographs, journals, catalogues etc. which were administered by 5 workers under the direction of Otto Gleixner who was Head of the library from 1969 through 1997. In 1989, the holdings were said have topped 33,000 items, including publications in 18 languages and 540 philatelic journals on permanent subscription. Another source shows holdings of 30,000 in 1995 so we can agree with Carlrichard Brühl's opinion that the library is one of the best 10 philatelic libraries in the world.

During the long winter nights of the Second World War, Müller had begun working on an extensive card system and systematization by key word in the air raid shelter. The system had expanded to about 100,000 cards which was continued from 1957 to 1968 by his successor as Head of library, Walter Merkle. The latter compiled a catalogue of the library Deutschland und die Deutschen Gebiete (1966) that was published in a 2nd edition in 1975. However, Merkle was no philatelist which also led to a cutting of ties with the Bund Deutscher Philatelisten.

As mentioned, he was followed in 1969 by the philatelist Otto Gleixner who managed by hard work and dedication to re-establish the earlier relations with BDPh, he was an ideal choice for the task as a juror of literature, author and generally knowledgeable on the matter. After an intermediate location in 1964 at Sparkassenstrasse 5 and after 1976 at Pestalozzistrasse near the Sendlinger Tor, the library found a new home in 1985 in the new cultural centre at the Gasteig. A reading room with 12 stations is almost a luxury which the users have learned to cherish.

DBZ published a new edition of the library catalogue in 1983, followed by a second part in 1990. Since 2003, the holdings in their totality can be viewed and researched on the Internet. Robert Binner, who followed Gleixner in 1997 is also a philatelist.

With the opening to the internet in 2003 it became obvious to what degree the library continues to grow continuously. At that date we read:

The Philatelic Library of the Münchner Stadtbibliothek Am Gasteig is the largest public specialized library for philately and postal history in Europe. The holdings include about 46,000 items in 21 languages, it encompasses international literature on stamps and postal history. With the exception of a small non-circulating section in the reading room, the loose-leaf publications and some parts of the traditional holdings which are either in poor physical shape, or irreplaceably valuable, all items may be borrowed.

We continue to wish that the Town of Munich is able to maintain this precious library, and with it the legacy of many notable philatelists even at a time of shrinking support for cultural matters. The Bund Deutscher Philatelisten which in 1978 still underwrote a position in the off-site circulation department reduced its engagement in 1995 to a lump sum which goes towards the position. Many small publishers, authors and large publishing houses support the library directly with donations of books; the literary output of the roughly 150 specialized working- and research committees is supported by the Stiftung zur Förderung der Philatelie und Postgeschichte to the point of being made available to users free of charges. For those who know what the real costs in the personnel sector are today, what rents and general support costs, has an idea what problems large specialized libraries of this kind face today.

Philatelistische Bibliothek Hamburg

The Hamburg library does not have an extensive tradition, and couldn't build on comparably large donation of materials. Its beginnings date back to a book room at the Hamburg-Altona Verein für Briefmarkenkunde e.V. Shortly thereafter, other Hamburg clubs and groups made their libraries available as loans. On the 18th January 1971 the club Philatelistische Bibliothek Hamburg e.V. was founded. Its members are dedicated to the maintenance, the care and also to the expansion of the library.

In 1976, the library moved to Hohenfelder Strasse 10, in 1999 it found more generous quarters in Schlossstrasse 12. The names of many notable philatelists, men and women, are connected with this library, e.g. that of Renate Brandt who was in charge of the club from 1971 to 1974, of Harry von Hofmann who held the position twice, from 1974 to 1980 and from 1984 to 1987, with the interregnum of Hilde Ramm (1980-1984) and followed by Dieter Hüweler (1887-1990). We shall not forget Jutta Fullrich who was in charge of the library from 1990 to 2001, shortly before her untimely death of cancer. She found an appropriate successor in Sabine Schwanke, a qualified librarian who, as the wife of the Hamburg auctioneer, can also take care of her predilections for philatelic literature.

The fact that any library always has workers coming and going, whether they are honorary or paid, is hardly surprised. An entry in the new internet page of the library confirms this when we read:

After 12 years in charge of the library Stefanie Töppe is departing from philately and turns to new responsibilities in the Staats- und Universitätsbibliothek. As her successor, beginning July 1, 2003, Martina Goldmann again as a qualified librarian is in charge of the library. Many readers know her, because Ms. Goldmann worked as a student aide in the library for 4 years. At the end of her studies she put the Philatelistische Bibliothek Hamburg at the centre of her diploma dissertation.

Thus the Hamburg institution remains a good example of what primarily honorary workers, enthusiasm and readiness to serve others may achieve. The Bund Deutscher Philatelisten actively supports this engagement as well as the Stiftung zur Förderung der Philatelie und Postgeschichte. The award the Sieger-Prize was the reward for the achievement of a few from which many could profit.

The holdings of the library are available on the internet. An extensive library catalogue was published in 2003 that lists about 25,000 titles. Thus it is possible to select desired titles and to have them sent by mail.

5. The Future is Open

Many things, and numerous people must remain unnamed here, e.g., the Philatelistische Bibliothek in the Museum für Post und Kommunikation in Berlin, the former Reichspostmuseum at the Mauerstrasse in Berlin where many places for readers, friendly personnel and extensive holdings invite users.

Also, if you happen to live in Leipzig and work on philatelic questions, there are the treasures of the Deutschen Bücherei Leipzig. There are large libraries in all directions of the globe, yet their future in many cases remains uncertain. Carlrichard Brühl bemoans, with a certain justification, the lack of attention of university libraries vis-à-vis postal history and philately. It may be an accident if any specialized literature shows up at these institutions. They make the purchase lists only if they're published by scholarly houses.

At the same time, these deficiencies offer a chance to maintain cultural inheritance with one's own means, for we have seen where donations to state-run institutions may lead, i.e. the cited example of the Preußische Staatsbibliothek. In this context we should also mention the fate of the Hallensia Bibliothek which had been donated in the 1870s to the Universitätsbibliothek Halle. The latter passed it on to the East Berlin State Library, and it ended up in the former Reichspostmuseum at Mauerstrasse, where it may still be.

We need a revival of the interest in literature on the part of philatelists, and it seems immaterial, at least from a principle point of view, in what medium a publication takes place. Generally, we should heed the words of Dr. Franz Kalckhoff which the Hamburg Library placed at the head of its short historical overview:

It is the duty of every collector not to discard any literature, especially older items, which comes into his hands, but to pass it on to a place where it can be housed and taken care of.

Wolfgang Maassen

List of Literature Used

(Not included in the body of the text)

Philatelic Literature Review, 3rd Quarter 2003.

Carlrichard Brühl: Geschichte der Philatelie., Volume II, Chapter 22, p.1013ff.: Wer sucht, der findet: Philatelistische Bibliotheken.

Die Philatelistische Bibliothek München, Sammlerdienst, 1960, Issue 23, p.1070.

Otto Gleixner: Entstehung und Entwicklung der Philatelistischen Bibliothek München., München, 1977.

Hamburger Philatelistische Bücherei: www.philatelistische-bibliothek.de Wolfgang Maassen: Von der Idee zur Wirklichkeit. Das Haus der Philatelie und Postgeschichte in Bonn., Stiftung zur Förderung der Philatelie und Postgeschichte, Bonn, Germany, 1998.

Wolfgang Maassen: Wer ist Wer in der Philatelie., Schwalmthal, 1999.

H. (Hamann) Mann: Eine Adresse, um die uns die Welt beneidet: 8000 München 80, Rosenheimer Strasse 5. Briefmarken Spiegel, 1989, Issue 3, pp.25-27.

Müncher Philatelistische Bibliothek: www.muenchner-stadtbibliothek.de

Guido Schweiß-Gerwin: Zu Besuch bei der Philatelistischen Bibliothek in Frankfurt 'Hier wird jede Wissenslücke gefüllt', DBZ 1989, Issue 11, pp.26-28.

Illustrations

All illustrations are from Bildarchiv Wolfgang Maassen.

Notes

- i. Quoted from Carlrichard Brühl: Geschichte der Philatelie., Olms Verlag, 1986, pp.1013-1014.
- ii. cf. Das Postwertzeichen, 1935, Issue 4, p.55.
- iii. L2-36/ Nachrichtenblatt für die Vereinsführer im Reichsbund der Philatelisten (NaB) 6-36.
- iv. Philatelic Literature Review, 2003, Volume 52, Issue 3, pp.207 & 212-213.

END

Der Philatelistische Litteratur-Sammler
October 1909, Volume 3, Issue 3. (Whole number 10)

Translation Digest

Converted from the terrible handwriting of Dr. Otto Rommel by Inge Riese of Hamburg
Translation produced by Louise White for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

DER PHILATELISTISCHE LITTERATUR-SAMMLER

October 1909, Volume 3, Issue 3. (Whole number 10)

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of the article titles and general headings for a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical and includes full translations of all articles of interest to me.

p.1

P.P.

The mailing of these pages as before is without charge and postage free. Publication is irregular and as required. Numbers 1, 2, 6 are out of print. Numbers 2-5 and 7 each cost one mark. Numbers 8 and 9 are also available. With this number, I enclose an index of available complete volumes and brochures and catalogues with the lowest net prices. Shipping is to be paid by the recipient. In the case of all sales and exchanges, I ask that you inquire in advance using a reply-paid postcard which includes return postage.

I offer energetic representation of all philatelic newspapers in the usual circumstances. I constantly buy philatelic newspapers according to my want list in Number 8 of this newspaper or exchange them according to my list of duplicates in Number 9. It is requested that you supply return postage for inquiries. I am looking for correspondents in all countries for the purpose of exchange of information regarding matters related to philatelic literature.

I accept announcements regarding philatelic literature at 10 pfennig for one line.

I am looking for the following philatelic newspaper numbers and would buy for the indicated prices:

Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung 1872 - 73 III 25. 28 to 75 and so on ...

Dr. Rommel

p.4

Sale of a philatelic library

Because of plans to move, I am selling the above newspapers, which represent in total a considerable library for the low but firm price of 600 Marks postage paid Leipzig. There are almost 880 issues, which sold as single copies, would be about 1,400 Marks. Please provide for return postage with inquiries. On orders of at least 100 Marks, I give a 20% discount.

END

Der Philatelistische Litteratur-Sammler
June 1909, Volume 3, Issue 1. (Whole number 8)

Translation Digest

Converted from the terrible handwriting of Dr. Rommel by Inge Riese of Hamburg
Translation produced by Mark Anderson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

DER PHILATELISTISCHE LITTERATUR-SAMMLER

June 1909, Volume 3, Issue 1. (Whole number 8)

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of the article titles and general headings for a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical and includes full translations of all articles of interest to me.

p.1

This paper appears occasionally according to need. It is sent to interested parties free of charge. Addresses of philatelic literature collectors are solicited. Wants lists and lists of duplicates sought. Issues 1 & 6 of my journal are out of print. Issues 2 to 5 and 7 cost DM 1 each.

Morocco its postal service and postage stamps., Dr. Rommel, Leipzig, Brochure of 87 pages, 1907. Price: DM 1.20 + postage.

A single purchase of 5 copies gets you 6 copies delivered.

A Supplement is available, price 30 pf plus postage.

Sale of a philatelic library

Due to imminent relocation and possible change of domicile, I am selling a library of about 770 complete volumes of great rarities (See Issues 6 and 7 of this Journal) for only DM 600, postage paid from Leipzig. Include return postage with inquiries.

For the same reason I have decided to sell complete years' issues of Philatelist, Post, Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, Illustriertes Briefmarken-Offertenblatt, Illustrierter Briefmarken-Zeitung, Mitteldeutsche Philatelisten-Zeitung, Generalanzeiger für die Philatelie, Internationales Briefmarken-Offertenblatt, etc., for 30 pf and postage each.

Dr. Rommel, Inselstr. 9, Leipzig.

Private postage stamps of Morocco, China, Scandinavia and German city postal services are being bought, sold and exchanged.

Exchange, Purchase, Sale of philatelic journals solicited. In exchanges, postage is to be paid by each sender. In purchases, postage is always paid by the buyer. Wants lists and lists of duplicates sought.

Dr. Rommel, Inselstr. 9, Leipzig.

Correspondents sought in all countries for sharing of information on philatelic literature developments. Literature collectors and society librarians invited.

Nota Bene

A. Jacques Pares, formerly of Paris, now of Toulon, 14 Place d'Armes, has paid up but for a small remainder.

The honourable Reverend R. R. Thiele in Wauwatosa, Wis. and Hermann Burkhardt, Zurich III, on the other hand, despite all private and public efforts, have not yet met their responsibilities.

Dr. Rommel, Leipzig, Inselstr. 9.

I ask editors and publishers of philatelic journals in their own interest to regularly submit their papers to me or to at least inform me of new issues, changes of title, mergers, etc.

p.2

Désiré = Mancoliste = Wanted

I am seeking the following newspapers for purchase or to exchange for other newspapers:
Börsenblatt für den Briefmarkenhandel, 1864 2/.2 - 12. and so on ...

p.3

His wants list: Germany

p.4

His wants list: Germany, Switzerland, Belgium, France

p.5

His wants list: France French-speaking Switzerland, Luxemburg

p.6

His wants list: Turkey, Greece, Egypt, Libya, Morocco

p.7

His wants list: Finland, Sweden, Denmark, Bulgaria, Austria, Hungary, Russia, Netherlands, Italy

p.8

His wants list: Spain, Argentina, Chile

p.9

His wants list: San Domingo, Uruguay, Dutch Indies, Peru, Cuba, Puerto Rico, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Philippines, Brazil

p.10

His wants list: Portugal, Romania, Great Britain

p.11

His wants list: British North America, United States of America

p.12

His wants list: New South Wales, South Australia, New Zealand, Sandwich-Islands, Victoria, India, Hong Kong, South African Republic, Japan, Malta, British Guinea, Natal.

END

Aleksander Snieszko
Polish philatelic bookplates
[Polnische philatelistische exlibris]
Sammler Express, 1st February 1957, Volume 11, Issue 3, p.43

Translation produced by Louise White for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2005

POLISH PHILATELIC BOOKPLATES

Bookplates developed in Poland in the middle of the 18th century, which certainly can be attributed to the condition of libraries at that time. The most beautiful bookplates, however, were made in the 19th and 20th centuries. Produced in various ways and with various techniques (woodcut, copper engraving, steel engraving, etc.) from the simplest printed type to artistic designs, sometimes small works of art.

Of the great number of Polish graphic artists and painters, who created artistic bookplates, the following are especially worthy of mention:- Bukowski, Ostoja-Chrostowski, Debicki, Husarski, Jakubowski, Kielesinski, Miekicki, Siedlecki, Skoczylas, Tom, Tlomakowski, Uziemblo and Sopocko.

Especially interesting are those bookplates, which display a connection between two collecting areas. I am thinking of philatelic bookplates. There are some such bookplates, which belong almost exclusively to the best known collectors, researchers and experts.

Unfortunately, none of the philatelic associations created its own bookplate. The first Polish philatelic bookplate was made in 1924 and belonged to W. Rachmanow. Its creation was inspired by Z. Klemensiewicz, the greatest researcher and expert on book plates and was created from his design.

The Bookplate of St. Mikstein

A woodcut in two colours, the picture has the form of a postage stamp, dark blue on a gray ground. In the upper frame, Ex libris is written and below, St. Mikstein. In the middle area is an owl sitting on a book. Behind it one sees the rising sun. Perpendicular decorative strips with stylized plants support the Polish eagle stamp of 1932-33. This bookplate was designed and cut by Prof. St. Jakubowski in Krakow in 1935. A variant has the same drawing, but a date stamp was added: Krakow 13. XI. 35. Professor St. Mikstein, the most famous Polish philatelist, researcher and expertiser, was the author of more than 100 specialized articles on Polish philately.

The Bookplate of Wl. Polński

This is a zincograph in two colours. The main motive is an old Post building and a stage coach. A post horn, a few envelopes and the monogram W are below. Ex-libris is written at the top and W. Polanski at the bottom. The design is by the well known graphic artist J. Tom, who created this in Warsaw in 1926. Włodzimierz Polński was a famous Polish collector, an untiring researcher of Polish postmarks and classic stamps and the author of a remarkable monograph.

The Bookplate of W. Rachmanow

Produced by a zincographic process in 1916, shows a 10 Gr. postage stamp of the Warsaw City Post, which did not come into use. Under the stamp is a five line inscription, Philatelic Library of Włodzimierz Rachmanow Nr. ... encircled by ivy leaves. W. Rachmanow was President of the Polish Philatelic Society in Warsaw for many years, publisher of the periodical Nowy Filatelista and author of many articles in Polish and international philatelic publications. He possessed a large philatelic library, which was lost during the Warsaw Uprising. Before the beginning of the war, he gave more than 600 volumes from his library to the Postal Museum.

Bookplate of J. Bohdanowicz

This is an etching in one colour showing a postal coach drawn by two horses. One postilion blows his post horn, the other rides a horse. On both sides of the street are tall poplars. The inscription is two lines, above Exlibris and below Juliana Bohdanowicza. Designed and produced by the well known graphic artist, Prof. K. Sopocko in 1934.

Bookplate I of A. Sniezko

This is a simple zincographic drawing. A postilion sits on a stylized stage coach with two horses and blows his post horn. A birch tree and a cross are on the street. below in two lines the first name and last name of the owner, between these a post horn with a king's crown and the letter W, symbolizing a pre-philatelic Warsaw postal mark. Around the picture is a double frame in the form of stamp perforations. The design was by Z. Wisniewski, Assistant in the School of Art in Wrocław (1948).

Bookplate II of A. Sniezko

A postilion with a top hat, whip and post horn. A frame of small rectangles. A. Sniezko is a philatelic and postal historian, author of many works, among them Polish philatelic Literature 1891-1951. Director of the Postal Museum in Wrocław.

Bookplate of R. Szuszkiewicz

A woodcut, which portrays the hobbies of its owner symbolically: a library and an aquarium with fish. In the foreground an open stamp album and two covers. Above Exlibris, below Dr. Romana Szuszkiewicza. The woodcut was made by the director of the Lyceum of Graphic Arts in Plock, J. Szuszkiewicz. Dr. R. Szuszkiewicz, a dentist, devoted time to the rising philatelic generation.

Bookplate of the Postal Museum in Wrocław

The drawing is in the unusual form of a lacquer seal. The centre piece portrays a postilion on horseback blowing his post horn. In the background a stage coach is seen. The inscription above the rider is Ex libris and below Wrocław, In a circle around the picture is Muzeum Poczty i Telekomunikacji.

The bookplates of the Polish stamp and specialist literature collectors, though they are modest and not prominent, have a meaning for the history of Polish Philately in their artistic beauty.

Aleksander Sniezko

Publisher's note: We have been pleased to publish this contribution of our friend Aleksander Sniezko, who wrote it in his own language, to be sure. We present it in translation, hoping to inspire German bookplate collectors to make a contribution as well.

END

H. A. Gerhard-Tag
Bookplate
[Exlibris]
Sammler-Express, 1951, Volume 5, Issue 16, p.251

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2005

BOOKPLATE

Book lovers own one - often more than one - bookplate, which serves as a sign of ownership, when stuck in books.

The Latin word ex-libris means from books; such expressions as book-mark, book coat of arms and book owner's mark are more understandable.

In many libraries one finds donor-bookplates or memorial marks, which show the origin of large gifts and the name of the donor. Its rarer to find Supralibris which are book cover embossings found on old, expensive books. These Supra- or exterior libris show mostly beautiful seals which can't be removed from the books.

The oldest library mark or book coat of arms can be traced back about 400 years to the end of the 15th century. It is known that our old masters, Albrecht Dürer, Lucas Cranach the Elder, Ludwig Richter and many others produced beautiful bookplates. Well known artists of the last few decades have occupied themselves with bookplates, which has stimulated young people to follow in their footsteps.

Among art lovers, collectors desire and eagerly trade valuable artistic bookplates. Many plates have come into being, thanks to passionate collectors, who want to use them for trading. No plates can exist which can't be pasted in a book, this provides the primary reason for existence of the bookplate. Of course not every bookplate is suitable for every book, but for every book a suitable bookplate must exist. Even for single copies individual plates exist.

Happily the word Gebrauchsexlibris "Use ex-libris", coined by Professor Ehmke, through its simplicity, corresponds to the concept as used in books. Using limited amounts of adhesive, the "Use ex-libris" easily signifies marks of ownership. The Luxusexlibris "Luxury ex-libris", in contrast, are really artistic plates of a format, having a more representative character.

Collecting original art always provides the incentive to own your own bookplates; only then, self-produced prints provide the trading material. Some bookplate collectors are also philatelists and there is the opportunity to also collect popular graphical topics such as New Years cards, calling cards, family announcements.

Today trading occurs over all country borders, providing foreign connections, which contribute to friendly relationships with other people.

The honest collector will provide happiness to others. The one who behaves in this manner will not wait long to respond to a trade partner and will protect all shipments from damage by using strong corrugated board and will frank using stamps providing happiness to the philatelic collector. On the back of the plate he will provide the name of the artist, the technique used and year of origin.

Illustrations

1. Two bookplates of Ludwig Färber, on the left a linocut and the other engraved on copper (1949). The representative monogram LF is the core design and includes a practical copy and one for art. By occupation a librarian, he collects and exchanges all types. The bookplates shown are original works of the commercial artist Gerhard-Tag, Leipzig N 22.
2. Bookplate for the school leader Martin Trappe, linocut (1947)

END

Wolfgang Maassen
Chronicle of German Philately: 2002
[Chronik der Deutschen Philatelie: 2002]
Phil*Creativ Verlag, Schwalmtal, Germany, 2003

Translation of the Preface only pp.3-6

Translation produced by Thomas Huber for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

CHRONICLE OF GERMAN PHILATELY: 2002

PREFACE

This book is the first of a series, which intends to preserve and make available and comprehensible meaningful items from the history of German philately. In contrast to other works published to-date which normally dealt only with individual topics, periods and other subjects, the current Chronik series intends to pull together news items, thereby presenting material for research to the interested philatelist.

Much has been forgotten up to today, other things are hardly accessible any more; a cloak of silence still covers others. In this respect, the Chronik volumes can be seen as a counter to the short life of news items and an attempt to prevent intentional and unintentional forgetting in favour of an extended life for the truly important matters.

For the author of this series, which is planned to be an extensive one, it is the fulfilment of a personal dream, i.e. to understand more, getting to know new things and, at any rate, understand unknown and incomprehensible facets. For this reason, the news part of this series will be in a reporting mode, rather than interpretative, as a report which intends to point at the crucial, but not a commentary or evaluation. Facts speak for themselves and frequently do not require a commentary.

For this reason, no limit on the coverage of the history of philately was set, e.g. the history of an Association, or confined to the history of the postal service, or the history of a selected period. Selected coverage of this kind would too easily have generated a limitation that could be misunderstood, as if the reality of a part could be seen as totally separate from its context. The series of Chronicles will cover the history of philately more completely, if the author's plans can be realized. This preposterous-sounding claim will be verified with later volumes dealing with the early history of philately, the age of pioneers and new-found horizons, but also with editions, which describe the changing history to today. Later, the chronological volumes will be supplemented by thematic ones in which special topics will be treated systematically as a historical overview.

Until the end of 2005, additional Chronicle volumes are planned which deal with the history of philately in the period 1933 through 1945 and in 2006, the first "topical volumes" will appear. It makes sense to begin with the period 1933 to 1945 (rather than with 1840), because the witnesses of the Third Reich are vanishing and there is only rarely a chance to learn first hand and directly what is not accurately reflected in the journals and source material of the period.

For this reason, in future, at the beginning of a year we plan a look-back to the year past which will be followed in the course of the year by individual volumes which complete the look-backs into earlier years and decades.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE CHRONICLE VOLUMES

The volumes dedicated to specific periods are all similarly structured, comparable to this first one. Following an introduction, there is a comprehensive article, which weighs the main points of the period with a systematic overview. This is followed by a section divided into months with shorter items, which point to meaningful events. Wherever appropriate, excursions, expansions, and also “portraits” of important persons or public events are inserted. It will all be supplemented by an extensive index.

The comparatively limited interest that even philatelists have for the history of philately does not provide any guidelines at the beginning of the series, as to how and in what format it can be continued. Today, there are several possibilities for publication, e.g. also on CD ROM and/or on the internet, which possibilities may be realized sooner or later. Particularly if an extensive series is present, its possibilities and results can be enhanced by index-searches of all of the existing content. However, the format of any future presentation is still wide open.

Primarily, all volumes of the series are based on the evaluation of the philatelic press, i.e. the specialized journals of a given period. Monographs, as far as they exist will be taken into consideration as well as archival material, protocols, newsletters, letters and reports as they are accessible to the author. Faced with the monumental extent, the project is bound to remain a fragment in many respects and after the publication of individual volumes, many new facts will probably emerge and be brought to the attention of the author, of which, even though he has an extensive pictorial and text archive, he had no knowledge whatsoever, or even couldn't have such knowledge.

Just because of the richness of possible content, limitations must be placed on the structure of such an enterprise and they are of the greatest importance. Thus, relevant contents includes the history of Associations, and of Societies of collectors, experts and traders, but also biographies of notable individual collectors of the period. The history of philatelic literature, but also trendsetting stamp issues, the development of automation and postal history will be evaluated. All things which can be read more completely and more usefully are not meaningful for a history of philately with the exception of issues which themselves write history.

If the stress throughout is on German history, I'm sure that's understandable, because the author seems himself not in a position, because of lack of knowledge and materials, to write a worldwide history. No doubt, in continuation of the concept presented here it would be monumental and probably beyond the lifetime of an individual. The history of German philately in many places is linked to the other sides of the Borders, everywhere where the general cultural and production links became trans-national. In all periods up to the Third Reich there are countless links and references, especially in the German–Austrian area. Therefore, these books will not only contain German facts, but also facts, which have a connection to Germany - the way it was in the first edition of Wer ist Wer in der Philatelie? [Who's Who in Philately?] where foreign philatelists, who in one or the other way had a connection with German philately, were also included.

ALL IS IN FLUX

All knowledge is transitional – this is not only true for modern Science, but is true even more so in the social sciences and in history. The storehouses of knowledge that are accessible are limited, as are the possibilities of an individual. Health and free time are material conditions for creative work, which, looking ahead to the future cannot be guaranteed.

Such a project as this series of Chronicles would doubtlessly benefit from the collaboration of many experienced and able philatelists. Any donation of knowledge is useful, as would be direct collaboration with certain essays. Even before this first volume was published, the author acknowledges gratefully the generous support of many colleagues.

Permit me to mention especially Dr. Heinz Jaeger and his on-going support and also for the way in which he, as a trained physician, could psychologically massage away vicissitudes which can sometime ruins one's enjoyment and who contributed with his immense material holdings much additional material. Thanks from a different angle go to the specialized bookseller Burkhard Schneider. The latter offered the author a chance to set up a very extensive archive of specialized journals, which could be supplemented by numerous items from the Roland-, Taunus-, and Emil W. Mewes Libraries. Also, again I want to mention the Philatelic Libraries in Berlin and Munich, because they frequently helped the author, and undoubtedly will to so again in future years.

All is in flux, nothing is permanent – this will hold true for this work. For this reason, the author in the future will be looking for all material which can be relevant to his efforts, text sources and materials, autographs, letters (particularly with interesting contents), posters, important post cards, journals not represented in his collection, etc. Any material offered will be welcome.

Thus we hope that this series will be given a friendly welcome by all interested parties. Maybe it will be kept in mind that nobody is perfect but then, a half-full glass is better than a half-empty one. We are only at the beginning.

Wolfgang Maassen

January 2003

END

To the memory of Michel Fingesten
[Zur Erinnerung an Michel Fingesten]
Sammler-Express, 1959, Volume 13, Issue 11, p.224

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2005

TO THE MEMORY OF MICHEL FINGESTEN

Painter and etcher Michel Fingesten was born on the 18th April 1884 in Buczkowitz. He worked from 1920 to 1925 in Berlin then relocated to Milan (Italy).

Fingesten created his ludicrous and often obscure bookplates for a limited circle of collectors. These items are regarded as rarities even today, especially since they were produced in small quantities. The comic bookplate illustrated here Ex libris touristico Gianni Mantero served its owner chiefly for travel and hiking literature. The original etching in the small format of 60 x 80mm was personally signed by the artist. To satisfy collectors, who used them almost exclusively for trading, Fingesten created mainly large format "special edition" bookplates.

The collector, engineer Dr. Gianni Mantero of Como (Italy), was Fingesten's patron. His true humanity toward the Jewish artist also deserves mention. Dr. Mantero also visited him frequently in the Jewish camp, Ferramonti Tarsia, during the fascist war. Fingesten reportedly died of an infection after an inguinal hernia operation in the field hospital in Cerisano (Province of Calabria) on the 8th October 1943. Dr. Mantero honoured his protégé even in death by erecting a gravestone in his memory.

END

Gerhard Tag
Our Bookplate=express
[Unser exlibris=express]
Sammler-Express, 1959, Volume 13, Issue 20, p.404

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2005

OUR BOOKPLATE=EXPRESS

On the 15th October 1959 Insel Verlag in Leipzig celebrated its 60th anniversary. For this occasion there appeared a publication with the title Jahrbuch der Insel. The eminently useful aesthetic books of the Insel Verlag have been counted for decades among the most popular publications on the book market. The collector Dr. Walter Vogel, with whose consent we illustrate his Insel-bookplate, wrote on this subject:

When the small handsome books appeared for the first time in 1912, I was still a student. I bought each issue, they cost at that time 50 pfennig. Since then I have been faithful to Insel Verlag and its bookstore. My collection included about 650 little books, which unfortunately have all been lost.

The illustrated bookplate is a charming woodcut by the French graphic artist Valentin le Campion, who was born on 26th September 1903 in Moscow and died in Paris on the 25th October 1952.

On the occasion of the founding convention of the German Ex-libris Society ten years ago - on the 15th October 1949 - the wood engraver Ernst Grünwald created a commemorative sheet, which can only be reproduced here in reduced size (original measurements about 95 x 170 mm). Since then, there have appeared, among others, the yearbooks Bookplate Art and Commercial Graphics, with richly illustrated contributions on German and foreign artists.

Hopefully Insel Verlag will decide to publish at some time, booklets on this small graphic art: there are for example enough beautiful modern bookplates so that an occasional collection of exemplary graphic pieces would meet with approval among wide circles.

Gerhard Tag
Berlin.

END

Gerhard Tag
Our bookplate=express
[Unser exlibris=express]
Sammler-Express, 1959, Volume 13, Issue 8, p.164

Translation produced by Elke E. Benbow for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2007

OUR BOOKPLATE=EXPRESS

The painter and applied artist professor Hans Orlowski, born on the 1st March 1894 at Insterburg, taught from 1922 to 1945 at the Charlottenburg Arts & Crafts' School, and since April 1945 he is the Head of classes on murals, fresco, sgraffito and painting on glass.

Among the numerous wood carvings by Hans Orlowski there are few bookplates. The piece illustrated here conveys a sense of the personality of the master, which guided the engraver.

During the summer semester of 1951, as a student at the College for Applied Arts in Berlin-Weissensee, I met the mentor of the commercial arts class, Professor Kurt Tillessen. Lovers of books, value the older works by Tillessen, especially book covers (e.g. for the Fischer publishing house). His bookplate, printed by the book printing method, bear a solid applied arts character. Amongst collectors, these "Commercial bookplates" will hardly be circulating as exchange labels, and I owe mine only to my acquaintance with professor Tillessen, who died unexpectedly in 1952.

The last bookplate originated with me. I made it for the wife of a Czech friend, the teacher Zdenka Hradecna. It is my 69th bookplate (op. 127). If you turn the drawing up-side-down, the monogram can always be read correctly. During the recent years I have always designed my bookplates using this principle.

Gerhard Tag

END

Deutsche Gesellschaft für Philatelistisches Schrifttum-
Mitglieder Rundschreiben
February 1943, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Mark Anderson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

DEUTSCHE GESELLSCHAFT FÜR PHILATELISTISCHES SCHRIFTTUM-MITGLEIDER RUNDSCHREIBEN

February 1943, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

German Philatelic Bibliography Society
Member Newsletter
1st February 1943

Page 1

Dear DGPS-Friends.

Due to the present belligerent conditions, we have to temporarily suspend publication of our own literature journal. Thus, these Mitglieder Rundschreiben (Member Newsletters), which I will issue as the need and opportunity arise, will serve as a medium between myself and the members. They will contain Society news as well as brief discussions of our most important interest areas. The accompanying literature order forms will be available to all members and will hopefully serve the members well.

Regular meetings will also be temporarily suspended, since for one thing, only a relatively small portion of our comrades live in Berlin and for another the positive work is more urgent than the holding of meetings that promise little progress toward the fulfilment of our mission. As soon as the reinstatement of meetings is warranted there will be timely invitations in the Newsletters.

I hope that the member Newsletters, of which the present is the first, will serve to awaken and deepen the interest of all comrades in the issues taken up by the DGPS and that they will be a solid bond in hard times between all members. I am ever thankful for suggestions and additions to the development of the member Newsletters and I ask the active collaboration and support of all comrades.

Pages 1-2

The Foundation Meeting of the DGPS, 22nd November 1942.

Since only a portion of our comrades could attend the foundation meeting, I would like to give our more recent members a description of the proceedings of this event.

At my invitation, 27 gentlemen in all were present. After a brief welcoming speech the draft by-laws were read to the meeting and each paragraph was immediately discussed in depth. With several minor changes, the by-laws were adopted and the articles of association were signed by 26 gentlemen as individual members and 4 clubs.

His Excellency Dr. F. Kalckhoff, one of the most worthy of the old-school philatelists and who has graced us with so much exemplary work, was upon my suggestion unanimously elected honorary Chairman. He then opened the first general meeting of the DGPS. Dr. Kalckhoff expressed his gratitude for the honour and his best wishes for development of the Society that had just been founded and for the achievement of its varied tasks. He then read the agenda for the meeting: election of a Chairman, nomination of the 3 Council members to be elected by the general meeting, appointment of the members of the directing staff by the Chairman and establishment of the membership dues and entry fee for the fiscal year 1943, which runs from the day of the founding of the DGPS until 31st December 1943.

On the motion of His Excellency Dr. Kalckhoff, I was unanimously elected President of the DGPS. Messrs. G. Kobold (Berlin), H. v. Rudolphi (Berlin) and Dr. C. Willecke (Berlin) were elected members of the executive council. The initiation fee was set at 15 RM (Reichsmark), individual membership dues at 12 RM, club membership at 12 RM and corporate membership at 50 RM. Next, I announced the members of the directorial staff (see enclosed membership list).

After brief closing remarks the first general meeting of the DGPS was closed.

I would also like to take this opportunity to again thank all participants in the foundation meeting for their participation and the interest they showed by joining, most especially those who managed to attend from outside the region. I also warmly thank those who by joining in quick succession more than tripled the membership by year end. Let us hope that the growth in membership will continue, showing how well the founding of the DGPS serves the wishes and needs of all serious philatelists.

I personally assure you that I will do my utmost to work toward the fulfilment of the goals of the DGPS and will do everything possible to earn a place for the DGPS in philately worthy of its mission and members. I hope that all comrades will make their best efforts to support me in this.

Page 2

By-laws of the DGPS.

The provisions of the by-laws accepted by the first general meeting were prepared in very few copies. Once they are approved by the "Imperial Collectors' Council" and registry office – facilitated by the GDS* – they will be duplicated and sent to all members.

* Translator's note: I could not figure out what GDS stands for.

Members will have the option of deducting postage costs, provided they are sent in immediately, from dues. Please direct claims to the business manager of the DGPS.

Page 2

Initiation fees and membership dues.

For the first fiscal year, if not yet paid, should be paid to the Berlin postal checking account 159 225 of our treasurer Erich Langbein, Tauentzien Strasse 9, Berlin W 50.

Membership cards will be delivered during the month of February.

Pages 2-3

Excerpted from the Handbuch des Briefmarkenkundlichen Fachschrifttums.

Per Section 38 of the Newsletter N^o.17/1942 of the Reichssammlerwarts [Imperial Collectors' Council], work on the Handbuch des Briefmarkenkundlichen Fachschrifttums was to be removed from the Reichsbundestelle [Imperial Federation] section 44 Fachschrifttum [Technical Writing] and placed in its own section of the above-named title and its leader Dr. Max Ulmann of Berlin assigned to it. This separation of such closely allied areas of activity had to be made and was achieved after appropriate discussions among the Imperial Collectors' Council, Dr. Ulmann and myself. Dr. Ulmann joined the DGPS and will play a key role in the resource documentation.

Pages 3-4

Situation of the work of the DGPS.

No great results can be expected in the short time that has elapsed since the founding of our Society. It will still be of interest to our comrades to know which tasks have been undertaken so far and how they have proceeded.

- 1) German Philatelic Central Library (DPZB): The biggest library in private hands (Schütte, Magdeburg) into which I originally wanted to integrate in my own library, have I have placed at the disposal of the DPZB. It will be combined with additional inventories and new acquisitions and subsequently displayed in Berlin. The DPZB is a non-public collection of the entire literature and will be the first step in resource documentation and compilation of the General catalogue of philatelic literature. It is the property of the GDS, that will also provide the means to expand and develop its collection. The county libraries will be available to the collecting public as lending libraries whose expansion and development will be controlled by standardized guidelines. Existing libraries will be included wherever possible as long as they satisfy certain guidelines that I will announce later in my capacity as head of specialized literature.
- 2) Philatelic Literature Catalogue: Part D (German) is already in the works. My own philatelic library serves as the basis, supplemented by any other Berlin libraries that are accessible to me - in particular the current DPZB and the marvellous library of the Berlin Philatelic Club - as well as the county central libraries. As an additional resource I need any available lists of private, club or other public libraries. I ask all comrades to lend me such lists.

- 3) Resource documentation work (bibliography): The master plan for this is being worked on and will be shared with those others who are working on this project in a few weeks. Meanwhile, I have had the necessary file cards produced; they will soon be distributed to collaborators. I still urgently need people to work on this most difficult and extensive project! Volunteers, step forward!
- 4) Each worker will be assigned to work on a specific journal. In order to save unnecessary costs and work, whenever possible, the specific journal will be one that the worker already possesses in its entirety or nearly so. The documents to be researched and the card materials will be furnished to the worker free of charge. After completion of the work on a particular journal, the results will immediately be published (to the extent that this is possible today) as a general index of the journal by the DGPS under the name of the collaborator. All expenses will be reimbursed to the collaborator quarterly. According to the extent of the work, one or several copies of the general index prepared by him will be provided to him free of charge.
- 5) Travelling exhibition: A travelling exhibition for the Philatelic Manual is in preparation, for which a supplementary lecture will be prepared. This travelling exhibition will be shown at all of the largest philatelic events. Meantime, it will be presented to philatelic organizations. Additional exhibitions are planned. These will present the best products of philatelic literature and show not only the literature itself but also the evolution and technical development from manuscript to finished book, catalogue, album or journal issue. This will be presented pictorially and in a way that is understandable and interesting to the general public. This "dead time" is a good opportunity to build this exhibition so that it will be ready to go as soon as peaceful times return.
- 6) Literature distribution: As stated at the beginning of this newsletter, instead of the planned literature exchange service, members temporarily have access to the literature order forms as an appendix to the Member Newsletters. Please make liberal use of them. Please see list #1 for terms of use.

Page 4

DGPS Archives.

As I announced in the foundation meeting, documents and other items important to the history of the DGPS as well as pictures and biographies of all members will be retained in the archives of the society. I ask all comrades to submit to the archive: a recent photograph with your signature and a short CV - date of birth, biographical outline, special philatelic interests and activities (especially any writing activities), distinctions and any thoughts on the DGPS and its writers. For the sake of uniformity - the original texts will be stored in small-format blank albums - I ask you to use standard DIN A5 format, written on one side only. I urge all comrades to participate in this exercise and to promptly submit the requested items to our archivist comrade Bartels.

Pages 4-5

DGPS Writers' Circle.

All comrades actively engaged as writers and who fulfil the necessary requirements will be grouped into a writers' circle within the DGPS. The following guidelines will apply to the writers' circle and will be used for qualifying individuals:

- 1.) Any member of the GLPS can become a member of the writers' circle, provided that:
 - a.) he is already an active author in a philatelic area and presents at least 3 published works. These works will be presented to the DGPS council for their opinion. If the council recognizes the presented works as satisfactory, the member can be accepted into the writers' circle.
 - b.) he wants to work as a philatelic writer and submits at least 3 works to the council for pre-publication review. If the latter finds these works acceptable, the member can be accepted into the writers' circle.

- 2.) Works submitted to the council will receive the following marks:

- a.) Acceptable = 1 point
- b.) Superior = 2 points
- c.) Outstanding = 3 points

In order to be accepted into the writers' circle, at least 5 points must be obtained with the 3 submitted works.

- 3.) Should the first 3 works submitted not achieve the 5 points required, subsequent works may be submitted until 5 points can be earned on any 3 works.
- 4.) All works by circle members will be filed and will be published only upon payment of fees. Those articles designated as Superior or Outstanding may be published only in their entirety.

Further details on the level of fees, structured according to the grading designations for first and subsequent publication, will be set by a committee formed for this purpose, comprising 2 members each from the council, the writers' circle and the publication team, chaired by myself. This committee will also decide on further measures to protect works by the writers' circle.

- 5.) Works by circle members must be credited as such at publication and the rating must be mentioned. The right of first publication must be offered in any case to members of the publication team.
- 6.) If a member of the writers' circle commits plagiarism or other violations of DGPS By-laws or particular provisions of the circle, he can be expelled from the circle and also from the DGPS.

I ask all comrades who are actively writing or intend to do so to request acceptance into the writers' circle. No special dues will be assessed for the writers' circle. Manuscripts should be submitted only upon request.

Page 5

The publication team of the DGPS.

The publication team of the DGPS is made up of the corporate members from the publishing industry, specifically journal and book publishers as well as publishers of albums and catalogues. Further, membership in the team is voluntary.

Publishers that join the publication team will be particularly accommodated and supported by the DGPS – as well as by the Imperial Office of Technical Literature. Notably, they will be offered the first opportunity to publish works produced by members of the writers' circle. More details will be worked out in cooperation with the participating publishing firms and announced in the next Member Newsletter. I ask the interested firms for suggestions and close cooperation.

Pages 6-11

Membership List as of the 25th Jan 1943.

See the original document for the list of members.

Page 12

The following members have decided to pay multiple dues and thereby earned the right to multiple votes, as accorded by the by-laws:

Scharfenberg, Karl	Membership N° E 001	60 RM = 5 votes
Baldus, Hans-Claus	Membership N° E 041	36 RM = 3 votes
Pollak, Theodor	Membership N° E 084	24 RM = 2 votes

I hope other members will decide to do the same and follow this example.

These members have volunteered to actively cooperate and have been assigned specific duties:

Benda, Oskar	E 069	Index to Sammlerwoche and Postmarke
Crodel, Paul Heinrich	E 068	Index to Ganzsache
Geisler, Werner	E 025	Construction of the travelling exhibitions
Gerhard, Fritz	E 034	Index to Savo , Deutschlandsammlerwarte
Hesshaimer, Ludwig	E 064	Articles and lectures on philatelic literature
Klink, Johannes	E 059	Printing works; index to Grüne Sammler-Welt and Philatelistische Literatur
Michaelis, Curt	E 027	Index to Briefmarken-Rundschau , Danzig; Das Poswertzeichen (Leipzig) and Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung (Teplitz)
Rudolphi, Hans v.	E 003	Lecture for travelling exhibition and Das Handbuch der Briefmarkenkunde
Scharfenberg, Karl	E 001	Katalog der Philatelistischen Literatur , Part D (Germany), Index to Der Deutsche Sammler ;

Philatelistische Mitteilungen Hennig and Köhler's Philat. Magazin

Schmidt, Carl	E 019	Index to Mitteilungen der Deutschen Gesellschaft für Staats- und Privatmarken
Seifert, Fritz	E 024	Printing work
Ulmann, Max	E 045	Work on the resource documentation
Zschockelt, Rolf	E 053	Index to Ukraine-Philatelist and Osteuropa-Philatelist

An additional 21 members have expressed willingness to work on other projects. Their commitment and work assignments will follow shortly. I urge all comrades who want to collaborate on the tasks before us to let me know very soon and to inform me of their wishes, but especially of any complete journal series they may have and on which they are prepared to work.

The distribution of file cards and processing guidelines will proceed as soon as possible.

Pages 12-13

The library of our member Dr. Robert Jakobs, Rostock, destroyed by air raids.

The more than 300-volume philatelic library of our comrade Dr. Jakobs of Rostock (Member N° E 030) was completely destroyed by British air raids. I consider it an unquestionable duty of all the comrades to help in the reconstruction of the library. First and foremost, Comrade Jakobs has priority over all other comrades in selection from the purchase and exchange lists. Further, as a sign of our solidarity, I will avail him of some books of my own. Whoever wants to help with this reconstruction should contact me right away. Let everyone realize that the same thing could happen to anyone!

Page 13

Appeal to all serious philatelists in the specialized press.

I direct the attention of all comrades to an appeal under the above headline that appeared in the January edition of Sammler-Woche and Sammler-Schau and will also appear in other media.

I would like to take this occasion to thank these journals for the concern they have shown and their readiness to do their part in helping with our tasks. Of particular note in this regard is the attitude of the gentlemen of Sammler-Woche, who included this appeal without hesitation even though the type had already been set for the January issue and because of this there appeared 2 articles on the DGPS since the report on the foundation meeting, included on their own initiative, could not be removed. Unfortunately I have not found similar understanding and eagerness in all of our philatelic media. Our work should ultimately benefit the philatelic press and it is my sincere hope that the latter should also support our work in its own interest.

Page 13

Solicit members!

There is a membership application included with each copy of this newsletter. Every comrade doubtless has an exchange partner who like him is interested in philatelic literature; it is up to us to bring him into the organization. Although not everyone these days has the desire or the time to actively participate in the tasks we have set, he can express his interest in this way. The accomplishment of our plans requires not only diligent collaborators but also money, hence members, will support us through their dues. So I ask that each does his part and signs up a new member!

Page 13

Membership dues for soldiers.

Soldiers who join the DGPS need pay only half of the initiation fee, namely 7.50 RM. Soldiers are exempt from paying membership dues for the duration of their military service.

Page 13

Philatelic address book and collection of biographical data.

At the urging of the Imperial Collectors' Council, a philatelic address book with biographical appendix is planned. It will encompass the most outstanding philatelists as well as other personalities important to philately. The intention is to use a short biographical manuscript by a well-known writer. Who is interested in composing this work?

Page 13

Although somewhat delayed, this Newsletter goes out on the first of February 1943 to all comrades at a time where we have suffered our first setback because of this war. We still have much work and perhaps much sacrifice ahead of us. All this should not deter us from our belief in our ultimate victory and from our willingness to contribute whatever we can. If we do our duty in our places, we will win this war that was forced upon us by envy and hatred!

But in our free time we wish to seek rest and relaxation in busying ourselves with philatelic literature and through this pursuit simultaneously make a small contribution to the cultural history of our people in the midst of the most difficult of all wars!

Page 14

Literature purchase and exchange list (LIKATAVELI).

The LIKATAVELI is available to all friends of philatelic literature. Hence, it will also be given individually to non-members.

Conditions Literature offerings that are admitted into the LIKATAVELI must be entered into these categories:

- A.) Monographs (books)
- B.) Journals
- C.) Catalogues and price lists
- D.) Auction catalogues
- E.) Other

type-written if possible, priced and submitted by the 20th of each month. If no price is present, we will evaluate them as far as possible.

A fee of 0.10 RM per line for non-members and 0.06 RM for members will be assessed by DGPS. If a sale or exchange takes place, a deduction from the indicated price of 10% for non-members and 5% for members will be made.

For purchase or exchange solicitations, a fee of 0.10 RM and 0.05 RM will be assessed likewise.

Accounting will be made only in the name of the seller by the treasurer of the DGPS.

The submitters obligate themselves to the DGPS with submission of their offerings to keep the offer open for 3 weeks from the day of submission of the offering and not to otherwise dispose of items during this period of time.

Persons seeking to purchase or exchange items are requested to let us know immediately if they have obtained the desired literature elsewhere so that we can delete the request in question from our files.

Page 14

Abbreviations.

See the list in the original document.

Page 15

Wants:

See the list in the original document.

Pages 15-16

Offers:

See the list in the original document.

Page 16

In the interest of avoiding further delay in sending out this first issue of the Member Newsletter, additional listings will be deferred and sent out separately. Whoever wishes to offer his duplicates or publish his want list should send them to me without delay.

In closing, I express greetings and the hope to all comrades that you will participate eagerly in our tasks!

K. Scharfenberg

Hoppenrade, 1st February 1943

END

Deutsche Gesellschaft für Philatelistisches Schrifttum-
Mitglieder Rundschreiben
1st April 1943, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2010

Deutsche Gesellschaft für Philatelistisches Schrifttum-
Mitglieder Rundschreiben

[German Society for Philatelic Bibliography- Member Newsletter]

1st April 1943, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

Editor: K. Scharfenberg

Page 17

On the 5th February Consul Dr. Heinrich Bergfeld and on the 12th February Patent Attorney Richard Scherpe passed away.

Two well-known and very active philatelists, who both worked actively on our tasks, but also two good comrades, left us suddenly and unexpectedly. We shall always hold them in our highest esteem.

Pages 17-18

Corrections and additions to the membership list.

Individual members:

Society members:

Page 18

Catalogue of philatelic bibliography.

I am currently engaged in cataloguing the book and journal literature. Who would be willing to undertake the cataloguing of catalogues and price lists, auction catalogues, and albums? Each of the three categories could be handled by a different cataloguer.

Who has stocks of auction catalogues or dealers' price lists and could make them available to us for cataloguing? I also ask for information on old albums – handing over to the DPZB [German Philatelic Central Library] would be desirable. Newer ones - except Schwaneberger, Schaubek, Ka-Be, Letra, Borek and Behrens - would also be considered. The information I request is a copy of the title page, indication of the size (number of pages) and possibly a brief description. Don't forget to include information on the format and type of binding.

Page 18

Philatelic literature exhibition in Munich on Stamp Day 1943.

Our comrade Ch. O. Müller had prepared a small exhibition of philatelic literature for Stamp Day in the Festsaalbau of the German Museum and also introduced the visitors to the operation of a quartz lamp. He reports:

Regrettably, it could not be decided to hold a stamp exhibition. In order to offer something special to the visitors I acquired four showcases with three panels each and exhibited in them photos of postal history from my own collection and literature from the philatelic department of the Munich City Library. Mainly, I showed books and journals that are still in print, especially on Greater Germany. According to my observations, the showcases were constantly surrounded and their content aroused great interest. Several times, even foreign workers expressed their joy at discovering philatelic journals from their homeland in the displays.

Further evidence of the encouraging interest in philatelic literature was the fact that I was asked many times whether I had literature for sale and that a number of new readers were observed in my library.

Thanks to Comrade Müller for the work he did to promote philatelic literature and may it be emulated in other places on every appropriate occasion.

Pages 19-20

Philately – also a link between the front and the homeland.

Not long ago there was an article in a well-known Berlin daily newspaper in which we collectors were pilloried mercilessly. In the mean time the editor received the inevitable answer.

The correspondence presently before me provides a representative illustration of the excesses of the newspaper and of my reply to the editor.

One day a soldier from the Eastern front responded to a comrade's classified ad seeking literature. The soldier stated that he was an enthusiastic collector and had won several of his comrades into the field of philately. Since they had no access to material out there, he had thus far been limited to theoretical instruction of his comrades and was now asking whether some material could be put at his disposal so that he could also show his comrades philately in practice. He deduced from the ad that the advertiser was a rather advanced collector and surely would have many duplicate stamps that were probably useless to him but could be put to good use by attracting young blood to the hobby and giving his comrades some distraction.

His request was met with a positive response. For each of the seven comrades a packet was assembled and dispatched containing several hundred common and several better stamps, hinges, some of the most essential philatelic supplies and – everything is better with smoke – some cigarettes.

Weeks went by. The donor had long since forgotten the matter, especially since for him the donations were no sacrifice, given the inordinate amount of low-value trading material he had and his lack of time to process it. Then came the answer, an answer that he never expected and that shows how much joy, faith in the homeland and also courage, strength and confidence in the ability to persevere even under the most difficult circumstances an insignificant gift can bring to our comrades in the field. At the same time, the letter that I shall excerpt below shows how very wrong was the writer of the newspaper article I mentioned at the beginning.

Soldier G. B., F. -P. -#.....

Eastern Front 9th May 1942

Dear Comrade

First the simple statement that I was simply blown away by what you so unexpectedly and generously sent! Nay, like all my comrades here, I expected just about anything except that! At the time, I was being ribbed constantly over my optimism that there could be collectors in the homeland who would help us as comrades to abandon ourselves to our passion, if I may so express myself. And as a striking proof – this result! Above all else though, my most sincere thanks, which my comrades join me in expressing!

As much as the stamps delighted me, I must say that the letter you enclosed brought me even more joy! You wrote in such a friendly and comradely manner that it gave us great pleasure to know that we have such comrades in the homeland. So I thank you especially for your kind words! And since you wrote in this way and not otherwise, I can in good conscience anticipate further shipments. I am looking forward to them!

This letter goes on for 4 more pages, every line exuding the deepest joy and gratitude. A correspondence resulted from it, although interrupted for quite a while. The unit that this comrade belonged to participated in the most difficult fighting in the southern part of the front and the donor's joy was so much the greater to have contributed even in such a small and insignificant way to helping to give some joy and faith in the homeland in their difficult time.

“We philatelist are better human beings!” (as one insignificant writer thought, anyway!) Quod erat demonstrandum.

Page 20

Handbook of Philately.

The main assembly of the Verein Handbuch der Briefmarkenkunde e.V. [Handbook of Philately Society] took place on the 21st February last.

As in fiscal year 1941, three instalments of this standard work of philately appeared in 1942. They were compiled by Comrade Major (retired) Hans v. Rudolphi (Crete, Jaipur, Jamaica, Jhalawar, Jind and Cashmire) and by Ing. Vladimir Fleck (Croatia). Accompanying maps were drawn by our comrade Nawrocki.

In the current year 1943, three additional instalments will be delivered. Approval has already been granted for their printing. With these instalments (12-14) the second volume will be complete. A whole series of additional countries up to the letter P is in preparation. After Volume III, a change of format is planned (DIN A5), as well as a transition to loose-leaf format. The latter offers so many advantages that it is unfortunate that it was not used from the beginning. It makes possible the most current corrections and additions without having to reissue the entire work. Besides this, the user can, for example, compile according to his needs those parts that interest him and eliminate those parts that interest him less or not at all.

The publishing activities will be expanded; the Society will for this reason change its name as well – more about this later.

The development of the Society in the last year was very gratifying and shows that the value of the Handbook is being recognized and appreciated in ever-larger circles. The membership grew in 1942 from 92 to 140 (after a reduction by 1 death) and the number of votes (shares) grew from 134 to 278 (after a reduction by 1 death). In the same time period the number of subscriptions grew from 1,957 to 3,229, while 357 additional single issues were sold.

As of the first weeks of the current year this gratifying upward trend is continuing. By the day of the main assembly, 9 new members with 13 votes (shares) and 375 new subscriptions were reported.

Comrade E. Overmann, the leader, was re-elected – the election of the Society Chairman will henceforth occur every three years.

We congratulate the leadership of the Society for the results achieved under the most difficult of circumstances, especially the Society Chairman and the indefatigable Chief Compiler, and look forward to further favourable developments!

Page 20

We hear that the library of the Royal Philatelic Society was destroyed by fire. Confirmation is still being awaited.

Page 21

Berlin Philatelists' Club.

The Berlin Philatelists' Club, whose library is probably the largest German philatelic society library, has become homeless. As happened during the first World War, it was obligated to evacuate the lovely premises it occupied in the Bavarian Works' Berlin administrative building on the Kurfürstendamm, as they needed to be used by the company for its vital war mission. These premises had been graciously offered by the company. The library had to be packed up and will presumably have to spend the rest of the war outside Berlin.

Where and when subsequent Society meetings will be held will be announced by the Club leadership.

Page 21

Authors' and Publishers' Circle.

The Reich's Writer's Union has raised an objection to subsections IV, V and VI of Section 2 of our Bylaws. These subsections set forth the tasks of the DGPS [German Society of Philatelic Bibliography]. It has been clarified since then that our activity does not contravene the current statutory provisions.

As regards the organs inside the DGPS that bring authors and publishers together (Authors' and Publishers' Circle), it is now necessary to undertake some changes in the provisions announced in the Mitglieder-Rundschreiben number 1 in order to avoid misunderstandings in interpretation and to formally adapt them to the current statutory provisions.

The new language is being worked on and will be announced in the next Rundschreiben.

Page 21

Manuscript Archives.

As our comrades are aware, philatelic journals, like other journals regarded as not important for the war effort, are currently suspended in order to save paper and labour. The philatelic literary respite this has brought about should in no way be sat out. Rather, it is indispensable that we take advantage of this respite by putting forth our greatest efforts to ensure that our beloved journal is resurrected in an inwardly and outwardly improved form when the suspension is lifted.

This means also that we should gather together in one place all good and appropriate articles that could not be published as well as all larger monographs that could be published later as books. For this purpose, an archive will be established for the unpublished works of our members. I ask all comrades who have unpublished works or who are completing works during the respite, to contribute them to the archive for later publication with appropriate remuneration. Please send manuscripts to my address by registered mail.

Page 21

Literature Donations for the German Philatelic Central Library (D.P.Z.B.) were made by: Giesecke & Devrient Co., Leipzig and Berlin; G. O. Kaemmerer, Danzig; also by Comrades Bofferding, Kosel, Tietz and Wolf.

Page 22

Money Donations were made by comrades: Englehard (RM 10.00), Michaelis (RM 1.38) and Wolf (RM 42.50).

Page 22

Priceless Information is made available to all comrades of the DGPS by comrade Tietz from his “Collector Protection Files”. Please provide exact address and profession of collectors and dealers with any enquiries as to their reliability.

Multiple Membership.

E. III Wichmann, F., Berlin-Heiligensee, Alt-Heiligensee 101
(addition to page 18)
Contribution RM 24.00, 2 shares (votes).

We thank the foregoing comrades as well as donors who are not members of DGPS for very valuable literature.

Page 22

Footnote.

It is finally time to begin what is probably the most important and at the same time the greatest and most difficult task that the DGPS has set for itself. Simultaneously with this issue of the Mitgleider-Rundschreiben, the “strategic plan” and the corresponding “processing guidelines” are going out to those comrades who have agreed to compile indexes of philatelic journals.

The present time, in which every one of us is overloaded with work and must meet the exigencies of total war, is not exactly favourable to our project; indeed, one could consider that it would be better to put off this task to a later time. If I have decided, despite these circumstances, to go ahead with the realization of our project now, this is because I can see from the gratifyingly number of announcements of intentions to work together on the project that the great majority of those interested in philatelic literature are keenly interested in a prompt fulfilment of our communal task. But it is above all because I know from personal experience that keeping busy with any hobby and working on a task that is close to one’s personal interests does not cause any weakening of the ability to dedicate oneself to his profession or, now, to the war effort. On the contrary, the joy and fulfilment that such work gives us, the healing and diversion that it brings, are useful and necessary compensation for the extremely heightened physical and intellectual demands placed upon us precisely at this time, because it increases our productivity. And finally, it really does not matter whether we seek such compensatory activity after our daily work in reading a good book, in busying ourselves with our stamps or in some other way that pleases us and fulfils our passions.

In times of peace we had many more opportunities for amusement and relaxation than we do now, so despite our considerably increased professional work, we have perhaps more time for such activity today. Therefore, I believe that despite the exigencies of war, or perhaps because of them, we can go to work and I am certain that by working together we will achieve the goal we have set!

I wish of all of you, my comrades, that you contribute to our success with your best efforts, whether it be through active work or by seeking other opportunities to support our efforts; and I am certain that such opportunities will present themselves often. I myself promise you to be the principal contributor, not just in name, but in fact.

Page 23

Already assigned magazines and their editors:

Pages 23-24

Index editors required for:

[Following the list of 20 periodicals.]

I am asking comrades, who want to work on the index of a particular philatelic magazine to let me know as soon as possible, which of the aforementioned magazines - possibly even others not yet mentioned, which you own - hopefully complete - you would like to work on. You will be mailed the necessary index material and - if available - the additional material (for example missing numbers of the magazines, catalogues, etc.) - immediately.

I am asking that especially the aforementioned comrades and societies will participate actively on the index.

Page 24

*The collection of short biographies by Max Ton ("Philaton") has, as mentioned in the previous number, been bought by the GDS and been forwarded to the DGPS, to prepare it for publication. The manuscript still requires a lot of work. I am entrusting companion Heyd of Hamburg (E.040/Auftrag Nr.2) with the work on the biography part of Ton's manuscript to create the Deutschen Philatelisten-Almanachs. The distribution of the other parts will commence as soon as the final guidelines for the individual parts have been established.*

Pages 24-25

Important and valuable for the philatelist are the following works and articles:

Pages 25-27

New rules for the literature sales and exchange section

K. Scharfenberg, Hoppenrade, 1st April 1943.

Pages 27-28

Members' notices.

Archive.

Once again I am asking all my companions, who have not yet mailed short biographies (see MR 1, p.4), to do this immediately. These biographies are used as documents for the Biography Part (see p.24!). Who can help me with those of deceased members Bergfeld and Scherpe?

Collaboration.

To carry out our tasks it is necessary that all persons interested in philatelic literature help. Each one can add their building bloc, be it as an active worker in one of our tasks, be it as a financial contributor, or be it as a donor of literature to build up the Central Library, be it by information of affordable book offerings or by other means.

Membership Advertising.

If you cannot for some reason personally help with a new member, please give me addresses of philatelists, who you know and who might be interested in the DPGS. Each member should be able to work towards that goal.

MR3 is anticipated to be published on the 1st June 1943. Starting with number 3 an article of possibly two to three type-written pages is anticipated. I am asking all members to work with me. Manuscripts should be mailed by the middle of the preceding month. MR 3 by 15th May.

Once Again.

Berliner Philatelisten Club:

As has been noted by President Dr. Willecke Club meetings start on the 5th April (6 p.m.) and are in the hall of Berlin W35, Sigismundstr. 3, Second Floor.

Articles of Association for the DPGS will be mailed possibly by the 1st June.

Typing error correction.

In the attached Richtlinien und Anweisungen ... page 1, paragraph 4: the top line should be "four decades are ..." (instead of six)

Newest Philaprilistish News.

The Deutsche Verlag has decided to ask the collector for penance because of their faux pas mentioned elsewhere in this letter, and will use on all their correspondence starting with the 1st April 1943, for one year only, only stamps with additional postage [charity stamps?] issued by the Reich's Post office. I suggest to all members that their correspondence be rather lively!

A renowned stamp dealer in B. has offered his customers to make the Michel-Catalogue 1943 now on hand available for a fee of DM 5.00, and is surprised that he has not seen one of them returned.

It is said that some well known stamp dealers (black marketeers) have been offered jobs as commissioners for breach of exchange control regulations and others for price regulations and monitoring.

Something for the enthusiastic collector: A very famous and the largest philatelic library has been inherited by an unmarried lady and she offers the opportunity of marriage. Photo and table of contents of the library are available to serious contenders, if a promise of marriage is given.

Page 28

Supplements to this number of the MR.

END

Alexander Bungerz
About Circuits and Exchanges
[Über Rundsendungen und Tauschverbindungen]
2nd enlarged edition of Wie Behandelt man Rundsendungen? [How Does One Handle Circuits?], Verlag der "Sammler Woche", Munich, Germany, n.d. [ca.1921], p.3

Translation of the Foreword only

Translation produced by Charles A. Tuteur for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2005

ABOUT CIRCUITS AND EXCHANGES

I submit herewith to the collector the second unchanged edition of the rapidly out-of-print work: How Does One Handle Circuits?, to which I have added, regarding this theme, my article Something about Exchanges, which was published first in the Deutschen Philatelisten-Adressbuch 1920. The Universal-Anzeiger wrote the following about it in issue N°. 101: It is so noteworthy, that it should be translated into every language and published in all of the world's philatelic journals. The adding of this essay ought to be welcomed by the now slowly reviving exchanges and the many, particularly younger, collectors.

On this occasion I observe, regarding exchange shipments, that they cannot be executed without further knowledge. Export of stamps is indeed allowed; - the only formality a collector has to comply with is to fill out the green label: Statistics of goods traffic, which can be obtained at each Customs or Post Office. For import, whatever the value of exchanges, it is necessary to obtain a permit from the Reichskommissar, Berlin, for Export & Import permits, which will be given if the applicant proves through submission of proofs that he exported stamps of equal value. Details about this can be read in No. 5 of the Sammler-Woche, 1920.

Alexander Bungerz

END

Philatelistische Literaturschau
December 1948, Volume 1, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURSCHAU

December 1948, Volume 1, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

Philatelic Literature Survey

Supplement to the Philatelistischen Journal

Volume 1	December 1948	No. 1
----------	---------------	-------

p.1

Magazine articles, books, and brochures are reviewed. Books and brochures however are only reviewed when copies are made available to the publisher for review. Stand-alone works (books, etc.) are indicated by a dot • before the entry. Reviews of books published by us are taken from other sources.

END

Philatelistische Literaturschau
January 1949, Volume 1, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURSCHAU

January 1949, Volume 1, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

Philatelic Literature Survey

Supplement to the Philatelistischen Journal

Volume 1

January 1949

No. 2

p.5

Magazine articles, books, and brochures are reviewed. Books and brochures however are only reviewed when copies are made available to the publisher for review. Stand-alone works (books, etc.) are indicated by a dot • before the entry. Reviews of books published by us are taken from other sources. The reviewed stand-alone writings can, for the most part, be obtained from the publisher of the Philatelistisches Journal.

END

Philatelistische Literaturschau
February/March 1949, Volume 1, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURSCHAU

February/March 1949, Volume 1, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

Philatelic Literature Survey

Supplement to the Philatelistischen Journal

Volume 1	February/March 1949	No. 3
----------	---------------------	-------

p.9

Magazine articles, books, and brochures are reviewed. Books and brochures however are only reviewed when copies are made available to the publisher for review. Stand-alone works (books, etc.) are indicated by a dot • before the entry. Reviews of books published by us are taken from other sources. The reviewed stand-alone writings can, for the most part, be obtained from the publisher of the Philatelistisches Journal.

END

Philatelistische Literaturschau
April/May 1949, Volume 1, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURSCHAU

April/May 1949, Volume 1, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

Philatelic Literature Survey

Supplement to the Philatelistischen Journal

Volume 1

April/May 1949

No. 4

p.17

Magazine articles, books, and brochures are reviewed. Books and brochures however are only reviewed when copies are made available to the publisher for review. Stand-alone works (books, etc.) are indicated by a dot • before the entry. Reviews of books published by us are taken from other sources. The reviewed stand-alone writings can, for the most part, be obtained from the publisher of the Philatelistisches Journal.

END

Franz Himmelbauer

A partisan of Sir Pearson Hill

[Ein Parteigänger Sir Pearson Hill's]

Philatelistischer Börsen-Courier, 10th November 1891, Volume 6, Issue 21, pp.175-176 & Issue 22, pp.205-207

Translation produced by Mark Anderson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

A PARTISAN OF SIR* PEARSON HILL

* Editor's note: This was corrected to Mr in the second instalment.

The victory in the Chalmers case, despite all the malignant griping and the attempts to dismiss it lightly, must be considered a complete one. It is well known that the small opposition party in England does not base all its assertions and criticisms on a scientifically objective foundation but is motivated purely by the offended pride of one person. Consequently, it justifies its assertions not after the fashion of the level-headed thinker but by grotesque personal attacks that are alien to educated people and naturally devoid of any basis. In this way, in certain circles accustomed to asserting their point of view by screaming or pounding of fists, results can be obtained, but not in any matter that would interest the scientific world, where only serious proofs hold up. And in such a disreputable form of argument nothing will be noticed more than the inability to bring forth real facts. If one has such facts, they speak for themselves anyway and do not need to be forced upon the listener. The truly right wins everywhere and the worst shouting is fatal to the objective calm of real proofs.

The German intellect was piqued by the scientific interest in the whole Chalmers-Hill affair, which from the beginning was elucidated and evaluated in our journals. Naturally, this immersion in the material led to nearly universal recognition of the right party and in fact the Chalmers case had one of its greatest triumphs in Germany. The few vapid criticisms that were ventured were refuted with such fury that they achieved precisely the opposite of what they had intended and brought even more partisans to oppose the cause. Thus, the recognition of the Chalmers patent rights steadily progressed and after publication of the forceful essay by Dr. Moschkau in last year's issue of the Gartenlaube it was difficult to discern any opposition left in Germany.

And yet there was such opposition, as now becomes clear, since it is rising again. It originated and was fostered by a power-hungry personality that understood how to skilfully impose its opinion by making use of certain factors which for some unknown reason are held in very high esteem in the German philatelic world. Thus, it was possible last year on the occasion of the so-called Philatelic Day to manufacture an anti-Chalmers resolution that robbed this Philatelic Day of the last semblance of utility that it may have still had. Indeed, it put every similar assemblage in a negative light. There is not room here to go into all the damage that became evident by that Philatelic Day. Perhaps it would have been better for that to have been done at the time.

A remnant of that spirit is the opposition that, as we said earlier, is rising again. In the Berlin periodical Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung last year an advocate arose to face all the non-believers and Pearson Hill has once again found the joy of a partisan after all these years. We do not want it to go unnoticed; neither do we want to overestimate it!

In the 4th issue of his journal, despite having earlier publicly supported Chalmers' case, the publisher ran an article against the legal recognition of the true inventor. Unfortunately, we do not have a copy of it. Then in the August issue of this year he ran a discussion of the last of Chalmers' circulars Action of Her Majesty's Treasury, etc., but without mentioning its name. The hostile critique perpetuated by this journal that reports only facts shows very clearly that there are always people who will not let go of a view they once acquired and always go back to it, even when the falsity of the view is supported by an abundance of the most convincing evidence. We are once again duty-bound to consider a new circular by Mr. Patrick Chalmers thus begins the critique.

The aversion to the occasional statements of Chalmers on the continuing results of his investigations, as can be noted in this sentence, is typical of the partisans of Pearson Hill. It is a known fact that on the occasion of last year's Philatelic Day another of these gentlemen used only one standard for evaluating Chalmers' circulars, namely their weight. They had left them lying at home by the ton. Where? Where else than in Dresden! But back to our critique. Then there was a discussion (incredulous, of course) of Chalmers' 1834 stamp, of which, as the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung literally states, an example was supposedly in Friedl's Museum in Vienna. It is incredible that even today such a sentence can be written. If the publisher doesn't want to believe that the design in the Vienna Postage Stamp Museum is what it undoubtedly is, he would do well to keep this personal opinion to himself. In other places it could bring about unintended levity. To doubt the authenticity of this design and of the one owned by Mr. Hanson in Cardiff is exaggerated scepticism, which, if it were widespread, would render all research impossible.

The anonymous author of the critique dispenses with the entire matter in just a few lines and a couple of words, then concludes: It stands proved: Hill's suggestion of February 1837. As you can see, with these few sentences the writer circumscribes the entire dispute, if we can still call it that, since it has been decided in favour of Chalmers, despite the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung. Thus, if we wanted to publish a thorough rebuttal, we would have to take a broad view and use the conclusions of a vast array of research to refute the assertions of this article

But today we do not have room for this, and besides, this would not be consistent with the purposes of this essay, which is only to fulfil the wish expressed to me in the last letter of Patrick Chalmers, who died too soon. Even he himself was surprised at the recent attacks in Germany on his father's case, as he wrote in German in a circular dated Wimbledon, September 1891, as far as I know, his last in which he refuted the accusations. With this essay I am happily following up on his wish for this circular to be brought up in a German journal. At the same time I am hoping to encounter an in-depth discussion and rebuttal of both articles in the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung (the one in #4, unknown to me, and the one in #11, already mentioned here several times).

Patrick Chalmers finds it significant that the author of the critique of his circular neither dares mention its title nor signs his name. Neither does he go into the content of the circular at all. He is silent on the important fact that the lords of the Royal Treasury had urged Pearson

Hill to return the correspondence between himself and James Chalmers, which had been taken from the official archives, so that it could be determined what reasons Rowland Hill gave for claiming his patent. He is silent on the fact that Pearson Hill refused to surrender these important documents and by this fact alone reveals that their content could not have served in any way to support his assertions. He is silent on the fact that a recent letter from Robert Wallace MP, the chairman of the Postal Reform Committee, was discovered and published by Chalmers, in which it is abundantly clear that: it was from James Chalmers that he got the suggestion of adhesive postage stamps; and that at the decisive moment he brought this suggestion up in the House of Commons, which was the only way the Postal Bill could have been made possible. Finally, he is silent on the fact that the minister involved in the negotiations on the law of 1839 explained that Sir Rowland Hill's plan insisted that absolutely and in all cases an envelope with imprinted value indicium be used.

When one simply ignores a string of extremely important facts that are consistent with earlier proofs, one can no longer demand to be taken seriously. Perhaps it is not yet widely known that this year a letter was uncovered dated 3rd March, 1838, in which he thanked Chalmers for the plan he submitted, of which I will probably make use in my statements before the Committee, says Rowland Hill. Nothing further is said on this issue in the seven lines of the letter. From this we can gain much insight that the gentleman of the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung preferred to close his eyes to. Does he really believe that Hill, given his well-known ever-apparent ambition, would not have immediately claimed the patent rights from Chalmers had he truly had the right to them?! He not only did not do this but was completely blind to the value of the stamp - he greatly preferred his stamped envelopes and letter sheets. The plan seemed much too unimportant to him, hence the shortness of his letter and the significantly restrictive probably in its wording. Hill had heard of Chalmers' idea as early as February 1837. However, it was decidedly to his disadvantage that he did not recognize its value and did not immediately recommend its adoption.

We shall not go further into the content of said circular. But in conclusion we would like to again point to Chalmers' last words addressed to German philatelists: that unless Pearson Hill produces the requested letters of the Treasury, they should admit that his claims are untenable and universally recognize James Chalmers as the sole person responsible for the adhesive postage stamp.

And that is what we will always do.

END

K. Scharfenberg
Bylaws of the German Society for Philatelic Literature
[Satzung der Deutschen Gesellschaft für Philatelistisches Schrifttum]
Deutschen Gesellschaft für Philatelistisches Schrifttum, Berlin, Germany, 22nd November 1942, 6pp.

Translation of the introductory text on page 1, only

Translation produced by Mark Anderson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

Handwritten note at the top of the front page of my copy:
Sections 4-11 are in the process of being revised. See accompanying text.

BYLAWS OF THE GERMAN SOCIETY FOR
PHILATELIC LITERATURE

1. Name, Headquarters, Business year

- I. The German Society for Philatelic Literature is headquartered in Berlin. The business year is the calendar year. The first business year begins on November 22, 1942 and ends on December 31, 1943.
- II. The German Society for Philatelic Literature (henceforth called the Society for short) shall be registered as a not-for-profit organization.
- III. The Society is a member of the Gemeinschaft Deutscher Sammler (GDS) [Community of German Collectors].

2. Purposes of the Society

Within the existing legal framework, the purposes of the Society are the following:

- I. Bringing together all parties interested in philatelic literature among: collectors, clubs, writers, publishers and dealers.
- II. Building of the German Philatelic Central Library, to which shall be appended a literature reference section as well as a literature purchase and exchange centre.
- III. Publication of a catalogue of philatelic literature as an aid to the standardized classification of the same in private and public libraries.
- IV. Creation of a source reference (bibliography) of philatelic literature that will serve all practical needs.
- V. Publication of deserving works on philatelic literature.
- VI. Support of philatelic authors and publishers in every appropriate way for the purpose of raising the level of specialized literature, especially that of specialized journals.
- VII. Promotion of philatelic literature and its collection through lectures, publications and philatelic expositions.

3. Mutual Benefit

- I. The Society is not motivated in any way by profit but rather pursues the purely ideal and mutually beneficial goals outlined by the German Collectors' Community.

END

Directeur Générale des Postes et des Télégraphes
[A letter to Patrick Chalmers]
Paris, France, 16th April 1891, 1p.

Translation produced by Donald H. Kellander for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005

A LETTER TO PATRICK CHALMERS

16th April 1891

Head Office of the Postal and Telegraph Services Bureau of Personnel

Paris, 16th April 1891

Sir,

You have been so kind as to send me the new brochure that you published in regards to claims of the rights of the deceased James Chalmers, your father, concerning the invention of the adhesive postage stamp. I am pleased to inform you that we have received your mailing and to thank you for it.

As it is the first document you have sent me concerning this issue, I have read the brochure attentively and I have had it placed in the Administration's library.

Yours very sincerely, sir

The General Manager of the Posts and Telegraphs

To:
Mr. Patrick Chalmers
14 Springfield Road
Wimbledon, London

END

Patrick Chalmers
The Adhesive Postage Stamp
[Le Timbre-Poste Adhésif]
[A letter to J.-B. Moens of Brussels]
Wimbledon, UK, 7th August 1890, 1p.

Translation produced by Donald H. Kellander for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005

THE ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMP

[A letter from Patrick Chalmers to J.-B. Moens of Brussels]

Wimbledon,
7th August 1890

Sir:

I am pleased to be able to send you enclosed herein, a letter in response to that of Mr. Pearson Hill, published in the last issue of your journal, Le Timbre-Poste, and I beg you to be so kind as to publish it in your next issue. My letter, although long, is not as long as that of Mr. Pearson Hill, and it is important and just that the response be submitted to those who have read the attack. I am counting, then, on you to publish my letter in all fairness.

Permit me to inform you that I have answered your letter of 15th March 1888, in which you addressed to me certain questions on the subject of my claims. After having had your letter translated into English, I drew up in English a response to each of your questions, 12 in number, and I sent you the whole thing on 26th March, also sending back, as you had desired, the questions that you had sent me. If my mailing did not arrive or if it has escaped your attention, there is no fault on my part, and there is none attributable to any lack of courtesy on my part in regards to you.

Yours very truly

Patrick Chalmers

to Mr. Moens
Brussels

Have the kindness to advise to me if my letter will be published, in accordance with the rules and the courtesy

END

Patrick Chalmers
The Adhesive Postage Stamp
[Le Timbre-Poste Adhésif]
Wimbledon, UK, 26th May 1890, 1p.

Translation produced by Brian Knight for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

THE ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMP

Wimbledon
26th May 1890

Dear Sir,

According to the information that I have obtained recently, I am now able to prove, in the enclosed circular, that Sir Rowland Hill benefited from his despotic position at the Ministry, in order to block the plan and suggestions of James Chalmers, sent to the Ministers to recommend the use of the Adhesive Postage Stamp; and that he also intercepted all of the official correspondence which had proven the rights of Chalmers to the title of originator of this stamp, and that he thus usurped the merit of this for himself, and also that Sir Rowland Hill intercepted, at the same time, the Certificate of Bankers and Businessmen of Dundee, dated 30th September 1839, sent to the Ministers in order to recommend the plan of their fellow citizen Chalmers, this Certificate proving that the adoption of the Adhesive Postage Stamp, with the goal of facilitating the execution of the letter carrying project at one penny, has not taken place, in any fashion, on the part of the suggestions of Mr. Hill during this time. Please have the kindness to take note of these facts and make them known to your friends and readers.

Sincerely yours,
Patrick Chalmers

END

Patrick Chalmers

The Postage Stamp: To the Editor in Chief of Timbre-Poste
[Le Timbre Adhésif: Au Rédacteur en Chef du Timbre-Poste]
Wimbledon, UK, 5th August 1890, 4pp.

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005

THE POSTAGE STAMP: TO THE EDITOR IN CHIEF OF TIMBRE-POSTE

Sir,

My attention was drawn by a letter from Pearson Hill, published in the last issue of your journal, and which also contained a letter posted by Mr. Philbrick, in which I am accused of making certain false allegations; I ask your simple courtesy for permission to respond.

I never said that I had been invited by the senior staff of the Post Office to exhibit any specimen stamps of James Chalmers at the last Guildhall exposition, as Pearson Hill so accuses me; to the contrary, I did say in precise terms that it was these senior staff who had intervened to prevent one of the officials, who was a complete stranger to me, from displaying these model stamps. Far from being considered as an imposter by most of the staff, the justification of my complaints is generally accepted, and there is no need for further proof than the spontaneous offer of one of the members of the Post Office to exhibit the stamps and Chalmer's project at the Exposition. I can also add that a long article was published at some time in the Queen's Head journal of the Glasgow Post Office, written by an official of the Post Office, who was also unknown to me, substantiating the claims of James Chalmers and that 5000 copies of this article were bought by employees of the English Post Office. Moreover, on the occasion of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary, the heads of the Post Office did not claim for Sir Rowland Hill the honour of having invented the adhesive postal stamp. The accusation of Pearson Hill against me is therefore, only a product of his imagination.

It is likewise said that these same remarks have occurred between me and the Philatelic Society of London. It is I who first asked permission to exhibit the stamps and I never said anything else; I did not say either that the committee accepts my claims.

Then Pearson Hill declared that the stamp of James Chalmers, which was made in 1834, recently exhibited at the Exposition of Vienna is only a duplicate of the stamp of Chalmers which he himself had shown at the London Exposition. Unfortunately for him, the stamp shown by Pearson Hill bore an imitation of a postal cancellation, Dundee, Sept. 30th, 1839 whereas the one from Vienna carried the word Used printed across the stamp to prevent anyone from using it a second time. That clearly proves that this stamp is a first attempt of Chalmers prior to the one by which he suggested the system of cancelling stamps by affixing the date and the mark of the post office. Pearson Hill is again at fault; his stamp, instead of being an imitation of the one from Vienna, is completely different from it by this material point. Whatever Pearson Hill may be able to say, the fact that Chalmers had invented the adhesive postage stamp in 1834 was proven in a conclusive manner by personal testimonies and by the production of the stamp of 1834 itself, to the satisfaction of the organizers and visitors of the Vienna Exposition, and did not leave a single doubt in a totally unbiased spirit. The highest biographical authorities of our days, to whom Pearson Hill appealed, from a lengthy special examination, arrived at the conclusion that James Chalmers was the inventor of the adhesive postage stamp in 1834 and that Mr. Pearson Hill could not shake that conclusion. I am therefore accused of having impugned the nature of the letter of Rowland Hill to Mr. Chalmers on March 3rd 1838. Why then did not Pearson Hill produce that letter itself? When two years before he complained that nothing had been said about his proposal for an adhesive postage stamp, why would Mr. Chalmers have returned to Mr. Hill a copy of his letter, if this was not supporting his complaint? It is that Pearson Hill needlessly rejects that conclusion, while all the while he tries to hold secret the contents of the letter itself.

Philat. Trans. 540

Therefore, it is evident that all of the accusations made against me by Pearson Hill do not have, when one responds to them categorically, any basis. Moreover, this gentleman has been willing to intersperse his allegations with such irrelevant epithets, which he applied to me, such as monomaniac, imposter, absolutely false, an error or a lie, etc., expressions which are usually used only when one does not have any valid arguments, and that I leave with confidence to the judgement and appreciation of all of those individuals who have read this letter.

A word about the letter of Mr. Philbrick, which I examined in a special circular, an example of which is at the disposition of all of your readers. My authorities, on which Mr. Philbrick challenges me, are:-

- 1st A letter from the very same Mr. Philbrick of May 25th 1887, in which he paid me the honour of addressing me and where he said, Neither your father nor Mr. Rowland Hill invented the postal adhesive stamp.
- 2nd A paragraph of the Stamp News, where the chief editor, after having had the honour of an interview on the subject of that very question, said: The Philatelic Society has admitted that it did not claim that Sir Rowland Hill had invented the postage stamp.

Concerning the matter that the correspondence is in the possession of Mr. Philbrick, I request in my circular by what right is it in his possession and at what point did Sir Rowland Hill remove from the Ministry that official correspondence? It is in vain that for some years I demanded copies of these letters from Pearson Hill and from Mr. Philbrick himself. The pages of insults and abuses flung against me will not blind the impartial observer to the meaning of this fact in the discussion. Fortunately, I have been able to prove with the help of my friends from Arbroath, in Scotland, and without the aid of that correspondence, that it is to James Chalmers that we are indebted for the benefit of the adhesive postage stamp.

Accept, etc.,
Patrick Chalmers

Wimbledon
5th August 1890

END

P. Stettiner
[Letter to Patrick Chalmers]
Librarian, Ministero delle Poste dei Telegrafi, Rome, Italy, 1p.

Translation produced by Mark Schumacher for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

[LETTER TO PATRICK CHALMERS]

Ministry of the Post and Telegraphs

Rome, 26th April 1891

Dear Sir,

His Excellency the Minister has received your most interesting brochure on the adhesive postage stamp, and has asked me to thank you most cordially.

I would be much obliged to you, Sir, if you would be so kind as to send me another copy for the Postal Museum, where we keep the Ministry's collection of postage stamps.

Please accept, dear Sir, my most respectful regards.

THE LIBRARIAN
P. Stettiner

Mr. P. Chalmers
London

END

Philatelistenclub Berlin-Mitte

Clubjournal: Reports and Communications of the Philatelisten-Club Berlin-Mitte with the “DDR-Spezial” Working Group: Index, Hefte 1-30, 1995-2002

[Clubjournal: Berichte und Mitteilungen des Philatelisten-Clubs Berlin-Mitte mit der Arbeitsgemeinschaft “DDR-Spezial”: Index Heft 1-30, 1995-2002]

Philatelistenclub Berlin-Mitte, Berlin, Germany, n.d. [ca.2003], p.12

Translation of the explanatory text only

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005

CLUBJOURNAL: REPORTS AND COMMUNICATIONS OF THE PHILATELISTEN-CLUB BERLIN-MITTE WITH THE “DDR-SPEZIAL” WORKING GROUP:
INDEX, HEFTE 1-30, 1995-2002

Philatelisten Club - Berlin-Mitte e.V. with the “DDR-Spezial” Working Group

Member of the Association of Berlin Philatelic Clubs
Member of the Confederation of German Philatelists (BDPh)

The Philatelic Club Berlin-Mitte was founded on 30th June 1990. It has as its goals the furthering, the expansion, and the nurturing of philately, with a central focus on postal history, especially of Berlin and of the German Democratic Republic. That is in line with the close working relationship it has with the Museum für Kommunikation Berlin, where its main activities take place.

In order to realize the goals of the club, the working group “DDR-Spezial” was formed. Its goal is to further and to popularize the German Democratic Republic collecting area, including the Soviet Occupation Zone following the currency reform of 1948, continuing through 1990 and including all imaginable aspects. Research is aimed at stamps, cancellations, entires, and other postal documents, as well as at the history of the postal service and of philately in the German Democratic Republic. It aims to:

- record, process, and make available to interested parties those things that until now were either not well-known or not researched.
- aim for a coherent account of the postal history of the German Democratic Republic and of the philatelic societies in the German Democratic Republic.
- correct the inaccurate portrayal of the postal history and the philatelic history of the German Democratic Republic and make available an objective account.

Along with membership of the Philatelisten Club - Berlin-Mitte, one automatically becomes a member of the Confederation of German Philatelists (BDPh).

With that [membership] one receives:

- more information through the monthly specialist journal, Philatelie, the Berlin-Philatelie of the VBPhV (twice a year), and the Clubjournal, as well as, when required, Infos about the work of the club and the specialist groups.
- the possibility of subscribing at a reduced price to the publications of the working group, “DDR-Spezial,” the series of publications about collecting German Democratic Republic philatelic items, as well as leaflets [on that subject].
- more security by purchasing insurance through the BDPh.
- support for collectors through a free BDPh “wanted” or “exchange” advert.
- the possibility of exhibiting philatelic items.
- greater possibilities for acquiring knowledge and exchanging experiences at the meetings of the club, of the DDR-Spezial and its special interest groups, in which many experienced philatelists are involved.

Membership in the Philatelisten Club - Berlin-Mitte e.V., includes membership of the working group and its special interest groups.

Membership in the Working Group, “DDR-Spezial”, presupposes membership of a club that is a member of the BDPh.

At the moment, there exist the following specialist groups of the working group, DDR-Spezial:

- Special interest group - Regular Series Walter Ulbricht
- Special interest group - Booklets and se-tenant pieces
- Special interest group - Officials
- Special interest group - Postal markings
- Special interest group - Regular Series: Personalities and Pieck

Business Address/Chairman:

Horst Geyermann

Münchehagenstraße 42, 13125 Berlin

Phone: (030) 94 63 26 97

Literature/Sales Department:

Dieter Oberschmidt

Wandlitzstraße 23, 16321 Schönower

Phone: (0 33 38) 76 58 03

END

J. Vellekoop

Open doors - doors open: An overview of articles published in Dutch exhibition catalogues appearing between 1952 and 1985

[Open deuren – deuren open: Een overzicht van tussen 1952 en 1985 in Nederlandse tentoonstellingscatalogi verschenen artikelen]

In: C. Stapel (Editor): Postmerken 86., Nederandse Vereniging van Poststukken- en Poststempelverzamelaars, Assen, Netherlands, 1986, pp.381-382

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
November 2005

OPEN DOORS - DOORS OPEN: AN OVERVIEW OF ARTICLES
PUBLISHED IN DUTCH EXHIBITION CATALOGUES
APPEARING BETWEEN 1952 AND 1985

In his excellent bibliography of French postal history Pierre Nougaret⁽¹⁾ suggests as a sub-title for a bibliographic article The art of not kicking in doors; his intention was once more to emphasize how - because of the total lack of awareness of the existence of earlier publications - with a lot of effort, authors reached the same conclusions as earlier.

Also, our own postal history and philatelic literature is, for the most part, not sufficiently researched with all its attendant disadvantages and risks. This contribution takes a closer look at a specific series of Dutch publications, namely the exhibition catalogues.

Stamp exhibitions are a fairly old event, arising in the early developments of philately⁽²⁾. Fairly quickly these events were supported by - originally simple - little guides with an overview of the exhibits. During the last century, these guides grew sometimes into multi-volume books, especially when it involved international exhibitions. Until about 1950, the contents were usually not much more than the rules of the exhibition and a list of the exhibitors, sometimes with detailed accounts of the exhibits, thus having some value. Around the middle of the century arose the idea to give the catalogues extra value by the inclusion of articles, not necessarily connected with the exhibition. The first Dutch example of this idea is the catalogue of the ITEP, International Exhibition of Centennial Stamps of 1952, held in Utrecht. Later we have several guides from the early sixties, but with Amphilex 67 a totally new era began.

Because of the establishment of the Stichting Philatelie (Philatelic Foundation), and since the Amphilex show, good frames are permanently available to set up exhibitions. This opened the way for a stream of stamp shows crowned with a series of jubilee exhibitions during the years 1982-1984, which averaged fifty exhibitions a year (almost one every week).

Most of the Dutch exhibitions (since 1967 alone, at least 600) became more accessible to the public because of the catalogues, issued in various forms, from just a double sheet to deluxe printings. We tried to lay our hands on the greatest possible number of these, and to check their contents. Since, alas, nobody in the Netherlands has a complete collection of these publications, although the Federation's library and the postal museum have a great collection of these, this overview cannot guarantee its completeness, which is normally hoped for by philatelists. The format of this overview easily allows for additions.

For inclusion in this catalogue, the following norms were established:

1. The exhibition had to be held in the Netherlands.
2. Only the exhibition catalogues are listed; commemorative books, jubilee numbers, etc. in connection with the exhibitions are not listed.
3. Catalogues without articles or with articles mainly directed at gaining members (no matter how nicely dressed up) are not included.

For each catalogue, the following are mentioned:

1. Year and place of the exhibition.
2. The special name, if there is one.
3. Dates of the exhibition.
4. Articles in order of publication, followed by a short synopsis of the article.

If it was a national or international exhibition, that is also mentioned. All others were local or regional exhibitions, and we chose a chronological listing.

NOTES

1. Pierre Nougaret: Critical Bibliography of the Postal History of France, Montpellier, 1970, Volume 1, p.4.
2. About this subject among others: K. Kouwenberg: Stamp Exhibitions in the 19th Century. Filatelie Informatief, pp.6010/1-10; and about exhibitions in general: Carlrichard Bruhl, etc.

END

Rev. Naumann
In commemoration of A. E. Glasewald Senior
[A. E. Glasewald sen. zum Gedächtnis]
Philatelisten-Zeitung, October 1927, Volume 35, Issue 10, pp.121 & 128

Translation produced by Mark Anderson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2006 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

IN COMMEMORATION OF A. E. GLASEWALD SENIOR

On the 16th of September about 6pm, a small circle of friends, members of the Glasewald family and a delegation from the Deutschen Philatelisten-Verbandes gathered in the presence of representatives of the Church and the city of Gössnitz for a simple commemorative ceremony for the first anniversary of the death of our esteemed departed. As the representative of the Deutschen Philatelisten-Verbandes, the Reverend Naumann of Schönberg delivered a warm message of gratitude to the great organizer on the site of the family burial plot. In honour of this simple, great master, the indefatigable creator of many important philatelic works, founder of the best philatelic journal currently appearing in Germany and selfless researcher and expertiser, a commemorative panel was dedicated at the Glasewald family burial plot so that future generations can gratefully remember him.

Following this was a meeting of the A. E. Glasewald Foundation committee, in which the Reverend Naumann read and discussed the draft by-laws of the Foundation. These are to be voted upon during the next annual meeting and read as follows:

By-laws of the A. E. Glasewald Foundation established 20th September 1926.

To the continuing memory of our founder, A. E. Glasewald Sr. of Gössnitz, deceased 16th September 1926, and worthy leader the Deutschen Philatelisten-Verbandes hereby establishes the A. E. Glasewald Foundation with the following provisions:

§1.

The Foundation is established by voluntary donations of Society members and close friends of the deceased and is expected to be strengthened by further voluntary contributions.

§2.

Present Foundation funds shall be used to defray:

- a) The cost of a commemorative plaque that was mounted on the first anniversary of his death (16th September 1927) at the burial plot of the family of A. E. Glasewald, to remind us and future generations of our departed leader.
- b) The cost of creation of a medal to be awarded annually to a Society member in recognition of his service to the Society or philately, selected on the recommendation of the Executive Committee and approved by the annual assembly. Exceptions to this provision shall be by unanimous vote of the annual assembly. The awarded medal shall be accompanied by a certificate issued by the Society's executive council. The first award of the medal shall occur during the annual assembly of 1928.

- c) Interest earned on Foundation funds shall be used, if needed, for charitable purposes for the benefit of needy Society members, otherwise it will be added to the capital.

§3.

The Foundation shall be governed by a committee of five men elected at the 1928 annual assembly in Gössnitz for a term of four years (1928-1931). These elections shall be controlled by rule §12 of the Society's by-laws so that on 31st December 1929 one-half (two) of the members shall be chosen by ballot. Members can be re-elected without limitation. The Foundation capital is currently invested in an interest-bearing account at the Schönberg Savings and Loan Association. The foundation committee will submit a report annually to the Society as part of the Society's annual report. The business year is the calendar year.

§4.

In case of dissolution of the Society, the funds of the Foundation shall be combined with the remaining Society funds and made available to charitable purposes.

§5.

These by-laws shall become effective on the day they are approved by the plenary assembly of the Society.

Committee of the A. E. Glasewald Foundation

Rev. Naumann

Chairman

Gössnitz, 16th September 1927

Page 128

Glasewald Library. In this and the following issues of our philatelic newspaper we will present a meticulous new compilation of German-language books, brochures, specialized catalogues, etc. organized by specialty. A chronological journal listing will follow. Due to excess workload, we are presently unfortunately unable to compile a similar listing of world catalogues, auction catalogues or foreign-language literature. Meanwhile, we hope to be able to serve all serious philatelists with this work and are at the disposal of everyone seeking information on philatelic literature.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk
1st March 1904, Whole number 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2010

NACHRICHTEN DER PHILATELISTISCHEN BIBLIOTHEK VON

ALBERT GOTTSCHALK

1st March 1904, Whole number 1

Translation Digest

(Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.)

p.1

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk
2nd March 1904, Whole number 2

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Inge Riese for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2011

NACHRICHTEN DER PHILATELISTISCHEN BIBLIOTHEK VON
ALBERT GOTTSCHALK

2nd March 1904, Whole number 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.1

1. I will exchange German papers missing from my collection for those of possibly equal rarity value. Similarly, I will only take ones of equal value for my duplicates. I refuse to swap several lower value papers for a better one.
2. I will deliver papers in good, usable condition and guarantee completeness. Supplements are included only if available.
3. All inquiries are handled within eight days. Consignments are handled postage free against postage free, unless special arrangements are being made.

pp.2-3

Commentary on the Literature History.
Albert Gottschalk

Victor Suppantschitsch, the oldest and best known collector of German literature has just concluded his work on the Rarities of philatelic periodical literature up to the end of 1900 in Der Philatelist. The article is very educational - not only for the general mass of philatelists, who inexplicably do not consider the specialized literature, but also for the literature collectors, who will find valuable hints.

The opinion of Suppantschitsch regarding the rarity of German magazines will most likely result in challenges (disputes). The very first might be that Suppantschitsch believes that Skalweit's magazine published in 1886 and called Der Philatelist, which is 23 years after the first German periodical publication, is the greatest rarity. Suppantschitsch claims that he knows of no one who has the paper complete. But that also applies to the "Regular Weekly and Monthly Reports of Hamburg” 1872, numbers 1-4 and without a doubt there are other unknown (not re-discovered) numbers. Number 4 does not appear to be contained in any library. By the way, there is a particular story behind number 4. Alfred Moschkau, who achieved much more in regards to literature research than he has been given credit for, mentioned number 4 as published in his Regular Week and Month Report. Oddly enough Suppantchitsch, who normally follows Moschkau, did not consider this note, regardless that these two announcements were supported by the “General Stamp Indicator”. Only lately has he been including it as having been published - without mentioning Moschkau. Whether that means the existence of the published numbers 4-6 of the “German Stamp Collector” can be doubted, is questionable. The many listings of the mostly duplicated school newspapers under the RRR, noted as rare, should under no circumstances be compared with the “Stamp Collector” and the “German Stamp Newspaper” by Bauschke. No doubt, those pages are rare, because more than 25 copies can barely be made from its original. But the philatelic value has to be decided in comparison with the relative philatelic rarity and that is equal to zero and must remain zero, otherwise rewards would have to be offered to prepare such “rarities”. Suppantchitsch could object that he explicitly spoke only of rarities, regardless of philatelic value. But that is exactly the weak point of his work.

Although the matter is not that bad, because the lost rarity value almost always coincides with the printed real philatelic rarity value in our literature. But these value estimations have formed a precedent. Proof: The last number of Der Philatelist (number 2 of 1904). In it, the interesting stamp page of R. Wiering, a rag of the lowest calibre, has been elevated to a rarity of the first order. If this continues, then it won't be long before the libraries will pay for this “also literature” with ingots. And the reason is the authority of Suppantchitsch. Beside these shortcomings, many hardworking publications of the author follow, although one would have liked, that the German rarities would have been given a broader aspect. We miss a lot of papers, which might give the impression that they are worthless or without much value. Just to mention a few: The numbers 9 and 5 of the “Magazine for Stamp Collectors”, which were out of print soon after its publication in 1863 and the double number 34/35 of it and 37/38 of the “Berlin Illustrated Stamp Newspaper” and number 209 of the “General Stamp Indicator”, which is missing from the biggest libraries. Even Suppantchitsch does not have them.

Editor's Note: Normally I would give the magazine titles in German but the original is impossible to read and I dare not go back to the translator who took an inordinate amount of time to translate even this little bit. In any case, the original is readily available.

p.4

This appears to be a list of papers he wants.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk
1st April 1904, Issue 3.
Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM
May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2
Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk, 2nd April 1904, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk, 1st May 1904, Issue 5
Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk, 12th May 1904, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk
1st June 1904, Whole number 7

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2010

NACHRICHTEN DER PHILATELISTISCHEN BIBLIOTHEK VON
ALBERT GOTTSCHALK

1st June 1904, Issue 7

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.1

Index of duplicates I.

German periodicals, A. – F.

Exchange only, no sales

Those who receive this list but have no interest in it, please notify me and I will not send any more lists. Your postage will be refunded.

[pp.2-4]

The list of periodicals he has for sale.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk, 2nd June 1904, Issue 8

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk, 7th June 1904, Issue
2

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk, 10th June 1904, Issue 10

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk

15th September 1904, Issue 11/12

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk, 31st December 1904, Issue 13

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk, 6th January 1905, Issue 14

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk, 25th March 1905, Issue 15/16

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Nachrichten der Philatelistischen Bibliothek von Albert Gottschalk, 30th June 1905, Issue 17

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

André de Cock
René Poncelet's Library
[La Bibliothèque René Poncelet]
61st Public Auction, 7th, 9th & 14th July 1945, Willy Balasse, Brussels, Belgium, pp.41-42

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2006

RENÉ PONCELET'S LIBRARY

PREFACE

Anything regarding the past has its special charms. In philately it's old stamps and vintage books. It is as much the one as the other.

It was only twenty years after the birth of the postage stamp that philatelic literature made its appearance. It was, in fact, in September 1861 that François-Georges Berger-Levrault, a printer in Strasbourg, brought out a listing of all the stamps that were known to him. A copy of this very rare work which was part of the Crawford Library currently has a good home in the British Museum.

The first catalogues were published in Paris in December, 1861. These were by Alfred Potiquet, Edard de Laplante and Eugene Lacroix. The small brochure from Potiquet contained forty-three pages and its modest brown cover featured a one-cent stamp of the time. A short time later, Jean-Baptiste Moens published his first catalogue in Brussels. His journal Le Timbre-Poste dated from 1863 and the publication of this masterly work was continued until 1900. The first English and German periodicals date from the same era. A long series of philatelic articles was published from 1862 until 1866 in the Magasin Pittoresque under the signature of Natalis Rondot. This study contains some very important information from that era.

It was in 1873 that Jean-Baptiste Moens began the publication of his Bibliothèque des Timbrophiles comprising a set of eighteen works on the stamps of Peru, the Italian States and San Marino, Mauritius, Saxony, Luxemburg, Mecklenburg, as well as Taxis, Egypt and Suez, Belgium, Wurttemberg, Argentina, Natal, Schleswig-Holstein, Bergdorf and Prussia. A book on American local posts appeared in collaboration with Coster, as well as another on the United States in collaboration with Tiffany. All these works in editions of only 150 copies, now very rare, still serve as a basis for our journalistic research.

Collectors have understood for a long time that one cannot maintain a collection, worthy of the name, without documentation. The vast and unique library in Belgium created from the inheritance of the expert René Poncelet will be offered for sale to the public. Eminent philatelist and ardent book collector, René Poncelet acquired during the last forty years everything of importance that philatelic literature had produced. Many of these books are represented by deluxe and autographed editions. Valuable documentation, carefully kept up to date, and many reviews compliment this impressive collection.

This unique opportunity will present to collectors the chance to acquire works that have become irreplaceable. An intense competition will take place among book lovers and admirers of the great philatelist, René Poncelet.

André de Cock

END

André de Cock
The Bruck library
[La bibliothèque Bruck]
78th Auction Sale, 5th April 1947, Willy Balasse, Brussels, Belgium, [p.75]

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005

THE BRUCK LIBRARY

The philatelic library was, prior to the war, virtually non-existent within our country and rare were those who possessed a library capable of having such a title. It took the deaths and loss of Paul de Smeth and René Poncelet to see the need to develop a research library in Belgium.

If we may rue the disappearance of these important collections and the judicious selections amassed by these masters, we cheerfully report that philatelists have finally understood that any serious study cannot come about without a pile of documents.

No one would question the actual value of the hours involved in the works of a Moens, a Serrane, a Reuterskiöld, a Diéna or a Müller. We are struck with the thoroughness of these philatelic pioneers who opened the door to this area of study.

Years of patient research allowed Bruck, a philatelist as competent as he was modest, to gather scientific documents which encompassed not only stamps but also postal history in its entirety, the poor forerunner of philately too many times ignored, which in their original form aroused all the interest needed to present a philatelic document.

The dispersion of the Bruck Library, which is accomplished with discernment and a rare spirit of comprehension, offers to amateurs a new source to acquire priceless works.

This sale allows for a few sensational bids.

André de Cock

END

Otto Gleixner
The philatelic library in Munich
[Die Philatelistische Bibliothek in München]
Berner Briefmarken Zeitung, May/June 1995, Volume 87, Issue 5/6, pp.95-96

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005

THE PHILATELIC LIBRARY IN MUNICH

Although this library is one of the largest in the world, generally only advanced philatelists are aware of its existence. These are the philatelists that deal with specialist areas (about which the library can provide information).

The city of Munich took over this collection of philatelic literature some sixty years ago and integrated it into the City Library. This is why the collection is presently housed in the new building known as the Cultural Centre. The collection is housed on level 3.1. The philatelic library was founded in the early thirties. The founder Christoph Otto Müller then combined the collections of the largest Munich philatelic organizations (i.e. Tauma, The Munich Stamp Club, and the Munich Collectors Union). He also placed there his own private library as well as those of the important philatelists, F. H. Zinkgraf and Hugo Schroder. Expansion of the collection was made possible by the bequests of Alexander Leo and Mrs. Bertha Larish (stamp dealer's wife).

Through further efforts of the library, the former national newspaper, Das Postwertzeichen, (the publication of the former National German and Austrian Philatelic Union) finally established a fund that was left to the city of Munich in 1937 by Müller giving the library authority to make use of it. Müller was the right man for this role as he formed a collection from all the corners of the world, acquiring both old and new volumes until his retirement in 1964. He also understood the need to protect the collection during the disturbances brought about by the Second World War. Bombing would have caused much damage. He distributed the collection to farmers throughout the country.

In the Munich library could be found from the outset collections of philatelic literature as well as the literature of postal history as well as anything remotely connected to stamps, their manufacture or their use. The collection is arranged country by country, covering the entire world. Naturally the library provides services to authors and to publishing firms. These services are provided at no cost to the user. The library is always ready to help and is aware that the cost of such help can be prohibitive. Near the books one can find the periodicals. There are at present approximately 480 current publications bound and archived by date. The Berner Briefmarken-Zeitung, which began as the Schweizer Philatelistische Nachrichten, can be found in the library from the second year of issue in 1916 with the exception of the 1917 volume and one issue of 1918. Similarly the Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung can be found there from its first issue in 1891.

Auction catalogues (from approximately 200 firms) that generally become waste paper are maintained for future use. Since the beginning of this year electronic cataloguing of the entire collection has begun. This will allow for easier access to the collection using relatively minimal search commands.

This process of indexing the books and periodicals electronically will naturally be broad in scope. The search through these many works will be the most important task of philatelic researchers.

Unfortunately, the library has very few catalogues of foreign exhibitions. What is not found on the shelves near the reading room (there are places to sit up to 12 individuals) is easily accessible from the storage shelves in the basement and can be at one's disposal in a few minutes. Using a coin operated copier, documents can be copied without any trouble. Unfortunately, the staff, as in all libraries, has been reduced. There is only one philatelist employed to deal with enquiries.

The philatelic library in Munich is one of the few places in the world where philatelic literature and the literature of postal history are systematically collected and organized. The collection in the library is international in scope. There are works in 21 different languages. Authors, publishers, and auction houses treasure this library because their publications can be found here in Munich. They are there for future generations not only to hold but also to use. During the years 1983-1990 the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung published the catalogue of the library. This has since been published in two printed volumes. They are available for 10.50 DM. A supplement will appear at the end of this year. A new edition of these volumes will not appear.

All existing works, as is common in all libraries, are at least in part available electronically. The use of the reading room is available to all without any formalities. The borrowing of materials for those overseas is possible through the framework of the international lending library arrangements. Members of the Union of German Philatelists have other arrangements as these members support the library financially. If not for this support, the cost of maintaining the collection and the staff would have to be borne by the City of Munich.

END

Christoph Otto Müller

Catalogue of the Philatelic Section of the Munich State Library, 13 Weinstrasse [Katalog der Philatelistischen Abteilung der Stadtbibliothek München, Weinstrasse 13]
Philatelistischen Abteilung der Stadtbibliothek München, Munich, Germany
1938, pp.1-6

Translation of the introductory text only

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

CATALOGUE OF THE PHILATELIC SECTION OF THE MUNICH STATE LIBRARY, 13 WEINSTRASSE

Contents

- Order of use
- Origin and purpose of the Philatelic Section of the Munich Public Library*
- Sponsors
- Explanation*
- Index of the philatelic lending literature
 - Group I Countries - Special literature
 - Group II Subjects

 Translator's note: Only these Sections have been translated. The remaining Sections consist primarily of lists and names.

Origin and purpose of the Philatelic Section of the Munich Public Library

Today it is inconceivable to do serious collecting without the research results and experience to be found in philatelic literature. Today the serious collector also needs, besides the catalogues and journals, the more focused philatelic literature to be found in Reference works, Handbooks and in the numerous Periodical publications. The increasing number of specialized collectors especially, are dependent upon joining together with like minded collectors and seeking knowledge to be found only in publications from their special field. They are forced to borrow or purchase the special literature. This is only possible if it is available at reasonable prices and not already sold out due to the limited numbers published. Often, these demands can no longer be satisfied by individual collectors or clubs. Here public libraries need to step in. In North- and Middle Germany, the Preussische Staatsbibliothek [Prussian State Library] in Berlin, the Universitätsbibliothek [University Library] and the Deutsche Bücherei [German Library] in Leipzig, as well as the Stadtbibliothek [City Library] of Frankfurt am Main are available to the collectors. South Germany was neglected. until the Chairman of the Münchener Briefmarken-Klubs [Munich Stamp Collectors Club] Fr. H. Zinckgraf gave the unwanted items from his private library to the Munich City Library in Feb. 1931, together with material from the Club library, as a foundation for the Munich Philatelic Library. It was enlarged by the Larisch estate, gifts of unwanted works from the Club Library of Tauma and from the Münchener Ganzsachen-Sammler-Vereins [Munich Postal Stationary Clubs], from the private library of the Bavaria researcher Colonel Hugo Schröder, support from the Erforschung der Postgeschichte in Bayern [Society for Research into Postal History in Bavaria] and from individuals listed as sponsors on the Honor roll. For further enhancing the library credit must be given to Alexander Leo of Munich, the former editor of Das Postwertzeichen. At his instigation in 1934, the Leipzig library of the (old) Bund Deutscher und Österreichischer Philatelisten-Vereine [Association of German and Austrian Philatelic Clubs] was given to the Munich City Library and in 1938 the library of the editorial staff of Das Postwertzeichen was added.

Due to the kindness of the Staatsbibliothek [State Library] in Berlin, Munich received its duplicate philatelic literature. The acquisition of foreign philatelic literature is thanks to the Staatsbibliothek für München [Munich State Library], the Fürstlich Liechtensteinschen Regierung [Royal Liechtenstein Government], John B. Huber, D. W. Graveman in New York, Dr. J. H. van Peurse in The Hague (Netherlands) and Dr. Weinert in Pressburg.

Thanks have also to be expressed to the editorial staffs of the Völkischer Beobachter, the Münchener Neuesten Nachrichten and the Postmarke of Vienna, whose comments about the Munich Philatelic Library, published in their columns and in the Briefmarke Ecke of the V. B., always gained it new sponsors.

The Philatelic Section of the Munich City Library is, through new acquisitions and its extensive stock, now in a position to satisfy readers' requirements from Middle- and North-Germany, and could enter a contest with the best known libraries. This is thanks to the South German collectors, the Mayor of the capital city Karl Fiehler, Director of the Culture Office Max Reinhard and the head of the City Libraries of Munich Dr. H Sauter, who try hard to support all German collectors, with an exemplary facility.

Munich, Stamp Day 8th January 1939

Ch. Otto Müller

EXPLANATION

Abbreviations

For usage see the instructions in the alphabetical catalogue of the Prussian Library of the 10th of May 1899, found in the edition of the 10th of August. Preuss. Min. Erl. of 17th December 1920; Instructions of the Munich City Library of 1st April 1937; Kohl Stamp Handbook 11th Edition, and the other well-known philatelic abbreviations as found in the literature.

END

Wolfgang Maassen

“This man never loses his composure, he is a rock in the midst of a storm”

Reminiscences following the 300th Schwanke auction in Hamburg

[“Der Mann hat einfach die Ruhe weg, er ist ein Fels im Sturmgebräus”

Reminiszenzen zur 300. Schwanke-Auktion in Hamburg]

Philatelie, November 2005, Volume 57, pp.14, 16 & 18

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2006

“THIS MAN NEVER LOSES HIS COMPOSURE, HE IS A ROCK

IN THE MIDST OF A STORM”

REMINISCENCES FOLLOWING THE 300th SCHWANKE AUCTION
IN HAMBURG

So wrote the APHV-Nachrichtenblatt [National stamp dealers' association newsletter] more than thirty years ago about Paul Günther Schwanke. One could say the same today without qualification, about his son Hans Joachim Schwanke who has led the auction company which he founded together with his father in 1972, for twenty-five years. Another similarity: Father and son were always association-minded, one with the national stamp dealers' association (APHV), the other with the national auction association (BDB). This is sufficient reason, on the occasion of the 300th auction at the beginning of December in Hamburg, to move into the limelight a small “family saga” which thoroughly deserves recognition.

The father's biography at first glance reads just like one of the biographies of many who were born after the first World War. Born on the 14th of January 1920 in Hamburg, he graduated from a commercial high school which he attended from 1937-1939, was then drafted in 1939, and wounded shortly thereafter. In 1948, he married Dorothea Möller, who thereafter stood by his side as a faithful partner and helped to strengthen and expand the stamp business which had been begun in 1950 as a mail order business. The latter was initially run from the small home in Niendorf on the Kollau in Hamburg. Evidently there was enough space, especially since they could not yet afford a big move into central Hamburg. But this would soon change.

Before any such move, it was wise to gain experience. Schwanke went to school, so to speak, with Gustav Seeberger, who was then widely known as an auctioneer. There he learned the trade of auctioneer within the wide world of philately, from 1954-1967, and did it so well that he soon became one of the leading members of the firm. He was someone who one knew well and valued greatly.

It was his Hanseatic humour, the fine art of irony, as well as his relaxed nature and reliability, in other words all those qualities which even today mark a true Hanseatic personality, which impressed many business partners. One could rely on his word and his agreements – and one was never left in the lurch.

His colleagues in the APHV were able to attest to these qualities later in the nineteen sixties as they watched his total commitment. He, as a member of the APHV (Allgemeiner Deutscher Postwertzeichen-Händler Verband), soon became Vice-President in the Association of North German Stamp Dealers, and in 1967 simultaneously the Chairman and Vice-President of the APHV. In the same period, i.e. from 1966 to 1981, he was the editor and publisher of the APHV-Nachrichtenblatt and member of the Executive Board of the Wirtschaftsgenossenschaft des Deutschen Briefmarkenhandels e.G., Stuttgart (Trade association of German stamp dealers) later on, he became a member of IFSDA [International association of stamp dealers], for which he produced a guidebook in 1980.

How did he manage to do all that? As already mentioned, his wife Dorothea was a valuable and important support for him. But his son Hans-Joachim also appeared to follow in the father's footsteps, faithful to the motto that the apple does not fall far from the tree. Born on the 20th of January 1950, Hajo as his friends call him, already collected stamps as a seven year old and learned the auction business from his father early on. After his graduation and training as a wholesale and retail merchant in a then prominent stamp and coin dealership (Otto Hellig, Hamburg) he joined the family business in 1972. Father and son jointly founded Schwanke and Sohn Briefmarkenauktionen with its offices at number 1 Kleine Reichenstrasse in the centre of Hamburg, still a good address today.

The invitation to the first auction alone, which took place on the 24th of February 1973 in their own auction hall, marked both of the Schwankes more than words alone can describe. Both understood the need to give a special touch to the event and produced an original antique-looking invitation. The invitation spoke of a public notice by the Hohen Rathe der Freyen and Hansestadt Hamburg allgnädigst ertheilten Erlaubnis zur Abhaltung von Briefmarken-Auktionen (Old German for the High Councils of the Free and Hanseatic City of Hamburg have graciously granted permission for the conduct of a stamp auction), and those interested were even given instructions for the use of the elevator: Persons, especially those who may be perhaps burdened with all kinds of disabilities, and who may find the burdensome stairs a torture, are hereby informed that in the building there they may find of course two of the modern elevators, which make the scaling even of the highest floors into a happy outing and even ladies with a blessed belly will be spared any kind of difficulties.

This pure humour was precisely what helped the customers not to forget the evident knowledge and trustworthiness. This first auction counted as a "philatelic family celebration" and attracted many visitors, among them numerous prominent philatelists from Germany and abroad.

Month after month one auction followed another. It is difficult today to grasp what logistics were involved here – to send 5000 catalogues and to service 1000 accounts of sellers and buyers within fourteen days. This effort, requiring the services of the whole family, noticeably impacted them all, but with the success of the firm additional employees were added. Sabine Tegetmeyer, to whom Hans Joachim Schwanke became engaged in 1975 and then married became part of the family business. There was plenty of work, especially when three children, all sons, gave convincing testimony to the fact that Hamburgers were able to value more than mere work.

Paul Günther Schwanke died quite unexpectedly on the 16th of September 1981 as a consequence of the effects of war injuries. This loss was not easily overcome not merely by the organization, but especially by the family members. The widow Dorothea continued to contribute but now it meant even harder work for them all.

In 1982 the 100th auction took place, with as many as 2,500 lots and, as before, with offers which were aimed at collectors. The rapid settlement after an auction turned out to be a positive move, because the customers appreciated it and passed the word. The attitude of the Schwankes not to take philately so desperately seriously, as shown by so many funny and light-hearted lot descriptions which gave rise to smiles, were also well received.

In the nineties, Hajo Schwanke changed to only six auctions per year, although with more wide-ranging, internationally mixed offerings from around the whole world. He even succeeded in attracting the collections of famous collectors, such as the Mehrtens Collection (1999); Bremen – philatelic precursors from the beginning and postal history to 1875; USA 1847-1861 Exhibition Collections of postal rate changes, intercontinental mail, and transatlantic mail; Great Britain - Special Collection (2000); Transatlantic Mail Connections (2002); the “Goldbek” Collection: World-Wide Covers (2003); Senator-Collection Part I (2004); and Wolfgang Diesner: Postal History Studies. In the 300th auction we have the Corona Collection Part I (Rarities from 1933 to 1945) which clearly continues the tradition.

Exciting Auctions

The right admixture, as much in the offer as in the buyers, together with often quite original advertisements with plays on words and clever humour were only one of the many formulae for lasting success. This is surely easier said than done, but it still works as well today. Years ago Hans-Joachim Schwanke introduced the concept of “The 100 Euro-Starter Lots” and thereby garnered headlines world-wide. They featured a few or many rarities, always worth far more than 100 Euros, which are offered without reserve. Whoever is then in the room experiences a real auction atmosphere, namely heated battles of bidders and raises in the bids, which far exceed the minimum bid.

Attributes which today are considered anything but obvious or belong even to the category of public property, such as Schwanke’s drive for real auctions where the auctioneer acts above all as representative of the interests of a third party, transparency visible in the case of shipments by strangers, and the publication of lists of prices realised all count among them. He did not approve of hidden items from his own stock or calling a hundred or more lots at the same time. Better to be small and refined than a mass organization, in which the individual customer drowns.

That the membership of the Bund Deutscher Briefmarken-Versteigerer (BDB) [Association of German Stamp Auctioneers] strongly subscribes to the values of ethical behaviour on the basis of legal regulations, was obvious among the majority of his colleagues when they gladly saw him as President of the organization from 1990 until 2002. After his service he wanted to devote himself again to his auction house. Before he left office, in the wake of the almost legendary Volker Parthen, he was able to set the standard as auctioneer and businessman and as a fair and trustworthy mediator among the Associations.

A Heart for Literature

Schwanke is in essence a collector. More precisely, he has always remained a philatelist but also a hopeful idealist. Otherwise, one could hardly comprehend why he supports his wife's commitment to philatelic literature so strongly and maintains now, as before, his passion for postal history.

Sabine Schwanke, who is a trained graduate librarian, managed a small specialized bookstore for fifteen years and is still in charge of a mail order bookstore and therefore that background alone explains why she remains enthusiastic and supportive of philatelic literature. This finds expression not only in regular offerings of literature items in the auctions but found special expression in the four superior literature auctions held to date. In addition, with her husband, she holds a singular German record: in one of the literature auctions, they realized what up to then was the highest price for a philatelic literature article, namely 16,000 DM [About £5,300.] for Woodward: *The Postage Stamps of Japan and Dependencies (1928). It will be no small task to exceed this price in the future.

Both of them emphasize their specialties, exhibit their common undertaking at big fairs and exhibitions but also on the internet, where they were one of first auctioneers to do so. One has to march with the times. Those who are familiar with the important foreign publications will often find the advertisements of Schwanke and thereby recognize the good reputation and success of the firm. Schwanke's membership of the PTS and APS, the British and American dealer organizations respectively, further supports this impression.

Since 2002, Sabine Schwanke has headed the Philatelic Library of Hamburg. Since 2005, both of them have been members of the AIJP, the world union of authors, journalists and friends of philatelic literature. Both of them have long understood that the two "Bs" belong together: die Briefmarke und das Buch [The stamp and the book]. And that is true not only of the past but also for the future.

END

H. F. [Heinrich Fränkel]
The Trojan War in philately
[Der Trojanische Krieg in der philatelie]
Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, January 1891, Volume 1, Issue 4, pp.37-39

Translation produced by Louise White for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2006 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

THE TROJAN WAR IN PHILATELY

Shakespeare did not write his dramas himself. He was a fraud. Lord Bacon is said to be the author of his works. There are many people, who believe this claim, which appeared 30 years ago, despite all contrary evidence. There are just as many who consider the butcher Orton, the swindler, convicted by a jury trial, to be the rightful heir of the old family of Tichborne. Recently the American physician, Dixon, claimed to take the honour of the discovery of the tuberculosis bacillus away from Robert Koch. Why shouldn't the narrow circle of philately have their pretender and his supporters, they who have been involved for more than 10 years in a struggle to replace the true inventor of the postage stamp.

The pretender is the book seller James Chalmers of Dundee, long dead, for whose cause his son Patrick Chalmers has fought with long and frequent publications. The idol, to be removed from its pedestal, is Rowland Hill. The historical portrait of his character is inconstant, distorted by both the hatred and admiration of the parties.

We do not wish to be followers of the defenders nor the opponents of Rowland Hill. We wish to contribute neither a history of the reform of the British postal service, a contribution to scientific philately, thoughts about the entitlement to discovery, nor pronounce a judgment in this "boring" matter (Philatelist of 1st December 1890) Neither does it occur to us, to deny both Chalmers and Hill and elevate as the discoverer, the copper engraver, Bacon, as the "inventor" (Pbihilatelist, above.) because he produced the first postage stamp which was ordered. Should perhaps credit for creating the dynamo machine be given to Mr. Siewert, a worker, who produced the machine from an idea of Siemens, who is called the inventor. No, our purpose with these lines is to describe the events and the current status of the debate, without influencing the reader and without a foregone conclusion. There have already been enough sins committed inside and outside the walls of Troy.

With his pamphlet of 1837, Rowland Hill started the ball rolling, bringing the reform of the Post in gear. It is possible that there were earlier thoughts, which floated about, condensed and developed so that the these possibilities of reform became clear after Hill formulated the principles of the same fee for any distance and the prepayment of the same.

In his autobiography, Rowland Hill gives full credit to a few of his predecessors. He praises the services of Robert Wallace, who had earlier suggested a postal reform in the sense of reducing the cost of mailing and determining the cost according to the distance without consideration of the path that had to be taken. Hill mentions specifically, that he owes the idea of prepayment of postage by stamped envelopes to the book seller Knight. In June 1834, when one had not yet even thought of postage stamps in one's dreams, Knight had suggested the use the of stamped envelopes for newspapers. Nowhere, however, does he name a predecessor for the ideas of a uniform penny postage charge and the use of a stamp to pay the postage in advance.

This last thought is first found in the second edition of Hill's pamphlet of February 1837. There he suggests in the case that an illiterate would bring a letter to the Post Office and was unable to write the address onto the franking envelope, a stamped piece of paper, whose reverse side is covered with glue, could assist in the franking process. He remarks modestly that this method of assistance had virtually become the rule. We look in vain for the name of James Chalmers, the book dealer and printer in Dundee, among the men, whom Rowland Hill mentions as his predecessors.

His name was unknown up to the end of the 1870s in the very widest circles, except in Dundee and the surroundings, there as that of a worthy man, an advocate of postal reform, a respected producer of postage stamp essays. Only after that time, did Patrick Chalmers, whose activity is probably known to every philatelist, begin his campaign to award his long dead father James Chalmers the honour of the invention of the postage stamp. The great quarrel began then, Gündel, Himmelbauer, &c., on Chalmers' side, Major Evans, Siewert, etc., on Hill's side. At first Patrick Chalmers based his claim on the fact, that James Chalmers in 1839 submitted designs to the treasury department, which had made a public request for designs for stamped envelopes, letter sheets and stamps to be used separately (postage stamps) When Patrick Chalmers became aware that Rowland Hill had already recommended an adhesive stamp in a pamphlet in February 1837 and before a parliamentary commission at the same time as well, he made a claim that his father had recommended such a stamp long before 1837. As proof he cited only the recognition, which his father received from the municipal council of Dundee. He continues to support his claim in this way until today. To be sure, it is appropriate and obligatory for the German philatelic council to maintain, that they should demand the proof from him, that his father is recognized as originator of the postage stamp in his home country before the German philatelists recognize him as such.

It is remarkable, that James Chalmers himself made only one attempt to contest the priority of the first suggestion of a postage stamp, namely in a letter to Rowland Hill of 1st October 1839 with which he enclosed the stamp designs he had made in response to the request of the Treasury department. In this he wrote, that he had published this suggestion almost two years previously and then notified Wallace, a member of parliament in a publication of February 8th 1840. Rowland Hill answered on the 18th January 1840. He noted that he had made the recommendation of the use of postage stamps already in February 1837 (therefore more than two years before the 1st October 1839). In a letter of May 1840, Chalmers excused himself, saying he had in good faith considered himself to be the first "in the field", citing the circumstances which led him to that belief, admitted, that he had been better informed by Hill's letter, but thought nonetheless, that his plan more closely approximated the contemporary usage, than Hill's recommendations to the commission.

That is the only sign of life, which Chalmers' father made in this matter. He himself set aside the publication of his recommendations in the fall of 1837, accepted the explanation of Hill and did not dispute the matter any further.

Now in a surprising manner, the longer the conflict went on, the more numerous the brochures of Patrick Chalmers became, and the more witnesses were found for a fact that James

Chalmers never maintained. There appeared old gentlemen, contemporaries of James Chalmers, who said they had heard, that Chalmers talked of the idea of a postage stamp before 1837, yes, had even seen such postage stamps in his workshop in Dundee already in 1834.

While most of these testimonies have suffered over time because of a certain vagueness, one is not unjustified in sensing that the postage stamps meant are those which Chalmers prepared for the Treasury Department of 1839, according to a Mr. Maxwell, most certainly. This gentleman was an apprentice to Chalmers until the end of October 1834 and claims to have worked on the production of these postage stamps before leaving Chalmers. He feels certain that this was the case, before he left his apprenticeship. To be sure, he remained in Dundee and later often came to the Chalmers print shop. It remains for each person to decide whether his testimony is completely reliable or whether one should assume, that it is impossible to remember precisely events of his youth after the passage of 56 years.

Now the postage stamp of 1834 is said to be have been found in Friedl's collection in Vienna. This comes from an old collection, Proofs of the date of its making are not to hand. About 1834 so it is said, but the inscription Not more than one ounce, two Pence, exactly the postage recommended in Hill's pamphlet, indicates that it was made only after February 1837. This is supposed to be the same as the 1839 Chalmers' essays owned by Hill's son, which were shown at the London Jubilee Exhibition. That the cancellation is a different one, cannot influence the judgement of whether the date of origin was 1839 or 1834, because different cancellations and suggestions were tried by Chalmers. Whether this material itself is sufficient to invalidate the testimony of James Chalmers and to void his renouncement of his priority as the inventor, is left to the decision of the reader.

Perhaps Chalmers was occupied with the idea and the production of a postage stamp already in 1834. Whether his idea had the purpose of prepayment of postage, is uncertain. He did publish his thoughts about the material later than Rowland Hill. A direct or indirect relationship between the two has not yet been demonstrated. When Chalmers brought his plans to light out of his small area in Scotland, Rowland Hill had already won public opinion in England for his idea, which also contained the germ of the thought of a postage stamp.

That the attacks on Hill's character were justified, that the insinuation is proven, (see the pieces by Gündel in Postwertzeichen, 1890, Issues 1, 2 & 3):

Chalmers had the idea in 1834, shared it with his business friend Knight, through whom it reached Hill. Hill misused his official position for a shabby rejection of the legitimate claim of the inventor.

an impartial person will hardly agree.

The Philatelic Society in London, the Philatelic Society of the United States and North America, the Canadian Society have declared their opposition to Chalmers. Mention has already been made of the German Philatelic Conference, negating their own judgment, decided in favour of the Englishman (Hill).

Finally, among leading English philatelists, Mr. Philbrick, President of the Philatelic Society finally spoke out against Chalmers, and mentioned that his essays are supposed to be pressed onto the seal of the letter, (thus not glued) so that half remained unattached. The plan is totally unworkable and is rejected as unusable. Is this our adhesive postage stamp?

Philbrick explains, that according to the documents in his hands, Rowland Hill had always had priority. Unfortunately, he does not say where he had obtained the original writings and letters of James Chalmers. We would only wish that Patrick Chalmers would follow the suggestions of his opponent Pearson Hill, the son of Rowland Hill, and lay out the entire matter before a board of English judges.

Until that time we leave Chalmers and Hill to give our readers peace. We will not deny them really new facts. Now, however, it is All Quiet in Troy.

The articles inspired or even written by Chalmers or Gündel, which are appearing in so many journals, can hardly be characterized as anything new, the very least the last brochure supporting Chalmers from P. M. McBain, a banker in Arbroath, Chalmers' home town. Its purpose was to identify and glorify an outstanding son of Arbroath, in Scotland. While that piece does give some justification to Hill's merits, this is not at all true of an attached piece by Patrick Chalmers, repeating the presentation of evidence assigning Hill unlawful appropriation of foreign ideas.

And so this the battle for the beautiful Helen, of the postage stamp, goes on. Perhaps we will learn later, who was victorious: Hill-Paris or Chalmers-Menelaus.

END

[Dr. Hans Brendicke (Editor)]

On the Chalmers-Hill-question

[Zur Chalmers-Hill-frage]

Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, August 1891, Volume 1, Issue 11, p.143

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2006

THE CHALMERS-HILL QUESTION

We have dutifully received the new pamphlet from Patrick Chalmers. As always, it will certainly show, without doubt, that James Chalmers invented the first adhesive stamp in 1834 (a sample of which Dundee-Stamp can be found in the Friedl's museum in Vienna). In our opinion at least, the first known and verified public mention of a stamp, was by Rowland Hill in February 1837. When Rowland Hill politely thanked Chalmers for his suggestions, received in 1838 or at least after February 1837, for the usage of stamps, it does not change the fact that he was the first to propose the stamp. It is of little relevance that Chalmers participated (as did so many others) in the Treasury request of 23rd August 1839, which asked for proposals for the design and lay-out of postage stamps. Patrick Chalmers himself concedes that such a plan is not simple or practical. Therefore, if a "first" plan from James Chalmers from 1837 is validated, which was on the same basis as the official system. There is no evidence that Rowland Hill, knew of the plan, when he proposed the stamp in 1837. At least this evidence can be taken from the Parliamentary proceedings which preceded the Penny-Stamp-Law. Some were afraid that the paper manufacturers and dealers would be harmed by the use of postage letter-sheets (envelopes), which were made solely from Dickinson paper. The adhesive stamp, which had been suggested earlier by Hill as a temporary measure, was recommended as a way out from several sides (Wallace, Lord Ashburton). No one mentioned Chalmers' name. Finally it was decided to give the Government a free hand, that means the Treasury, where Hill was employed, to carry out the Law. There it was decided on the use of envelopes and stamps. There was no evidence presented that this decision was based on Chalmers' earlier work. Rather it was proven: the suggestion was that by Hill of February 1837; what was not proven: the production of the stamp by Chalmers in 1834 and the suggestions by Chalmers before February 1837. To this can be added the rejections of Chalmers' claims by Hill, which completely satisfied Chalmers Sr.: an out of court acknowledgement which should satisfy Patrick Chalmers. The facts remain the same as stated in our N^o.4. Maybe P. Ch. will provide other evidence but there is not much hope, since he would have already made it public.

END

“Philatelica” and “Wereldpost”
[“Philatelica” en “Wereldpost”]
Wereldpost, December 1919, Volume 1, Issue 12, p.153

Translation produced by Lucien Joel for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2006 (Minor editorial changes, February 2008)

“PHILATELICA” AND “WERELDPOST”

The well-known International Society Philatelica of 's Gravenhage has made an agreement with this publisher to make Wereldpost the official publication of the Society.

Besides an "en bloc" joining of a great number of Dutch philatelists we do expect a regular growth of private readers which was happily already observable especially last month. A good example we hope that even before 1920, will be followed by many!

END

Christoph Otto Müller

From the memoirs of a professional philatelic librarian

[Aus den erinnerungen eines philatelistischen berufsbibliothekars]

Der Sammler-Lupe, June 1953, Volume 8, Issue 12, p.182

Translation produced by Mark Anderson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2006

FROM THE MEMOIRS OF A PROFESSIONAL PHILATELIC LIBRARIAN

It is not every day that you find a government agency taking care of philatelic literature, nor a city bureaucrat growing into the role of the only professional philatelic librarian in Germany. The unusual can be explained only by the concurrence of fortunate circumstances like the pro-philatelic predisposition of certain influential persons in the Bavarian capital and the fact that forty-seven years ago a stamp-friendly Santa Claus dazzled me with his beloved mixture of colourful stamps from around the world, awakening in me a passion for collecting. What could mesmerize a young high school student more than encountering the Aztec emperor Guatemoc, the founder of the Inca empire Manca Capac, the black swans of Western Australia and Peruvian llamas in the universe of a stamp album! The inscriptions on the Olympic stamps from the Hellenic state, donated to me by a Greek wine merchant, made learning the Greek script easier for the future translator of Homer and this provided an excellent supplement to the explanation of the labours of Hercules given by my professor, the Upper Bavarian "Horace", Dr. Stemplinger. It was but a small step to learning the Cyrillic script through the correspondence with a Russian countess who I met as a stamp hunter on vacation at the productive general delivery window of the Munich main custom house and who provided me, among other things, with the beautiful Romanov set unused. How great my passion for collecting was at that time can be seen from the fact that I took every Mark that I got for the purchase of 2 pretzels during my break to the Veterinarian post office in order to purchase the curious Bavarian 2-pfennig cards with 3-pfennig surcharge. But I still lacked the coveted "black 1-pfennig", although no one would have noticed if my father, at the time inspector for the Bavarian salt works, had taken at least 1 item out of the packet of 24 for me. I had to watch powerlessly as these 24 pieces made their way to Larisch and the payment of 240 Gold Marks disappeared into the coffers of the state. Although my father was more inclined to song and fellowship than to collecting, he compensated me by helping me to obtain Koloman Moser's masterpieces – the Bosnian landscapes series and the Austrian Jubilee issue of 1906. I was so taken by the wigged heads of Karl VI, Josef II and his mother Maria Theresa that I even went 10 pfennig into debt for them.

After a long hiatus in collecting - brought about by the end of my university years, entry into city government, military service, civil service examinations and civil service training – a stay in the sick bay once again brought the "one-year cannoneer" closer to stamps. Motivated by an inherent propensity to historical study, I busied myself with biography via the statesmen and freedom fighters who were depicted on American stamps. Since the Flemish Campaign had not netted me any philatelic booty, I developed into a "head-hunter" who had the ambition to gather together all personalities that were available on stamps; and who did not fail to indulge his passion even during trips to the Balkans, Morocco, Madrid, Paris, London, Prague, Budapest and Amsterdam. It was precisely this passion that brought me into contact with the Swedish engineer Arsenius, creator of the reference work Porträtt-Frimärken and the Dutch creator of the book series Philatelie en Geschiedenis, J. H. van Peursem, a prohibitionist, who during a visit to Munich managed to desecrate the Hofbräuhaus with a soft drink. The search for the necessary documents brought me into contact with philatelic literature. I combed through Senf's "Illustrated Stamp Journal", "The Contributions to Philately" and Krötzsch's "German Stamp Magazine". But the philatelic librarian was not born until after a visit to the successful Philatelic Exhibition in Munich in 1924, during which, as a new member of Tauma, the club's library was consigned to me and I came into close contact with the standard works by the likes of Diena, Moens, Moschkau and Suppantshitsch. Soon after this, I took over the library of the Munich Postal History Society. My acquaintance with the chairman of the Munich Stamp Club, the "éminence grise" of South German philately, F. H. Zinckgraf, was important in the development of a philatelic literature centre in Munich. It is he who made his private philatelic library available to the planned consolidation of the fund of Munich philatelic literature works in one room of the city library. Although I was officially still bookkeeper and cashier, it was possible for me to considerably enlarge this core stock with the help of the unforgettable Alexander Leo, who from time to time would write in his "Postage Stamps". Volume by volume, I rescued his valuable Great Britain collection from the raining bombs; the recompense was the bequest of his literature collection to the city library. My efforts to obtain the duplicates of the Prussian State Library at the beginning of World War II led me to the imperial capital. Here I had the good fortune of being introduced to the magical world of philatelic specialties by the guru of German philately Under Secretary Dr. Kalckhoff in his apartment. I delighted especially in the exquisite beauty of his telegraph stamps.

After a short stint as library official, total war dragged me back to the cash register. But it could not prevent me from filling out thousands of little cards for a philatelic literature index; this during air raid alerts in stark nights of bombardments. I continued this activity into the time of political housecleaning. Thus, the index of literature from German journals came to be, which in no time enabled the transmitting of literature information world wide, and which it was not the lot of Schmitt diel of Hamburg to finish.

Meanwhile, autumn 1947 had arrived. Called back to library service, it was my duty to re-establish old relationships, recover warehoused inventories and make the library once again accessible to the public. One year later, in connection with a visit to IMABA in Basel, I returned to Munich laden with booty. In two heavy trunks I brought out of Switzerland Napier's work on Brazil, Lee's Uruguay treatise and other rarities that I had abducted from the quiet abode of my exemplary host Albert A. Kronenberg in Church St., Binningen. A good-natured customs agent of Bavarian origin did not neglect to recommend to his co-worker that I and my treasures be treated with indulgence.

Lee's Uruguay brought particular pleasure to a giant, who I would have taken for an opera singer as he entered the library had he not introduced himself as the farmer Roberto Hoffmann from Iriondo, Argentina. He had just flown from London with his gold medal and had chosen the roundabout route London-Munich-Zürich-home in order to visit the Munich philatelic library and perfect his knowledge of the Diligencia and Montevideo issues.

It would take up too much space here to recount everything I experienced as a philatelic librarian rubbing shoulders with collectors from every corner of the world and all walks of life. Some were so eager that they spent their vacations in the library and turned it upside down; others, upon seeing literature that they once had owned, were reminded with sadness of their lost homeland.

The task of establishing connections between like-minded people - the friends of philatelic literature - in Australia, Indonesia, Brazil, Canada and Europe - belongs to Literatur Nachrichten, which since 1951 is a distillation of 120 domestic and foreign philatelic journals and serves chiefly specialized collectors. These Reports resulted from my assignment as national representative for philatelic literature at the Munich Congress.

It is gratifying work to enhance Germany's image through international philatelic literary activity, to enrich the spare time of professional workers and to facilitate research. This awareness compensated me for much of the lack of understanding I encountered. Looking back on nearly forty years of service I would like to join the Roman grammarian Terenianus Maurus in his assertion Habent fata libelli (Books have their own destiny), and libelli philatelici (philatelic books) in particular. I almost have the feeling that there are destinies that result from working with philatelic books.

END

Ch. Otto Müller

Announcement from the Federal Group for Philatelic Literature

[Bekanntgabe der Bundesstelle Philatelistische Literatur]

Die Sammler-Lupe, May 1950, Volume 5, Issue 10, p.161

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

March 2013

ANNOUNCEMENT FROM

THE FEDERAL GROUP FOR PHILATELIC LITERATURE

Friends of philatelic literature will now have at their disposal a magazine Archiv der Philatelistischen Literatur published by Alfred Ihm (13a) Wunsiedel, an organ which will include besides monthly announcements about philatelic literature and a chronological list of the content of the domestic and foreign postage stamp magazines, new accessions of the largest West German Philatelic Library, the Philatelic Section of Munich's City Library (Town hall # Z366 HI) by way of the literature communication office through Bundesstelle B, which will provide wants and offers of philatelic literature, answer fundamental questions on the literature i.e. cataloguing, arrangement, bibliography, indices, etc., and will promote the exchange of experiences.

To be successful in the realm of philatelic literature Bundesstelle B suggests to all societies that their librarian or representative to Bundesstelle B have at least one copy of Archiv für Philatelistische Literatur available, so that they can stay up-to-date in the field of philatelic literature, the backbone of philately.

Ch. Otto Müller

Leiter Bundestelle B

München-Rathous Z. 366/III

Stadtbibliothek München

Philatelistische Abteilung

END

State Post Central Office/ Research Organization of the DRP
[Reichspostzentramt/Forschungsanstalt der DRP]
Tear sheet from an unknown source, pp.35-36

Translation produced by H. Heilbronner for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2006

STATE POST CENTRAL OFFICE/ RESEARCH ORGANIZATION OF THE DRP

The State Post Central Office (RPZ) Berlin and the research organization of the DRP which emerged from it on the 1st January 1937 occupied an especially important position.

In the case of the RPZ a liaison officer represented the wishes of the Army even in peacetime. The F [Communications] branch of the RPZ had approximately the same tasks as the present Central Communications Office (FTZ). Its energetic and versatile cooperation in the creation of domestic and foreign networks during the war has already been briefly mentioned. In addition, it developed, tested, and not least produced F-goods of all sorts - also for the Army - and took care for their integration etc. The section We (Wehrmacht - Army) with four experts busied itself with the desires for changes of operations which emerged from the Army and the civil defence. Its work of course touched also all areas of the F system.

The Research Organization of the DRP (RPF), known in 1944 as the Research Organization of the Reich Postal Minister, had its headquarters in Berlin. Its immediate task was to further the introduction of television into Germany and also to clarify the special questions concerning electro-and especially high frequency transmission techniques and of their physics. It did not only carry out its own researches but also placed orders with substantially independent scientific institutions which worked together with the RPZ, with the F industry, as well as with other institutions and army organizations.

Below are listed briefly some of the work carried out by the RPF:

The research on television resulted in early successes and in worthwhile work in the area of radar. They were pushed further even as the Air Minister and head of the Air Force Göring wanted to put a brake on this research in his domain in the year 1938 because "he could not suffer sand castles." Later, Dr. Mögel, a physicist active in this area of work in the RPZ/RPF, became "Chief Engineer" with the chief of NVW (Nachrichtenverbindungswesen – communications system) of the Air Force.

The RPF also worked on the development of procedures for the decoding and coding of language and telegraphy. Members of the RPF achieved great successes in the decoding of hostile wireless traffic. Occasionally, they even succeeded in listening in on conversations, in the USA, of President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill, which produced important guides for the conduct of the war.

One group developed radio relay and carrier frequency instruments, activated them and used them for example on a line between Patras (Greece) and Korfu-Monte Sardo (Italy).

Investigations were made there into the possibility of taking photographs from aeroplanes of areas flown over and then transmit them to far distant stations.

The RPZ/RPF were able to give much practical advice when the Army introduced a new line method, namely turnstile lines (Drehkreuzlinien) in order to span the great distances of Russia. They continually published special pamphlets, which were accepted by the Army as service instructions, on the contemporary status of the development and the recently won experiences in the construction and operation of the lines and instruments.

A central headquarters for radio weather forecasting research and guidance examined the spread of radio waves and advised the Army to use certain frequencies for nearby and distant wireless traffic, independent of the time of year or day and of traffic conditions, etc.

Forced by the war, the RPF took over additional tasks; thus the physicist Manfred von Ardenne, on orders of the RP Minister Ohnesorge, also became active in atomic energy research . (von Ardenne, Memoiren, Kindlervelag, 1972). The RPF ceased its activities with the end of the war.

In the post-war period Many of its research findings became the bases for further work and led to further successes; many scientists and members subsequently remained active in research.

END

The German philatelic Press
[Die Deutsche, Philatelistische Presse]
Philatelisten-Zeitung, May 1927, Volume 35, Issue 5, pp.70-72

Translation of the introductory text only

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2007

THE GERMAN PHILATELIC PRESS

Several inquiries in connection with our magazine Rundschau number 4, occasionally get us going to bring this area to conclusion. Especially emphasised in almost all magazines was the wish for a full list of all stamp magazines which are no longer published owing to war, inflation, and so forth, which have been very disruptive and have not helped to make things clear.

We are trying to address this by giving our readers below, a list of all of the current free-standing German language philatelic periodicals that are known to us. (We would still like to note that sending back-numbers for viewing is not possible; however, we are happy to send sample copies and will try and arrange for them).

Finally, we would like to follow up with a compilation of the up-to-now little noticed supplements and columns from the regular daily press.

Translator's note: See the original for the list of journals.

Index of German-language stamp magazines

(We are extremely grateful for additions and corrections)

V = Publishing house, address for ordering a sample copy

O = without articles * = Advertisement sheet

X = appears in instalments

If not otherwise stated, the magazine appears monthly

Editor's note: This article is continued in Philat. Trans. 572.

END

The German philatelic press
[Die Deutsche, philatelistische presse]
Philatelisten-Zeitung, June 1927, Volume 35, Issue 6, pp.82-83

Translation produced by Paul Meyer for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2007

Editor's note: See Philat. Trans. 571 for the first part.

THE GERMAN PHILATELIC PRESS

The table published in the last issue requires the following corrections:

German-English-French

Das I.T.C.C.-Journal, Frankfurt a. Oder, appears every eight weeks.

Furthermore we have to point out that Der Philatelist, Dresden, is likely to discontinue at the end of this year because the publisher, the Internationale Philatelisten-Verein zu Dresden (1877) will henceforth make Das Postwertzeichen its official publication.

Let's continue our considerations. This time also we got quite a number of replies which took a lot of time to answer. Many respondents felt the lack of subscription prices and particularly of circulation figures to be a disadvantage. But we would like to emphasize that subscription prices and circulation figures in no way permit us to draw conclusions regarding quality.

Obviously the party advertising has no idea which journals may be suitable for his ads; for he cannot possibly steep himself in the areas covered by every one. He ultimately has to rely on the vague information offered about circulation, etc. (What would an official check of the circulation figures yield?) Circulation figures correspond in no way to an advert's chances of success since most journals are supported by obligatory subscribers. Experience shows that the latter take less interest in their journals than individuals who have subscribed voluntarily and regularly read the journal.

Therefore, any person who wants to be satisfied with the success of his advert should advertise in journals which are read for the excellence of their content. The question furthermore arises, what explains the considerable number of philatelic journals published in Germany, seeing that they cannot guarantee any worthwhile income to the publisher?

In order to come to some conclusion, let's group the 37 journals briefly. The 14 German journals published outside the country proper, base their content on the areas preferred by collectors in these countries and are not included in the following list. To begin with, we also have to exclude the five journals dealing with Cinderellas and private post stamps because of their special content.

Furthermore, 10 additional journals cover certain limited areas or take the shape of announcements or price lists. There finally remain 22 journals that, apart from announcing club news, devote themselves to the whole area of philately. They are published partly by dealers, but for the most part by stamp clubs. This very circumstance, i.e. that each club desires to have its own journal, results in hopeless fragmentation.

At the same time, we are in no way denying the need to publish information of specific interest to the club, something that is absolutely necessary in larger clubs. However, giving precedence to the latter and reprinting the most detailed club news, etc., at the expense of the actual philatelic text, has been a major contributing factor in the trivialization of the philatelic text, resulting in its present low state.

As long as this unnecessary fragmentation continues and the priority is given to club business, the German philatelic press will never be able to do justice to its task of promoting philately and recruiting members. This task has therefore recently been undertaken by the daily press, opening quite a few columns and even supplements suitable to recruit new members for our hobby. Here we can furnish our readers with a listing and will be grateful for any additions.

Translator's Note: See the original document for the list.

The daily press outside Germany also diligently brings philatelic news - only a few instances are mentioned here - and even transatlantic German newspapers offer space to philately. Although the activity of the daily press is most welcome, we must not overestimate its effectiveness, seeing that the number of readers targeted is limited and tends to be local. Moreover, the attentive observer will notice that the reasons for the introduction of stamp columns have not always been the best, but have been caused by the fact that their competitors also publish stamp news, a fact that is clearly shown by the listing.

Even journals in certain other fields occasionally bring stamp news, but finding it, is likely to meet with considerable difficulty. Let's just mention one small magazine addressed to young people, the agricultural youth journal Die Blaubandwoche, which is able to do quite active recruiting among the young under the heading the little stamp friend.

To sum up our considerations, we have to conclude that the specialized philatelic press urgently requires an organic collaboration in order to do justice to its tasks.

How much arduous work, how many thousands of Marks are wasted every month, that are urgently needed for the recruitment of new members and the consolidation of our youth movement!

END

Bibliography: Periodicals
[Bibliografie: Tijdschriften]
De Philatelist, May 1928, Volume 3, Issue 5, p.112

Translation of the introductory text only

Translation produced by Ben Jansen for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2007

BIBLIOGRAPHY: PERIODICALS

In order to save space, we will, as of today, suspend the list of journals that we regularly receive, ordered by country, and which was included in the two previous issues.

In its place we will include three to four times per year a list like the one below, in which the journals received will be presented in random order. This list will also include the abbreviations as used in the Artikeloverzicht [Summary of Articles], which we will continue regularly.

In addition, announcements will be made concerning journals that have come in our possession at a future date and which are not part of the list below, those that have been changed and those that have ceased to be published.

END

Argentine philatelic bibliography
[Bibliografía filatélica Argentina]
Cronista Filatélico, April 2003, Whole number 245, pp.6-8

Translation produced by Carlos Fergut for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2007

ARGENTINE PHILATELIC BIBLIOGRAPHY

XIX, XX, and XXI Centuries

Philatelic Literature was born just a few years after stamp collecting emerged. Its importance as an indispensable tool for documentation and propagation, and as a suitable medium to publicize the works of philatelic investigation was not acknowledged until well into the 20th century. It should be noted that just a few decades ago, the medals that were awarded in Philatelic Literature at FIP exhibitions had to be identified as such.

The continued work of organizations like the Argentine Philatelic Writers' Association (ACFA) changed that wrongful attitude and today philatelic literature, in all the forms it embraces, it is in good health and is well recognized. The continuing publication of works of philatelic interest and the existence of organizations that sponsor them attest to that.

We should note that in the Spanish speaking philatelic world, there are organizations and companies that are interested in the publication of these works (ACFA, AFINSA, EDIFIL, FAEF, FESOFI). The final recognition, that many thought impossible to accomplish, emerged from the ACFA initiative when in its MEVIFIL97, works in digital format attained their proper place in the world of philatelic literature with the backing of the FIP no less. The world of the philatelic literature feeds itself from a wide range of works, each one concerned with a specific goal although they all contribute valuable support to stamp collecting. Thus, for example, there are books of philatelic research, monographs, manuals, general stamp value catalogues (national, regional or worldwide), specialized catalogues, auction catalogues, bibliographies, philatelic exhibition publications, philatelic periodicals, magazines and newsletters, philatelic features and columns in mediums both philatelic and non-philatelic, philatelic newsletters published by the postal authorities to announce new issues, and radio and television programs. The offering is very wide and covers all aspects of information, publishing and documentation by which stamp collecting is maintained and if it were not for them its development would be difficult.

We will focus on one of the alternatives noted above; it is not as prevalent in spite of its importance to the improvements of knowledge and use of philatelic literature. We are referring to philatelic bibliographies.

Background in Argentina

The first of these works that came to light in Argentina was Catálogo de Revistas Filatélicas y Cartófilas de la República Argentina 1874-1926 [Catalogue of Philatelic and Postcard Magazines from the Republic of Argentina 1874-1926], by Pablo Ernesto Busch, published in 1926, its goal was, according to the author's own words, to acquaint young collectors with the wealth of Argentine philatelic literature and at the same time to contribute to the development of its collection. It should be noted that Busch inherited the collection of philatelic publications from his friend Abel Fontaine who died on the 8th October 1926. Busch's work has 40 pages, 140 x 220 mm, and catalogues a total of 52 publications, up to September 1926.

In 1933, Busch's collection of philatelic literature was transferred to Walter B. L. Bose, who had already started his own labour as a collector of philatelic bibliography, as a researcher of philatelic and postal themes, and as philatelic writer; a body of work that he would develop for more than half a century. Later, in the Newsletter N°7 of the Bahia Blanca Philatelic Association (July/September 1933), Bose published Algo sobre la literatura filatélica [Something about philatelic literature] (related background with the postal history in America and especially in Rio de la Plata) later, in his own style, he published it in a separate one single-sided printed page. The following year, he published in same Association's Newsletters, N°8, 9, and 10, his work Bibliografía Filatélica Argentina [Argentine Philatelic Bibliography] (a contribution to his studies); he also published it in 6 separate single-sided printed pages. In May 1938 he published Literatura Filatélica Argentina (Índice Bibliográfico) [Argentine Philatelic Literature (Bibliographic Index)]. According to the prologue written by Bose himself two pamphlets should have been published: one with the index for books and pamphlets (Group A) and magazines and newspapers (Group B), another dedicated to Catalogues and Guides (Group C) and minor Publications (Group D). Everything published in Argentina. He left for later, the second part of his Bibliography, dedicated to all the studies and pertinent commentary on philatelic themes related to Argentine postage stamps, their postal history, etc., classified by subject and by author, and whether they were published in the country or abroad. I know only the volume dedicated to Groups A and B; it is a work of 32 pages, 210 x 280 mm, published previously in the Magazine of the Sociedad Filatélica Argentina.

From the 19th to the 25th August 1963, the FAEF held a Philatelic Press Display and for that event a small 12-page, 110 x 160 mm pamphlet was published; it was titled Historia de las Publicaciones Filatélicas Argentinas 1874-1959 [History of Argentine Philatelic Publications 1874-1959], from Pablo Ernesto Busch. The work has the names of the philatelic periodicals published in the Republic of Argentina during that period of time. Additionally, besides the periodical's name, it shows the date of its first issue and the number of issues published.

In January 1997, Dr. Hugo M. Fernandez published Un Siglo de Investigación Filatélica en Argentina [A Century of Philatelic Research in Argentina], a work of 304 pages, 160 x 210 mm, which lists thematically classified works of philatelic research published in newsletters and magazines published in Argentina over a 100-year period. The book contains an author index, the name of all the consulted publications and the philatelic libraries that were consulted. Two years later came the 2nd edition, on CD-ROM, which extended it to more than 1,000 articles from 100 magazines related to the contents of the book. Both the book and the CD-ROM were published in a bi-lingual Spanish/English format.

A new Contribution of ACFA

Early in 2003, ACFA published Bibliografía Filatélica Argentina Siglos XIX, XX y XXI

[Argentine Philatelic Bibliography 19th, 20th, and 21st Centuries], a 96-page book, 170 x 240 mm, printed in offset with three-color covers. The authors are Dr. Hugo M. Fernandez and Oswaldo M Giordano and offers a review of the works of philatelic interest published in Argentina from 1858 to date, including reproductions of many covers and title pages.

In its first chapter, the authors explain the standards used and also acknowledge that their work cannot be considered as all-inclusive. Then the Bibliography is arranged in several chapters. They adopted a time-line based organisation that the authors considered to be more appropriate to the development of Argentine philatelic literature. Some of the details are as follows: The 19th Century (for the most part, this includes works of postal origin that today have unquestionable philatelic interest); The First Half of the 20th Century (the first philatelic books appear in Argentina); The Second Half of the 20th Century; First Part 1951/1981 (books related to all the philatelic disciplines appear and the ACFA is founded); Second Part 1982/2001 (includes the birth of audio-visual media and multimedia; ACFA organises PRENFIL88 and MEVIFIL97); and the 21st Century (which, in spite of the short time, there are various published works). In other chapters authors are listed alphabetically, citing their works included in the Bibliography; a thematic classification is included that makes it possible to search the works by the reader's area of interest and finally there is a series of comparative tables and graphs showing examples of the development of the country's philatelic literature. The work ends with details of the philatelic libraries consulted. The publication was made possible by the generous sponsorship of the Albertino de Figueiredo Foundation for Philately and Correo Argentina S.A.

END

Die Philatelistische Literature
August 1934, Volume 3, Issue 8

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2005

DIE PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURE

August 1934, Volume 3, Issue 8

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.61

Excerpts from the literature on inflation stamps.

Gustav Kobold, Berlin-Lichtenberg

To make some publications on a present-day field of German collecting available to a wider circle of collectors and literature lovers especially, we present the details that appeared in Whole number 36 of the magazine Der Deutsche Inflationsmarken-Sammler (now Deutschland-Sammler-Warte)

The Editor

The philatelic press of the inflation period and after published many interesting and amusing pieces on our field of collection, even though we cannot avoid the conclusion that the inflation stamps are always a Cinderella to the press. This becomes particularly obvious when we leaf through the years from 1925 onwards, to find a number of reports and notices, but many fewer basic articles. Probably a certain distance from the inflation period and its unique phenomena had to occur before the period could be viewed properly. Since the earlier volumes of philatelic journals are not available to many collectors, I should like to bring a random account of some interesting and attractive points from our literature to the notice or the recollection of collectors.

Amongst all the new issues and their hasty production, it is not surprising that errors appeared now and then. Thus, supplement 11/12 of 1923 to the Michel catalogue gives the 9 milliard provisional as a regular catalogue number, and lists along with the ones actually produced the values of 5 milliard on 5 million pink, 5 milliard on 5 million dark green, 10 milliard on 10 million golden-brown, all rouletted [?], plus also perforated [?] 10 milliard on 100 million gray, and 10 milliard on 200 million golden-brown. There is no agreement as to the issue of million and milliard values of the service stamps at the end of 1923 and the beginning of 1924.

In July 1923 Sammerwoche published a colour picture of an error of the diagonal 100M lilac in a red colour. A Berlin Stamp dealer owned a letter with this rare misprint and would not part with it for a high price, since he was convinced it was a great rarity. The editor left the possibility of a chemical process open, but expressed the hope that a letter with this misprint would turn up from somewhere else and that other covers would follow. However by the end of August the secret of this colour misprint was revealed. Unused stamps of this colour were not reported; only used ones were known which had an adhesive instead of the original gum, and this was the reason for the discolouration. Letters then turned up on which this discolouration had only partially occurred. This same error was also described again in the 1927 Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal. This revealed that when the stamps were boiled in a soda solution they changed their colour from lilac to red, the small-format 100M became lilac-pink in the same solution, whereas the purple one of the same value retained its colour. Discolouration due to the adhesive appeared in many other inflation stamps, e.g. the 50M post horn, 2000 and 3000M diagonal format. The Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal also reported in 1924 a chemical adulteration of the 250/500 pink into orange, offered for sale in Dresden. A detailed study of colour stability of the inflation stamps would certainly be very interesting.

A detailed description and unambiguous rejection were found of the unpaid Leipzig O.P.D. 800T on 100 lilac, 300 dark green and 500 brick-red. After the appointment of the R.P.M., only the 200 and 400M stamps were used for overprinting. Possibly the O.P.D. Leipzig also overprinted the other values mentioned. They were not issued however, since the mistake was quickly recognised and when the R.P.M. was asked, it advised burning the stamps concerned. No notice was taken of the requests of interested circles to have the stamps released for dealers and collectors. The whole lot was burned on the 24th December. The R.P.M. expressly stated that not one would be officially released in which way such stamps were removed from official custody into the hands of stamp dealers cannot be determined. (S. W. 24.)

Things were different with the 2/200 carmine pink from the Königsberg O.P.D. The small format 200M in the original carmine pink was not used for overprinting, however the O.P.D. Königsberg tried to overprint some strips of these stamps, the overprint being that for the green 300M. A collector in Königsberg came into possession of some of these strips which show all the stamps of the Königsberg printing. The Königsberg O.P.D. claimed not to have printed these strips, and the State Printing Works said these stamps were forgeries. According to the owner he sent one strip to a dealer for an opinion and got a forgery back. His complaint was rejected on the basis of information from the O.P.D. Königsberg and led to an announcement about forgeries. A thorough investigation by the Königsberg O.P.D. followed, and this established that the strips had obviously been overprinted and put into circulation. (Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal, 1926). Thus we are dealing here with an officially sanctioned forgery.

(To be continued)

pp.61-62

Review.

p.62

Literature preview.

Newly-issued philatelic literature.

p.63

Periodical review.

pp.63-64

Advertisements.

END

Die Philatelistische Literature
September 1934, Volume 3, Issue 9

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005

DIE PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURE

September 1934, Volume 3, Issue 9

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.65

Produce usable indexes to contents! Thoughts for the use of the philatelic press.

Karl Th. Meyer

The need to pay equal attention to important and unimportant items alike make literary studies less than a joy. This joy really becomes a torment when it comes to working through entire volumes of our major philatelic journals, even though they have an "index to contents".

The friendly agreement of the editor of this journal to devote a few lines to the contents index of the individual volumes of our periodical literature gives the author a welcome opportunity to give some space to this question.

The appearance of an index to contents for a complete volume of our journals may be very welcome, but it will have nothing for anyone other than a superficial reader. Indexes have been for many years the real step-children of the publications.

There is no doubt that compiling a detailed subject index involves a great deal of work, which is hardly lessened even when every issue is worked on by its editors immediately after its publication.

This deficiency was not generally recognised, but there was the planned creation of contents indexes described in the paper The library of the society of the Friends of Philatelic Literature e.V. Hamburg (Die Philatelistische Literature, 1934, Issue 6 p.50). It would at least be possible to follow the guidelines for producing a card index with subject, event and author indexes quickly and easily.

The philatelist with literary interests is not being unreasonable when he asks for detail and clarity in an index of contents. We should remember particularly that we in Germany once had a journal which could have acted as the pathfinder in this direction as well. The subject indexes to Krötzsch's Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung of Leipzig were simply unsurpassable and are the model for the treatment of this "necessary evil". For example, the material in society reports should quite rightly be dealt with, so that knowledge of great value to all of philately is not lost in papers given to limited circles. Not every philatelic publisher feels called upon to single one article out of the pile. And this is a good thing, as our bibliography ought to be as comprehensive as possible. Inclusion of the contents of society reports is, however, also desirable since only the keenest lover of literature will plough through this confused rubbish in pursuit of his own subject. He must do it by mean of the few oases – to stay with our metaphor – serving the interests of philately as a whole.

If editors lack the initiative to contribute to the solution of these questions, they could look at the subject index to the DBZ. A literary source on this subject is the paper by Ohrt (delivered in Eberfeld on the 5th March 1922). Its title is Aim and Development of philatelic subject indexes, and it is to be found in DBZ, 1922, Issue 4/5, p.50.

Dear editors! Consider this paper well and take it in connection with the proposal (Loc. Cit. pp.53-54) for the use and benefit of our hobby, and go on from there. The solution of the problem has been carefully thought out. If you have better ideas, bring them into the project at the end of the year.

The attentive reader will follow in the footsteps of the DBZ, even though it has not appeared for 11 years, with references and citations whose source is the DBZ. The same consideration is applied to the best German philatelic journals of earlier days not only because their contents merit it, but because it makes it so easy for the research philatelist to search them for their sources. Why do our present day journals give up the advantage of being quoted as often as possible as a source for further knowledge so that philatelists will be conscious of its existence now and for the foreseeable future.

If we assume that editors do not have the time to compile such a detailed subject index, the possibility arises of harmonious co-operation of friends of philatelic literature with individual editors using the plan outlined and given goodwill, every educated person can help to compile an effective subject index.

Despite the indolence which the majority of collectors show for various reasons towards bibliography, it would be easy to find collaborators for this purpose. Our Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature e.V., Hamburg has many excellent projects to which the majority of the members will without doubt willingly contribute.

Friends of literature in conjunction with the individual editorial boards are thus given a field of activity of inestimable importance for the value of our bibliography and the interests of philately as a whole.

When after longer or shorter intervals the cry goes up about the need for a specialist press, the reason for it does not lie with the readers alone. Rightly seen, the obligation lies in every direction. The reasons given for the need of the technical press can be removed.

p.66

Literature preview.

Newly-issued philatelic literature.

pp.67-68

Periodical review.

p.68

Advertisements.

END

Die Philatelistische Literature
October 1934, Volume 3, Issue 10

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005

DIE PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURE

October 1934, Volume 3, Issue 10

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.69

3rd meeting of the International Federation of the Philatelic Press (F.I.P.P.)

Held in Lugano, on the 23rd June 1934.

Alexander Leo, Munich.

Unfortunately the current director of the F.I.P.P., Dr. Ing. Giulio Tedeschi, was prevented by illness from attending the meeting, so that it had to be chaired by his representative, Prof. Roberto Palmieri. Others present were: the Secretary to the F.I.P.P., Francesco Monney, the President and General Secretary of the International Federation of Philately, P. J. Maingay and Dr. Louis Goldberg, the Central President of the Union of Swiss Philatelic Society, E. Friederich, members of the F.I.P.P., J. A. Bosshard and Alexander Leo, and delegates from the International Federation of Philately (FIP), Captain Zwolle (Holland) and J. P. Heischbourg (Luxemburg).

The meeting was held in a room at the Town Hall, and was opened at 10.30 by Prof. Palmieri, who began by reading out a message of greeting from Dr. Tedeschi, and good wishes from the President of the F.I.P.P., Dr. Mario de Sanctis, from the Academy of Philately in Paris, the Philatelic Club of Brazil, and from Armand Raule. Participants stood at attention in memory of our member Louis Schneider of Bischweiler, who died a few months ago.

Arrangements were then considered for the 1st International Exhibition of the Philatelic Press and Literature. This will be held in Brussels from 25th May to 3rd June next year, in conjunction with the International Stamp Exhibition planned by the Belgian Society. Only the outstanding collections of the world will be given special invitation to this (Salon of Stamps). The exhibition of literature will include the following groups:

1. Periodicals which are still appearing
2. Periodicals which have ceased to appear

3. Philatelic works
4. Stamp catalogues
5. As yet unpublished manuscripts on philatelic topics

The literature shown will not be judged, but every exhibitor will be given an artistically designed diploma and will, perhaps, be awarded a medal. There will be a fee of 10 Italian lire for every volume or manuscript exhibited. The 1934 volume of every periodical in the exhibition will be given a uniform binding by the Exhibition Committee and be shown in a special display case so that visitors can see the importance and extent of the philatelic press. Every participant is, however, free to exhibit any number of earlier volumes. The catalogue of the exhibition will include a description of the periodical or other work, to be supplied by the exhibitor.

The President of the F.I.P.P. suggested that, to make reviewing easier, the philatelic literature be divided by language as follows:

1. Latin languages
2. Germanic languages
3. English language
4. Slavic languages
5. Other languages

In view of the fact that the existing method of showing philatelic literature in glass cases gives the visitor a general impression of their scope and importance but nothing else. Alexander Leo and J. A. Bosshard suggested the provision of a readers' table at which periodicals and books can be studied on request and under supervision. Obviously we are not assuming that visitors will want to spend all day at the Exhibition looking through back volumes of journals or familiar books, but the Exhibition should give them the chance to look at their leisure through a work in which they are particularly interested, to see whether it is worth obtaining for their own library. A book in a glass case, where at most the title page or one single page can be seen is almost no use to a visitor who might be interested in it. Unfortunately the other people present only saw the difficulties with this proposal, namely the increased cost and the risk of damage to, or theft of books made available in this way. These difficulties must be overcome by careful supervision of the reading facility. Also, it can be left to individual exhibitors whether their exhibits are made available for inspection or not. Moreover, a reliable custodian can always be on hand to decide whether or not a visitor can be trusted with a particular book. The main thing is to give the visitor the chance to see more than the title page of a book that interests him, and the author must hope that a suitable means will be found of displaying the price, showing philatelic literature behind glass (as for example at WIPA) is quite pointless, and not even worth the small sum of 10 Italian lire taken as the exhibition fee, above all when the Exhibition is not even connected with a competition.

Finally, P. J. Maingay proposed that the costs of this exhibition of literature should be covered entirely by the formation of a guarantee fund. The organisers of the stamp exhibition with which the literature exhibition is connected, have engaged other rooms so that if anything unforeseen happens they have a guarantee that the committee organising the exhibition of literature can take over.

p.70

Are auction catalogues philatelic literature?

C. Michaelis

Collectors with whom I exchange literature have quite often told me that they do not collect auction catalogues because they do not look on them as being philatelic literature. I myself, have devoted quite a considerable space to auction catalogues in my collection of literature, and on the grounds of my own experience I would like to break a lance here for auction catalogues, and show what a valuable part of a collection of literature they can be.

As our first example let us take the Kohl Handbook. Its 34 issues under the direction of Dr. Munk have taken account of auction catalogues in many places and refers to the picture of a given stamp or issue in Catalogue X of Firm Y. The reason for this is the high cost of its own illustrations, which the publisher must keep down as far as possible. Would it not be a good idea to also have these illustrations to hand while studying the Kohl Handbook.

Also, who has not seen specialised collections at stamp exhibitions which try to illustrate a given variety by using enlargements from an auction catalogue. This is easier and better than drawings sketches, since not every collector is a talented artist. From the standpoint of the lover of literature it is simply a pity that pieces become worthless to collectors when cut. We have to hope we can find enough uncut material for our collection.

It happens more and more frequently today that we find articles in magazines on particular topics, in which for the pictures of the articles described we are referred to some auction catalogue or other. Also, researchers can detect obvious forgeries only by their pictures in auction catalogues.

Finally, the owner of major works on cancellations, air mail or the stamps of a given country can practically always find more abundant pictorial material in auction catalogues than even a specialist work can assemble, since it would then cost too much and even fewer collectors could afford the literature than is unfortunately the case today. The illustrations, in auction catalogues also supplement the major specialist works, since new discoveries are constantly being made in all fields.

The catalogues of the big firms are naturally valuable above all as objects for collectors, since they have a great deal of material to auction, and are not sparing with the illustrations which they do not reduce very much, in fact they often enlarge them. In this connection the catalogues from the firms of Continental Europe are particularly praiseworthy, whilst the English and American catalogues are often sparing with illustrations.

Of German firms, the catalogues from Köhler and the discontinued series from Stock and the Marken- und Ganzsachen-Haus, Berlin, deserve first mention as having valuable illustrations. Also worthy of mention are the catalogues from Grobe, Hanover, Mohrmann, Hamburg, Hess, Frankfurt-am-Main, but the catalogues from the smaller firms should also be collected as they often contain valuable illustrations.

(continuation follows)

pp.70-71

Newly released philatelic literature.

p.71

Journal watch.

pp.71-72

Contents overview.

p.72

Advertisements.

END

Die Philatelistische Literature
November 1934, Volume 3, Issue 11

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005

DIE PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURE

November 1934, Volume 3, Issue 11

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.73

Are auction catalogues philatelic literature?

C. Michaelis

Student?, Schleswig

continuation

The magnificent series of 84 Köhler catalogues that has appeared is valuable not only for its contents, but is also noteworthy and valuable from the point of view of the collector of literature. Many of these catalogues especially the early issues are already very scarce, and the entire set is thus a valuable item in the collection of friends of literature. The following stand out from the series of Köhler catalogues:

N°50, containing pictures and a description of a specialised collection on Finland. N°51, with coloured reproductions of 40 rarities. N°62, containing Gaston Nehrlich's Old German letters, which led to the study of cancellations, postage rates, etc. N°64, again with coloured reproductions of 35 rarities. N°76 has Old Germany cancellations and N°81, the Sommerfeld collection of entires.

However, the rest of the Köhler catalogues have very rich material on the various countries of Europe and overseas.

The complete set of catalogues from Stock and the M. & G. firm have much pictorial material. The series of 40 Grobe catalogue has a good many Hanover illustrations in particular, and there is also abundant pictorial material in the more than 40 catalogues from Hess, and almost 30 from Mohrmann.

Of foreign firms, the Swiss firm of Luder-Edelmann puts a great deal of thought and care into the production of their auction catalogues and so these catalogues with their extensive illustrations really amount to scientific works. Amongst their catalogues are:

N°2, coloured pictures of two Baden blocks, N°6 very rich material on Swiss cancellations and varieties, this firm always contains a great deal of Swiss material. N°8 brings the R. Arcaute specialised collection of Spain under the hammer, with the black 6 cuartos of 1850 being specially prominent. As well as the many sometimes enlarged illustrations, the catalogue contains a scientific treatment of its owner's research results in relation to plate reconstruction. N°10 shows pictures of a collection of cancellations from the Papal States. N°11 singles out the Garas collection of Greece. N°12 also covers Greece as part of the Ferrari collection that remained in Switzerland. N°13, of very special interest, gives material from the estate of Barre, the designer of the first Greek stamps and gives pictures of entire strips in the original size in a special supplement. N°23 deals with Afghanistan and the Indian States, of which so few illustrations are available.

There is not space in this article to give detailed descriptions of all the auction catalogues in my collection, but I will give an account of a few.

The catalogues of the 1st auction by the Berne firm of Saner contains an Alsace-Lorraine specialised collection. The 1st catalogue from the Prague firm of Brunner gives numerous pictures of an Austrian specialised collection. The catalogues from the firm of Gelli & Tani, Brussels, form a whole series of valuable volumes. The two catalogues produced in New York for the Hind auction are very valuable. Only the first (covering the USA) was actually held by the firm of Ch. Philipp [Actually Charles J. Phillips] The catalogue for the second auction (covering the British Empire) was published, but the auction itself did not take place. The rest of the collection went to London. There, H. R. Harmer has so far held 5 auctions of Hind material, the catalogues of which give illustrations of much rare material. The long series of catalogues from the Lucerne firm of Sekula is also prolific in illustrations.

And finally, the Rolls-Royce of all auction catalogues, those from the Ferrari auction in Paris, whose illustrations are very often mentioned in the Kohl handbook. The Royal Philatelic Society in London has put out a special introductory work on these catalogues with an index, etc.

Even with this brief survey of the contents of auction catalogues, I believe I have shown that their illustrative material is extraordinarily valuable as a supplement to so much specialised work. The prices realised put out by many firms deserve a chapter to themselves. They are of quite significant interest for anyone interested in the market position in general or the individual prices for valuable issues, letters, blocks, bisected stamps, mixed stamps, etc., though the auction catalogues are still valuable without these lists.

pp.73-74

Russian philatelic literature.

Walter Stephan Sonnenburg-Fedorowsky, Makeevka [Ukraine]

(continuation)

II. Books

Attention will be directed here in the first place to actual book publications, and the various price lists, prospectuses and catalogues will not be dealt with. During the Tsarist period, the first philatelic pamphlet Description of the Russian Rural (Zemstvo) Stamps, by D. Tschudovsky, was published in Kiev in 1888. This also contained information on covers and postal wrappers. In 1903 the newspaper published a little book Theodore the Stamp Collector in St. Petersburg. It was a passable translation of the well-known German work by Crome-Schwiening, which contains various philatelic hints for young people. Also in St. Petersburg, where the philatelic movement was very well developed, appeared in 1908 a 40-page pamphlet with the title The Young Collector, by F. Guriev. The Moscow Philatelic Society published in 1909 a Handbook for Coin and Stamp Collectors by A. S. Koslov of Jaroslavl. It ran to 12 pages. In the year 1914 appeared a work by P. P. Ganko, Historical Study of Rural (Zemstvo) Stamps of the Poltau Region in Poltau. I have also heard of a Handbook on Postage Stamps published by Rjabinin in 1914. I cannot find any more details of this publication. One of the oldest Russian collectors, P. Ladov of St. Petersburg, also published a pamphlet on the first Polish stamp issues, The Polish Postage Stamps in the Polish language.

In the early years of the Soviet regime the stamp business became a State monopoly. All commercial matters and the issue of philatelic literature was in the hands of T. Tschutschin, who was in authority over stamp affairs. In 1922 he published a pamphlet in Moscow, Buy stamps and help the hungry, which was purely for propaganda purposes. In Northern Russia, V. Tarasov in Archangel published four small books under the collective title The Collector's Library. The first 16 page volume was called Information on the first stamp issues of Soviet Russia, with details of prices. The second volume of this series gave English and French translations of the first volume under the title The Postage Stamps of Soviet Russia and Les Timbres Poste de la Russie Sovietique. 1,000 copies of each volume were produced. The third volumes, also 16 pages long, was entitled What is Philately, and was written by S. Ioviev in an edition of 500 copies. The fourth volume was 32 pages long and was a Little Collector's Calendar for the Year 1923. It contains various advertisements, philatelic reports, addresses, etc., and 3,000 copies were published. In the year 1923, the firm of Dom Petschati in Moscow put out a book Russian Graphic Art During the Revolutionary Period (1917-1922) by Prof. A. A. Sidorov. Amongst other things, the author reports on the production and issue of Russian postage stamps, and pays particular attention to the designs of stamps by artists. The book ran to 113 pages and 3,000 copies were published.

The publishing house for philatelic affairs in the USSR, in Moscow, issued in 1924 a Statute for the Russia Philatelic Society in 42 pages. It contains various reports on the State philatelic monopoly in Russia. The same publisher in the same year put out a Handbook for Stamp and Banknote Collectors, with 655 pages at a price of 1.50 roubles. This book is the Russian vade mecum for collectors. In 1925 the same publisher put out a 211 page Description of the First Stamp Exhibition in Moscow in the Year 1923. 3,000 copies of a good handbook for young people in particular was put out by the State Press in Leningrad in 1925. It is entitled The Stamp Collector, is 189 pages long and is by L. J. Müller. Also, A. Koschevinnov put out a 40 page satirical paper Postage Stamps for young people. The edition was 7,000 copies and it was published by the Moscow-Leningrad State Publishing House. An Address Book for the Russian Collector was published by the Pskov Philatelic Section of the All-Russian Philatelic Society (VOF). This appeared in 1929, was 32 pages long and the edition was 400 copies. D. V. Valeron, a student of Russian stamps, published in 1929, from the aesthetic viewpoint a small pamphlet Graphic Art and Thematics in Postage Stamps. 75 copies were published by the Soviet Philatelic Association, Moscow. The Young Guard publishing house of Moscow put out a book in 1930 on The Stamps of the Island of St. Mauritius. It is 70 pages long, is meant for young people, and has information on the cultural side of philately and gives various useful advertisements for the collector. A book Philately in School was published in an edition of 4,000 copies. It is a good text for young people and costs 0.60 roubles.

Continuation follows

p.74

Review.

pp.74-75

Newly released philatelic literature.

p.75

Journal watch.

pp.75-76

Contents overview.

p.76

Advertisements.

END

Die Philatelistische Literatur
December 1934, Volume 3, Issue 12

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2005

DIE PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURE

December 1934, Volume 3, Issue 12

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.77

The journal of the Federation of German Philatelic Societies.

Karl Th. Meyer, Medical student, Berlin

In its review Die Philatelistische Literatur (1934/9:65) reported, as did other organs of the philatelic press, that the magazines of the two united societies, Germania-Ring of Leipzig and Deutsche Philatelisten-Verband of Gössnitz, namely Germania-Berichte and Philatelisten-Zeitung were to be combined with the Federation organ Das Postwerthzeichen. However we read in the report of the Federation meeting of 22.10.34 (Das Postwerthzeichen, 1934/10:113) that the combination of the journals was discussed for a long time. Agreement on this question is not to be expected at the present time.

The philatelists in the German Federation must apparently want another year to get the comprehensive Federation journal, possibly because the leaders of the Federation and the societies cannot keep from pulling apart. The posts of the three gentlemen directly concerned have been well distributed. However, if they cannot even look beyond their own society's interests, how can we ask ordinary members to do the same.

Anyone who is not totally biased must be thoroughly in favour of the fact that the Federation is the umbrella organisation for the German collectors' societies and thus is the only one able to produce a common journal. A single Federation journal can represent the majority of all German philatelists better than three. And this possibility should not be sacrificed to the interests of individual societies.

There could be many reasons for the miscarriage of this question of the journal. However, a leading one is that since its foundation the Federation has included the territorial societies (the happiest solution from the Federation point of view) along with non-territorial societies (e.g. Germania-Ring), which have their own proud traditions to throw into the balance, and have their own very good journals (e.g. Germania-Berichte). With all due respect to the Germania-Ring and Germania-Berichte (the author is himself a member of the Ring and has been particularly interested in the philatelic journal literature for a long time) it must be said that this dualism between free and territorial societies has the seeds of destruction for the Federation and its purposes.

Since it is not the aim of this paper to describe the organisation of the Federation, we will air at least one of the secrets and then turn back to the Federation journal, so as to give the friends of philatelic literature a glance at this not easily solvable problem.

The literature unfortunately has never represented the strength of German philatelists. Nor can we answer the question why is so much paper wasted on this topic?

An effective Federation journal aimed at the individual members must really be aimed above all at each individual member. It does not relate to Federation matters, such as the members of the Germania-Ring can only obtain for an extra DM1.50, which not every Ring member will want to pay. Nothing can be said about the influence of the Federation on members who do not take the Federation journal regularly. This seems most important to us, if the term "Federation" is not to be devalued to meaninglessness.

From the printing point of view, the cost of one number of a journal will depend not least on the actual print run. If we add up the print runs of the three journals concerned, we get a round figure of 12,500 copies per issue. Allowing for the fact that a number of members of Germania-Ring and the Deutsche Philatelisten-Verband will read Das Postwerthzeichen as well as their own society journal, we can assume there are currently some 10,000 different readers for all three journals. A simple calculation then points to a single journal with an issue of 10,000 copies, which would mean considerable savings in costs as against three journals. The result of increasing the print run like this should be to make the Federation journal cheaper to outside purchasers, which should mean valuable propaganda for the Federation. A more precise calculation might make it possible to reduce the cover price for the Federation journal by about DM0.50 quarterly.

Now a word about the external make-up of the new Federation journal. The format should be that of Germania-Berichte since a smaller, thicker volume looks much better than a thinner, bigger one. The distribution of posts for the new journal should mean there are no difficulties with this change of format. It would also be advisable to follow the numbering of the advertisement pages used in Germania-Berichte. From the point of view of a literature collector, the value of his collection depends on his volumes being complete, and it would be very valuable for advertisement pages as well as text pages to be numbered consecutively.

One page must be preserved in the new Federation journal. This is the Society Reports with its ominous heading in the present-day Postwerthzeichen. A combination such as the Federation of German Philatelic Societies want, does not deserve such a heading, apart from the fact that it is not understood by thoughtful members of the Federation. The Federation has not got RM45 monthly to give away. Moreover, the calculation is also quite inaccurate, if we look for example at the fact that the old Kröttsch DBZ gave 4 pages of society reports in practically every number. The DBZ was a private undertaking which should not afford gestures on this scale. As the leading philatelic journal it had so many advertisements and buyers that it could make the space available to the societies it chose, but still had to act as a private concern.

There was an enormous difference between what the DBZ and Das Postwerthzeichen understood by Society Reports. As a rule, there is an unpardonable preference for other societies such as the Hamburg-Altonaer Society for Philately, which will get double the space of the North German Society. Allowance was not even made for how meaningless the Society Reports were for other people. Space is wasted on Society Reports that have nothing essential to say and thus do not appear in the annual index, all the more so when the Federation charges a nominal RM45 for them.

This was one part of the contents of Postwerthzeichen, and its other sections will now be described. As the Federation journal, which must and shall be obligatory for the societies as well, part of its space must be reserved for the societies and their meetings and for the Federation and its meetings. However, care must be taken to keep these reports in the shortest form. It is pointless for example, to give membership applications for its individual members, which mean nothing to the uninitiated who are the ones being dealt with.

Every philatelic journal tries to give a prominent place to new issues. If the Federation is publishing the only journal, it will be responsible for the space allotted. At the moment all three of the journals we are dealing with devote valuable space to this, and simply repeat one another. It should be noted that it is a good indication of cooperation between collectors and dealers when the report on new issues is compiled by a firm of dealers. From the collector's point of view, looking on the Federation as something useful, there can be no objection to using a dealer to report on new issues.

The recent interest in charity stamps means that the German charity stamps are now listed. Has the Federation of German Philatelic Societies decided to leave these to another society, one which does not mean to affiliate to it.

Sections such as Exhibitions, Book Reviews, Auctions are indispensable for the aims of philately, however, there is no joy in reading reviews of the same book in all three journals.

The present Federation journal also has a section Literature Review. If this really represents the interests of the entire Federation, i.e. of all the other societies as well, it can only be useful for neglected writings and their promotion.

The Federation magazine, as the organ of the German collectors' societies, will naturally have the German field of collection at the forefront of its interests, and will thus give it the majority of its space. It is thus advisable to create a section on "German collecting areas".

The most important item, always changing and thus an index of intellectual activity, is what is called the leading article, a significant feature of any well conducted journal. On this point, the new magazine should learn from Germania-Berichte which for extent and internal worth vastly exceeds all existing stamp journals. There is a series of journals in Germany that take care of general articles. If the Federation wants to do something fresh with its magazine, it will do well to deal in its leading articles with restricted regional topics, dealt with from a scientific, not general, viewpoint. Non-German, even non-European countries, should find a place here.

The editorial board will easily locate suitable authors. In any case it is not necessary to restrict itself to established authors, whose articles can or could be read in other places. Das Postwerthzeichen as a representative of the intellectual activity of the Federation cannot and must not set narrow limits to its leading articles. Would it not be unworthy of the Federation to deal with Prussian affairs simultaneously with Germania-Berichte at the beginning of the year? This must be said no matter what the authors of the various articles might think.

This should be enough for a start. The ball is now in the court of the gentlemen whose duty is to create a genuine unified journal, in the interests of the Federation, and of bringing together the greater part of German collectors, putting aside trivial personal considerations and reflecting the inner values of the Federation of German Philatelic Societies.

p.78

Review.

Gesellschaft Philatelistischer Literaturfreund e.V., Hamburg.
Society report and obituary for Viktor Pessiak.

pp.78-79

Newly released philatelic literature.

p.79

Journal watch.

pp.79-80

Contents overview.

p.80

Advertisements.

END

Otto Lindekam

The removal of bookplates from books

[Das herauslösen von exlibris aus büchern]

Sammler Express, November 1949, Volume 3, Issue 22, p.342

Translation produced by Charles J. Petersen for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2007

THE REMOVAL OF BOOKPLATES FROM BOOKS

Antiquarian books occasionally contain bookplates of varying degrees of value which could enrich existing collections of bookplates, providing they could be removed from the books without damage.

The application of ordinary measures, e.g. the use of sharp knives or heavy soaking with water, in most cases does not allow removal of the treasured collectibles from the inside of books without permanent damage; at the least, books treated in this manner are rather heavily damaged. This is particularly the case with large book plates. A very simple and reliable procedure, by which the removed objects as well as the book remain totally undamaged, is as follows: thoroughly soak good quality white blotting paper, cut to the size of the book plate, lay it over the book plate for a short while and then run a hot iron over it. Then the book plate can easily be removed. Of course this must be done skilfully and carefully. To remove all the remaining glue, the book plate must be rinsed off before it is pressed between two pieces of blotting paper to become a finished collectible.

Of course this process can not be applied to coloured book plates or to those printed on so-called chalk paper.

END

H. A. Gerhard Tag
From the bookplate world
[Aus der welt des exlibris]
Sammler Express, 15th March 1957, Volume 11, Issue 6, p.95

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2007

FROM THE BOOKPLATE WORLD

A chat by H. A. Gerhard TAG, Berlin

Sammler-Express, 1957, issue 3, includes a feature written by the collector Aleksander Sniezko regarding an interesting topic of collecting bookplates, specifically philatelic bookplates, and noted several Polish graphic artists of this genre. An example from German collections was shown in Sammler Express, 1954, issue 8, with the title: Bookplate Hanns Heeren, original etching by Karl Bloßfeld, Markkleeberg.

The bookplate shown here, designed by the Polish graphic artist Kasimierz Wiszniewski is my only bookplate made for me by a colleague. I will be happy to tell how it came to be. When I was working on a bookplate woodcut in 1951 – then still an art student – for the collector Tadeusz Leszner of Warszawa, he also commissioned the graphic artist K. Wiszniewski to make a bookplate woodcut for me. We also exchanged the original wood printing blocks, such that we could make as many prints as we needed.

Surely, it would only be beneficial, if this example would be replicated by others. However, there is nothing to recommend another replication that I uncovered by accident. However, some remarks are anticipated: Die periodical Boeckcier of the Nederlandsche Exlibris-Kring (Dutch Bookplate Society) January 1957, issue 1, treated this in a lengthy contribution Het exlibris in Polen by Włodimir E. Egiersdorff, Gdynia. In addition to the bookplates reproduced there by K. Wiszniewski (whom I mentioned earlier) and K. Cichoniak (I will discuss him later), the Boeckcier shows seven more examples made by Polish woodcut artists and a copper engraving by W. Jakubowski (Jakubowski also had an honourable mention in the article by A. Sniezko in Sammler-Express).

It is now probable that the bookplate for Mariana Swinarskiego, which K. Cichoniak even signed by name and date (1949), is plagiarized. The bookplate for Werner Spalteholz shown for comparison, is a woodcut of the graphic artist Professor Bruno Hérroux.

The inscription beneath the two bookplates: The comparison shows the plagiarism; left, the bookplate created in 1904; right, the bookplate signed in 1949.

This beautiful bookplate was created in 1904 and was one of the few examples that Prof. Hérroux created in wood (his 28th bookplate: op. 63). Otherwise, Prof. Hérroux, who worked as an instructor at the Akademie für Graphische Künste in Leipzig, used etchings almost exclusively (Sammler Express, 1954, issue 8, presented his engraved Ex musicis for Hermann Abendroth!).

Prof. Héroux was unable to come to terms with the loss of his life's work, namely the many engraving plates – not only bookplates – in the bombing raid on Leipzig on the 4th December 1943, when his workshop in the Akademie was destroyed by American bombs, and he died in February 1944.

The Deutschlandsender published a short report on the 2nd February 1957 in its Saturday sheet on the collecting of bookplates, among other things. It did not fail to point out, as I did earlier in the Sammler Express, that bookplates (or they are called alternatively: book ownership signs, possession designations) have above all a practical purpose, namely to serve to identify the book's owner. Thus, the bookplate is not only traded as an object, as is done not altogether infrequently, but is primarily intended to help protect the book collector from losses. Thus, an earlier item by Alois Balmer says: When you read a book, do what the monkey does, when he eats nuts: keep the core. Anybody may well keep the core, i.e. the content of a borrowed book, but not the book itself.

The worldwide distribution of the art of collecting bookplates has regrettably led to the aforementioned example of the theft of intellectual property of the bookplate. But that is not the exception. Thus, Boeckier published in its April 1953 issue, a discussion of bookplates designed by Prof. Dr. Joh. J. Hanrath that were plagiarized (some examples were shown there), and another instance of plagiarism was reported in the July 1955 issue of the same journal, which is published quarterly. Flowers planted in the bookplate garden can hardly flower in secret - so plagiarisms do not do their creators any honour.

END

G. Tag
From the bookplate world
[Aus der welt des Exlibris]
Sammler Express, December 1958, Volume 12, Issue 23, p.424

Translation produced by Martin Scheir for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2007

FROM THE BOOKPLATE WORLD

An additional graphic... was the caption that always recurred regarding the bookplates illustrated in recent times in Sammler Express. Unfortunately such a text says absolutely nothing about the bookplates that are occasionally shown. I am however convinced that, for example, my colleague Ilgenfritz in Leipzig could say something about the pages of his collection. One should give at least the name of the artist, the location of his activity, and the technique and year of execution of the bookplate.

What would a philatelist say if he finds stamps illustrated in bookplate magazines with the always “new” comment: Another stamp from the collection of Mr. Lehmann!?

The pursuit of artistically valuable bookplates is truly not a dry affair because each individual bookplate shows an entirely individual connection to its owner. With the many possibilities (there are no boundaries to the artist's fantasy) the sometimes hidden content is not always easy to ascertain. One has to first “see into” the illustration because “picture reading” must also be practiced.

From the new issue of Boekcier – magazine of the Kring Institute of Dutch bookplates, N°3 of October 1958 – I derive the notice that renowned graphic artist Pavel Simon of Prague died on 26th June 1958 at the age of only 38. P. Simon had the rare luck to become an apprentice to his father, Prof. T. T. Simon, and was also a student of Prof. Vladimir Pukl. The young artist illustrated many books and a great number of bookplates originated with him, principally woodcuts and etchings (watercolour). His early death is a great loss to Czech graphic art and for many bookplate friends throughout the world.

Caption to the illustration:

Pavel Simon's last new year's good luck wish for Engineer O. Hradecny, Prague. – Technique: Vernis mou (A type of etching, “print though” procedure).

G. Tag
Berlin

END

G. Tag

From the bookplate world

[Aus der welt des exlibris]

Sammler Express, December 1958, Volume 12, Issue 24, p.440

Translation produced by Klaus F. Alt for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2010

FROM THE BOOKPLATE WORLD

A letter from London

... It was only yesterday that I visited the first exhibition in London of the work of graphic artists from the DDR, which generated much interest because it was good overall and in some instances even excellent. I recall particularly the illustrations created by Max Schwimmer and Werner Klemke, and I saw a wholly different side of Willy Geiger. There were many excellent woodcuts and lithographs; the plastic art seemed to me to be much weaker, coarse and bulky.

After many years, I have made another bookplate, which I have enclosed here. It is a woodcut with a view of the vicinity of Vienna, as specified by the patron. I would have preferred a different motif. I can report about my other work; that one of my stamp designs was accepted unanimously in Tunis and was awarded a prize of 50,000fr. The (two-colored) stamp will be issued as a set of three values on the 20th March and as a commemorative stamp on the 1st June of this year. The engraving and printing were done in Paris – not very well done at that. Design: Broken grid, from which the map of Tunis emerges.

This letter to me was written on the 27th October 1958 by Professor Hubert Woyty-Wimmer, the engraver born in Vienna and working in London for many years. Our illustration shows the enclosed woodcut bookplate.

(PR)AHA;

The Sammler-Express, 1953, issue 20 reported with justified pride on the two prize winners of the VI. European Bookplate Congress in Barcelona. In addition to the young engraver Gerhard Stauf from Leipzig, a woodcut designer from Prague also received a first prize. It is regrettable that none of the prize-winning designs were shown, even the name of the Czech artist was omitted: it is Jaroslav Lukavsky.

I am happy to show an interesting woodcut from my bookplate collection created by Lukavsky in 1949 for the engineer Otakar Hradečný.

G. Tag
Berlin

END

Die Philatelistische Literature
March 1934, Volume 3, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2000

DIE PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURE

March 1934, Volume 3, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.21-22

Important figures in Germany's philatelic literature.

Max Ton, Weimar

Motto: The place where a good man has lived is consecrated
After a hundred years his words and deeds resonate to his descendants
Goethe (Torquato Tasso)

Since philately made its victorious progress through the German lands as well, stamp collectors have shown by their support of international exhibitions how important these little scraps of coloured paper have become. However, over the last few decades philatelic research has been carried out in many countries, and outstanding figures have made a name for themselves in the development and propagation of philatelic literature not only in Germany but abroad as well. Their interests and accomplishments have found a worthy place in the biographical work entitled Der Phila-Gotha, drawn up mainly by me and still not complete. Little by little we shall give in this magazine a number of biographies of the greats of philatelic literature. We begin our philatelic-literary report today with

Victor Suppantischitsch

This philatelist set a pattern for the present and the future and an inspiration not only for the collection of postage stamps but also for penetration to the depths of philately. Victor Suppantischitsch was born on the 31st October 1838 at Laibach in Carniola, the son of a merchant. After attending the grammar school of his native town until 1857, he took up the study of the law. In the year 1862 he entered the service of the State; in 1869 he became a legal aide, in 1873 Attorney-General to the Laibach County Court and in 1874 County Court Judge. In the year 1883 Suppantischitsch was promoted to the Supreme Court in Klagenfurt and finally in 1886 to the Supreme Court of Justice in Graz. Ten years later he was given the title of Royal and Imperial Councillor to the highest judicial assembly of the state, the Supreme Legal and Financial Court in Vienna. From 1906 onward he was President of the Senate in Graz. He was distinguished by the award of many orders, amongst them one of the highest in Austria, the Order of Leopold, and all were thoroughly deserved.

Suppantschitsch's main achievement as a philatelist lay in the investigation and promotion of the German philatelic literature. He accomplished a great deal in this direction, and was rewarded by the Lindenberg Medal in 1913. At the end of the 1870s he devoted himself to philatelic authorship. Of his earliest works I will mention only Divide et Impera, a very exciting article for those days which appeared for the first time in Wiener Briefmarkenzeitung, of the 1st December 1880. Later he found a suitable platform in the Senf Brothers' Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal. In the meantime the firm of Eduard Wartig of Leipzig, published Suppantschitsch's Guidelines to Philately in 1879. This little book was awarded a bronze medal in 1881 by the Société Française de Timbrologie of Paris. A second edition was published in 1890 by M. Schauenberg of Lahr-i-Baden. This world famous firm then gave Suppantschitsch the task of producing a "World Stamp Album". Suppantschitsch performed it brilliantly, the first edition appeared in 1882 and the last in 1889 under the title Patented Permanent Stamp Album, in 6 large quarto linen-bound volumes. I must stress particularly that this was the first permanent album. However, the production and publication of this permanent album was the greatest fiasco of the age for both the editor and the publisher, since the entire world decided in favour of the Schaubek album, which was victorious all over the world.

After that Suppantschitsch never had anything more to do with the production of stamp albums, but directed his efforts all the more towards philatelic literature. At that time Dr. Alfred Moschkau of Oybin by Zittau and Dr. Emilio Diena of Rome were eager to create a "Bibliography of Philatelic Literature" and Suppantschitsch decided to realise this idea. Within two years he had produced the work, the size of a bible in 16 parts, whose title reads Bibliography of the entire German philatelic literature from its beginning to the end of 1891. It was published by the firm of Anselm Larisch in Munich from 1892 to 1893. It is a little outdated now, but this fundamental and comprehensive masterpiece was an outstanding literary achievement on the world philatelic market. Financially however, it was not a success for the publisher. The main reason for this was the over-large print and the verbose bibliographic details, with practically no abbreviations for the philatelic books and journals. The work as a whole was therefore very inconvenient. Today this type of bibliography has triple the extent but is in a much handier form because of the use of bibliographic abbreviations. However, we should not forget that Suppantschitsch's outstanding work laid the foundation for all later philatelic bibliographies.

Also, Suppantschitsch recognised even then that all philatelic literature was a thorn in the side of stamp collectors. However he ignored this and went his own way as a philatelic bibliophile. In 1895 he published a handy little 221-page illustrated work Foundations of Philately through the firm of J. J. Weber of Leipzig. This formed the 152nd volume of Weber's Catechisms. In the summer 1917, I was in personal contact with the head of the Weber firm and asked for a few copies of this work; he said to me You can take a hundredweight if you like. However, I only asked for three. Six years later I tried to buy a few more copies, and was told All gone! All remaining copies were pulped to make space. Waste paper, in fact. Just another example of how philatelists fail to take an interest in their own literature. We see that even Victor Suppantschitsch got little gratitude for his researches or philatelic literature. In spite of that, he went on sowing the seed. His outstanding philatelic library was his life work in the service of philately. People would gladly have added it to the German Library in Leipzig, but were not willing to pay for it. Hence this great philatelic collection also winged its way across the ocean. The purchaser was the Collectors Club of New York.

In conclusion, I should also like to mention another little work by Victor Suppantschitsch which he issued himself in 1901 in an edition of only 150 copies. This was The Origin and Development of Philatelic Literature in the Second-half of the Nineteenth Century. This little paper of 63 pages gives valuable advice and information for lovers of philatelic literature. Nevertheless this again found only a limited circle of readers. Ten years ago I bought the remainder of the edition and there were still 31 copies, which are now down to a single one. Thus Victor Suppantschitsch, like so many later researchers and friends of philatelic literature was not spared disappointment. All the same, he continued his pioneering work with persistence and dignity. Victor Suppantschitsch died in Graz on the 2nd March 1919 at the age of 80, and his remains were laid to rest in St. Peter's Cemetery there.

pp.22-23

Philatelic libraries – history, organisation and use.

Dr. Phil. Johannes Schubert, University Librarian, Leipzig

1st Continuation

Another extensive collection of books is associated with the name of the Berlin District Judge, Dr. Heinrich Fraenkel (born in Breslau, date not known, died 20th September 1907 in Berlin). Fraenkel, who is known as a philatelic author, was also for many years the librarian of the Berlin Philatelists' Club. His private library was one of the most important on the Continent. It contained a very wide range of rarities, in particular many un-cut examples, on which Fraenkel – who was bibliophile – placed special value. (see D.B.-Z., 1907, p.202). After his death in 1907 the library was put up for sale. However, after a wealthy German philatelist had looked at it (see D.B.-Z., 1908, p.19) the collection was bought from the heirs "for a song" as was said in D.B.-Z., 1912, p.59. The purchaser was again the aforementioned Lindsay. He paid "a multiple of 1,800Mk" (see D.B.-Z., 1900, p.133).

A further collection worthy of mention here is that of the Brussels stamp dealer Jean-Baptiste Philippe Constant Moens (born 27th May 1833, Tournai (Belgium), died 29th April 1908, Brussels). However his collection of literature was bought in 1902 by a Mr. Laurie of Worcester (Massachusetts). However, he was a middleman and not a collector himself – which is why his is not in the list of names – and in the same year (1902) it was bought by the then secretary of the American Philatelic Association, the American Hiram Edmund Deats of Flemington, New Jersey, for $500, who incorporated it into his library. The bookplate of Deats is shown in The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society, Volume 4, 1911, between pages 10 and 11. This library, like Fraenkel's, came into the possession of the 26th Earl of Crawford (after 1907) (see D.B.-Z., 1909, p.148). Crawford had by then assembled the most outstanding specialist library in the world – almost 4,000 volumes.

This man, James Lindsay, 26th Earl of Crawford, Baronet Wigan (born 28th July 1847, died 31st January 1913) was from 1910 to his death 1913 the President of the Royal Philatelic Society of London. Before his death he donated his first-class collection to the English national library in the British Museum, which has existed since 1753 and is situated in Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.1. The library was transferred to this building on 14th and 17th March 1913. It was given the name Bibliotheca Lindesiana, i.e. Lindsay Library, with the addition of Philatelic Section, since the British Museum had another collection of books from Lindsay, this one purchased. The bookplate of the Philatelic Section of the Bibliotheca Lindesiana is also shown in The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society Volume 4, 1911, between pages 10 and 11. The books are in the cases in the gallery of the North Library. This North Library has its own reading room and holds the especially valuable books or books in costly bindings, plus all those which for some reason or other cannot be made available in the main reading room. The British Museum has added new publications to the Lindsay collection since the end of 1912. However, according to E. D. Bacon, the President of the Philatelic Literature Society of London, who produced the famous Catalogue of the Philatelic Library of the Earl of Crawford and its Supplement, the years 1913-25 have been very much neglected. As far as use of the library goes, the books are available to anyone meeting the specified conditions, but only in the reading room in the North Library of the British Museum. The library of the British Museum is for reference only and does not lend books outside. Thus the formation of an international philatelic library in this location, as Krötzsch proposed (D.B.-Z., 1913, p.71-72) is not feasible, at least not if books are to be lent outside and even abroad, as was suggested.

In conjunction with the famous British Museum Library, I should like to mention the best-known German collections of philatelic literature, those in the Prussian State Library in Unter den Linden, Berlin. The first major collection of philatelic literature added to the State Library (it already had some, obtained as deposit copies, or by gift, or more rarely by purchase) was that of the noted collector of philatelic literature, Dr. Jur. Otto Rommel (born 2nd November 1854 in Hildburg Lausen, died 1930?) in the year 1915 (see Zentrablatt für Biblio Metswesen, 1915, p.172). That increased the philatelic literature in the State Library by about 2,000 volumes. The other main accessions dated from the year 1931, as a result of IPOSTA. These were the two important collections of the philatelic writer Carl Beck (born 27th November 1879, Heppenheim, died 9th July 1929, Berlin) and the well-known artist and philatelic writer Alexander Bungerz (born 7th November 1874, Munchen-Gladbach, died 1st September 1931, Vienna). After the Berlin Philatelists' Club had given its own library to the State Library at about the same time, the latter's holdings of philatelic literature was scarcely second to that of the British Museum. The Prussian State Library is available to anyone who can meet the required conditions. They are lent out at home and abroad. The State Library is, of course, linked to the German inter-Library loans system, so books have to be requested via another library at the cost of postage plus a mere 10 pfennigs a week for individual volumes. Of course the library requesting may make a charge as well. In Berlin itself, the books may be consulted in the large reading room of the library, as can the current issues of periodicals.

A third group consists of the philatelic holdings of the German Library in Deutscher Platz, Leipzig. The purpose of this library is to collect exclusively German literature since 1913, so it obviously obtains every new German work that appears and every new periodical regularly. Hence it should have a complete set of German philatelic publications since 1913. However, apart from this there is a closed philatelic collection in the German Library. This is the library of the well-known Leipzig philatelist Hugo Krötzsch, which passed to the possession of Carl Gustav Vogel, the editor of the Internationale Briefmarken-Offertenblattes of Pössneck. On his 60th birthday he gifted it to the Society of the Friends of the German Library as a study aid for serious stamp collectors and to promote philatelic researches. On the 28th September 1928 the German Library obtained the collection on permanent loan. In contrast to the usual mechanical arrangement of the German Library, this collection was specially kept together.

The German books and periodicals have been added to by the German Library, but the foreign-language literature has been neglected, since it is outside the scope of the German Library. The foreword to the published Catalogue of the Philatelic Section of the German Library in Leipzig by Kröttsch expressed a wish for the further development of an international philatelic library but as with the British Museum, this will remain unfulfilled. Use of the German Library is open to everyone – if certain conditions are met – but again the books can only be consulted in the library reading room. At the moment the periodicals reading room takes 24 different German language philatelic journals. Since, on the other hand, the German Library is linked to the German inter-library loan system, some books can be borrowed for use in another library.

The fourth group of collections consists of the Public Library of the City of Boston (USA). This library collected philatelic literature itself, but has received valuable gifts from the Boston Philatelic Society, which resulted in a notable extension of its stock. To make its use easier, a 31-page Catalogue of Books on Philately in the Public Library of the City of Boston was published in 1903 by the firm of D. H. Bacon of Derby (CT). The cover of this catalogue shows a picture of the library building concerned. As we are dealing here with an open library, the widest use should be possible. More will be said about the Boston Public Library later.

For completeness, some further groups should be mentioned, including libraries that include philatelic collections. (see Name List No. 37, nos. 33+23+22, collection, Section A, group VI; Name List No. 90, no. 87, see collection, Section A, group VII; Name List No. 55, no. 51, see collection, Section A, group VIII).

(2nd Continuation follows)

p.23

Air post Catalogues.

Dr. Robert Paganini

2nd continuation and finish.

p.23

Creation of a Prussian bibliography: An appeal.

The position enjoyed by Prussia amongst philatelists as the major state of old Germany, and the fact that a thorough account of this region from the ideal philatelic standpoint would be of great importance, has prompted the undersigned to write these lines.

My call goes out to all publishers, authors, collectors and friends of philatelic writing, especially those with a special interest in Prussia, to help me to draw up a comprehensive bibliography on Prussia.

The undersigned is conscious of the difficulty of such a task, which cannot approach completeness without the cooperation of philatelists in general, and those with an interest in literature in particular.

The undersigned will gladly give information on the help sought, and the plan on which the projected Prussian bibliography is designed.

It should not be omitted that the undersigned is ready to bear the costs of postage, etc.

It is intended to publish what has been achieved so far at the start of next year.

Karl M. Meyer, medical student Door 2, 26 Dunckerstrasse, Berlin 58

p.23

1st International Exhibition of the Philatelic Press and Literature.

Organised by the International Federation of the Philatelic Press (FIPP) under the auspices of the International Federation of Philately (FIP)

During the 4th International Congress of the Philatelic Press (FIPP) in Vienna in 1933, Dr. Eng. Giulio Tedeschi and Francesco Monney, both of Turin, renewed the proposal put forward at the Le Havre meeting in 1929, for an International Exhibition of the Philatelic Press. The Congress approved this suggestion unanimously, thinking that a special exhibition would show in a favourable light the activities of the FIPP – which unfortunately gained little attention at the international philatelic exhibitions. At its last meeting the governing committee of the FIPP looked at the suggestion put forward in Vienna and decided to organise this exhibition in 1935. The date and place of this exhibition were decided. In accordance with the general view, the FIPP decided not to limit the exhibition to the periodical press, but extend it to non-periodical material. Hence it will bear the name Exhibition of the Philatelic Press and Literature. When more details have been settled, the FIPP will make them known.

p.23

Helft alle mit!

PLEASE EVERYBODY HELP. No-one should be hungry, no-one should be cold! Collectors, send your letters with high values of the Wagner charity stamps, and use only these! This will help our needy compatriots, and there is no risk as all the high-value charity stamps have kept their value when cancelled.

pp.23-24

Review.

p.24

Literature Preview.

pp.24-25

Newly-published philatelic literature.

p.25

Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature e.V., Hamburg.

Society for the promotion of knowledge and collection of philatelic literature

Chairman: C. Schmittdiel, 45 Tornquiststrasse, Hamburg 19
Annual Subscription: 3RM, including journal; Post box: Hamburg 7205

Members can obtain bibliographical writings mentioned in the text at reduced prices.

Members' subscription for 1934: We would like to point out that the subscription for 1934 is now due according to Rule 4, and request – if you have not already done so – that you send the subscription of 3RM to Post Box Hamburg 7205. If any member has not sent this sum by the end of this month, we shall send them a demand card to remind them.

Hamburg, 1st March 1934

The Committee

The following new members have been elected:

- 107 State Councillor Dr. Josef Zillgen, Berlin-Lichterfelde
- 108 Hans Jess, Hamburg
- 109 Architect Fritz Paepow, Berlin-Wilmersdorf
- 110 Christ. Frey, Merchant, Frankfurt-am-Main
- 111 University Librarian Dr. Phil Johannes Schubert, Leipzig
- 112 Privy Counsellor Josef Dahmann, Berlin
- 113 Kurt Dahmann, Berlin
- 114 Dr. Iwan Karl Turyn, Vienna
- 115 L. Sinn, Krefeld

Anyone who wishes to know more about our Society will receive detailed information on request.

Report on the 2nd General Meeting Held in Hamburg on the 28th January 1934.

The Chairman, C. Schmittdiel, opened the meeting at 10:40 hours, a quorum of 10 being present, and greeted those present, especially our foreign member C. Michaelis from Schleswig. Schmittdiel then reported as follows:-

Business Report

Only 2½ months have passed since the last general meeting to the end of the year, but this short period has been of particular importance for our Society. The first task was to implement the resolutions of this meeting.

Getting the Society on the Hamburg Register of Societies was the first accomplishment of the quarter just passed. This put our Society on a sound legal basis, gained it respect and confidence, and promoted and strengthened its internal and external activities.

Obtaining its own post-office box number helps to get correct financial dealings.

Members' subscription were kept a 3RM per year, and the Society journal will be sent to members cost free.

Also, we intend to publish a luxury edition of our Society journal, in an edition of only 50 numbered examples for members exclusively. It will be supplied at an extra charge of 3RM to support of our efforts.

Not enough use is being made of the chance to get magazines at a reduced price. 27 members have ordered 76 magazines.

New members have increased the membership to 96 at the end of the year, whereas only 2 (from Czechoslovakia) have resigned.

Our Society magazine entitled Der Philatelistische Literatursammler appeared at first as a supplement to the journal Grüne Sammler-Welt, but thanks to the determination of one of our most active members, Johannes Klink of Niebull, it has appeared since the beginning of the New Year as an independent journal with the title Die Philatelistische Literatur.

Our member C. Michaelis of Schleswig, has volunteered to be responsible for the new section for reviewing philatelic literature, and we hope this useful service meets with success.

We should also like to thank all our members for their ready support, particularly for their help in building up our journal. But we do not wish to rest on our laurels, but rather intend to build up our Society to the desired height. We also wish to foster a communal spirit in the future so that the hitherto neglected yet so important philatelic literature would enjoy the level of respect it deserves.

The principal activity for the immediate future is to go on with our endeavours. We must not only get people interested in our literature, but our main task must be to convince all philatelists of the value of knowing the philatelic literature.

We thus earnestly ask all our members to help our plans forward, for the sake of our Society and the good of philately.

In connection with this business report, Michaelis, as the leader of the review section, informs me that he has several thousand duplicate periodicals for exchange.

H. Lüdecke gave the following:

Financial Report

There is not much to report about our financial situation, since there has been only a short period of a few weeks since the last report, and nothing much happens on the financial front towards the end of a Society year.

Apart from supplying the Society journal, our expenditure consists mainly of postage costs, partly for correspondence and partly for sending out recruitment letters. These costs are not likely to fall, since steady recruitment is an absolute necessary for our Society at the moment.

Altogether our income, during the last year (membership and subscriptions), came to RM282.72, and the outgoings, (Society magazine, postage and stationery) to RM239.29, so that we had RM43.43 in the bank at the end of the year, which is carried forward to the New Year.

-o0o-

Finally, Schmittdiel asked for himself to be given the power to sign cheques, as well as the Treasurer and explained why this was desirable. The meeting gave him their unanimous approval. The auditors, Ehlers and Michaelis, approved the accounts and gave the Treasurer leave to sign them. The meeting then expressed unanimous approval of the existing Committee for its work. Ehlers and Michaelis were confirmed as auditors for the year 1934. Schmittdiel proposed that the Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature should set up its own Library and moved a proposal to that effect. This proposal was agreed unanimously. A special article in the Society journal will be devoted to the importance and formation of this Library. A bookcase will be needed for this Library and Schmittdiel proposed one be procured. The meeting agreed unanimously to provide the means for this. Schmittdiel then proposed that the Society join the “Bund”. This too met with the unanimous approval of the meeting. In conclusion, Schmittdiel proposed that the annual subscription be RM10, for which 3 copies of the Society journal be supplied. Every additional copy would cost RM2 – per annum. This proposal was also adopted unanimously. Ehlers suggested drawing up an index of the owners of rare philatelic literature, with the idea of possibly making it accessible for loan to our members at a later date. The meeting agreed unanimously that the production of such an index would be very useful. At the close of the agenda, the Chairman thanked members for their attendance and activity, and closed the 2nd General Meeting at 11:35 hours.

p.25

Article-Choice.

A précis of articles on Austria and Prussia.

New Foreign literature.

p.26

Literature mailbox.

Short notes about literature.

pp.26-27

Literature survey.

pp.27-28

Advertisements.

END

Die Philatelistische Literature
February 1934, Volume 3, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2002

DIE PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURE

February 1934, Volume 3, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.13-16

Philatelic libraries: History, formation and use.

Dr.phil. Johannes Schubert, University Librarian, Leipzig

This paper appeared last year in the journal Berichte des Vereins Leipziger Briefmarkenbörse and is reproduced here in our journal so as to make its detailed, comprehensive and interesting information available to a wider circle of lovers of literature.

The editor

The value of philatelic literature and the associated need to set up philatelic libraries has already been described many times. I will refer only to the very fruitful work of the author Carl Beck in Berlin, particularly his two pamphlets On the importance of philatelic literature and Setting up philatelic libraries, paper given to the 5th German Philatelic Meeting at Carlsbad, Czechoslovakia, on 17th August 1924. Both these were published by Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm, Berlin, 1924.

Relatively few articles have been devoted to actual collections of books. So for once a few sidelights will be cast on the development and arrangement of philatelic libraries.

A philatelic library is a collection of books, magazines and special printed or hand-written matter which, by and large, deal with what concerns stamp collectors – or better, philatelists. Today there is such a great deal of this literature in the world that setting up a complete collection of such literature – even with unlimited funds – would hardly be possible, quite apart from the problem of “unique works”, i.e. books of which only one copy exists.

Philatelic books can be obtained – like every other form of writing of course – by purchase, exchange, review, gift, or in certain cases by what is called deposit, i.e. when the printer or publisher is as good as legally obliged to deposit a copy in a particular place.

The people who have collected such books to date have been almost exclusively stamp collectors, dealers or philatelic societies. The history of philatelic book collecting generally shows that individual collectors generally go over to collecting the relevant literature when:

1. They are seasoned collectors who want to make a more profound study of their collections
2. Their collection has reached a state where they have no more to wish for or collect
3. When they can no longer collect for some reason, as was, for example, the case with Theodor Haas, when he joined the stamp firm of Larisch, Munich, in 1883 and by the terms of his contract had to give up collecting.

More recently however, open access libraries, i.e. public and scientific libraries, have turned their attention to this field of collecting. I might also mention the collections of philatelic books in private firms and society libraries which are the opposite of open collections, though private collections, i.e. those belonging to individual collectors, rarely remain closed after the death of their owners. They are usually dispersed, sometimes by purchase, sometimes by auction, or even given away. Sometimes it is absolutely necessary for a private philatelic library to be broken up so that individual collectors have the chance to fill gaps in their own libraries, but it is without doubt more important for most collections of literature to be kept intact and made available for the widest possible use.

The possible movements of closed libraries can be shown by dividing them into three groups with four possibilities for each:

- Group 1: the private library passes to
- 1) private individuals
 - 2) firms
 - 3) societies
 - 4) an open library

- Group 2: the library of a firm passes to
- 1) private individuals
 - 2) other firms
 - 3) societies
 - 4) an open library

- Group 3: the library of a society passes to
- 1) private individuals
 - 2) firms
 - 3) societies
 - 4) an open library

This outline shows that the only collections likely to be permanent are those which reach an open library by one means or another. Apart from the possibilities already mentioned for the transfer of an entire library (or perhaps even individual books), there is another method, that of “permanent loan”.

Naturally it cannot be the purpose of this article to list all of the philatelic libraries of the world, although such a listing might be very desirable. A start on solving this problem has been made by the Philatelic Literature Society of London, who asked all known philatelic societies to send in information about their libraries, which it then made available. A résumé of the answers was given in the Notes section of their magazine The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society. Here we shall merely give a survey of the most important or best known collections of this kind. Many of them have printed catalogues, though most are out of date. A large number of the libraries concerned are listed in the Great Lexicon of Philately by Alexander Bungerz, though his data are brief and scrappy. Very reliable and detailed information on this topic can also be found in the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung (abbreviated to D.B.-Z. in what follows) by Kröttsch, which is no longer appearing, to the grief of all serious philatelists. It was first-class and has not to date been replaced in the slightest degree by any other philatelic journal.

The following list gives the names of people, firms, societies and libraries all of whom have a collection of philatelic literature. Let me say once again that this list makes no claim to completeness! There are 92 names from 11 countries: Germany (3), Belgium (11), Denmark (1), England (17), France (5), Italy (2), Netherlands (2), Austria (4), Sweden (1), Czechoslovakia (4) and United States of America (18). Many well-known names are included. Some of the collections of literature are still in the hands of their collectors, some have passed into other hands, i.e. some have been broken up and some are still preserved in a closed form. The names in the list are given in their shortest form, i.e. without forenames. These are only given where necessary. The full names with the corresponding data are given later in the text. The sign * in the list means that the collection concerned has moved or passed into other hands, Ø means the collection concerned has been broken up, i.e. sold or auctioned, K means a catalogue (written or printed) is available, in the case of the auctioned collections the auction catalogue is meant. Names in [] are not dealt with any further, since I do not know anything else about them at the moment.

GERMANY

Private

1	*	Beck
2	*	Berger
3	*	Bungerz
4		[Elias]
5	*	Fränkel
6	K	Glasewald
7	*	Haas
8	*	Kleeberg
9		Körner
10	*K	Kröttsch
11		Michaelis
12	Ø	Moschkau
13	*	Mutzenbecher
14	*	Rommel
15		Schmittdiel
16	K	Schutte
17	*	Treichel
18	*K	Vogel

Firm

19		[Senf Brothers]
----	--	------------------------

Societies

20		German Philatelic Library [?]
21		Stamp Collectors' Society, Kiel
22		League of German Philatelic Societies at Home and Abroad
23	* _K	Germania-Ring
24	* _K	Berlin Philatelic' Club
25	*	German Philatelic Society (Gössnitz)
26	*	Philatelic Society Essen-Ruhr
27	*	Bavarian Philatelic Society, Munich
28		Chemnitz Philatelic Society
29	_K	[International Philatelic Society Dresden]
30	_K	Society of Stamp Lovers, Hamburg
31	_K	[Society for Philately Frankfurt-am-Main]
32		[Society for Philately, Hamburg]
33	*	Union of Leipzig Stamp Dealers

Open Libraries

34		German Library, Leipzig
35		Prussian State Library, Berlin
36		City Library, Essen
37		University Library, Leipzig

BELGIUM

Private

38	1	*	Moens
----	---	---	--------------

DENMARK

Society

39	1	_K	Copenhagen Philatelic Club
----	---	--------------	----------------------------

ENGLAND

Private

40	1		Anderson
41	2		[Bellamy]
42	3		Castle
43	4	⊙	Clark
44	5		Image
45	6	* _K	Lindsay [Earl of Crawford]
46	7		[Melville]
47	8	⊙	Philbrick
48	9	⊙	Smith (Alfred)
49	10		[Smith (Bertram T. K.)]

Societies

50	11		[Birmingham Philatelic Society]
51	12		Croydon Philatelic Society
52	13	_K	Herts Philatelic Society
53	14		Royal Philatelic Society

Open Libraries

54	15		British Museum, London
55	16		Croydon Public Library, London
56	17	K	University Library, Aberdeen

FRANCE

	Private
57	1	⊖
58	2
59	3	⊖K
60	4

Legrand
[Parés]
Rueff
Spohr

	Society
61	5

[French Society of Philately]

ITALY

	Private
62	1
63	2

[Diena]
[Palmieri]

NETHERLANDS

	Society
64	1	K
65	2	K

["Hollandia" Society of Postage Stamp Collectors]
[Netherlands Society of Postage Stamp Collectors, Amsterdam]

AUSTRIA

	Private
66	1	*
67	2

Suppantschitsch
[Poell]

	Societies
68	3	K
69	4

Austrian Philatelic Club Vindobona
[Exchange Union for Postage Stamps, Vienna]

SWEDEN

	Society
70	1	K

Swedish Philatelic Society

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

	Private
71	1	*
72	2	*
73	3	*

Bloch
Passier
Walenta

	Society
74	4

German Society for Philately, Prague

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

	Private
75	1	⊖
76	2

Calman
[Cook]

77	3	*	Deats
78	4		[Jones]
79	5		[Luff]
80	6		[Phillips] [Translator: not Philipps]
81	7	*	Power
82	8		[Rich]
83	9		Ricketts
84	10	*	Seybold
85	11		[Stone]
86	12	*	Tiffany

Societies

87	13		Collectors Club, New York
88	14	K	American Philatelic Society
89	15	K	Boston Philatelic Society
90	16		Newark Stamp Club

Open libraries

91	17		Carnegie Library Pittsburgh
92	18	K	City of Boston Public Library

Five libraries may be mentioned which have been broken up and indeed auctioned. The first was the philatelic library of Clement Rueff, auctioned in Paris on the 13th March 1907 by Emil Paul & Son and Guillemin. The bookplate of this collection is shown in The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society (1911, Volume 4, between pages 10 and 11.) A twenty-four page auction catalogue was issued at the time. (Catalogue of a very important Philatelic Library.) The second library whose disposal I wish to mention is that of the American Henry L. Calman, a member of the Boston Philatelic Society, resident in New York, auctioned on the 12th May 1910 in New York. This auction is described by the American, C. A. Nast [Translator; not Nats] in Stamp Journal, June 1910. Another auction was of the library of Dr. Amable Legrand (born August 1820, died on the 6th June 1912) at Neuilly near Paris. He was one of the earliest stamp collectors, Secretary of the French Society of Philately, and wrote under the pseudonym Dr. Magnus. Unfortunately only a residue of his library was auctioned. The auction took place on the 27th January 1913 in London, by Glendenning & Company (see D.B.-Z., 1913, p.44). Then there was the sale of the extensive library of the Englishman Alfred Smith (a Priced Catalogue of the Alfred Smith Philatelic Library appeared from A. Smith & Company, [year ?]) sometime during the years 1916-18. Finally, the library of Herbert Clark should be mentioned. Clark describes the formation and contents of his library in The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society 1910, Volume 3, pp.2-7.) He was made a collector to some extent by his grandfather who collected coins and autographs, and his mother who collected books. Clark's library was auctioned by the well-known firm of H. R. Harmer of London, on the 18th and 19th February 1924. This firm also put out an auction catalogue, which ran to 31 pages and 553 items. The library must have contained many more works, since some copies of the auction catalogue had more pages. Details of this auction are given by Alexander Bungerz in his pamphlet The Auction of Herbert Clark's Library, Berlin, Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm, 1924 (17 pages).

Another library which has unfortunately not survived was that belonging to Trade Counsellor Dr. Alfred Moschkau (born on the 24th January 1840, Löbau, died on the 27th May 1912, Oybin). Only scanty remains of his collection of literature came up for sale. What became of the rest has remained unknown (see D.B.-Z., 1907). The fine collection of literature belonging to the English lawyer Frederick Augustus Philbrick (born on the 30th June 1835, died on the 25th December 1910, Bournemouth). His library contained standard works only. Fortunately many of his books came into the possession of the Royal Philatelic Society, London, and thereby into the library of this Society. (See below, under movements of libraries).

We will now turn to the existing collections of books, and their migrations (or movements into other hands). 17 groups can be distinguished in which a complete collection has moved into other hands. To make this clearer, a diagram of the library movements will precede the actual descriptions.

For table, see pages 15-16 of the original

- A) Collections moved to open libraries:
- B) Collections passed into the ownership of societies
- C) Collections passing into private ownership

I will begin with the philatelic collections which have gone into an open library, since, though they became the property of the library concerned, their ownership can never change again, i.e. it is settled for good.

On the diagram the name of the library concerned is given in bold type. The libraries concerned are the British Museum Library in London (see list of names number 54, of this 85 + 5 + 38 + 76 + 45; Section A, Group I), the Prussian State Library, Berlin (see list of names 35, of this number 14 + 1 + 3 + 24; Section A, Group II); the German Library in Leipzig (see list of names number 34, of this numbers 10 – 18, Section A, Group III); Public Library of the City of Boston (see list of names number 91, of this number 88, Section A, Group III).

One of the earliest stamp collectors and also the oldest collector of philatelic literature was the American lawyer John Kerr Tiffany (born on the 22nd February 1842, died on the 3rd March 1897) of St. Louis in Missouri, United States of America. From 1886-96 he was President of the American Philatelic Association. His outstanding library was uniformly bound in black half-leather (calfskin) for journals and separate works. Up to 1897, the year of his death, his library was the most complete in the world. On 1901 Tiffany's went by way of the well-known stamp dealers Stanley Gibbons Ltd., of London, into the hands of Lindsay, the 26th Earl of Crawford, a member of the London Philatelic Society and a zealous collector of literature. The collection filled 39 large chests, weighed over 2,000 kg and was purchased for $10,000. As early as 1874 Tiffany, who was a philatelic author in his own right, published privately a work entitled Philatelic[al] Library which described his book collection as it then was. Tiffany's bookplate is also shown in The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society (1911, Volume 4, between pages 10 and 11.)

p.16

Air post Catalogues.

Dr. Robert Paganini

A list of all catalogues relating to aerial posts in all forms.

p.16 (footnote)Helft alle mit!

PLEASE EVERYBODY HELP. No-one should be hungry, no-one should be cold! Collectors, send your letters with high values of the Wagner charity stamps, and use only these! This will help our needy compatriots, and there is no risk as all the high-value charity stamps have kept their value when cancelled.

pp.16-17*Philatelic literature at the Weimar Stamp Exhibition.*

Max Ton, of Weimar, a philatelist and author known to us all, showed a small collection of literature under the title A cross-section of Germany's philatelic literature at the Weimar Stamp Exhibition, held by the Weimar Philatelic Society on the 19th November last year. According to our information, it met with great approbation. The thanks due to the exhibitor, who has done so much to rouse interest in philatelic literature and the Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature, should not go unrecorded here. In a space of 10 square metres he showed German philatelic literature (books, magazines – including rarities – and stamp columns in daily papers). The exhibit was illustrated by four posters, the original text of which reads as follows:

A Cross-Section of Germany's Philatelic Literature

For years philatelic literature was the stepchild of all stamp collectors. Things are different today. There can no longer be a true stamp collector without the relevant philatelic literature. And why not? Simply because stamp collecting has grown so much so that there is every incentive to form specialised collections. This calls not just for a catalogue, but for a specialist press as well. This relates to the branches of philately, stamp collecting and, not least, the appearance of all new issues on the world market. The first German philatelic magazine, the Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler appeared in the year 1863 from Zschiesche & Köder, Leipzig. Since then, more than 600 titles have appeared. Many of them were ephemeral, as their publishers never recovered their costs. The same picture repeats itself today. You will see here a selection from the German philatelic literature. Perhaps amongst this small selection you will find a magazine which led you to take a deeper interest in your chosen pastime. Perhaps also you are, like me, a keen lover of philatelic literature and a member of the "Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature" based in Hamburg. The chairman of this society, who has also put out a whole series of Thüringer Philatelisten, is Carl Schmittdiel, 45 Tornquiststrasse, Hamburg 19. Ask him to send you a specimen copy of Grüne Sammler-Welt, with its supplement Der Philatelistische Literatursammler, which will appear as an independent journal from the 1st January 1934. Please also enquire whilst you are at this exhibition how our German daily papers are serving philately. Finally, just a word about the philatelic book literature. This too began its triumphal march through the German lands at the beginning of the 1860s. A selection of these is given on the coloured sheet with markings in the corners. There is Die Briefmarkenbörse, from which a few years later came one of the rarest philatelic works "Der Briefmarkenfreund" from the firm of Moritz Rühl, Leipzig.

The next philatelic works came from the library of the Society for Philately, Weimar. They form the research and scientific property of the society, and can be borrowed for the use of their members. Some are actually written by members. The Handbook of Philatelic Literature by Max Ton, also shown here, will show you the range of the German philatelic book literature. It is already out of date and other people are already at work in the Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature to complete the standard work on philatelic literature in your society and amongst your like-minded friends. Always remember that there is a considerable interest in scientific research on philately in the Third Reich. Here again, Germany is taking the lead. This is proved to you by the great philatelic libraries in the Prussian State Library in Berlin, the German Library in Leipzig, and the major philatelic collection of the Germania-Ring which has been loaned to the Leipzig University Library. Thus, philately is advancing step by step with the philatelic literature in Germany as well, so that today old and young, rich and poor are all joining the ranks of supporters and friends.

Weimar, November 1933

Max Ton

We cannot be grateful enough for the service which our friend has given to the promotion and care of philatelic literature. The Society for the Friends of Philatelic Literature however, speaks for the single-handed exhibition given by our Weimar member and expresses our special thanks. May his example inspire other lovers of literature to take up and act for the interests of philatelic literature in the same or a similar way.

p.17

Article-Choice.

A précis of an article on Baden.

pp.17-19

Check-out the magazines.

A list of current German-language magazines.

pp.19-20

Advertisements.

END

V. Suppantschitsch

Bibliography of important articles and notes published in the German philatelic literature in the years 1892 through 1910 inclusive, relating to postal stationery

[Bibliographie der in den Jahren 1892 bis einschliesslich 1910 in der Deutschen philatelistischen Literatur erschienenen, die ganzsachen betreffenden Werke und wichtigeren Zeitungsartikel und Notizen]

Berliner Briefmarken-Zeitung, 10th January 1914, Volume 10, Issue 1, pp.62-63;
21st March, Issue 6, pp.154-155; 25th April, Issue 8, pp.205-206; 6th June, Issue 11, pp.287-289; 14th November, Issues 19/20, p.438; 13th February 1915, Volume 11, Issue 3, p.61; 11th December, Issue 23, p.521; 9th December 1916, Volume 12, Issue 23, p.518;
21st April 1917, Volume 13, Issues 7/8, p.162 & 18th May 1918, Volume 14, Issues 9/10, pp.115-116.

Note: The lists appeared regularly up to the middle of 1914 and with decreasing regularity thereafter. The final list only reached the letter N: Norddeutscher Postbezirk by May 1918, presumably owing to the author's ill health prior to his death on the 31st October 1918.

Translation of the introduction only, p.62

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2007

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF IMPORTANT ARTICLES AND NOTES PUBLISHED IN THE GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE IN THE YEARS 1892 THROUGH 1910 INCLUSIVE, RELATING TO POSTAL STATIONERY

The joy of collecting stamps is usually related to adhesive stamps rather than postal stationery, but there was an epoch in which postal stationery was collected and valued highly - maybe too highly - but alas for a few decades now, in my estimation, it has been unreasonably and unwarrantedly neglected.

Therefore I am glad that Phillip Kosak of Berlin, an old, loyal admirer of postal stationery revived the joy of collecting and studying it, and for this reason established a specialist paper, the Ganzsachensammler, which has been published for the last two years and wins over more followers daily.

I would like to add my two-cents worth for the promotion of studies of postal stationery and am sure this goal will be accomplished by pointing researchers to information on postal stationery, which has so far been written and published.

I have to make some comments to protect myself against being accused of incompleteness. First of all I have to point to the fact that I am starting with the year 1892, because a bibliography published by A. Larisch in Munich in the years 1892 to 1893 contains all important earlier material.

On this occasion, I feel I can limit myself regarding the periodical literature to only note articles and notes of the most important kind. A complete collection of all references would make the volume impossible: just to mention the communications of the Berlin Philatelic Club only. Almost every edition contains a plethora of interesting notes about postal stationery, as it is discussed by club members at meetings. It would be an immense effort to list it here.

I will therefore content myself with researchers needing to leaf through the club news themselves. I could only gather the more important notes here. I also want to mention that the literatures regarding stationery without imprinted or embossed values as well as stationery by private entities, military postal services, post-free items, etc. are not included.

Of course typical notices of new issues, which can be found in all specialist literature, are not mentioned here, which needs no reason given.

The General Part I mentions all that the literature of postal stationery entails, its invention, its collectability, its introduction, etc. Special Part II notes the postal stationery of individual countries in alphabetical order.

Both parts distinguish between:

- A. Separate publications
- B. Periodical articles and notes.

The periodicals are noted with the following abbreviations:-

[Translator's note: the remainder of the article consists of abbreviations and references which can be used without the need for translation.]

END

Max Ton
Handbook of German Philatelic Literature
[Handbuch der Deutschen Philatelistischen Literatur]
Der Philatelist, 15th September 1915, Volume 36, Issue 9, pp.189-191

Translation produced by Martin I. Scheir for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2007

HANDBOOK OF GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

Published by Internationalen Philatelisten-Verein Dresden
(Chairman, Otto Falck, Member, Royal Board of [Public] Works)
In collaboration with Appeals Court Counsel Dr. Berchermann Provincial Court Counsel Emil Pauli
Editor A. E. Glasewald Society Accountant Ernst Plotz
Privy Counsellor Dr. Kalckhoff Dr. Jur. Otto Rommel
Privy Justice Counselor Dr. May Senate President Viktor Suppantshitsch
Executive Editor: Max Ton
Editor: Franz Wallner

Prospectively, this is what the title of our reference work should be.

We received other suggestions for the title which, while they exhibited the interest of all parties in the work, didn't fully reflect the contents, or for other reasons didn't seem appropriate:

Otto Falck:	Handbook of Philatelic Books and Magazines (after Mauthner)
Hugo Hartmann:	Reference Book of German Stamp Collecting
Emil Pauli:	Reference Book of German Philatelic Literature
Viktor Suppantshitsch:	Inventory of all German Philatelic Literature Appearing to the End of 1915.
Paul Kleeberg:	German Philatelic Bibliography
Max Ton:	German Stamp Collecting in Books and Magazines, a Handbook of German Philatelic Literature
Dr. Oppermann:	Bibliography of German Philatelic Literature
Heinrich Kromm:	The Realm of German Stamp Books
M. Loerkens:	Guide to Descriptive Stamp Lore
Max Duderstadt:	Philatelic Printed Materials, A Reference Work or:	Philately in Print, A Reference Work
Georg Hahn:	Printed Works of German Philately

There is no space here for comments on each of these suggested titles, but we do not want to neglect giving our thanks to all those who advised us, in particular the gentlemen who voluntarily put themselves at the disposal of the committee. We also wish to acknowledge the announced request in the following call for help.

Call for Cooperation*

In order that our planned reference work, already in production, progresses to completion as quickly as possible, we again cordially request all collectors, dealers, publishers of philatelic works, clubs, etc., to submit all German matter about stamps and stamp collecting. It doesn't hurt at all if one title or another turns out to already be on hand, because all submissions will be compared in detail before typesetting, making multiple submissions useful for producing a comprehensive work.

* All submissions should be sent to the following address: Max Ton, Lipsiusstrasse 28, Leipzig-R.,

As far as possible, we request all of our members and friends of this worthy project to each make available one of the books or magazines in question for assembling the bibliography. In only those cases where this can not be done, send in an exact title. Specifically, besides the author's first and last name, the precise wording of the title of the work or magazine. (With the latter, give also the current editor's name.) Furthermore:

Supplemental notations (illustrations, tables, etc.).

The edition designation.

Publication data (in this order: place, publisher, year of appearance). If no publisher is named, we would like the name of the printer.

The number of pages (for books only).

The dimensions.

The binding (say whether linen, half linen, etc., bound or stapled).

The price (respective prices for stapled or bound copies).

Finally, whether it is a translation, private printing, or if copies are available in stores for purchase.

Suggestions for Changes

The lines below should not surprise the gentlemen of the committee or friendly collaborators of our handbook.

Although I, as technical editor of the work, now have about 200 print-ready titles for the former group [the committee], I receive more correspondence daily from collectors, collaborators, and friends of our enterprise, which all need to be arranged in an orderly manner in the planned reference work. This includes philatelic specialty literature on individual countries, including important publications in magazines. The majority of the correspondence signifies, in any case, that the collecting of general philatelic literature belongs to the past, namely in reference to the considerable amount of catalogues that have appeared to date and to some, in part uncompleted, handbooks, which from the practical standpoint of a stamp collector, are no longer paid any attention to. To this group belongs about 200 philatelic magazines which have in reality, for the most part, ceased publication. Their mere listing, along with place of publication, editor, and edition, etc., would not be of use to the majority of collectors.

Far more important are the discussions of the stamps of individual countries contained in the magazines and only for the purpose of obtaining one or another desired article would a listing of the corresponding magazines be desirable.

In comparing a number of [contributed] titles with those in the bibliography of Senate President Suppantsehsch, it emerges that a great deal of general philatelic works still remain even after the exclusion of albums and all incidental items appearing in the philatelic field, as there also exists commemorative publications, annual reports, calendars, humorous pieces, games, posters, etc., whose inclusion in our reference work would be dead titles for our progeny, that is to say, they would be ignored by the majority of stamp collectors.

Furthermore, our reference work would be outfitted with unnecessary ballast, the printing costs would exceed the framework of our estimate and, not least, sales of the work would be limited. In brief, these would be the opinions on the future structure of our reference work which have so far, as perceived by a few gentlemen, been expressed.

For these reasons I believe I commit no error if I ask the gentlemen of the committee, in view of the advanced development of philately in the last few years, if it doesn't seem more appropriate to limit our planned reference work to only specialized literature on individual countries.

At the same time, it would in this way be possible to make advantageous use of the most important older and modern treatises in the philatelic magazines already on hand as shown in the following sample.

Baden
A. Books
B. Magazine Articles

Translator's note: These references were not translated; See the original

Whether this divided listing of titles I reproduce here: A. Books B. Magazine Articles, is practical, is left to the gentlemen of the committee to decide.

For the sake of clarity one could well recommend listing the titles of the books and magazine articles for each country alphabetically according to author. One could also perhaps mark treatises which appear as stand-alone works and special printings with an asterisk.

It is fitting to also call special attention to getting for the reference work, as far as possible, treatises on all national areas that have issued postage stamps.

The emphasis lies therefore not in a comprehensive listing of all published magazine articles, but rather to bring to the attention of collectors magazine articles about countries having no published stand-alone works.

In this effort, articles in modern specialty magazines that are still available would be, as far as possible, preferable to older, hardly-obtainable magazines.

We can however totally ignore articles which later appeared as stand-alone works, which works of course must be listed; further, we can ignore all minor notes which don't have the nature of a comprehensive treatise.

Giving the year of publication and corresponding issue number of the magazine in which the article to be cited later as a stand-alone work is printed, should suffice.

I share the opinion here of Suppantschitsch that the work should not annoy the collector by requiring him to do a bit of searching. We should, then, give the page numbers where the article appears.

Finally, there remains the changing of the title of our reference work. I suggest: Bibliography of the Most Important Stand-Alone Works and Magazine Articles Published in German on the Postage Stamps of Individual Countries.

That might fulfil the future dream of most collectors.

The funds of the International Philatelic Society of Dresden which have already been committed toward covering the book's expenses will then certainly fall upon more fertile ground.

Editor's Note: The gentlemen of the committee, collaborators and friends of the project, are hereby requested to express themselves on these suggested changes as soon as possible.

Max Ton
Lipsiusstrasse 28, Leipzig

END

Max Ton
Handbook of German Philatelic Literature
[Handbuch der Deutschen Philatelistischen Literatur]
Der Philatelist, 15th October 1915, Volume 36, Issue 10, pp.208-209

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2007

HANDBOOK OF GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

Issued by the International Philatelic Society of Dresden
(President Otto Falck)

With the Collaboration of

Oberlandesgerichtsrat Dr. Berchermann	Landgerichtsrat Emil Pauli
Redakteur A. E. Glasewald	Vereinsbüchenvart Ernst Plotz
Geh. Reg.-Rat Dr. Kalckhoff	Dr. jur. Otto Rommel
Geh. Justizrat Dr. May	Senatspräsident Viktor Suppantchitsch

Executive Editor: Max Ton

Editor: Franz Wallner

A LETTER FROM THE EASTERN FRONT

A member of the International Philatelic Society of Dresden was kind enough to mail me number 448/449 of Der Philatelist. I noticed with great satisfaction that the Dresden Society has decided to publish a Reference Work of German literature and that collectors are being asked for their advice.

Please, excuse the hurried writing, the bad Russian paper purchased in Cholm and the rain drops, which are dripping on the paper, but we have been encamped for 3 days at the Bug river on the left shore, and I have been waiting since then for better weather. Sad to say: without success, because whenever I am in the middle of writing, it starts to rain and I have to take some time off, just like right now, lying here in my tent. The heavy artillery fire of the siege and the infantry and machine gun firing doesn't bother me - and you don't hear it, so I will convey to you my opinion of the Reference Work. I feel I am entitled and obliged to my opinion, because I myself possess a not-so-small library, which I also use. I also believe that the opinion of such a rare bird in Germany needs to be treated with consideration, compared with treating you only to theoretical suggestions.

Before all else I want to note, that I have once already (up to 1900) looked at my - then small - library and produced a very detailed table of contents, which was used by the late Ludwig König of Kiel with great interest for his studies and annual reports.

After these introductions, now for my suggestions regarding the Reference Work, I would suggest that Dr. May's opinion (page 158) is correct, that the works printed in St. Petersburg in the German language should also count as a German book. Or would you not integrate this Zemstvo stamp catalogue?

Please, consider that foreign languages are not very widespread and that a book collector would rather acquire a German book printed in New York than a Swedish publication. Which means that the language alone, not the country where it was printed decides.

Viktor Suppantschitsch is right: There is the lack of a standard German bibliography of the total German philatelic literature. That is why in my opinion all magazine titles have to be included. How small is the number of philatelic books compared with the large quantity of magazines!

I am of the opinion that the contents of magazines is much, much more important than that of all other printed matter put together.

In strong contrast to Suppantschitsch I am of the opinion that you have no obligation to mention under the titles of magazines their more important articles (p.159). Do you want to draw the lines between important and unimportant? Far off the mark! I suggest strongly against it and ask you not to underestimate my experience: The phone rings: "Sir, Can you please tell me, where something was published, where the reverse side had advertisements of New Zealand?" — A few days later: "Where is something printed about Fourés' Old-German fake envelope?"

That makes no sense: New Zealand and Old-German together? But nevertheless New Zealand was important to the caller. In other words: How are you selecting more important articles.

The line is hard to draw and such information should never be included in the Reference Work. Also, please do not ignore my well-meant suggestion and drop such summaries! Because it is the responsibility of a second publication, a necessary "Proof of Sources", of which I will provide the above small sample, God willing a healthy return from the war.

Let's take the case: Mr. X decides to only collect Bergdorf in enormous scientific quantities. Obviously he has to possess the appropriate literature and he has to find out from your work of reference that he needs: Kröttsch, Rommel and Pfaff (?), in addition he sees that he needs D.Br.-Ztg. 92/93, pp.115, 132, 150; B.Br.-Ztg. 1913, pp.85, 108, 128; G.-Ber. 1912, p.134; in addition to Ill. Br.-Journ. 1908, p.248 (namely a very important short stamp note!).

So, stay with the theme and omitting the mention of the more important newspaper articles!

As far as catalogues are concerned, you can mention Kohl and Senf, since they contain scientific tips. Possibly mention for example Friedemann, which contains similar ones. However, so-called catalogues, which are only dealers' price lists are too unimportant, unless it is a specialised catalogue, such as Turkey, Portugal, British Colonies, etc.

With regards to page 160 of Dr. Kalckhoff; I don't understand what is meant by Schlagwörterverzeichnis. Should that mean the whole table of contents of magazines? Then don't forget that Dr. Kalckhoff himself says: A register cannot be detailed enough!

Page 160, top right: 2. Handbooks and monographs ... in Book Form (that is missing).

Maybe I will send you after the War my old table of contents from 1900, so you can get a slight impression of how many pieces of information are contained in my small library up to 1900, i.e. as pertains to Baden, Thurn und Taxis, South Bulgaria, Austria, etc.

I also find that Willadt and the last price list of H. Köhler of Berlin are worthwhile, they contain much news. Auction catalogues are valuable because of their photos, but only for those, who are interested in them.

Drop the Thurn und Taxis articles only from the magazines, they don't belong in the Reference Work, limit yourself to Germany and Old-Germany, because the work has to be done and - as you mention - not all Germans are served by it.

Now comes the extraordinary detailed remark from Kröttsch: He is right: German books do not deal with all countries of the world, but in the magazines there are articles. Don't examine only their practical usefulness in the future, but take all books and magazine articles.

The Reference Work is divided into its 1st Part: Titles and a much larger and more important 2nd Part: Article listing. Divide it clearly and avoid any articles listed amongst the book titles. Such things belong in the second part, but must then also make mention of each article. Critics may not be allowed to decide their inclusions in the second part. Totally useless is for example an entry: Your Transvaal is an error but it is valuable for the researcher if it reads Your Transvaal 1d. Black is an error, because the right flag pole is doubled.

Bibliographies and bibliographic catalogues must be mentioned. Yes, to make use of the Reference Work and its catalogue numbers there has to be a compilation of all library catalogues in the form of a register so that you can see that number C23 (that is Der Philatelist) of 1909, is available in the libraries of the International Philatelic Society of Dresden, Frankfurt/Main, Hamburg, Gössnitz,, Suppantschitsch, Beck, Bernd, Ring and Pirl, that C48 (Intern. Philat. Freund) is available at Suppantschitsch and Pirl. The value of such a tabular register is obvious, since it alone offers the possibility to receive rare literature on loan.

Detailed catalogues like Senf, Kohl, Friedemann can Not be done without. Dealers' illustrated brochures are of value only, if they contain really good bargains or rarities. But not the illustrated price lists of sets with imitation cancellations, those mentioning "(p. 163) even if each publisher of catalogues constantly strives to" are worthless. Each Senf and Kohl catalogue is edited in detail. I also suggest to work on it up to 1915.

Well, that is about what I have to suggest here in the boon docks regarding your Reference Work.

As a main title I suggest Bibliography of the German Philatelic Book- and Magazine Contents".

1. Part: German Philately in Books and Magazines
2. Part: German References for Philatelic Research

And now live well, and get to work on the preliminaries and don't forget to send three copies to:

Dr. Med. Paul Pirl

who wishes you much success Reg. Doctor, I, I.-R.14, Inf. Div, Bugarmee.

END

Collecting bookplates
[La colección de ex-libris]
El Coleccionista, February 1905, Volume 1, Issue 6, p.1

Translation produced by Mark Anderson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2007

COLLECTING BOOKPLATES

Here is a collection that, despite its interest and importance, has not caught on in our country. [i.e. Argentina] Perhaps this is due to the fact that this system of verifying ownership has fallen into disuse among us; or perhaps to the indifference of collectors, who, limited to other kinds of collections – stamps, coins, medals, etc. – have not noticed this interesting material.

Apart from a few ex-libris collectors in Buenos Aires, we are not aware of any others in the country.

We think it unnecessary to say that the term ex-libris consists of, or better, means, the badge or brand of ownership of a book that the owner applies by means of an adhesive vignette, stamp or pen, with his motto, to each volume of his library. They are found commonly in antique books, since they became very common and acquired special interest among men of letters in the middle of the nineteenth Century. The heraldry of our country records several ex-libris famous for the originality of their mottos and designs.

It can be said that as a collectible ex-libris are a novelty, even though they date from time immemorial, almost since the epoch of the first printing; and their study and classification requires special knowledge.

The ex-libris that make up most collections are those represented by vignettes or adhesive labels that were applied to the frontispiece of the volume. To give an idea of the importance and interest in Europe of these collections, we reproduce here an article taken from the December issue of L'Investigateur Illustrée:

Barely 4 years ago the first public sale of ex-libris took place in Paris. The experiment proved decisive and other sales occurred frequently, to the great satisfaction of collectors. Thus on the 4th and 5th of last November the important collection of V....s was sold. A small but select group of bidders, mainly members of the French Ex-libris Collectors' Society, gave an enthusiastic reception to the rare and beautiful pieces presented to them by the firm Delestre & Delteil. Suffice it to say that the 445 lots, representing 1850 items, brought 10,000 francs. Here are some of the most important realizations:

Nicolàs de Lescut.....	50 f
Du Puy du Fou.....	41 f
Le Febvre, by J. Guérin.....	120 f
Salvaing de Boissieu.....	40f
Aublé.....	41f
College of Scots in Paris,
by Ingram.....	52f

Dubut, priest of Viroflay.....	50f
De Fontenay, by Moreau
the Younger.....	55f
Harsconet de St. George,
by Ollivault.....	40f
Benjamin de Labrode.....	85f
De Laussat, by Ollivault.....	54f
Lullin, by Bernardo Picard.....	40f
De Norbonne-Pelet, by Ch. Roy...	62f
Cavallero Tousard.....	52f
Andrès de Salis, by Choffard.....	75f
Tomás Genlette, by Bellangen...	32f
Cartujos de Beaune.....	38f

These last 2 items have enriched the collection of Mr D. of Dijon, which is one of the top ones of France, as much for the quantity as for the quality of its pieces. One of the many book dealers of Paris acquired for 121f a paper label of the Army of Sambre-et-Meuse (Ernouf Division), engraved by Queverdo, which some believe to be the ex-libris of General Ernouf. He also acquired for 100f the original essay of the ex-libris of Souchay, by Monnet, engraved by Choffard.

The above quotes demonstrate eloquently the high esteem that these collections enjoy, which will only increase.

The upcoming sales will doubtless prove as interesting as that which has just taken place and we will keep our readers up to date on them.

END

Der Philatelistische Litteratur Sammler
15th September 1909, Volume 3, Issue 2, Whole number 9

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Inge Riese for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2007

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

In reality, there is nothing of great value in this issue, which consists of a list of the duplicate periodicals available for sale or exchange from the publisher, Otto Rommel. The small pieces below were translated just to see what they comprised. BJB

p.1

Section beneath the publication details.

The paper appears casually as needed. Dispatch to interested parties is free of charge. Addresses of philatelic literature collectors requested, titles and lists of duplicate desired at any time.

No. 1 and 6 of my newspaper are completely out of print.

Nos. 2-5 and 7 cost 1 Mark each.

Five boxes on the left hand side.

Morocco its mail and its postage stamps, by Dr. Rommel. Brochure of 37 pages, 1907, price 1.20 plus postage. With the simultaneous purchase of 5 copies, 6 copies are delivered. Additional: 30 Pfg plus postage.

The Scandinavian Bypost, railway and ship stamps, by Dr. Rommel. Brochure of 111 pages and many illustrations recently published. Price 2 Mark plus postage.

The postage stamps of the Bergedorf postal district together with 2 supplements by Dr. Rommel 2 Marks, brochure alone 1 Mark.

German special catalogue by Dr. Rommel; price 1 Mark plus postage.

The Chinese local stamps of Dr. Rommel; price 50 Pfennig plus postage.

Large box on the right hand side.

Sale of a philatelic newspaper library

Because of a forthcoming move and a possible change of domicile I sell an unseen library of about 770 complete volumes, including old rare pieces (see no. 6 and 7 of this newspaper) for the very low but fixed price of 600Marks. ex-Leipzig.

Requests are subject to return postage. For the same reason and to support the collector of Philatelic Newspapers, I have decided to offer complete volumes of Philatelist, Post, Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, Illustriertes Briefmarken Journal, Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung, Mitteldeutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, Generalanzeiger für Philatelie, Internationales Briefmarken-Offertenblatt, Szekula Briefmarken Verkher, etc. are for sale at 30 Pfennig.

Enquiries with return postcard requested.

Purchase price and postage in advance.

Dr. Rommel, Leipzig, Inselstr. 9.

Three boxes at the bottom of the page.

Private Stamps

German city posts, Morocco, China and Scandinavia are bought, exchanged and sold.

M. A. Jacques Parier in Toulon, 14 Place d'anvers, satisfied me completely. Reverend R. R. Thiele in Wauwatosa Wisc. and Herrmann Burkhardt in Zurich III, however, despite all private and official demands, did not fulfill their obligations against me.

In their own interest, I ask publishers and editors of philatelic newspapers to send me their paper regularly or at least to inform me immediately of any changes.

p.2

Duplicates List

p.19

PS:

The above list of duplicates will be sent together with No. 8 of this magazine to all literature collectors and those who request exchanges. I will sell for cash and postage or exchange for those missing from my library.

I offer to act as publishing agent in Germany for publications from all over the world.

I offer to buy magazines not in my library – send a postcard with the offer.

My duplicates of complete volumes will appear in No. 10 with exact prices but I will exchange them for handbooks missing from my library.

Dr. Rommel

Inselstrasse 9, Leipzig, Germany

15th September 1909

END

2757

Norbert Röhm

[Letter to Brian Birch]

Auf der Zeil 27, 56154 Boppard, Germany, 7th October 2000, 2pp.

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2007

[LETTER TO BRIAN BIRCH]

Norbert Röhm
Auf der Zeil 27
56154 Boppard
Germany

7th Octobers 2000

Dear Mr. Birch,

Wolfgang Maassen represented my particular specialized library as being somewhat more comprehensive than it is. It is used as the basis of my studies of the old German philatelists and the topics with which they dealt at that time, as well as the areas of our important fathers and forefathers. In this respect, I am unable to reply to many of your questions.

To your highly interesting questions about British and American authors I can find nothing because of my quite differently organized library. The work with German philately since the beginning is so extensive and time-consuming that I could not extend the study area to all philately as well. Professor Brühl with his, History of Philately, employed six assistants who coordinated the information. I never had so many assistants at my disposal, therefore I stopped at the questions about the formation of German philately.

Therefore, I can only answer:

Carl Beck

Bibliographie der Wichtigsten Deutschen Sonderschriften über die Postwertzeichen Einzelner Länder. [Bibliography of the most important German specialized works about postage stamps of individual countries.], Leipzig-Breslau, Germany, 1915. This Edition cost at that time 1M (I understand a gold mark for 1915). This work can also be found in Germania-Berichte 1915, No. 11/12, page 163 in a book review. This work was published in other issues of Germania-Berichte: 1915, No. 9/10, pages 129-130; 1916, No. 1/2, pages 14-16; No. 3/4, pages 44-45 and No. 5/6, pages 70-71. The information was derived from the 1907 Krasemann bibliography, updated to 1915, so that it was a total overview of the books in the German language on the postage stamps of individual countries. With this former book on my shelf there was no necessity for me to replace it. A bibliography of Carl Beck can be found in Maassen's Wer ist Wer [Who's Who], pages 14-15.

B.T.K Smith

Table of the Matières de la revue Le Timbre-Poste Editée at Bruxelles par J. - B. Moens, 2758

February 1863 - December 1900. This volume has the number 41 on the back of the title page. I bought it in the Huys-Berlingin auction 5 on the 3rd May, 1991 under Lot-Nr. 1545 for 51 Sfr including commission. It is an original edition with its cover bound in half-linen. The title page carries my library stamp.

Victor Suppantschitsch

Die Entstehung und Entwicklung der Philatelistischen Literatur in der Zweiten Hälfte des XIX Jahrhunderts. [The Origin and Development of Philatelic Literature in the Second Half of the 19th Century.]

Here, on the back of the title page, is hand written Example No. 24.

The volume was once held together with staples. The front cover has a vertically attached receipt. This didn't harm the Title text too much. The cover now is stuck to a piece of thin cardboard. The back cover is now removed. The whole volume is bound in half-linen.

(By the way, on page 63 is a list of classic philatelic authors, including Hugo Krötzsch. As misprint, you have used Krötsch. The man is called Krötzsch and his reputation is also renowned in German philately - very well deserved. The name is of Slavic origin.)

(Incidentally: Suppantschitsch is buried in the St. Peter graveyard in Graz, Austria. As I do many times with my old philatelists, I visited also him there. Sobering! He lies in the grave as the first and now has two funeral comrades buried above him in the same grave. The last in the grave was Elisbeth Krügerl who died in 1983. Famous philatelists are in death, one learns once again, like all others!)

Also on this edition is located my library stamp on the title page.

In Maassen's Who's Who you will find on pages 171-172 a profile about me with a relatively current picture. There you will see that I dealt intensively with the origins of the early stamp perforations on one side and with the first watermark representations on the other side and I also wrote much about it. Under such aspects was my library built. Finally, you find my contributions to classic philately in Dr. Manfred Amrhein's Philatelic Literature, volume 2, of the year 1997, with additional comments on Natalis Rondot, about whom Dr. Amrhein had no notion, because Rondot should have been dealt with in Volume I. On my noticeable protests, he wrote a relatively clear appreciation of Rondot in Volume II. It simply was a necessity, because Natalis Rondot is simply the father of all our philately world-wide!

I hope this little something is worthwhile and I greet you very kindly.

[Rohm's signature]

P.S. I completely forgot to tell you where the Suppantschitsch volume came from. In Wunsiedel in Bavaria, there was a dealer in philatelic literature, Alfred Ihm, a skilled electrician from Freundenthal in Austrian Silesia (1903). There, from a sale list from October 14, 1972 under List number 0984, I bought this Suppantschitsch for 39 DM inclusive. My statements on Ihm are in Maassen's Who's Who, page 90.

END

Valeria Vaccari

Philatelic literature in competitive exhibitions

[La letteratura filatelica nelle esposizioni a concorso]

Vaccari Magazine, November 2001, Volume 8, Whole number 26, pp.72-76

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
November 2008

PHILATELIC LITERATURE IN COMPETITIVE EXHIBITIONS

In 1991, we and our publications began to participate in national and international exhibitions. People often ask us why.

Since people continue to ask us this, I thought we should respond. I am doing it in writing so that others who may have been asking themselves the same thing and have not gotten around to asking us may also benefit. It seemed natural to use for this purpose Vaccari Magazine, the magazine of our Company, in which we can set forth the recognition received at national and international shows by this publication.

Our main goal has been to make ourselves known. I believe that participation in shows is a very appropriate method for that purpose.

In times like ours where globalization is by now an established and irreversible fact, it is particularly important to participate in exhibitions, especially at the international level, because of the exposure it allows to all kinds of people from all over the world.

Put in that way, it may seem very simple and easy. You take your books and you ship them. All that it will cost you is two copies of every publication each time, shipping costs ... and travel expenses. However, bear in mind – this also involves risks!

In general, organized shows are not only store windows where editors and authors can show off their publications, but are also competitive exhibitions. This means that participation is associated with rules which lead to an evaluation, a vote. It must be said that report cards, which are given not only in school whether you like it or not, must always be kept in mind.

Without making any comment at all as to evaluations we have received (which at the international level are, in general, thoughtfully made by highly qualified judges who are the best in the world), getting a score always involves unknowns.

Knowing that one's own publications will be observed, examined, analyzed, discussed and also criticized is a significant motivation to do one's job well and to constantly seek to improve. We try to impart this conviction to our writers and to our collaborators (printers, technicians, proofreaders and translators) so that they too will strive in their work to improve their services to us.

And this should happen right from the start. A book must come about in the right way. Once it is printed, no changes can be made. It is fair to say that while a collection can always be improved, a book is what it is and that is what it remains.

For some data, please see the table that follows with the list of the various national shows (which take place not more than once a year) and international shows (high level shows only take place two or three times a year) in which we have participated. Starting with Prixna '91 in Bressanone and Genoa '92, Brasiliana '93, Hafnia '94, Sindelfingen (several times), San Francisco '97, Portugal and Italy '98, IBRA and PhilexFrance '99, continuing with, among many others not listed, The Stamp Show, WIPA, Spain 2000 and ending with the 2001 Belgica, Philanippon, Gifra and Hafnia.

Scanning the list, one can see the number as well as the level of the awards obtained. On the subject of awards, some explanation of the scoring of competition in the Literature Class is called for, because its formulation and composition are of course completely different from those of the other categories. The other categories are concerned with stamps and letters, the Literature Class with books and publications. In the Literature Class, 40 points are given for content, 40 points for research, 15 points for technique and graphics and 5 for presentation.

The photograph on page 72 shows: Vaccari's philatelic literature booth at Veronafile

The highest scores in the Literature Class are very difficult to obtain. The methodology is more stringent, although the greater time allowed permits a more thoughtful examination.

To begin with, only books or series of books can aspire to the highest awards. Manuals, booklets, magazines and newspapers must content themselves with a lower level because they are clearly not comparable.

If one considers the large international exhibitions of recent years, it can be seen that rarely has a publication received the gold medal, especially given that (perhaps justifiably) the efforts of a "home team" competitor tend to be lauded. The latest examples are P. Smith in London, Ferchenbauer in Vienna, and Edifil (9 volumes!) in Madrid. As compared with these three gold medals in the Literature Class, there were a hundred or so golds awarded in the other classes!

I leave it to you to evaluate the value of a gold in the Literature Class at the international level as compared with one obtained in other categories of competition.

It is not my intention to delve further into a deeper analysis of the scoring which, to tell the truth, is not something we consider either before or during the publication of a book. We work to produce a good product, not a high score. We are not on a medal hunt. An award is a recognition of our and the author's work, a demonstration of having proceeded with care and ability.

I should make another observation about literature. Other than the "technical" efforts of graphics, composition, translation, etc., the choice of the work is very important and fundamental.

From an editorial point of view, writings in the specific philatelic and postal history area, while not numerous are, fortunately, not lacking. However, it is difficult to find works of a quality where not only the author's research and analysis but also the treatment and subject are sound.

The investment required for a book is always substantial and long-term. Bad choices can have serious repercussions and can negatively impact a company's financial condition. At times, albeit reluctantly, we are forced to reject works.

Most often, Vaccari chooses the works and the authors. However, it sometimes happens that we are chosen. This can happen with fine authors who know they have very important research or work to be published. In these situations exciting results can be obtained.

The volumes of Lorenzo Carra, 1866. La Liberazione del Veneto. are an example – the sole gold medal at Belgica and Philanippon (!) and gold also at the other exhibitions. In London it even received congratulations in addition to the gold. The author chose us because he had seen how we work, was familiar with the quality of our graphics, knew of our precision and appreciated our distribution capability. We established an excellent collaborative relationship that resulted in an exchange of ideas and suggestions that, in turn, led to the highest achievement in many aspects of the publication.

The author received well-deserved, prestigious recognition all over the world for his work. He was clearly very satisfied and, with it having been shown that we can contribute to the achievement of the award by obtaining full points for technique, graphics and presentation, it results in excellent advertising and publicity for us. It gives us satisfaction that our work is recognized and appreciated and the banner of our company is raised on the highest flagpole.

All of this spurs us on to new initiatives. It gives us the impetus to continue to expand the range of our interests, which are not limited exclusively to philately and postal history but also extend to works of a cultural or artistic nature or writings of local interest. We have inserted these works into our “Giant Blue Anteater” catalogue.

The photograph on page 75 shows: Lorenzo Carra at Belgica 2001 – Brussels.

Our Ritrovati [Rediscovered] series is another example. While on the surface it can be described as a simple reprint, it is instead the fruit of a selection of old publications that leads to new thinking and approaches and brings forth new ideas.

The distribution of publications is also an important activity for us, which we pursue not only for works published by us but also for other works that we believe will interest and be sought after by collectors. To satisfy these needs, we pursue everything of importance which is published anywhere in the world in the philatelic and postal history area. This is demanding (many texts are not in Italian) and exacting work, both logistically (we have a large warehouse, currently 400 square meters) and financially (it ties up a significant amount of capital). Today, for example, we have more than 500 titles in our catalogue and 1,700 items in “1×1” – sales of used items and bargains that come from the purchase of libraries or lots and from catalogue remainders from prior years.

Only a few companies have the ability and are set up to operate this kind of business. In Italy, we are the only one.

As I have mentioned, this combination of things requires great diligence, but it also offers satisfactions. Ours is a work of passion that leads us always to look for new solutions.

At this point in time we are well equipped, but we are always working to better utilize information systems.

We were among the first to create a website (there were fewer than 50 philatelic websites in Italy in 1996), which we enlarge and improve constantly. Just last month the site received the award of five stars at the FIP international competition. Our site, begun almost on a bet, now receives some 6,000 visits a month and an average of approximately 200 visits per day. These figures are steadily increasing. Our goal is to continue to add to that portion which is dedicated to philatelic information as well as to the commercial portion. For books, the advantages are significant because we can insert new items online practically in real time and also update “1×1” availability with greater accuracy (since quantities are limited to one copy per title). The advantages for those who use the site are significant, especially for performing quick searches and finding quickly what one is looking for. We firmly believe in the concrete opportunity for new, wide horizons that keep opening up for us.

We are always in search of new projects for publication and new ideas.

For us, competitive exhibitions are an excellent opportunity to examine and learn new ideas as well as a means to show off philately and postal history. We think they can serve that purpose for all collectors and enthusiasts.

END

[W. Hughes Hughes]

An English Collector

[Un Anglais Collectionneur]

Revue Française de la Philatélie Universelle, November 1891, Volume 1, Issue 1, p.7

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
November 2008

AN ENGLISH COLLECTOR

The passion for collecting postage stamps doesn't just date from today. The curious letter which we reproduce below dates from 1863 and was addressed from a former member of the British Parliament to a French Cabinet minister. We have retained the original style and orthography:

Hamfort Hill. - London
19th August 1863

Your Excellency

Having received many similar favors from other personages of high authority, I dare to address myself to Your Excellency, to ask you to please help my son, which he takes greatly to heart, and won't, I hope, trouble Your Excellency.

Two years ago my son began a collection of the postage stamps of every country, and with a bit of success, amassed nearly all the postage stamps that were ever used in every part of the world, and now boasts approximately 1,600 varieties. Sadly, he lacks two Reunion stamps, the 15 and 30 cent values (used, I believe, for a short time in 1860).

Thus I have the courage to present myself before Your Excellency, and ask you to have the great generosity to help me obtain, at the address below, some examples, or at least one copy of each of these stamps he desires so much. We already have the New Caledonia stamp.

I doubt that the printing plates for these old stamps still exist in the Post Office archives, but it would be easy to pull some proofs for the ones already produced.

Hoping soon to receive a favorable response to my petition, I offer Your Excellency the assurance of my high regards and my profound gratitude.

W. Hughes Hughes

Former Member of the British Parliament & Alderman of London

END

Dr. [Jacques Amable] Legrand

Dr. Legrand

Beiblatt zur Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung, February 1901, Volume 14, Issue 2, n.pp. [1p.]

This is an advertisement. It is to be found in several other issues of this periodical around this time.

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
November 2008

Dr. LEGRAND

136 bis Avenue de Neuilly, Neuilly, Seine, France

My collection of philatelic literature, which is already very voluminous, will comprise everything that has been published about stamps since the beginning, to wit: newspapers, catalogues, price lists, treatises, monographs, theses, flyers, posters, auction or public sale catalogues, by-laws and society rosters, address books; and other similar items in bound books, sheets, brochures, in various languages and of any period or country where such works have been published.

I thus ask all persons who possess any works of this sort in good condition, however minor they may be, whether they be separate sheets or unmatched editions of newspapers, and are desirous of disposing of them to kindly let me know, informing me of the titles of the works, names of their authors, the editions of journals, their publishers and anything that can serve to distinguish them, as a large number of publications have similar names. Please include the cash price that you desire to receive for the items.

END

H. Mittelman

Of what benefit is a philatelic reference book based on the Dr. Diena system?

[Von welchem nutzen ist ein philatelistisches nachschlagebuch nach dem system Dr. Diena?]

Philatelistischer Börsen-Courier, March 1889, Volume 4, Issue 3, pp.26-27

Translation produced by Klaus F. Alt for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2010

OF WHAT BENEFIT IS A PHILATELIC REFERENCE BOOK BASED ON THE DR. DIENA SYSTEM?

Dr. Emilio Diena attempted to show early last year how important it would be to publish a reference book for philatelic literature, just after he had written previously in the Philatelic Record on the subject. This article in the Postwerthzeichen was critically acclaimed at that time. The Illustrierte Briefmarken Journal and the Weltpost seconded the proposal; the former declared in an article that it should be the responsibility of one of the larger clubs in Germany to publish such a book with the support of other smaller clubs. But the same result that usually obtains when an article is written and simply published without bringing the ideas to fruition came about here as well regarding the publication of a book of such importance to philately. The numerous philatelic newspapers, which are countless in the USA, steadily publish treatises and various articles about philately. Is there any management here? Would it not be better to have a survey of which facets of philately have been treated, what has been covered in articles describing philatelic topics, and which articles need to be written yet? We would then know what has been covered and what remains to be done. Only then could we approximate perfect coverage in philately. However, the publication of such a philatelic reference book should not be the responsibility of an individual or a club, but surely several philatelists and philatelic clubs should combine to deliberate upon how to execute such a plan. Obviously, this could have happened, but this issue shows just how interested our philatelic clubs are in the most important questions of philately. In order to produce such a book with precision and full coverage, one would need a co-operator in each country, such as:

As publisher:	John K Tiffany* [sic], St. Louis
For Germany:	The Bavarian and the International Philatelist Clubs
For Austria:	The Austrian Philatelists' Club
For France:	The Société Française de Timbrologie
For Belgium:	J. B. Moens , Brussels
England:	Philatelic Society, London
For Italy:	Dr. Emilio Diena , Modena
For Holland:	The Dutch Stamp Collectors' Club
For North America:	American Philatelic Association
For South America:	Philatelic Society, Lima

* John K. Tiffany [sic] is one of the most outstanding philatelists in the world, President of the American Philatelic Association.

In addition, those philatelists and philatelic clubs with a sizable library, should be pulled in for cooperation, such as:

John K Tiffany [sic], St. Louis (700 volumes)

Theodor Haas, Munich (300 volumes)

Dr. Moschkau, Oybin

Austrian Philatelists' Club

International Philatelists' Club (300 volumes)

Bavarian Philatelists' Club (200 volumes)

Dr. Diena, Modena

Gebrüder Senf, Leipzig

J. B. Moens, Brussels

Sigm. Friedl, Vienna (500 volumes)

Heinrich Koch, Vienna

Dominik Stadlbauer, Vienna

H. Mittelman, Czernowitz (200 volumes)

E. Heitmann, Leipzig

Stanley Gibbons [sic] & Co., London

Once the clubs have agreed to their selection and a committee has been formed, the work could proceed with confidence. But if that plan should not be feasible, we lack at a minimum such a reference for the German philatelic literature. It would be feasible to cover the German literature as a first step and thus induce others to work on the second step covering English literature and eventually the third step covering the literature of all other languages. Philatelic authors would then know which topics warrant more work. After all, there have been too many instances of articles that were written in the 1870s showing up in some journals in 1886; also, given that we deal with all philatelic literature, we need to include those philatelic articles that show up in other newspapers. Each article should specify the author's name, unless it is suppressed. This would imply the following categories:

Title of the article	Author	Name of newspaper	Year	Issue	Language	Country

Each article is identified by subject matter, such as:

1. Watermarks
2. Stamps
3. Forgeries, &c.

Articles by postal authorities should also be included, if they relate to philately. It would then be easy for philatelic writers and for those collectors following the modern move to specialized collections to become fully informed about various facets of philately, if every component is easily accessible. I hope that the many significant articles regarding the importance of such a book are not in vain, because the articles need to be taken as a whole, they need to form a unified base, if they are to be truly useful to the collector.

END

Karl v. Gündel

A bibliography of German philatelic literature in sight

[Eine bibliographie der Deutschen philatelistischen litteratur in sicht]

Die Postwertzeichen-Kunde, July 1891, Volume 2, Issue 7, pp.87-89

Translation produced by Klaus Alt for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2010 (Volume number corrected July 2013)

A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

IN SIGHT

In 1888, Emilio Diena published an article, Reference book on philatelic literature, in issues 1 and 2 of Postwertzeichen, which contains much worth noting and which has been received by many with applause. Like him, I agree with the idea expressed there in general – but I presume for several reasons that it is neither doable nor of significant benefit to philatelic research. Consider, for example, how few will be in a position to purchase such an exhaustive and thus expensive publication – never mind that it will be difficult to find a publisher willing to accept the more than minor risk of facing the very high production costs in view of the high probability that essentially the complete press run will languish in the stores, rather than being sold – and consider furthermore that such a monster of a publication would have required so many contributors that it is improbable that it would have produced anything with some uniformity, something actually useful, because it is more likely that each of the topics would have been discussed with a different approach – then my conclusion that such a bibliography – as proposed by Dr. Diena – is neither doable nor of significant usefulness due to its high cost would seem to be justified.

Later the idea of doing a bibliography of all countries in a single volume was dropped – because it is not feasible – and the idea was simplified to doing a bibliography of the German philatelic literature. This idea did not progress very far; as far as I know, nothing has been done.

It was also proposed that the costs for the production of the bibliography should be borne by the German philatelic clubs. Anybody making such a proposal is hardly aware of the costs required, and I presume it highly unlikely that the meagre funds available to almost all German philatelic clubs would be sufficient to yield the sum that would be required.

Thus, it is a pleasure to hear now that V. Suppantschitsch, Oberlandesgerichtsrat [Translator: roughly, a Regional High Court Judge] in Graz, is engaged in the herculean task to produce a bibliography of the German philatelic literature in an optimal and useful structure. I probably do not need to point out that he is just the right man for the job of completing such an immense task, given that his contributions to philatelic knowledge are well known in Germany. A philatelist for nearly 30 years, owner of a philatelic library of more than 500 volumes, Suppantschitsch has worked for a long time on the preparation of a German philatelic bibliography and has made sufficient progress in that work that the publication of the first section of his publication has been scheduled for next May.

This bibliography is intended to be comprehensive and to list everything written and published in German by anybody in all areas of philately – it is structured such that any user will easily find what, by whom and what topic was written on any collecting area. Every philatelic author is listed separately and all books, articles, newspaper columns, etc. written by him will be listed separately noting the subject. However, not included is the kind of information that every philatelist knows now, that is included in every major handbook and is no longer in doubt – because nobody looking for information will be aided, if he looks through and reads several hundred articles and notes only to find that 70-80 of them contain old information that has long been corrected and shown to be wrong or that 50 of such notes repeat the same information.

The publication will have the following four parts:

1. History of general philately (information on stamps)
2. History of the German philatelic literature
3. Listing of the entire German philatelic literature
4. The actual bibliography of the entire German philatelic literature in lexicographic format

The most important part is certainly the 4th part – which is still not duplicated elsewhere. This part will be path-breaking for scientific philatelic research activities and will contribute much to provide substantial support for such work. To provide more detail:

If anybody wants to learn something about a philatelic subject today, he must thumb through a multitude of philatelic articles with a great deal of trouble and substantial time required in order to find the desired information, if at all – but how easy is it to miss the most significant information because the publication containing the same is not available or was overlooked. But it will be totally different once the 4th part of the bibliography has been published. To illustrate: Somebody wants to learn about the proposals by Whiting from the 1830s. He will need to look only in the 4th part of the bibliography under Whiting, where all articles published in German publications to-date regarding these proposals will be listed, such that he will then only need to read the desired information in the sources listed.

It is so obvious what eminent benefit this lexicographic part of the bibliography will be to all philatelists looking for advanced information, that there will be no need to waste more words on the subject.

But the price of this truly monumental publication is not so high that those with limited funds would be precluded from the purchase. The outstanding and flawless publication, consisting of roughly 40 sheets sized 8°, will be marketed, starting probably next May, in 14 monthly parts of three sheets [Translator: Folded into octavo size] at a price of 1 Mark each. Thus, the total price for the entire publication would be 14 Marks. But even this relatively low price would be significantly reduced by a 50% discount for all who subscribe for the entire run no later than the 1st October of the current year with Karl Cl. Sauer in Mährisch-Ostrau. There is no need for prepayment and the cost of each shipment needs to be paid only after its publication. This will so aid in the purchase of the publication that there are not likely to be many scientific philatelists, who would find such a low monthly costs to be prohibitively expensive. Therefore, there is every reason to assume that this publication will find a sufficient number of purchasers.

It is now up to the German philatelists to facilitate the publication of what will certainly be a ground-breaking work at a cost that is not overwhelming, where no other nation has such a publication, a publication that will honour not only the German philatelic literature, but that will be a fountain of knowledge for all serious philatelists looking for advanced information for their unimaginable benefit and which will doubtlessly contribute to the advancement of scientific philately. I am not subject to delusions, when I assert that the publication of this philatelic work will bring about the dawning of a new and bright era in Germany, an era of general advancement and progress on all fronts.

I want to add that Suppantschitsch has asked all philatelic clubs, the philatelic press and all philatelists interested in the publication of this work for their help, which is needed to deliver a comprehensive work. This help would take the following forms:

- a. that the club leaders would supply him; without prior request, with copies of internal club publications, such as by-laws, year-end reports, club news, etc., and those books from the club library that he may request directly in time.
- b. that the publishers of philatelic journals (including those regarding German private post issues) and the authors and publishers of philatelic publications of all types send him a copy of such publications.
- c. that all philatelists, who possess older or less well known philatelic publications, provide him with information regarding such publications
- d. that authors would supply him, without prior request, with a listing of their publications, articles, etc., in philatelic publications, with (for the articles) the title of the periodical, year and issue, as well as data on their article.

He needs this listing in order to check that his list is complete. The plea to send him the desired material without prior request derives from the fact that he must spend all of his free time on the completion of the publication, if it is to be finished to the intended timetable and that he thus has no spare time to send requests to the persons involved.

END

Bonn Foundation purchases John Duggan library
[Bonner stiftung kauft John Duggan-bibliothek]
Philatelie, July 2008, Volume 60, Whole number 373, p.14

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2008

BONN FOUNDATION PURCHASES JOHN DUGGAN LIBRARY

John Duggan was a world-renowned author in the realm of aerophilately during his lifetime. The Stiftung zur Förderung der Philatelie und Postgeschichte [Foundation for Philately and Postal History] in Bonn, managed a few weeks ago to acquire the complete working library of the Zeppelin postal expert, who died in 2007. Duggan's library contains around 450 volumes, including numerous early and rare works.

The library consists mainly of books in German (primary and secondary sources) but also of a large body of foreign works, largely unknown to us, which bring their own perspective to German Zeppelin postal history. Among these are documentation of Zeppelins by British or American authors, numerous works on the role of Zeppelins in the first World War and general and sometimes rare airmail manuals and expedition literature on the north pole. The north pole played a very large role in the history of Zeppelin flight and was also the subject of John Duggan's last book Airships in the Arctic.

This unique collection of highly relevant works on Zeppelins was assembled by John Duggan alone over nearly 50 years. After this collection is catalogued, it will be incorporated into the permanent collection of the Bonn House of Philately and will be available there for consultation.

END

Rüdiger Krenkel
Library Catalogue 2007
[Bibliothekskatalog 2007]
Stiftung zur Förderung der Philatelie und Postgeschichte, Bonn, Germany, 2007

Translation of the Foreword only, p.3

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2010

LIBRARY CATALOGUE 2007

FOREWORD

You have in front of you the first edition of the Library Catalogue for the Stiftung zur Förderung der Philatelie und Postgeschichte (Foundation for Philately and Postal History).

In 2006 the Foundation celebrated its 40th Anniversary. The basis of its Library was a significant book donation of the great philatelist Consul Hermann Deninger in the first years of its existence, which contained about 440 books, among them some very rare works.

The holdings were recorded, catalogued and were referred to since then as the small but extraordinary Deninger Library. During the decades since, the stock grew with books donated by the BDPh (Federation of German Philatelists), with supporting documents by the Foundation and not last but least through the donation of almost 1,000 books by me. Since the foundation did not employ a librarian, who could record these, the Library did not lend itself to ease of use, rather it was just a heap of philatelic books.

So, in the year 2005, I introduced the concept of reorganization of the Foundation's Library to the Board of Trustees, to which they agreed. Some highpoints were the hiring of a temporary librarian, on a 400 Euro basis, the purchase of modern library software to facilitate the recording of the books through a newly designed system. Because of space considerations and limited areas it was also decided to give all duplicates to deserving philatelic libraries and to keep only the newest edition of postage stamp catalogues. We are also no longer offering magazines. Exceptions are catalogues and magazine articles of historic interest. The Library will no longer keep information on collectables like money, coins and telephone cards, but only philately and postal history.

The Foundation also stressed the acquisition of rare finds. The result is now complete. The Catalogue is now represented by almost 3,700 different books, which are mainly printed in German, but a few dozen are in foreign languages.

At the moment the Foundation Library is not yet public, which is why the Catalogue does not contain user information and hours of business. I plan to take that step next year. But the Board of Trustees will have to confirm that during one of its future meetings. If the Library will go public, you will see corresponding information in the magazine Philatelie.

But you can use all the literature already. This table of contents offers you an easy entry into the systematic subjects, so that you can easily access your own collecting requirements. If you make an appointment in advance, we offer many opportunities for research and in-depth studies.

Warm regards,

Rüdiger Krenkel

Managing Director of the Stiftung zur Förderung der Philatelie und Postgeschichte

September 2007

END

Friedrich Writzel
Library Catalogue of Philatelic Books and other Media
[Bibliothekskatalog über Philatelistische Bücher und andere Medien]
4th edition, Verbandes Österreichischer Philatelistenvereine, Vienna, Austria. 2000

Translation of the Foreword only, p.3

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2010

LIBRARY CATALOGUE OF PHILATELIC BOOKS AND OTHER MEDIA

FOREWORD

Only books and other media are contained in this Catalogue, but not catalogues and periodicals. Exceptions are catalogues, which are used like handbooks and are not issued periodically. This library catalogue is an Alphabetical Catalogue, that is, titles and authors are not separated but alphabetically recorded continuously. Prepositions before the article in titles are ignored (in light print).

Fundamental characteristics on the EDV-System Sebastian (DOS) is the use of automatic ranks: Titles starting with numbers are sorted before letters, Umlaut always after the parent vowels (like in the Telecom Phonebook: ä after a, etc.). Word spaces and marks/signs may cause a deviation of the alphabetical order.

A difference is made between main entries (full version) and secondary entries (hint version).

Main Entries (Title and Name in bold type)

These contain - if known - the following information separated by full stop or forward slash:

Translator's Note: See the original for this information.

Secondary Entries (light printing)

These contain the following information:

- a) Author
- b) → (Arrow pointing to main entries)
- c) Beginning of title, up to 30 letters/symbols or 27 letters/symbols and 3 dots.
- d) Name

Supplementary regulations are contained in the Bibliotheksordnund (Library Rules)!

END

Martin Strack
Library Index 2007
[Bibliotheksverzeichnis 2007]
Forschungsgemeinschaft Grossbritannien, Germany, 2007, 122pp.

Translation of the Foreword only, p.v

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2008

LIBRARY INDEX 2007

FOREWORD

Since the publication of the last library index in June 1999, the Library of the Forschungsgemeinschaft Grossbritannien (Great Britain Research Group) (FgGB) has steadily been developed. Through specific purchases, numerous gaps in the book stock were closed and the availability to the members of the FgGB was improved. Through purchases, but especially through the willingness of some members to donate, a large collection of auction catalogues is more readily available, which presents excellent documents for the specialist collector as well as the researching philatelist and postal history collector. Through the purchase of volumes of some British magazine, specific themes in the form of short articles were obtained.

But the biggest growth of our library was accomplished by taking delivery of numerous Leitz-folders, which we received from the estate of our former editor and manager Heinz Reck through his widow. The collection of these articles was started by our former member Frederik Neumann-Rogers around the 1960s and could hardly be collected in its diversity ever again.

These folders contain hundreds of short and longer articles arranged by keywords, which were collected from a wide variety of magazines. The Gibbons Stamp Monthly folders of the 1999 volume were pulled and integrated into this collection. The keyword index for this collection of articles is located at the end of the library index.

In the year 2001, we experienced a black day for the library, when the room on the lower floor was inundated by 40 cm of water during a storm. Thank God the water receded rather quickly, so that only a few books were seriously damaged. Books and some leaflets from folders were dried and only three total losses were registered of which one has already been replaced. A new edition of the book by Whitney has also been added to the library. An additional loss was also experienced when two volumes (Robson Lowe) were lost by the Post Office and never appeared again.

Therefore the following:

Ludwig Troendle: Briefmarkenkunde - Das Handbuch für Philatelisten, 348pp., Munich, Mosaik Verlag, 1978, D.

J. T. Whitney: Collect British Postmarks - Handbook of British Postal Markings and their Values., 3rd edition, 277pp., London/New York: Longman Group., 1983, E.

Robson Lowe: The Encyclopaedia of British Empire Postage Stamps 1806-1948.,
Volume 2, Part 1 - The Empire in Africa., 240pp., London: Robson Lowe, 1949, E.

Robson Lowe: The Encyclopaedia of British Empire Postage Stamps 1806-1948.,
Volume 2 Part 2 - The Empire in Africa, 228pp., London: Robson Lowe, 1949, are no longer available, compared with the Library Index of 1999.
E.

Parallel with the printed library index, you can also download this from the homepage of the FgGB as a pdf. The search functions of Adobe Reader make it possible to find specific subjects.

It is hoped that this library index will offer a stimulus for more intensive use by the membership as had occurred in the past. Only he who possesses the necessary knowledge or attains it through suitable literature will be really successful as a collector.

Theo Brauers

Raeren/Dusseldorf, August 2007

Martin Strack

END

Index of philatelic articles in available journals*
[Nachweis philatelistischer aufsätze in den vorhandenen zeitschriften]
Jahres-Berichte des Vereins für Briefmarkenkunde Kiel 1898/99
Kiel, Germany, 1900, pp.37-60 & 32-36

Translation of the introductory text on page 37 only

* Editor's note: Presumably this means available in the Society library, the catalogue of which is given on pages 23 to 36 of the same volume. Pages 32 to 36 contain a full list of the journals indexed, together with their abbreviations used in the Index.

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2008 (Revised & augmented October 2011)

INDEX OF PHILATELIC ARTICLES IN AVAILABLE JOURNALS

(Additions and corrections are both welcome and requested by the Association see the pages opposite.)

Explanation:

The sequence and orthography is the same as in the Senf Catalogue of 1899, except Puerto Rico, USA & CSA are under A instead of V (or K). See also under German, French, British, Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch, Russian and Austrian colonies, also consult Levant, German States, Italian States, Australia, South America, as appropriate.

Abbreviations:

P	Post, postal
Ph:	Philatelic
Gesch:	Postal history
Pr:	Proofs, samples, submissions, attempts, essays
Pn:	Postage stamps
A:	Issue, emission
M, m:	Stamps, especially postage stamps
Dm:	Official stamps
Em:	Railway stamps
Eilm:	Express postal stamps, express stamps (other)
Jm:	Anniversary stamps
Nm:	Postage due
Rm:	Return postage stamps, return stamps
Sm:	Cancelled stamps
Tm:	Telegraph stamps
Zm:	Newspaper stamps
G:	Postal stationary
Au:	Cut-squares
U:	Envelopes
Du:	Official envelopes

Ru:	Return envelopes
Str:	Newspaper bands
K:	Postcards
Dk:	Official postcards
Pa:	Postal money grams
Pau:	Postal envelopes
Kb:	Letter cards
St:	Postmark cancellations
Ad:	Imprints
Fd:	Misprints
Nd:	New printings
Fg:	Counterfeit
E:	Authenticity, genuine sign, secret sign etc.
V:	Printing varieties
T:	Types, variety of signs
Wz:	Watermark
Zg:	Perforation
Gz:	Perforated
Uz:	Imperforate
Dst:	Rouletted
g:	gum
Fp:	Armed Forces mail
"-":	equal

Brackets denote that the original article is not available in the library.

The original edition is printed first. The other unchanged verbatim articles follow, separated by a comma.

The sign < denotes condensed article, the sign > denotes additional paragraphs.

A semicolon denotes the possibility of equal or similar contents.

A full Stop separates structurally different works.

A colon denotes a different author.

The abbreviations printed in front of the dates are those of the magazines from which the articles are taken.

The articles in T (Timbre-Poste) which do not mention the author's name, appear to be those of the publisher, J. B. Moens.

END

Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm
April 1922, Volume 2, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2008

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

April 1922, Volume 2, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.13-14

The Book Worm.

Dr. Albert Neuburger

By permission of the publishers of the Berliner Morgenpost

The painter of a long since disappeared cosiness, the describer of a homely small town life, Karl Spitzweg, once painted the book worm, the aficionado of old books, who burrowed into his treasures and simply forgets the world as it is. That is not the lucky one about whom this article is written, but the ongoing exhibition of fabulous book treasures at the art and crafts museum, as well as the spreading tendency to offer the books in a beautiful and artistic volume, which spawns a peculiar idea: what will be the destiny of these treasures, these collections of knowledge and poetry?

If we pick up an old book, it gives us the opportunity to guess its future destiny: the colour of its spine faded, the corners damaged, dog eared, etc. But those are damages which can be avoided with careful storage and care. Even the fading of the spine can be simply prevented by fastening a dark cloth on the glass door of the book case, or a curtain around the book shelves.

Of greater concern is another enemy of the books which is the Book Worm. These are noticed as fine channels on the cardboard of the spine and we find small holes and strange nibbling on the pages. Corners and edges are damaged. The best proof is a prize competition offered by the Academy of Science of Gottingen in 1774, whereby the winner, who would not only identify the culprit in detail, but who would also offer the best way to eliminate it, was promised a prize.

We do not know the outcome of this prize competition, but nowadays we do not have to research extensively to determine the enemies of our books - we know them and unfortunately only too well. There is not only one creature but a number of tiny animals, which particularly enjoy our books. Their digestive mechanism is different from people. While man's digestive tract does not take advantage of cellulose, the main ingredient of paper, the tiny creatures digest it excellently. They also welcome the resin with which the paper is glued. Amongst the insects who prefer books the Cockroaches and Black Beetles have to be included, which stand out because of their enormous appetite. They develop more of an appetite the warmer the climate. During the winter their destruction comes almost to a standstill, but they make it up during the summer. In the tropics, they have such an appetite that they can destroy large book accumulations within a very short time. But this behaviour also gives us the means to eradicate them. Wherever they are found or wherever their first signs of destruction occur, the books should be stored in rather cool rooms, which are at the same time rather bright, because the small black beetles and the larger cockroaches shun the light.

Then there is a small butterfly, the so called Book Moth, who attacks the books in a similar fashion that the fabric moth attacks clothing. If you notice them in a book, you approach them the same way as the fabric moth, in other words with camphor and naphthalene or - even better - with both of them at the same time. Experience teaches us that some moth varieties succumb to camphor others to naphthalene, but it would be wrong to dust the books with those substances by yourself. A few moth balls positioned in your book case suffice.

If we approach this matter with a great deal of care, we will discover other enemies in our books. There is for example the pretty little, Silver Fish and the well known Worm Meal announces the arrival of the Boring Beetle (Anobium Pertinax) with its yellow brown larva. This is an approximately 4 millimetre long, black beetle, the wings of which have stripes with tiny dots. These beetles are the cause of the small channels with round cross sections. If we want to save our books, we have to take firm action. With the help of a small, fine syringe we spray genuine Dalmatine insect powder into the individual tunnels of the books. But it has to be the genuine powder, which consists of microscopic small pollen of a certain chrysanthemum variety, which has barbs that attach themselves to their breathing organs and cause infection and swelling, which causes their demise.

Light and air are the enemies of Mould which grows when the books are damp or are stored in damp rooms. The glue, which is made of nourishing carbohydrates offers the Mould ample mid-winter nutrition, especially for the Penicillium Gaucum and the green Mucor Mused. Dryness - and repeating it again - light and air will make these unwelcome guests disappear. But the Book Worms cannot be categorized with Mould because the latter don't belong to the animal kingdom, but to the lower class of the plant kingdom.

As you can see it is relatively easy to preserve your books beautifully and in pristine condition. Some attention and good will guarantee their limitless enjoyment.

pp.14-15

Society Libraries-Association Libraries.

Fr. Wilh. Thalmann, Supervisor of the Germania-Ring Library.

Reprinted from Germania-Berichte, 1907, Whole number 19, (final part).

It is suggested that those books (if they have not already been bound) be put into a strong cardboard casing with the book's description glued on their spine. Magazines and such can be stored in cartons. That keeps them from being damaged in the mail.

This concludes my remarks and I only have two wishes. First, that you will arouse interest in the nature of books and in that way they contribute to philatelic knowledge in the circles of our hobby, and secondly that you might be the Prince, who will awaken certain Sleeping Beauties, who still slumber in the cupboards of their clubs - be it that he becomes a Don Juan in the process.

pp.15-16

About the irregularities in "Nachrichtenblattes für Briefmarkenauktionen".

F. Thurzo

The Nachrichtenblatt für Briefmarkenauktionen (Newsletter of Postage Stamp Auctions) has appeared since the 5th April 1921, from the publisher Dorotheum, 17 Dorotheer Street, Vienna I (Postage stamp department). It contains the auction schedules and also the prices realised and is rather interesting because of the latter.

I don't think there exists another magazine which contains such irregularities in numbering, format, etc., as this one. The following contains an exact list of these:

Nachrichtenblatt für Briefmarkenauktionen, year 1921

Whole number	Numbering on the title page	Date	Contents given on the title page	Pages	Format
--------------	-----------------------------	------	----------------------------------	-------	--------

Translator's note: See the original for the data.

Number 31 closes the year 1921.

It is noted that number 1 only contains the big black title Briefmarken-Auktionen (Postage Stamp Auction) without any additional information, while starting with number 2, each issue has a title.

Some numbers are rare (such as numbers 4, 5, 10 and 21a). The Dorotheum can no longer supply a complete set. Collectors of philatelic literature would be well advised to acquire them as soon as possible, before they are too hard to find.

pp.17-19

Literature Review.

A: Periodicals.

B: Books, etc.

p.19

Warning.

Carl Beck

Briefmarken-Post in Gelsenkirchen.

Our warning in the last number regarding this periodical has to some extent shown success, in that immediately after the appearance of the magazine I ordered all numbers from the publishing house in Gelsenkirchen. Only number 1 was missing: can any member supply me with this number?

Carl Beck

Society of Philatelic Literature Collectors.

p.20

What they say about the “Philatelistischen Bücherwurm”.

Advertisement.

END

Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm
January/March 1926, Volume 6, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2010

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

January/March 1926, Volume 6, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.1

Criticism and the Philatelic Press.

J. A. Bosshard, Marburg a.L.

There is many a reader, who is disappointed when buying a book, which was touted to be good by the specialist [i.e. philatelic] press. Many others have observed that a number of philatelic magazines are being influenced, which often results in a lack of objectivity and criticism. Therefore I am especially happy as a collector of philatelic literature and as a reviewer of philatelic magazines that the honest and healthy view and criticism in Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm has found a good spot.

Because of letters and questions addressed to me, today I have decided to write regarding this issue. To present to the reader what today is necessary, so that the philatelic literature does not end up on a dead track. A healthy criticism enables and encourages the author to bring new blood into the philatelic literature to refresh it.

Philately in contrast to the "Picture Collecting" is now on its way to become specialized. It follows logically that specialists have to employ the literature, and this of course necessitates that such literature is available or that it has to be created. One follows the other. The specialist media has to adjust to the situation and has to discuss new publications to be reviewed.

It is an honour for me as a reviewer to have people request a review, as it shows that they value my opinion and expertise. But it also forces my sense of honour to make my reviews fair, dependable and absolutely objective, because the reader of the specialized magazine often buys it only for its reviews and thereby incurs expenses. He demands, sometimes only subconsciously, that his specialized media inform him truthfully and that the reviews are not advertisements or come-ons, which often happens. The reader of the review accepts that the reviewer has read the book and knows the subject. Because without it he could not judge the material – that is wishful thinking!

Many specialized magazines just briefly note the literature. On the other hand, some like everything and then there are those, who remain silent about the publications of their competitors. Yes, a publisher wrote to me, that he had to judge the fairness of prices himself, which is logical since he himself is a dealer. But does philately benefit from it? The first difficulty for the editorial staff is to select the critics, because in my opinion, you need to have more ability than to write beautiful words. A reviewer has to be a philatelist, a know-how and expert, all at the same time. He must form a clear opinion and be an expert in literature, have read a lot and possibly written articles himself. The necessary sense of tact and education is essential!

The few readers of the New publications on the book market know the difficult work of a decent and competent reviewer, if he can conscientiously suggest or reject a book. Well, this is how it works for me: before I review a book, I study it for hours on end, which I recommend with a clear conscience and without being mislead, knowing for sure that the collector thanks me and that I have the confidence of the author and the publisher.

Only the unselfish critic is in a position to suggest - which is now more than ever missing in the area of the philatelic literature - creating new things and supporting the science of philately. That is why I especially welcome the unbiased editorial staff of Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm.

p.2

The Hamburg Exhibition and Philatelic Literature.

Our article in issue 4 of 1925 was unfortunately misunderstood by some in regards to the awards of the Hamburg judges. We only pointed out the illogical presentation of prizes, which was at one time for a single author, then the product of several authors, and finally (ignoring the combined factors) the complete work. So, where is the system? Especially in Mr. Schütt's case - we had no intention of belittling him and are vindicated, that he did not share the "implied accusations".

The Editor

pp.2-7

Literature Reviews.

J. A. Bosshard

A. Periodicals

B. Books

p.7

Advertisement.

p.8

Society for Philatelic Literature Collectors.

END

[Wolfgang Maassen]

Bibliographies - Inexhaustible resources for researching philatelists
[Bibliografien – Unererschöpfliche fundgruben für forschende philatelisten]
AIJP Bulletin, 2008, Issue 2, Whole number 126, pp.71-80

Translation of the introductory text and end text only, pp.71 & 80

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2008

BIBLIOGRAPHIES - INEXHAUSTIBLE RESOURCES
FOR RESEARCHING PHILATELISTS

Older bibliographies, in other words indexes of sources of all kinds of literature, are seldom offered today. They are not well liked and many people don't know what to do with them and feel that the internet can fill the gap. Wide of the mark, libraries offer at best insights into more recent, mostly sketchy stock and those are not yet and not all integrated into the internet.

He who is interested in older literature - monographs and philatelic magazines for example - still has to depend on individual bibliographies, which are mostly scattered about in monographs, periodicals and books. You can never be complete - but over the years you can patiently collect much, be it as an original or a copy.

However, as a rule, you don't know, where and in which publications such older bibliographies are to be found. Therefore this printed overview from the library of Wolfgang Maassen is a valuable aid for guidance, since you can go into a library fortified by it and possibly research the bibliographies, and in them find original sources. If all this is not possible, Wolfgang Maassen could help members, since he himself owns a substantial library of magazines and books. It is worth enquiring.

BIBLIOGRAPHIES SECTION

This section consists of five extensive DIN A-4 volumes in which many bibliographies listed here can be found. An additional volume and numerous individual Bibliographies, Catalogues and Lists complete this collection, which covers the period up to 1945. The contents are given in short form, in which the numbers of the pages in square brackets, are the numbers in the separate volumes of the work:

See the original work for this list.

End note, page 80

Literature Auctions- and Library Catalogues are abundant, as well as literature dealers' lists starting after 1950, but they are not included in this overview.

END

Franz-Karl Lindner

“Who’s Who in Philately” A new edition on the Internet
[“Wer ist Wer in der Philatelie?” – Eine neuauflage im internet]
AIJP-Bulletin, 2008, Whole number 127, pp.108-109

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar’s Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2008

“WHO’S WHO IN PHILATELY”

A NEW EDITION ON THE INTERNET

Many people know of the first edition of Wer ist Wer in der Philatelie produced in 1999 after many years of preliminary work, edited and published by Wolfgang Maassen. The book contains 240 pages, on which there are 1078 encyclopaedia-like short biographies of mostly well known philatelists from early on until to date. There is now a second edition by Wolfgang Maassen revised and greatly increased, which provides the work-in-progress to 2004/2005, though only on the internet on the BDPh web site. The exact address is: <http://www.bdph.de/index.php?id==455>.

This second edition contains nearly three times as many philatelists’ portraits as the first one, and it also includes many previously-published biographies which have been expanded. For example under letter E you will find five times as many biographies than before. New inclusions include mainly international philatelists, especially Austrian and Swiss, and also German expertisers and counterfeiters; as well as dealers and collectors from the German Democratic Republic. Nevertheless, there is no end in sight: the author is already working on the third edition, which is going to, again, double its total scope.

It took two years to create the programming for these internet pages and to bring about the necessary agreements between the persons involved, while at the same time transcribing the data files singly and piece by piece into the data bank. These texts are now all contained in it. In the next few months additional pictures, an abbreviation list and general literature index will be added. But the data bank is already fully operational.

Each reader can now print portraits and send them per mail to third parties. He can even send changes, corrections and additions to the author. Also, of course, he can in this manner register totally new people for consideration. The internet guarantees short, quick and almost free-of-charge paths.

Let us be permitted a peek into the future: If you page through many of the biographies, you will realise that there is ample need for completion. Some occupy only a “space”, in which case even the author himself notes that an entry is still in the works.

The introduction points out, that the author will have to list in his third edition all sources obtained and used. This is an enormous undertaking of course. That is why the third edition will be continued by the author letter by letter, which will give the work-in-progress-date of 2010 or later, because the writer has other obligations (IBRA-Naposta-coordinator, head of the AIJP, etc.) and has to postpone work on this. In the meantime reports received by mail will be addressed by him immediately.

After the books Vereine und Philatelie im 19. Jahrhundert (2007) and Die Geschichte des Prüfwesens in der Deutschen Philatelie (2008) this is now the third work by this author and the most voluminous undertaking. In contrast, the two editions mentioned above, which are weighed in kilograms, are the lightest, as long as you don't print the [internet edition] out completely, while the third edition, if printed as a book (even without portrait photos), would surely entail several volumes. That is in the laps of the Gods. In a few years we will know more about that. Right now this is for certain: The FIP-Literature Commission has expressed its interest in linking it to its web site.

In a few days, the AIJP will attempt a direct link to the BDPh-pages, so you can get access to this fund of knowledge by merely pushing a button. For commercial and other extended utilizations it is suggested that you glance at the copyright notes.

The author himself understands this project is a beginning and hopes that - similar to Wikipedia portals - many colleagues will come through with additions and suggestions.

END

Gerhard Tag
Our bookplate=express
[Unser exlibris=express]
Sammler-Express, 1st January 1959, Volume 13, Issue 1, p.19

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2014

OUR BOOKPLATE=EXPRESS

Our Ex Libris Express

Recently our daily media reported that the painter and graphic artist Prof. Frans Masereel, MDA*, visited the Peoples Republic of China, where his works will be exhibited in Peking, Shanghai and Wuhan.

Only recently – in the autumn of 1957, as part of the exhibition of his works at the Academy of the Arts – the artist could be found in Berlin. Prof. Masereel was born July 30, 1889 in Blankenberghe (Belgium), so he is a Flemish native. After staying in Paris for years, he now lives in Nice on the French Riviera. Known as an outstanding woodcut artist, he is also an exemplary human being who always whole-heartedly embraces the causes of common working people everywhere.

Prof. Hans Grundig, National Prize winner from 1958, reported in his book “Between Mardi Gras and Ash Wednesday” (published by Dietz) in the chapter “Under Fascism” how he and his brave wife Lea managed to get some etchings out of Dresden to Copenhagen in 1937 or 1938. Helene Weigel and the poet Bertolt Brecht saw these works there and Helene Weigel even brought them to Paris. Hans Grundig writes further: “Here they saw many people who like us were directly engaged in the resistance against the Nazis. Yes, we had great joy, due in part to the recognition of our artistic work. Our esteemed woodcut artist Frans Masereel invited Lea and me as their guests to France.

Unfortunately it was already too late for me. Before we had a chance to accept this invitation we were arrested. “

In 1957 and with the amiable approval of Europa Publishing, Zurich, Insel Publishing issued Frans Masereel's woodcut series “History without words” with an afterword by Hermann Hesse (Insel Library #433, Price DM1.25). As can be seen in our illustrations, Prof. Masereel works with just as much love and success in the area of ex libris woodcuts.

Our second illustration shows an ex libris woodcut of Herbert Ott (Oeslau-Coburg) for the “theatre-man” Karl Robert Schäfer in Basel, who owns an interesting mask collection in addition to many ex libris labels.

We found this label in the illustration portion of “Kuerschners Graphic Designers' Manual”.

This is where for the first time about 2500 names and short biographies of living graphic designers from Germany, Austria and Switzerland were published – an outstanding book that by virtue of its alphabetic arrangement quickly yields information on individual artists and their works (Walter de Gruyter & Co., Berlin 1959. 191 pages of text and 156 pages of illustrations containing 428 illustrations, hard-bound, DM36.) – Gerhard Tag

*Mitglied der Deutschen Akademie der Künste (Member of the German Academy of the Arts)

END

H. Schenkel
Photographic bookplates
[Fotographische exlibris]
Sammler-Express, 1st January 1959, Volume 13, Issue 1, p.19

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2014

PHOTOGRAPHIC BOOKPLATES

Photographic Ex libris

Inspired by the interesting chat "from the world of ex libris" by Mr. Tag, I would like to speak about another type of book plate: the photographic ex libris.

Not every bibliophile is in the fortunate position to make valuable purchases of graphic and other artists. The financial aspect also plays a decisive role for many bibliophiles because these graphic book plates (certainly valuable) will not be affordable to everyone.

Those bibliophiles who are also amateur photographers can prepare their own book plates. The process of making photographic ex libris is fairly simple. A nature photograph with a simple theme (some trees or the like) can be useful. One can also take special photos for the book plates. A small series of books - perhaps also a globe or a pair of glasses in the mix – achieves a good effect. Any photographic ex libris can be totally artistically done. – H. Schenkel, Greifswald

END

Oswaldo Mario Giordano

The Argentine philatelic press: From the earliest times to date

[La prensa filatélica Argentina: Allá en el tiempo y ahora]

Catalogo 2 Espamer '81, Buenos Aires, 13th-22nd November 1981, pp. 74-82

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2009

THE ARGENTINE PHILATELIC PRESS

The Argentinian Philatelic Press
Past and Present¹

By

Oswaldo Mario Giordano²

The beginning of the Argentinian philatelic press goes back to the last century exactly 107 years ago.³ To investigate the history and development of stamp collecting means gathering some hundreds of publications, assembling innumerable chronicles, articles and notes spread out over a huge list of periodical media, both general and specialized. It would also mean having to check a large number of important books, catalogs, and philatelic essays. In addition, one would have to investigate what has been done by the philatelic institutions of the country and analyze how all of this information has been disseminated by means of radio and television.

Now who would want to take on this task when we can rely on the invaluable contributions of two experts in the origins and development of the philatelic press in Argentina? The first is Pablo Ernesto Busch⁴ who was able to collect the first issue of most of the philatelic publications of Argentina. He left as his last known work an invaluable catalog of these first issues which he edited in August 1963. This work is titled "A Sampling of the Philatelic Press Organized according to the Argentinian Federation of Philatelic Societies".⁵ The Catalog is on display in the main room of the Organization of American States in Buenos Aires.

The second expert was Walter Bjorn Ludovico Bose⁶, whose documentation of the subject, needless to say, turned out to be enormous, transcendent, and long lasting. At the end of the 1930's Bose published his first book, entitled "Literatura Filatelica Argentina" (Philatelic Literature of Argentina). It contained invaluable information, the fruits of his research. This book also contained the most complete specialized list of books for a bibliography of this kind. The value of this work has recently led to the statement that it will last as long as the subject that bears its name.

It is not my intention here to discuss the entire history of the philatelic publications of the country. I have already provided detailed information in my essay entitled “La Difusion de la Filatelia”⁷ (The Spread of Stamp Collecting), later reproduced in the Boletín de la Academia Iberoamericana y Filipina de Historia Postal (Journal of the Spanish-American and Philippine Academy of Postal History). Here I only intend to offer a simple yet nostalgic view of the first achievements of the 19th century.

LA REVISTA FILATELICA (The Philatelic Magazine)

The birth of the Argentine philatelic press occurred with the publication of the first issue of “La Revista Filatelica” on August 1, 1874 in Buenos Aires. Its editors were J. N. Albornoz and J. Daws. In an editorial titled “Dos palabras acerca (de) la Timbrologia⁸” (A few words about the study of stamps), the editors stated “Among us, there are already numerous collectors but no special organization that has provided knowledge or information about keeping well maintained stamp collections. We intend to fill this vacuum as best we can...” Even today that fundamental precept of the philatelic press to guide, inform, and perfect the development of the collector remains in force.

This first⁹ and only issue of “La Revista Filatelica” consists of eight pages. In addition to the above cited editorial, it has an article entitled “Correos Argentinos” (Argentine Stamps). This article recalls that in the previous year, 1873, the Postal Administration completely abolished the use of French and English couriers in Buenos Aires. This action obliged the National Postal Administration to obtain precise knowledge of the persons who were already selling and franking letters with foreign stamps “not only to ensure they were following the required recommendations, but also to hire only persons of known honesty to frank mail going out of the country. This created a new type of employment, the daily collection of bags of mail and forwarding them to the Central Administration. From this authenticated historical document we learn that regular postal service was established by horseback between Jujuy a Patosi (Bolivia) and San Juan y Mendoza (Chile).

The magazine also contains references to the international relations of the Argentine postal administration. There is an announcement that “Mr. Stephan, the Postal Director General of Imperial Germany, will submit a plan for a Universal Postal Union to the Postal Congress at its September 1874 meeting in Berne, Switzerland.” History tells us that the plan was approved.

Another article in this only edition of La Revista Filatelica refers to supporting the adoption of the postcard by the Argentine postal administration since “less commercially developed countries such as ours already have it, and there is no reason why it can’t be used in Buenos Aires.”

Another notable entry is the announcement of an “Advice to Collectors” handbook, which would have been a series of articles in successive issues. Unfortunately, because the magazine stopped publication after the first issue, we are left without authentic examples of the method and types of stamp collecting in 19th century Argentina. In the first “Advice to Collectors” installment, it was stated that “the best method of attaching stamps was by affixing a small part of the top of the stamp, so that it could be later removed, if desired, without damaging it.” Further on in this article “we advise collectors of rare stamps to prefer used ones over unused ones, because modern reprints do not retain any value.”

The magazine ends with an article about “The Stamps of the United States”. It talks about the printing process, the counting system, and government inspection. This article was taken from an article which appeared in “Stamp-Collector’s Magazine”.

On page eight, there is a half-page advertisement giving an example of the method that philatelic publications used to obtain financing. As a matter of anecdotal interest, perhaps such an ad could be reproduced here. The ad reads “Stamps for collections GARRANTEED. Loose and in packets. Old and new issues. Obtained directly from Europe through the European Newspaper Agency, 107 Mercy Street. (This was the same address given for the administrative office of “La Revista Filatelica”. One can deduce from this that the editors of the magazine had a commercial philatelic business). Also mentioned was the fact that these stamps were on sale at the Central Bookstore, Victoria Street next to the Alcazar¹⁰; The Italian Bookstore, Bolivar Street before the post office; The Pacific Bookstore, Suipacha Street, between (unreadable) and Cuyo Streets (actually Sarmiento). These stamps can also be had in other bookstores too numerous to mention.” One might deduce from this that an active philatelic commerce existed in the Buenos Aires of 1874.

FOLLOWING IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF “LA REVISTA FILATELICA”

According to Pablo Ernesto Busch’s research, numerous publications came after “La Revista Filatelica”, into the end of the 20th century. These we will discuss in a separate article.

Of these publications that came after, the one edited by the Sociedad Filatelica Argentina (Philatelic Society of Argentina), deserves special mention. For more than half a century it offered an unequalled collection of philatelic studies and the most complete information about anything having to do with national or international philately. For many decades this magazine was run in turn by three dedicated collectors, Dr. Jose Marco del Pont, Dr. Ricardo D. Elicabe and Dr. Maximo Castro.

Under the leadership of Dr. Jose Marco del Pont, the first philatelic book was offered to the average stamp collector. It dealt with “Postage Stamps of the Republic of Argentina, The Issue of January 11, 1862. The book was published by La Compania Sud America de Billetes de Banco, Buenos Aires, 1895.

Other forms of philatelic literature consisted of catalogs. In the past century (20th) we’ve seen many examples of these. The first catalog published in the Republic of Argentina appeared in August, 1891. Authored by Jose Bosch, it was titled “Philatelic Guide for Central and South America”. In the first 48 pages are listed the names of stamp collectors and the remaining pages contain a catalog of Argentine, Paraguayan, and Uruguayan postage stamps issued up to 1891.

Two years later, under the authorship of Bosh, and in accord with Bose’s research, the first catalog completely dedicated to Argentine stamps was published.

(Translator's note: this table appears on page 79 of the article.)

Name of Issues	City of Issue	First Published	¹¹	No.
International Post	Buenos Aires	July 1891		6
The Argentine Collector	Buenos Aires	December 1892		8
The South American Philatelist 70	Buenos Aires	01/01/1893
The Rosarian Stamp Collector 10	Rosario	01/07/1893
Buenos Aires Postal	Buenos Aires	01/01/1894		3
The Argentine Philatelist	Buenos Aires	01/19/1894		2
The Argentine Philatelist	Rosario	15/09/1894		9
Argentine Philatelic Society Magazine	Buenos Aires	01/11/1894		437
The South American Post Philatelic Magazine,	Buenos Aires	01/04/1894		6
Christmas Bonus Issue	San Juan	01/01/1897		1
Life in the Home	Buenos Aires	01/03/1897		64
The American Philatelist	Province of Buenos Aires	01/04/1897
	8
The Commercial Philatelist	Parana'	01/10/1897		3
The Voice of the American Philatelist	Rosario	31/05/1898		6
The Postal Magazine	Buenos Aires	15/05/1898		9
Buenos Aires Philatelist ¹²	Buenos Aires	01/07/1898		62

We cannot fail to mention the first catalog published outside Argentina devoted exclusively to Argentine stamps. It was the work of J. B. Moens, published in Brussels in 1882.¹³ The catalog consists of two small volumes beautifully printed and illustrated. The catalog provides details of postage stamps, tax stamps, stamped envelopes, address labels, and post cards from the period of the Confederation¹⁴ and the Republic of Argentina and its provinces. One hundred fifty examples are listed, all numbered. The contents hold special interest for the researcher who is interested in the philatelic characteristics of each stamp, their order, layout, circulation, and notes about the history of each stamp. Again, here the philatelic literature turns itself into the undisputed role of documenting and informing.

This active role of the philatelic literature continued to increase during the last quarter of the 19th century, right up the beginning of our century. Numerous achievements, long-lasting works, the efforts of many – the vast majority of which is already forgotten, unjustly so – mark out the path from then until now. But it is not here or now where we review all this work.

LA ASOCIACION DE CRONISTAS

Taking a long leap in time, we come to “now”. La Federacion Argentina de Entidades Filatelicas (the Argentine Federation of Philatelic Organizations) had decided to celebrate a “Philatelic Press Day” on August 1st of every year, as homage to “La Revista Filatelica” (The Philatelic Magazine), which first appeared, as we noted above, on the same day in 1874. On August 1, 1963, La Asociacion de Cronistas Filatelicos de la Argentina (ACFA) (The Association of Argentine Philatelic Journals) was founded to commemorate the celebration of the first “Philatelic Press Day”. The provisional Executive Board named that day appointed Dr. Ricardo D. Elicabe honorary president. Jose Antonio Brovelli and Ricardo Jorge Leiva were appointed president and secretary respectively. Members included Osvaldo Mario Giordano (the author), Jose Vicente Huertos, Fernando Pascual Lombardi, Eduardo Premoli and Miguel Rodriguez Prieto. Since then, two of the original group have died. Dr. Elicabe (long-time director of the Philatelic Society of Argentina) and Fernando Pascual Lombardi, founder and editor of one of the most famous independent magazines of our medium, “Filatelia” (Philately). For 15 years and more than 100 issues, it reflects – according to the personal focus of its director – national and international philatelic life.

The Association of Philatelic Journals is a professional, cultural, general interest organization whose objective include:

- a) To gather together whomever in the country works at philatelic journalism in whatever modern medium of communication or writes or broadcasts about philately.
- b) To achieve for this body of work a position in which its specialized journalistic opinion is valued.
- c) To disseminate all philatelic news of general interest, and to create greater and more effective sources of information.
- d) To contribute to the complete journalistic and philatelic formation of its members.

The Association of Philatelic Journals is a legal entity whose headquarters, located in the San Telmo neighborhood of Buenos Aires, houses a large conference room and a specialized library.¹⁵

(Translator’s note: There are two cancellations on the top of page 81. See footnote 16 for description.)

The PRENFIL¹⁷ Exhibitions

The “now”¹⁸ in the Argentine philatelic press is represented at the international level by the PRENFIL exhibitions, organized by the Asociacion de Cronistas Filatelicos de la Argentina (The Association of the Philatelic Journalists of Argentina). To date, there have been two exhibitions. The first was held on October 12, 1974; the second on September 27, 1980. Both were held in the Palacio de Correos and Telefonos¹⁹ in Buenos Aires and both events saw the issuing of postage stamps. In 1974 it was a 70 centavo stamp with a 30 centavo overcharge. Its design, taken from a previously issued stamp, reproduces Juan Batlle-Planas’ painting “El Lama” (The Slime).²⁰

At the end of 1979, in anticipation of the 1980 PRENFIL Exposition, the government issued a four stamp block, also with a surcharge. These stamps were eagerly received by stamp collectors, even though they were only on sale for a few days. This issue reproduced the first page of each of four historical publications:

“La Gazete de Buenos-Ayres” (The Buenos Aires Gazette), which was the first Argentine magazine with official status (published 1810 – 1821);

“La Revista Filatelica” (The Philatelic Magazine), (published 1874), which is described at length above;

“Timbres de la Republica Argentina” (Stamps of the Republic of Argentina) (published 1882), mentioned in J. B. Moens Catalog; and “Revista de Correos y Telegrafos” (Postal and Telegraphy Magazine, published continually from September 15, 1937 to present). This magazine is the official magazine of the Empresa Nacional de Correos y Telegrafos de la Argentina (National Press for Postage and Telegraphy of Argentina).

The Revista de Correos y Telegraphos is actually known as “Postas Argentinas” (Argentine Postage). It is one of the most important stamp publications of our time, not only for its comprehensive treatment of our subject, but also for the long list of prestigious authors who have enriched its pages with their articles in the magazine’s almost half century of publication. The magazine actually offers a broad panorama of national and international stamp collecting.

Both PRENFIL expositions showcased on an international level both philatelic literature and magazines. These two expositions were the first in the world to do so.

Osvaldo Mario Giordano.

Translator's Footnotes:

1. This article appeared in Catalog #2 issued in connection with the "ESPAMER 81" International Stamp Exhibition held in Buenos Aires on November 13 through 22, 1981.
ESPAMER stands for "Exposicion Internacional Filatelica de America, Espana y Portugal (International Philatelic Exhibition of America, Spain and Portugal).
This particular expo was the sixth one sponsored by ESPAMER. ESPAMER is an abbreviation for Espana, Portugal, and AMERica
2. Osvaldo Mario Giordano (died in Buenos Aires 2012). For an impressive list of his philatelic accomplishments see <http://www.fipliterature.org/bureau/giordano.html>. Giordano was the literature director and editor of the publications issued for ESPAMER 81.
3. The author is referring to the publication date of the first Argentinian philatelic magazine on August 1, 1874, titled "La Revista Filatelica" (The Philatelic Magazine).
4. Pablo Ernesto Busch titled this work "Catalogo de Revistas Filatelicas y Cartofilas de la Republica de Argentina 1874-1926" (Catalog of Philatelic and Postcard Magazines from the Republic of Argentina 1874-1926") He published it in late 1926. An article in the Cronista Filatelico (Philatelic Journal), April 2003, #245, pp.6-8, entitled "Bibliografia Filatelica Argentina" states that Busch's goal for publishing the work was "to acquaint young collectors with the wealth of Argentine philatelic literature and at the same time to contribute to the development of its collection". While Giordano indicates that Busch collected these first issues himself, according to the journal article, Busch apparently inherited this collection of first editions from his friend Abel Fontaine who died on October 8, 1926. The Catalog contains 40 pages, 140 x 220 mm, and catalogs a total of 52 publications up to September 1926.
5. Giordano is referring to the publication of Busch's "Historia de las Publicaciones Filatelicas Argentinas 1874-1959" (History of Argentine Philatelic Publications 1874-1959) This small 12-page pamphlet, 110 x 160 mm, contained the names of philatelic periodicals for the years listed, with their first date of publication and number of issues published. It was published in connection with the Philatelic Press Display held on August 19th through 25th 1963 by FAEF (Federacion Argentina de Entidades Filatélicas) (Argentine Federation of Philatelic Societies).
6. Walter Bjorn Ludovico Bose spent over 50 years dedicating himself to collecting philatelic bibliography, researching philatelic and postal themes, and writing numerous philatelic articles. Interestingly, a used copy of his book, "Correo Argentino" (Argentine Postage) published on April 1, 1994, is still available on www.amazon.com.
7. Published in Mundo Filatelico Ediciones, 1972 (World Philatelic Editions)

8. In Spanish the word “timbre” often refers to a stamp or seal used on an official or legal document. In Mexico, “timbre de correos” refers to a postage stamp.
9. Giordano inserts a lengthy parenthetical statement which is translated here:
(the editors numbered it (i.e., the first issue) “programmatic number” rather than “number 1”, a circumstance supported by the absence of an edition number, in order to distinguish it from “number zero”).
10. Alcazar refers to a Spanish style castle. Whether this was actually a castle or perhaps the name of a hotel is unclear.
11. Numeric dates are printed in the European/Latin American style, the first number is the day, and the second number is the month (dd/mm/yyyy).
12. This publication was a continuation of La Vida en El Hogar (Life in the Home) beginning with issue number 65).
13. The author does not mention the name of Moens’ catalog.
14. The Argentine Confederation was the name of the country from 1831 to 1852. See here for a description:
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Argentine_Confederation
15. “Specialized” most likely in the sense of “dedicated” to things philatelic.
16. The explanation under the two cancellations on page 81 of the article states:
“Since 1963 “Philatelic Press Day” is celebrated annually by the Federation of Argentine Philatelic Associations, such as the Association of Philatelic Journalists. The above two cancellations were used on 1981 to publicize the annual Philatelic Press Day, August 1, 1981.
17. PRENFIL stands for “Prensa Filatelica” (Philatelic Press)
18. The “now” refers to present time and refers to “now” in the subtitle “Then and Now”.
19. The Palace of Stamps and Telgraphs, originally a postal and telegraph office, is now called the Palace of Stamps and Telecommunications. It is the central post office in Buenos Aires. A magnificent example of the School of Beaux Art style of French Architecture, it was built between 1889 and 1923 and remodeled in 2010. The building was declared a National Historical Monument in 1997.

The design was consistent with the policy of constructing all government buildings in as splendid a style as possible to give the people a sense of the country's economic prosperity. The Palace has been designated as a cultural center.

20. Juan Batlle Planas, 1911-1966, was born in Catalonia, Spain, and immigrated with his family at the age of 2 to Buenos Aires. As a teenager he honed his artistic skills in an engraver's workshop. Interested in Zen Buddhism and psychoanalysis, which influenced the Surrealistic nature of his work, he produced a series of paintings from 1937 to 1943 in which he explored the hidden forces that shape man's destiny. El Lama was one of this series of paintings, done in 1942. The literal translation of "lama" is slime or mold, perhaps Batlle Planas is referring to primordial mud, out of which man was fashioned?

Translated by:
Larry DiFiore, Ph.D.
AP member #203951

END

J. Vellekoop
100 years of collecting
[100 jaar verzamelen]
In: Catalogus., FILACENTO, 6th-9th September 1984, Den Haag, Netherlands,
pp.125-132

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2009

100 YEARS OF COLLECTING

A talk given during the cup competition in Eindhoven, June 1984.

Our Nederlandsche Vereeniging van Postzegel Verzamelaars (Dutch Society of Postage Stamps Collectors) is now a century old. Its establishment in 1884 marked the beginning of a long and interesting period for organized stamp collectors in which – “by falling down and standing up” a lot was accomplished. By looking back over the last century, I'd like to take a short look back on all philatelic publications lying before us from the past century, that is, the inheritance of our philatelic predecessors. We don't just stand still after this period of a hundred years, but also the “prehistoric” deserves our interest.

In 1852 the first Dutch stamps appear. To introduce this postal novelty, a small brochure was issued (Figure 1) in which the post office informed the public about the use of these small-value papers. The first of a long list of publications about stamps was born⁽¹⁾.

Any mention of collecting saw the light only in the 1860s. After 1861 in France the first catalogue-price list (Potiquet) appeared. Other European countries followed suit with what we now call the “incunabula” of philatelic literature. W. F. Dannenfelser from Utrecht deserves the honour of having issued the first separate publication about stamp collecting. It is his Vade-Mecum from 1862 (Figure 2). This work⁽²⁾ was a translation of a booklet by the, even at that time, very active Belgian dealer, J. B. Moens. Other pioneers at that time were P. H. Witkamp (also known for his geographic works for schools) and the postman Gille Heringa who in his Nederlandsche Jaarboekjes (Netherlands Yearbook) noted attractive philatelic novelties. Real organized collectors' events were not found yet. It remained the work of individuals.

In 1869 the young Cornelis van Rinsum and P. Groenendijk from Amsterdam surprise us with the first edition of a postage stamp magazine: The Continental Philatelic Magazine (Figure 3). Issued in English, they target especially the British and American market⁽³⁾. These gentlemen also produced another magazine in Dutch: The Timbrophilist. How many numbers were issued is not known nor for how long, since only copies of the first and second number have survived (July 1869 and August 1869). After the activity of these foresighted foreigners, there is a pause. Without doubt, collecting continued in the 1870s but we don't know of any publications from these years. In 1884, again in Amsterdam, things began to hum. A group of young collectors took a big step, founding the Vereeniging van Postzegelverzamelaars (Society of Postage Stamp Collectors). Doing the business right helps them to produce their own magazine⁽⁴⁾ and also other small pamphlets (Figure 4) which proves a good start to club life. After only five years they manage to set up a modest exhibition and even manage to publish a jubilee number of their magazine which includes colour pictures and even includes a contribution from the prominent member M. J. Mijer from the faraway Dutch Indies, adding some festivity to the publications by detailing the latest Dutch Indies stamp issues⁽⁵⁾. (Figure 5)

At the insistence of Mijer and with the help of his knowledge, 5 years later in 1894, at the time of its 10th anniversary, the NVVP issues an expanded “Standard edition” in which all Dutch and colonial issues are extensively described and documented⁽⁶⁾. In particular, the many postal notations make this work even today worthy of a look. The first part was embellished by including a separate premium plate: namely a reprint from the plate of the 1852 issue. By the 90s collecting had expanded and widened out. In Breda, a club was started and also in other places divisions of the “Nederlandsch” were started. Also, dealing in stamps became more organized. Auctions were held regularly (for instance by Van Dieten of Rotterdam) and we even find traces of a first dealer organization! Schreuders, a dealer in The Hague, issues in 1897 a book about cancellations⁽⁷⁾ which will remain the only handbook on this difficult subject for many years (Figure 6).

They were trying to become more widely known by holding more exhibitions. Shortly before the turn of the century, the Utrecht branch of the NVVP organized an international exhibition (the first international was organized in Amsterdam in 1889) and included a stamp work popular at that time - paintings made out of postage stamps. (Figure 7) Shortly thereafter, a similar event was organized in The Hague (1901) with an even greater number of foreign participants.

In 1906 the first “Philatelists’ Day” was held to strengthen the national unity⁽⁸⁾. (Figure 8) On one of the later such days the decision is made to all work together under one organization and establish the “Bond” (Federation). This happened in 1908. Also, there was still foreign interest in our country. The well known publicist F. J. Melville published a booklet on Holland. (Figure 9) His work from 1909⁽⁸⁾ is still the only English monograph about our collecting area! In the USA a similar brochure was issued by Leavy, covering the period up to 1900. In the Netherlands, the following years are a time of consolidation: several periodicals are issued monthly, like the Philatelistisch Maandblad (Philatelic Monthly), but the First World War created a hiatus. You could say, a pause before the storm, the storm of the 20s and 30s.

First of all, the 20s start with Maandblad (Monthly) in 1922, sprung from, among others, the Nederlandsch Tijdschrift (Dutch Magazine). In the same year, the magazine Leiddraad (Guideline) (with a double d), appeared from the Federation, a successful attempt to augment the data from the standard work of 1894, naturally including the issues that had appeared since then. (Figure 10) The Leiddraad⁽⁹⁾ became the national catalogue whereas previously they used foreign editions. (such as Senf and Froede). Two years later, festivities on a grand scale were held in The Hague where, with an international exhibition in “Pulchri”, the 40th anniversary of the Nederlandsch Vereeniging was commemorated. At the same time as the exhibition, the PTT (Post, Telephone, Telegraph) issued the new Veth and Lebau stamps and the large India Handbook⁽¹⁰⁾ was issued by Waller. The same was instrumental in the start of the Dutch Postal Museum by donating his important collections to the country. The 20s concluded with re-establishing of the already existing Nederlandsch Vereeniging van Postzegel Handelaren (NVPH) (Dutch Association of Stamp Dealers) while in the philatelic area a new direction is opened by Van Peursem from The Hague⁽¹¹⁾. He published a number of monographs suggesting a whole new way of collecting: stamps by theme (thematics). The collectors of the 30s are very well served: besides the better quality of the publications like De Philatelist by Korteweg and his publication in 1931, the unsurpassed Proevenboek (Book of Proofs)⁽¹²⁾.

Vellinga publishes a very good work about cancellations⁽¹³⁾ (recently reprinted) and the 10 year old Nederlandsch Maandblad voor Philatelie (Dutch Monthly for Philately) produces a vast commemorative edition⁽¹⁴⁾. (Figure 11) We hear once again from Waller with a study of the 1852 issue⁽¹⁵⁾, the first-born of the NVPH. (Figure 12). The next year, 1935, the printer of our stamps, the firm Enschede in Haarlem sheds some light on the printing process in a clarifying booklet⁽¹⁶⁾ describing the how and why of new techniques such as offset and photogravure. (Figure 13). Air traffic, in the meantime, has also made for a new and exciting collecting area: pieces mailed by aeroplane or balloons. Boesman especially has from 1939, with a great number of writings, shown the way for collectors⁽¹⁷⁾.

Shortly before the second world war started in our country, a combination took place of De Philatelist of Korteweg and the Maandblad. The war years became a mandatory rest period for collecting. The occupation brought a further togetherness within the Federation. In 1942 the Federation decided to start a library to serve all the Dutch philatelists, but because of war actions, the first plans were totally destroyed. After the liberation, a few big clubs decided to donate their own possessions to replace what was lost by the Federation.

The first years after 1945 were of course years of rebuilding and the developments in the Indies/Indonesia occupied the most interest. Soon though there were again Philatelists' Days held including exhibitions. Especially in the area of postal history, the PTT together with collectors and others made efforts to publicize the thorough studies by Ten Brink⁽¹⁸⁾ and Benschop⁽¹⁹⁾.

In 1952, together with collectors, the PTT organized a big international exhibition on the occasion of the centennial of our stamps: the ITPE. (Figure 14) The exhibition took place in Utrecht, where the first stamps were printed 100 years ago and for the first time since 1924, commemorative stamps were issued. Also, the studies of philatelic subjects started up again: in 1952 a study by K. E. Konig⁽²⁰⁾ was published about the internment stamps, and shortly thereafter, a dependable manual for collectors on the cancellations of the first issue by A. M. A. van der Willigen⁽²¹⁾. We heard one more time from the great Korteweg when he issued his "lifework", a review of 300 years of Dutch cancellations in 1956⁽²²⁾. Also, there were attempts to replace the Leiddraad of 1922. In 1957, in this connection, there appeared a brochure about the "Hanging Hair" issue. A continuation of it was held off^(22A).

In 1960, the artistic advisor to the PTT described extensively the backgrounds of the stamp subjects (Figure 15) and thereby connected with the tradition on the part of the PTT to throw light on this side of stamp collecting⁽²³⁾. The 60s were further characterized especially by the growing specialization in smaller fields: collectors of postal history received from the firm Ten Geuzendam a dependable new manual⁽²⁴⁾ and a few collectors carefully tried new paths. Automat booklets appeared and the, at the time always present, Dekker described them⁽²⁵⁾. Coils and automation of the Post also become objects of studies. Also, thematic collectors, long coming together in the Beeld Philatelist (Pictorial Philatelist) continually saw more fields to choose from.

In the classical field, a manual appeared from Cleij about the second issue⁽²⁶⁾, and shortly after the successful international exhibition Amphilex (Figure 16) in Amsterdam in 1967 under the direction of Van Balen Blanken, an extensive write-up of the plates of the first issue was started⁽²⁷⁾.

In the 70s Benders and Julsen surprised collectors with a manual about Curacao⁽²⁸⁾ while the foreign specialist Dr. Riddell⁽²⁹⁾ wrote about Suriname.

Amphilex II in 1977 gave great popularity to philately in the Netherlands and more than 100,000 visitors came to the Exhibition. (Figure 18) However, because of the changed economic condition since these festivities a time of stabilization had arrived - a time too close to look back at. Fresh in our memories are the jubilees since 1982: 60 years of the Maandblad, 75 years of the Bond and now 100 years of organized philately. With the arrival of the centenary we can be thankful for those that before us have recorded the philatelic research in what we can call our greatest philatelic possession namely the philatelic literature.

Notes:

1. Concise manual concerning the intention and use of postage stamps: issued by order of the Minister of Finances to comply with art. 16 of the Royal order of the 12th November 1851 (State Publication No. 143) - The Hague: Giunta d'Albani, 1851
2. Vade-mecum for Collectors of Postage Stamps or General List of the Known Stamps of the Different Countries: from the French. Utrecht: Dannenfesler, 1863
3. The Continental Philatelic Magazine : the first issue was issued in February 1869, the last one in January 1870
4. Nederlandsch Tijdschrift voor Postzegelkunde (Dutch Magazine for Postage Stamp Science): issued 38 years without interruption between 1884 and 1921
5. Description of all Dutch East Indies Postage Stamps, Dues, Postal Stationery and Postal Cards from 1864 to Date: According to the Official Documents to be found in the Archives of the Post Office in Batavia., by M. J. Mijer - Batavia, 1889
6. Standard Work About the Postal Issues of the Netherlands and its Colonies. (editor M. J. Mijer ... et al.) - Amsterdam: NVVP, 1894-1895 - 3 volumes
7. The Cancellations of the Postage Stamps of the Netherlands / Collected by Schreuders & Co. - The Hague (Schreuders), 1897
8. Holland. by Fred J. Melville - London: Melville Stamp Books, 1909
9. Guide for the Specialised Collector of The Netherlands / Official Edition of the Federation of Stamp Collectors' Clubs. - Utrecht, (etc.) Biegelhaar & Janssen, 1922
10. Manual of the Postal Issues of the Dutch Indies. issued by the Dutch Society of Stamp Collectors - Haarlem: Enschede (1924) - 2 volumes
11. The first document published by him was: The life of Columbus on Postage Stamps. by J. H. van Peursem - Rotterdam: De Philatelist, 1929. Also, early on Mrs. M. J. van Heerdt-Kolff.
12. Descriptive Catalogue of the Proofs of the Postal Issues of the Netherlands & Colonies: With Remarks of General Historic-Philatelic Interest. by P. C. Korteweg - Amsterdam: Hekker, 1931.
13. The Postal Cancellations of the Netherlands 1676-1915. by O. M. Vellinga: with a preface by P. W. Waller. - (Haarlem : Enschede), 1931
14. Postage Stamp Science and the Post Office: Memorial Book Issued on the Occasion of the first Dutch Postage Stamps 80 years ago and the Tenth Anniversary of the Dutch

- Monthly for Philately: 1852-1922-1932.* – [S. I. ?]: Nederlandsche Maandblad voor Philatelie, 1932
15. The First Postage Stamps of the Netherlands, 1852 Issue: Taken from Official Information. by P. W. Waller - Haarlem: Enschede, (1934)
 16. How are Postage Stamps Produced? - Haarlem: Enschede, (1935)
 17. The first publication by him: Adventures with Balloons: Trips by Air Balloons: Catalogue of Balloon Post. by J. Boesman; drawings by W. A. Visscher - The Hague: BZPC, 1939.
 18. History of the Dutch Postal System: 1795 - 1810: Creation of a Public Service for the Batavian Republic and the Kingdom of Holland. by E. A. B. J. Ten Brink - The Hague: Government PTT, 1950
 19. The Postal System of The Hague over One and a Half Centuries. W. J. M. Benschop - The Hague: Government PTT, 1951
 20. The Dutch Internment Stamps: Historic, Postal and Philatelic Highlights. by K. E. Konig - (Amsterdam: S.P.A.), 1952
 21. The Cancellations and a Few Other Things Worth Knowing About the 1852 Issues of the Netherlands. by A. M. A. van der Willigen.-Deventer: DAVO, 1955
 22. 300 Years of Instructional Markings, Postmarks & Cancellations in the Netherlands, 1570-1870: Stampless Covers and Cancellations on Postage Stamps. P. C. Korteweg - The Hague: Rietvijk, (1956)
 - 22A. Concise Manual about Dutch Postage Stamps. Netherlands Federation of Philatelic Clubs (Amsterdam: NBFV), 1957. Part I 1891 Issue: Queen with Loose Hair
 23. The Art of the Postage Stamp : The Shaping of Dutch Postage Stamps. by Christiaan de Moor. - the Hague: Government PTT, 1960
 24. Catalog of Postal Articles of the Netherlands and Overseas Possessions.- the Hague: Geuzendam's Postzegelhandel, (1961)
 25. The Postal Booklets of the Netherlands, Dutch East Indies, Curaçao. by Jan Dekker – Chicago: National Philatelic Society, 1969
 26. Standard Work on the Postal Issues of the Netherlands: 1864 Issue. by J. F. Cleij - Deventer: DAVO, (1965)
 27. The first description was: Netherlands 1852 5 cent Plate III by G. C. van Balen Blanken & Bert Buurman - (Amsterdam: the authors), 1968
 28. A Postal History of Curaçao and the other Netherlands Antilles. by Frank W. Julsen & A. M. Benders – The Hague: van Dieten, 1976
 29. Suriname: A Postal History, 1700-1956 = Suriname: Postal Geschiedenis 1700-1956. by J. D. Riddell – [S.L.: s.n.], 1970

END

Einar Ebe
Collectors Live Longer! A Richer Life
[Samlare Lever Längre! Ett Rikare Liv]
Bältespännaren, August 1981, Volume 16, Issue 1, pp.20-21

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2009

COLLECTORS LIVE LONGER! A RICHER LIFE

An extended leisure time is both enjoyable and benefitting depending on how it is spent. Many people especially readers of books and collectors are always short of time, because their interests are constantly growing. Thus, when they have more free time or the retirement age arrives they are totally occupied and as a rule enjoy their pastime. They never become bored and spend time with their collector and trading partners in philatelic clubs such as the Bältespännare or the Nordstjärnan.

This writer, whose disposition is active and restless considers idleness one of man's most dangerous enemies. There are of course other worthwhile hobbies such as cars, boats, sports, etc. To grow cabbage or even more fun to plant the property around the summer cottage with flowers, is very enjoyable as is philosophizing whilst out fishing. The silvery perch in the waters of the archipelago might provide an activity for the entire six months of winter.

Interest in collecting is most likely inborn, because our forefathers having lived in the Nordic climate had to be gatherers. Food needed to be stored away for the winter. Later, with an existence of plenty and community growth, ownership waned. Many people in this country have during later years had a period where the collecting of less nearby items became popular.

By its nature, the joy of collecting is fantasy-provoking and stimulating. Personally, I always say that I am collecting anything but money. This, however, does not prevent the collecting of items where the value increases. For this writer it has foremost been a social endeavour, since through my work I have been able to attract youth to join small clubs. There one is able to compete on one hand by obtaining many different items and on the other to learn how to neatly do the mounting. But above all, one has made friends with collectors locally as well as abroad.

When I started at the FIB, I met a 17 to 18 year old Polish Jew. He told me that he had left a small stamp album to be sold at a shop, but had not received any money for it. I promptly called the dealer and demanded that the boy either get the album back or the money for it. He got paid! Shortly thereafter I received a very fine letter from the USA franked with a Roosevelt stamp in a block of four. A light came on!

At a publishing enterprise there are many chances for receiving letters from abroad, near and far. The desire to start collecting grew and before long became a hobby. This happened in the 1930s. At that time the FIB postage stamp club began and in ten years got nearly 400.000 members. School children became members by sending in a form from the newspaper along with 50 öre in stamps. They could then purchase 100 different stamps for another 50 öre.

From then on full speed ahead!

The difficulty was in keeping up with demand. Our expectation was to have 1,000 members the first week. Instead we got 6,000. The growth continued. The magazine editions were increased and help was obtained from a friendly stamp dealer. Initially it was postage stamps, but as time went by also Christmas stamps, TB, etc. Very soon the idea of collecting within a club came up. Discussions with teachers were recommended. Some brochures suggested meetings at school and that the teachers ask for help. A stamp album was also printed. The album contained two pages of text describing every part of the world, the populations and a sample of some postage stamp. From this a movement started with about 800 clubs.

All of this gave me much extra work, but my good colleagues were blessed to watch the joy of the children. Debates would ensue and spill over the borders. At first it was Norway, Finland and Denmark. In order to comprehend and develop my understanding I became a member of the Dansk Markata Club, which was also for older people. A lady in Odense sent me some 100 different religious holiday stamps. It seemed as if every Dane collected USA Christmas stamps and many other charity stamps as well.

When Hitler attacked Denmark it became difficult for my collector friends, letter mail was opened and inspected. Very soon my mail was full of censored letters. Through my work I had an opportunity to stamp letters with e.g. Christmas stamps, those honouring the blind and the national flag. The addressees in Denmark were very happy to receive these circulars and I got besides Danish, thousands of mostly USA stamps. All of this made it possible for me to collect some 5,000 stamps from 47 different countries and exhibit these at the Post Museum.

Many ties were developed during this grim period. Lots of letters were written after war's end. But mostly, people who were ordinary collectors came together to keep busy and gain a knowledge of geography. Indeed, all of this has been going on for 30 years. Nowadays, I work quite a lot in a pensioners' club. In my discussions with my soul brother Stenberg I have made the following proposals:

1. Create an interest in collecting among the country's more than one million pensioners. Many younger people will perhaps find this amusing. Do not only consider the single individual, but the pensioners and old people in nursing homes, the handicapped, and those needing therapy.
2. There should be enough material, even though not an enormous amount. The publishers of charity stamps ought to be able to come up with something, even free of charge to get the movement going. Their sale of new stamps would very soon be on the increase.
3. The postal service that advertises for more letter-writing would certainly be able to inspire pensioners and even younger people in the realization of this idea. Many philatelists consider these kinds of stamps worthless and usually set them aside. They should instead give them to beginners.
4. A stamp show with suggestions about album leaves, binders, and where to get information. In this, our collector organizations should co-operate.
5. Our mass media will have a chance to alert the entire Swedish population to a new collector field where usefulness and pleasure is combined. If all printing places and firms that issue advertising stamps would print extra copies we would very quickly acquire material without any real cost. No doubt, stamp collecting will also enter the picture for those who can afford to buy in the extensive market.

I read in an American magazine that life insurance companies in the USA gave collectors lower premiums. Thus, let us have an even richer and longer life!

END

Åke Torkelstam
Einar Ebe: A living cultural legend
[Einar Ebe: En levande kulturlegend]
Bältespännaren, August 1981, Volume 16, Issue 1, pp.22-25

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2009

EINAR EBE: A LIVING CULTURAL LEGEND

1. BACKGROUND

In order to get on the right track and at the same time give a correct tone, would require several sub-titles. Some suggestions:

- Visionary and super-organizer
- Supporter of culture and real politician
- Practitioner of ideas
- Collector and above all idealist

I have never been so close to getting writer's cramp as now when I am trying to give credit to this giant and his life's work. At the age of 84 he still has a youthful air about him and a talent for foresight that most of us would envy.

The Bältespännaren took on a new appearance compared with number 2 on its 10-year anniversary in 1976. However, the new editors did not promise much change, but we did have some ideas. One of these was hatched right at the start. We began with what was supposed to be a series of articles about those persons with well-known names, though less famous or even forgotten in philatelic circles. The aim was to bring out some of the power and wisdom that may have been embedded in their personal opinions about philately present and future.

The first one was Georg Lindman, an odd stamp dealer with odd merchandise. Alone and without storefronts, he has for decades provided many collectors with items they were missing. The interview with Georg was not followed until now by a portrait of a totally different kind.

For those of the older generation, Einar Ebe is still very much more than a name, but for the younger members this may not be so. The years pass by quickly and even giants' contributions tend to easily fade unless constantly repeated. Einar's contribution to bring out stamp collecting and mould it into one of the great youth movements of the 40s and 50s is of such a scope that it simply must not fade away.

For Einar it all started at the end of the 30s and actually still carries on, even though retirement age did put a limit to the continuation from the director's chair of the great organizational contributions to Swedish youth philately.

2. EINAR EBE OF MANY TRADES

Much has been written about Einar's political achievements. His contributions in this area encompass the radical socialism of old to the social democracy of then and now. I think it is important to be aware of this background in order to understand the burning desire that was able to accomplish so much for so many.

From his political platform Ebe got a good oversight of most of the peoples' cultural preferences. A remark by Karl Kihlbom, included in many articles about Einar Ebe, is still echoing in my ears: In order to honour work, education and diversification is needed. This is what Einar has strived for most of his life. During the break-out period he also worked for Kihlbom whose socialist party re-joined the Social Democrats in 1937. Ebe, however, had already left the frontline at the beginning of the 30s. He became an ombudsman at HSB and was soon spreading literature also in the labour movement.

In an era when financial endeavours were risky, Kihlbom with the aid of Ebe started the magazine Folket i Bild (People in Pictures) in 1934. The publication was owned by the peoples' movement until 1962 when sold to the competitor Åhlén & Åkerlund. But that is another story.

3. EINAR EBE THE ORGANIZER

Folket i Bild (FIB) became the platform from where strong-willed Einar could organize one campaign after another in order to spread culture. He also received his trade title that would follow him through life. Besides having the title of Director, which did not fit him very well, he also became chief of organization at FIB. From the beginning, not being a writer, journalist or collector and even less a philatelist, Ebe as organizer became one of the greats in the collector world.

Ebe organized FIB's Lyric Club that soon proved a success. To sell entertaining literature is one thing, but to sell lyrics to people that do not have the written word as a daily occupation requires real talent. It is interesting to hear Einar talk about the philosophy of necessity and non-necessity. How personal contact in work places help solve prejudices and entanglements. However, it is not easy to offer culture for sale where the thinking is toward commercial and analytical market research, but this makes for an interesting topic. The combination of good and inexpensive literature and personal contact still seems to work well today. This is evidenced by book promotions and all the book clubs that successfully compete with bookstores.

Within the publication frame work, Einar would also organize art clubs, model building, etc. But the largest peoples' movement was created with the organization of stamp collectors.

4. EINAR EBE THE COLLECTOR

Einar describes himself as active and restless. He emphasizes the importance of having something going on and not to slack off. Ebe the activist is also a club person, since at his height, he was a member of some 50 clubs.

As far as collecting is concerned he started with the Nordstjärna where he was elected to the board and part of his "collector's heart" still remains there. When on a beautiful spring day in 1981, I along with my friend Karl-Erik Persson visited Einar and his spouse in their lovely home at 56 Flemming Street, the first two impressions of collector Ebe that stood out were art and books. The art collection with works by Amelin and others is worth a visit in itself. His wife remarked that such visits do happen occasionally. The collection of books containing not just lyrics but many other topics was neatly arranged and vast like a library. There were also several first editions as well.

Karl-Erik and I listened to interesting episodes from the early struggles of the labour movement, Einar's childhood and adolescence, politics and club life. In addition there were stories about community events as well as ideas on how to realize the many needs and interests. The conversation also touched upon the purpose and goal of collecting. Suddenly I had in my hand an unpublished manuscript meant for publication, which dealt with the philosophy of collecting and especially aimed at "pensioners and lonely people." It was a two A4-page typed manuscript with various hand-written corrections and very well thought through at that. A few days after my visit I received five A5-pages of hand-written suggestions for the addendum. I got permission to combine both of the manuscripts and have done so to the best of my ability. The finished article will be published in this publication under the heading Collectors live longer - A richer life.

We of the Bältespännarna, one of your 50 clubs thank you for the confidence showed us.

5. EINAR EBE THE PHILATELIST

His article A richer life gives a good picture of collecting, how it came about and how it developed with him. During our conversation some viewpoints were expressed that are worth remembering and that complement the impression of philatelist Ebe.

To combine youth collecting with the teachers in schools was a clever idea. Compare that with what the postal savings bank started with their savings stamps. The stamp album by FIB was accepted by the schools partly because it was available without any cost and partly due to the knowledge of geography that the descriptions of various parts of the world provided. Each new member of the Folket i Bild Stamp Collectors' Club also received, besides a stamp album, a handbook called Frimärkssamlarens ABC (The stamp collector's ABC). Sixty öre would buy Våra Svenska Frimärken (Our Swedish Postage Stamps) a complete price list compiled by the stamp dealer Harry Wennberg. The reverse of the membership card shows a perforation gauge.

New members could also buy packets of 100 stamps, that most likely added to the success. What does not appear from Einar's article is that these packets came from Franz Obermüller who early on was a supporter of youth philately.

The FIB Stamp Club Board consisted of education chief and sobriety supporter Ruben Wagnsson and counsellor Allan Wirgin. The Gothenburg stamp dealer Otto Sandberg with whom Einar had a lot of contact was one of those who early on could offer material from different collector fields.

Earlier I had mentioned that Einar's role at the FIB was as an organizer. Behind all these ideas about art, poetry, model building and postage stamps was the aim of increasing the circulation of the FIB. However, this does not minimize the achievements. The one who actually handled the purely philatelic, a fact Einar is eager to emphasize, was the well-known editor Olle Cronsjö who edited the postage stamp column. The reader may not know that during the last few years it was Einar who introduced the idea of a postage stamp column in the paper. It all started out so well but then something regrettably did not work out, because the publication suddenly was discontinued without even as much as a notice. There could have been a new peoples' movement if the benefit of a dialogue with the readers had been realized.

Einar's largest contributions are actually in the area of the peoples' movement, but as he points out, he was also a collector himself. Einar remembers that his very first contact with stamps were of a "commercial" nature at home when he attended elementary school in Eskilstuna. He bought a postage stamp for 2 öre and soon thereafter sold it for 5 öre. His time at the FIB provided him with great possibilities to develop his own collecting. One of his albums is really special with a beautiful cover and containing a collection of Lenin stamps that Einar is the only owner of. The UN is also represented as is Sven Ewert. The large areas, however, consist of seals such as tuberculosis, Christmas stamps from Sweden, Denmark and the USA, as well as the Red Cross, Swedish flag, autumn sun, exhibits, charity, and advertisements.

The development of this letter stamp emporium had started in earnest in 1972 in connection with the Post Museum 1972 exhibit of tuberculosis stamps in blocks of four from 47 countries. Einar was then the sole exhibitor at the Post Museum. However, he had been there at two previous events, i.e. 1943 and 1951, but at that time they were the large shows of the FIB postage stamp club. These events would need a column of their own!

6. EXHIBITING POSTAGE STAMP

Sub-titled Från barnaår till silverhår (From childhood to silver hair) took place at the Post Museum from the 19th to 28th February 1943. The commissioners were the editors Carl Ljungcrantz and Olle Cronsjö as well as Einar Ebe. This was the first really big show that took place at the present day Post Museum. The exhibit was opened with great fanfare by the Postmaster General Anders Örne.

Of the Post Museum exhibits, I have in my document collection 22 pages of newspaper clippings about the above event. There is also available a 20 page exhibit catalogue that was free of charge when paying the entrance fee of 1 Kroner for older persons and 50 öre for people under 14 years of age, and 50% off when presenting the FIB card. The foreword is by Nils Strandell.

The cartoon figure of Pelle Slarv is a "red thread" and through stamps he is transformed to a totally new Pelle. He becomes a member in one of the FIB clubs, the 4711 Post Horn and able to learn the basics of stamp collecting. As by magic Pelle changes into an entirely new lad who likes school and who, thanks to stamps, will not be reprimanded anymore for not knowing history or geography.

Furthermore, there are instructions on how to do the mounting, the cartoonist's suggestion about stamps, and a world map with all of the world's 450 postage stamp countries. Strandell also showed part of his very large library, etc. There are now 2,000 clubs and 90,000 members.

7. EXHIBITION: THE POSTAGE STAMP GIVES

The main title was The International Jubilee Exhibition and the sub-title The First International Exhibition for Constructive Philately. Olle Cronsjö was the commissioner, but naturally Einar was on the Board. The FIB Postage Stamp Club is presently a member with 36 other countries in the International League for Constructive Philately. The 32-page catalogue has, for instance, the remarks by the chairman of the international league, a French professor: In order to create a constructive collection is to develop one's own personality and provide a contribution to humanity. It is to comprehend the times and create one's future. It is to serve one's country and work for world peace. It is to build a temple to art, science and religion. It is to build a bridge between the ideal and the reality. It is to spread true culture. That is what it is all about!

The catalogue has Einar Ebe as the founder of the FIB Stamp Club that presently has 300,000 members. The exhibition celebrates the 10-year anniversary. Collecting has been enhanced by advertising in the Club's newsletter in areas such as botanical stamps, animals and sports as well as other topics. The catalogue also pictures eight teachers and their statements on stamp collecting. One of them, Ture Heed of Gothenburg, is a member.

The show additionally exhibits for the first time outside the USA parts of President Roosevelt's collection.

For this show, Olle Cronsjö, came up with another red thread character. Master Philatelist is his name, a happy and good Cicero at the "Frimärket ger" exhibition.

CAPTIONS TO THE ILLUSTRATIONS

Page 22

Top left

Einar and spouse.

Bottom right

Einar and the interviewer.

Page 23

Bottom left

Einar and Karl-Erik Persson.

Bottom right

Membership card in the FIB Postage Stamp Club.

Page 24

Top left

The book Ruben Wagnsson, Seth Wennberg & Allan Wirgin: Our Swedish Postage Stamps Published by Folket i Bild.

Bottom right

Postage stamp exhibition cover "From childhood to silver hair".

Page 25

Top

Application form.

All collectors both young and old are welcome to the FIB Stamp Club. Fill out the form and send to the club, box 12093, Stockholm 12.

The signee is hereby entered as member and receives gratis the following perks:

1. Postage stamp album. 2. The Stamp Collector's ABC. 3. Stamp hinges. 4. Perforation gauge. 5. Discount coupons for stamp purchases.

Membership fee 50 öre + 25 öre for postage, enclosed in stamps.

I am a beginner – have collected previously for: ... year(s). Age Years.

Write clearly and cross out what is not needed!

“Frimärket Ger” Exhibition

Post Museum

26 Oct. – 4 Nov. 1951

Booklet contains 10 exhibit- and commemorative letter stamps @ 5 öre. Price 50 öre

Centre left

The international jubilee exhibition “FRIMÄRKET GER” has granted Einar Ebe a DIPLOMA

For a Red Cross Collection

Stockholm 24th October 1951

POST MUSEUM

“FOLKET I BILD”

Centre right

The official exhibition cover and souvenir stamps

Bottom right

Exhibition cover insert

Text below same logo: The first international world exhibit for thematic collectors

Memento of FIB stamp club 10-year anniversary 1951.

Folket i Bild, which above all wishes to further the leisure time of youth sends its warmest greetings.

END

Walter B. L. Bose

Abel Fontaine (1849-1926): First chronicler of Argentine philatelic literature
[Abel Fontaine (1849-1926): Primer cronista de literatura filatélica Argentina],
In: Catalogo., PRENFIL '88, Buenos Aires, Argentina, 1988, pp.29-33

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2009

ABEL FONTAINE (1849-1926):

FIRST CHRONICLER OF ARGENTINE PHILATELIC LITERATURE

One hundred years have passed since Abel Fontaine and his brother Francisco arrived in Argentina from Belgium. As they were both stamp collectors, they immediately became involved in the Sociedad Filatélica Argentina (Argentine Philatelic Society), then recently organized on the 1st November 1887.

As a writer and journalist, Abel Fontaine became involved in Argentine intellectual circles right away. He maintained an avid correspondence with European and American scholars and philatelists during the 38 years he lived in Buenos Aires.

As writer and editor of Buenos Aires' French daily The Courier, he also contributed to many foreign philatelic journals. He was especially prominent in French language publications.

He passed away in Buenos Aires on the 8th October 1926 at 77 years of age. He was buried in the Cementerio de Flores⁽¹⁾. We will now review some aspects of his writing career and the legacy of his bountiful library.

Blessed with an active and inquisitive nature, he produced an immense amount of work on Argentine postal issues and the workings of our philatelic societies. These were especially prominent in Belgian and French journals and magazines, with which he maintained a regular correspondence.

He published in, among others, L'Annonce Timbrologique (The Stamp Collecting Herald) of Liege, Belgium. On the 12th July 1891, an interesting article appeared entitled La moneda y el sello de Tierra del Fuego (The coins and stamps of Tierra del Fuego), containing reference to Julio Popper and his gold mines⁽²⁾.

During this time he also published a pamphlet called Un Periodicófilo in which he nicely outlined the journalistic writings of José Arturo Scotto.

In 1891 he began publication in Buenos Aires of the Guia Filatelica Centro- y Sud-Americana (Central and South America Philatelic Guide), edited by José Bosch. It contained a roster of collectors from those countries, with addresses, in order to facilitate the exchange of stamps. On the title page of the second edition, (1892), he is shown as Abel Fontaine – Publisher.

The celebrations relating to the Four-hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America, gave a boost to intellectual activities. In Buenos Aires, publication of El Coleccionista Argentino (The Argentine Collector), a highly intellectual magazine, began under Juan Soutomayor⁽³⁾. It contained a section entitled Prensa Periódica (The Press) under the direction of Abel Fontaine, who had been working to create a civil register of the Argentine press, including bibliographic details.

To this end, Fontaine published a permanent note in many magazines requesting that editors send him the first number of their magazines, forming in this way an interesting and extensive library. Additionally, as he was a philatelist, Fontaine took special care in acquiring complete runs of each of the Argentine philatelic magazines.

El Filatelista Sud-Americano (The South American Philatelist) appeared in 1893, under the management of Agricole Mettée de Boisrobert, a French journalist and board member of the Société Timbrophile d'Echandes de Paris (Philatelic Society of Echandes, Paris), (Buenos Aires division). This important philatelic magazine was the official organ of the Sociedad Filatélica Argentina (Argentine Philatelic Society) (from 1893 to 1894). Abel Fontaine published various articles in it under the pseudonym Argos, one entitled Una página de historia filatélica (A page of philatelic history), referred to the Argentinian stamps celebrating the 400th Anniversary of America, and another about La prensa filatélica Argentina – Notas de un coleccionista de periódicos (The Argentine philatelic press – Notes from a collector of journals), which included detailed facts about the first four Argentinian philatelic magazines⁽⁴⁾.

The Sociedad Filatélica Argentina (Argentine Philatelic Society) organized the first philatelic exhibition in the country on the 5th November 1893. Many of the Society's most prominent members participated. One year later, to celebrate the same Society's 7th anniversary (4th November 1894), the Segunda Exposicion Filatélica (Second Philatelic Exhibition) took place. Abel Fontaine participated by exhibiting Numero Uno philatelic magazines (Number Ones) from his collection. Each exhibit displayed an artistic caricature along with the name of the exhibitor.

Drawing from these successful events, the Sociedad Filatélica Argentina began publication of its renowned Revista, which, during its 75-year run, maintained a high level of quality⁽⁵⁾. Fontaine was its Subscription and Advertising Agent until August of 1896. He was also, for more than 30 years, the correspondent of the following foreign philatelic magazines:

L'Annonce Timbrologique	Liege, Belgium
Le Timbre-Poste	Brussels, Belgium
L'Ami des Timbres	Paris, France
Gazette Timbrologique	Rondeau, France
Le Timbrophile Brésilien	Petrópolis, Brazil
The English Specialists' Journal	Swanage, England
The Philatelic Record and Stamp News	London
Le Petit Journal de Paris, Suplem. en couleurs	Paris
Le Collectionneur de Timbres Poste	Amiens, France
L'Écho de la Timbrologie	Spain
Madrid Filatelico	St. Etienne, France
Le Courier des Timbres-Poste	Paris
Revue Philatélique Française

Similarly, he was contributing to various American philatelic magazines.

In 1899, Fontaine was founder and director of the Cercle Français des Collectionneurs de Timbres-Poste (French Circle of Postage Stamp Collectors), of Buenos Aires (at number 337 Chacabuco Street), in which he was able to put to use his philatelic knowledge. He was well-known and respected enough that he appeared in a cartoon published in 1904 in the magazine Filatelia in Buenos Aires⁽⁶⁾.

During his many years dedicated to teaching the French language, he passed on his enthusiasm for collecting magazines and journals, especially those of a philatelic nature, to one of his favourite students, Pablo Ernesto Busch.

Upon the death of Abel Fontaine in October of 1926, his landlady threw out his entire collection of antique journals and the books from his personal library. These collections were a complete loss. The only items salvaged were the philatelic publications that the young Busch had at his residence, as he was so fond of them. Only because of this has the collection of Argentine philatelic literature from that time period survived.

As a tribute to his “master”, Busch published a pamphlet entitled Catalogo de Revistas Filatelicas y Cartofilas de la Republica Argentina - 1874-1926. (Catalog of Argentina’s Philatelic and Post Card Magazines – 1874-1926), Buenos Aires, 1926, 38 pages, with bibliographic notes.

During 1933, the author of this very article acquired a complete collection of Abel Fontaine’s Argentine philatelic publications from Busch, made up of books and papers, magazines and catalogues, in addition to lesser publications, such as circulars and bylaws of philatelic societies, sales and auction catalogues, price lists, etc., etc.

Drawing from this material, and from what has been published since, I have published several studies and bibliographic indexes of this information. The first was in the Boletin del Instituto de Investigaciones Historicas de la Facultad de Filosofia Letras (Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Investigations of the Faculty of Philosophy and Letters) of the Universidad Nacional de Buenos Aires, in 1935-36⁽⁷⁾; and later in the Revista de la Sociedad Filatelica Argentina (Magazine of the Philatelic Society of Argentina) in 1938-40⁽⁸⁾.

All of this material makes up part of the Fundacion Walter B. L. Bose de Estudios de Historia de los Medios de Comunicacion y Filatelia (Walter B. L. Bose Foundation for the Study of the History of Methods of Philatelic Communication) library in Buenos Aires, and is constantly updated.

Because of this, the bibliographic work started by Abel Fontaine continues to provide information for the study of Argentine philatelic and postal history.

NOTES AND REFERENCES

1. His obituary appeared in the Revista de la Sociedad Filatélica Argentina, April 1926, Whole numbers 232/233.
2. Translated from the French by Pablo E. Busch, and published in the magazine Patagonia Filatélica, Comodoro Rivadavia, July 1926, Number 9.

3. This magazine was the first work of the Junta Americana de Historia y Numismática de Buenos Aires (today, the Academia Nacional de la Historia). They published only 8 issues from October of 1892 to September of 1893.
4. The articles mentioned were published in Issues 4 and 6 of El Filatelista Sud-Americano.
5. The Revista de la Sociedad Filatélica Argentina (1894-1969) was the most important South American philatelic journal. The major studies by the most prominent philatelists were published in this magazine.
6. Published in Filatelia by Tome and Malaguzzi, Buenos Aires, 1904, Number 14.
7. Boletín del Instituto de Investigaciones Históricas, Buenos Aires, 1935-1936, Whole numbers 69 to 73.
8. Revista de la Sociedad Filatélica Argentina, Buenos Aires, 1938-1940, Whole numbers 300 to 315.

CAPTIONS TO FIGURES

- | | |
|---------|---|
| Page 29 | Picture of Abel Fontaine and his autograph. |
| Page 30 | Cover from the Guía Filatélica Centro y Sudamericana , second volume, of 1892, of which Abel Fontaine was the publisher. |
| Page 31 | Top: Cover from the pamphlet published by Pablo E. Busch in tribute to his “master” Abel Fontaine, containing part of the bibliographic material salvaged after his death. Lower left: Artistic vignette listing the name of the exhibitor, in this case Abel Fontaine. Each exhibit at the Segunda Exposición Filatélica de la Argentina (Second Argentine Philatelic Exhibition) (1894) was identified with one of these labels. The Argentine and worldwide philatelic press was an active participant at the Exhibition. Lower right: Cartoon of Abel Fontaine which appeared in Whole number 14 of the magazine Filatelia, Buenos Aires, 1904. |

END

Society history from 1890-97
[Vereinsgeschichte von 1890-97]
Jahres-Bericht des Vereins für Briefmarkenkunde Kiel 1898/99, pp.3-5

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2009

SOCIETY HISTORY FROM 1890-97

On the 25th of October 1890 ten gentlemen of the Verein Kieler Briefmarkenfreunde (Society of Kieler Stamp Friends) got together. The Board of Directors were Ströh, Lensch, Bohnsack, Reuter and Trennt. The society organ was the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung. Membership dues were 50 Pfennig per month, the initiation fee was 2 Marks and later 1 Mark. Meetings were held every 14 days on Saturdays at the Nordischer Hof. With 6 new members and 1 resigning, 1890 ended with 15 members.

In 1891 the Board of Directors consisted of the Ströh, Lensch (Bohnsack), Kirchner (Reuter), Misch and Trennt. On the 1st October 1891, the Philatelistische Börsen-Courier and the Generalanzeiger für Philatelie became the club organ. After the founding of the Vertraulichen Korrespondenz-Blattes (Confidential Correspondence Sheets) of Philatelic societies on the 12th of November, during the Third German Philatelic Day in Dresden, the society immediately decided to join. On the 14th November an extended trip to Ploen and Ascheberg occurred. On the 31st October the Verein Mannheimer Briefmarken-Sammler became a sister society to Kiel. With 14 new members, 5 resignations and one death (Turnau) the club concluded with 23 members.

In 1892 the Board of Directors included Frentzel, Lensch, Fickert Jr., Misch, Trennt and Ströh. The dues were reduced to 4 Marks per year. Around April the Harmonie became their meeting place, soon afterwards the Hotel Deutscher Kaiser. From the 20th February on, no minutes were drawn up; On the 1st of October the Society, with 14 members in Kiel, finally decided to join as a branch the Verein für Freunde der Briefmarkenkunde Lübeck and transferred 3 non-local members to the society directly. The society organ became the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung and the Monatlichen Mitteilungen des Lübecker Vereins. The library was auctioned off amongst the members. It concluded 1892 with 14 members, having gained 8 new members and received 13 resignations.

In 1893, the Board of Directors included Frentzel, Lensch, Trennt, Misch. With 3 new members and 7 resignations it concluded 1893 with 10 members.

In 1894 Messrs. Weiss and Arnold comprised the Board of Directors. The society organ was the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal and later the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung. The annual membership fee was raised to 12 Marks. With 1 addition and 5 resignations, the membership showed 6 members at the end of 1894.

On the 9th of January 1895, ties were cut with the Verein für Freunde der Briefmarkenkunde Lübeck and the name Briefmarken Verein "Holsatia" was voted in. Statutes were laid down and the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung was declared as the society organ. The Board of Directors was Messrs. Weiss and Arnold. On the 8th of July, with 1 addition and 2 resignations and the simultaneous addition of 3 gentlemen, the society was reorganised under the name Verein für Briefmarkenkunde Kiel. The Board of Directors were Messrs. Weiss, Dreesen, Arnold, Storch and Hoier. Meetings took place every Thursday, first at the Hotel Union, then at the Harmonie and finally at the Hotel Deutscher Kaiser. Dues charged were 3 Marks per year. Society organs were Die Post and the Schleswig-Holsteinische Briefmarken-Zeitung. During the 7th German Philatelic Day in Mannheim from the 13th to 17th July, Mr. Weiss represented the society. With 47 new members and 2 resignations the club had 53 members at the end of 1895.

In 1896 the board of directors consisted of Messrs. (Weiss), Schur, (Schur, Storch), Trennt, Arnold, Dreesen (Hoier) and Schmalfeldt. Articles of association for Stamp Exchange, sections, auction evenings, reading articles and library were laid down. Auction evenings were cancelled on the 11th of June and meetings were held on the 2nd and 4th Thursday of each month. The Schleswig-Holsteinische Briefmarken-Zeitung closed down. Die Post - in the form of folders - was regularly displayed in 17 first class Kiel restaurants. The intention to hold a display of historic Schleswig-Holstein postage stamps fell through because of the resistance of the commission for the historic part of the Kiel exhibition in 1896. After each meeting there was a raffle for all of those present, and an annual raffle for all members.

On the 12th of March, an application for membership of the Association of German and Austrian Philatelic clubs was made and because of it, Mr. Weiss voted for it at the 8th German Philatelic Day at Cologne on the 20th to 23rd June. The foundation celebration occurred on the 12th & 13th September. On the 8th of October, Mr. König gave a lecture about well known philatelists, drawing on the Correspondence Pages of the Tableau. Tickets at 1 Mark each were offered, redeemable later on for the purchase of a library book case.

31 new members, including the Section Heide, 10 resignations and one death (Lensch, Heide) brought the membership to 73 at the end of 1896.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
March 1931, Volume 11, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2011

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

March 1931, Volume 11, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.[1-2]

This and that.

J. A. Bosshard, Meiningen, Thuringen

You read a lot in the philatelic press about “Mophila”, the International Exhibition of Modern Philately in Hamburg in 1931. In the meeting of the Working Group of the BDPh (Federation of German Philatelic Associations), the exhibition was really not authorized, but was released. Unfortunately the announced advertisement has not been published to this date. The collector who occupies himself with the literature would have been interested in the nature of the exhibition and the composition of the jury. Since the community of Philatelic authors of Hamburg organized the event, you would hope that a member of the jury would have spent time with philatelic literature and would be knowledgeable. Well, we shall see ...

Dependable sources say that the IPOSTA has scored a considerable surplus. It is important to us, that the well known library of Carl Beck as well as the library of Alexander Bunnerz were purchased and donated to the Prussian State Library. Hopefully the books won't disappear in the basement, but we will finally have a philatelic library in Germany, which will be used. The two libraries cost roughly 6,000 Reichsmarks. Hopefully, the many rarities, which Carl Beck collected, still exist. We are certainly happy, that the libraries did not end up in America.

Today the award committee for the Sieger Prize consists of Messrs. Dr. F. Kalckhoff, Berlin, Alexander Leo, Munich, and J. A. Bosshard, Meiningen. It always entails much work to find the best article among the multitude. Last year much was written, but little is worthy of the winner's prize. It won't be long now until we have the decision of the committee.

It is always very embarrassing when attending a real philatelic group, to hear about the many copycats. It even gets worse, when someone accuses someone else of plagiarism. In philately it is relatively simple to do that, because most collectors read seldom and of those, only half of them know a little - and the sentences of the original authors are altered so easily and beautifully!

The announced Basler Taube [Basel Dove], which was supposed to be published in the fall, has not reached the coop yet. Czechoslovakia reports that the Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung went belly up. That had to be expected! The Philatelisten-Zeitung in Gössnitz will step in and publish a few pages from now on, on franking machine stamps. Hopefully, the text will not suffer. Don't forget that the majority of the collectors want to know something about postage stamps, not meter stamps. Also, the Philatelisten-Zeitung is no longer what it used to be under A. E. Glasewald's leadership. In issue 4 of last year, there were complaints that literature tips were rarely to be seen. That does not sit well with a certain expert author, because the long letter with many explanations seeks to refute our critique. You have to ask yourself, whether that dear man drew his wisdom all by himself? Or do you have to be ashamed to refer to others' "work"? An academic never shrinks from literature quotations. That may suffice!

Unfortunately, until now no new Kohl Handbooks have been published, too bad, because the collector would welcome a speedier printing of this valuable work. Until a country has been compiled, newer stamps appear in that long gap, because so much time passes. Should all these be Supplements? And how long is it going to be before the Supplements are ready?...

For collectors of Thurn und Taxis a multicoloured printed map has been published by H. Starost in Rothenburg/Oder. When you stop and think of it, it shows the Importance of the Post Office.

Also, the handbook of the Aerial Post by Berezowski is coming along slowly and will be read with great interest by the airmail collectors.

Metzner of Neustadt O/S. has printed with extreme exactitude comparison tables of catalogue numbers, which will be of use in finding with ease catalogue numbers in any catalogue.

With extreme care the Baroness van Heerdt-Kolff has worked on the Dutch Philatelic Literature. Everything that has been written in the philatelic world press about Dutch stamps has been included.

Director Birnbach together with his son has written a book about foreign and local posts in Romania up to 1875. It is a very revealing and detailed work.

We note that despite the bad times nowadays, philatelic literature has been enriched in many aspects. Hopefully, collectors will honour the efforts of philatelic authors by purchasing their works.

pp.[2-4]

New releases on the book market.

p.[4]

Article overview.

January-February 1931

The following abbreviations correspond with those published in the German philatelists' Yearbook, 1st and 2nd editions: Acronyms for Philatelic Literature.

END

A. Maury

Memoires of a stamp dealer

[Mémoires d'un marchand de timbres-poste]

Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste, August 1866, Volume 3, Whole number 26, pp.204-206; September, Whole number 27, pp.212-213; October, Whole number 28, pp.220-221; January 1867, Volume 4, Whole number 31, pp.245-246; August, Whole number 33, pp.344-345 & October, Whole number 35, pp.360-362

Translation produced by various translators for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2013-2017

MEMOIRES OF A STAMP DEALER

Chapter I

Ordinarily, the first chapter of memoirs is devoted to the endearing details of the author's childhood. However, dear reader, I shall spare you in every way possible such clichés as, raised in a humble cottage, wherein I use the urchin Charlet's original spelling to make it seem more interesting.

However, although still somewhat adapting to those practices, I take the liberty of offering to you here my portrait in the framework that seems to me most appropriate.

And here it is.

Chapter II

HOW ONE BECOMES A COLLECTOR

Collectors themselves have invented classifications; they put everything into categories, species, and varieties. They even classify themselves. There is a great variety of collectors. I shall come back to this idea.

I belong to the category of born-collectors. At the boarding school where I did my studies, I had in my desk a small box in which I had enclosed a mayfly, a snail and a lizard. From that day forward I was a collector.

I was determined then to own a creature of each of the great divisions of nature. I already had, according to the system that I fashioned myself, and for which I humbly beg pardon from the naturalists, a lizard representing quadrupeds, a snail which did very well as a reptile, and a mayfly as an insect. I only needed a bird and a fish to complete my menagerie.

As you can see, I was not well grounded in natural history. The students at my level were not considered to be up to grasping the basics of it. It seemed that only the older students were capable of learning it, and they had a special course.

In order to realize my dreams, I waited impatiently for vacations. When that happy time arrived, in order to organize my ideas, I decided that the acquisition of specialized books was indispensable, and soon the two-or three sous* boxes of the booksellers were no longer a mystery to me. I passed my time on the embankments and never returned without some old books hidden away in my jacket held in place by my schoolboy's belt. They didn't notice a thing at home. After a month my entire fortune was gone, but I had a library. I learned that a lizard is a reptile, even though it doesn't crawl and a snail is a mollusc in spite of its hard shell, and so on.

Back at school, I still possessed in my desk, a complete and well domesticated collection. In a box with a grate which I had made myself, each specimen paraded within its own compartment. There was a small field mouse, (mus sylvaticus) a young sparrow, (fringilla domestica) a lizard (lacerta agilis) and some snails. (helix) A bottle held a fish, happy as they always are in their element as the proverb says, and finally, in a box, my museum, various samples of insects. Moreover, I continued to add specimens to augment my collection. But Alas! Soon the field mouse was confiscated, the lizard escaped, and the fish died. I had to be content with just the insects which at least remained peaceful, affixed as they were to corks by large pins.

As summer arrived, my collection grew in disturbing proportions. My desk became so crowded that one fine day a teaching assistant decided to confiscate my collection and throw it in the trash! My heart was heavy, but I started up again more determined than ever; I had the holy fire! Ah! If only we collected stamps in those days, how I might have satisfied my innocent passion without so much inconvenience!

Once I finished school my leisure time became rare. On Sundays, I went butterfly chasing at four or five in the morning. That's the best time to surprise them in their sleep!

I had, I know not how, several dozen more or less antique coins. I liked numismatics a lot, but you had to be rich to satisfy that taste ... my collection never grew. Books, exotic knick-knacks and antiques were irresistibly attractive. I carried out my morning devotions in front of the bric-a-brac vendors one finds in the shopping district. I should tell you that, as an apprentice at Jouvin⁽¹⁾, a long standing family of glove makers, I studied their honourable trade, but it did not hold for me the same attraction as my cherished trinkets.

Translator's note A sou was the colloquial name of a 5 centimes coin.

1. Xavier Jouvin: <http://www.britannica.com/EBchecked/topic/306816/Xavier-Jouvin>.

Chapter III

HOW I BECAME A STAMP COLLECTOR.

It happened in the Bois de Boulogne; I ran into one of my chums who said to me, something like this:

Is your father in business?

Yes

Does he correspond abroad?

A little.

His letters are, no doubt, stamped?

Most likely, but how would all that interest you?

Here's the thing; I collect postage stamps ...

Ah hah!

... and if you were really nice, you could cut out the ones on your father's mail and give them to me.

Gladly.

After that, my young friend left me, and I continued on my way laughing to myself at that strange idea of collecting postage stamps. Several days later, I saw posters in the streets of Paris advertising A Manual for the collector of postage stamps.

More and more astonished and remembering my friend's words, upon returning home, I began to look through my father's correspondence which, as far as I could see, did not include many foreign stamps. The result of my research was the discovery of five or six black and blue stamps from the Republic and the Presidency plus some current Belgian, English and German ones. For the first time, I really began to notice these interesting little vignettes, and in order to display them more effectively, I mounted them symmetrically, one of each type on a sheet of white paper; I traced them with borders in ink and wrote down the name of the country where each one came from. When I was done, I reflected that since I had several of each variety, there was no point in giving the duplicates to my friend, and just for amusement, I would keep them. That's exactly it, isn't it, the logic of a collector! I began to look for ordinary stamps to add to the others. Immediately, I started to assemble my catalogue. Here is my original entry:

France - Republic, 20c. black, 25c. blue

- Presidency, 25c. blue

- Empire, 1c. green, 5c. green, 10c. yellow, 20c. blue, 40c. red

(I left a blank space for the 80c. that I tried so hard to find.)

Belgium - 20c. blue

England - 4 pence red, 4p. pink

Germany - (Thurn and Taxis) 6kr. pink

I paid a visit to my friend, finding him about to arrange his stamps in a notebook. It was Sunday; he had just come from the Stamp Bourse - The Bourse! I was heading from one marvel to the next! He smiled when I showed him my stamps, which he had already owned for a long time. Then I had the privilege of seeing his collection, with him telling me the name of each piece and lingering casually over the rarities.

I began to find all this really interesting; moreover his collection was truly splendid. He had more than a hundred different stamps! Among these were several that particularly caught my attention. First of all was a very small one adorned with a bull's head, and then a triangular one, the pearl of the album. There were round ones, and ovals, embossed stamps and gilded ... I would never have imagined so much diversity. For a week, I saw those multicoloured papers pass before my eyes; I dreamed of them at night.

As soon as I was able, I ran to buy the Manual that I had seen advertised. There was a crowd at the shop, whose specialty was autographs, but at that moment was given entirely over to stamps; the crowd was incredible.

Proud owner of the Manual, I sat down on a bench in the street and read it in a trance from cover to cover. I didn't much like it. I soon learned that Lacroix had published another Manual from which the one I possessed had copied its catalogue. I acquired theirs and found it to be excellent. Henceforth, I was able to discuss stamps logically and collect seriously. I lacked for nothing ... except stamps.

Chapter IV

THE HUNT FOR POSTAGE STAMPS

I needed stamps at all costs. Timbromania, like a tarantula, had bitten me, and I began the hunt ferociously. I rushed to visit many friends that I had perhaps neglected a bit. I wrote to everyone residing abroad that I thought might be willing to reply with stamped letters. Finally, I made my request to everyone, Can you get me some postage stamps? The initial results were productive; my collection grew in the blink of an eye. I soon had thirty and had a number of Spanish stamps to exchange. This figure of thirty held for a long while; I wasn't finding anything new. Patience is the first virtue of a real collector; it protects one against an unlimited craving. I waited.

To keep busy, I thought about getting an album, a home where all my precious little pieces of paper, whose acquisition had already caused me so much trouble, could reside. Finding an album to my liking was no easy task. Lallier had not yet been published, and anyway it would have been a bit expensive for me; I had only three francs for the purchase. I visited several stationers, but didn't find what I wanted at any of them. Everything they showed me was lined, or was designed with a variety of dreadful, tinted sheets. Finally, I settled on a modest little notebook for thirteen sous. I removed the awful lead pencil, but the side pockets were very useful for keeping unsorted stamps. On every page I carefully glued my stamps in threes; I made titles in red and blue letters, in the old style, and when this work was completed, I must confess I was very satisfied, for my album made a nice impression with its thirty stamps and its flamboyant titles. It was done right, not like most of those I had seen, in disarray, careless and tasteless.

With an album full of blank spaces, I needed stamps more than ever. Provided with recommendations, I went about asking the larger merchants who were friends of my father. It would have been easy for them to make me happy by letting me leaf through the numerous boxes of correspondence that had been buried in dust for many years, but everywhere I found a rather cool reception. They promised me much, but never gave me anything. No one wants to disturb venerable archives, that serve no purpose, but until the day when they are thrown into the fire, or sent to the trash, they are treated with respect for the simple reason that they have been there for a long time.

I had to arrive at just the right time when the mail was being distributed. Then they would leave me to the objects of my desire. Ah! How I spent delicious moments then, as I stretched out under a desk, searching avidly through the paperwork for discarded envelopes upon which, from time to time, I found a stamp of a colour that I was missing, or a simple variety, sometimes even an unknown specimen! Then my heart would pound with pleasure; I was sure I was filled with the same pure joy as the explorer who discovers a new land, or the scientist who discovers a star!

Chapter V

PASSION

Collector's passion, thou art alike for all! Yes, the naturalist collector who confronts a thousand dangers and explores savage lands is not dissuaded by hunger, nor thirst, nor fatigue, nor murderous climates when it's a matter of finding a rare bird, or plant, or stone, he recognizes no limits before him. It's the same for the numismatist, the antique collector, or the devotee of pictures who will frame the canvas that he cherishes in gold. And I dare say to you, modest stamp collector, that your joy is equal to theirs! These desires are constantly growing and being revitalized with each small felicitous event. Isn't that precisely how one defines happiness?

Chapter VI

FORTUNE COMES QUIETLY

The time soon came when I couldn't find anything new to put in my little notebook which I had pompously given the title of Album. All my stamps were properly sorted and framed to nice effect. My duplicates that I couldn't exchange were also organized. Since I eventually had nothing else to organize, I was forced to quit, and my passion was gradually dying out when an incident - quite simply a gift of Providence - occurred to revive my ardour.

One day - oh, thrice blessed day! - a lady who I had asked for stamps a hundred times as I had all my friends, found a nice collection in the street just lying there for the taking. She included me in her discovery; it's impossible to express to you my joy which, however, was soon tempered by the fear that someone might come to claim it.

So, I waited for a month, a period which she determined. She left the story and her address in the neighbourhood where she had found the album. The waiting period having expired with no claims, she gave me the much desired collection in exchange for a beautiful picture of butterflies, as we had agreed to do in advance.

In spite of my high hopes, I doubted during all the days of that long month, that fate would favour me enough to allow the album to come into my possession. I doubted it even while carrying it pressed under my arm so as not to lose it myself. It was well wrapped, but even so, I feared that the owner would recognize it in the street and come up to me to claim it. These sentiments and those that follow will certainly prevent me from aspiring to the Monthyon prize [Translator's note: The Baron de Monthyon was a French lawyer, greatly devoted to all that could do good to his fellow men. He left an endowment by his will for prizes to be awarded for certain good works.] – but I owe my readers the complete truth and so I shall continue.

I got home without a problem, where I could examine all those stamps at my leisure; the album definitely belonged to me - but wait! - leafing through the pages I discovered that the first page contained, in a nice handwriting, an address: Mademoiselle Marie, Rue de Grenelle St. Honoré; this was like a lightening bolt. My first thought - no matter what any one might say - was that since the album was in my possession, and having purchased it, it was certainly mine and I should keep it. But after a very, very great struggle, my conscience got the better of me, and I decided to take the album to its rightful, and no doubt charming, owner even though I had enjoyed it so much for a while. Upon re-reading the address, I realized, all of a sudden, that there was no house number. Oh! More scruples, how was I going to find an address without a number? The street is long, and I imagined it even four times longer, and then, should I ring at every door asking if there might be a young lady there who had lost some stamps? They would make fun of me. Unquestionably, I should keep the collection. To be sure that I would not change my mind, I tore out all the pages, detached the stamps and prepared to transfer them to my album. But then I suffered new remorse since it might well be that Mademoiselle Marie would have to start a new collection, and if my public confession ever got to her I would have to return her belongings plus interest since they had prospered in my hands for so long.

The passion for stamps once again overwhelmed me. I sorted and organized the spoils of the album with my own stamps. My collection suddenly reached the high count for those days of more than 200 varieties. I was now on a par with the best collectors that I knew. My album was shown around, producing rivalry and envy. One of the first who saw it said to me, When someone looks at your album, they are discouraged from continuing; how could anyone hope to achieve anything like it? And I was as happy as those newcomers who, just arriving in their clogs, make a big deal about being in Paris. I told them how I had begun with ten stamps, and I encouraged them to be patient and persevere. Then, I would make them a gift of some duplicate that I didn't need. I had become a guardian. I thought a lot about the album I had found and the wrongdoing committed, but I didn't talk about it, just as the newcomer neglects to mention the obliging friend who gave him money and advice. I had several rivals, one above all who was always around me. I have good news to tell you" he said trying to upset me, yesterday I reached 230 stamps - As it happens, I counted mine yesterday and have 235. My friend had been outdone by several head-lengths, (heads rule over postage stamps) and the steeple chase continued replete with passion and ambition.

Chapter VII

STAMP COLLECTORS AT THE SEA SHORE

At this juncture, I went to spend some time in Boulogne. As soon as I arrived, I ran to the port; being Parisian, naturally, my first desire was to see the sea. Alas! It had gone out; it was low tide and I was extremely disappointed seeing all those large boats lying about on their sides in the mud.

Strolling by the shops at the port, I noticed in the window of a hair salon (called a barber shop by the locals) a very large book opened to pages plastered with foreign postage stamps. I couldn't believe my eyes; I was enthralled. For about an hour, I studied those stamps one by one; then I ran to the hotel to find my collection, which I had brought with me.

Back at the barber's display, I opened my notebook and performing another survey, noted mentally what I had and what I didn't have among the riches of that great book. Finally, after some hesitation, I decided to enter.

The shop owner was busy grooming a sailor. He left his client for a moment to take a look at my collection. Watching him, I guessed that he was also a collector. Once I had announced that I was Parisian, he asked a thousand questions about collectors in the capital - who I hardly knew - and about the small Bourse des Tuileries which was a subject of conversation those days.

My host was so interested in my stories that I feared that his razor might graze the sailor's skin.

When his customer was gone, he came and sat at a small table facing me to admire my stamps while I admired his. I had brought with me all my duplicates. I proposed an exchange to this amiable barber who, not having most of them, accepted gladly, but on the following conditions which I found a bit severe, but to which I agreed nonetheless: He would take from mine all that he wished making small piles of twenty, each pile giving me the right to select one stamp of my choice from a particular page with few rarities.

All my supplies were soon exhausted in that way in exchange for just five or six of the most ordinary stamps. I must say, however, that not having ever been able to do anything with my duplicates, I was pleased with the transaction. I later learned that the barber had been involved in some affair with gold [coins], (?) the Spanish ones having been in great demand.

He confessed to me one day that his method was to never purchase a stamp no matter how favourable the transaction might be. He only swapped stamps to fill the empty spaces that always existed. Naturally, he had to give as little and take as much as possible. Since he never bought anything, it is clear that all of his sales were profits. That was his reasoning which may have been a bit improper, but he was not about to change it.

I feel the need to paint a vivid portrait of this distinguished man who is certainly one of the most original collectors I ever met. First of all, I pose this question which I leave to those who are more qualified to answer: Why is it that hairdressers in general, and those in the provinces in particular, nearly all have artistic tastes? It is only in their shops that you see, along side the usual hairdressing equipment, carefully selected paintings, antique ceramics, weapons, stuffed birds and rock formations in gushing fountains, etc., etc.

The barber of Boulogne collects everything that he finds, but wiser than others, he turns it into a small business. So while he is shaving a local fisherman or teasing with his trained comb a tuft of hair in a sailor's hairdo, he fills his multiple roles as public writer, expert councillor, loans books from his library to his clientele, and, perhaps too sadly, parts with coins and medals from his beautiful collection which he had amassed partly by trading with his compatriots his new and shiny pieces for their old ones.

The young cabin boys bring him fossil shells, scraps of roman pottery, ancient coins and all the trinkets that they find in the sand and under the earth as well as pieces of wreckage and other strange objects that are dredged up from the bottom of the sea. All that stuff is piled up in the same shop that serves as a museum, lecture hall, dressing room and general pigsty.

This barber, known to so many numismatists and stamp collectors, is an educated, perhaps a wise man who expresses himself with a certain erudition. I later became his competitor in the stamp business. He never wanted that, and neither did I.

Chapter VII

STAMP COLLECTORS AT THE SEASIDE

As chance would have it, we moved to Boulogne. My mother opened a glove store near the port, and I helped her in the business which as I said before, had no attraction for me. I was often distracted, thinking about stamps. I regretted very much having squandered so many of them when I first arrived. No doubt, it would have been better to exchange stamps with the young people that I saw every day in front of the barber's display. One morning, while showing some green gloves to a blond lady, the idea came to me that I, too, could put my collection on display in order to establish a relationship with some collectors.

Right away, I put my idea into action, slipping my notebook wide open into the display case. I watched out of the corner of my eye to see what would happen. A young Englishman, his collection under his arm, passed by without noticing anything, then a second one and a third, until finally the day passed, and no one had noticed my album. Little by little, discouragement overcame me until, toward evening, a young boy stopped short in front of my album, came closer, and looked with the most profound interest at the three stamps - my French Republics! - which by themselves filled the displayed page. After a quarter of an hour, he glanced into the boutique and saw that I was watching him which didn't seem to bother him at all. I followed him with the same excitement as a hunter watching a bird circle his trap. He went back the way he had come and returned in a short time with two friends. This signalled to me that they were to share in his discovery. In fact, all three of them stopped to examine my stamps. It was about the time of day when people come back from the beach. The English youths came in groups, arm in arm, and my group of three observers had soon increased to about thirty. The crowd grew quickly, each one calling to new collectors - John! Marie! - Come here! - Oh! Beautiful stamps! - Very rare, indeed - Ah! Oh! I say, come here! I didn't understand much of it, except that they were happy and admiring. My bait had worked; I was triumphant!

But my mother was upset by the crowd and when she saw the cause of it, she removed the notebook from the showcase to my great dissatisfaction. The next day, I got permission to put it back, but only during the morning.

It was hardly in place when one of my young people from the day before stopped for a moment and came in. - Do you want to sell? he asked me pointing to the stamps. Non! Do you want to swap? Oui! He took out his duplicate book. This one for that one? Oui! And so, I exchanged half of my stamps for others, nearly all from the English Colonies, which I thought to be much more valuable.

The first customer had hardly left when another arrived all in a hurry. He was very annoyed to see that someone had beaten him there. I made several exchanges with him. A third came, but I saw then that they all had the same stamps to offer me, and I correctly thought that these stamps were not rare in England, nor consequently in Boulogne and I promised myself to be more careful in the future.

There was a procession of collectors all day. They came back every day and my collection grew considerably because, instead of exchanging stamp for stamp, I exchanged no more than one for two or four for fear of making a mistake. Moreover, my clients were satisfied with my method of dealing which they preferred to the barber's. I was soon forced to request that the collectors come only in the morning since during the day they completely obstructed the store to the detriment of the glove customers.

Chapter VIII

HOW I BECAME A STAMP DEALER

One of my stamps in particular attracted the attention of collectors and aroused their acquisitive instincts; it was a 15c French Republic. Despite the most tempting exchange offers, I always refused to let it go. The more people wanted it the more I valued it. One day a young collector offered me ½ a crown for it, that is 3 francs; it was a nice price and with the encouragement of my mother and not without regret I accepted it.

Despite the passage of time since this event, I would recognize that stamp among a thousand similar ones: it was nearly mint; only 3 dots scarred the image of Liberty but by chance they were arranged in a peculiar pattern: One replaced an eye with a round hole; the next one divided the nose exactly in half; and the third, more noticeable, was on the mouth, which created a sinister, dark grimace; it looked like a skull.

The day after this memorable event there was a stir throughout my group of collectors; everyone chided me for having given up my stamp to someone else; everyone would have offered me 1 franc, 2 francs more. If I had put it up for auction, it might have brought 20 or 30 francs. I remember that a little English boy broke his cane out of anger; all this only increased my sense of regret. I wrote to my brother in Paris, asking him to find some of these famous “Republics”; I got 20 of them easily, at the price of 25c each. My 20 “Republics” sold that day for 2 francs each; triumphant, I sent my 40 francs to Paris, requesting other “Republics” and all sorts of stamps, determined to sell as many as possible in order to buy more and build a magnificent collection. I was making all kinds of plans and was already enjoying the anticipated astonishment of my friends in Paris after I would return and show them my album with its riches; I would let the little English boys dabble in my notebook; I dreamed of a larger album.

I received the stamps requested from Paris; they had been purchased from a dealer beside the railing of a wharf; he had only about as many as I had before. Confident that I could recover my investment, I set about selling every which way and one day I found myself completely sold out!

I was happy: at the age of 15 years I saw myself having a collection that I intended to continue to work on as well as a small business to my liking; I would no longer think about gloves; stamps took all my time.

In several collections I had seen some mint stamps that were so beautiful that at first I thought they were fakes, as I had not been accustomed to seeing them in such condition. Their owners, very possessive, were very mysterious about where they had acquired them; I finally learned from a traveling Parisian that nearly all these stamps had been sold by a Paris dealer who was quite in vogue at that time and was established on the fourth floor of a building near the wharves; at that time he was called simply Mr. let's say X [actually Edard de Laplante (Editor)] and he is a go-getter and everyone would recognize him.

My little business flourished: after several months, finding that the dealer on the wharf was no longer sufficient for my needs, I wrote purely by accident to this Mr. X; it was a little letter, very young, in which I expressed my desire to have stamps for resale; I requested the honor of being his customer asked him to give me his best prices. A week later I received back my own letter annotated in red between the lines with the most intolerably presumptuous phrases.

This gentleman, who signed his name with the noble “de” replied to me in a few very pointed words that he was the founder of the stamp business, that he saw me as wanting to compete with him like other ruffians in Paris but that after all this my frankness appealed to him – do you understand! – and that he would consent to selling me stamps; as to quoting me prices, he knew this trick (he suspected me of being a spy for another Paris dealer); I had to settle for sending him money and a list of the stamps I wanted. This method of proceeding by the dealer toward the buyer upset a bit my preconceptions of business – I who had taken care to mark the price on each of my stamps and show them to potential buyers; finally, to give it a try, I sent this character a little money order and a list that doubtless began with these names: New Caledonia, Reunion, etc. and with this note: “if they don’t cost more than 25c”.

Mr. X replied by ridiculing me over the rare stamps requested at 25c. For my money he sent me his own selection, which, to tell the truth, was completely to my liking, considering my lowly financial condition.

I kept going back to him and my correspondent softened up gradually; one day I told him I intended to visit him soon in Paris and he replied that he was eager to see me.

These were my first business transactions and I regret that I cannot find these letters that I put away too carefully; Mr. X’s letters would certainly entertain my readers.

Continued in the next edition.

A. Maury

Editor’s Comments:

Given that the last Chapter ended with Continued in the next edition, I attempted to obtain the next episode:

e-mail to: Nancy Bryan Deputy Librarian, Royal Philatelic Society London.

Sent: 19 January 2018 19:22

Hi Nancy, Does the Library have Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste? If so, I require A. Maury: Mémoires d’un marchand de Timbres-poste, which should be in number 36 or shortly thereafter.

Thanks Brian Birch

Reply: Monday, January 29, 2018 at 11:58:57

Hi Brian, I’ve checked from number 35, where there is a section of this article series which ends “La suite au prochain numéro” but I can find no later record of this article.

I have checked our copies up to no. 44 and I’ve run searches through various online databases but can’t find a conclusion to this series. Have you seen one before? Or is it possible it was abandoned? There doesn’t even appear to be an explanatory note.

Kind regards Nancy

END

[Victor] Suppantschitsch

The philatelic periodicals of the United States of America

[Die philatelistische zeitungen der Vereinigten Staaten von Nordamerika]

Die Postwertzeichen-Kunde, May 1891, Volume 2, Issue 5, pp.58-60; June, Issue 6, pp.78-80
& July, Issue 7, pp.91-93

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2010

THE PHILATELIC PERIODICALS OF THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

It can hardly be contested that the number and quality of philatelic magazines can be an indicator of the knowledge and philatelic activity of a nation.

If we check the, philatelic magazines of the civilized nations of the globe, we find that only three nations show significant literature. They are the English, the Germans and the French.

Next come the Spaniards, Italians, then Danish and Norwegians, the Swedes, Portuguese and Dutch, the Rumanians and in present times also the Greeks. But their literature cannot compare with the first three nations at all.

With regard to the first three nations, the number of magazines printed in English outnumber those in German and French combined by double or triple the amount.

The lion's share of magazines printed in English goes to the Americans and especially the United States of America.

America - and I stress only the United States of America - has attained the first place amongst the nations of the globe in this century, especially in inventions and sports. The inventions of Edison alone are going to shape the second half of our century dramatically.

If we hear something extraordinary, it comes from America, the land with the houses made of papier-mache, with street surfaces of glass, with its fourteen and more storeys, etc.

We wonder, whether a nation with such an abundance of inventions will also turn fervently to all kinds of pastimes, and will find fertile soil for our hobby, stamp collecting.

Just as a seed sown in a tropical environment sprouts ten times more luscious and faster compared with the Nordic soil, so the philately of the Americans has developed mightily compared with Europe.

A consequence, a sign of this development, is the large number of its philatelic magazines, which I have chosen for my discussion.

In this strange country, new papers shoot up like mushrooms overnight, but often disappear after a short time - only to appear under a different name or at a different location, sometimes years later, and raise havoc for the researcher, who tries to compile its curriculum vitae and its connections.

America does not belong to the countries which first saw philatelic papers. Its first one, The Stamp Collector's Record was published in December, at the end of the year 1864.

At that time, various papers in England, France and Germany had already existed for more than two years. In England, in Birmingham to be precise, a paper was published in October 1862, which only survived for a few numbers, named The Monthly Intelligencer.

In December 1862 The Stamp Collectors Review and Monthly Advertiser was published in Liverpool by Ed. Moore, and in January 1863 in London The Stamp Collector's Magazine.

On the 15th February 1863, the Grand Master of philately, Moens of Brussels, published his famous journal Le Timbre-Poste, and on the 15th November of the same year Mahé of Paris published Le Timbrophile judged excellent because of its outstanding content.

In Germany, Zschiesche & Köder in Leipzig presented the German collectors with their first philatelic paper, the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler in May 1863. This was followed in January 1864 by Börsenblatt für den Briefmarkenhandel from Reichel & Co. of Kaufbeuren (which folded in June 1864) and Allgemeine Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung in July 1864 from Ernst Roschlau of Coburg.

Even if America was a little bit late with its printing of the first philatelic journal, it did catch up quickly and in great numbers.

Translator's note: The Table at this point in the original document shows the number of new philatelic papers published in America each year

From 1884 the numbers reached gigantic proportions.

In other words, in the last seven years more journals have been published than in the previous 20 years. All in all, the philatelic newspaper literature of the United States comprises 350 different magazines. Needless to say, a great number disappeared before the end of a year, and yes, a large part of them only had a single number compared with a number of magazines, which were published without interruption for ten and more years.

About 200 papers did not reach a full year, while 70 stopped after the first number. The most important journals of the United States are: The Philatelic Monthly, which was published without interruption since 1875, The Philatelic World since 1880 without interruption, The Journal of Philately, which was published from 1868 to 1878, then faltered, and was published again in 1888. The Stamp Collector's Record, published from 1864 to 1876.

I categorize these papers as important, because they prove their vitality by their longevity. The most significant and rich in content are The Philatelic Journal of America and The American Philatelist. The first mentioned journal represents in almost all numbers a book, because each issue contains more than 70 pages of text and over 50 pages of advertising. Considerable also is The American Journal of Philately which has several numbers, which average 40 pages of text, excluding advertising.

This volume of American journals, of which several years already constitute a library, can only be explained by the size of America and contrasts with the volume of our European journals, which remain within modest limits.

I have to mention some peculiarities, which occur nowhere else in the philatelic press so often and in such numbers as in America.

One of them in particular, is that there are rather many journals, of which for years only a few numbers were published each year. For example, The Timbrophilist was published from September 1869 to September 1874, five years but with only 5 numbers.

The Kuriosity Kabinet was published from 1870 to 1884, but with only 28 numbers.

Of The Postage Stamp Reporter, only 8 numbers were published between September 1871 and January 1875.

The Saint Louis Philatelist barely managed to survive from September 1876 to May 1882 with only 22 numbers of which 9 were double numbers, so actually only 13 journals really existed.

The Memphis Philatelist delighted its subscribers from 1880 until 1885, when it died with a total of only 4 numbers, etc.

This carelessness in publishing makes it very difficult to establish if and when a journal died.

Another bad habit was that single numbered issues were seldom distributed but many double-numbered issues were. This gave the impression that the paper existed for high numbers of issues, although the reality is that this is only pretend.

For example Trifet's Stamp Circular sports the number 81 on its issue of May 1879, but in reality only 69 numbers were distributed.

The last number of the Monthly Chronicle of January 1877 sports number 10, while only 4 pages were published per issue.

The Michigan Philatelist went broke with number 19 of December 1878, whilst subscribers only received 11 issues.

The Ohio Philatelist's fifth issue was printed with number 12 in February 1881.

The Philatelic Triumph issued its final number 14 in December 1882, although numbers 4, 5, 6 and 7 were never published, etc.

On the other hand there were journals that published more than they claimed.

The Stamp Collector's Review ended its 5 year old existence on earth with number 16, although 17 different issues were published.

To make the confusion complete: there are many different journals which have the same title, so that it is only possible to differentiate between them by the publisher and their town of origin.

There are 8 Philatelic News, 4 Collector, 4 Western Philatelist, 3 New York Philatelist, 3 Collector's Companion, 2 Collector's Guide, 2 Michigan Philatelist, etc.

Here is another peculiarity which I just wanted to mention: in 1879 a short-lived paper was published in German in Baltimore which was called Internationale Markenbörse.

Page 78

I follow with a list of all philatelic journals published in the United States of America to the end of 1890, listing titles, publisher, towns of origin and the year first printed and add a asterisk in front of those which have ceased publication or regular publishing.

Page 93

On top of these, there are more than 100 journals in the United States of America like Brendicke's the Sammler, which occupy themselves only partly with philately. Those have not been listed.

The result of the above listing (see references below in the original) shows that almost a third of all stamp papers were published in seven towns: New York (33), Chicago (27), Philadelphia (15), Boston (11), Cincinnati (10), Brooklyn (9) and Saint Louis (7), and that at the end of 1890 there existed 50 philatelic journals in America.

It is remarkable that some journals were published quarterly and one, the Semi-Annual Stamp Collector announced its half-yearly publication.

Finally, may I be permitted to voice my opinion, that such an extreme proliferation of philatelic journals, which are condemned to such a short-lived existence and the biggest part of which are without educational and stimulating content, do not serve philately well.

END

Wilhelm Müller
On foreign specialist periodicals
[Ueber ausländische fachzeitschriften]
Der Philatelist, May 1897, Volume 18, Issue 5, pp.183-184

This is the introduction to a series of critiques of foreign philatelic magazines, which it has not been thought necessary to translate. The remainder of this article can be found on the following pages: June 1897, Volume 18, Issue 6, pp.222-224; July, Issue 7, pp.263-264; August Issue 8, pp.293-296 & September, Issue 9, pp.323-325.

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
September 2011

ON FOREIGN SPECIALIST PERIODICALS

by Wilhelm Mueller, Cannstatt

The German philatelic press is a complete match in regards to its responsibilities to distribute and generally explain the results of individuals' research and make them available to the broader population. Collecting has become a sincere and difficult study. The stamp collecting hobby has evolved from its initial framework of establishing collections and admiring the treasures in quiet contemplation to where a large part of the collectors now study the specialist literature, be it in magazines or monographs of individual countries, and can no longer be without them. This manifests itself in the extraordinarily expanded number of periodicals with their main focus on German philatelic literature. But the serious collector cannot rest on his laurels because it is without question necessary to pay attention to the publications in foreign languages and we find that our journals nowadays pay greater attention to the foreign magazines by publishing excerpts to make new and interesting articles in German accessible to the readership.

May we begin with a few words regarding design and layout, format, volume and separation of the printed material, etc.

In general the English, French and American journals have a favourable appearance as far as printing and paper is concerned. The format is large Octavo to dictionary size Quarto, therefore similar to those of ours and can be categorized as "handy", especially The American Journal of Philately.

The London Philatelist, which is the specialized organ of the respected Philatelic Society, London, should be named as extraordinary, similar to our Dresden Society's Der Philatelist.

The English, who show industriousness and determination in all sports affairs, especially if their social position affords them time to pursue their hobby relentlessly (which is the case for the larger part of the members) it stands to reason that their contributions are solid, especially since their researchers and authors belong to the Society's membership. The monographs of individual regions, which the Society publishes, show internally and externally excellent qualities and will remain as such for years to come.

The other magazines are mainly so-called “dealer magazines” that is they are published by those who are also stamp dealers. The contrast between dealer magazines and collector magazines has been compared with the monthlies Das Postwertzeichen and the Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal.

Although the main focus of foreign dealer magazines is their dedication to the collector, it is understandable that the interests of both directions cannot be guaranteed in equal proportions by the magazine. There are certain business considerations, which cannot be expressed or “have the whole world told about it”, which nonetheless do exist and cannot be ignored. To reproach the editorial staff is not appropriate, since stamp collecting should not be singled out: the doctor does not tell his patients everything, the businessman has his secrets and the tradesman cannot let his clientele look into everything, nevertheless we find these principles necessary and justified. The offerings in this literature should not be done any harm.

The publications are usually monthly. Stamp Collectors Fortnightly is every 14 days, which in regards to new issues can be recommended and also literature, which we like to read, such as the Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal and Austria Philatelist

The issue is usually 4-12 pages, the subscription usually no higher than ours, the division of articles usual and the rear normally consists of advertisements, in many cases exclusively those of the publishers. We find a more or less complete Notes and News, New issues, Editorial (Praises and miscellaneous) special lists of single countries, Answers to Correspondents (telephone), alerts about counterfeits, auction reports, miscellaneous and the obligatory club reports.

This order of subjects seems to be the norm. There are few publications that can compete with Le Timbre Poste, [Stanley Gibbons] Monthly Journal and the American Journal [of Philately] as far as quick information regarding new issues. The stamp illustrations are sharp and clean, which is to be expected from such renowned companies. The design and layout are very good, often embellished with splendid art prints (copies of stamps), pleasing to the mainly distinguished readership, reason enough to direct our eager attention to these publications and observe the contents of them.

The English and Americans have ample practice in incorporating the principle that good articles are published on foreign soil and should be incorporated in translation. Unfortunately this is not always done legally by asking the editorial staff, but sometimes through unauthorized reprints, from which some of the authors are not always protected, depending on the law of their country.

We have to grant foreign philatelic magazines preference - with slight modifications - that the tone of difference of opinion is made several octaves lower than that of the questions and disputed issues, which we have read in some magazines. Criticism and derogatory verdicts of our respected authors, which have had a successful career for many years, do not occur as severely. This has even been pointed out in our Philatelist by some one qualified to speak and rightfully so. But there is in our country a well known class of citizens, who claim more rights than they are willing to grant others.

(continuation follows)

Translator's note: The pages that follow comprise detailed critiques of a large number of foreign philatelic magazines, which it has not been thought necessary to translate.

END

[Victor] Suppantschitsch

Postage stamp exhibitions and philatelic literature

[Die briefmarkenausstellungen und die philatelistische literatur]

Der Philatelist, 15th January 1899, Volume 20, Issue 1, pp.10-12

Summary translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

July 2010

POSTAGE STAMP EXHIBITIONS AND PHILATELIC LITERATURE

Since the first large Postage Stamp Exhibition of the Vienna Philatelic Club was held in November 1881 - ignoring the exhibitions of individual stamp collections such as those of A. Moschkau in 1870 in Dresden, Paul Lietzow in Berlin in 1877, Arthur Maury in Paris in 1878, etc. - almost all other philatelic exhibitions have afforded a small spot for philatelic literature, because it was allowed to exhibit either single philatelic works or philatelic magazines or complete libraries. Of course the former was open to the author, editor or publisher only, while the latter was open to everyone. Stamp clubs often limited exhibitions to the active participation of their members, in which case of course only such works or magazines that were authored by members were shown. This was the case in 1882 by the International Philatelic Club of Dresden, which had among its members a whole group of authors.

Today I want to focus only on exhibitions of philatelic libraries. It was prompted by the news that the world exhibition of 1900 in Paris would also include a philatelic exhibition. Specialist libraries are seldom presented at stamp exhibitions, but curiously enough, this was not true of the first exhibitions. In 1881, A. Moschkau of the Vienna Philatelic Club brought his display, which was later donated to the Club, after the exhibition. Also, in 1884 at the exhibition of the Bavarian Philatelic Club of Munich was exhibited the library of the current editor of the Illustrierten Briefmarken-Journal, Theodor Hass, an interesting object itself.

I can only name three exhibitions very recently in which libraries or parts of them could be viewed and that would be in 1890 in London, where Dr. Diena displayed a large library; 1896 in The Haag, where Baron von Kinschott, an exceptional Dutch philatelist and philatelic magazine author displayed his books; and in 1898 in Turin, where once again Dr. Diena showed very old literature to the public.

Without a doubt, in an endeavour to promote the collection of larger libraries, and the newest exhibition in London in 1897 and in Turin in 1898 even offered exhibitors of libraries prizes for their display. That would be fine and dandy, but you have to fix the rules and regulations for exhibitions in such a fashion, that it is possible for the owners of specialist libraries to bring them to display, and to receive the prizes for the most worthy.

In that respect, the promoters of the last mentioned exhibitions have made mistakes and the reason for this article is so that similar mistakes by the committee of the exhibition for the planned 1900 World Exhibition in Paris will not happen, provided that a competition of special libraries will open, which I don't doubt.

It was a grave error in both The Haag and Turin, that it was demanded, that all exhibitors also move their library into the exhibition hall and demonstrate it to the public.

Such a demand may have applied in 1881 and - maybe - in 1884, but nowadays is no longer valid.

He who demands this now, shows that he either does not realize the size of a large philatelic library and philatelic literature or that he does not desire competition in this field. At an exhibition the most excellent should compete with the most complete. A large philatelic library nowadays fills 4-5 large library boxes and if it is arranged so that each book and each magazine is easily accessible, it could be more. Now, picture how much effort, danger and special costs are entailed in sending such a large library for example from Vienna to London or from Petersburg to Paris. Having finally arrived at the exhibition hall, in most cases they will not be unpacked because there are few people on earth, who can navigate in the labyrinth of a large philatelic library which contain works in about 14 languages. The result will be that the owners will have to travel with them, have to display them, then have to dismantle them again. Costs for that would be prohibitive, not to mention the rent of the hall and damage during transport, which cannot be avoided with such large volumes.

It may suffice that this shows that libraries cannot be brought to exhibitions in such a fashion, and there are other considerations.

Let's assume that several exhibitors, who want to send their libraries to an international exhibition - and all international exhibitions are large exhibitions - where will they find ample room? Let's take the case of the International Club in Dresden deciding to exhibit their large philatelic library and that, simultaneously, some owners of private libraries come to the same conclusion, how can they be arranged in the same exhibition hall? It will be an impossible feat. The libraries would command a larger hall than all other displayed objects, yes, they would absorb almost all space.

And now I ask myself, if it is necessary and even appropriate to parade the libraries in front of the public and jurors. I am positive that no one will answer the question with yes - rightfully so.

The value of the works does not lie in its covers but in the work itself. Therefore, it is not the purpose of a library to impress its onlooker by its external appearance. You have to look inside to be impressed by its contents. It should suffice that one can only judge its value, volume and completeness, when one knows what the work entails.

Endless rows of books, magazines, etc., are not exciting, their sight is rather monotonous and there is the danger that extensive displays of books can spoil an excellent exhibition and even destroy it.

Another missed direction by the committee of the World Exhibition of 1897 in London - incidentally the largest and most brilliant exhibition - was done because it limited philatelic, literary works to those published before 1880 and decided that only the first editions of works could be exhibited.

Promoters of an exhibit have the right to prescribe the rules for specialised exhibits (by volume and timeframe) but I believe that in an exhibit as large as the one in London in 1897, the display of a "General Library" should not have been excluded. There should have been a prize for the General Library. Nobody would be getting preferential treatment. If this kind of exhibitions of libraries would be accepted, there would be another advantage, that is that possibly all owners of larger libraries would have to establish a systematic catalogue, the value of which should not be underestimated, since I myself know owners of very large libraries, who unfortunately express an unparalleled indolence in that respect, so that they themselves sometimes do not know what they own and therefore simply devalue their own library.

In conclusion may I be allowed to make the remark, that the poor exhibition provisions of the London exhibition of 1897 were at fault so that in Group VIII, Part 3 "Collections of Philatelic Literature from before 1880" no exhibitors came forward.

END

Interessengemeinschaft Phil. Literatursammler – Rundschreiben
[No number (probably Issue 1), date (probably 1932) or other publication data is provided]

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2008

INTERESSENGEMEINSCHAFT PHIL. LITERATURSAMMLER
– RUNDSCHREIBEN

[No number (probably Issue 1), date (probably 1932) or other publication data is provided]

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.)

p.1

Extracts from the answers of the Members contributing to the discussion.

Michaelis, Schleswig, 8th September 1932

I too would welcome the publication of the Schütte General Index. However it will still be some time before the work is ready. If publication of the General Index becomes possible later, I would like to say now that it would have to appear in parts and not as instalments in the text of Phil. Literatursammler, since in that case it would have to be spread out over four volumes and there would be difficulties with subsequent editions. With publication in part, however, the whole thing could be combined into one (or more) volumes. The formation of a Society for those Interested in Philatelic Literature which might later develop into a Society of Literature Collectors, which came to a stop on the death of Carl Beck, would be very much welcomed by me. Such a group or society would also be in a position to strengthen the material side of the Phil. Literatursammler, so there would be no fear of Klink's idealism being one day overwhelmed by financial considerations, and we could keep it going for many years. - I would be very happy if your endeavours can give a new impetus to the work on the General Index.

Klink, Niebull, 8th September 1932

Obviously I shall cooperate as far as my situation allows. I think the formation of an interest group would be very valuable, but where shall we find the necessary members?

Preuss, Leipzig, 9th September 1932

I should like to say I greet your suggestion with joy. I am quite ready to support an interest group for philatelic literature collectors, and co-operate with it as far as possible. The Grüne Sammler-Welt is already read in many societies and, as I have found myself, in these societies the supplement Der Phil. Literatursammler is particularly well received. It would therefore be a good idea to follow the article by Körner Librarians at the Front (October issue) after a time by another one, To the Collector. I would like to discuss my proposal with Körner at our next meeting: perhaps he would also decide to produce such an article. In Literature on Literature Michaelis has a sentence: Will a major index to philatelic journals ever appear again? I have been compiling an index to all the German-language journals for some time. I give some examples of my entries in the appendix, and would be very happy to have the opinion of the other gentlemen as to whether such an index would be useful, and as to whether and how such an index could be completed. I drew my index up using the first letter of the title of the journal as the determining factor, i.e. Der Sammler-Sport is entered under Der and not under S, As Bungerz did in his Lexicon. Perhaps the gentlemen would give their opinions on this, and make proposals for given cases, so that we can have unity of treatment.

Klink, Niebull, 9th September 1932

As I have already written, an interest group is a good idea. I would always work for this as far as I was in a position to do so.

Klink, Niebull, 10th September 1932

Publication of the General Index in a magazine is unprofitable for both sides. Publication in parts like the Kohl Handbook is possible. I think a discussion would be best for the final decision. In any case I would always take part as far as I could, as I have often stated. I would be interested to know what the other gentlemen think.

Körner, Leipzig, 11th September 1932

As a zealous collector of literature and friend of everyone interested in literature, I have always taken my place with everyone as a friend and advisor. It strikes me as very right for you to start an interest group for collectors of philatelic literature, since this has been to me our circle of friends for a long time. I have also had a close friendship with Preuss for a long time, and our feelings are the warmest. We cannot do better than recruit the University Librarian Dr. Schubert to our group. So far as I remember, Schütte has exact knowledge of every forthcoming article in a journal. I wonder about this and always ask the questions: 1) Does anyone ask for this? and what does anyone ask? Thus my concern from the beginning is for the division of labour. I should be interested in suggestions from the other side.

Klink, Niebull, 15th September 1932

Publication of the index: There is a way of doing this, since the Kohl Handbook was issued in parts. Individual parts then naturally do not need to be very large, probably about 16 pages. Anything bigger runs the risk of making the part too expensive. A fairly low price can only promote the sale. I am thinking of one sheet per part, monthly (16 pages). Without knowing the work, which is definitely similar to a catalogue and thus difficult to set in type, I cannot give an exact price. With a good conscience we could ... manage and possibly decide on a lower price. In my opinion this would leave a good surplus for the author after deduction of the costs of advertising. These cannot indeed be small, if everything is to be done properly. This is only brief, so that you can think it over in the meantime.

Simson, Berlin, 16th September 1932

I am perfectly ready to support you in your endeavours, without however committing myself in any way. An interest group of the sort you hold before us however already exists in the readership of the Phil. Bücherwurm. I have a large postal and philatelic library, however I lend books and journals with reluctance and prefer not to do so. Many printed works which are not really rare may be very difficult to replace. I also own a number of unbound journals, which are also not suitable for loan.

Schütte, Magdeburg, 16th September 1932

I am captivated by everything that falls within the scope of literature. As far as I can follow today's proceedings, one or another person concerns himself with indexing a few journals, but unfortunately not extensively enough. I personally do not depart from the basic plan of my work, and am going on with my aim afterwards as before. It will still take some time to finish the work since I have only my own resources, co-workers have all given in after a short time. The interest group is congenial to me. As regards working to the agreed plan, I must first know what programme we are talking about. I am ready to exchange ideas and experience, and what I can do, I will do. I would also be very glad to see a reunion of all those interested, to which everyone can contribute his writings and indexes. Such a decision would have a great deal to clear up, arrange and develop into a clear programme. I would be glad to hear more about this from you.

Spohr, Paris, 16th September 1932

I am totally in favour of the foundation of the interest group and am willing to help in the work. I think however it would be better if collectors of literature could be brought in from all countries. Have you already thought of this extension?

Editor: A second, separately-paginated document provides responses to the above correspondents.

Notes on Written Answers Sent to Me

Letter from Michaelis

The general opinion is that contributions are only wanted for the publication of the General Index. There is no existing society for those interested in collecting philatelic literature, though one has often been suggested. This is also plain from the correspondence I have had with Messrs. Bosshart and Seifert. People who take the Bücherwurm simply read that magazine, and do not constitute a society in the strict meaning of the word. Michaelis is quite right, since the then existing society went out of existence on the death of Carl Beck (a good friend of mine). Earlier issues of the Bücherwurm used to refer to the Society, but this is no longer the case with the more recent ones. After Beck's death I contacted A. Bünzer, who has died meanwhile, with a view to carrying on both the Society and the magazine in conjunction. However, Bünzer was not able to give me any help about maintaining the Society and the magazine, so that the Society quickly died out. Obviously the members of "IG"* have the Grüne Sammler-Welt with its supplement Der Philatelistische Litteratursammler (The Philatelic Literature Collector), and are thus supported by Klink. The price of RM 2.00 or 0.50 per quarter is still affordable at the present time. Should we accept Der Philatelistische Litteratursammler as our Society organ?

* Translator's note: I take "IG" to mean Interessengemeinschaft Phil. Litteratursammler.

Letter from Preuss

I am very pleased to find that special attention has been paid to the literature supplement. We must hope to win new friends and subscribers so that the magazine will get the necessary support. Körner will certainly follow Preuss' suggestions, and will begin by letting us have a new article. We should not forget that the literature supplement always has to be filled, and only we ourselves can be of service to our hobby. It must be our task to support Preuss in his efforts as much as possible by supplying articles as far as we can, when he needs them. It is desirable to have the contents as full as possible. I ask the other gentlemen to give their attention to Preuss' proposal, and possibly make suggestions of their own. However we shall need to have a special discussion to work this out.

Letter from Körner

Körner is a sincere friend of philatelic literature and will certainly give us extensive support in our endeavours. Hence, we must try to meet his wishes as far as possible. Schütte's method of working is quite different from that of Körner. However, both methods are of great use to us and I would ask both Schütte and Körner to carry on in their existing methods of work. We shall naturally have to wait a while for Schütte's work. We already have the information from Körner, and we shall certainly make good use of it sooner or later, and it will be indispensable to us in certain cases already.

Letter from Klink

From both his letter of the 15th September and his earlier one, we know that Klink will work as selflessly as ever in the service of our task. He will help in particular in getting Schütte's work printed occasionally. As will appear, he will initiate a special discussion of our programme. We must express our appreciation to Klink for his diligence, and will zealously support his paper so as not to destroy this gentleman's pleasure in his work.

Letter from Simson

I should like to mention here that membership involves no obligations. Only voluntary contributions are wanted, and the obligation mentioned was merely to make only serious contributions to "IG". We are rarely asked to lend books to our members, since the first places to try are the large philatelic libraries, and if the desired material cannot be found there, we must appeal to the kindness of our members. As far as "IG" is concerned, I have already explained all this in detail earlier. There is no special society for philatelic literature collectors. So far there has never been a single unified body in this field, nor have the interests of literature collectors been supported. There is no existing society, as I have already explained. By and large though, I agree with what Simson says, as it can be seen from his remarks that he has thought it all out carefully and agrees that only people with a serious interest should be in our "IG". Only such people can supply scientific and accurate papers in future.

Letter from Schütte

I am especially grateful to Schütte for explaining the entry requirements and promising his help. We know already how successful Schütte's work is. He always puts everything into his work, and this is very welcome. Unfortunately he has lost all his collaborators, and for very good reasons, it is not possible for me to go on helping him. Hence I am all the more pleased that Schütte has not yet given up and I shall try to make my services available to him in other ways. We shall certainly shortly find ways and means of translating Schütte's ingenious thoughts into practice: in other words a way will be found to get his work into print and make the publication available. Certainly a good deal of time has passed, but as with all major works, Rome cannot be built in a day. We must first wait for the other gentlemen to make their personal contributions, for which I would be very grateful. I think however that our “IG” will make expensive journeys unnecessary, since “IG” can bring the individual contributors together for discussions. We expect to pay special attention to this in the near future and allow for it in our plans. Next I should like here to ask Schütte to give us more detailed information from time to time about the progress of the General Index, since we are all very interested in this work.

Letter from Spohr

It is very welcome to find that Spohr, who lives abroad, has promised to take part in our “IG”. We shall remain alert to his opinions, although I do not think we can use them right away. We must first try to build up our group in Germany, and then extend our interests abroad when we have been successful in that. It will certainly do us no harm. I believe Spohr can still do us much service in this respect, particularly by representing our interests in France. I am very grateful to Spohr for further stimulating suggestions.

END

[Interessengemeinschaft Philatelistischer Literatursammler] –
Rundschreiben
No date (probably 1932), Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Walter C. Bauer for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2008

[INTERESSENGEMEINSCHAFT PHIL. LITERATURSAMMLER]
- RUNDSCHREIBEN

No date (probably 1932), Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.)

p.1

To the Gentlemen:

Klink, Niebüll
Körner, Leipzig
Michaelis, Schleswig

Preuss, Leipzig
Dr. Schubert, Leipzig
Schütte, Magdeburg

Simson, Berlin
Spohr, Paris

Gentlemen, Dear Literature Friends,

My first circular letter reached a small number of literary friends in order to receive their opinion about the creation of a Common Interest Organization of Philatelic Literature Collectors' (Interessengemeinschaft Philatelistischer Literatursammler). I am happy to report that all of the Gentlemen expressed their satisfaction about the potential formation of such an organization. They also declared their willingness to support such efforts in various ways and forms.

This is why I now approach an expanded circle of philatelic literature collectors and would like to summarize again briefly the underlying considerations.

Numerous questions related to the furthering of the collection of philatelic literature will be discussed together by serious students of this endeavor. This presupposes the joint effort of those friends who are particularly interest in this specialty area of our hobby (philately).

Through exchange of ideas and literature the members commit themselves, to support and further philatelic literature collecting interests. There are no dues! Among other matters, the following are contemplated:

Mutual exchange of philatelic literature on a loan basis to for study purposes - placement of duplicate issues – an information service regarding special areas, cooperative efforts on bibliographical abstracts and articles.

Much of the above was already expressed in my original circular letter. My current letter has the goal of approaching additional gentlemen to receive their reaction regarding the Common Interest Organization (IG). A response in the near future will be sincerely appreciated.

I ask that they kindly let me know whether or not they are willing to join the IG and to express their willingness to actively participate in its work, thereby furthering this special area of collecting interest. This will accord it the proper dignity, which is due but can be achieved only through continuous collaboration.

As always, I am with best regards, your devoted

C. Schmittdiel

END

Gesellschaft Philatelistischer Literaturfreunde – Rundschreiben
no date (probably 1932), Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2000

GESELLSCHAFT PHILATELISTISCHER LITERATURFREUNDE –
RUNDSCHREIBEN

no date (probably 1932), Issue 3

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

Society for promoting the knowledge and collection of philatelic literature
Compilation of the Bibliography of German-Language Philatelic Literature

Dear Member,

Finally, after long consideration and the most varied discussions, our Society has finally managed to make a new start. Since the beginning of this year our previous Society magazine has been discontinued by the publisher because of its high production costs, we have spared no effort to find a new field of activity for our Society. Unfortunately we must first bury the idea that an independent Society journal will appear again. However, in the foreseeable future we shall actively strive to publish, since we have been assured of the friendly support of certain publishers.

The most important result of our various deliberations is, however, as follows: For many years numerous philatelists, especially special collectors, lovers of literature and Society librarians have wanted a Bibliography of the German-Language Philatelic Literature and with our help this will come into being. We attach a specimen page of the Bibliography, not necessarily in its final form. The first task is to provide a general index to all of the German-Language philatelic periodical literature. (General Index).

The well-known firm of Robert Noske of Borna has undertaken to produce this major reference work: with adequate help, the work should take about 4 years. Printing of the work is completely provided for.

This now presents our Society with a new and advantageous field of activity. The work will appear in parts, and as a unique philatelic society we can offer our members this work at a special price - with a 30% reduction. The Committee hopes that in this way the failure of our previous Society journal will be compensated for. Members who have already paid their dues for this Society year will be credited with the sum of RM 1.50. For the next Society year, every subscribing member who pays the sum of RM 3.00 promptly will be credited with a sum of RM 1.50. In this way the Committee can ensure not only the continuation of the Society and the payment of the necessary expenses, but the members will get the instalments at the reduced price.

Our current task is to find from our circle of members serious workers and specialists, patrons and well-wishers for work on the Bibliography, since only in this way can we reward the generous contribution of the Robert Noske firm, who have already incurred considerable printing costs. Zealous and comprehensive work is absolutely necessary from us if this extensive work is to be produced.

We ask every member who seriously wants to help with our work on the Bibliography to get in touch with us using the attached form. Once we have these, we will let our helpers have the guidelines for the work. The relevant periodical literature will be supplied to anyone not having his own subscription. Postage will be paid in both directions. Other costs will also be met. The supplies needed will also be provided cost-free. For every 4,000 index cards registered (about 9 volumes) each worker will get one instalment cost-free, so that it will be much easier for him to acquire the work.

Preliminary work is in hand. Helpful suggestions are always wanted. Circulars will be sent out regularly to all collaborators to keep them in touch with the current state of the work.

We are taking the liberty of sending a reminder card to those members who have not paid their subscription for this year, and ask them to support our efforts by letting us have the small sum of RM 3.00 as soon as possible.

In conclusion, we ask all our member to remain faithful to our Society and make a small sacrifice to bring its long-planned and important work to a conclusion for the benefit of philatelic literature and philately as a whole.

For the Committee

C. Schmittdiel

[Enclosures]

1. Sample page from the bibliography
2. Membership form
3. Free envelope

End of Newsletter

Sample [Page]

- x Aerophilatelistische Tagesfragen (“AT”)
Airmail journal devoted entirely to aerophilately.
Publisher: Adolf Dewitz, Constance.
I. 1932 No 1 (no date)

- : Allgemeine Briefmarken-Zeitung
 Publisher: Bachmeier, Munich.
 I. No 1 15.3.1912
- ? Briefmarken und Ganzsachen
 Review covering all branches of philately.
 Publisher: Rost & Gerber, Oberneusulza.
 I. 1920 No 1
- ?x Der Sammlerfreund
 Monthly magazine for collectors of stamps and postcards. (Journal for lovers of painting and photography, shorthand and correspondence.) Continuation of Die Ansichtspostkarte.
 Publisher: Fritz Hergott, Oranienburg.
 I. 1920, May issue (No issue number)
- ?x Der Stammgast
A small publication for stamp collectors and anyone who wants to become one.
 Publisher: F. W. Anhalt, 1710 Belmont Avenue, Chicago, Ill. Free.
 I No 1, January 1926
- Der Vereinsbote
 See Philatelistische Jugendschrift.
- x Deutsches Sammler-Echo
 Publisher: Deutscher Sammler-Bund (Address: Ernst F. Will, Am Kirchberg 24, Eschersheim, Frankfurt-am-Main).
- § Mitteilungen of the Bamberg section of the Sammlerbund Union.
- x Sächsisches Briefmarken-Offertenblatt
 Separate supplement to the Sächsischen Briefmarkenzeitung, q.v.
- :v Vereinsbörse der Internationalen Vereinigung von Ganzsachensammlern zu Leipzig
 Supplement to Mitteldeutschen Philatelistenzeitung.
 Should appear monthly, actually appears only as needed.
 I 1892 II III N^o. 24-31 IV N^{os}. 32-37: 1.1. – 1.9.96
 V N^{os}. 38-43: 1.1. – 1.11.97 VI N^{os}. 44-50: 1.1. – 1.12.98
 VII N^{os}. 51-52: 1.3. – 10.12.99

Symbols

- 5 Title
 6 Subtitle
 7 H: Publisher
 8 I... II.. Volume, number and date.

Abbreviations

(These have been chosen by me, as they are available on my typewriter, Preuss used different symbols in the original. Schmittdiel)

!	Ceased
§	Nothing else known
?	Is still appearing ?
v	Reproduction permitted ?
o	I have seen one issue
x	I own one issue

Alphabetical Arrangement

By the first letter of title.

Allgemeine Briefmarken-Zeitung
Briefmarkenverkehr
Concordia -Post
Das Basler Täubchen
Der Bazar
Deutsch-amerikanische Bfm. Ztg.
Deutsch-oesterreichische Bfm. Ztg.
Deutsche Zeitung f. Bfm. Kunde.
Deutscher Philatelist
Deutsches Sammler-Echo
Die Post
Fortuna
Grüne Sammler-Welt
Heitmanns Ratgeber
etc.

Note: My index also gives the sources from which I obtained the titles etc.

P. Preuss

END

C. Schmittdiel

Der Philatelistische Literatursammler

Der Philatelistische Literatursammler, June 1932, n.pp. [2pp.]

[Prospectus for the forthcoming publication, including a Sample Sheet, inviting people to advertise in it and subscribe to it.]

Translation of the Notice only.

Translation produced by C. A. Tuteur for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2000

DER PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATURSAMMLER

[The Philatelic Literature Collector]

Supplement to the Grüne Sammler-Welt [Green Collectors World], Entertainment, Communication and Offering Sheet for Stamp Collectors, Dealers and Clubs

Editor: C. Schmittdiel, Hamburg 19, Tornquiststrasse 45. - Please send review copies to this address.

Hamburg, June 1932

Dear Friend of Literature!

The publishing house Grüne Sammler-Welt of Niebüll has decided to augment its journal with an integral supplement:

Der Philatelistische Literatursammler

The purpose of this new endeavour is in consideration of the wishes of the many literature collectors. New publications of philatelic literature will be discussed in this Supplement, furthermore, the content of trading periodicals and catalogues will be reported. In short, everything of interest to the literature collector will be dealt with!

This arrangement is desired by my many friends of literature, as is also the possibility of the publication of trading advertisements (duplicates and want lists). This last one will be especially offered in this new supplement.

To entice the literature collectors to avail themselves of this arrangement, the publisher grants the publication of an unrepeatable free trading advertisement of 5 double lines. Each additional double line will be RM 0.30.

The complete exploitation of such an advertisement can be obtained by utilizing the abbreviations mentioned overleaf [in the Sample Sheet]. This can be seen from the samples shown.

From this you can ascertain that the publisher makes the publication of trading advertisements as advantageous as possible. Kindly use this opportunity and furnish your trading wishes at the latest by June 15th, this year, to the editor. This way, you can augment your library steadily at a small cost.

The Editor

Please turn!

Translator's Note: A Sample page is attached which has not been translated.

END

General Table of Contents of the “Philotelic Echo” from its First Publication to December 1968 (Issues 1 - 45)

Philatelic Society of Piraeus, Piraeus, Greece, n.d. [ca. 1969], 12pp.

Translation of the introductory text only, p.1

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2000

GENERAL TABLE OF CONTENTS OF THE “PHILOTELIC ECHO”
FROM ITS FIRST PUBLICATION TO DECEMBER 1968
(ISSUES 1 - 45)

Instructions for using the Table of Contents

1. This table includes all the material published in the magazine Philotelic Echo published by the Philotelic Society of Piraeus, from its first publication (December 1964) to the end of December 1968. During this period numbers 1 to 45 were issued, comprising a volume of 646 pages, excluding the covers. For the pictures included in the text, 337 typographic plates were used.
2. The listing of the material in the present Table of Contents was done according to subject matter. Therefore, the same article might appear more than once.
3. The Table of Contents is divided into the following 18 chapters:
 - 1) Philatelic Literature - Studies - Observations
 - 2) Philately and Nation
 - 3) News - Novelties - Anecdotes
 - 4) Letters to the Editor
 - 5) Shows and Philatelic News
 - 6) Philatelic Organizations
 - 7) Business - Stamp Exchange - Auctions – Statistics
 - 8) New Issues
 - 9) First Day Issues
 - 10) Topical Collections
 - 11) Olympic- Athletic Topics
 - 12) Aero-Philately
 - 13) Souvenir Sheets
 - 14) Cancellations
 - 15) Fake Stamps
 - 16) Coins and Paper Money
 - 17) Seals and Vignettes
 - 18) Philatelic Press (Magazines- Monographs- Stamp Catalogues)

4. The titles of the articles have been included exactly as published. However, when it is not possible to discern the essence of the article by the title, a small abstract is included within parentheses. The inclusion of each article in each chapter is in chronological order of publication except for a few necessary exceptions.
5. The numbers that follow the titles (as well as the author's name) of each article show: the magazine's whole number, followed by the page within the issue (e.g. 2/4 means: Issue N°2, page 4, 44-45/125 means Issue N°44/45, page 125).

END

Max Ton

Who is the philatelist? Biographical almanac

[Wer ist der philatelist? Biographischer almanach]

Deutsche Zeitung für Briefmarkenkunde, December 1935, Volume 11, Issue 12, p.254

Translation of the introductory text only

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2011

WHO IS THE PHILATELIST?

BIOGRAPHICAL ALMANAC

Philatelic contemporaries of the 19th and 20th centuries (Philaton)

Written and edited by Max Ton

In the present issue we are beginning with the printing of our announced reference work, Philaton. In this work one will find short biographical sketches of all those philatelists who have in any way appeared or become known since 1863. In addition to stamp collectors and dealers, one will find in Philaton the following: curators of stamps, stamp expertisers, designers and artists who have worked on stamps, those who have repaired or counterfeited stamps, philatelic writers and publishers, as well as collectors of philatelic literature.

We will begin our short biographies in the manner in which we spoke of them before. However, in order to maintain the interest of our readers, we will formulate the individual entries in a variety of ways. Since we have only limited space at our disposal, some of the letters* will appear less often, some more often. That should cause no problems.

In the interest of the entire philatelic world, both domestic and international, we are asking again for lively participation and support from both collector and dealer circles, above all from readers of the DBZ.

 Translator's note: He means "letters" as in the first letter of the family name of the person.

Editor's Note

For the sake of completion, although they have no text in need of translation, I give below the details of all of the articles in this series including the above:

Deutsche Zeitung für Briefmarkenkunde:

December 1935, Volume 11, Issue 12, p.254

January 1936, Volume 12, Issue 1, p.42

February 1936, Volume 12, Issue 2, pp.76-77

Aarts

Alves

Anschütz

Altwig

Anschütz

Arp

March 1936, Volume 12, Issue 3, p.112	Arx	Ayala
April 1936, Volume 12, Issue 4, p.148	Bach	Beck
June 1936, Volume 12, Issue 6, p.236	Becker	Bormann
September 1936, Volume 12, Issue 9, p.341	Bosshard	Bungerz
November 1936, Volume 12, Issue 11, p.452	Bütow	Crawford
April 1937, Volume 13, Issue 4, p.146	Dassler	Dauth
May 1937, Volume 13, Issue 5, p.196	Denner	Donat
June 1937, Volume 13, Issue 6, p.226	Donath	Dulac
July 1936, Volume 13, Issue 7, p.268	Dünnebeil	Ewald
September 1937, Volume 13, Issue 9, p.340	Fabbri	Figuera
October 1937, Volume 13, Issue 10, p.396	Ferrari	Fleischer
December 1937, Volume 13, Issue 12, pp.491-492	Fleischer	Frey
January 1938, Volume 14, Issue 1, p.16	Freyse	Friedl
June 1938, Volume 14, Issue 6, p.260	Friedl	Fuch
September 1938, Volume 14, Issue 9, p.428	Fuchs	Ghozlan

Editor's note: The two follow-on volumes, 14 (remainder) and 15 were kindly checked for additional biographies for me by Robert Binner, Leader of the PhilatelistischeBibliothek, Munich, but none were found.

END

Philatelistische Literatur-Sammler
November 1907, Volume 1, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2008

PHILATELISTISCHE LITERATUR-SAMMLER

November 1907, Volume 1, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.)

pp.1-2

Der Philatelistische Literatur-Sammler
Published by Dr. Rommel, Leipzig 28, Inselstr. 9
Nr. 6 20 November 1907 Year 1

With this number I am asking all philatelic literature collectors worldwide to give me information and a list of all markable literature. For trade purposes I offer the numbers 2 to 5 of my journal. I will publish a list of duplicates and journals missing.

The mailing of my journal is handling and postage free. For regular mailings I am asking 1.50 marks per year. The publishing of my journal is informal, but at least yearly ????. The buyer pays shipping. In an exchange I send postage free against postage free.

I am looking for a regular exchange with publishers of philatelic newspapers. I offer my services ??? of all philatelic news papers on the usual conditions.

WARNING

Jacques Pare, Paris, 35 des Matyres, caused losses of 400 newspaper numbers and was sentenced to 9 months jail for embezzlement of 5,000 francs to the disadvantage of Messers Th. Lamai (?), Paris, Avenue de Opera Nr. 16.

PUBLIC REQUEST

Once more I am requesting Rev. R.R. Thiele in ???, Vienna, and Hermann Burkhardt in Zurich III, to pay their obligations.

Publisher, printing and responsible editor Dr. Rommel, Leipzig

My Great Catalogue of the Philatelic Newspaper Literature
Of the Whole World
Until end of 1906

... it is almost finished. Regardless of all applied efforts, I am still missing some details. Therefore I am now appealing to the general public with the fervent plea to give me every possible information and I am including a list of questions.

Opportunity Offer

Will offer the following newspapers in complete annual printings for the cheapest prices: Postage and freight have to be handled separately. Persons unknown to me and foreigners have to pay in advance, since I have had some unfortunate experiences.

END

G. Tag
All kinds of birds on bookplates
[Allerlei Vögel auf exlibris]
Sammler Express, 1959, Volume 13, Issue 11, p.224

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2010

ALL KINDS OF BIRDS ON BOOKPLATES

The beautiful Volker Bräuer bookplate has been etched in a masterly fashion by Eduard Winkler. Besides the actual bookplate in the middle field, which is the part glued into books, the artist opted for a few *Remarques. Those small drawings seen here at the upper and lower frame were originally used to test the acid on the copper plate. Remarque-prints can no longer be produced once the plate has been cut and are therefore a “rarity”. On the original printing (Graf-Presse, Munich), the Remarques were done in a second colour (size: 65 x 135mm).

We thank graphic artist Richard Rother in Kitzingen am Main for the sonorously composed bookplate of Rudolf Schwartz with its violin and the joyous, singing bird chorus (original woodcut). There are a few beautiful plates with a bird motif. We selected the theme, because of the new DDR [German Democratic Republic] stamp being issued with the bird motif. A modern bookplate comes to us from the neighbouring CSR [Czech Socialist Republic] with a dual coloured wood cut by Richard Lander of Prague (1949).

G. Tag
Berlin

 Translator's Note: A Remarque is a small, personalized drawing or symbol that an artist adds (generally near their signature) on a print. The presence of a Remarque increases the print's value. Originally, they were remarks that identified the various stages a printing plate went through whilst in the process of being finalized.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.[1-2]

Libraries.

J. A. Bosshard, Meiningen i. Th.

In the philatelic press we read the news that the libraries of the late Karl Beck and Alexander Bungerz have been bought using the surplus from IPOSTA and given to the Prussian State Library. In addition, we learn that the Philatelic Club added its treasures, so that we in Germany now have one of the largest philatelic libraries in one place. Let us hope that a catalogue is produced, which the collector can use. Vogel, the printing house in Pössneck has purchased the well-known library of Hugo Krötzsch and presented it to the German Library in Leipzig, but unfortunately this is only a reading-library, which means you have to study books on the premises and cannot take them home, or have them mailed to you. That is definitely a disadvantage. There is also a catalogue of this section published, but is only marginally useful, because there are no subjects, such as cancellations, postal history, countries, only the authors are alphabetized. That is not of any use because collectors seldom know all of the publications about special subjects and will have to study the whole book in order to extract the book titles. A good example in that respect is the catalogue of the German Philatelic Club of Gössnitz, in which all books and pamphlets are categorized by country and you have the chance to find everything written pertaining to one country. The same goes for the philatelic index of the Harris company of London, although a nasty holdup has occurred.

Most clubs have libraries - but don't ask what kind and most of all, don't be too nosy and ask for it frequently. It is unbelievable how little is being read, although the exception proves the rule. I can't believe that the caretaker of the club's library will ever encounter an embarrassing situation of becoming impatient, other than with books not being returned. The large associations like the Intern. Phil.-Verein, Deutscher Phil.-Verband, Germania-Ring, will have their own libraries and a catalogue. The older the association and the more involved its librarian, the more extensive and valuable its library. There are some real treasures there! Just to mention Volume 1 of the Intern. Briefm.-Journal of the Senf Bros. of 1874. Then the first volumes of the Deutschen Briefmarken-Zeitung of Hugo Kröttsch and most recently the Berichte of Albert Friedemann. Those are just a few magazines. You barely see the small articles by Glasewald about the cancellations of Baden or his first book about Thurn und Taxis stamps; not to mention his book about the stamps of Greece, which actually survived 12 editions! Such things are sought after and fetch a price.

The Bund Deutscher Philatelisten-Verbände has its own library, but it is out-of-date. Unfortunately, everything is missing after 1912. However, the older publications are well represented. When many books are unbound and magazines are stored in folders, you can guess, that there is no money! That is the crux of the philatelic libraries - not enough money available.

In foreign countries, it is the libraries of the Collector's Club in New York and the Royal Philatelic Society of London that have to be mentioned. The Americans have taken advantage of the inflation and the dire economic situation in Europe and bought everything that was of any value. In England it was the library of the Earl of Crawford which was donated to the British Museum and about which Bacon published an extensive catalogue, which caused a stir. In 1924 the Harmer company in London auctioned off the Clark library and published for it a special catalogue, which contained 31 pages and 553 lots. The library of Alfred Smith, which was dispersed in 1916-1918 in England was also large.

The most significant private library in my estimation is that owned by Mr. Schütte of Magdeburg. A very carefully prepared catalogue exists on typewritten pages. The library of Dr. König of Kiel, has been chopped up in parts, unfortunately, since it would have been an enrichment for the country's library, if it had been left intact. Dr. Rommel donated his possessions to the Prussian State Library, but no catalogue has been published since 1914. The biggest private library was owned by Viktor Suppantshitsch in Graz, which was transferred to the Collector's Club in New York in 1927. In Italy, the old master Dr. Emilio Diena owned the most important technical library.

Of course there are many collectors, who own a lot of books, but most of them cover only special fields. But rarities of the previous century are hardly or not at all in circulation anymore. Another reason is that today few people are general collectors and therefore have no universal interest in philately, which goes parallel with few people having a universal philatelic knowledge, like for example Geheimrat Kalckhoff, Hugo Kröttsch, etc. The old school is dying off.

pp.[2-4]

New publications on the book market 1930.

p.[4]

Wants of newly-published literature.

Article overview.

END

Something about Philatelic Libraries
[Något om filatelistiska bibliotek]
Filatelistiska Meddelanden, January 1921, Volume 3, Issue 1, pp.8-9

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

SOMETHING ABOUT PHILATELIC LIBRARIES

(Translated from the Deutschösterreichische Briefmarken Zeitung by K. G. F.)

Lately, interest in philatelic literature in general has been on the increase. This is already evident from the large number of newly-published books such as, for instance, the recent Internationales Postwertzeichen-Sammler-Adressbuch published by Paula Schmoll of Vienna that shortly after its issuance disappeared from the market.*¹

*¹ Hardly any harm done!

Another example is that a large number of trade journals presently exist (in the German language there are at least two dozen). This richness of literature is quite encouraging, because each collector who is seriously working with his "treasures" especially during this time when one publication after another sees the daylight regardless of need, it is well that he familiarizes himself with the work of other researchers and experts. Every science as well as sport requires a certain study plan, but to date there are no schools or professions associated with philately, the only way is to research using the appropriate trade literature.

Some time ago I was visited by a gentleman who was totally ignorant of anything concerning stamp collecting and for whom the word "philately" only meant some childish activity. However, after a short period he had reversed his previous immature comprehension and several times openly expressed wonder about our essence and meaning. But his change of mind was not due to the fact that I had introduced my stamp collection to him, this had not the least impressed him. Instead, it was the Earl of Crawford's library catalogue that had gotten my visitor to change his thoughts.

To those, who like yours truly have had the opportunity to spend a few days in one of the largest German philatelic libraries, that of Carl Beck in Berlin, and had the good fortune to listen to the owner's commentary, the path that the development of philatelic literature has taken during its brief period of existence is very surprising. Certainly no other field of human knowledge and research can be found after such a relatively short time - the first philatelic printed matter appearing on earth was known to have been issued on the 17th September, 1861. How much work, toil, cost, and study was involved in putting together such a library can only be appreciated by the person who has tried to collect older philatelic magazines, periodicals, and books, year after year and issue after issue. Presently, it is easier to obtain the old German set of stamps if the needed capital is available than try to acquire complete yearly issues of the ten largest stamp magazines.

As with many magazines, one must first try to write and research how many issues were actually published, if records were kept of the publications, etc. Although, one knows for sure that a certain issue of a certain magazine had been published in some quantity, hitherto not even one issue has been obtainable. Such a situation is often very difficult to explain. The only publication that provides any explanation and/or information to a literature collector about the many questions he may have about this or that is the English Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society, London. When it comes to typographic appearance this magazine is top notch. There are none like it in the international philatelic literature.*²

*² Regrettably this outstanding periodical has appeared only sporadically in recent years.

The society has written about preservation of philatelic literature, spreading its knowledge and upholding a high standard, seeking to build on these qualities in a pleasant way. The most outstanding features of this magazine are the bibliographies of different collector material, the descriptions of old classical work in our literature accompanied by beautiful art plates, descriptions of newly published and existing major literary works.

We in Germany and Austria can really be grateful that private societies have for decades concentrated their efforts on establishing philatelic libraries. One can appreciate the large libraries that the societies have in Dresden, Berlin, Frankfurt am Main, Hamburg, Vienna, Graz, etc. Another question however, is whether every collector has given the philatelic literature the kind of appreciation and support that is due to it and that it deserves? The answer, in my opinion, is a definite NO. Many consider it to be boring, they collect only for the pleasure of it, they are not interested, and so it goes. One hears comments and excuses like that. Such talk often comes even from those who think they are very smart and insightful and think they know everything and are not in need of learning anything more, as well as those who have money for other things but not trade literature.

It seems unbelievable but it is true. An example of how short sighted such behaviour can be has recently come to light. A collector had assembled a special Heligoland collection and over many years spent several thousand (Swedish) Kronas on it. However, circumstances forced the gentleman to sell his collection, but alas, a large part of the collection consisted of forgeries, reprints, after prints, bogus marks, etc. that he had unwittingly purchased believing them to be genuine. Had this collector been in the least mindful of the philatelic literature, had he read the works of Moens, Fränkel, Pirl, Wulbern, etc., he could have avoided this loss.

What befell this man can happen any day with the sale of another collection. Therefore, we urge every collector to pay at least some attention to philatelic literature. The money invested in the literature is not wasted, but amounts to inexpensive insurance for a much loved pursuit.

END

Dr. Schroeder

The demise of the F.I.P.P.: Philately is becoming superficial
[Das ende der F.I.P.P.: Zunehmende verflachung der philatelie]
Die Lupe, September 1948, Volume 3, Whole number 29/30, p.185

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

THE DEMISE OF THE F.I.P.P.:

PHILATELY IS BECOMING SUPERFICIAL

We are extremely sorry to learn from the August number of the Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung that the F.I.P.P. (Fédération Internationale de la Presse Philatélique) has ceased to exist as of the 15th June this year.

One scarcely has any choice but to see this as philately becoming increasingly superficial, otherwise the life's work of a philatelist of such a capacity as Dr. G. Tedeschi, could not be destroyed without any more ado or fuss. One must bear in mind that we Germans have lost a seat and voice in the F.I.P.P. and it therefore does not become us to appeal to the - hopefully - still numerous friends of philatelic literature to reverse this step through mutual actions. We have to trust that to others, but fervently hope that the last word has not been spoken in that affair. Dr. Tedeschi and his trusted helper F. Monney are still alive and we can read between the lines of the article published by the Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung that relinquishing his life's work has caused him great pain. We commiserate with him because the gap left by the F.I.P.P.'s end cannot be put right again for the whole of philately.

A short retrospective view of the work of the F.I.P.P. will explain this: F.I.P.P. was founded in 1927 by Dr. Tedeschi and had organised numerous international conventions. The first international exhibition of philatelic literature and media in 1935 in Brussels was its highpoint. They published the Handbuch der Philatelistischen Presse and the Bibliographischen Berichte der Philatelistischen Welpresse. On top of that they published monthly reports with substantial excerpts of philatelic publications, supplied its members with an illustrated list of all new publications and warned the editorial staff of all associated magazines about risky advertisers.

After the congress of the F.I.P.P. in Prague in the year 1938, the F.I.P.P. had to cease publication temporarily, owing to the events of that year, but restarted it in 1945 immediately after the end of the war. However, interest in philatelic literature had fundamentally changed by then, so that the founders had to decide with a heavy heart to close.

We certainly hope that this decision is not final and that the F.I.P.P. will soon re-emerge and its operation will benefit mankind and worldwide philately.

Dr. Schroeder

END

Special offers of literature at auctions garner response!
[Literatur-angebote bei auktionen finden resonanz!]
Philatelic, September 2009, Volume 61, Whole number 387, p.8

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

SPECIAL OFFERS OF LITERATURE AT AUCTIONS

GARNER RESPONSE

More than 70% of the literature offered at the 320th Schwanke special auction was sold - a more than surprising result. The result shows that a very knowledgeable audience purposefully searched and bought literature confirmed Sabine Schwanke afterwards, describing the outcome of it as all in all extremely positive.

The auction house of Heinrich Köhler offers the lovers of philatelic literature in its September auction a well rounded range, containing two large submissions, which are divided into approximately 110 items - mostly collected lots. Compared with the Schwanke auction, which contained almost 1,200 single items, this sounds like only a few. But he who adds the items up, arrives at almost the same number as in the Schwanke auction. The main offering dates from before 1945, and many of the more than 500 monographs, catalogues and handbooks come from the former library of the Senf Brothers. The condition - as is usual for such working libraries surviving for almost a century - rather varies. The other part consists of literature dating after 1945, and contains a total of 470 items bundled into lots, amongst them many rarities. A small offer of Atlases rounds this sale off.

END

Dr. Erhard Mörschel
Catalogue of the Philatelic Library of the Vereins für Briefmarkenkunde
Marburg/Lahn 1892 e.V.
[Katalog der Philatelistischen Bibliothek des Vereins für Briefmarkenkunde
Marburg/Lahn 1892 e.V.]
Vereins für Briefmarkenkunde Marburg/Lahn 1892., Marburg, Germany, 1993, paginated in sections

Translation of the Foreword only, [p.1]

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

CATALOGUE OF THE PHILATELIC LIBRARY OF THE VEREINS FÜR BRIEFMARKENKUNDE MARBURG/LAHN 1892 e.V.

FOREWORD

It has been several years since our club librarian, W. Maar, offered us his beautiful basement in which to store our neatly ordered library, for which we are thankful. We now can offer a partial list of our library after substantial cataloguing work. Our wish is that collectors use the library intensively. The books are very varied and offer many ideas for classic as well as modern collecting fields. We don't intend to compete with the large philatelic libraries in Munich, Hamburg and Frankfurt, but want to offer our members here in our town, standard literature which goes beyond the usual catalogues.

Our library was built up in its main parts after the second world war. The foundation of its valuable philatelic magazines comes from the donations of our deceased member Emil Sipmann (Marburg, Steinweg) and was rescued from becoming waste paper because of our former member Ernst's attentiveness. Many books and magazines were donated by our members. A hearty Thank You goes out to them. Alongside these donations, our club is trying - within its financial means - to keep the library up-to-date and to complete it through the purchase of old classic works of philately.

The books of the library have been categorized with the help of the Literature Administration VCH Biblio (VCH. Wemheim) so that a quick literature search can be made by subject, author or entry number. The exhibition catalogues in our field are also accessible in this fashion.

We hope to present an additional library list next year and we are asking members to donate magazines and literature no longer needed.

END

V. Suppantschitsch

Attempt at a bibliography of European foreign-language periodical literature to the end of 1891

[*Versuch einer bibliographie der fremdsprachigen philatelistischen zeitungsliteratur
Europa's bis ende 1891*]

Die Postwertzeichen-Kunde, February 1893, Volume 4, Issue 2, pp.15-17;
March, Issue 3, pp.32-35; April, Issue 4, pp.56-59; July, Issue 7, pp.103-105;
September, Issue 9, pp.137-139; October, Issue 10, pp.151-153;
November, Issue 11, pp.161-164 & December, Issue 12, pp.177-179

(Translation of the introductory text, pp.15-35 & 56-57 and end note, p.179)

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2012

ATTEMPT AT A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF EUROPEAN FOREIGN-LANGUAGE PERIODICAL LITERATURE
TO THE END OF 1891

by Oberlandesgerichtsrat V. Suppantschitsch of Graz.

It would be like "carrying coals to Newcastle" if I would try to prove that literature has had a definitive influence on the development of philately.

Yet, the successful assertion could be proved that without literature, collecting and possibly large collections would have been possible - but not philately as I understand it.

Even in olden times, when the philatelic literature could not even be talked about, large collections have existed, that is that people even then had gathered large accumulations of postage stamps from all kinds of nations and arranged them by countries, glued them on pages or in copy books beautifully arranged in rows.

But if they were asked about their treasures, when a stamp was issued, whether it was still valid or not, where and by what production method it was printed and what was its reason for issue, etc., you received only meagre, usually unreliable, inaccurate and often - no explanation.

If two such large collectors compared their collections, each of them would notice unfamiliar stamps and neither would have a clue, whether others that they didn't have would be in existence from certain countries.

You only knew your own or maybe a nearby country's stamps. As a rule the knowledge of a collector was very limited.

And it is because of that, that the systematic ordering of stamps was an impossibility. All those inscriptions in our recently printed albums, which make it easy for the layman and even the collector, were missing.

The character of a stamp, the series of single issues, first dates, etc., could not be gathered from such a collection. It was and remained a dead picture, which had no life.

When the first literary aids, albums, catalogues and periodicals appeared, the situation changed all at once.

You learned which countries issued postage stamps, what had been issued, what reason one, what category the other was issued for and which resulted from one and the same department's orders, etc.

Everyone hurried up to change their collections. Everyone hurried to acquire the newly issued album and transferred their stamps into it.

Only then people saw how much existed, what one did not own, how many gaps needed to be filled. There was a push, a hurry, and questions, of what was missing in the albums and everyone observed the other one, whether and how much more they possessed.

Only then a measuring device was given, to estimate the value of a collection and to compare it with another.

Literature was the mediating ribbon, which tied all collectors together and through which each collector recognized to what degree the completion of his collection had progressed.

Only now the large collector thoroughly enjoyed having other expert buddies glance into their collection, because only now did he know, they would appreciate his treasures.

Only at the moment when through literature, the knowledge of postage stamps was a common property of all collectors, can you talk about postage stamps tidings, can you talk about philately. What effect of literature! And yet we have only begun.

Now let's look at today's state of the postage stamp and you will be able to gauge, what literature has achieved.

Don't tell me that the great collectors have caused this. Not even the researchers would have been able to accomplish it, if they had not also been authors and had not published the results of their research.

The publication of their research, whereby additions, corrections and refutations were caused, where opinions were explained and the products of this refining process were brought before the whole collectors' world, for this we are thankful and for the level of today's studies.

That this is so is shown best by the big demand for philatelic literature, shown in the enormous upswing that it has caused. Nevertheless, there are still collectors who view the literature as of minor importance, as something you tolerate reluctantly, because it simply is modern and the quality of a philatelist is not judged by his expertise, but how much he has amassed in his collection, in other words, how big his wallet is. And they totally overlook that - regardless of always full pockets - only with the help of literature you can aspire to philatelic knowledge and have acquired your collection. You don't know what to do with those people; they are by the way happy, because they look forward to - heaven.

You have to give credit to the German collector, because there are only a few oddballs. The greater majority have recognized the value of philatelic literature and strives to learn from it.

Just as there are very few serious collectors who do not belong to a stamp club, so there are even fewer who do not subscribe to a philatelic paper or don't know how to get one.

Without the use of the daily literature, a study of postage stamps cannot progress at this time, regardless of how limitless the money available is.

Since the first philatelic paper was printed in late 1862 in England, this specialist field has expanded to such an overwhelming magnitude that no other field of collecting can rival it.

Before, I had the average stamp collector in mind, whose reason and his own advantage made him recognize the value of the literature, but now I am concentrating on the philatelist, who uses the literature for more than the simple method to complete his collection and keep it up-to-date as well as to protect him from being cheated. Now I concentrate on the ideal collector who was born with the love for literature. These, who did not care to collect, to amass rarities and varieties, but those whose main reason is the independent research and who derive the greatest pleasure from having their collection pass in review of the whole literature and who identify each individual piece of their collection with the support of the available literature. Then I have to mention the expert colleagues, who have the zest and the ability to dress their thoughts into words, who do not mind showing the results of their research for the benefit of the common good. -The authors.

Indeed, not because I count myself in the guild of authors and philatelic researchers, but because it is the truth and I don't hesitate to say it openly: that guild of authors and philatelic researchers has done more for philately than all of the so-called great collectors together.

There are owners of large collections, who are well known for refusing or brusquely rejecting those who would like a glimpse at their treasures.

The number of friends of literature has increased enormously recently and is growing steadily.

Especially in England and in North America, philatelic papers and books have been in great demand for many years. In North America in the year 1888 a trial was undertaken to establish a paper, called Philatelic Literature Collector, in St. Joseph, Missouri, which served exclusively the interests of literature, but it only survived for a single number.

However, the number of philatelic libraries has also increased in Germany.

The stamp clubs set a good example especially, in creating libraries for their members, in almost all articles of association the members are offered an advantage as well as a right to use the club's library. And even if the expansion of its usage seems to be slow, many a club member was in a position to consult their library and appreciate its extensive numbers. With the expansion and deepening of philatelic studies their members will make extensive use of their rights.

The largest libraries among the German clubs are owned by the International Philatelic Society in Dresden, the Austrian Philatelic Society in Vienna, the Bavarian Philatelic Society in Munich, the Society for Postage Stamp Science in Frankfurt a. M., the Wurttemberg Philatelic Society in Stuttgart and the Berlin Philatelic Club. Numerous libraries are also owned by private citizens.

Many members of philatelic societies are eager literature friends and promise to become hopeful offspring, who are destined to build on our structures and be and remain the stalwarts of literature when we are no longer here.

Many more library friends live in foreign countries. To name but a few: the advocate John K. Tiffany in St Louis, Missouri, in North America, Dr. Legrand in Paris, Dr. Emilio Diena in Modena, etc. The first named owns without a doubt the largest philatelic library on earth, because - as he told me himself - he lacks only a few insignificant philatelic articles. If you count every single newspaper issue, catalogue and every other philatelic work as a unit, his library contains more than 15,000 items, including the philatelic literature publications of all countries and languages.

For more than twenty years John K. Tiffany has been devoted to the study of philatelic literature with iron consequence and in 1874 published the Philatelic Library, which mentioned all literary publications published until then, down to price lists of dealers in all nations and languages. It did not appear in the book trade, but was given to outstandingly well trained philatelists and printed in an edition of only 150. Since then, nothing similar, which covers the literature of all nations has been published. Only bibliographies of single nations for example: Literatura Filatélica en España by Dr. Thebussem, Seville of 1876, the Bibliographie Timbrologique de la France et de la Belgique of Ph. de Bosredon, Brussels of 1878, which described the literature of France and Belgium, the Bibliografia Timbrologica dell' Italia of Giuseppe Leoni, Bologna of 1877, which describes the literature of Italy and finally The Stamp Collectors Library Companion of John K. Tiffany, Chicago of 1889 together with an Addendum of 1890, which put the periodical literature of the United States of North America in numerical order.

With regard to the German philatelic literature, which until then was never put into numerical order, I refer to my publication Bibliographie, zugleich Nachschlagebuch der Gesamten Deutschen Philatelistischen Literatur seit ihrem Entstehen bis Ende 1891.

All these works prove that men have existed, who not only dedicated themselves to the study of literature, but deemed it so important as to dedicate themselves to the large and painstaking labour to research and record all literary publications - me being one of them.

And if you look today for philatelic articles, especially from England, France and the United States of North America, you encounter, wherever you go, advertisements for philatelic literature in general or particular philatelic works, which are sold and purchased.

During the large auctions of postage stamps in the United States of North America, in England, the Netherlands, etc., as a rule, literary publications, mainly papers, are offered. In the United States of North America, F. J. Stanton, a publisher who prints the bimonthly The Philatelic Tribune, in Smyrna, N.Y., organizes auctions, at which only philatelic papers are sold.

This phenomenon demands an explanation and examination.

When I talk about philatelic literature friends I mean philatelists, who treasure the philatelic literature, because they see a means to enlarge their philatelic knowledge and who establish their own libraries, but then also eagerly read and study the books, works and papers, which they use as a reference for doubtful questions and in case of advice.

The literature friends of this category will subscribe only to papers and keep such works, which are written in one language, which these individuals have mastered and understand, and select only the good stuff, that they can learn from and expect enlightenment from.

But there is another category of literature friends, I want to call them “literature collectors” who use the philatelic literature as a collection object and try to amass as much as they can about postage stamps.

They do not limit themselves to philatelic literature products in languages which they understand, but they collect everything that has been printed, regardless of language.

They even collect printings that are pure advertisement pages, price lists and humorous pages from which they gain no enlightenment.

In this group we also have specialised collectors, who collect by language or who collect only philatelic papers etc.

Literature friends of this second category are strongly represented in England and the United States of North America, but are also present in France, Italy and in recent times in Germany.

These are usually people of means, who collect beside postage stamps also the literature. As a rule they are good bibliophiles, who have a good knowledge of philatelic literature publications and know the value of each single edition.

The value of its literature product does not depend as much on its content as its age and rarity.

That is why they look for and pay generously for publications, which were printed many years ago and in relatively small numbers, very popular and desired are the so-called mayflies (seven day wonders), which were printed in a single issue or in a few issues, and then disappeared.

Such papers which never saw a full year's issue were not paid attention to, but were tossed, destroyed or put aside and sometimes have gained some rarity. To give my revered readers a glimpse into the back stage secrets of the literature collector, below I mention such mayflies - rarities of the German Literature:

Der Briefmarken-Anzeiger by C. v. Cardona in Trieste of 1866 (one number). Der Briefmarken-Anzeiger by A. Wildt in Cassel of 1870 (one number). Der Bukarester Philatelist by A. G. Pancu & J. A. Markus in Bucharest of 1885 (one number) and its continuation Der Philatelist by J. A. Markus in Bucharest of 1885 (one number). Der Deutsche Briefmarken-Sammler by the Spiro Brothers in Hamburg of 1864/1865 (three numbers). Der Philatelist by Dr. Moschkau in Dresden of 1872 (two numbers). Der Philatelist by R. Skalweit in Magdeburg of 1886 (six numbers). Fliegende Blätter für Deutsche Philatelisten by E. Kastner in Vienna of 1884 (two numbers). Internationale Markenbörse by A. v. Degen in Baltimore of 1879 (one number). Internationaler Philatelistenfrend by O. Raphael in Lyck of 1879 (one number). Philatelistische Blätter by A. v. Isacovics in Brunn of 1887 (one number). Vertrauliche Mitteilungen by Dr. Moschkau in Dresden of 1871-1875 (four numbers), &c.

But there are also a number of papers, which have reached 12 issues, i.e. a full year, or several years, which are relatively hard to purchase and which are totally complete in only a few libraries. Some of them in the German literature are as follows:

Das Börsenblatt für den Briefmarkenhandel by Reichel & Co. in Kaufbeuren of 1864 and its continuation the Allgemeine Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung by E. Roschlau in Coburg of 1864 (12 numbers each). The Briefmarken-Sammler by G. Bauschke in Leipzig of 1866-1871 (52 numbers), the third year of the Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung by Bauschke in Dresden of 1872-1873 (numbers 25 to 33), the second year of the Hamburger Briefmarken-Zeitung by A. Sternberg in Hamburg of 1880 (numbers 1 to 6). Philatelistische Berichte by S. F. Friedmann in Vienna of 1872 to 1877 (40 numbers) and others.

Of lesser value to collectors are such papers - regardless of age - which are still available from the publisher, although it does not happen infrequently that the publisher charges a higher price for obsolete volumes, than they charged for their subscription price. This should not be tolerated, since it only exploits the literature collector.

The publisher may have larger stock of older volumes but lacks single issues completely, which can be a result of a large number of "sample issues" being offered, which are later missing from the volumes. Even the publisher is not able to offer them complete.

Literature collectors are well aware of gaps, such as, for example, number 3 of the first year of Illustr. Briefmarken-Zeitung by E. Heitmann of Leipzig of 1888, number 10 of the eighth volume of Weltpost by Sigm. Friedl of Vienna of 1883.

Selling out of single numbers of older papers resulted in them being printed anew.

Even complete volumes were reprinted, as the publisher J.-B. Moens in Brussels did with the first volume of 1863 of the famous Timbre-Poste. Left-over stock of old volumes sometimes have uneven quantities of individual issues, so that publishers are able to offer only part volumes of them.

The publishers of philatelic newspapers in the United State of North America often quote the prices of such old volumes or numbers (back-issues) at the end of newly printed numbers, and the result is that hardly any issue costs the same, often you pay for one and the same number double, triple, quadruple, even ten times as much. The individual complete older volumes certainly don't fetch the same price.

J.-B. Moens in Brussels demands for most of his older volumes of the Timbre-Poste 5-6 francs as a rule, for the volumes of 1866 and 1867, 20 francs each. The volume of 1864 can be had only, if you purchase the whole collection, that is, all 30 volumes.

The situation described by me justifies - if a justification is actually necessary - that in a German philatelic technical paper a lengthy article about foreign-language philatelic periodical literature is published.

I do confess that it is awkward when a technical paper, the space in which is limited and which is issued only once a month, has articles that stretch over a number of issues; but I have no other choice but to publish my treatise in a technical paper, because if I published it in book form, I would be confronted with losing half of my expenses.

After my introduction, I am going over to my original theme. And to avoid a misunderstanding, it occurs to me that I cannot supply a total list or even approaching a total list of the foreign speaking philatelic periodical literature of Europe.

That is a task that can be done by only one single man, and that is John K. Tiffany, who has at his disposal the nearly humongous necessary material.

Tiffany also has the completed manuscript – see the letter to the editor in number 23 of the L'Annonce Timbrologique of January 1892 - of such bibliography, which would be a continuation of his Philatelic Library of 1874. But he does not seem to intend to duplicate or publish it.

But the shortage of such a work becoming more and more pronounced and Dr. Legrand has put this feeling into words in numbers 20 and 21 of the above journal.

That is why I took over and tried to help as much as I could to provide the above treatise.

I will offer as much as I know of the foreign European periodical literature and hope to create at least the foundation of a bibliography, which other authorities of foreign literature will hopefully correct and complete.

It is wished that friends of literature will have at least to some extent a reliable guide and not be groping in the dark as it was until now.

The Roman says In magnis voluisse satis [In great things it is sufficient to have wished], in regards to this material I want to point out that I do not quote the literature by nations, but by languages and that I do not observe a historic order or any other system, but will deal with the individual languages, after sifting through the material more or less.

At the beginning I have chosen the Italian language especially, because the philatelic literature in this language is most likely least known to the German literature collector and is rather difficult to obtain, with a few exceptions.

And now let's come to the point ...

Translator's Note: The subsequent lists of periodicals have not been translated.

Translation of the end note on page 179

Now I have two corrections to make:

1. Two volumes of the Portuguese language magazine “O Philatelista” have been published. Volume I includes numbers 1-9 from April to December 1887, volume II includes numbers 10-14 from January to August 1888.
2. Volume I of the French magazine “Le Moniteur des Timbrophiles” includes 9 issues from April 15 to December 15, 1882.

This list shows that 227 different foreign-language philatelic newspapers were published in Europe by the end of 1891, namely:

a) in Italian	18
b) in Romanian	3
c) in Dutch	3
d) in Danish-Norwegian language	8
e) in Swedish	1
f) in Greek language	1
g) in Spanish	4
h) in Portuguese	2
i) in French	37
k) in English	154

The lion's share therefore goes to England, the country which is both the cradle of postage stamps and the cradle of philately. In England more than twice as many philatelic newspapers have been issued as in all the rest of Europe, except Germany and Austria, and four times as many as in France.

In Europe, only the German newspaper literature can compete with the English newspaper literature, which also has the impressive number of 109 different journals. However, how much chaff is found amongst the wheat is proven by the fact that of all the above 227 foreign-language specialist journals by the end of 1891 only 30 were still in existence, namely 3 Italian, 1 Romanian, 1 Dutch, 1 Danish-Norwegian, 1 Swedish, 13 French and 10 English ones existed, most of which, moreover, were founded in the last few years.

In concluding my essay here, I would be happy if I had succeeded in arousing interest in our newspaper literature in at least part of my writing, and I would also be grateful for all additions, corrections and communications in this area.

END

Walter Petrausch

In the realm of stamp collecting literature: A short walk

[Im reiche der briefmarkenkundlichen literatur: Ein kleiner spaziergang]

Die Postwertzeichen – Der Poststempel, June 1937, Volume 11, Issue 6, p.158

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
November 2012

IN THE REALM OF STAMP COLLECTING LITERATURE:

A SHORT WALK

It may be unknown to many collectors, how much the volume of written works of our beloved collecting has already increased. You can get a small notion only when you realize that for many years a large circle of authors in the technical field of magazines have tried together to compile an extensive index of the philatelic literature.

First of all let us mention the large collection of literature of Suppantshitsch. When his heirs sold the laboriously collected treasures to an organization in New York in the year 1922, the largest German stamp collecting library consisted of 3037 volumes of journals, over 30,000 single numbers and 1,800 handbooks, all within the period of 1861 to 1900. Taking into consideration that after 1900 the expansion of stamp collecting and its ensuing research of the postal-philatelic area, which resulted in numerous publications, you can understand my choice. In this context I want to mention the biggest international library of this kind, which the Earl of Crawford amassed and which he bequeathed to the English nation. A catalogue by E. D. Bacon has been published about the collection, which sports 924 large columns, and which is housed in the British Museum, the main component of which is the Tiffany library, which consisted of 39 boxes with a total weight of about 40 Zentern* sent from America to England in the year 1887.

* Translator's note: Zentern = 50kg?

After these general observations, some readers may ask about the content of this extensive literature. Well, a short walk in this philatelic literature will provide information. Particular attention will be given to those papers and areas, which warrant special consideration.

Under the collective term "works" a long list of descriptions of the details of stamps the world over, of their peculiarities and research results are published. Strange fields can emerge. Such is Otto Elsner's Die Geheimnisse des Erfolges im Briefmarkenversteigerungswesen [The Secrets of Success in Selling Postage Stamps by Auction]. But not only this item should be mentioned, Hermann Fellmann offers a 30 page book Anleitung zur Abhaltung von Bundes- und Philatelisten-Tagen [Instructions for holding Federal- and Philatelic Days]. Even those experiences warrant publication in book form. The print house from which derives the famous 3 Pfg. Red Saxony, has been mentioned with its works Hundert Jahre einer Leipziger Buchdruckerei [One Hundred Years of a Leipzig Printing House].

A certainly original title has a 55 page book, which provides a popular and rudimentary guide to the collecting of stamps. It is written by Oskar Reede with the title: Vom Lehrling bis zum Meister. Briefe von Onkel Oskar an seinen Neffen Wilhelm, der lernen will, wie man richtig Briefmarken Sammelt [From Apprentice to Master. Letters from Uncle Oskar to his Nephew Wilhelm, Who Wants to Know How to Collect Stamps Properly]. A rather peculiar but practical idea has become reality.

As early as 1898 a certainly no longer accurate concern was mentioned. We were reminded in Die Ursachen über den Rückgang der Philatelie [The Cause of the Decline of Philately] that there was a lull in collecting. You can see: history repeats itself!

Amongst the many works that tried to produce a flawless partial - or possibly complete register of postage stamp periodicals, a booklet has to be mentioned by the author and comprehensive expert on the international literature, Magistrate Fraenkel.

There are also law articles by lawyers and qualified collectors, especially for rules of protection against counterfeits and the misuse of postage stamps.

A special area is philatelic periodicals. There is a long list and some titles chosen are strange. There is Das Basler Täubchen [The Basle Dove], the title of which was initially created for a very rare stamp. Also Das Blaue Blatt [The Blue Sheet] had a following at one time. Die Briefmarke [The Stamp], Briefmarkenanzeiger [Stamp Gazette], Der Briefmarkensammler [The Stamp Collector] are titles that have been used repeatedly (the last one 5 times).

The title Le Fac-Simile would leave a rather bad taste in the mouth of any collector. It was published in Geneva.

An attempt to introduce Esperanto as a world language was made in 1912 with its journal Mondaposta for international stamp and hobby collectors in the Esperanto language.

The title Philatelistische Lehrstunde [Philatelic Lesson] is a strange, but immediately characterizing magazine description.

On the other hand, the title of a stamp news paper published in Königsberg Zum Zeitvertrieb [Pastime] shows with its subtitle, Monatschrift für Mussestunden [Monthly Paper for Leisure times] that it is a light, entertaining news paper.

The society and festive papers have their place. And the large philatelic publishers have their Annuals.

Very careful and specialized, sounds the title used by many philatelic address books. It states Index of those addresses, which are worth knowing by each "honest" philatelist.

In the long line of catalogues, one catalogue title shows a certain relevance. It is the priced list of The Stamps of the Spanish Separatists (Catalonian Union, Autonomy-Propaganda, etc.) of the year 1902.

Also Thomas Cliffe's catalogue My Silent Loudspeaker, as a word-for-word paradoxical translation: Mein stiller Lautsprecher it should actually be My Silent Adviser, is not without a certain strangeness.

Marken sind Gold. Rentabelste Kapitalanlage [Stamps are Gold. Profitable Capital Investment] sounds, in contrast, realistic and materialistic. The publisher was Elisabetha Fuchs.

I don't want to touch on the literature of inventory books [catalogues?] and auctions. In contrast, a title from the field of albums is worth mentioning; Dokumente einer Irrsinnigen Zeit: Bewise, die nicht Lügen [Documents of a Crazy Time: Evidence that does not Lie]. E. Peters published this keepsake to remind us of the commemorative stamps for the 19 areas stolen from Germany and for the inflation stamps from 5 Pfg. to 50 billion Marks.

Special songs and programs from the Philatelic Days since 1894 should also belong to philatelic literature. It is worth mentioning a compilation from the 16th Philatelic Day in Leipzig (1904). It contains amongst others a commerce song, a table song and a participant card with a souvenir adhesive stamp.

In closing I want to remember three strange philatelic literature products. They are Das Liederbuch für Briefmarkensammler [The Songbook for Stamp Collectors], released in 1913 during the 25th German Philatelic Day by the Press Committee. Besides this edition for the congress participant who likes to sing, someone thought to pay tribute to stamp humour.

In 1910 the Humoristische Briefmarkenzeitung [Humourous Stamp Paper] was published.

To remind participants of the "good taste" at philatelic conferences an anthology of the after-dinner philatelic celebrations from 1902 to 1925 was released.

With this I want to close my short walk through the philatelic literature.

END

Dr. Moschkau
About society libraries
[Ueber vereinsbibliotheken]
Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal, 2nd August 1884, Volume 11, Issue 15, p.215

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

ABOUT SOCIETY LIBRARIES

As we already mentioned in our article The Main Factors of Philately, the philatelic societies will play an important part in the future. The times of the stamp clubs, enjoying first of all carp suppers, "beerological" treats and steamship excursions and sometimes - on the side - discussing a little stamp collecting, is over. The society, which eagerly and seriously researches, which is aware of its task under the prevailing most difficult conditions, will be the one to survive, will serve its purpose and will enjoy the results.

One of the most important inventories of a society is its - as far as possible - complete philatelic library!

To obtain such nowadays is not an easy thing to do, even if necessary funds are available. Many magazines, many small works are out of print, as they were printed in small quantities and retained by collectors, children of their times, who did not appreciate their literary phenomenon and therefore were not thinking of preserving them. And the "old guard", which would have saved everything, had since gone the "way of all flesh" and their dependents with no regards to philatelic literature sold them as scrap paper or discarded them.

All these and so many other circumstances explain only too well, that the older and oldest literary works are rare and can only be encountered and purchased as an exception. But nevertheless, aside from much chaff, they provide good and important grains. Through them you can find explanations of a questionable point or good ideas, or some carelessly scattered things, the necessities of which only today are recognized.

The benefit of an almost complete library is finally recognized more and more by the society. The clubs in Vienna and Dresden, etc., now have book-treasures which represent not only a large monetary value but also a materialistic one, since they are a large treasure trove for the researching collector thirsting for knowledge and are a rich fountain of knowledge for every philatelist. Merely the fact that a library can be used anytime and can give answers to any question, may make a large group of collectors decide to become a member of these clubs.

However, not only should the oldest and older literature in a society's library be noted, but also those works and magazines, particularly those of the 1870s should be mentioned. Here we note for different reasons, that many a written work has become rare, regardless of how close it is to the current period. There are complete volumes of magazines, which are no longer to be had.

In those instances it is desired that societies take a certain percentage of their annual earnings and work towards the expansion of their library to reach their destination in such a fashion slowly but surely. Use every possibility to close gaps, not to forget, however, the acquisition of those very good, valuable works, and never to forget that each little book, each magazine and each single edition of it harbours articles that could be valuable to a particular collector, not necessarily all of them, but is beneficial for the majority.

We reserve the right to publish articles about older literature in detail at a later date, but do suggest that the societies through their gentlemen of the old guard, through questionnaires among collecting circles advertise to offer to purchase rare works and also approach larger societies, who might have duplicates for sale, and never to forget to purchase new editions as they become available. Here, too, there is a “too late”, so that it is better to strive for a complete and unbroken basis of our wants, knowledge and wishes for our society’s library.

May our philatelists, each one of his own, support and promote the philatelic magazines; writers (who normally get little remuneration for their research results) and the philatelic magazine publishers in the future by eager purchases, which unfortunately have been lagging until now.

END

P. C. [Patrick Chalmers]
The Adhesive Postage Stamp
[Le Timbre-Poste Adhésif]
Wimbledon, UK, September 1890, 1p.

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
September 2012

THE ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMP

Since the editor-in-chief of the journal Le Timbre-Poste refused, against all the rules and courtesies, to publish my reply to the letter, which has attacked me, published in this journal, I am forced to circulate my answer as best I can, and herewith is a copy. This is the second or third time that my opponents have attacked me in those newspapers that refused to print my response. This method of controversy, which proves the weakness of their cause, will be condemned by all impartial spirits.

P. C.

Wimbledon
September 1890

END

Through the Exhibitions. The Exhibition of Postage Stamps
[À Travers les Expositions. L'Exposition des Timbres-Poste]
(From Le Courier de Londres et de L'Europe, 18th May 1890)
[Patrick Chalmers, Wimbledon, UK, 1890], 1p.

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
September 2012

THROUGH THE EXHIBITION
THE EXHIBITION OF POSTAGE STAMPS.

From Le Courier de Londres et de L'Europe, 18th May 1890.

It is not only in England that the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of postage stamps will be celebrated. In Vienna, there was the most curious exhibition, under the patronage of the Minister of Commerce, to honour this discovery apparently so simple, yet so useful. The exhibition was opened at the end of last month, and it includes as complete a collection as possible of all the stamps of different countries, since their invention.

It occupied two large rooms of the Austrian Museum, and the variety of specimens placed under the eyes of visitors is of great interest not only to stamp collectors, but also to the general public.

It will once again prove that it is rarely the inspiration of an idea that, at first, gains the merit. So far, indeed, it was believed that the true author of the postal transformation that has taken place over about half a century, was Sir Rowland Hill, and it is to him that we gave all of the honour.

However, it seems that on the contrary, the latter was one of the greatest opponents of the new means of taxation, and that the real inventor was none other than James Chalmers.

In the month of August 1834, was sent to the English administration a sample of a postage stamp similar to those we use today. This approach remaining without result, he renewed it in 1837 and 1838. It was only on the 26th December 1839 that the House of Commons, finding nothing better among the various projects that were proposed, stopped at that of James Chalmers.

At the Vienna Exhibition we can see photographs of different specimens of stamps prior to 1840 and designed by the inventor himself. The controversy will be ended, and Sir Rowland Hill and will be forced to leave James Chalmers the title he usurped "father of the postage stamp".

END

Schwanke Auktionen

Another special part of Auction 338 is dedicated to philatelic literature. “We have the most beautiful library in the world” – at least for a few weeks!

[Ein weiterer Sonderteil unserer 338. Auktion widmet sich der Philatelistischen Literatur. “Wir haben die schönste Bibliothek der Welt” – zumindest für einige Wochen!]

Schwanke web site: <http://www.schwanke-auktionen.de>, 22nd November 2012, 3pp.

Since it is likely that this document will disappear from the web site once the auction is over, the German original is appended to this translation

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar’s Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
November 2012

ANOTHER SPECIAL PART OF AUCTION 338
IS DEDICATED TO PHILATELIC LITERATURE.
“WE HAVE THE MOST BEAUTIFUL LIBRARY IN THE WORLD”
- AT LEAST FOR A FEW WEEKS!

This is what we think when we see all the wonderful book titles that will be auctioned on the 22nd November in our auction rooms.

A little story to begin with:

The firm of Scott Stamp and Coin Company Inc. of New York conducted its 149th auction in 1900, it took another 13 years before the first stamp auction in Germany took place.

The famous F. W. Hunter Collection came under the hammer. It contained just 3,321 lots, amongst which the greatest rarities were represented. The absolute “trick” was that the auction catalog already contained photograph pages, just 6 off but in good print quality. Of the covers (of which there was just one photo page) only the corners were shown, but the pictures were still meaningful.

A special copy of the catalogue will be auctioned off by us - special because not only all of the results (in red ink), but also the names of the buyers are listed (in black ink). (€300)

The auction catalog described above is a lot in our “rarities cabinet” - a special section within the literature lots containing exactly 134 items that represent, in our opinion, the most important works of philatelic literature.

Consider the work of P. Mirabaud and Baron de Reuterskjöld from 1899 - The Stamps of Switzerland. The book, with a fantastic set of quality lithographs was printed on very high quality paper, with only 200 copies in French and 150 copies each in English and German. It is said that the authors had to raise the exorbitant sum of 50,000 gold francs to fund this noble exhibit. In our Auction 338 are now offered - for the first time to our knowledge - all three editions: the French in the luxury half leather binding (€ 3,500), the English version (€ 1,500) and German (€1,200)!

Equally spectacular is the Japan-offering that combines three of the most valuable books in philately: F. J. Peplow's Plates of the Stamps of Japan 1871-1876 of 1910, which was printed in an edition of only 25 copies, which is offered in Germany for the first time in over 30 years and comes leather bound with a slipcase; this treasure is estimated at € 4,000. Perhaps the most legendary piece is the book by Tracy Woodward The Postage Stamps of Japan and Dependencies from the year 1928. 100 copies were produced, the decor is very elegant, leather-bound, hand-made paper, gilt edges. We remember our Auction 263 of 1999 in which (most recently in Germany), this work was sold at the then record price of 16,000 DM, our starting price is € 5,000. That is not the most difficult part of this work to acquire. That was with normal paper with a linen cover “for review purposes”, as the author wrote. Only 30! Copies were made (estimate (€4,000).

Noteworthy are the rarest periodicals, e.g. Moens' Le Timbre-Poste 1863-1882, beautifully bound in three half leather volumes (€ 1000), Maury's Le Timbre-Poste de Collectionneur beautiful 1864-1874 in 11 volumes (€ 500) or The London Philatelist the first two cohorts 1892-1893 from the Library of E. D. Bacon (€1,000).

The bulk of the auction however, is the Hallertau library. This library contains about 700 books and monographs and holds major titles for each collecting area but focuses, for example, on Italy, Austria with Lombardy-Venetia, Switzerland, Spain and the Scandinavian countries

Then come about 200 titles of periodicals, auction catalogs, price lists and catalogues.

Regarding Auction Catalogues, we have on many occasions defended the view that these are a very important part of every reading and philatelic library. The items offered in our auction catalogs section include not only many "name sales" but also all runs of various auction houses

The list of major titles could be continued but that would be unfair to those similar pieces not mentioned.

We close the short preview with two titles that are, quite literally, "unique":

There is the copy of a correspondence book of a German officer in the Franco-German war of 1870-71, from his call-up to the war, with numerous sketches and notes on troop movements, correspondence cards and all letters (€ 1000) and secondly, from Switzerland, the "souvenir Amical", the Guest Book of the Swiss Philately Day for the year 1922. This unique piece contains numerous signatures of Swiss and international philatelists, beside small sketches, menu cards, etc., and belongs in our view in a museum of Swiss postal history (€2,000).

The auction catalog will be seen here online from the 20th October. The print version will be sent out on the 23rd October from our printing company.

APPENDIX

EIN WEITERER SONDERTEIL UNSERER 338. AUKTION WIDMET SICH DER PHILATELISTISCHEN LITERATUR. „WIR HABEN DIE SCHÖNSTE BIBLIOTHEK DER WELT...“ - ..ZUMINDEST FÜR EINIGE WOCHEN!

Das denken wir, wenn wir all die schönen Buchtitel sehen, die am 22. November in unserem Hause versteigert werden.

Eine kleine Geschichte zu Beginn:

Als die Firma Scott Stamps and Coins Inc. in New York ihre bereits 149. Auktion durchführte, schrieben wir das Jahr 1900, und es dauerte noch 13 Jahre, bis in Deutschland überhaupt die erste Briefmarkenauktion stattfinden sollte.

Die berühmte „F.W. Hunter Collection“ kam unter den Hammer. Sie enthielt genau 3321 Lose, unter denen die allergrößten Seltenheiten vertreten waren. Der absolute „Clou“ war, dass dieser Auktionskatalog bereits Fototafeln enthielt, genau 6 Stück, in guter Druckqualität. Von den Briefen (es gab davon genau eine Fototafel) waren nur die Ecken zusehen, aber die Abbildungen waren doch aussagekräftig.

Ein ganz besonderes Katalogexemplar wird bei uns versteigert; ganz besonders deshalb, weil nicht nur sämtliche Ergebnisse (in roter Tinte), sondern auch die Namen der Käufer (in schwarzer Tinte) verzeichnet sind. (€ 300).

Dieser beschriebene Auktionskatalog ist ein Los in unserem „Raritäten-Kabinett“ - einem Sonderteil innerhalb des Literaturangebotes, mit exakt 134 Positionen, die, nach unserer ganz persönlichen Auffassung, die bedeutendsten Werke der philatelistischen Literatur darstellen.

Nehmen wir das Werk von P.Mirabaud und Baron de Reuterskjöld aus dem Jahre 1899 „Die Briefmarken der Schweiz“. Das Buch, mit hochwertigen Lithos und phantastischem Satz wurde auf sehr hochwertigem Papier gedruckt, und zwar 200 Exemplare in französischer sowie jeweils 150 Exemplare in englischer und deutscher Sprache. Es heißt, dass die Autoren die horrende Summe von 50.000 Goldfranken aufbringen mußten, um diese edle Ausstellung zu finanzieren. In unserer 338.Auktion werden nun – unseres Wissens erstmalig – alle (!) drei Ausgaben angeboten: die französische im Luxus-Halbledereinband (€ 3500), die englische Version (€ 1500) und die deutsche (€ 1200).

Ebenso sensationell ist das Japan-Angebot, das gleich drei der wertvollsten Bücher der Philatelie vereint: F.J.Peplows „Plates of the Stamps of Japan 1871-1876“ aus dem Jahre 1910, das in einer Auflage von nur 25 Exemplaren gedruckt wurde und jetzt erstmals nach über 30 Jahren in Deutschland zum Angebot kommt. Ledergebunden, mit Schubert, soll diese Kostbarkeit € 4000 einspielen. Das vielleicht legendärste Stück ist das Buch von Tracy Woodward „The Postage Stamps of Japan and Dependencies“ aus dem Jahre 1928. 100 Exemplare wurde davon hergestellt, die Ausstattung ist überaus vornehm, Ledereinband, Büttenpapier, Goldschnitt. Wir erinnern uns an unsere 263.Auktion aus dem Jahre 1999, in dem (letztmalig in Deutschland) dieses Werk verkauft wurde, zum damaligen Rekordpreis von 16.000 DM; unser Startpreis sind € 5000. Damit nicht genug: Auch die „Arbeitsausgabe“ dieses Werkes ist zu erwerben. Diese wurde auf einfacherem Papier mit einem Leineneinband gedruckt „for review purposes“, wie der Autor schrieb. Nur 30 (!) Exemplare wurden angefertigt (Schätzpreis € 4000).

Zu erwähnen sind seltenste Periodika, z.B. von Moens „Le Timbre-Poste 1863-1882“, schön gebunden in drei Halbledereinbänden (€ 1000), von Maury „Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste“ 1864-1874 in 11 schönen Bänden (€ 500) oder „The London Philatelist“, die ersten beiden Jahrgänge 1892-1893 aus der Bibliothek von E.D. Bacon (€ 1000).

Den Hauptteil der Auktion bestreiten jedoch die Bestände der Bibliothek „Hallertau“. Diese Bibliothek enthält ca. 700 Handbücher und Monographien, die für jedes Sammelgebiet wesentliche Titel bereithält und doch Schwerpunkte aufweist, z.B. bei Italien, Österreich mit Lombardei-Venetien, Schweiz, Spanien und den skandinavischen Ländern.

Zum Ausruf kommen desweiteren etwa 200 Positionen Periodika, Auktionskataloge, Händlerpreislisten und Ausstellungskataloge.

Zum Thema „Auktionskataloge“ haben wir an dieser Stelle schon des öfteren die These verfochten, dass diese ganz wichtige philatelistische Lektüre sind und in jede philatelistische Bibliothek gehören. Die in unserer Auktion angebotenen Stücke beinhalten neben frühen Katalogen viele „name sales“ und auch ganze „Runs“ verschiedener Auktionshäuser.

Die Aufzählung bedeutender Titel könnte weiter fortgesetzt werden und würde doch nur anderen – nicht erwähnten Stücken – Unrecht tun.

Schließen wir die kurze Vorschau mit zwei Titeln, die im wahrsten Wortsinn „einmalig“ sind: Da gibt es die zu einem Buch zusammengefasste Korrespondenz eines deutschen Offiziers im Deutsch-Französischen Krieg 1870-71, von seiner Einberufung bis zum Kriegsende, mit zahlreichen Skizzen und Notizen über Truppenbewegungen, Correspondenzkarten und ganzen Briefen (€ 1000) und zum anderen, von der Schweiz, das „Souvenir Amical“, ein Gästebuch der schweizer Philatelistentage ab dem Jahre 1922. Dieses Unikat enthält unzählige Unterschriften schweizer und internationaler Philatelisten, daneben kleine Skizzen, Menumkarten, Sonderstempel usw. und gehört unserer Auffassung nach in ein Museum für Schweizer Postgeschichte (€ 2000). Der Auktionskatalog wird an dieser Stelle ab dem 20. Oktober online zu sehen sein. Die Druckversion wird ab dem 23. Oktober von unserer Druckerei versandt.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
July 1931, Volume 11, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

July 1931, Volume 11, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Critique of the Review.

The easiest way for a book review is the simple naming of the title, author, publishing company and price. This solution of the question must be considered impertinent and against all circles interested in literature, but most of all within philately, where each scientific work required immense labour of the author without the expectation of material return, and a great financial risk for its publisher. A serious philatelic periodical which handles a book review in such a fashion sins against its members and deserves to have its subscription cancelled immediately, because it fails to fulfil its task to teach its reader other than in a telegram style. Writer and publisher seem to overlook that those pages characterize their own "standing". It becomes evident how high or low the quality of the readers can be judged.

A number of papers, however, do issue detailed book reviews, which impress the individual reader, but are immediately recognized by the repeated printing of the "laundry list". That term denotes that which the publisher provides as his own book review, which certainly is favourable and suggests it be bought, but can - aside from some fundamental information - not be viewed as a definitive review. The "laundry list" often appears to make one familiar with the ensuing material, but the sleek writing is a sign of inadequacy of the publisher, because it shows that one was incapable of producing one's own book review! Sure, what the total writers of philately produce, a single publisher cannot evaluate, but if he attaches great value to his works, then he will try hard to engage a person in his circle, who is familiar with this, or hire a specialist in this field to ask for a book review. A review should enlighten a reader of the value or non-value of the book, not just blow the - thirsty for recognition - author's own horn or that of the eager-to-sell publisher. Even "laundry lists" can therefore be an indication to show the validity of the book to its reader.

But we also have particular magazines, which take the task seriously. Though, some only think they do. Philately and its followers are not being served with - as it were - dry poetry of the table of contents with fluid prose, and to add something about volume, illustration, paper, print and binding, and naturally not to omit the suggestion to purchase! A work which deals with stamp collecting - in other words wants to be a textbook to the interested person - warrants different book reviews. Aside from a short report of the contents, the newly developed information on the field in question and finally the value of the total work, warrants special recognition, without abstaining from the announcement of the provision of false facts, in other words flaws in the work. We always have to keep in mind that each such review of the new edition is beneficial. Otherwise misconceptions and such confuse the heads of the collectors and some of the erstwhile discoveries are no longer that. There will be no consideration of a most interested publisher, hoping for a favourable review, nor the author. Finally, each work has its good sides, you don't have to pour out the child with its bath water, in other words, the main interested entity is philately.

But a serious review cannot always be free of personal opinions. It would be a mistake to let purely personal conflicts between the reviewer and author have a good romp during a review. On the other hand, weaknesses of the writer and his work should not remain unmentioned. Far too many people feel to be the chosen ones to write about philately, so it is necessary to criticize severely. If not personally, it can be criticised for technical reasons.

And there are also reviews, which are functional but superficial. In such cases reviewers and authors in the same field have to pull on the same rope, so that a censure is hardly possible for prestige reasons, but it also excludes acknowledgements.

Previous explanations should only be used as a rough draft of our discussions. Details including explanatory samples would exceed the frame work of our paper. But, perhaps, the few highlights will be sufficient to look into the heart or head of one or another reviewer and publisher.

There is a notable laxity of publishers in delivering all material for review. Before publishers decide to send the book, it often requires numerous reminders - and success is often still uncertain. Such publishers should be put on a black list.

pp.[2-3]

New items from the book market 1930.

p.[3]

3rd Congress of the Federation Internationale de la Presse Philatélique.

p.[4]

Miscellaneous.

p.[4]

Article overview, May 1930.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
September 1931, Volume 11, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

(Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.)

pp.1-2

Author: Title.

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

WHAT YOU READ HERE AND THERE

You would not believe that more than 70,000 persons have visited the Reichspostmuseum [Imperial Postal Museum] in Berlin during the course of a year, and even so there are still collectors that come to Berlin and "forget" to visit the museum.

The organizers of the "WIPA 1933" International Postage Stamp Exhibition in Vienna in 1933 are hard at work. Letters have been mailed to offer medals and other memorabilia. A gold embossing costs 350 Schillings, a gold medal 250, a silver-gold 50, silver 40 and bronze 25 Schillings. Deposits are taken now to assure delivery, with 10% of the amount due payable immediately, 15% within 8 days after billing, but no further payments due prior to 1 May 1933.

We have heard from a reliable source that the Index of philatelic literature published by Harris Publ. in London in periodic issues is not likely to be continued. Too bad, because we could really use such a reference. During the meeting of the Fédération Intern. de la Presse Philatélique in Braunschweig, the suggestion was made once again that it would be desirable to finally generate such a real reference. But those are just empty words. ...

The Fédération had provided medals for publications. However, the powers in charge forgot to specify that these medals should be used exclusively for literature. After all, one should presume that the Fédération is primarily interested in supporting literature.

The Fédération de Philatélie will hold its meeting in Paris during October. Germany will be represented by Bosshard, Meiningen, or by Dr. Willer, Vienna.

Sir William Waterlow, the well-known co-owner of the English printing shop Waterlow & Sons, died on 5 July in London at the age of 60 years.

The visitors to the Philatelic Day in Braunschweig will surely remember the Swiss representative, Mr. Mestral. He died in Lausanne during August.

We greatly regret that we hear only bad news from Dresden about the health of the First President of the Association. We send Reichsbahnoberrat Falck our best wishes for a speedy recovery.

The Austrian Day of Philately will be celebrated in Innsbruck on 3 and 4 October.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
October 1931, Volume 11, Issue 5

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

October 1931, Volume 11, Issue 5

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.)

[pp.1-2]

The literature at MOPHILA.
J. A. Bosshard

A discussion of the literature exhibits at the MOPHILA exhibition and the prizes they won.

[pp.2-3]

Federation conference in Brunswick.

[pp.3-4]

New releases on the book market in 1931.

[p.4]

Article overview.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
December 1931, Volume 11, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

(Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.)

pp.1-2

Author: Title.

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

Alexander Bungerz

Everyone who is interested in philatelic literature is familiar with the name Alexander Bungerz. Our friend Bungerz is not with us anymore. He passed away on November 1 and again the philately lost a loyal and hard working warrior who never objected to do anything for the collectors. Alexander Bungerz was born on 7 November 1874 in Gladbach as son of Alexander Bungerz who had been a merchant by profession and his wife Christine, nee Jordans. He had been a very fragile child since he suffered from hemophilia. Due to this illness he could complete secondary school only with many interruptions and therefore had private tutoring by a priest in the suburbs to complement his knowledge. Already at that time he was often confined to bed and during this period he made first engagement with stamps. The long recumbence in bed gave him time and opportunity to occupy himself with the stamps.

His graphic talent was evident already in his earliest youth and had been stimulated with tutoring carried out by good painters. However, due to a wish by his father he had to replace the paintbrush with the feather of a merchant and joined the business of his father. At the age of 25 he lost his father due to an accident and was dedicated from that time onwards to art.

From 1904 to 1910 he studied in Düsseldorf under Josef Jansen, E. Pfannkuchen and Angermeyer. After his study trips through England, Scandinavia, France, Switzerland, the Balkan and North Africa he went for three years to Italy to study at S. Lipinsky. Bungerz was married with the daughter of a childhood friend of his father and relative, Elly Quack.

Already at the age of 11 Bungerz was an avid reader of the Senf Journal. The study of literature he considered important and soon he was collecting literature. He had an active and pleasant communication with all major collectors. He also had been busy with the creation of stamps. One remembered his designs at the competition of Berlin in 1921.

Together with the late Carl Beck, Bungerz had been the publisher of the Bücherwurm which was passed over to gentlemen Fritz Seifert and J.A. Bosshard.

To name a few of his works: Vom Atelier zum Schalter, 1920, Über Farbzeichnungen in der Philatelie, 1917. In 1919, Bungerz took over the editing of the Sammler-Woche, the publication well known to all of us which was published by Kürzel and that enjoyed high reputation. We have to give permanent credit to the deceased for the publishing of a philatelic encyclopedia. Well known was also his booklet about the stamps of Libau.

The German philately loses Bungerz who is an idealist who looked on stamp collecting from a high point of view.

As outside appreciation for his works, in 1923 the deceased has been awarded with the Sieger award for philatelic literature.

May the earth be good to him.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
February 1932, Volume 12, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May 1931, Volume 11, Issue 2

Translation Digest

(Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.)

pp.1-2

Author: Title.

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

TO ALL IT MAY CONCERN.

By P. Preuß, Leipzig

With this present number, the "Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm" starts and continues the "Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm" with its 12th Volume. On July 20, 1921, the first issue, formed as publication of the Association of Philatelic Literature Collectors under the guidance of Carl Beck and Alexander Bungerz, two renowned Specialists of philatelic literature. The association has the objective to unite all collectors of philatelic literature and magazine and should inform about all new publications in the area of philatelic literature. The magazine also deals with bibliophilic research. After Carl Beck passed away on July 9, 1929, to the regret of many collectors and literature friends for which the paper was a valuable guide, the publication had ceased its circulation and was missed more and more by them.

In order to overcome this, J. A. Bosshard, Meiningen, and Fritz Seifert, Leipzig, who were well known as collectors and friends of literature, decided to continue the issue of the "Bücherwurm." On April 20, 1930, they published the first issue of the "Deutschen Philatelistischen Bücherwurms". Both gentlemen wanted to create, as they have indicated in their forward, a link between the researching and intellectual collectors while they had the hope to find within their readers colleagues who would support their endeavors with active participation to reach the ambitious targets.

If one browse through the issues which have been issued since then, one will notice that both publishers took every effort to offer valuable information for the literature friends, to inform them about new publications as well as an overview of the more important articles published in various magazines. However, when reading the table of content of new publications it will be noticed that not all new scripts and not all newly published philatelic papers are listed. Why is this? As per my knowledge, the blame does not lie on the publishers of BW, because they can only inform about new publications if they have received notice of the same. It is the obligation of the publishers. All publishers and other issuers of philatelic works, scripts, magazines and so on should inform the BW about new publications, only then BW is able to be what it wants to be, a central collecting pool for the whole of German Philatelic Literature.

But also the collectors and literature friends can participate to reach this objective by informing BW about literature they are aware of as well as of newly published literature. But how is the reality about the requested cooperation? So far, aside from Schmittdiels, Hamburg who prepares the article summary for every edition of BW, there is only one more contributor, Fr. Wilh. Thalmann, Potsdam, who wrote interestingly about "Rarities of the German Specialist Literature". Are there no more capable authors among the literature friends who could submit an article, even if it's only a small one? The BW would benefit from that and other readers could be encouraged to prepare an article with interesting facts for the community.

An additional support for the BW could be the use as advertising paper for classifieds. Many literature friends may surely have duplicates to give away or have the desire to purchase missing items. So far the BW only had published one small classified, requested by the author of these lines. The classified produced new contacts which resulted in mutual literature exchange. The costs for such advertising will pay off by themselves but in total, these small amounts will accumulate to a sum, which will enable the publishers to expand the magazine even more.

Not everyone is in the position like Hermann E. Sieger, who commendably donated a considerable amount towards the further extension of the BW but it is urgently necessary to note that rather every serious collector subscribes to the BW in which he will always find something in his collecting areas and if he believes that this is not the case, he should consider it as his obligation to support the BW in the interest of the scientific philately.

As an absolute minimum, every philatelic association should subscribe to the BW as a service towards their members, as bigger the readership is, and as more the BW can internally extend. Due to the little support the BW receives, the internal costs may not be covered and someone has to respect that the publishers did not spare time or money to keep the BW alive.

Unfortunately, for many the BW is still unknown. It would be therefore the obligation of every collector who knows the BW to make his collector friends aware of its existence. For sure the publishers will gladly provide a certain number of sample issues free of charge. In addition it would be a thankful duty for the philatelic press to inform its readers in their publications about the aim of the BW and especially, that all publishers of philatelic literature, inform the BW without exemption their new publications. Due to that not only the interests for philatelic literature will be raised but also the work of the writers will be appreciated far better, an advantage from which all, not only the collectors and literature friends, but also the publishers will benefit considerably.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
April 1932, Volume 12, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

April 1932, Volume 12, Issue 2

Translation Digest

(Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to me.)

p.[1]

Literature at Exhibitions.

P. Preuss

For the research collector it is always a pleasure to take a peak into the "literature" section during exhibitions. But how many collectors pass by, because they have no time for that kind of thing. At large exhibitions, literature is not represented in the necessary fashion, which will show the layman the diversity and significance of the literature. Mostly only newer works as well as current magazines (of which most do not come to the display) which cannot give an accurate picture of philatelic literature.

To present whole libraries, as it was done in the 80s by A. Moschkau and Th. Haas during club exhibitions, can no longer be accomplished, because of the immensely expanding literature and the small space usually dedicated to it, makes it impossible. It would therefore be appropriate, if special literature exhibitions would be organized, as the Berolina-Ring did recently in admirable fashion, for example. But how many clubs would invest enough love that is necessary to build such an exhibition, regardless of the work and difficulties involved?

In the last few years many clubs have organized postage stamp exhibitions or advertising events, which would attract members to the club and philately. The success was promising. During these exhibitions, opportunities presented themselves to take up the cudgels on behalf of literature. Two years ago when the Leipzig Club sponsored an exhibition, literature was given 20 sq. m - Twenty - Because of that, literature won recognition and was well noted. But during most exhibitions the literature has to content itself with a modest spot, if even that. Naturally collectors ignore those. People who have tried to display literature, naturally lose the zest to engage themselves in another literature exhibition. But these things take their toll eventually. That is why literature has to be always present in local exhibitions to provide it deserved recognition.

Naturally, it is necessary to give a brief talk about the importance and meaning of literature; if time is too short for such a talk, at least the opening speech has to point out the literature.

Some clubs possess, if not a large, at least an older library with good rarities. Many - especially the newer clubs - often have little literature. But even the "little" may suffice at the beginning to add a literature section to the general exhibition. It would be inappropriate to display volumes of magazines. It would suffice that only one number be displayed. But members should display newer newspapers as well as main and special catalogues, handbooks and specialised editions about individual stamp countries, about cancellations and other philatelic aspects, so that every collector may find something, that helps with his collection. The display of a systematically arranged catalogue of the total club literature, which often even the club members are not aware of, would be welcomed. A literature collector should especially always be present, not only to answer questions but to also point out the important and most meaningful items in the literature department to interested onlookers.

All this should be suitable to arouse the interest in literature, without which a real collector cannot exist.

The club's Chairman and especially the persons in charge of the books, should make it their tasks during all exhibitions and advertising events, to give literature a prominent place, which it has longed for, for a long while. No setbacks, no failure should keep it from displaying literature again and again for the benefit of the whole of philately.

p.[2]

Hm, Hm!

P. Preuss

We read in a well-known Austrian magazine an article, which culminates in the question: Does the editorial department not have any scissors? It does not make a difference who a man is or how he obtained his knowledge, the main thing is, he be a man of honour and he does a good job. It is incomprehensible if the main editor has the misfortune of picking up the extravagant praise of an author, which benefits only the writer himself. It is an achievement, if someone receives the Lindberg Medal. That is recognized everywhere. But the Lindberg Medal is not bestowed for advertising purposes but for performance. That is just a bit much, dear sir! And then this: What is it with the chemical antidote at point III of this article? One can really not understand that and I doubt, that a chemist will understand how an antidote can be used to prove something; the "termicus technicus" makes it clear, that the chemical knowledge of the author is not really modern or deep. Even an author of the calibre of this one must write selectively; whether "bastards" in philately exist, I don't know and I am not interested in the power of his unknown father. If the author attended the Baden District Court in Freiburg regarding the big trial about the colonial stamps then, he seems to have forgotten that the most significant authority in this field in the world is Albert Friedemann of Leipzig. This person is probably known by the author. Friedemann seems to have been the man who worked on this case, and who drew up the most detailed and most objective expert's report against Dr. H. I remember this case vividly and had the opportunity to look at the photos in detail. And? Who has the author of this article represented? It should be appropriate to quote Friedemann's report Book IX page 2,427 and especially page 2,500 and 2,501. If someone writes such articles about observations and experience in stamp authenticity, one must mention all facts and cannot sweep under the rug the name of the most significant (and possibly the most modest philatelist) - again I mean Albert Friedemann -. He was there at the trial and it is to Friedemann's merit that the outcome of this case ended that way. You can go too far, or should the collectors all use chloroform?

Credit where credit is due, but we demand objectivity in our philatelic magazines and hope that this short outline will be taken to heart.

p.[2]

Miscellaneous.

pp.[3-4]

New issues from the book market 1932.

p.[4]

Article overview.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
August 1932, Volume 12, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

August 1932, Volume 12, Issue 3

Translation Digest

(Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to me.)

pp.[1-2]

Potpouri.

J. A. B[osshard]

He who does not use philatelic literature is not a true collector. That is an old truth and unfortunately is given little attention. Where do the many collectors get their knowledge if they do not read? The Bundestag is going to bestow an annual Sieger Prize for philatelic work. Looking at the many articles, which have crept up during the year in philatelic magazines, scientific articles are rather meagre. An exception is the teacher Siegfried Simon of Karlsruhe, who researches the Baden Postal System tirelessly. He certainly would rank among the first recipients. The other prize for the best work, well, would be more difficult to decide. Maybe that would be Dr. Munk for his Kohl-Handbook, especially relating to the work on Great Britain.

The Grün Sammlerwelt [Green Collector's World] is now starting to take into account the literature and has found in Mr. Schmittziel, Hamburg, an editor. We are pleased that another magazine is looking after the literature. Unfortunately, the editor is making the same mistake in that he uses new abbreviations for the article review pages. Really, isn't the confusion already big enough and is there a need to use new abbreviations, when they already exist? At the moment we are trying together with the German Philatelic Yearbook to use only established abbreviations, to bring an end to the chaos. The many acknowledgements which we have received from all corners of the world, show that we are on the right track. Also, the procedure shows that the mentioned abbreviations are definitely needed. And now another newspaper brings new ones ... yes, yes ... when two or three are together, a new club has to be established. Let us not recognize and use standard work! ... We philatelists are of course always in agreement when attending a nice dinner, right?

The large undertaking of engineer Edwin Müller in Berlin regarding the cancellations on the 1867 postage stamp of Austro-Hungary is almost finished. It is a monstrous task which the author has accomplished. The Postmarke in Vienna is by the way a very industrious publisher, another two new works have been published, numbers 7 and 8. One contains the Grazer Stadtpost, the other Austria's 1850, 9 Kreuzer, Type I.

The Danzig Airmail Exhibition has published a very beautiful advertising report. It is, however, a pity that the said exhibition has to take place right when the Association has their meeting in Heidelberg. I am sure that one or the other collector would have loved to travel to Danzig to visit the exhibition. Is it necessary that it coincides with the Bundestag of German Philatelists?

P. P. Lindenberg writes in the Berliner Allgemeinen Zeitung about the Vanishing Literature and is very sorry, that many acknowledgements go to foreign philatelists. If Lindenberg writes that research work is demanded, we have to support that vehemently. Unfortunately, he is right: we in Germany "have no time" for our hobby because of the bad economic outlook. On the other hand, not every person, regardless of whether he is a prominent collector, will be interested in the field of literature. Maybe you can also say: Thank God. And then one has to remember that there are only a few collectors, who study literature. Even the most outstanding works suffer from the reading laziness of philatelists, just to mention the Kohl-Handbook.

But the Germania-Ring has accomplished a deed for the collector, which cannot reap enough recognition. The library of the Ring will now be administered by the university library of Leipzig and now can be easily and comfortably accessed by all collectors. Because of that, a technical library has been opened to the public and every collector has the opportunity to avail himself of it.

The collector is aware of many unsolved philatelic questions. I would suggest a prize competition by the Bundestag every year. For certain these editors would have suggestions for discovering unknown regions. Why not?

pp.[2-3]

New items from the book market 1932.

pp.[3-4]

Miscellaneous.

p.[4]

Article Overview.

Schmittdiel

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
November 1932, Volume 12, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

November 1932, Volume 12, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to me.

pp.[1-2]

Public philatelic library in Leipzig.

Pr.

It is well known that the German Library in Leipzig and the Prussian State Library in Berlin have received a generous amount of philatelic literature. Four years ago, the first received from C. C. Vogel of Pössneck, the Kröttsch philatelic library that he had acquired, called the "Vogel Endowment", while the latter, acquired from Dr. Rommel in 1915 a significant literature collection, combined with the libraries of Beck and Bungerz gifted to them in 1930. The German Library had already produced a catalogue in 1928, while the stock of the Prussian State Library has not yet been completely worked on.

Unfortunately, both libraries are called "gifted libraries", which means that the books and writings can only be read in-house and cannot be loaned to take home. It is therefore almost impossible for collectors not living in the vicinity to use them.

To make the use of philatelic works, writings, newspapers and such available to every collector, the Germania-Ring, Verband Deutscher, Österreichischer und Schweizer Postwertzeichen-Sammler-Vereine e.V., located at the moment in Leipzig, and the Verein Leipziger Briefmarken-Börse e.V., in Leipzig have decided to offer unselfishly their extensive library to the University in Leipzig for storage and administration.

To serve philatelic research in a broader sense it was agreed by contract with the University Library, that the literature will be available to all members of German Philatelic Clubs. They cannot only be used for free in the reading rooms of the University Library but can be loaned to take home. Members outside Leipzig can receive requested literature free of charge with only postage paid when returning it. People can also order through their local libraries, which are connected.

You can borrow for four weeks. In some cases that can be extended if the item has not been requested by someone else. Dr. J. Schubert, himself a philatelist and well versed in philatelic literature, is charged with the administration. He offers information at any time and is eager to answer written questions.

As it behoves the scientific character of the University library, the literature is systematically arranged, so that not only can the writings of an author be given, but also which books and works about a certain field are available. For each serious collector, who wants to build his collection on a scientific basis, the necessary literature can be found. If you wish, you can be advised which library has a specific book, not available at the University library, and which can possibly be ordered from said library.

It is said that the organisation of the recently-donated literature will be finished next month. The erstwhile hand-written indices will be installed in the large reading room of the University's library, available to anyone. The creation of a printed catalogue is in progress.

Because of the difficult times today it is almost impossible for the serious collector to purchase philatelic literature. But that it is possible to use it free of charge, is due to the kindness of the above mentioned associations and clubs for which all philatelists should be extremely thankful.

pp.[2-3]

New publications from the book market 1932.

J. A. Bosshard

pp.[3-4]

Miscellaneous:

Obituary of Paul Kleeberg.

Obituary of Rudolf Siegel.

Obituary of Constantin Svenson.

Other news of literature, exhibitions &c.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
December 1932, Volume 12, Issue 5/6

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

December 1932, Volume 12, Issue 5/6

Translation Digest

(Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.)

pp.1-2

Author: Title.

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

Looking Back (or Reflections)

By J. A. Mosshard, Meiningen

Looking back over the past year, one has to have respect for the philatelists. A lot of work has been done and a lot put into print, despite the hard times. Yes, yes, collectors are a busy and hard-working folk. The Kohl-Handbook continued to put out installments punctually, to the delight of philatelists, the specialized journals appeared regularly, and even though everyone complains and is suffering because of the current conditions, still everyone continues to work and to slave away. Some [people] are doing better, others are doing well, we won't ask about that. We are actually happy when no one asks us how we are doing or reminds us that we are living in hard times. Subscription fees [for journals] are not too high, membership costs we can still manage, when we realize that for the meager sum [involved], we have for an entire year fun, joy, diversion, and [an] activity. We are, after all, philatelists and we provide the evidence for ourselves that we are idealists and we still enjoy things that really do not fit into today's bad times and funny times. We all love those wonderful hours when we sit alone at home, poring over our stamps and quietly enjoy doing our philatelic tasks.

This past saw [the appearance of] a few significant works: I am thinking of the Memel newspaper von Ing. Becker, but then also of the new Inflation-Handbook, which has just appeared, and of the works by Major Ohrt, Edw. Mueller, etc., etc.

Unfortunately, a few well-known authors also died this year. We will miss their articles and be reminded again and again of the many [people] whose names will no longer appear in the philatelic journals.

The Germania-Ring, a registered society, has established a new prize specifically for German language literature, the Bungers Memorial Plaque, which was awarded for the first time in 1932. It is an especially welcome event that a society honored our Alexander Bungers in this manner and showed the specialized journals that one is [= people are] also thinking of them.

The "Buecherwurm" [Bookworm – a philatelic journal] also appeared in spite of the difficult times and brought collectors the newest details about newly published books, etc. In the coming year we will also continue on the path we have begun, and now we wish and hope that in 1933 the philatelic community will support our efforts. Of course, we also hope that the coming year will bring with it better times. And with these wishes, we bring to a close the year 1932. Please do not forget, dear readers, to renew your subscription to the philatelic "Buecherwurm." The cost is just three RM [Reichsmark] and can be paid to the account of Fritz Seifert, Leipzig O[st] 5, Dresdner Street 79, Postal Savings Account number 504 44 in Leipzig.

We also want to thank our co-workers for their support and cooperation and to thank our readers for the interest they have shown [in our publication].

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
February 1933, Volume 13, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

February 1933, Volume 13, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.)

[p.1]

New issues from the book market 1933.

J. A. Bosshard

[p.2]

This and that.

Some thoughts on philatelic periodicals.

[p.2]

Miscellaneous.

[pp.3-4]

Article overview.

Fritz Seifert

[p.4]

Literature for sale.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
April 1933, Volume 13, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

April 1933, Volume 13, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

New issues from the book market 1933.

Fritz Seifert

[p.2]

Miscellaneous.

Obituary for Albert Friedemann.

[p.2]

Literature exhibition on the 30th April in the Sebastian Bach room of the Thüringer-Hofs in Leipzig.

A list of some of the material shown.

[pp.3-4]

Article overview.

Fritz Seifert.

[p.4]

Literature for sale.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
July 1933, Volume 13, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

July 1933, Volume 13, Issue 3

Translation Digest

(Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.)

pp.1-2

Author: Title.

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

About The Destiny and Value of Philatelic Books and Magazines

By Max Ton, Weimar

Habent fata sua libelli.

Also Books have their destiny.

This old book dealer adage is valid even today. Used in conjunction with the collector of philatelic literature one may judge the value of the individual books and magazines based on their destiny. Agreed, the philatelist may assess the individual publication in regard to his collecting areas towards the practical usability, however he may not be able to do the same for older philatelic books and magazines, which may have in the eyes of a pure literature collector also have some sort of bibliophilic value. We have to therefore strictly differentiate between Philatelists who use a specialist library as assistance to build up their stamp collection and pure literature collectors. The latter one enjoy primarily newly published literature and have only in secondary priority in the library for their practical use as long as they are country collectors. But also the more practical philatelist must be in the position to recognise philatelic books and magazines in their value as reference book. Therefore it is here mainly the older philatelic literature from which it is helpful to gain knowledge successfully.

The German philatelic literature is unfortunately still a stepchild of most stamp collectors. In other words, the average collectors and not only these alone, but also the large specialist collectors satisfy their own collections to derive the required knowledge for the study of a country and its postage stamps. And yet one day the industrious collectors and researchers will come one day to a dead end, where he can go no more. Then he is finally convinced that it is necessary to look but once in the relevant literature. But even this is not always without any obstacles. Apart from the fact that the bookseller does not have the literature needed in stock, in most cases he does not even know what is philatelic literature at all, so the collector must provide to him the necessary explanations. The bookseller will then order the requested book accordingly. But alas, after a few days the collector will collect the ordered book, only to learn that unfortunately it has not yet arrived or to the biggest disappointment, it is completely sold out from the publisher. Finally, however, there is also the possible case that the publisher of the desired book or magazine in question has passed into other hands or no longer exists. Now the good advice is scarce. It requires not only the intelligence of a capable bookseller to satisfy its customers, but the customer, the collector itself must act to get what he wants. In this connection I will talk about "Philatelic Literature Rarities" in a future article.

Now I want to show only on the basis of a text written by myself how unjustified complaints of philatelists and philatelic literature collectors are, when they are interested in a small brochure that they like to have but are not willing to pay the price asked for by the bookseller or seller. In 1910, the Thurn and Taxis Central Archive in Regensburg by mutual agreement with the Stamps Collector Society BSV "Ratisbona" reprinted 33 different stamps from Thurn and Taxis. At the same time I made a large find of Thurn and Taxis stamps in which many things were discovered. A paper mill owner who was very well known to me and who had an affection for Thurn and Taxis stamps told me he had in his possession the extraordinary book by A. E. Glasewald about the "Postage Stamps of Thurn and Taxis"¹ but had lent the book to another collector and so far the book had not been returned.

From that day on, I naturally tried to get the Glasewald book for my library. Therefore, I immediately contacted the author A. E. Glasewald in Goessnitz who not only was the author and editor, but was also the publisher of the book. Unfortunately, in vain!

After that, in a time period of more than 20 years during which I bought and sold philatelic literature several times, I had seen this famous work by Glasewald only once in the large philatelic library of the International Philatelic Association of Dresden when I was working during the years 1916 to 1918 on my "Handbook of the German Philatelic Literature". But already in 1910, I recognized the great rarity of the Glasewald Thurn and Taxis book, which was well known and republished by the son of the old master Glasewald in a completely revised and extended issue². For many years the philatelist would have been without Thurn and Taxis Literature in book form if I had not written in 1911 my well known brochure, published by Georg Brand in Regensburg, about the Postage Stamps of Thurn and Taxis³ and made with this the first attempt to evaluate the Postal Markings of Thurn and Taxis. The brochure had been printed at that time in a single edition of 1000 copies. Approximately 600 copies of them might have been sold to foreign collectors. In 1919 the publisher provided me by way of repurchase of 400 copies. The remainders I then sold to the then existing company Eugenie Müller in Munich which during the inflation period had a flourishing trade with purchased leftover philatelic works. In 1921-22 Georg Bütow and I edited the new Thurn and Taxis book, which was published by Georg Bütow in Berlin⁴. For this purpose I wrote the historical and collector's text, while the stamp dealer Bütow entered the prices for the Thurn and Taxis cancellations. But in 1924 this book was overtaken by the stabilization of our currency. Although the rest of his content is now far more extensively for the Thurn and Taxis collector than the text of my 1911 published brochure of the same topic, all collectors are now only looking to get the latter one. Even if these collectors already have the edited Thurn and Taxis book by Glasewald from 1926 in their possession, they ask for my brochure from 1911. But now they tear mouth and eyes when they are asked to pay 10 Deutschmarks for the book, of which I myself do not even own a copy anymore for personal use.

After stabilization of the currency, Mrs. Eugenie Müller at that time took still 20 Rentenmarks for a copy. This would result in the sale of the remaining edition of 400 copies for a total of 8000 Marks. The publisher Brand however received for his first 600 units sold and after calculating the 100 Reviewers-and other free copies thereof only approximately 500 Marks. The printing cost of the book in the year 1911 amounted to about 300 Marks, another 100 Marks I received as remuneration fee, so that therefore the publisher has had from the first 600 copies sold only about 150 Marks profit. Only the intermediate seller, the company Eugenie Müller, Munich, after she had paid to me the amount for the remaining 400 copies I sold to her made a good business of at least 4000 Marks based on the assumed selling price of 10 Marks. My dear friends of philatelic literature, you may now say: these are exceptions! Yes, generally speaking, these are exceptions. But such exceptions are common with philatelic literature purchases. In the current economic time of need, no wealth can be made with philatelic literature sales. After all, the book or complete magazines you're looking for or looking for will obtain appropriate prices.

As a lover of literature but one must again bear in mind the infinite trouble someone has applied in the purchase of this or that works and magazines to just possess them. Today it is not difficult for someone with appropriate funds to purchase a medium or larger sized philatelic library as far as books and magazines come in question, which are in the philatelic trade or by means of exchange through philatelic associations easily available. It is a different situation however with philatelic literature rarities, whose acquisition even the wealthy lovers of philatelic literature may cause difficulties, or to a specialist collector who, let's say, is willing to accumulate a specialist collection of Thurn and Taxis city cancellations on the eagle stamps of Prussia 6 Pfg. orange of 165. With such situations even the wealthiest person will have difficulties. It is exactly the same way as for the stamps. The philatelic books and magazines must be purchased with great love for the cause and have to be seen like mosaic stones towards a library that also the junior philatelist will find his joy in it. But again and again the fate of the philatelic library will determine its intrinsic value.

¹ Glasewald, A. E. Die Abstempelungen der Marken des Thurn und Taxissehen Postgebietes. Gößnitz, S.-A., 1894.

² Glasewald, A. E.: Die Abstempelungen der Marken des Thurn und Taxissehen Postgebietes. Vollst. neu bearbeitete Ausgabe. Gößnitz, S.-A., 1926.

³ Ton, Max: Die Thurn und Taxissehen Postfreimarken, ihre histor. Bedeutung und ihr Sammlerwert. Erfahrung und Vorschläge über d. Katalogisieren d. Freimarken, sowie einem Versuch üb. d. Entwertung d. Abstempelungen. Regensburg 1911.

⁴ Bütow - Ton: Die Ring- und Ortsabstempelungen von Thurn und Taxis, nebst Bewertung. Berlin, Og. Bütow, 1922.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
September 1933, Volume 13, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

September 1933, Volume 13, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

[pp.1-2]

The literature at the WIPA exhibition.

It appears to be a list of all of the literature exhibited.

[pp.2-3]

Article overview from the specialist pages.

Fritz Seifert.

[p.4]

Notice of the death of Friedrich Leitenberger on the 9th September 1933.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
October 1933, Volume 13, Issue 5

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

October 1933, Volume 13, Issue 5

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

[pp.1-2]

Max Ton: About philatelic literature rarities.

It is obvious that older philatelic literature from the time when stamp collecting was still in the beginning is more interesting to collectors of philatelic literature compared with the newer philatelic publications. On the other hand the latter have a much higher practical value for the stamp collector as ongoing research brought new results about the old classic stamps. But with a clear conscience one can assert that the researches on classic stamps are as good as completed.

Hardly any author may have something new to say to the new philatelist - and if so - most likely only in different words, in reality the content is always the same. Therefore it is understandable that a selected cohort of enthusiastic friends of philatelic literature are, aside from stamp collecting, concerned more or less intensively with the new and old philatelic literature of the areas of their interests. A pioneer in this field was the late Carl Beck, the real founder of this magazine. We collectors of literature owe him very much. Beck had an especially fine nose to track something, not noted by others.

He also recognized in due time his fellow collectors interests very well. In this regard I like to talk about one of the biggest rarities of philatelic literature, when in 1864 Julius Moritz Ruhl published Briefmarkenfreund, a work consisting of 100 colored boards with enlarged stamp illustrations of different countries. It emerged from a parlor game - similar to a lottery - that had been published at the same time and which was titled The Stamp Bourse.

This extraordinarily rare work, which is basically nothing other than a Orbis Pictus (Visible World) which was brought to light by me due to a coincidence. At that time I had been a soldier and as such delegated to the accountancy office at the German Library in Leipzig. In this regard

I had to negotiate on numerous occasions with publishing houses in Leipzig for example, also with the son of the editor and publisher of the Briefmarkenfreund, Moritz Ruhl. Aside from a large find of brown three groschen stamps from Oldenburg from the years 1862/67, I ferreted out a small remainder of colored boards from the Briefmarkenfreund, initially called 100 Giant Stamps.

Later on I also found some title pages and introductory texts, hence it was possible to assemble eight complete copies of Ruhl's Briefmarkenfreund. Individual complete copies went at a price of 35 Marks each into the philatelic libraries of, for example, Beck, Bungerz and Dr. Elias. In 1918 Beck contacted me again and enquired regarding the still-existing printing woodblocks from which the individual boards of the Briefmarkenfreund were produced. I succeeded in purchasing these woodblocks very cheaply and Dr. Beck in turn purchased them from me for 30 Marks. Later on they came into the hands of Alexander Bungerz, at that time still residing in Tegernsee.

He in turn had been paid very well for them by his publisher Albert Kürzl of Munich. Based on a publishing contract between both of the latter mentioned gentlemen. In 1924 Ruhl's old Briefmarkenfreund in new design, edited by Alexander Bungerz, was published by Sammlerwoche in Munich. However, unfortunately this reprint, which only contained 64 woodprints, was for financial reasons not executed in color anymore. Furthermore, Alexander Bungarz had written an incorrect text for it, which lead to misapprehensions, followed by corrections in the specialist press.

The consequences were that no one was interested in this poor copy of the Briefmarkenfreund while I myself have received in the aftermath several orders from abroad to procure the original issue by Ruhl. But I was able to supply only one philatelic library, the library in Malmo with it, as far as I remember that copy was also not complete, nevertheless it realized 10 Swedish Crowns. Currently only 3 complete copies of the rare Ruhl's Briefmarkenfreund are most likely available in Germany, out of this two copies ex- the philatelic libraries of Beck and Bungerz are in the State Library in Berlin and one copy in the Germany Library in Leipzig. The latter one comes from the library of Krötsch of Leipzig. It cannot be ruled out that one copy exists in the library of the International Philatelic Association in Dresden. Someone can easily estimate the value of an original copy of the Ruhl's Briefmarkenfreund at 100 Marks, even for that amount it is very unlikely even today that someone can get a complete copy. It would be easy to write more interesting things about it but due to lack of space I cannot add more comments.

(End follows)

[p.2]

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market - 1933.

[pp.3-4]

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
February 1934, Volume 14, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

February 1934, Volume 14, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Max Ton: About Philatelic Literature Rarities.

I come now to another philatelic literature rarity from the Sixties. It is a small Brochure by G. W. Schubert, containing 48 pages. The Guide through the Labyrinth of all stamps of all countries issued so far, or, special index of the Symbols, Portraits inter alia figures, allegories, coat of arms and so on for easier recognition and classification of the same in stamp collections, published by the Royal Library von Burdach, Dresden in 1867.

This fancy booklet once found in a paper mill in Tambach-Dietharz, Thuringia when I was on the look out for old stamps. The result at that time in 1911 was a bundle of 120 One Silver Groschen rose Prussian postal stationary envelopes with the head of King Friedrich Wilhelm IV (lady sized covers) out of a correspondence between lovers. One of the envelopes even contained a few pairs and strips of the ¼ red-brown and 1 Silver Groschen dark blue of the first issue of Thurn and Taxis for 1852 in mint never hinged condition, in addition to the Schubert.

As the book title says, this unimpressive booklet which does not have a special dust jacket but is like all brochures at that time only affixed with a green paper band on the spine to make it a bit more durable, contains short descriptions of all stamps and postal stationary envelopes issued since 1840, including the explanations of the symbols and images on the stamps. It is therefore the first textbook for our fathers and grandfathers when they began to collect stamps as per a certain system.

In 1916, before I was called to the accountancy office Ob-East I was working for a few months as writer for the regiment, I was also still working on the first edition of my Handbook of German Philatelic Literature. This prompted me to visit the still existing Royal Library von Burdach and to ask about the Small Schubert.

It was not paid much attention. That was clear to me because with book dealers who have some knowledge about philatelic literature, even today you have to search with a lantern. But the young book dealer who served me at that time had some sense for my wish. It did not take long and he came back from his storage with five copies of the Small Schubert.

I promptly paid the asking price, at which I realized the guys are happy to get rid of these old worthless brochures and even got a few pennies change. My thoughts were different. I made not only for my personal interest, but also for the interest of all German and foreign collectors of philatelic literature a find of immeasurable value. Carl Beck and Alexander Bunnerz received the first copies. They only paid a few Marks. But that is not important, what is important however is that the Prussian State library Berlin and the German Library in Leipzig can count themselves lucky to possess a copy of that rare booklet.

The national uprising of our German Nation will later on be reason to appreciate more then ever also these literature treasures. In total I was able to track down 9 copies of the Small Schubert and to find them new homes in philatelic libraries in inland and foreign countries. The value of such a copy is by no means less than a copy of the Ruhl's Briefmarkensammler. In any case even with cheapest purchase will not be possible to obtain such a copy for below 50 Marks.

Unless of course, it is the emergency sale as I experienced in 1925, when from an old collector from Erfurt I could purchase the Small Schubert and Paul Lietzow's Black Book of Philately for 20 Marks. That was a rare occasion that will never be repeated. This leads me to a brief mentioning of the already mentioned work by Lietzow. This small book, containing 72 pages, is also wanted by many collectors. It is in principle an educational script about the first appearance of reprints and forgeries of all classic stamps. Primarily, it deals with the racketeering of the stamp dealer George Fouré, at that time the deadly enemy of Lietzow to whom he always lost until the at that time the councilor of the local court Carl Lindenberg, Berlin and councilor of the regional court Dr. Paul Kloss, Dresden the stamp forger Fouré's game could finally be put a stop to. That is actually the real practical value of the Black Book by Lietzow. But it is also because of the historical collector value in this regard that by no means today one is able to purchase for under 25 Marks.

By that I will the close for today the chapter about philatelic literature rarities. Already out of these examples the collector and enthusiast of literature will recognize how much endurance is required to gain success if someone does not to stand behind in the row of his friends and enthusiasts.

[p.2]

Fritz Siefert: New issues from the book market - 1933.

[pp.3-4]

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
February 1934, Volume 14, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

February 1934, Volume 14, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Max Ton: About Philatelic Lawsuit Literature

An important and yet very interesting area for the friend of philatelic literature is the "philatelic lawsuit literature". Treated by me as a special subject of which to my knowledge nothing had been written about as part of the collecting of philatelic literature. I assume that I treat this area with much love and attention since I have been employed for 9 years as a law court reporter at the Regional Court in Weimar and have here all lawsuits which were somehow related to philately treated in the interest of our passion, namely for the philatelic magazines.

In this regard, I did not lead myself from the opinion of two lawyers who wanted to convince me that the lawsuit reporting about the current "Swahili Stamp War" will by no means be reported in philatelic magazine but newspapers only. Very wrong! The ribaldry, caused by forgers and swindlers to the disadvantage of the philately cannot be stigmatized enough even if they were caused by firms which have an apparently good standing in the philatelic world and to the outside, by closer investigation however do not have a generally good reputation. However, I will not judge here.

I only like to demonstrate and prove the extreme importance of the historical development of the philatelic lawsuit literature and how important this is especially for stamp collectors and -dealers to prevent them from any eventual damage. The nuisance of the forgers went hand in hand with the development of stamp collecting. Already in the first philatelic magazine in Germany, the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler which was published in 1863 by Zschiesche & Köder in Leipzig we were confronted with the first "Forgery News". To collect them, in consecutive order and to value them accordingly is a thankful task of the friend of philatelic literature.

Even single pages and individual numbers are sufficient in case the complete volume of the oldest professional journals cannot be obtained anymore. Already in the early 70s the material is growing and in 1879 we are able to add Georg [actually Paul] Lietzow's Black Book of Philately to our philatelic lawsuit library. A small brochure, yet the little work gives a retrospect a common overview what harm forgers and swindlers did in the philatelic field. The whole character of the booklet shows how Lietzow pressed the forgers and hunted them eagerly.

With the ongoing progress of stamp collecting again racketeering by unscrupulous individuals again came to light at the beginning of the 80s. We have to report in the philatelic lawsuit literature the racketeering by the barber Alwin Nieske of Dresden who was not necessarily driven by bad intentions to produce and market forgeries, who however as then president of the International Philatelic Association Dresden, played an extraordinary questionable game until the councilor of the local court, Dr. Paul Kloss succeeded by legal means to eliminate this strange and inconvenient Nieske.

But why he was not brought to court? You may ask this my dear collector friend. Because it was possible without lawsuit and for that time to racketeering of Nieske was not so severe. This however changed soon after in the 90s, when the Stamp dealer Christoph Eggerglüss of Dresden, by the means of genuine printing stones, sold private reprints of brown and yellow 3 Groschen stamps of Hanover as genuine stamps and in addition he wrote to all Saxon law courts requesting the chancellor employees to cut out the stamps from old documents against good payment. He was brought to justice for that. In a lawsuit he was convicted for 150 Marks for the production and sale of Hanover reprints, however, he was acquitted for letters to the different law chancellors.

We go one step further and reach in 1891 the sensational "Krippner-Lawsuit" which took place at the provincial court in Freiburg i. Sa. That criminal case was the biggest at that time which dealt with the philatelic area. The Royal Saxon feather decorator Schumann alias "Gift" unmasked Krippner for producing the so-called errors of the ½ Neugroschen, light blue instead of gray, with the head of the King Friedrich August of Saxony, by cooking them in blue ink. Back then also the famous stamp dealer Bernard Blauhuth of Leipzig, whose knowledge of classic Old-German stamps was well respected, participated as an authority. Krippner was then on not less than 23 counts of fraud, convicted to 2 years and 6 month prison in addition to 3 years loss of civil rights. In parallel his forgeries and the tools used have been confiscated.

There are numerous lawsuits from the time after Krippner until the present time. Already in 1896 we learned about George Fouré which did not end in a lawsuit in Germany due to the Fouré's escape to Paris, is the for the philatelic Lawsuits literature of extreme importance. The then councilor of the local court Carl Lindenberg of Berlin, is to thank for the uncovering of the doings by Fouré. Dr. Jur. Otto Rommel, J.D. who lived at the time in Böhlitz-Ehrenberg, close to Leipzig is to be thanked for several interesting publications, contributing afterward several valuable items to the philatelic lawsuit literature.

I only like to mention his interesting catalogue about fantasy and bogus stamps, which unfortunately has never been published in book form but so far only in the volumes 1905/07 of the Post. Together with the above mentioned barber Alwin Nieske of Dresden, I also have to mention Engelhardt Fohl who owned a funeral home named Pietät, however, after his acquaintance with Nieske, his primary business became the counterfeiting of stamps and marketing of the same.

Also here the philatelic lawsuit literature is enriched by remarkable off-prints. Thanks to A. E. Glasewald of Gößnitz, we can add an interesting off-print extracted from the Mitteldeutschen Philatelistenzeitung of 1898, entitled Index of the Forgeries by Fohl and the Corresponding Printing Material, acquired by the German Philatelic Association. It consists of a paper containing two printed pages with 12 illustrations in the text, in addition to 11 specimens of Fohl's fabrications.

At around 1900 philatelic faking reached its peak. The famous producer of facsimiles Louis Mercier of Geneva brought imitations of classic stamp rarities into the philatelic world market, which at third hand, because the stamps are not marked as forgeries, provoked the fraud. His successor, F. Fournier, brought this factory of forgeries of all stamps worldwide which were not valid for postage anymore, to perfection. And again the philatelic lawsuit literature is enriched with another interesting publication, Le Facsimilie in the French and German languages, published in Geneva.

All this knowledge of forging may have prompted the today aged councilor of the local court, Emil Pauli of Berlin, to publish in the following years a number of remarkable publications in the service of philately and increased the philatelic lawsuit literature extraordinarily. I can only quote briefly some samples: The black lists. Catalogues and books in the area of the law. A presentation given in 1903 during the 15th Philatelists' day in Pforzheim. A script of 27 pages, published by Hans Adler of Greifswald, entitled About the Penal Protection of the Stamps Issued by the Post of the German Empire Against Forging and Misuse and A Proposal in the Interest of Philately to Amend the Paragraph (law) §§ 284 and 308 of the Early Draft of the Criminal code, Under Consideration of Similar Early Drafts for the Criminal Codes for Austria and Switzerland. Berlin, 1911, published by the author. The script contains 16 pages in Roman [numbers] and 101 pages in Arabic.

Furthermore, About the Penal Protection of the Stamps in Belgium Against Forgery and Misuse in the Light of Philately off-print/extract from the publication commemorating the 25th anniversary of the Philatelic Club of Berlin, 1913, published by the author, 17 pages. But also from the philatelic-criminal incidents of the past decades we have within our philatelic magazines comprehensive material of philatelic lawsuit literature.

Sometimes such lawsuit literature may appear to be very boring, however, if we ignore the legal aspect of the publications by Emil Pauli, such publications present the collector with teaching and entertaining literature in the notices about philatelic lawsuits found in larger newspapers. How amusing such literature is, not only for the philatelist but also for the layman I will explain in a further chapter based on "lawsuits on stamps" I have witnessed myself.

[pp.3-4]

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm

April 1934, Volume 14, Issue 2

[A Sample number consisting of the first two pages was circulated to encourage subscriptions]

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2013

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to me.

[p.1]

Fritz Seifert & Max Ton: Who is the Philatelist?

Draft and preparatory work for a biographic almanac (Phila-Gotha) of philatelic contemporaries of the 19th and 20th centuries.

This "Phila-Gotha" shall, if the economic conditions do not permit it earlier, initially be published in the year 1940, the centenary of the birth of the first stamp in the world. It shall be published in a handy book format, similar to the well known paperbacks by the Baron of Gotha.

The "Phila-Gotha" is not like common philatelic address books which have been issued in the past years very frequently, however, it is a most accurate biographic reference book in which all philatelists who emerged and became well-known since the year 1863 will be mentioned and provided with a short biography. Not only extraordinary stamp collectors and stamp dealers will be listed but also custodians of stamps, examiners, designers and draftsman of stamps, especially also all philatelic authors, publishers and collectors of philatelic literature will be added. Last but not least, well known stamp restorers and forgers, with the latter ones especially marked. It may well be assumed that the preparation of such a work causes unspeakable effort and work. Therefore the cooperation of all philatelists, especially those who are interested in being biographically listed in "Phila-Gotha", is required. We ask therefore all philatelists and interested persons to support us by submitting biographical documents. Furthermore we kindly ask you to inform us after the first publication about any errors and mistakes which slipped through so that the later edition in book form will be free of errors as much as possible. We are, even for the smallest biographic notice, grateful and will check in-depth and process each incoming mail in regard to "Phila-Gotha". Although we are already in possession of a large quantity of biographic documents, we have to take care that we do not miss any of our philatelic contemporaries who rendered outstanding philatelic services in any way.

This Phila-Gotha, which we may also call a Philatelic Encyclopaedia, shall be developed in such a way that it is a reference book almost indispensable for every philatelist.

When we decided to publish the preparatory works in Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm, we wanted at the same time to inform all philatelists about the great importance of this indispensable publication for all literature collectors that the memories of the founders Carl Beck and Alexander Bunnerz will not be forgotten. Furthermore, our dear philatelic friends, we believe that due to the "Phila-Gotha" we can tie especially the collectors of philatelic literature even more to our paper. On the other hand we hope to gain a larger group of subscribers than currently to the Bücherwurm. Our "Phila-Gotha" work will prove that we are not uninteresting and therefore also be to the new national socialist state a remarkable service with our biographical publications in regard to family research. The chamber of culture of the German Empire will see in our works an encouragement of all philatelic interests. To produce the short biographies in the "Phila-Gotha" properly, systematically and particularly uniformly, we kindly ask all our philatelic friends and readers of the Bücherwurm to supply us with complete biographic information, at the same time with their address. Especially we request that each provide the date and place of birth, occupation in which way the philatelic activity is carried out. In any case we have to carry out sufficient investigations on our own. We request you to send all letters to the following address: Editorial Office of the "Phila-Gotha", Author Max Ton, Weimar, Herbststraße 21. All correspondence to the editorial office shall be accompanied by return postage.

Any wishes and requests whatsoever in regard to the preparatory works of the "Phila-Gotha" will be appropriately verified, and in case they are found practical, will be properly considered. The biographic publications in the Bücherwurm will be done in such a way that we start with the next issue working through the alphabet. In case we have reached, let's say, the letter L and there came in the meantime additional new entries which were not yet added, they will be published only after completing the first run of the alphabet, when a new one will start and so on. Draft and preparatory works make it necessary that only in such a way will it allow completeness to be accomplished, which will then be considered as ready for print in a later book edition.

Now it is up to you, dear philatelists, collectors and friends of philatelic literature, to support us with your active cooperation in our ambitions. Please read from now on more than ever eagerly the Deutsche Bücherwurm, the professional organ of the collectors of philatelic literature, in which you will find with every issue answers to your question Who is the Philatelist?

Translator's Note: It would appear that the publishers of the Baron of Gotha paperbacks took exception to the unauthorised use of the term Phila-Gotha by Seifert & Ton as shortly after the publication of the April issue of the Bücherwurm a replacement front page was published on which the name of the proposed work was changed from Phila-Gotha to Phila-Almanach.

[p.2]

New issues from the book market 1934.

Fritz Seifert

Miscellaneous.

Award of the A. E. Glasewald Medal.
The Albert-Friedemann Medal.

Literature Sale.

[pp.3-4]

Article overview from the specialist pages March-April 1934.

Fritz Seifert:

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
June 1934, Volume 14, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2013

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to me.

p.1

Fritz Seifert & Max Ton

Who is the Philatelist?

Our announcement regarding "Phila-Gotha" in No. 2 of the Philatelistische Bücherwurm on one hand has raised common interest, on the other a hand it brought us a legal investigation due to the law of unfair competition.

The publishing house Justus Perthes of Gotha has protested against the use of the name "Phila-Gotha". We have therefore contacted that publishing house and declared that we will with immediate effect refrain from the use of the name "Phila-Gotha". We hereby inform all philatelist who are interested in our undertaking that in future the short term for Who is the Philatelist is just

"Phila-Almanach"

All correspondence in this regard, which has to be accompanied by sufficient return postage, we kindly ask to be addressed to the Editorial Office of the Phila-Almanac, Author Max Ton, Weimar, Herbststraße 21.

The publication of our "Phila-Almanac" starts with the issue of our Büchwurm No. 4 in such a way that the text will be added loose-leaf to the Bücherwurm. We start with letter A and kindly ask all philatelists, whose name starts with A who wish to be included in the "Phila-Almanac", to send us in due course their biographical notes. After detailed assessment of the situation we decided to deviate from our earlier intention that we proceed in an exactly alphabetical way so that each and every interested person can compile his "Phila-Almanac" step-by-step.

Editor and Publisher of the "Phila-Almanac"

Fritz Seifert and Max Ton

Leipzig and Weimar, 1st July 1934

About Philatelic Lawsuit Literature

By Max Ton, Weimar.

The latest news in the philatelic press report is that the publication of a "Philatelic Book of Law" (Code of Conduct) is to be expected in due course. If this is really the case, we have to be thankful our aged patron Mr. Geb, legal counsel, Emil Pauli, Berlin-Schmargendorf, who hopefully can see the fruits of his work by anchoring them in the coming year of 1935 in the new law. Furthermore, also the Imperial Federation of the German Stamp Dealers has worked to put a draft law for fighting the forging and forwarded that draft law by means of petition to the Imperial Ministry of Justice on the occasion of the imminent reform of the criminal laws. Also this suggestion has fallen on fruitful ground and therefore, also the Imperial Federation of the German Stamp Dealers has a substantial share on the creation of the to be expected "German Philatelic Book of Law". All this encourages me to continue my work "About Philatelic Lawsuit Literature" to be published in the Philatelic Book Worm. While in No. 1 of edition 1934 of the Worm we discussed the historical development of the philatelic lawsuit literature, in today's issue we like to talk about directly about the philatelic lawsuits. I have been approached by several sides to recapitulate the Krippner-lawsuit since this is assumed to be highly interesting. Hence I have reviewed the material accordingly and have written what follows.

About the lawsuits in a form, understandable for every philatelist, ignoring all negligibility. As commonly known, the Krippner-lawsuit took place from 13 till 17 October 1891, henceforth 43 years ago, at the district court of Freiburg i. Sa. He stands unique in the history of philately. Indicted for fraud in 24 counts was the stamp dealer Emil Reinhold Krippner, born in Adorf on 6 March 1852. Musician by profession, later as bookkeeper and traveler, in 1880, he had been managing director of a printing house for music sheets and lithographic institute in Freiberg a. Sa. With the exception of a small inheritance from his wife, Krippner did not possess any cash money. Everything else in his possession were stamps in the total value at that time of 3000 Marks. Krippner who had a criminal record for fraud was indicted for forging genuine Old-German stamps and stationeries by the means of fake perforations (roulette) and fake postmarks and selling them from 1888 - 1890. The most interesting of the various cases were the "Brunswick Horses" with fake roulette perforations and the 12 Kreuzer Landpost stamps of Baden with fake postmarks, the Oldenburg- and Thurn and Taxis stamps also with fake postmarks, in addition the high valued Saxony envelopes in the nomination of 5 and 10 Neugroschen with the head of King Johann of the year of 1859. The "Brunswick Horses" Krippner had perforated in lines with brass tools invented by himself.

The most dangerous forgery however was a Saxony envelope in the nomination of 10 Ngr., green with additionally affixed 5 Ngr red brown, Issue 1857. The only genuine thing on that envelope was the parcel label Nr. 226 "Siebenlehn" that had been affixed. Die and stamp were cancelled with indistinct, fake grill markings. In addition, the city postmark "Siebenlehn" had been forged by Krippner by means of using at that time common double circle Postmark. However, such a postmark was never used in Siebenlehn. Krippner purchased such Saxony-Envelopes in mint condition of 37 Marks, altered them into used pieces and sold them consequently to collectors for 100 - 210 Marks per piece.

In order to fake the age of the allegedly used Saxony-envelopes, Krippner soaked them in dirty water and bleached them afterwards in the sun. Treated in such way, the envelopes looked yellowed. Such a faked 10 Ngr. Saxony-Envelope apparently was even found during the auctioning of the Ferrari-Collection in that collection.

An extraordinary forgery Krippner created with the famous Saxony printing error 1/2 Ngr. black on light -blue of issue 1851 with the head of King Friedrich August II. From that error of which an original today is valued at 4000 Marks, and as generally known, only 67 copies exist it is presumed that also a few "genuinely used" copies exist. The value of the latter would be therefore much higher. Krippner found a very easy way of creating such a forgery. He just forged them by cooking used stamps of the regularly issue 1/2 Ngr. black on silver-grey for longer period in blue ink. By this he produced the rare error black on light-blue. The faked stamp had become the betrayer at first due to the postmark which was due alternation too light in color. The then authority, stamp dealer Blauhuth, Leipzig, an extraordinary expert on the stamps of Saxony, explained in this regard, Knipper just washed the ordinary 1/2 Ngr. black on silver-grey from the paper fragment, soaked it with blue ink and then affixed the altered stamp again on the fragment or cover. Due to that the postmark on the stamp appeared in much lighter color than the cover itself. Due to the soaking with ink the postmarks suffered a lot. Krippner however whitewashed himself, explaining that at that time Saxony cover sent from Leipzig to Hof had a postage rate of 2 Ngr. and it could easily also been an error caused by the Saxony Post. This trick was also noted by the Royal Saxony Court Feather Decorator F. A. Schumann from Dresden. His expertise explained that Krippner produced the errors by cooking the same in wash blue that has been dissolved in water. As per his opinion the re-coloring was done by cooking. By that, the wool fibers of the stamp paper of the 1/2 Ngr.-Stamp came out of the paper and left dark blue strips on the reverse of the paper. Same as Krippner, many other forgers were able to match the color. However forgeries suffered, irrespective if produced by cold or warm water, suffered from the earlier mentioned demerit. Today we would be able to recognize the stamp with the help of a quartz iodine lamp. As remembrance to the then sensational lawsuit, Schuhmann at that time prepared as a joke for his collector friends a few such Saxony errors by re-coloring the regular 1/2 Ngr.-Stamp, however, he marked them wisely with a small overprint carried out with a rubberstamp with "Uncle Poison". With that any future fraud was turned off. A genuinely used copy of a Saxony-Error today would have a sentimental value of 30,000 Marks.

As it was disclosed at the trial, Krippner procured from Brussels a large quantity of remainders of Thurn and Taxis stamps. Many of them were, namely the 5 and 10 Silbgr. as well as the 15 and 30 Kreuzer values of the issue 1859/61, furthermore the 1/4 Silbgr. black and the 2 Silbgr. light blue 1866, rouletted in color, with fake city and number postmarks.

Very prominent among the forgeries the fake postmark "Lobenstein" was highlighted. Furthermore Krippner struck randomly the four ring Postmark No. 67 either on 10-Silbgr.- or 30-Kr.-Stamps, not considering that Lobenstein only possessed Silbergröschchen currency. Also overlooked Krippner that Lobenstein did not used the postmark 67 but with 296. Here the freshness of the stamps as well as the sooty grey postmark struck on them whose rings had irregular distances become the betrayer of the forgeries. A large number of notices of frauds existed aside of the one explained in details here. They contained the same elements of the crime of falsification of documents and fraud. After a 3-day lawsuit, the stamp forger Reinhold Krippner consequently has been sentenced in 23 counts of fraud and falsification of documents to 2 Years and 6 Month in prison as well as loss of civil rights for a period of 3 years. Eight month of the investigative custody have been taken into account of the punishment. Furthermore, by request of the prosecutor, the fake certificates as well as the forgery tools have been confiscated.

Comprehensive are the cases that took place after the conviction of Krippner to the present in similar form. However, today's progress in technology of stamp examining, especially in regards to the use of the quartz iodine lamp, lead to faster detection and uncovering of forgers nests as it has been the case in the time of Krippner,

In the philatelic lawsuits literature however this lawsuit will always appear at the top.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
August 1934, Volume 14, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

August 1934, Volume 14, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to me.

pp.1-2

Author: Title.

About Philatelic Lawsuit Literature

By Max Ton, Weimar.

Since the "Saar" area currently is in the foreground of the interests of Germany, I continue my talks "About Philatelic lawsuit literature" initially I like to report about a lawsuit that took place some time ago at the district court in Weimar.

Béla Székula conducted a civil lawsuit at the expense of Germany.

At the Thuringia district court in Weimar an interesting lawsuit for fraud against the 25-year-old stamp dealer Walter Duscha, residing in Weißenborn by Klosterlausnitz i. Thür, took place on 9 May 1929. In that the defendant had been convicted for fraud to a punishment of 100 Marks. At that time, the philatelic press did not hear about the incident. It deserves however to be recorded in the philatelic lawsuit literature. Topic of the accusation has been a remainder in sheets of mint 15 Pf. Germania-stamps, light brown, with overprint "Sarre", which the stamp dealer Béla Székula of Luzern sent by mistake to D (Duscha). D (Duscha) had sold parts of that remainder without prior communication with Székula to his customers, respectively passed on the merchandise, however, Székula had not received and money for it. Even when Székula later on repeatedly urged and asked for the return of his stamps, he did not receive them.

The chief judge however accepted the lawsuit of the company Béla Székula against Duscha. The judge however explicitly emphasized that the company Béla Székula carry out only civil lawsuit on the expenses of the German Empire. Nevertheless, the defendant D (Duscha) was guilty for fraud since Béla Székula had kept his rights of ownership on the remainder of Saar stamps. It appeared that the acting judge committed a legal error in such a way that Duscha should not have been convicted for fraud but for embezzlement only. This was clearly visible since in the whole lawsuit there was never any talk about fraudulent misrepresentations from Duscha against Béla Székula. Interestingly however is that Béla Székula as a foreigner could manage that a German court accepted his civil lawsuit, which in reality had been a lawsuit, without any costs for him to be cheaply carried out. The story of the small lawsuits therefore stands unique in the philately lawsuit literature.

Now I am coming to report about a lawsuit that took place in July 1932 at the court of lay assessors in Weimar and which remained unnoticed in larger philatelic circles. That lawsuit carries the topic:

A Schaubeck Album unmasks a stamp thief.

Who has not heard about the famous now 40-year-old stamp swindler Hans Becker of Weimar, who already betrayed with large refinement several times stamp collectors and dealers and had been sitting due to that several time behind bars.

Once again the sophisticated racketeer was made responsible in front of a judge for earlier conducting large theft of precious stones in Erfurt, for extensive embezzlements of stamp approvals, and for severe falsification of documents. Becker who misused the honest name of his father, who had been a magistrate, for the benefit of his fiddling, now used a new trick. While in prison Becker's relentless drive towards dealing with stamps was noted. He was considered morbidly minded. Due to his fiddling he has long been on the "blacklist" of the stamp market, he conceived the following solution:

After his release from prison, he lined up with an accomplice, the 10 years younger locksmith Walter Seyring of Weimar whom he met while in prison. Since both of them had been unemployed, Becker took over a general distribution for "cleaning witches", brushes and stamps. He then hired Seyring as his deputy/representative. In the name of Seyring once again beautiful stamp approvals from all corners of the world arrived. Seyring however, who became a stamp collector by himself, one day received a larger approval sending from the Approval Association "Würzburgia". That approval he took over for the small amount of 1.60 Reichsmark and handed over the approvals in addition to the removal mount to Becker for final settlement. Becker did not however make the final settlement however, and stole the approvals. Beside an airmail cover of the Zeppelin-America-Line in the value of RM 17, he misappropriated possession of loose stamps in the amount of net RM 265. He then erased the fields marked by Seyring in pencil and wrote another signature in it.

A few days later, Seyring inquired by Becker if he settled the approvals promptly. Becker affirmed that and demanded from Seyring additionally his postage expenses, although Becker has stolen what was sent and hid the same in his bed.

The next day, Seyring angrily returned to Becker. At the very same moment when Seyring stepped over the doorsill of Becker's apartment, Seyring saw how Becker stashed away a Schaubeck Album with the mentioned Zeppelin Cover and some stamp approval booklets of "Würzburgia." This led to the break-up between the two. With that, Seyring unmasked his chief and accomplice as stamp thief. It was soon noted that Seyring only had been the puppet of Becker and as such innocent. In-between, however, the "Würzburgia" not only received back all their approval booklets, in addition to was also a complete stamp collection and duplicates in a Schaubeck Album.

The latter had Becker's mother sent in good faith, prior to the trial, in the belief that by that the case was closed. The principal of the approval service was very happy to receive all his stolen stamps almost complete in one go. Nevertheless, the swindler Hans Becker, who was denied mitigated circumstances by the court, was convicted for his trick with 1 year and 3 days prison in addition to 3 years loss of civil rights.

A: Periodicals
B: Books, etc.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
December 1934, Volume 14, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

December 1934, Volume 14, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

[p.1]

Fritz Seifert & Max Ton: Who is the philatelist? - A biographical almanac.

[p.2]

[Review]: Higher Philately, the Philately of the Future.

As such, the sensational philatelic work by Dr. A. B. Szalay, Hermannstadt (Siebenbürgen) was named. A through and through highly academic work, which, subdivided in two parts, brings us so many new aspects, that it is impossible to comprehend all of them coherently at once. The remarks are partly relatively comfortable, almost written in an entertaining form, however partly relatively complicated so it is recommended to study the work in parts.

The writer, Dr. Szalay, is a well-known philatelic author, who after decade-long observations and conclusions, also in tireless exercise, to successfully develop new ways for the philately. The price of the publication of 6.50 RM including postage and packing in under consideration of the extraordinary scale so little that someone can accept offhand that the writer in his position as an ideal philatelist is making a large financial sacrifice for us.

The work is divided into four main parts: 1. Klauseuburger Series; 2. Großwardeiner Series; 3. Study of Displacement; 4. Hungarian stamps and settings 1914-1918. On the base of these Hungarian stamp issues, Dr. Szalay deals with the deficiencies of printing techniques, faults on clichés and printings, color spots and so on and comes during these studies to the conclusion that on the basis of these characteristics it is possible to determine genuineness unerringly.

While an old adage says “too much is unhealthy”, this is not true here since this is the very first work which touches the content of the whole of philately by opening new areas like micro-philately (science of color spots), philatelic geometry of two dimensions, mechanics of perforation displacement, science of sheet positions, chronology of printings and so on. This work and the enormous effort will certainly win many followers amongst modern philatelists.

But philately looked at from the other side, where it is often- and much-praised as a recreation and entertainment after the burden and heat of the day, to ponder and work meticulously about tiny coincidences may not be followed by some, which are not the worst philatelists. An old experienced and ideal Philatelist wrote me once: “sometimes, when it is a pitch-dark night around me and I did not know either in or out, I escaped to my loved ones, my stamps, to forget everything around me”. When you are in such situations look to your album, you will not ponder further, you are looking for recreation, relieve your mind. However, all in all, head up for such praiseworthy, enormous effort, as here developed by Dr. Szalay.

[p.2]

Award.

- The Lindenberg Medal awarded to Architect Carl Schmidt, Berlin-Lichterfelde, owner of the best-known collection of Russian Zemstvo stamps donated to the Reichspostmuseum on the occasion of the celebration of the 47th anniversary of the foundation of the Berliner Philatelisten-Klubs on the 21st January. Our congratulations.

[p.2]

[New] Books.

[pp.3-4]

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
January/February 1935, Volume 15, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

January/February 1935, Volume 15, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to me.

pp.1-2

Author: Title.

“Philatelic Code of Conduct Book”

With the subtitle: "Postal certificate arrangement-, teaching- and protection book for the philatelic trade and exchange".

A comprehensive work by Adolf Dewitz, rich on good and ideal chain of thoughts, which likes to help and guide today's collector in all his needs, what and how he should or can collect in modern philately. It is a book full of good advice and standards for real and true philately, a practical guide for every collector thru the confusing labyrinth of today's Philately.

In his foreword the author says: "the work has been created, to deviate from the illogical, the disarrangement and the un-philatelic. What was now the illogical, the disarrangement and the un-philatelic. It was at first everything that was not immediate part of the philately but nevertheless as integrated as directly belonging to philately. It was also the versatile and controversial term of the complete area itself, philately."

This denomination by Dewitz is the cornerstone on which he builds his observations and thereof resulting conclusions and thoughts. However, he also mentioned in addition: "to bring all philatelists "under one umbrella" in regards to what to collect will never be possible. Who likes to collect "unnecessary things" can collect it; he can proceed per his taste and view, what he includes, as long as he considers the "Philatelic Code of Conduct Book."

After the detailed foreword the work is then divided into 22 paragraphs of which paragraph 22 again is subdivided into 29 parts.

§ 1 deals with objective, goal and determination of the "Philatelic Code of Conduct Book".

§ 2 brings short statements about the term philately.

In § 3, the author explains to us in detail the philatelic term stamps (he names the stamps with a new expression: postal document).

§ 4 explains to us the differences between semi postal and private stamps.

§ 5 deals with additional explanations and declarations in the sense of the "Book of Philatelic Conduct" about semi-postal and non-philatelic stamps.

In § 6 we find general information about postal documents and their imitations, while § 7 deals with essential classifications of postal documents (stamps) and their imitations and in

§ 8 we find classifications and explanations to the classes of postal documents and their imitations.

§ 9 explains dividing the groups, explanations and regulations for the groups (definitive, service, semi postal, airmail, postage paid, express, newspaper, and so on stamps).

§ 10 the author deals with departments and type of separations of fully fledged postal documents.

§ 12: class separations and explanations to the condition and nature of postal documents (11 different classes) in which the condition in percentages of the net-amount are valued.

§ 13 deals with an often controversial area, the philatelic colors and color names and give explanations for it. The author recognizes only 10 general colors which are grouped in 5 main colors (white, yellow (light and dark), red (light and dark), blue (light and dark) and black) and in 5 mixed colors (grey, green, olive, brown, violet, all in light and dark. Therefore, for the Book of Philatelic Conduct, the colors pink, chamois, ochre, Prussian blue, cobalt, lead oxide red, carmine, lilac, purple, light red brown and yellowish green are not discussed. Eventually the author may have been too strictly on that since without pink, chamois, Prussian blue, carmine and purple it may not be possible to get along.

§ 14 deals with the numbering and acceptance of the various postal documents in their areas.

§ 15 demands as first prerequisite of a regulated and fruitful philatelic commerce that all nit-picky and bureaucratically things are not considered.

§ 16 treats the common ideal basic findings and regulations for postal documents (kiloware, repaired stamps and forgeries). Repaired stamps shall be identified as such on the album pages. This demand is of course in good faith, however in reality it will be difficult to fulfill since some collectors do not even recognize their "beautified" stamps. Furthermore the postmarks are dealt with in detail.

§ 17 brings something for and about the philatelic commerce and exchange in the mind of the book of philatelic code of conduct.

In § 18 we read about remarks about philatelic publications, catalog values and definitions of discount groups in the sense of the Book of Philatelic Code of Conduct.

§ 19 discusses philatelic exhibitions in the sense of the Book Philatelic Code of Conduct, while § 20 deals with philatelic bourses, associations, societies in the sense of the Book of Philatelic Code of Conduct and countermeasures against unfair competition.

§ 21 is titled: Fight against the unfair pricing and the negligence and fraud in the philatelic commerce and chance. Unreliable auction houses, swapper, thieves, swindler, stock exhibitions, Implementation of the philatelic code of conduct and early warning service departments in the sense of the Book of Philatelic Code of Conduct. The last § 22 is called: "Decisions of the Philatelic Code of Conduct, about important or seldom used or not commonly defined philatelic expressions which sometimes are used or handled differently or contrary to the of philatelic code of conduct, often unknown or which are so important that they have to be immediately known for new philatelists for a certain area." This paragraph is divided as indicated in the beginning, in 29 subdivisions which deal with the following: 1: Pre-Philatelic Postal Documents, 2. Philatelic Predecessors, 3 Provisionals, 4. Philatelic - Postal-historical interests, 5, The Initial Intention of the Philatelist and Aero-Philatelists, 6. So-called "Cinderellas" or "Semi-Official Labels" or "Private Stamps" or Also the Completely Misleading Labeling "Private Airmail Stamps", 7. First Day of Use Postal Documents, 8. First Flight covers, 9. Classification of First Flight Postmarks and the Common Airmail postmarks, 10. Philatelic Reprints, 12. Airmail Lines, 13. Meter Markings, 14. Postal Stationeries, 15. Monetary Measurements for Postal Documents, 16. Mail Flights, 17. Postmark-Importance, Explanations and Designations in the sense of the Book of Philatelic Code of Conduct, 18. Overfrankings, 19. Validation of Parts of Cut-outs of Miniature Sheets and Such on Complete Letters, 20. Airmail, 21. Philatelic Consideration of the Universal Postal Union in the sense of the Book of Philatelic Code of Conduct, 22. The Maximum Repairable Area of Repairs, 23. The Clarification and Rectification of Wrong or Misleading Statements Related to Postal Documents, Airmail Documents Aerophilately Based on Examples Which Can Be Taken as Permanent Reference, 24. Adjustment and Monitoring of Catalog Values and Prices Other Lists for Philatelic Documents, 25. Areas of Examination, Examiners, Examinations and Certificates, 26. Mixed Frankings, 27. Declaration Against the Downfall of the Philatelic Commerce and Change Respectively Rebirth of the Same Due to Pure Logical Philately, 28. Post, Documents, Philatelic, Pre-Philatelic and Non-Philatelic Documents, 29. Supplementary Suggestion to §275 of the German Civil Law in the Interest of an Organized Philatelic Commerce.

The comprehensive list of content is followed by 10 large tables which deal with following topics: The classes of postal documents; the groups of postal documents; departments of post and airmail postal documents; types of post and airmail postal documents; groups editions, groups based on demands, pricing groups, collecting systems, and finally groups of discount followed by explanations of 14 short-decisions based on § 22, while at the end a table in 18 parts tries to explain the classes of condition of Postal Documents (stamps).

When we deal with the content of the book so it is to say that the grammar of the book is disturbed by too many sub-sentences and is therefore difficult to understand. It would have been better and would have kept the volume of the book substantially smaller and cheaper. Anyway, the passionate and for sure stressful work that Adolf Dewitz did for the philately in common deserves merit. Much would be improved in the philately when his recommendations find the attentions they deserve under today's circumstances.

With the publication of the Book of Philatelic Code of Conduct and the formation of the association of the philatelic code of conduct a peaceful and relatively unceremoniously unification of all philatelic associations domestic and abroad is desired to supervise effectively from this central point out the proliferations like forgeries and other inconsistencies. The first association that joined is the Association of the German Philatelic Societies (Individual societies can only join if they are not a member of an union or federation). No membership fees are charged. The essential thing is: every stamp collector can propose new regulations or have old ones modified if it is deemed as good.

The author called his book initially "Philatelic Book of Law." He then came to the conclusion that this was not very correct since as part of the book of laws belongs - last but not least - also penalties! He therefore called it more correctly as the "Philatelic Code of Conduct Book"

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
March/April 1935, Volume 15, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

March/April 1935, Volume 15, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.5-6

New issues from the book market.

Fritz Seifert.

pp.6-8

Article overview from the specialist pages.

Fritz Seifert.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
May/June 1935, Volume 15, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

May/June 1935, Volume 15, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.9-10

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market.

p.10

Miscellaneous.

- 60th birthday of Gustav Busch.
- Periodical merger: Germania-Berichte and Philatelisten-Zeitung with Das Postwertzeichen.

For some time there have been efforts to merge the two old specialist periodicals Germania-Berichte and Philatelisten-Zeitung with the Federation newspaper Das Postwertzeichen. This long-standing desire has been partly fulfilled since the 1st July of this year, in the sense that the Philatelisten-Zeitung, the organ of the German Philatelic Association (Gössnitz) and for some time now also of the German Postmark Collectors' Association has been with Das Postwertzeichen. Under its founder A. E. Glasewald the Philatelisten-Zeitung was a prestigious and leading magazine in which the sharp and skilful pen of A. E. Glasewald greatly bore fruit. The members of the German Philatelic Association now have Das Postwertzeichen as their organ and have surely not made a bad exchange in this regard. On the other hand the members of the Germania-Ring at this year's Ring conference in Braunschweig expressed support for their organ the Germania-Berichte. One can only welcome this decision, as the Germania-Berichte has set its own trend for a very long time. Two real collectors' magazines, published by collectors for collectors, are clearly beneficial to German philately, but it is now up to the collectors to regard and support these two real collectors' organs as their own organs, and thus to carry the idea of amalgamation and federalism further and further into German philately.

- The new catalogues.

pp.10-12

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
July/August 1935, Volume 15, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

July/August 1935, Volume 15, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.13-15

New issues from the book market.

Fritz Seifert

p.15

Miscellaneous.

Notes about the recipients of the Sieger Prize and Hans-Wagner Medal.

pp.15-16

Article overview from the specialist pages.

Fritz Seifert

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
September/December 1935, Volume 15, Issue 5/6

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

September/December 1935, Volume 15, Issue 5/6

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.17

Max Ton: *About Philatelic Special Prints

Only a few stamp collectors have so far recognized the importance and value of philatelic special prints. That's why some words will be said here about them. When the late Carl Beck and Bungertz, the founders of this magazine brought them to life, there were already quite a few "Philatelic Special Prints" on the philatelic literature market. Beck has been one of the collectors of literature who promoted them. This happened primarily in order to promote philatelic literature. By that, all philatelic libraries received a substantial increase in volume since special prints are considered as per the regulations and instructions of the German state libraries, individual volumes, irrespective of the content of the special prints being from newspapers or other periodicals.

A very special meaning of all of these "Philatelic Special Prints" has served the scientific specialists collecting individual countries. They are the correct guide and signpost for collectors of certain countries or specialist collectors as they do not need to accumulate so many different documents in their library. Whatever has been printed earlier that will be republished as a special print at a later stage. Insofar as the pursuit of these special prints has a practical use, they benefit to a large extent especially the specialised collectors of individual countries, in spite of the existence of philatelic special prints of general content.

While working on my new "Philatelic Country Library", which with the first bulletin of the complete philatelic literature of the Thurn and Taxis postal area, I got the impression of the value and importance of such philatelic special prints. It can be said that if the publishers of philatelic magazines would have the most valuable and useful articles for the individual States at least from Old Germany accumulated into special prints, the flood of individual articles in the complete magazine-literature would have been considerably less. At least we reached the target insofar that it is not necessary anymore when preparing an almost complete philatelic country bibliography to list in the chapter Magazine-Literature the articles, which in the meantime were issued as special printings.

When I said that Carl Beck supported the philatelic special printings only from the view of the literature collector it is still valid. However, today the vast number of specialist collectors who organize their collection as per scientific guidelines or even mount them for exhibition are in need of appropriate advice and guidance. And this is where philatelic special print helps. If it can be produced at a reasonable cost then it will find interest and buyers. However, this is not always a thankful task of the authors and publishers.

*Note: Special Prints are actually more-correctly called Off-Prints or Reprints in the UK.

At the foot of the page is an advertisement for philatelic off-prints from Germania-Berichte, available for sale by Fritz Siefert.

pp.18-20

Fr. Siefert: New issues from the book market.

p.20

Miscellaneous.

- Award of the Bungerz-Gedenk-Plaque for 1935 to Kurt Zirkenbach of Halle/Saale.
- Honour: Fr. Kalckhoff received the Verbands-Medal during the 14th Austrian Philatelist's Day.

pp.20-24

Fr. Siefert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

p.24

Obituary notice for Eduard Weide.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
January/February 1936, Volume 16, Issue 1/2

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

January/February 1936, Volume 16, Issue 1/2

Translation Digest

(Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.)

pp.1-2

Author: Title.

About the History of the Ring Library

By Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann

The merit to establish the Ring Library belongs to the founder of the Germania-Ring, the then Artillery Lieutenant in Spandau, the now retired Major Paul Ohrt in Düsseldorf. In bulletin No. 5 of May 31, 1898 of the Germania-Reports, the just formed "Central Library" is mentioned for the first time; the first donations about which will be reported continuously are reported, as reminder for emulation, on page 76 of the 2nd volume. The objective of the library was to create for the sake of the Germania-Ring a most comprehensive collection of philatelic literature and therefore to spare smaller clubs the purchase of expensive works and the larger clubs the maintaining of foreign magazines, at the same time to give all members of the ring the possibility to use the comprehensive library at minimal costs. The lending fee per volume was only 15 Pf. for a lending period of 3 weeks, the postage costs at the charge of the lender as can be reviewed in the by-laws of the Central Library found in the rules and regulations of the Germania-Ring 1905. The first activity report of the library for the years 1905/06 was published during the Ring Day in Göttingen 1906, the successors were published continuously at the subsequent Ring Days.

As per Resolution of the XI Ring Day in Braunschweig, the Central Library was transferred in the beginning of 1906 from the administration of the then captain Ohrt, Düsseldorf to the administration of the then first president of the association of stamp collectors of Potsdam, the editor Wilhelm Nickel, who has been entrusted to develop the library further. In No. 4 of volume 1906 of our Germania Reports he published the first index of our library that then contained 16 volumes of scientific works, 75 volumes of domestic, 9 volumes for foreign magazines and 22 volumes of catalogues. It was a relatively small holding which gave the librarian many possibilities to complete and enhance the library. Unfortunately, shortly after Nickel took over the library he fell ill and passed away on 3rd September 1906. The library has been initially transferred on temporary base and as per resolution of the Ring Day 1906 in Göttingen into the hands of the author. The library therefore remained in Potsdam until the end of the year 1929, in total for almost 29 years. My first announcement was published on page 138 of volume 1906, to advertise the development of our library. Further announcements were published in almost every issue of our bulletin. The same objective served also my article "club books and club library" on page 205 of volume 1907.

As book dealer by profession and therefore book lover I took it over with pleasure since I could use my business and philatelic-bibliographic experience to grow the library. My extensive philatelic connections, which grew due to the library even further made it easy for me to get in exchange contacts with the large private, society and association libraries and to request with a little luck free of charge/gift copies or review copies and those immediate into the regular column "News from the Book Market" of our GB (Germania Reports). Not only the domestic market has been search through, also the foreign magazines have been hunted through for potential additions. Despite that this caused a lot of work in written form, to my joy I could book good success and therefore had an extensive domestic and foreign correspondence which, as I also had to take care of my family, I only could carry out after 10 p.m.

By the end of 1907 I published the first book index of the Central Library of the GR in form of a brochure which already listed 41 scientific works, 132 German language and 18 foreign magazines, 39 catalogues and 10 society bulletins and miscellaneous. On page 64 of volume 1908 I could again list additionally 19 scientific works, 38 domestic and 13 foreign magazine volumes, 17 catalogues and 13 society and miscellaneous publications. Thanks to the comprehensive support I received, the work progressed very well.

A very well and valuable growth in the Ring Library was possible by the purchase of the library of the Court Barber Berger which went for the amount of 700 RM into our possession. List of content is in the GB (Germania Report) 1910, Page 9 and 25. A main credit for the procurement deserves the then first president of the Ring, City Building Officer Sommerfeld, Gelsenkirchen who on my request laid-out the purchase price and saved the library therefore from leaving to abroad. The purchase price had been little by little on many begging's published in the GB paid back by donations from our members.

Many other well known philatelists, collectors and dealers have also helped with the development of the library for which I am very thankful. The largest donators shall be mentioned here at least with their names: Albrecht, Altwig, E. Bahrendt, Carl Beck, Alex. Bungerz, Director of Post Drees, Dr. Elias, Fieldt, Alb. Friedemann, Genth, Consul General Heinze, AG. Herzog, Hettler, Himburg-Schricke, Dr. Kalckhoff, Kolb, Phil. Kosack, President Lindenberg, Jul. Lossau, Walter Lürssen, Hans Müller, Paul Ohrt, Geh. Rat Pauli, Peckitt, Dr. Pirl, E. Plotz, Frz. Reichenheim, Reinhardt, H. Rohm, Dr. Rosbund, L. Sauter, Dr. Schiffer, Dr. Schönherr, J. Schütte, Mrs. Seifert, E. Sipmann, Eug. Stammeler, Stanley-Gibbons, Edm. Stein, Prof. Stenger, Wilh. Wolff. A number societies have given their duplicates to complete our holdings and our Dr. Paul who went missing in Flandern during the world war bequeathed us his remarkable library for the benefit of our library and as memorial towards himself.

Shortly before the world war, from 1912 - 1914, I published a "comprehensive index of the Central Library of the Germania Ring" which listed over 2000 complete books and numbers that can be for every literature friend, especially due to the listed magazines, a handbook for his research since also the magazines which are only available in single numbers were incorporated.

The library was, even during the world war, almost continuously in operation as I had been assigned to the front at Dixmuiden for a period of 7 month only. The continuation of development however was difficult during the war and in the time after it, especially with abroad and has not been able to get under way as before. The years 1920 - 1924 had been even a real emergency- and urging period since the Germany-Ring needed all our money to continue the publication of our Germania Reports. During this time I had to ask our members continuously for donations for the bindings and appreciation with a lot of thanks that from many sides, sometimes remarkable donations were received. However, when my own economic circumstances deteriorated, time has come that I had to downsize my accommodation to get separated from the library to which I have been adhered to, with a heavy heart. She came to the administration of the engineer E. Krieg in Göttingen and is since September 1932 affiliated with the library of the University in Leipzig where there was sufficient space available for further grow under the competent leadership of Dr. Schubert.

If I can say a final word about the usage of the library by the members of the Ring I can report that the library, as documented in the work reports, grew slowly until the begin of the World War and I always had the wish that the library could have been better. However, it is our old experience that our stamp collectors and even many who call themselves philatelist, have their own disadvantage very little sense for our specialist literature. They are usually happy with their favorite magazine and the Senf or Michel (catalogue) It should be mentioned that the editor of the Kohl Handbook, Dr. Munk, had often used the library.

Finally it should be mentioned, that during and after the world war some losses especially in valuable volumes have occurred, something every library had to bear. Certain book lovers have a very special insensitive conscience. - Three losses I like to announce here without mentioning names. Mirabeau and de Reuterskiöld, The Swiss Postage stamps from 1843 till 1862 (German Issue); Ohrt, The Postage Stamps of the Kingdom Prussia (with images) and Volume 1 of the Germania Reports. The latter one in the meantime has been replaced by the respective member. Maybe this announcement will help that these books will be returned to the library (to be send to Fritz Seifert, Leipzig 05, Dresdner Str. 79). With the wish that the Ring-Library will continue to grow to the benefit of our collectors I like to close my portrayal. It is for me a very special gratification that the library is now in good hands.

Since the contract between the Library of the University of Leipzig and the Germania Ring has been signed on June 20, 1932, already 3 years have passed. I therefore like to add a few statements to the very important notes and explanations by Mr. Thalmann about the History of the Ring Library, which makes reference to the development of the library during the past 3 years. I have written in Germania Reports (1932, Page 70/71) about the admittance of the literature collection into the rooms of the library of the University and the respective administration and usage. The book collection, as received by the library of the University could not be verified completely against the list of content that has been issued also in printed form, as prepared painstakingly by Mr. Thalmann as the losses are reported by Mr. Thalmann have, what I herewith have to confirm, increased. Under these aspects it is important that the library now is affiliated to a public library and subject to their administration as the danger of losses of books in this case can be mitigated.

Fortunately it is reported that continuously new additions, especially on magazine continuations can be registered. Furthermore, many complete yearly volumes, especially on German language magazines in bounded form, which makes the lending much easier or just possible, could be added. Independent philatelic works however only very few could be added. A larger addition was in the year 1933 by the taking over of duplicates from the library of the Association of the German Philatelic Clubs domestic and abroad as well as the large donation by the council of the local court, Mr. W. Herzog.

The listing of books has now been performed systematically in the same way as the complete library of the university is listed, separated of course into philatelic collection and other collections. Very briefly I have reported about that system in the bulletin "The Philatelic Literature Collector" (Editor C. Schmittiel, Hamburg), 2. Volume, 1933, Pages 19/20 and 23/24 and must refer the interested readers to that bulletin. A detailed catalogue, which reflects the needs of the state of the art bibliography is in preparation and progresses a bit slowly but steadily. Only after its completion, it will be proven what kind of vast area the philatelic literature contains. Finally in regard to the usage of the library, it will be used especially much from outside and if the number of loaners will continue to grow as currently it can be said that the Ring Library will fulfill their purpose completely.

Dr. Johannes Schubert.

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
March 1936, Volume 16, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

March 1936, Volume 16, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.9-10

Max Ton: Country bibliography – the Old German States: Thurn & Taxis.

pp.11-13

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

p.13

Miscellaneous.

- 50th Anniversary of the House of Senf.
- A new periodical Äquator.
- The 42nd German Philatelists' Day.
- Medicine and postage stamps – a new society.
- A novel stamp exhibition.

pp.14-15

New for the collector.

Mostly from the Berichte of the Firm of Herm. E. Sieger, Lorch/Württemberg.

p.36

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen im Reichbund der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
April/May 1936, Volume 16, Issue 4/5

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

April/May 1936, Volume 16, Issue 4/5

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.17

On the 42nd German Philatelist's Day, 6th-7th June 1936 at Burg Lauenstein (Oberfranken).

pp.18-20

Article overview from the specialist pages.

Fritz Seifert

pp.20-21

New issues from the book market.

Fritz Seifert

pp.21-22

Miscellaneous.

- Obituary for Prof. J. Strohmeier.
- Appeal – regarding the Sieger Prize.
- Die Briefmarke. An exhibition in Dresden, 1st-16th August.
- The Olympic stamps of the German Post Office.

p.22

Upcoming events.

pp.22-23

New for the collector.

Mostly from the Berichte of the Firm of Herm. E. Sieger, Lorch/Wttbg.

p.24

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen im Reichbund der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
June 1936, Volume 16, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

June 1936, Volume 16, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.25-26

Philatelia Internationaler Verein für Briefmarkenkunde, Sonderhausen-Halle.

Kurt Zirkenbach, Halle.

A history of the Society.

pp.26-28

The New York Stamp Show.

pp.28-29

Whole pieces or cut out.

Erich Mohnke, Berlin.

Whether to collect postmarks on piece or complete envelopes.

pp.29-30

New issues from the book market.

Fritz Siefert, Leipzig.

p.30

Miscellaneous.

- Obituary for Emil Heger.
- The Albert Friedemann Medal.
- From sketches – Edwin Müller and W. von Rachmanow.
- 60th birthday of Nils Strandell.
- Appointments.

- Postage stamps for the German Brown Ribbon.
- Special postage stamp for the World Congress for Leisure and Recreation.

pp.31-33

Article overview from the specialist pages.

Fritz Seifert

pp.33-35

New for the collector.

Mostly from the Berichte of the Firm of Herm. E. Sieger, Lorch/Wttbg.

p.35

Cancelled events.

p.35

Upcoming events.

p.36

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen im Reichbund der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
July 1936, Volume 16, Issue 7

Translation Digest

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

July 1936, Volume 16, Issue 7

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.37-38

42nd German Philatelists' Day on the 6th and 7th June at Burg Lauenstein.

pp.38-39

Considerations on the Rheinisch Postage Stamp Exhibition the "Düpa".
Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann.

p.39

Upcoming events.

Books.

pp.39-41

Miscellaneous.

- Obituary for Fritz Junck.
- Saar Medal.
- 45th Anniversary of the Briefmarken-Sammler-Verein Nürnberg.
- Olympia stamps miniature sheet.
- Mail carried on the Olympia flight of the airship Hindenburg.
- Clear postmarks are required for collectors.
- How was the post card created?

pp.41-43

Article overview from the specialist pages.

Fritz Seifert.

p.43

New for the collector.

Mostly from the Berichte of the Firm of Herm. E. Sieger, Lorch/Wurttemberg.

p.44

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen im Reichbund der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
August/September 1936, Volume 16, Issue 8/9

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

August/September 1936, Volume 16, Issue 8/9

Translation Digest

(Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of permanent interest to bibliophiles.)

pp.1-2

Author: Title.

The Sudeten-German
Philatelic Newspaper literature

1. The German Stamp Collector, bulletin for the total interest of stamp collectors, Published by G. Bauschke in Aussig. Printed by August Gnauk in Aussig, Volume 1, 1869, No. 1, 23 with a total of 12 Pages. As per Suppantischitsch 3 additional issues were published. Apparently responsible for editing was Josef Stoy in Aussig, most likely an employee of the printing house. Editor in charge and editing itself Bauschke himself took care of. Bauschke also was the creator of the Schaubek-Albums. The "German Stamp collector" today is a philatelic-bibliophile rarity. The British Museum owns all the issues of pages which it has purchased about 25 years ago as part of the large philatelic bibliotheca of Judge Frankl, Berlin. One issue was owned by the President of the Regional Court, Suppantischitsch who migrated after the war, together with his huge Philatelic Bibliotheca, to USA. C. G. Vogel in Pössneck had Issues 1 and 2 in his library that is now housed in the Library of Leipzig.
2. Philatelic Bourse Courier, Initially published by the Prokisch-Bookstore owned by Josef Kittl in Moravian-Ostrea, later the very active association "International Philatelic Association" in Moravian-Austria. Printed by Julius Kittl, published from 1886 - 1894 (till 1890 monthly, from 1891 onwards bi-weekly). A good paper, which was in large circulation. The editor of the paper, Clemens Sauer, also published a stamp album in several parts which was much more detailed and advanced in content than any other stamp album at that time but got stuck in the middle (philatelic crisis in the 1890th.). In October 1894 the Philatelic Bourse Courier stopped publication. The International Philatelic Union tried a continuation as:
3. Society News of the International Philatelic Union in Moravian-Austria but also this bulletin was issued in two issues (November and December) 1891 only.

4. Philatelic Sheets with the subtitle: Illustrated Publication for the total Interests of Philately. Issued by A. v. Isacovics in Brünn, 1887 Nr. 1 as Trial Issue. No other issues were published.
5. Cosmos. Confidential messages of the PSV Cosmos in Prague. Issued by the same publisher as above, autographed. 3 issues were published. Most likely the Philatelic Association Cosmos remained unknown to the collectors of Prague. Most likely it was not a separate club but a sub-club of the "Philatelic Pupil Association in Bruchsal" which had "Sub-Clubs" in many locations whereas the sub-Club in Prague called himself "Cosmos" and his own paper published. More detailed Information's about the Club "Cosmos" and his notes, that were catalogued by Suppantisch, are highly appreciated.
6. Correspondence Seyfried. Issued by Franz Seyfried in Prague-Kleinseite. The proud title "Correspondenz Seyfried" had the even prouder sub-title: "International Information- and Trafficorgan". A total of 22 4-page issues with total irrelevant content were published, apparently with the only goal of getting advertising orders from stamp dealers. From Issue No. 10 onwards the title was changed to "Austrian Correspondence", however without losing anything of its irrelevance.
7. Austria-Philatelist 1893-94 till 1899 in Prague. (Published) in 1894 and 1899 monthly, 1896 and 1897 bi-weekly, 1898 and 1899 again monthly. In the last year the Paper was issued at irregular intervals and ceased publication with issue No. 11 in 1899 as a victim of the philatelic crisis of that time. Creator and publisher of these very important pages was A. Eckert, (at that time owner of a photographic Atelier at the "Kleinseite" in Prague. Part-owner of that Atelier was Engineer Müllern, one of the Co-founder and the first President of the Prague Club of Philately and Peter Riedl. From 1897 the publisher was H.F. Duschek who still lives in Geneva as Stamp dealer. Main associate at the Austria Philatelist was Hans Kropf.
8. Monthly Report and Special Offer for Stamp Dealers. Publisher L. Stein in Pilsen, (Autographed. Only one Volume in 1893/94 with issues No. 1 and 2 was published. L. Stein in Pilsen was a fairly large Paper shop located in Schulgasse opposite of the German Gymnasium (College)
9. New Stamp Newspaper. Publisher E. Grüneberg, Karlsbad, printed at H. Feller in Karlsbad. Issued in 1894 with Issues No. 1 till No. 5, each containing 8 Pages.
10. Concordia. International Stamp page. Issued by Oskar Jäger in Böhm-Laipe. It was the Organ/Publication of a philatelic club, similar to an exchange club. It was published in 1895 with issue No. 1, 2 and 3. Issue No. 1 had been printed in Tachau, No. 2 and 3 were printed in Seithennersdorf. Despite that it contained some philatelic text, the main goal was to receive orders for advertisements. After Issue No. 3 "Concordia" ceased and had been continued as "Around the world".
(To be continued)

Literature Review

A: Periodicals

B: Books, etc.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
October 1936, Volume 16, Issue 10

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
June 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

October 1936, Volume 16, Issue 10

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.53-54

E. F.: The Sudeten-German philatelic periodical literature.
Continuation and conclusion

11. Rund am die Erde [Around the World] (only as a philatelic classified advertisements paper) of which in 1896 Nos. 1 to 5 were published, thereafter the distribution has ceased. Rund am die Erde was published by J. F. Schicketanz in Friedland.

Then came a 15 year break and after the Austria-Philatelist had ceased its distribution in 1899, for more than 10 years no philatelic magazine had been issued in the Sudetenlands.

12. Der Sammler [The Collector] Appeared during summer 1910 in the city of Trautenau in 2 or 3 issues. Publisher was Oskar Nentwich who emigrated to the USA.
13. Philatelisten-Zeitung Bruna [Philatelists-Newspaper Bruna] Official organ and society paper of the Philatelic Club "Bruna" in Brünn. 6 Volumes issued from 1912 - 1919, number 3. Published by Verlag Buchhandlung M. Trill who was also the editor.

Was continued as:

14. Brünner Briefmarken-Zeitung [Stamp Newspaper of Brünn], was issued beginning with No. 4 of 1919 which did not serve the club "Bruna" anymore but the publisher Trill, who had established himself with his own company called Tauschverkehr. The Brünner Briefmarken-Zeitung was often issued with double or triple numbers but with the content of ordinary issues. From June 1920 an attempt was made to convert the paper to a decent professional journal, but it did survive for much longer.

15. Der Markenfreund [The Stamp Friend]. Guide and advisor for stamp collectors. Supplement to the professional journal for the art and antiques lover Der Sammler. Publisher: Karl Kleophas in Teplitz-Schönau. Only No. 1 has been issued on the 1st August 1917.
16. Donaupost [Danube Post]. The as of yet - because of his extraordinary leadership - longest lived Sudeten German journal. Founded during the War by Dr. Viktor Weinert in Pressburg. The first number was issued on the 5th January 1918 and it has continued to be published timely and continuously since then.
17. Mitteilungen [Announcements] of the Stamp Exchange Association Bohemian mountains, Parschnitz. Apparently Nos. 1/2, 2/3, 4/5 were published from March to July 1919. More details about this publication are requested.
18. Internationale Brief-Zeitung und Offertenblatt [International letter-newspaper and Offer Paper] (Note by the translator: An “Offer Paper” is something like an advertising paper). Central Publication for Pen pals, Collectors, Exchanges and employment interests. Society publication of the BSWeltbundes I.B.P.’; “Intern. Philatelistenbund”; Head Office: I.B.-Z, Publisher: I.P.B. in Zwittau. - Despite this long and overblown title, a completely worthless paper of which during 1919/20 a few issues were published. The publisher is Karl F. Karger in Zwittau, Moravia, who was also the owner of the companies named in the sub-title.
19. Sammlerwarte [Collectors Supervisor] - Franzensbad. Publisher and editor E. Sedlak in Franzensbad. Published from September 1919 until August 1921. The magazine, despite not being very comprehensive, was managed well, however, it could not survive the Inflation Period. In 1922 the Sammlerwarte changed ownership to the Intern. Briefmarken-Courier in Munich, however, it ceased shortly after.
20. Weltpost-Echo [World Post Echo]. Teplitz-Schönau. Publisher: Friedrich Leitenberger. It was issued from October 1919 till August 1920, initially biweekly, later monthly. A professionally organized journal that was flawlessly managed. The Inflation caused this Journal to cease.
21. Die Briefmarke [The Postage Stamp]. Teplitz-Schönau. First issued on the 15th March 1921. Bulletin of the Philatelic Association Teplitz-Schönau, from July 1921 onwards also the bulletin of the German Philatelic Union in Czechoslovakia. The paper was effectively a substitute for the Weltpost-Echo and had been printed initially in Teplitz, later on in Leitmeritz. In July 1926, the printing house Pickert in Leitmeritz became the owner of Die Briefmarke, the German Philatelic Union cut its ties with the bulletin and issued its own journal named Der Philatelist, Haida. In the second half of 1928 Die Briefmarke and Der Philatelist were united under the title Die Briefmarke - Der Philatelist the bulletin of the German Philatelic Union in Czechoslovakia. As of January 1932 the Union dissolved its ties with the Printing House Pickert again and published its Der Philatelist once again as its exclusive Journal. Die Briefmarke was not published from that day on.
22. Der Philatelist [The Philatelist] (Leitmeritz). Monthly publication for Philately. Issue number. 1 was published on the 19th January 1922. Publisher and Editor was Dr. Zitek in Leitmeritz. Printed by Pickert in Leitmeritz. The last issue had been published in November 1923 after the publication came into the hands of the printing house. Once again it flared into life on the 25th November 1926 when one issue had been published as a signal by the printing house that the bulleting is only sleeping but by no means dead. It was at that time when the German Philatelic Union in Czechoslovakia published its Der Philatelist.

23. Der Philatelist [The Philatelist] (Haida). Magazine for Philately and Collecting. Founder and Publisher: German Philatelic Union in Czechoslovakia. The first number was dated the 6th December 1926. In August the unification with Pickert's Die Briefmarke took place and the unified bulletin was called Die Briefmarke - Der Philatelist while Der Philatelist served as bulletin of the German Philatelic Union in Czechoslovakia. On January 1932 they separated again. Die Briefmarke ceased and Der Philatelist was published as independent paper.
24. Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung [German Stamp Magazine] (Teplitz). After the Printing house Pickert (Leitmeritz) had handed over the editing rights of Die Briefmarke in August 1928 as Official organ of the German Philatelic Union, several Stamp Dealer in Töplitz-Schönau brought in September 1928 a new paper to life, entitled Deutsche Briefmarkenzeitung. The magazine which from the beginning had an uncommonly large classified section appeared to prosper very well; nevertheless it ceased publication unexpectedly at beginning of 1931.
25. Die Cechoslowakische Briefmarke [The Czechoslovakian Postage Stamp]. It was seen as Organ of the Specialist Collectors of Czechoslovakian Stamps. Publisher: Max Trill, Editor B. Heinz. Both from Brünn. 18 Issues (No. 1-18) were published from the 1st July 1927 till December 1928 and ceased then.

Currently the Sudeten German Collectors in Czechoslovakia enjoy only the Donaupost in its 19th Volume and our Der Philatelist, Haida in its 10th Volume.

Philatelic supplements and columns in the daily press

This was started by the old Prague "Bohemia" newspaper shortly before the War with its supplement Der Sammler, which had been printed in the Wednesday issue within the text of the main newspaper (containing 1 page) and dealt with stamp collecting only. The first number of that supplement can be found in the "Bohemia" of the 3rd June 1914. But soon after the outbreak of war, this supplement ceased. Shortly after the War "Bohemia" brought in their Sunday issue a short column entitled Philatelie. This had been again extended as of Sunday the 27th November 1921 when a supplement of at least 1 page with the title Der Briefmarkensammler was added to every Sunday issue. From mid-1923 onwards the Briefmarkensammler was established as separate free-of-charge supplement with at least 4 pages of content outside the normal text of "Bohemia". As of 1925 the Briefmarkensammler was delivered only to those "Bohemia" subscribers who requested it explicitly. As a victim of the economic crisis the Briefmarkensammler ceased with No. 13 of the volume of 1932. With its large format of 4 pages, the Briefmarkensammler was one of the most prominent free-of-charge supplements. At the end it was delivered on a weekly base, free-of charge, to over 4,000 Sudeten German Collectors.

Some more supplements and columns were published or are still being published in the Sudeten German Daily Press as in Aussig, Bilin, Brünn, etc. amongst which is especially the Briefmarkenkunde, printed monthly since 1924 by the “Aussiger Tagblatt”.

pp.54-55

W. Schupp: On the question of the Bavaria-Sarre 2, 3, 7½ pfg. and 20 mark.

pp.55-56

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market.

pp.56-58

Miscellaneous.

- Thüposta 1 exhibition.
- Postage stamps becoming invalid.
- Winter Olympics stamps on sale again.
- Paper differences of German postage stamps.
- Postal services at the Olympic Games in Berlin and Kiel.
- Commemorative post card for the laying of the foundation stone of the Houses of the German Right.
- New special display at the Imperial Postal Museum.

p.58

Upcoming events.

pp.58-59

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

p.60

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen 1 des Reichsbundes der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
November/December 1936, Volume 16, Issue 11/12

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

November/December 1936, Volume 16, Issue 11/12

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.61

W. H. S.: Collector wishes.

I would like to follow up these eminently enlightening experiences of a collector, as related by H. B. Z. in this stamp magazine, with a few supplementary comments derived from many experiences at shows as an exhibitor. My remarks are not intended as criticism of the much-maligned judges, not this time, but rather of the exhibition managers. There is always a precise date given in the exhibition conditions for submission of exhibits – isn't it also logical that a reasonable period be observed for return of the exhibition materials? In some cases the anxious exhibitor waits not only weeks but months before he sees his beloved collection again; while it is reasonable to assume that the insurance usually runs out in 14 days after the official end of the show. It is assumed that within these 14 days the leadership has plenty of time and opportunity to consign to the mail the valuables entrusted to them by the collector. Thus, we recommend soliciting "short" descriptions for the exhibit catalog. When such a catalog appears, as it does with nearly all the larger exhibitions, it is an easy task for the show leadership to simply send the catalog out as printed material immediately after printing, for so often the exhibitor living nearby comes personally to the exhibition. He would like to see for himself in advance what competition he faces with his exhibit and see what other collections may be present that are of particular interest to him. And if no true exhibit guide is available, at least these descriptions can be made available to the judges for their decisions.

Another wish often remains unfulfilled: what guidelines do the judges use in their activity, by what standards are the prizes awarded? Is it the knowledge displayed by the exhibitor, the organization of the collection, the exhibitor's calligraphy, the so-called "richness" of the collection or the extraordinarily swollen purse for German States rarities – are there rarities other than German States? – that are decisive for a gold medal?

How good it would be for the exhibitor, whose thoughts are lingering on the exhibition space but whose lot it is not to visit it, to find out via a postal card on the day after the judges' decisions what medal he won or didn't win – or to have a general evaluation of his exhibit. With timely advance work, the judges' decision would only need to be written on a postal card shortly after the awarding of prizes; if that postal card were to be canceled with the nearly ubiquitous show cancel, the collector would have the satisfaction of seeing that the show leadership has his best interests at heart.

Is it necessary for the exhibitor to often wait weeks for his award because the judges have to spend weeks signing all the award certificates... it would be most welcome if the judges would sign blank certificates on the day and site of the exhibition, while they are all together; in a few days, and under less hectic conditions, the name of the lucky collector can still be written in. A lot of time, money and unnecessary work would be saved and everything would run more smoothly!

Because an important concept should always be recognised by the judges: the exhibitor supports the sponsoring club or association by the risky act of consigning his collection (damage from rusty drawing pins, tearing of pages) and payment of fees ... he should then also have the right to be treated well by the show management.

p.62

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market.

pp.63-64

Miscellaneous.

- Obituary: Pfarrer Naumann.
- 76th Birthday of Dr. Franz Kalckhoff.
- Honours: the Bungerz-Gedenk plaque awarded to Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann.
- Warning - Olympia Berlin card.
- Day of the Stamp in Germany on the 10th January 1937.
- Postage stamps invalidated.
- No packages of used stamps to be sent at Christmas.

pp.64-67

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

p.68

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen 1 des Reichsbundes der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
January 1937, Volume 17, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

January 1937, Volume 17, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Max Ton: The restructuring of philatelic literature during the Third Reich.

The fact that the majority of collectors considers philatelic literature an incidental sideline is generally known.

Thus, up to the present time it has not made the slightest impression on the average collector if one or another great specialist and collector of certain countries assembles in a separate book or pamphlet his research and experiences that had previously been published as articles.

For years now in Germany we have had great associations and clubs that have maintained exemplary libraries. Unfortunately, experience has shown that these libraries usually experience little usage by the members. Later a very good idea occurred. Some large libraries decided to affiliate their philatelic libraries with large public libraries. Notable examples: the philatelic library of the former Germania Ring and the university library of Leipzig; and the Frankfurt Philatelic Association incorporated into the city library for use by the general public.

On the one hand this created space in the club's facilities and on the other hand it offered any collector, be he a member of a philatelic club or not, the opportunity to further his education and to acquire specialized knowledge by actively using the library. It can be rightly said that this useful arrangement has contributed to giving philatelic literature more attention than it had heretofore enjoyed.

At the same time, this also provided the incentive for a restructuring of philatelic literature in the Third Reich. Let us closely follow the specialized philatelic press. It quickly becomes clear that a lot had changed since 1933. A number of philatelic newspapers started, some but not all characterized as “fly by night”, but also dealer magazines, for example the Berliner Briefmarken-Zeitung by Philip Kosack, that indubitably was counted amongst the best German journals for 40 years running. Now it is printed as a meager insert in the Kosack customer list. Die Post, the old beloved Universalanzeiger für Briefmarkensammler, became the organ of the Schaubek album publishers. It got its main drawing power from the interesting articles by the philatelic old master Louis Senf of Leipzig.

But the largest change was realized by the Frankfurter Briefmarkenzeitung, founded by S. W. Hess in Frankfurt. It developed from the smallest beginnings after 1933 and gradually became one of Germany’s most respected stamp magazines, Deutschen Briefmarken-Zeitung, or “DBZ” for short, published by Vogel of Pössneck.

This is where the restructuring of German philatelic literature becomes most visible. You can clearly see what moves the world of collecting and what collectors want to know. There is no lack of the necessary incentives. But what is most important is the news from philatelic groups. There is a lot of good learning and experience to be gained by anyone able to read between the lines.

This is undoubtedly how the collectors’ favorite magazine was created, which offered a fully valid substitute for the much missed Sammlerwoche, which moved to Austria. Of course I am referring to the eminently well-managed Postmarke, which evolved from the earlier Sammlerwoche.

But from the point of view of the German stamp collector, the restructuring of philatelic literature in the Third Reich meant the founding of a stamp magazine quickly and cheaply accessible to all citizens, even those of modest means. This is where DBZ stepped up in an exemplary fashion and today is the most recognized organ of nearly all the larger philatelic organizations in Germany. It incorporated a number of smaller, isolated philatelic magazines into its columns, among them the beloved Ganzsache”.

A number of the previously well known magazines are still being published, such as Das Postwertzeichen by Noske of Borna, that is the torch-bearer for some clubs; the Illust. Briefmarken-Journal by Senf, that small and medium collectors find indispensable for their needs; and a quite innovative journal Aequator, that shows collectors new directions in collecting for beauty.

Add to the mix the Kosmos-Briefmarkenfreund of the Dresden-based Zigaretten-Luxor Co. We should be gratified with their small contribution to philatelic literature. This press sector fulfills all our philatelic needs.

A much greater restructuring of philatelic literature is taking place in the daily press.

In 1936, the 45th Thüringen state-wide convention of the Imperial Federation of Philatelists (Reichsbund der Philatelisten) met in Coburg and the state press representative Kraus mentioned the furthering of philatelic interests during the meeting about the Thüpost 1 exhibition in Jena. When he suggested soliciting in the daily press pertinent articles from the membership for this purpose, there was only a short debate. For as early as May 1934 “Philaton” published a weekly philatelic column called Der Briefmarkensammler in the general Thüringen state-wide newspaper “Deutschland” in Weimar. This “Philaton Correspondence”, which has operated since 1933 by the simplest and cheapest means, works for all philatelic friends and comrades and has unconsciously contributed greatly to the restructuring of philatelic literature in the Third Reich. Not only collectors but also lay persons read these philatelic columns with great interest.

At this juncture, the following phrase is apropos: “If you want to help promote philatelic literature in the new empire, this can only take place in the traditional ways. On the other hand, great scholarly treatises belong only in the specialized publications but even there should not be excessively esoteric!”

With this I come to the philatelic book. In the framework of the restructuring of philatelic literature in the Third Reich, Max Büttner of Berlin certainly stands in the first position – with his small philatelic works written in a folksy style and appearing on the book market since 1933. We shall mention here only his latest little work, German World Recognition through Stamps (1937, Borna). Whoever reads Büttner will continually find new friends through collecting. And it should be said here that it was Büttner who gave me the incentive to rebuild my private philatelic library after I had sold my large, old library in 1931.

But on the other hand, let’s not forget the large number of different specialized works that are absolutely indispensable, as without them many collectors of smaller countries would never be in a position to show something substantive. Thus, in the restructuring of philatelic literature in the Third Reich, many older works of recognized German authors are finding new respect. In this regard, I would like to point to two small works for collectors of German States stamps that will always retain their scholarly and practical value, even if hundreds of similarly arranged pamphlets come after them. These are: the Comprehensive Catalog of German Postage Stamps, etc. by Hugo Krötsch, Leipzig, 1896; and the Specialized Catalog of the Stamps of the German Postal Union by Dr. Otto Rommel of Dresden in 1896. This so-called classic literature will always be crucial for any collector involved with classic stamps.

Now it is said that newer collectors - those who only started collecting specialized Germany since 1933 - need a manual. They find it first in the DBZ. Every collector fascination, even the greatest aberrations in printing, plates and other errors, are presented to them in such a literary way that one hardly need bemoan the old tried and true Kohl manual, updated for modern Germany by Dr. Munk. For over the years, everything in this area becomes dated. Such great scholarly works must always remain a work in progress, especially when you have to say to yourself, “You will never live to see the end of such a work”.

At the end of my remarks I would like to give expression to a thought that leaves me optimistic about the restructuring of philatelic literature in the Third Reich. And this is the idea of “genealogy and philately”. I have been working on this for years. I will expound on this subject under a separate rubric next time. Come what may, in his own interest, every enlightened stamp collector will have to pay his dues to philatelic literature.

We’re off to a good start. Unfortunately the task is sometimes thankless but let us continue the work started for the joy of philately and all its adherents.

pp.2-3

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market.

pp.3-4

Miscellaneous.

- The Glasewald Medal awarded to Walter B. Opitz.
- A new discovery - a fake and sorry effort a Zeppelin card from the Luftschill Sachsen.
- Leipzig Day of the Stamp.
- Germany: Special display at the Imperial Postal museum.
- KdF-Stamp Show in Halle (Saale).
- Invalid advertising on postage stamps.

pp.4-6

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

p.6

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen 1 des Reichsbundes der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
February 1937, Volume 17, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
July 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

February 1937, Volume 17, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.7-8

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market.

- Bibliography of German-Language Philatelic Literature. Part I: General Index of German-Language Philatelic Literature in Magazines.
Explanations for those involved [i.e. in collecting the articles to be included]. Compiled by C. Schmittdiel. Verlag Robert Noske. Borna County, Leipzig.

In this book the author arranges with absolutely clear and rich detail, along with master examples, the guidelines for his co-workers who are going to help him in preparing the edition of the Bibliography of German-Language Philatelic Literature.

The General Index of German-Language Philatelic Literature in Magazines is to become a reference work dealing with the contents of all German-Language philatelic literature that has appeared in German since the year 1863. The work will offer its users, at all times, in a quick and comfortable fashion, the possibility of finding, exactly and in detail, a directory of specific articles from specialist publications in the philatelic field.

Above all we wish the active publisher and publishing house [success] in that their work may actually be completed.

p.8

Miscellaneous.

- The special stamp for the birthday of the Führer.
➤ Period of validity of commemorative postage stamps.

pp.8-9

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

pp.10-12

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen 1 des Reichsbund der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
March/April 1937, Volume 17, Issue 3/4

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

March/April 1937, Volume 17, Issue 3/4

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.13-14

Festivities program of the Kassel meeting of the 22nd and 23rd May 1937.

pp.14-15

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market.

pp.15-16

Miscellaneous.

- Report of the deaths of Andreas Gerhauser and Baron de Rothschild.
- 40th Anniversary of the death of Heinrich von Stephan.
- Imperforate Führer stamp miniature sheets.
- The German Post Office at an exhibition.
- Honorary prize awarded to the German Post Office.
- A new special show at the Postal Museum.
- Accident to the airship Hindenburg.
- Airship service of the Graf Zeppelin arranged.
- Pictorial guide to the Postal Museum.
- News from the USA.
- Letters with postage stamps from Newfoundland.

pp.17-18

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

pp.19-20

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen 1 des Reichsbund der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
June 1937, Volume 17, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2013

DER PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

June 1937, Volume 17, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Max Ton: About postage stamp exhibition catalogues.

Who engages with philatelic literature for a time will get to know its intrinsic value. There are some more things for stamp collectors to discuss like the postage stamp exhibition catalogues. In general they only have a temporary value for collectors. This is totally different for people interested in philatelic literature or collectors with genealogically philatelic interests. Currently in Germany, philately is enjoying a boom. The time of Adolf Hitler accounted essentially to put the artistic problem of stamps to the fore. This enabled Germany to bring up a new generation of collectors within 4 years. Their collections are set up with a totally different point of view. One can also see this by how the stamp exhibitions and the catalogues are structured and changed within the last decades. Today stamp exhibitions are in place like they have never been before. One showcases the other and the collectors try to outperform all their competitors with respect to design, beauty and intrinsic values.

We as philatelists call these people medal chasers! But we cannot change this phenomenon. For sure all these stamp exhibitions have a special purpose. They aren't just the best propaganda for philately itself, but also they connect propagandistic goals in the area of genealogy, local history and traffic engineering.

Under this circumstance we will have a closer look at the stamp exhibition catalogues. This special kind of philatelic catalogue should be a well-arranged guideline for the particular stamp exhibition. Each guest of the exhibition gets one of these catalogues in the form of a wafer-thin booklet or even as a book. With this information the visitor walks around the exhibition and can thus find out the owner of the special collection shown. After the show is over the catalogue will be kept for a few more days and then goes in the waste-paper basket. A friend of philatelic literature won't do that. For them the catalogue is more than a guideline; it's a philatelic document of culture. This catalogue will always be a reference book. It is a source not only of important philatelic notes, but also genealogical notes about the collector and special information about his collection. This special information can contain information about its composition and other peculiarities.

That's why one needs to have a closer look at the technical composition of these stamp exhibition catalogues. Most of these catalogues are formulated in a general way. In most of the cases they don't provide a good and structured guideline. That leads to the fact that collectors may lose their interest in searching for the needed information. The catalogue thus misses its purpose. If collectors compare all the catalogues that appeared recently one will find that a small booklet of 4 pages maximum is ideal for all upcoming exhibitions. Such as the catalogue for the stamp exhibition "Kurhessen-Thüringen" in Kassel, which took place in spring 1937 accompanying the 43rd German Philately Day. This booklet has the following advantages compared with other catalogues which have been released until now:

All information regarding the collections are listed in a very structured way and organized in a compact way. One can see name, kind and owner of the collection and there is also a free column for your notes.

An example:

Name of the Object: Thurn und Taxis
Kind of collection: Specialised collection
Owner: G. Otto Lehmann, Weimar
Notes: Gold medal of the city of Kassel etc.

In this catalogue there are 43 collections mentioned on 4 Octavo pages. It would be possible to describe a whole exhibition in a well-structured way on one sheet, which usually consists of 16 pages. So no collector would have to carry unneeded ballast with them. At the same time this is a good way to save paper. Furthermore a philatelic literature lover and genealogist is able to find a collector very fast. Finally, an exhibition catalogue is a philatelic souvenir of bygone days.

p.30

Fr. Siefert: New issues from the book market.

p.30

Upcoming events.

pp.31-32

Miscellaneous.

- Bad Blankenburg exhibition.
- Postage stamp exhibit at the Reichspostmuseum.
- Olympic and Winter help issue of 1936 become invalid.
- France and the Germania-Berichte.
- No official postcard with the Leader's stamp.

- Collecting in the evening.
- No special collector's service by the Yugoslavian postal administration.

pp.32-33

Fr. Siefert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

p.34

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen 1 des Reichsbund der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
July 1937, Volume 17, Issue 7

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

July 1937, Volume 17, Issue 7

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.35-36

Theod. Stephani: A contribution to the history of the first German postcards and the emergence of the first reply- and picture postcards.

pp.36-37

Preparations of the German Post Office for the Reichs Party Day 1937.

p.37

Upcoming events.

p.38

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market.

p.39

Miscellaneous.

- Philatelic honours:
Golden Badge of Honour: Roman Stoebe; Otto Plage; Alfred Demker; Max Lerche.
Silver Badge of Honour: Fritz Fleischer; Hermann Krüger; Franz Röseler; Richard Rother; Gustav Schmeckebeier; Hermann Steinhauser; Willy Westphal.
- 50th Anniversary of the Gössnitz Society.
- Brown Ribbon issue for 1937 with a red overprint is out of stock.
- On the Reichs Party Führer stamp with overprint.
- Special Postcard of the exhibition Sammeln am Feierabend.
- State-wide stamp exhibition in Bratislava.

pp.40-41

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

p.42

Society reports from the Landesverband U. S. A. des Reichsbundes der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
August 1937, Volume 17, Issue 8

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

August 1937, Volume 17, Issue 8

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.43

T. Bernhard: International postage stamp show, Bad Nauheim, 2nd to 5th September 1937.

p.44

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market.

pp.44-45

Miscellaneous.

- Warning from the German dealers organisation.
- Forged Austrian Winter Aid stamps of 1935.
- A change to the sale of stamps to collectors by the Reichs Post.
- No special help for collectors from the Bulgarian and Greek postal services.
- New postage stamp issues.
- Brown Ribbon stamps.

p.45

Upcoming events.

pp.45-46

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

pp.47-48

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen 1 des Reichsbundes der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
September/October 1937, Volume 17, Issue 9/10

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

September/October 1937, Volume 17, Issue 9/10

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.49

T. Bernhard: International Stamp Show, Bad Nauheim, 2nd-5th September 1937.

p.49

Calling all collector friends of the Reichs Federation.

p.50

Management Report of the German Post Office.

pp.51-53

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market.

pp.53-54

Miscellaneous.

- Winter aid stamps.
- The 3rd Day of the Stamp.
- Stamp Exhibition Hannover 1937.
- German postage stamps expected to be invalidated.
- New Spanish periodical – Boletín Filatelico Español.

p.54

Upcoming events.

pp.54-55

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

p.56

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen 1 des Reichsbundes der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
November 1937, Volume 17, Issue 11

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

November 1937, Volume 17, Issue 11

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.57

First Swabian Postage Stamp Exhibition, Stuttgart 1938.

pp.57-58

Society performance competition.

pp.58-59

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market.

pp.59-60

Miscellaneous.

- Award of the Bungerz Plaque for the year 1937 to Georg Moser.
- A postcard for the Winter Help Program.
- Special telegraph exhibition in Frankfurt-am-Main.
- New special show in the Postal Museum.

p.60

Upcoming events.

pp.60-61

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

p.62

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen 1 des Reichsbundes der Philatelisten.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
December 1937, Volume 17, Issue 12

Translation Digest

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2013

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

December 1937, Volume 17, Issue 12

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.63

Agreement on the co-operation between the collector community and the Reichs Federation of Philatelists.

pp.63-64

On the "Day of the Stamp".

At the foot of the page there is a note that Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm will cease publication, this being the last issue.

p.64

Fritz Seifert: New issues from the book market.

p.65

Miscellaneous.

➤ Which stamps are still valid from the 1st January 1937?

pp.65-67

Fritz Seifert: Article overview from the specialist pages.

p.68

Society reports from the Landesverband Sachsen 1 des Reichsbundes der Philatelisten.

END

Winfried Leist
The fate of Carl Lindenberg's library
[Das schicksal der bibliothek Carl Lindenbergs]
The Philatelic Journalist, June 2012, Whole number 138, pp.33-34

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2013

THE FATE OF CARL LINDENBERG'S LIBRARY

It is well known that Carl Lindenberg sold his library to the Petschek brothers along with his collection of postal stationery. Lindenberg was hired by Ignaz Petschek in the period following the hyperinflation to make an inventory of the immense collection of postal stationery for the two sons, Dr. Ernst Petschek in Berlin and Franz Petschek in Aussig, and to produce a printed listing. Lindenberg was then about 75 years old and the sale of his collection was an obvious choice; it transferred his philatelic holdings into good hands and he continued to have unimpeded access to the material. The first volume of the listing, which he completed, was published in 1927. Lindenberg died in 1928.

The work on the inventory was continued by Franz Kalckhoff and was completed in 1934 with the publication of the second volume. Kalckhoff continued to use the collection in his study of the postal stationery envelopes of Prussia until the collection was confiscated by the Nazis. His book, dated to 1943 by its preface, was finally published in 1950 at the DEBRIA in Leipzig. By that time, the immense collection of the Petschek brothers had been dispersed, sold and partially lost.

That much is nothing new⁽¹⁾. But research has not totally settled the questions of what happened to the Petschek collection, and the search for sources that could provide answers continues.

I accessed the file R 47.01 of the Reichspostministerium [Imperial Postal Ministry] in the Federal Archives in Berlin in the Summer of 2009. Given that the Imperial Postal Museum had been administered directly from the Ministry during the final years of the war, these files include records concerning the postage stamp collection of the Museum after 1939, for example. I encountered there a reference to the Petschek collection, leading back to Lindenberg's library.

Citing the subject "Philatelic Library from Lindenberg's Inheritance", the Taxation Authority office in Moabit-West wrote to the Reichspostministerium on 20 June 1941 as follows⁽²⁾:

"With regard to outstanding taxes owed to the Reich, I have confiscated a library from the coal-Jew Dr. Ernst Petschek that came from the inheritance left by Lindenberg. This consists of the books listed in the enclosed list.

I intend to sell these books and to use the proceeds as a credit against the tax liability owed by Petschek.

Thus, please indicate soonest whether there is any interest to have the Preußische Staatsbibliothek [Prussian State Library] purchase any or all of these books.”

The attachment consists of eight single-spaced typed pages.

However, the Reichspostministerium declined to make a purchase, because the books were already in the collection.

That ended the exchange of letters. Of course, the question remains what happened to these books. An inquiry to the Staatsbibliothek Preußischer Kulturbesitz remained unanswered. It appears that nothing is known there regarding the storage and disposal. Could it be that members of the Berliner Ganzsachensammler-Vereins [Berlin Postal Stationery Club], where parts of the postal stationery collection of the Petschek brothers were sold, purchased some of the books? Perhaps Kalckhoff did so himself, given that he was involved in the sale of the Petschek collection? Kalckhoff's own library ended up in the Museum für Kommunikation Berlin by way of the Berliner Philatelisten-Club and can be freely accessed there. The question could be answered by a comparison of the list of confiscated books with the holdings of the Kalckhoff library. But this would need to be done by somebody in Berlin; my annual visits to the Berlin archives are too short to accomplish this.

At any rate, Kalckhoff was well acquainted with Lindenberg's library due to his study of the Petschek collection. The minutes of the meeting of the BGSV of 23rd November 1939 note⁽³⁾: Dr. Kalckhoff exhibited several interesting items of older postal history literature. This included the minutes of a meeting of a philatelic society in Breslau in 1876 with a direct personal reference to Lindenberg. I surmise that the books shown then came from the Lindenberg library.

At this time, I know of only a single item that is certain to have come from Lindenberg's library, namely Franz Kalckhoff's publication Die Erfindung der Postkarte und die Korrespondenz-Karten der Norddeutschen Bundespost [The invention of the postcard and the cards of the North German Federation] published by Hugo Krötzsch in Leipzig in 1911. The booklet made philatelic history, because Kalckhoff described here the Prussian postcard invented by Heinrich v. Stephan and included the reconstruction as an attachment. I purchased the booklet some years ago at an auction and was pleasantly surprised to find out that it came from Lindenberg, because its cover shows a dedication: To Geh. Oberjustizrat Lindenberg, President of the Landgericht, with my thanks for his help, provided by the author, 18 September 1911.

Assuredly from Lindenberg's library. The (somewhat stained) cover with a handwritten dedication by Kalckhoff.

References

- (1) The fate of the Petschek collection is discussed in detail by Wolfgang Maassen: Ein Lehrstück über die Gier. Das Schicksal der Gebrüder Petschek., Philatelie, 2005, Whole number 337, pp.49-54 & Whole number 338, pp.45-48.
- (2) Bundesarchiv Berlin item R 47.01 No.11380 fol. 78 - 86.
- (3) GS 20. 1940 page 4 under “Vereinsnachrichten”.

END

Fritz Billig

Mondial: Billig's International Philatelic Literature Reference Work
[Mondial: Billig's Internationales Philatelistisches Literature-Nachschlagewerk]
Fritz Billig, Vienna, Austria, n.d. [ca.1930], n.pp. [1p.]

This is the introduction to Mondial found in many of Billig's pamphlets and price lists of the era

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2013

MONDIAL: BILLIG'S INTERNATIONAL PHILATELIC LITERATURE REFERENCE WORK

That which is about to be printed provides fulfillment of a long held wish of philatelists all over the world. This (new publication) shatters the heretofore principal complaint that the book format published as a whole causes a lack of clarity. This disadvantage has been eliminated in Mondial. Mondial will present, over the course of time, a complete catalogue of all published articles and books in every language.

The search for any article using this new system is quite simple.

The articles and the books of each nation are printed on one side of pre-punched pages. Different paper colors are used for the different languages in which the articles were published. For example, German articles are on white paper, French articles are on chamois (beige) paper, and English articles are on green paper. These one-sided pages are identified topically on the reverse side with titles such as Postal History, Cancells, Forgeries, Reprints, Covers, Provisionals, etc. This reduces the need for excessive page turning by 50%.

Every article is identified by its full title and by its author's name. Additionally, the publication with its year and volume number as well as the date of publication is also provided. For books, the date of publication is generally provided. Those pages on which a work published in book form is listed are marked with a large B. Those pages with articles from periodicals are marked with a large A. The country name is printed in German on the upper right of each page. The country name in French is printed in the middle of the page and in English on the upper left of each page.

Sorting the loose-leaf pages alphabetically in any of the three languages is quite simple to arrange as near the titles (which are in all three languages) there are three different numbers to facilitate sorting the pages. German speaking users will sort the pages using the numbers that appear near the German name for the country. French speaking users will use the number near the French name for the country and English-speaking users will use the number near the English name of the country. Thus, this literature catalogue is automatically arranged in the order of the Michel catalog for German speakers, in the order of the Yvert catalog for French speakers, and in the order of the Scott catalog for English speakers.

As previously mentioned, the pages are pre-punched with two holes in the left margin. Screw post binders fully covered with linen with appropriate printing in all three languages can be supplied upon request. The price per binder is two marks.

Suggestions and corrections are always wanted as well as the addresses of parties interested in the above mentioned work. Collectors of related groups of countries or specific countries can obtain subscriptions such as:

- | | |
|---------|--|
| Group A | Articles and books from all the nations of the world:
a) in all languages or b) in any one language. |
| Group B | Articles and books relating to one section of the globe:
a) in all languages or b) in any one language. |
| Group C | Articles and books for a specific group of countries e.g. Old Germany, Old Italy, France and Colonies:
This group is only available in all languages. |
| Group D | Articles and books for specific countries:
Also only available in all languages. |

The price per subscription for Groups A and B is 10 pfennig per page plus postage. For Group C the price is 20 pfennig per page plus postage. For Group D (for specifically requested pages) the price is 30 pfennig per page. The subscription prices are valid only when 10-20 pages are ordered. Interested parties should fill out the form on the opposite side of this page,

Fritz Billig
Vienna 1, Herrengasse 6/4

END

Klaus-Dietrich Gerlach

The PHILA-Bibliothek Heinrich Köhler gives thanks

[Die PHILA-Bibliothek Heinrich Köhler dankt]

Philatelie, August 2012, Volume 64, Whole number 422, p.6

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

March 2013

THE PHILA-BIBLIOTHEK HEINRICH KÖHLER GIVES THANKS

Unfortunately the society Thematische Philatelisten Südwest e.V. [Southwest Thematic Philatelists] has disbanded. At their final General Meeting on the 16th June 2010, it was decided that their remaining assets should go to the PHILA-Bibliothek Heinrich Köhler library. Also to be given are the books from the Club library. For the final amount of €236 and the books we are very grateful.

Klaus-Dietrich Gerlach, Librarian
PHILA-Library Heinrich Köhler

END

Dr. Otto Rommel

Directory of the Most Important Philatelic Works and Treatises, from both Domestic and International Sources, Excluding Items from Periodicals
[Verzeichnis der Wichtigsten Philatelistischen Werke und Abhandlungen des In- und Auslandes mit Ausschluss der Zeitungsliteratur]

Paul Kohl, Chemnitz, Germany, 1907 [actually 1908], 16pp.

I have two different versions of the original edition. A deluxe edition was also published on thicker paper and with the addition of a green card cover.

Translation of the Foreword on p.2 and the few notes preceeding the Directory on page 3.

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2013

DIRECTORY OF THE MOST IMPORTANT PHILATELIC WORKS
AND TREATISES, FROM BOTH DOMESTIC AND INTERNATIONAL SOURCES, EXCLUDING ITEMS FROM PERIODICALS

Foreword

The following compilation is closely connected to Krasemann's Bibliographie der Wichtigsten Spezialwerke [Bibliography of the Most Important Specialized Works], but is substantially expanded and, in some cases, corrected. I also believe in choosing those works which deal with the postage stamps of several postal areas, which mention all of the individual countries or postal areas or at least refer to them, and which, at the same time [provide] a chronological ordering of the works that have been published, because in many cases, the newer works rely on those older works and contain the results of the newer investigations.

The expansion of this little work to include, as planned, the more important articles which appeared in periodicals had to be dropped, at least for the time being, because of the immense scope of the work connected with it, although it is precisely in these articles that one finds an extraordinarily rich amount of knowledge that has been written down. Perhaps the future will make possible the publication of such a work.

Dr. Rommel
Leipzig, July 1908

Notes heading the Directory on page 3

At the request of many friends of the Kohl handbook, we provide below by Dr. O. Rommel of Leipzig Compilation of Philatelic Literature.

You should get in touch with the publishing company to obtain the works listed.

END

Wolfgang Maassen

Inventory of the WM Photograph Archive

[Inventarisierung des WM-Foto-Archivs]

Wolfgang Maassen, Phil*Creativ, Schwalmtal, Germany, 2013, 88pp.

Translation of the introductory text only, pp.1-2

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

June 2013

INVENTORY OF THE WM PHOTOGRAPH ARCHIVE

*The image library of Wolfgang Maassen, known as the WM-Bildarchiv for short, provides original paper photos and photo reproductions from 150 years of mainly German philatelic history, as well as digital photos of the last 12 years. Wolfgang Maassen has collected and archived these pictures over more than three decades.*

Image collections from renowned German philatelists have been included in this WM-Archive, initially the paper image library of Wilhelm van Loo of Aachen. Also, the properties left by Emil W. Mewes, Dieter Brocks, Pierre Séguy, Dr. Heinz Jaeger, Horst Hille, Horst Hamann among others and his own photographs are also included in large numbers.

The WM-Archive is open for more photos, if they are left to the archive for free recycling. Editing and processing is then carried out by the archive owner, and it is intended that they will eventually be placed on the Internet on the BDPH website, but the items first require a description. Because it exceeds the ability of an individual to do everything at the same time, the inventory of the paper copies is now a first step in the process.

Legal notice

Wolfgang Maassen is sole owner of the image archives. He has the rights to all photos provided to him or purchased by him. All rights deriving from the existing image copyright and obligations are with him, not the Bund Deutscher Philatelisten.

The WM-Archive releases the images for non-commercial use. This includes the royalty-free use for editors from Club and Working Group publications, their valuable work being hereby expressly supported and promoted. However, use of the visuals requires that the source of each image (WM-Bildarchiv) and the image number (e.g.: BA000.001) are clearly indicated. If an image creator (photographer) is given, their name is also to be shown. (Example: WM-Bildarchiv, BA000.001, Photo: Wilhelm van Loo)

The commercial use of images or the publication in commercial journals and other publications (e.g. for advertising) is possible. For this, it is necessary to e-mail (to: info@phil-creativ.de) and sign up (specifying image number). The image source (WM archive) and the image number must both be clearly indicated in the publication. If an image creator (photographer) is given, their name is also to be shown.

Commercial use of images without prior request and receiving permission, as well as anyone permanently storing the entire image database or extensive parts of the same for similar promotional purposes on the Internet is prohibited.

Important: it was not possible in all cases to identify the origin and the author of the image because many images were left to the archive owner without such information. It is not the intent of the archive owner, of hurting existing rights of third parties. Should this occur inadvertently and a third party feels affected, they are asked to write to the Archive owner to bring a clarification and if necessary a removal of the image from the image database immediately.

In addition, the Archive may also include for possible recycling, images reserved to third party owners. As far as this is known to the owner of the archive, it is pointed out separately in the comments.

Technical notes

The WM-Archive includes approximately 25,000 digitized images (photos, reproductions) from the history of Philately. It will in the future be extended to current digital photos, later also to historically relevant images of original philatelic, artwork and documents (there are over 10,000 scans of these already). Since the project is a single entity with a significant time, and effort investment, it will be many years before the majority of the existing material will appear on the Internet.

END

V. Suppantschitsch

On the history and statistics of the worldwide philatelic periodical literature to end of 1893
[Zur geschichte und statistik der philatelistischen zeitungs-literatur der erde bis ende 1893]
Die Postwertzeichen-Kunde, February 1895, Volume 6, Issue 2, pp.13-15; March, Issue 3, pp.33-35; April, Issue 4, pp.47-49; May, Issue 5, pp.65-67 & June, Issue 6, pp.77-78

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2013

ON THE HISTORY AND STATISTICS OF THE WORLDWIDE PHILATELIC PERIODICAL LITERATURE TO END OF 1893

The daily increasing interest in philatelic literature in general and for periodical literature especially is the justification that will allow me to report something worth knowing about in this article, especially since the one who is interested in it, may only with disproportional work with time, efforts and money - if at all - be able to accumulated all the data which will be offered here.

The first question I would like to discuss is when the newspapers started to write about stamps and stamp collecting.

The first occasion of course was the development and introduction of the stamp itself. The changes cause by the postal reform in the handling of letters, initially in Great Britain, later on in the whole of Europe was so immense that it was the subject of detailed explanation in all the cultural states. By that it was of course necessary that stamps have to be mentioned. Without them and the simultaneous invention of the Penny Post System it would have been difficult to break through in England in the year of 1840. The publications are however of lesser interest for us as they deal more about the principle of the new letter post traffic and not the medium by which this was made possible - the postage stamp itself. Soon it was the stamps which were the subject of publications in newspapers. The Spectator for example, brought in the year 1840 remarks about the new envelopes. In the same year The London and Westminster Review, as well as The Art Union contained disquisitions about stamps. In 1842, notes in the second volume of the Illustrated London News were published about the number of stamps that had been sold in the past two years in Great Britain, about their design and production which were continued in the 4th volume of 1844.

The mention of stamps in newspapers related to the so-called perforce or mass collectors. Soon after the introduction of stamps the collecting of the same has started in England, however not in order to prepare collections in our meaning but for ornamental or other practical reasons. Young ladies decorated their dressing room with them, others filled pillows with it and so on. Finally there were bets with the goal of accumulating within a certain time limit a certain large number of used stamps, sometimes a large amount of money was at stake. Even marriages were subject to the raising of a certain quantity of stamps. That sport brought up advertisements and announcements as well as, contrary to it, satirical articles mostly in fictional entertainment papers. It will be sufficient to mention only a few of them. In The Times of London in 1841 an advertisement can be found where a young lady is looking for used stamps in order to decorate her dressing room included was the address where such stamps should be delivered. In Punch of 1842 a new obsession is written about with which the “diligent leisured” English ladies are hooked up in order to win a bet and are tirelessly occupied with collecting old Penny stamps. The funny comment is added that they show a greater effort to accumulate pigtails of queens than Henry VIII had expended to get rid of them. In the newspaper Picture Magazine that had been published in 1845 an essay can be found reporting that two British Officers placed a bet to accumulate so many used stamps to decorate a complete room with and that this example is now also followed by ladies and school kids. Furthermore it is reported that one Gentleman had promised £2,000 for the construction of a church if a certain lady would deliver him so many used stamps equal to the amount of that sum. In London there are large cabinets, which are decorated on all side with such stamps. Also the magazine Leisure Hour in 1859 brought to the peoples’ notice what stamps can be used for and so on.

More seriously, the subject was treated only after most of the states of Europe had introduced stamps and they were collected already in the philatelic sense. One of the first notices which was headed Stamp Collectors can be found in Annuaire Scientifique of 1855. It began to describe them and to present them with illustrations. In Paris, the Magazin Pittoresque and the Fashion Magazine The Bazar in 1862 brought us articles describing the stamps of the world. On the 28th June 1860 a note by one S. F. Cresswell was published in Notes and Queries, Volume IX, page 482, in which he reported that a boy had shown him a collection of 300 to 400 different stamps, British and foreign, and in which he complains that up to now no catalogue or price lists and newspaper articles exist as was the case in regard to other collector objects like Coins, Plants etc. In the June issue of Young England Dr. Gray published a series of articles in which he promises, under consideration that they reflect a popular collecting area, to issue an almost complete listing of all issued stamps of the world. A similar article can also be found in Cassells Illustrated Family Paper in its issue of 26th July 1862 and so on. If you want to take the effort to research in the fictional and entertainment papers of that period, certainly many other similar articles could be found, although they were not published in specialist papers, which may contain some interesting information about collecting at that time.

The next question, which comes automatically by itself, is how it went with speciality papers and which ones may be considered as the first ones. This case was very easy. In the 1860s, several magazines had a few columns dedicated to the promotion of collecting regarding all then known collecting areas, however, no publication had a dedicated column regarding stamp collecting. Until William Macmillan of Birmingham established a paper which he called The Monthly Intelligencer which at least partly promoted the Interests of stamp collectors. Its first issue was published in October 1862 but it survived only 10 numbers and ceased publication in July 1863. This paper however cannot be considered as speciality paper as it was not dedicated exclusively to stamp collecting. However, only two month passed before the first real speciality paper dedicated to philately was issued and the story behind was as we can read in the Philatelist on page 31 as follows: A certain T. W. Kitt in the middle of 1862 had the plan to publish a stamp magazine as he thought that due to the large number of stamp lovers - stamp collectors were seen as such - a dedicated paper would benefit not only the collectors but should also be profitable. He therefore published an announcement in Boy’s Own in which he was looking for a partner with a similar interest. Despite the fact that a large number of persons replied and asked for additional information and despite that he met in London - where at that time the World Exhibition took place - with many of the leading British collectors and personally consulted them, the common opinion was against the venture that reluctantly, he thought it would be foolish to establish something that the more experienced ones in this field considered futile. His suggestion however was not without success because A. Perris from Liverpool took over the plan with pleasure and, despite the fact that Kitt refused any financial support and only provided his best wishes, on the 15th December 1862 the precursor of a new kind of literature appeared in the form of the Monthly Advertiser, more commonly known under the title the Stamp Collector's Review, the title the paper took from Number three of January 1868. This paper that had been published by Ed. Moore & Co. in Liverpool survived for 19 issues. The first volume contained 13 issues from the 15th December 1862 until December 1863, the second volume contained six issues from January until June 1864. With this the ice was broken and the periodical literature has undergone an unexpected boom. As it is not uninteresting to see in which form the philatelic newspaper literature has developed on the individual continents and countries, which countries and in which sequence have followed the example of England and with what success, I like to invite the reader to follow me on this review.

The next country that stepped forward with a magazine dedicated purely to stamp collecting was Belgium where J. B. Moens, the recognized first stamp collector on the earth published on the 15th February 1869 his famous Timbre-Post. I cannot however fail to mention that in England, even before the Timbre-Post was published, a second specialty paper came to issue, the later on much appreciated Stamp Collector's Magazine by S. Smith & A. Smith in Bath, of which the first issue is dated the 1st February 1863.

The Timbre-Post is the only journal of any country which has been published in an uninterrupted sequence until today where it stands in its XXXIII volume and still belongs to the leading papers in the whole philatelic press.

Now comes our beloved Germany where we have, thanks to the still blooming company Zschiesche & Köder of Leipzig the first specialty paper, the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler whose number one on the 1st May 1863 enjoyed the hearts of the German collectors and continued for 48 issues until the 1st April 1867 the beloved foster mother on whose richly filled breast everyone sucked desirous of whatever was produced for stamp collectors.

But now we must leave Europe and let us look across the ocean since in America, specifically in British North America stands the cradle of the next paper.

There, in Montreal, in the Canadian Province of Quebec an inconspicuous leaflet was published by S. A. Taylor in February 1864 called The Stamp Collector's Record, which only survived two issues but still deserves the honour of being the first specialised paper of the new world. Twice the new world changed over to the old world. France pulled itself together to publish a specialty paper. It is the Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste by A. Maury in Paris, which on the 16th July 1864 entered the philatelic world. This paper also is in circulation until today and is published by its initial publisher, however its publication during the years was most irregular as was shown by the statistics of the same: it should be published monthly, in the 366 months from the 15th July 1864 until December 1894 there were a nominal 170 issues but in reality only 167 issues were published. (The issues 48, 49 and 50 were only published as a catalogue and not a newspaper). It therefore cannot be compared with the Timbre-Poste. In the decade from 1875 - 1884 its publication was completely suspended and only since 1885 is it continuously published. Now we have to go again to America, this time however into the powerful republic with the stars-spangled banner as there on the 15th December the Stamp Collector's Record, that had fallen asleep from Montreal to Albany, awakened into new life. The periodical had there a longer but more sluggish history as it needed for its 44 issues the time from the 15th December 1868 until October 1876, something that is not unusual in the periodical literature of the United States. The next country which takes the tribute towards philately forward is Austria where Karl Ritter von Cardona on the 20th June 1866 had published an advertising paper with the title Der Briefmarken-Anzeiger which since the publisher had the young age of 13 years only, only one issue was circulated whereas the second issue, after it had been printed, was suppressed by his father and never went into circulation. The enthusiasm for stamp collecting now caught also the cool North and the Nordisk Frimærke Tidende was published by K. Lund in August 1867 in Copenhagen which however also had only a short life as it experienced only twelve issues to June 1868.

It would be too much to describe all other countries with their first periodicals in the same detailed way and I therefore let follow hereafter a table showing the issuance of specialist newspapers in the individual continents and countries in chronological order.

Translator's Note: The Table has not been translated, see the original.

Asia is the only continent in whose immeasurable areas until the end of 1893 no stamp magazine had been published. Only on the 1st May 1894 the first specialty paper, the Indian Philatelist had been published in Bombay, which was followed by several others. Out of the table we can see now that the newspaper literature in the individual continents appeared in following sequence: Europe: 15th December 1862; America: February 1864; Australia: 1st November 1879; Africa; October 1891; Asia: 1st May 1894: In the first year, only in Europe and in the following 16 years only in Europe and America were specialty newspapers published. Only after 17 years Australia ranked itself in and only after almost 30 years, Africa.

Furthermore, we can see from the table that in the time until the end of 1898 in Europe, considering the German Empire as one state only, that in the following countries no stamps magazines were published: Andorra, Bulgaria, Liechtenstein, Monaco, Montenegro, Russia and Serbia.

An incredible diversity is produced when the languages in which the papers are written are considered. These are as follows: 1. Danish-Norwegian, 2. German, 3. English, 4. French, 5. Greek, 6. Dutch, 7. Italian, 8. Portuguese, 9. Romanian, 10. Swedish, 11. Spanish. Since 1894 also Slovenian entered the list. The English papers could be divided into pure English and American-English papers since some American papers such as The Curiosity Cabinet were written in American-English dialect. While in the Greek language only one, in Swedish 3, in Dutch and in Romanian Language 5 each, in Danish-Norwegian 9, in Portuguese 12 and in Italian 18 different Specialty papers were published, however in the Spanish language 45, in French 65 in German 145 and English 770 different journals were published. While the German Newspaper Literature takes a dominating position, it will be far outstripped by the English and as far as the quantity of the papers is considered put deeply into the shadow.

The lion's share is produced by the United States of North America where no less than 446 journals caught sight of the light of day. This difference is even more prominent if we consider the number of journal issues that were published in the different languages whereby the above sequence changes partly There have been published:

Translators Note: See the Table on page 86 of the original

From the above it can be seen that to the end of 1898 a total of 1078 papers with a total of 15286 issues were published. The newspaper literature comprises therefore a large library whose storage requires an individual library room, especially if someone considers that every volume with limited exceptions contains a maximum of 12 issues and that in a library that claims manageability each volume must be kept separate. In regard to the value of the different papers, it is such a delicate and difficult question to answer so I prefer to refrain from answering this. Old, almost disappeared papers were mostly good even admirable, but cannot be measured with the extraordinary journals of the present time and therefore cannot be put on the same level of appreciation. From the pages of the newest, time and again can the ones which were published for ten and even more successful years not be placed into the same pot with the ones which were whilst extraordinarily edited, hardly earned their living. I consider it therefore more advisable to list these paper which had a proved right to exist by a longer period of existence in which lies a proof that in the field of their work they found their appreciation. I divide the papers hereby into 2 categories, namely in those that have survived between 50 and 100 and in such who have survived more than 100 issues, whereas those that were either completely or to a large extend only announcement papers or mostly only new issue lists or price lists will be marked with an *

The first category with 50-100 numbers follows in alphabetical order:

Translator's Note: See the list on page 47.

The second category with over 100 issues follows:

Translator's Note: See the list on pages 47-48

In summary 39 papers have survived for more than 50 issues and 29 for more than 100 issues. Four of them, namely: Der Allgemeine Briefm.-Anzeiger with its continuations; Le Timbre Fiscal; Philatelic Monthly in Philadelphia and Smith's Monthly Circular in Bath had reached more than 200 and the following two: Le Timbre-Poste and the Illustrierte Briefm.-Journal in Leipzig more than 300 issues.

I have already mentioned that the vast number of philatelic journals were published monthly but there are exception in ascending as well as in descending order. From the papers which were published in shorter sequences than one month, most of them are published twice a month as for example the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal, the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung, the Philatelistische Börsencourier, the Generalanzeiger für Philatelie, Écho de la Timbrologie etc., a smaller number like the Postillon in Haag, Mekeel's Weekly Stamp News in St. Louis etc. are published weekly. The Postal Card in Elisabeth was published for its first 3 volumes thirty times a year, while other papers have been published irregularly like the meeting reports of the dealer association of Berlin and many American papers. The Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung in Leipzig has been published since 1896, 36 times a year whilst the Philatelist of Dresden for a few years was published 17 or 18 times per year. Papers that were published more often than 52 times a year do not exist. Smaller however is the number of papers that have been published in longer sequences than monthly but this was mostly the case in England and North America. There exists firstly papers which are issued every two months (bimonthly) such as the The Stamp Dealers Journal Nottingham 1885 and those that were issued every quarter year (quarterly) such as the Quarterly Circular from Handford in New York or by Bishop in La Grange, or Quarterly Interchange of Chestershire in Philadelphia or Philatelic Quarterly Review by Collin in Oxford or the Philatelic Courier by Hechler in Halifax and so on.

In the United States someone can find even papers which are half yearly such as the Semianunal Stamp Collector by Jones in Schenectady, the California Philatelist by Gambs in San Francisco, the St. Louis Philatelist by Gambs in St. Louis and so on that are published on yearly basis. But Germany and Austria also own papers that are published with longer gaps than monthly such as the Beiträge zur Postwertzeichenkunde by the Brothers Senf in Leipzig which is only four times a year, the Weltpost by S. Friedl in Unter-Döbling by Vienna that is issued in 4-5 numbers per year or the Merkur by Mörsig in Kreuz am Ostbahn, The Philatelistischen Berichte by Friedmann in Rudolfsheim, the Universum by Dauth in Frankfurt a. M. of which 6-8 issues are being published each year. The notes that the clubs send out to their members at the end of the year which may be called yearly reports or confidential messages are in my opinion not periodicals and are therefore not considered. However, the Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie in Paris has to be considered as it has scientific content and is also published only four times a year, in the recent time sometimes only twice a year. It is by the way natural that not all papers can be listed here, even if they have shorter or longer periods, that is why the current examples should be sufficient.

Very important variances however are in the format of the papers. Most are issued in Octavo (small or large) and Quarto format. The first one is being used mostly in United States of America, in England and Australia, the later one is the prevailing format in Germany.

Papers in Folio, Duodecimo or even smaller formats are rarely seen. The largest papers are: Philatelic Tribune by Stanton in Smyrna in its first volume 40 x 25½ cm, Timbrologie Anversoise 42 x 30 cm, Anvers Philatelique 42½ x 31 cm, Mekeel's Weekly Stamp News in St. Louis 43 x 31 cm, Postzegel by Steenmeijer in Amsterdam 46 x 28½ cm, the Briefmarken-Sammler of Otto Windisch in Nuremburg (a paper that Dr. Diena only discovered at the end of 1894) 46¾ x 29 cm; Correio Luzitano of Almeida in Lisbon 46 x 34 cm, Portugual Philatelico of Cast. Branco in Lisbon 46½ x 31½ cm, Curiosity World by Husband in Lake-Village, Volumes 1 & 2, 31 x 34 cm and O Philatelista of Lisbon, 2nd Series 1893, 53½ x 39 cm.

In contrast, amongst the smallest pages are: the Deutsche Philatelisten-Zeitung of Fouré in Berlin 20 x 12½ cm, Bulletin Mensuel of Carion in Paris 16 x 12 cm, Philatelic Tribune in the later volumes 16 x 10½ cm, Tiny Collector of Bricker in Slate Lick, One Dime of Peugh in Kossuth 13 x 8½ cm, Collector of Welch in Worcester 12 x 8½ cm, Philatelic Review of Bickers in Bristol 11½ x 8¼ cm and the Philatelic Midget of Jay in La Hoyt 11 x 8¾ cm.

The large paper is therefore O Philatelista, the smallest are the Philatelic Review and Philatelic Midget. Both sizes of paper, placed side-by-side make a cute picture and someone can see the last mentioned ones only as an outflow of philatelic literary humor.

And what about the number of subscribers and numbers printed? By believing the numbers of the editors the pages are printed and sent out in thousands of copies. That this is not the case and does not need proof. Since most of the advertisements papers are distributed free of charge, actually only against the postage costs and fulfill their use only if they are kept in distribution for some time it is understandable and also believable that those papers are printed in a relatively high number, nevertheless the number provided by the publishers may be largely exaggerated. Nevertheless, I believe that some of the real specialty journals, namely the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal, Stanley Gibbons Monthly und Le Timbre-Poste have the largest runs.

Some publishers of English language journals tend to use a trick to receive a large number of subscribers by paying unreasonable high awards for those who provide most new subscribers.

Of large interest is to get to know the places in which the stamp papers were published. Some may believe that the publishers choose the larger cities for that. This is however, not the case since the largest number of papers were published in smaller, unimpressive places.

At the end of this article I will therefore present a list of all places in which stamp papers were published and indicate for every place how many papers had been published there. However, I have to comment that in cases where a paper was successively published at various places all places are mentioned. The places are sorted in alphabetical order.

Translator's Note: See the list on pages 49; 65-67 & 77-78.

This compilation shows that:

In Europe	169
In America	223
In Africa	2
In Australia	6

There are places in which papers appeared at the end of 1893. Of the 169 locations in Europe, the following are omitted:

From Great Britain 52
 From the German Reich 47
 From Austria and Switzerland 9 each
 From Italy 8
 From Belgium and France 6 each
 From the Netherlands 5
 From Norwegen, Spain and Romania 4 each
 From Sweden 3
 From Hungary, Luxembourg and Portugal 2 each
 From Greece, Turkey, San Marino and South Bulgaria 1 each

From the 223 American locations, the following are omitted:

From the United States of North America 182
 From Central and South America 24
 From British North America 17

The cities where most of the postage stamp papers were issued were:

In Europe:	London with 70
	Paris with 23
	Leipzig with 19
	Vienna and Liverpool with 12 each
In America:	New York with 41
	Chicago with 26
	Philadelphia with 18
	Boston with 14
	Brooklyn with 13

END

Personalities: J. C. Auf der Heide S.H.D.†
[Personalia: J. C. Auf der Heide S.H.D.†]
De Philatelist, April 1931, Volume 6, Issue 4, p.75

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
August 2013

PERSONALITIES: J. C. AUF DER HEIDE S.H.D.†

On March 31, at the age of 52, the well-known dealer and collector, J. C. Auf Der Heide Sive Heydahrens Duhme died suddenly in Hilversum. With this gentleman, Auf der Heide, another philatelist of "the old guard" left us. He started to collect at a very young age and later became a dealer. As much as he was known internationally, he had a special love for philatelic literature and owned a large library. From 1897, he issued the periodical Post-Zegelgids [Guide to Postage Stamps] and later the Boek-en Postzegelgids [Book and Guide to Postage Stamps] and later, from 1900 to 1910 De Postzegelgids [The Guide to Postage Stamps]. After 1927 this periodical was no longer issued but from that year on until 1930 Radio Philea was issued.

He also wrote the well-known works Guide For Postage Stamp Collectors and Manual of All Postage Stamps of The Netherlands and Colonies which were very meritorious for their time.

The interment took place on the 3rd April 1931. R.I.P.

END

Paul H. Jensen

Pleasure and benefits of philatelic literature

[Glede og nytte av Filatelistisk litteratur]

Nordisk Filatelistisk Tidsskrift, December 1993, Volume 100, Issue 4, pp.156-159

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

May 2013

PLEASURE AND BENEFITS OF PHILATELIC LITERATURE

Joy and Benefit of Philatelic Literature

At NFT's 100 years anniversary it is natural to let your mind go back these hundred years in time to philately's youth. This one can say began in the Nordic region in the 1880's with the first philatelic clubs in Stockholm, Gothenburg and Oslo in 1886, in 1887 and in Copenhagen and Lund in 1889.

At the same time the first postage stamp magazines began to bring information and knowledge about systematic stamp collecting, about the new stamps, about fakes and forgers, and about international auctions and exhibitions.

Philately in the Nordic countries was strongly influenced from Germany. Many of the most active collectors were well educated, often having studied in Germany. At that time for them the German language was the natural first foreign language which today is English. In Germany there was the International Collector's Association in Dresden, of which many Nordic collectors were members. A section of it was formed in 1885 in Copenhagen. It is possible (although it is not clear from my sources) that this section formed the basis for the founding of the Kjøbenhavns Filatelist Klub in 1887.

In Norway the first philatelic activity was when the stamp dealer Jacob Fischer, who together with his brother published a worldwide catalog in Norwegian already in 1877. It was with that, an unseemly little pamphlet on cheap paper one - but despite all, a source of joy and enlightenment for all collectors of the time. With Jacob Fischer's support the Kristiania Filatelist-Klub was founded in December 1886.

Typographer F. W. Andreen in Stockholm founded in 1887 "Tidning for Frimärkssamlare" that was the journal of the Frimärkssamlare-Föreningen in Stockholm. G. O. Ullebergs Nordic Frimærkeblad appeared sporadically from 1886 in Norway, but re-emerged as Kristiania Filatelist-Klub's member magazine in 1892.

There were two prominent personalities who put their stamp on philately in the Nordic region in the 1890 's: Customs controller O. V. Riise, Chairman of Kjøbenhavns Filatelist Klub, and docent Ernst Ljungström, Chairman of the Lund Filatelist Förening. As a result of their initiative the first Nordic philatelic meeting was held in Lund on June 16-18, 1893 with 45 participants from Denmark, Norway and Sweden. This was inspired by the yearly annual German philatelic meetings, which had been very popular. The meeting in Lund gave the basis for Nordic cooperation, which in many ways has developed into strong cooperation today.

A lot of things were discussed at the meeting in Lund. There were philatelic lectures and discussions, exhibits and festivities. One result was the combining of the Nordic Frimærkeblad and the Frimærkssamlare Tidning from 1894 forming the Nordic Filatelistisk Tidsskrift a journal for the participation of all clubs in the Nordic countries and Finland — a total of 9 clubs. It also led to the foundation of the Nordisk Filatelistforbund on January 1, 1897.

The philatelic meetings in Kristiania in 1895, Copenhagen in 1897 and in Stockholm in 1899 strengthened the friendship of philately in the Nordic countries, even though a dispute in 1899 led to the Frimærkssamlare-Föreningen in Stockholm pulling out of Nordic cooperation from January 1, 1900, starting up its own journal: the Svensk Filatelistisk Tidsskrift, and changing its name to Sveriges Filatelist Forening in 1901. In spite of everything the cooperation of the other Swedish clubs in the Nordic League and NFT continued very well.

All of this you can read in the old journal issues — to read about the organizational trends within Scandinavian Philately is exciting and fun, and some of the joy is also in owning old philatelic literature. In my small library I have all the issues of Nordisk Filatelistisk Tidsskrift. They give a great impression of how philately has developed over these 100 years. Much has changed, but the basic problem issues remain the same.

And this brings me on to the joys and the usefulness of having a philatelic library. One can search at random and possibly find a thread for which you searched for a long time. One should have a literature collection that even extends far beyond the areas of interest of one's own collection which also must be covered.

Within the range of philatelic literature you can find monographs of special areas, issues or even individual topics. There are magazines such as NFT and the other Nordic country magazines - some good, others less good, but all interesting. There are directories of specialties and peculiarities either worldwide, parts of the world, regions and individual countries.

World directories are becoming white elephants. The new releases expand to the level above what one can afford to acquire each year. I have more pleasure at looking in the world's Kohls directory from 1914 - 1916 than to try to find items in today's Yvert catalog. The prices are not so interesting any longer because I know how fictitious most catalog prices are. I get no satisfaction in looking at the price changes.

What should now be in a private philatelic library? First: all that necessary. It depends on the areas that one collects at the time with handbooks, manuals, special catalogs, studies of various kinds, other literature which covers geography and history, public announcements – perhaps some postal laws - a world catalog or two – preferably up to date; specialized literature on printing methods and paper – specialized journals and reports from study groups in special areas.

But in addition comes all that is really unnecessary - periodical vintages as far back as possible, handbooks about areas that one is not really interested in (but might just get interested in sometime), old books about stamp collecting, old specialized catalogs, the post offices anniversary writings (the Danish postal services jubilee journal fills me with joy just I take the giant book in hand - I do not even have to open it), Robson Lowes Encyclopedia of the British Empire (I hope that Robbie finally gets released bound), Ascher's old postal stationery directory, Anderssen and Dethloff's old books about Norway stamps (although I do not collect Norwegian stamps) - and so very, very much more.

One may rightly wonder if one can not have the same benefit of a good club library. Yes, perhaps, but something of the pleasure is the having everything close at hand when working with their stamps and their other questions. Here it is better to own than a loan.

I started as a general collector of stamps and postal stationery. That was many years ago. Eventually I cut and cut back on areas, but in the heart, I am still a general collector, and therefore I collect useless philatelic literature instead. To read about stamps that I never can or will obtain also brings joy to learn things that I otherwise would not bother to know. Another pleasure is that I can help stamp collector friends with literature they do not have, or do not know about.

Pleasures are always mixed with sorrow. Grief is that the flood of new information is so great that I no longer manage to keep abreast of everything; to know where I have everything and to keep tabs on it. I should really be more systematic; catalog my knowledge using a computer and get the help of a PC or whatever it's called. But then also some of pleasure would be gone; the joy of searching through magazines and books to find just what I was searching for.

What should my special philatelic hobby be called, I do not know. Perhaps Bibliophilately?

Finally - to get back to square one – NFT's 100 year anniversary - the pleasure and benefit of browsing through old issues has made the work of writing these lines a pleasure.

It might be fitting to reproduce the beginning of the greeting to the 2nd Nordic Philatelic Meeting in Kristiania in June 1895:

"Hail to the Nordic philatelists!
Welcome to the meeting, to a festive moment!
Bind closer together, so it never breaks the bond,
That was summoned at the Rally in Lund! "

These ties have remained tied through the Nordisk Filatelistisk Tidsskrift and the strong Nordic cooperation in philately. Although NFT today is only an organ for KPK, it is becoming a symbol of Nordic cohesion.

Paul H. Jensen

He is a Norwegian businessman, still economically active. He is mainly a postal historian. He was formerly the Chairman of Norges Filatelistforbund, currently he is president of the Commission for Postal History under the FIP. He is an international judge and exhibitor at the gold level, and is listed with The Roll of Distinguished Philatelists.

Second Nordic Philatelic Federation Meeting

After the changed statutes are adopted by the associations that have participated in the Nordic Philatelic Meeting, or the League thus formed, will come into force from January 1, 1897.

The printing of the statutes will take place in Copenhagen and the number of copies ordered will be sent to the participating associations.

The associations that have formed the League are:

Frimarksainlarefereningeg in Gothenburg,
Helsinki Frimärksamlare-Association
Kjøbenhavens Philatelistklub,
Christiania Filatelistklub, Lund Filatelistførening, Frimärkesamlare-Föreningen in Stockholm,
Upsala Filatelistklub.

Each of the participating Associations is requested to choose its Member of Delegation as soon as possible, consistent with statutes agreement and submit their choice to the undersigned Notice of Election Results.

Copenhagen, 14 December 1896

On the Committee's behalf

Riise

END

Concerning the Bibliography of German-Language Philatelic Literature by Friedrich Leitenberger
[Bibliographie der Deutschsprachlichen Philatelistischen Literatur von Friedrich Leitenberger betreffend]
Die Philatelie, 1925, Volume 2, Issue 9, p.180

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
September 2013

CONCERNING THE BIBLIOGRAPHY OF GERMAN-LANGUAGE PHILATELIC LITERATURE BY FRIEDRICH LEITENBERGER

We are afraid to inform the subscribers and readers of Die Philatelie that due to the limited circle of interested readers we have to discontinue the printing of further sheets of the serialised Bibliography started by Friedrich Leitenberger. While we recognize the ideal goals that are pursued by Leitenberger with the Bibliography published by him, we are not in the position, due to the currently bad economical situation, to sponsor the work on the cost of our magazine Die Philatelie.

Incidentally, even in earlier better times, several attempts have been made to publish a bibliography of periodicals. However, they all failed first on the question of money, second on the absolutely necessary large number of staff and third on the total indifference of the German stamp collectors. It is useless to provoke a new polemic about this fairish topic and hope to have convinced our dear friends and readers with these short explanations.

Board of editors and publishers of Die Philatelie

END

Library sale

[Bibliothek-verkauf]

Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, March 1912, Volume 23, Issue 3, p.59

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

October 2013

LIBRARY SALE

The philatelic library of Theodore Haas, who died last year, and who had not added to the library for the past ten years, which made the library incomplete regarding newer literature, but to counter that was all the more complete with regard to printed works from the very beginning of philately up to around 1900, has been sold, and, we are very happy to report this, [it was sold] to the great philatelic bibliophile, Senate President Victor Suppantchitsch for the price of 1,500 Marks. The Haas library therefore has a better fate than the Fränkel library, which as far as is known, was not only sold for next to nothing, but in addition, and this is particularly regrettable, was sold to a foreign buyer, as are so many good things which the Germans only learn to appreciate when they are no longer available. Many will be interested to know that there were many inquiries about the Haas library, an indication that philatelic libraries, which are generally not used by the great masses, can nonetheless be described as valuable.

END

Albert Gottschalk

Philatelic libraries

[Philatelistische Bibliotheken]

Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, August 1906, Volume 17, Issue 8, pp.114-115

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

January 2016

PHILATELIC LIBRARIES

In his novel Around the moon, Jules Verne tells about a professor who asked his pupil the ironic question "have you ever seen the moon" of which the pupil answered even more ironically "No Sir, but I have heard about him"...

The parallel with our topic may be drawn quite remotely. In reality we have some very good libraries, which as long as they are in private hands as proven by our bulletins, are eagerly used. Over and above everything else remains the same. The few larger libraries of philatelic clubs which are accessible to all members of these clubs are still more a sleeping beauty for two reasons: First and mainly due to the lack of knowledge among the vast majority of collectors who believe that the knowledge of the old literature is needless and not few prominent philatelist have the strong believe that with the purchase of the yearly edition of Senf or Kohl Catalogue they did all the needful. Even all the efforts by extraordinary collectors and friend of literature like Suppantisch, Fraenkel, Rommel and many others could not convince the broad layers of collectors about the importance of the collecting of literature. From that point of view the reject any larger monetary spending towards the library of the philatelic club, causing that the librarian is mostly occupied in organizing the holdings received as a gift. The more ambitioned users of the library therefore will soon lose their interest in the collection of books. Since that, what they are looking for, the more valuable and older literature is not or only incompletely available so it is not usual for study purpose.

More significant as that (first point) appears to us a second factor, the difficulty with which the use of the existing large libraries is connected. If someone likes to visit a private library it is naturally that the petitioner provides the owner of the library by his name or social status sufficient guarantees. Needless to explain, this is convenient only for the fewest. But also the large libraries of clubs are difficult to use. In order to receive books on loan one has to be a member of the club in question was not always feasible. Furthermore the books can only be received during the club meetings, i.e. at best every 14 days at the club evenings. Now imagine an author at work. Someone likes to write about a certain stamp, knowing that a magazine published something about that stamp (the bibliographies are usually of no use) and takes on the off chance the respective volume from the library. Naturally it is the wrong volume, which will be retired and exchanged after 14 days over and over endlessly until the case will be stopped as forlorn. In case the library is not at the place of his hometown the case will be complicated even further as it implies postage, lending fees and packing costs.

Out of the awareness of these facts the large private libraries have been created and out of these 15 years our own "German Philatelic Library". Without exception they have been created to serve their owners as study material, however, they developed invariably towards collections of the total specialists literature or of certain language areas of the same. Our own library therefore shall, as already indicated by its name, to reflect the German Philatelic literature. Space, time and contrary to what is mentioned above, sufficient funds have helped to compile these collections. By that it was possible to watch some splendid libraries to arise. Our self we managed with the acquisition of the Treichel Library which contained a true treasure of rare German and foreign language literature to shape our collection to one of the most important ones.

Unfortunately, little or even nothing has been done for the general public. If we ultimately want to create the required education material for the large mass of collectors, then we have to break with completely with the present system of libraries. Instead of private and club libraries we have to establish public libraries, collections of books similar to the large public libraries accessible to everyone who legitimizes himself by a sufficient guarantee and the proof of scientific working. Lets create libraries with well developed catalogues, reading rooms and writing facilities and finally establish a independent central place in which to specialist literature as a whole will be united.

Some may not believe that the problem is difficult to solve, but it should just be started. Of course, the association of club which will take the case into his hands shall be free in any direction, the experience with the Friedl-Museum leads to cautiousness. The provision of the basis of the library may not be very difficult if the German clubs or large philatelists will for the sake of the good and promising case decide towards an offering.

But we have to hurry because as every collector of literature knows, it will be more difficult year by year to acquire the literature that was often published in limited quantity only and the little still available is scattered useless in small and smallest libraries, therefore lost the public. As mentioned, it will be a beginning only, for the continuation no one needs to worry since we assume that not only the German publishers of magazines will take it as pride to support that venture by frequent contributions.

END

Philatelic library
[Philatelistische Bibliothek]
Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, April 1907, Volume 18, Issue 4, p.75

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2013

PHILATELIC LIBRARY

About the sale of this library (compare number three) which, by the way, did not contain the first volume of Timbre-Poste, but instead only the quite typical reprint of it, which is clear from the format, we find in the Écho de la Timbrologie only the following notice, which was taken from the Revue Française des Collectionneurs:

There was not much advertising for this sale. For that reason only a few aficionados, mainly philatelic dealers, quarreled about individual papers or volumes in French, English, and German.

That is to say, a fiasco, which, given the kind of advertising it received, was no less unlikely than was the literature to attract interested people, at least those who would pay for it. Nor were unusual items present; the major value lay in the beautiful bindings (half-leather, red, green, blue, etc.). Some of it we find offered in a French journal, namely the Roussin catalogue (5th edition, 15 Francs, 6th edition, 25 Francs) and the Moens catalogue (30 Francs) in the fancy bindings. In addition, there were a number of English catalogues (one to five francs); Ill(ustrierter) Briefmarken-Journal, 1885-1891, 7 francs; Postwertzeichen in volumes at one franc each; Austria Philatelist, 6 vols, 5 francs; Deutsche Briefm(arken)-Z(ei)t(un)g at one franc fifty per volume.

As we found out, the volumes carried a bookplate, Bibliothèque Philatélique Clement Rueff. (a few years ago in the Philatelist, Mme Louise Rueff was seeking philatelic literature.)

END

Orphaned library
[Verwaiste Bibliothek]

Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, December 1907, Volume 18, Issue 12, p.202

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2013

ORPHANED LIBRARY

Library without Librarian

It is well known that our deceased colleague Heinrich Fraenkel, Judge (retired), was also the owner of a painstakingly assembled philatelic library, which is undoubtedly the most significant library in Europe by virtue of the decades of careful work. It contains a veritable smorgasbord of rarities of the topmost level and also many unopened copies that were much sought after. It would be not only a fitting and desirable task to maintain this library in German hands, but above all a useful task for German philatelists or the large philatelic associations with the support of philatelic clubs. And so we have the hope that it will be possible to protect this jewel from emigration abroad, where so many treasures of German efforts found willing recipients. We will be happy to provide further details to interested parties.

END

Mixed News: Library
[Vermischte Nachrichten: Bibliothek]
Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, January 1908, Volume 19, Issue 1, p.19

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2013

LIBRARY

In the last number of the last volume of our journal, we wrote (at the indirect request of the heirs) that the large library of our departed co-worker, Heinrich Fraenkel, was available for purchase and expressed the hope that it would be possible to keep this jewel for German philately. As a result [of this article] a wealthy German philatelist announced his interest and, when we wrote about this to the heirs, the library had already been sold and, as we found out from another source, [to someone] in England. – If only the Judge were able to take pen in hand again!

END

Mixed News: Libraries

[Vermischte Nachrichten: Bibliotheken]

Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, August 1908, Volume 19, Issue 8, pp.132-133

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

October 2013

LIBRARIES

The Philatelic Club of Frankfurt an Main at its meeting of the 27th April expressed its sadness that the library of our irreplaceable District Judge Fraenkel, despite the relatively low price, did not find a buyer in Germany (refer to supplementary sheet in previous number on Page 529¹). In this regard we can report the following: On inducement of the heirs, on page 202 of issue 12 of the past volume, this library has been announced as up for sale and at the same time we had expressed the hope that this national philatelic treasure may be preserved for us. Thereupon immediately a prospective German buyer notified us of his interest. Upon our inquiry about the price the heirs informed us that the library has already been sold and from a different party we received the message that the deal was kept secret even against very close observers and also the address of the receiver of the comprehensive library was not made public. It was only known (refer to page 19) that the collection was going to England. The hasty sale also brought damage to the Philatelic Club of Berlin since a number of items and a number of known duplicates, which were bequeathed by the deceased have been sold and shipped along with the library (refer to report of the 469th meeting). Thoughts that this treasure would have remained in Germany, even at a higher price realized, if the heirs would have not completed the sale in such haste and secrecy, arise from the message by the then interested person directed to us ... "that I would have paid more than 1,800 Marks for the Frankel Library and would have given my (library) to the association. I had calculated myself 3-4,000 Marks" - This for the benefit of German philatelic research and respect.

END

Mixed News: Libraries
[Vermischte Nachrichten: Bibliotheken]
Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, October 1908, Volume 19, Issue 10, p.166

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2013

LIBRARIES

On Page 132 it is mentioned that the amount of 1,800 Marks has been paid for the library of Fraenkel. As per the now published Vertraulichen Mitteilungen des Berliner Philatelisten-Klub No. 209, Page 26, the sales price has amounted a multiple of the mentioned sum. It is understandable that for an object that has been sold secretly the sales price is not announced. "A multiple" of 1,800 assumes that the sum was more than 4,000 since the double amount would have been 3,600. Regardless, the price realized remains a mystery, nevertheless the mysteries and hasty sale of the most exquisite German library to a foreign country cannot remain unconcerned for the German Philately and it must be repeatedly expressed with sorrow that German Philately was denied the possibility of purchasing the library.

END

Philately in 1862
[La Philatélie en 1862]
L'Écho de la Timbrologie, 15th December 1928, Volume 42, Whole number 791,
pp.1816-1817
{Reprinted in Story Post, March 1969, Whole number 69, p.7}

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2013

PHILATELY IN 1862

One of our readers just found an example of the Valette catalogue, which was the guide for philatelists in 1862. In it, there is an excerpt of an amusing essay on the commercial value of stamps, that the philatelist of 1928 - how he has changed from what he once was! – shall read with great interest.

Here is how the good and simple François Valette, who referred to himself as the “Minister of the Interior” and who owned a shop selling antique books and postage stamps at 32 Rue Saint-Sulpice at Paris, expressed himself:

“On reflecting upon the most reasonable basis on which to base the selling prices for postage stamps, we find them given below:

Two divisions, or distinct categories, naturally present themselves to start with: 1) that of new stamps, that is to say, bought at their issue price set by the government; 2) that of stamps having been used, that is to say, those which have been demonetized or cancelled by the employees of the Administration, and which, consequently, can no longer serve their purpose.

In general, and for the stamps of the first category, the price of each new stamp seems, to us, to be equal to the notional and intrinsic (value) given by each country in issuing the stamp, plus the costs of advancing money, of correspondence, of commission, relating to the distance of the lands from which the stamps came, and the difficulties in procuring them.

It remains to us to research and to determine, as reasonably as possible, the price of old or demonetized postage stamps, likewise used or having served, and those which are most valuable in a collection. A priori, we say that the price that the collector seems to us to be able to pay in this category of stamps appears to be fixed, in general, half of their original value when issued, and generally does not surpass their (original) value.

However, by virtue of the principle: there are no rules without exception, one understands that the rarity, the age, or even the novelty of a stamp, combined with the difficulties of procuring it, and especially with the craze, with the impatience of owning it anyway, first and foremost, can help to arbitrarily raise the price. However, it is none the less true that greed has often exploited these circumstances in an indecent manner, by selling, at quite exaggerated prices, certain old or new stamps, reputedly rare.

In short, we boil down to saying that we believe that the price of stamps, even the rarest, must not exceed two francs, and this figure is already taken for the base in the sale of postage stamps made by the collector's shop, 32 rue Saint-Sulpice, instead of 4, 5, 10, 20, and even 35 francs, prices at which have been and are still sold some rare stamps, both in Brussels and Paris.

Finally, it seems appropriate to us, regarding new postage stamps, that the nominal and intrinsic value of each of them, plus commission costs, is definitely the basis.

We therefore advise collectors, whenever they find themselves in the presence of the exaggerated price of a stamp, that is to say exceeding two francs, we advise them to wait for an opportunity that will not be slow to appear.”

END

Max Bloch

The philatelic literature of the year 1919

[Die philatelistische literatur des jahres 1919]

Weltpost-Echo, January 1920, Issue 1, pp.114-115

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

October 2013

THE PHILATELIC LITERATURE OF THE YEAR 1919

Philatelic Literature (1919)

The year 1919 brought with it, once again, after several years in which nothing was published, a pleasing amount of philatelic literature.

Already in January there appeared, in terms of published books, a book edition of the supplement, "The Philatelist" which appeared in Dresden as "Handbook of German Philatelic Literature." In is a work that is absolutely essential for every friend of literature and for every philatelic specialist. Unfortunately, it includes only that literature which appeared in book form and not that which appeared in newspapers. With regard to that, I made a suggestion in a lecture in the spring of 1919 [at a meeting of] the Philatelists' Club of Teplitz-Schoenau, a suggestion about how to set up a large bibliography of the German philatelic literature, which appeared in newspaperes. This lecture was also published in "Briefmarkensammler" [Stamp Collector], in Vienna, and I did receive some suggestions and some offers of assistance. I will return to this in the next issue.

END

“General Index 1919” appears in February. Orders to the “W-E” Verlag [“General-Index 1919” erscheint Feber. Bestellungen an der “W-E”-Verlag]
Weltpost-Echo, January 1920, Issue 2, p.166

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2013

“GENERAL INDEX 1919” APPEARS IN FEBRUARY
ORDERS TO THE “W-E” VERLAG

166 Jan 1920 (2) WELTPOST-ECHO 1920

"General Index for 1919" will be published in February. Order from the "W-E" publisher.

The publisher of this publication will release an interesting philatelic bibliography next month, specifically the "General Index of German and Austrian Philatelic Newspaper Literature for the Year 1919." It will contain the information from about 25 to 30 German-language philatelic newspapers on roughly 50 pages, compiled by Mr. Max Bloch, our editor and the author of the General Index for 1918 published in "Briefmarkensammler", Vienna, in 1919. We recommend that you reserve a copy now.

END

Gerhard Tag
Our bookplate-express
[Unser exlibris-express]
Sammler-Express, 1959, Volume 13, Issue 3, p.58

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2014

OUR BOOKPLATE-EXPRESS

J. Edouard diamond

150 Years ago, on the 12th February 1809, Abraham Lincoln, a progressive middle-class democrat was born. From 1847 until 1849 Lincoln was a member of the US Congress and President of the USA from 1861 until 1865. During his Presidency, the Homestead Law was passed to allow farmers the free settlement in the national territory. He was successful in the victorious termination of the Civil War, which led to the liberation of the black slaves in the Southern States. On the 14th April 1865, Lincoln was the victim of an act of cowardly murderous attack. The illustrated bookplate with the portrait of Lincoln is an etching by A. N. Macdonald (USA) for the collector Diamond.

Karl Große for his 60th Birthday

The life of Karl Große, born on the 31st January 1899 in Dresden, is after almost 4 decades closely connected with the fortunes of the workers of the "Walter Ulbrich" chemical plant at Leuna. On the 15th January 1921 he started his profession there as a lithographer and up until today, everyday he covers the distance between his small home in Uichteritz at Weißenfels and the Leuna plant. In his free time, Karl Große has occupied himself with painting and graphics, in the exhibition Art of Ordinary People (Berlin, 1952), his pastel picture "In the Harz" was exhibited. A number of lithographs have been created for various occasions, for births and other family occasions. Also certainly with bookplates, of which we illustrate one prepared for Adolf Roß (Lithography, 1928). With this we extend our heart-felt greetings and congratulation to a sixty-year-old worker who, at the same time, is an expert and artist since art comes from ability!

Gerhard Tag, Berlin

END

Again a new column
[Weer een nieuwe rubriek]
De Philatelist, March 1928, Volume 3, Issue 3, p.51

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2014

AGAIN A NEW SECTION

AGAIN A NEW COLUMN

Philately has at this time reached a new level by which philatelists have to make a choice which direction their preference will take them. With the stamp glut, collecting the whole world is almost becoming impossible, and only possible for those with lots of free time and lots of money. Many have already started to limit themselves and collect only Europe. Others collect Europe and the Netherlands and Colonies, while a great number of collectors limit themselves to the Netherlands and Colonies. Then there are those who specialize in other countries where the saying goes: "as many heads, as many ideas." So it's not a surprise that few philatelists have the same preference.

Taking into account the foregoing "The Philatelist" will print articles and news items about the Netherlands and Colonies. But many times we are asked to write about other countries too. We hope in the future to honor these requests, but at this moment it is impossible because of space limitations. We hope to fill this gap, at least for now, partially by starting a new column, "Bibliography" which you can find for the first time in this number, and especially with the "Article Overview" in which we refer to the most important columns found in foreign magazines. In these the specialist can browse for what's of interest to him, which is better than to translate those columns in our column, with the result that many of our readers would skip part of the contents, and we have come to the conclusion that this has not happened up to now.

In conclusion we can inform you that we have made an agreement with the Rotterdam Philatelic Society, which is closely connected with what we have discussed. The magazines that contain these columns and those that will be listed later will be collected, circulated in the circle of readers and then made available for circulation exclusively for members.

END

Auction of a large philatelic library
[Auktion einer grossen philatelistischen-bibliothek]
Philatelistische Miscellen, September 1907, Volume 4, Issue 9, p.89

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2014

AUCTION OF A LARGE PHILATELIC LIBRARY

Auction of a large philatelist library. In Paris took place on March 13th. J. a public auction of Mr. Roux staff's philatelic library, which was very little known. The individual, highly interesting periodicals, such as all the issues of Moens' magazine "Le Timbre poste" from 1863-1896 in 37 volumes, only cost 31 francs, all of Krötzsch's manuals "The postage stamps of the German states", 9 volumes only 13 francs, the magnificent work from Diena, the "Postage stamps of the Duchy of Modena" only 8 francs. And the work "The postage Stamps of British colonies, possessions and protectors in Africa", which has long been out of print in England, two very valuable volumes 22 francs, all works in very fine bindings. Wouldn't it have been possible to achieve higher auction prices by staging appropriate advertising for the 187 numbers contained in the auction catalog, which contain many valuable items, instead of the numbers mentioned above? As far as I know, there are a very significant number of collectors of philatelic works, and especially associations that like to complete their libraries cheaply.

END

Dr. E. W. Floyd's philatelic library
[Dr. E. W. Floyds philatelistische bibliothek]
Deutsche Briefmarken-Post, May 1930, Issue 5, p.87

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
September 2016

DR. E. W. FLOYD'S PHILATELIC LIBRARY

The philatelic library of the recently departed famous English collector Dr. E. W. Floyd - probably one of the most famous of its kind - will be sold by Harris Publications Ltd. in London (WC2 booth 112). This library which is a collection of Dr. Floyds books is especially precious because of the detailed findings in the form of handwritten notes in each one. The collection is sold by Stanley Gibbons as well.

Collectors of Literature now get a rare opportunity to buy some interesting pieces.

END

[Anton Bachl (Editor)]

A bibliography of the German philatelic literature

[Eine bibliographie der Deutschen philatelistischen litteratur]

Das Postwertzeichen, August 1891, Volume 4, Issue 8, pp.64-65

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK

September 2016

A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

In No. 1 of the first volume of this newspaper, Emilio Diena came to the public with the proposal to publish a reference book about philatelic literature. According to his opinion this bibliography should comprise of all philatelic literature of the whole world, therefore including the non-German, philatelic world and Diena explained his thoughts in several follow-up articles in the volume for 1889, in the last of which he tried to refute the difficulties of executing such a work which other had expressed to him.

The thoughts of Diena were generally well received, some of those had wished such a reference book to inform himself about a topic in which he was currently interested, hence the wish brought forth the thought that it could be executed by publishing such a bibliography. But there were far too many and too severe complications so it was deemed sufficient to aim at least for a bibliography of the German philatelic literature. If we remember correctly, the Schutz- und Trutbund included the project in their program, however, for reasons not to be discussed here, it was not implemented.

With pleasure therefore, German collectors may have taken note when in May of the current year, a pamphlet was distributed by the editor of the Philatelistischer Börsen-Courier in Mährisch-Ostrau, together with an invitation to subscribe. A man was found who willingly wanted to take on this huge task, a man whose more than 30 years of experience as a philatelic author are the best and safest guarantee that the project will be completed in the most adequate way – the Judge of the District Court, Victor Suppantchitsch of Graz.

Based on the fundamental thought as published by Diena at that time, the plan of the work has been, although in reduced form, outlined, that the work shall be a guide through the complete German philatelic literature by which anyone who wants to inform himself about any philatelic topic will easily find what was written about it. However, the topics that are familiar to every philatelist and are listed in the better handbooks, will not be mentioned in this work. Only publications with a real philatelic quintessence and value will be added.

The work shall be split into four parts:

The first part will contain the history of philately overall.

The second part will contain the history of the German philatelic literature.

The third part will carry a listing of the complete German philatelic literature containing the most accurate data.

The fourth part will contain, in lexicographical form, the actual bibliography of the complete German philatelic literature.

This bibliography will comprise and include everything by whomsoever it has been written and published in the German language. Every philatelic author will be listed separately and all works, papers, essays, etc. composed by him will be listed separately with an indication of the topic, etc.

How honourable it would be for the German collectors to be the first nation to pride themselves on having such a bibliography does not need to be further explained. It's an obligation of honour for every German association, every German collector to ensure the realization of the work. The work shall be published in about 40 printing sheets in deliveries of 3 printing sheet. The date of publication is planned for the month of May 1892 and followed by monthly deliveries. The price of the delivery was set at 1 Mark whereas the subscribers who pledge until October 1st of the current year to take the complete work will receive a 50% discount, meaning they will receive the work at half price. This price reduction cannot take place for orders after October 1st.

Therefore, go on German philatelists, and secure the implementation of a national venture by energetic support and enthusiastic subscriptions.

END

Literature: Bibliography of the German philatelic literature
[Literatur: Bibliographie der Deutschen philatelistischen literatur]
Welt-Post, May/June 1891, Whole number 35, p.372

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
September 2016

LITERATURE:

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

This will shortly be issued by the publishing house of Carl C. Sauer (Editor of the Börsen-Courier) in Mährisch-Ostrau, compiled by Judge of the District Court, Victor Suppantschitsch. As per the pamphlet in our hands, the work will be split into 4 parts.

The first part will contain the history of philately overall.

To be followed by the second part which will contain the history of the German Philatelic literature.

The third part will carry a listing of the entire German Philatelic literature giving the most accurate data.

The fourth part will contain in lexicographical form the actual bibliography of the complete German Philatelic Literature.

This bibliography will comprise and indicate everything that had been written and published in the German language.

The work should contain about 40 printing sheets and will be delivered in parts of 3 printing sheets each.

The first delivery is expected to be released in June 1892, followed by monthly deliveries.

The price per delivery has been set at 1 Mark 60 Kr Austrian currency.

Those subscribers who pledge before the 1st August of the current year to take the complete work will receive a 50% discount.

It is therefore in the hands of the German collectors to call this work to life because only if a sufficient number of subscribers is found such that the subscriptions received equal half of the production costs, will the work will be published.

END

Karl v. Gündel

The first part of a bibliography of the German philatelic literature published [Das 1. heft einer bibliographie der Deutschen philatelistischen literatur erschienen]
Philatelistischer Börsen-Courier, 10th August 1892, Volume 7, Issue 15, pp.155-157

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
September 2016

THE FIRST PART OF A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE PUBLISHED

Since Dr. Emilio Diena published his essay entitled "An encyclopedia about Philatelic Literature" in issue No. 1 of Postwertzeichen of 1888 in various specialist papers, the desire for such a work had been expressed and the huge benefit had been demonstrated in regard to the scientific development of stamp collecting. However, an encyclopedia, as proposed by Dr. Diena, would have been unfeasible to prepare as he wanted to have all of the philatelic literature of all nations to be included. This would be - under the condition that in all countries a sufficient number of qualified contributors would have to have been found - such a huge and very expensive work that it would have been difficult to find a publisher for it who would take the risk of publishing such a comprehensive and costly-to-produce work which, considering its mostly likely very high price, would have attracted very few buyers.

In the very correct realization that an encyclopedia of the philatelic literature of all countries would almost never be accomplished, District Court Judge Suppantschitsch, undertook what is the most important for German collectors, to compile a bibliography of the German philatelic literature only. It would be unnecessary to prove that Suppantschitsch, in particular, would be competent and qualified to conquer such an awful lot of work; his outstanding merits regarding philately are very well known and it is not necessary to emphasize the same here.

The complete work will comprise the following 4 parts:

- I A history of Philately
- II A history of the German philatelic literature
- III A summary of the complete German philatelic literature
- IV A bibliography of the complete German philatelic literature in lexicographical form.

The fourth part will comprise and list everything that has been published in the German language from all areas of philately, written and published by anyone. It will be prepared in such a way that it will be easy for anyone to find for any subject matter or philatelic term what has been written about it.

The first booklet of the bibliography, containing about the half of the history of philately, was just published by A. Larisch of Munich and it will be admitted that something very dignified is being offered with that. Suppantschitsch is a philatelist of 30 years and always had a strong interest in anything that happened since then in the field of Philately. Therefore, we will receive from him a history of philately, which will in accuracy and correctness leave nothing to be desired, because the writer had witnessed and followed all events with attention.

No less interesting will be the other parts of the work: the history of the German philatelic literature and summary of the complete German philatelic literature. Of greatest importance however, will be the fourth part, the actual bibliography in lexicographical form because everyone who likes to teach himself about a philatelic subject will find there, with little effort, all articles that have been published in any German philatelic paper about the subject in question.

I would like to advise however, that not everything can be taken as correct that has been published in early times in philatelic papers in regard to the history of stamps, since much incorrect information may be found. Let's take for example the "billets de port paye of 1653"; in No. 2 (1 June 1863) of the Zschiesche-Köder's magazine for stamp collectors it is reported that these "billets" etc. are stamps (postage stamps) that had to be affixed on covers. Lammers however reports in the 1st bulletin of the 3rd volume of "the Dohm and Rodenbergs Salon for literature" the billets are free frankings whereas Dr. Moschkau in his publication "The Watermark" etc. (4th edition, Page 6, that they are similar to today's wrappers, just significantly wider. We find therefore in 3 articles 3 different pieces of information: stamps to be affixed, free frankings, similar to today's wrappers just significantly wider – 3 pieces of information which only have in common that one is as incorrect as the other. I could indicate many more similar examples; I therefore like to recommend you to take extreme caution with information published in older publications and to verify its correctness before believing it.

District Court Judge Suppantschitsch offers us with his bibliography a truly monumental work, a work unparalleled until now and in near future, a book which will honour the German philatelic literature that will contribute towards taking the study of stamps a good pace forward. By this bibliography all who are seriously interested in the development of the study of stamps on an academic basis will benefit by a facilitated access to find anything that has been published in the German philatelic literature. They will not have the need to painstakingly go through all specialist literature with the danger of overlooking the most important information, they will however just check the respective subject where clearly represented and very correct, all the German periodicals listed as per number and volume, everything that had been published on the subject in question. To whoever is seriously interested to write a comprehensive and detailed article or to educate himself about a certain subject the bibliography will be of unimagined use; I have to repeat however that anything that has been published about stamps until about half a decade ago must be taken with the greatest caution since up to that time much of the writing was unsophisticated and incorrect and not based on studies of original sources.

The publishing house has the work that will be published in 10 monthly parts at a price of 1 Mark each, faultlessly produced and leaving no room for complaints. May it find numerous buyers.

Whoever is seriously interested in the study of stamps will surely not regret it if he procures this excellent work. The costs for the same is, even for a vast number of collectors, not prohibitive: - to spend over a period of 10 months 1 Mark each month for such a comprehensively prepared work, which will never be outdated as it just need to be continued at appropriate periods, is not a useless unnecessary expenditure but one which will bring the one who spends this not very high amount great benefits.

END

Hans Meyer

Philatelic libraries and catalogues

[Philatelistische bibliotheken und kataloge]

In: Die Philatelie im "Dritten Reich": Die Organisationen der Sammler und Händler 1933-1945., Mironde Verlag, Germany, 2006, pp.285-294

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
September 2016

PHILATELIC LIBRARIES AND CATALOGUES

The essence of philatelic libraries

Was it the passion to collect or the cool reason which lead at an early time towards the creation of important private libraries? Brühl, in his History of Philately, described the large collectors of literature who soon accumulated many thousands of items and with that laid the base for the later public libraries.

The most important European collector of literature after the British Lord Crawford was without doubts Viktor Suppantchitsch (1848-1919), President of the Senate of the highest court in Vienna. Despite that he limited his interest in literature that was published prior of 1900, his collection contained over 30000 items, consisting of books and about 27000 single magazine issues, mostly in English language. His collection however did not remain in Europe; in the height of the Austrian inflation his heirs sold the collection of the ridiculous amount of just $1500 to the American national Mr. Theodore Steinway, who has given it as a gift to his club, the Collectors Club of New York.⁶¹

An important German collector of books was Theodor Haas (1848-1911), Editor at Senf in Leipzig. His books had gone to Suppantchitsch, hence to America. A big one of literature collecting also was Heinrich Fraenkel (1853-1907), district court judge and later on banker.⁶² His library, housed in 39 crates was purchased by Lord Crawford after the Philatelic Club of Berlin rejected to purchase the same.

What remains are the collectors from whose libraries the German philatelic libraries benefited. The contemporary philatelic press reported occasionally about that, in 1935 the Deutsche Zeitung für Briefmarkenkunde (DBZ) in Pößneck (Thuringia) who noted in a short column »Was man so hört«⁶³ (Gossips) that there are now four public philatelic libraries existing in Germany. The Prussian States Library in Berlin which contains the Rommel Library⁶⁴ and a large part of the library of the Philatelic Club of Berlin. Furthermore she got the libraries of Alexander Bungerz and Carl Beck⁶⁵ donated by IPOSTA. A note in *Deutschen Sammler*⁶⁶ reported that that library also contained the library of the Germany Postal Stationary Association. The Sammler-Woche found very critical words towards this Berlin State Library as she wrote.⁶⁷ »The holdings accumulated by the libraries of Rommel, Beck and Bungerz in addition to the Berlin Philatelic Club are still housed in the basement and are not possible to use«. This fact was confirmed by the message by the imperial federation for philatelic literature who published a letter written by the Prussian State Library dated 18 April 1936, informing that the cataloguing of the new acquisitions of the collections of Dr. Rommel, Beck und Bungerz has started in 1930, however due to lack of staff had to concentrate on more important issues. It was foreseen however to restart this works if

Supporting staff is being provided by the Philatelists.⁶⁸

The Clubs faced difficulties with the more and more growing holdings in regards to the storage as well as the professional administration. Therefore it was the preferred way to leave this work for public libraries which however, due to lack of staff neglected the new additions and left them for years in the basement.

Also two well known public libraries in Leipzig⁶⁹ got philatelic libraries. The book collections of the Germaniaring and the club "Leipziger Briefmarkenbörse" have been integrated into the libraries of the University. On the other hand, the library of the ex-champion Hugo Krötsch is being kept in the Germany Library Leipzig after it has been bequeathed by the publisher C. G. Vogel to the same. Krötsch, a prominent philatelic publisher and stamp dealer dedicated especially to philatelic magazines, demonstrated in 1914 during the book and graphic exhibition in Leipzig in 23 cabinets the development of the magazine literature of the years 1863-1914.

Already in 1931 the philatelic clubs of Munich started to handover their holdings for better administration of the same to the library of the city of Munich. The chairman of the philatelic club of Munich, Mr. Friedrich Heinrich Zinkgraf (1878- 1954), was largely responsible for the formation of the philatelic department and laid the basis by transfer of ownership of the library of the club and dispensable private holdings. In addition to the estate of Anselm Larisch and dispensable items from the library of the philatelic club "Tauma" and from the Postal Szationary Club of Munich, from the private library of the Bavaria researcher Colonel Hugo Sehröder and with support of the Society for Research of Postal History in Bavaria and a number of individual persons a large number of extraordinary works. The previous Editor of the magazine "Das Postwertzeichen", Mr. Alexander Leo, arranged for the donation toward the library of the city of Munich of the library of the (old) Association of German Philatelic Associations in Germany and Abroad which was already allocated for the library in Leipzig. Also the library of the previous Editorship of the federal bulletin was part of the donation. Valuable philatelic foreign literature Munich has received with thanks from the government of Lichtenstein as well as donators from New York and the Netherlands. Also Dr. Victor Weinerr, Pressburg, the Editor of the Danube-Post, contributed. In 1939, duplicates from the federal library of Berlin were delivered since the holdings kept in the basement of the library apparently were cleared up. The library administrator, chief inspector Otto Müller who has been installed by the library of the city of Munich has to be thanked to make the holdings useable by issuing the first catalog, prepared by typewriter script, in a total of 192 pages.⁷⁰

Also in Frankfurt, where the Club for Briefmarkenkunde⁷¹ handed over in 1936 his good specialist library to the city library, a literature holding was available for the interested philatelist.⁷²

In the enclosure of the imperial federation for philatelic literature NaB No. 6/1936 it was talked about additional libraries: The library from Artur Ernst Glasewald, Gößnitz, which „fall asleep“, the library of the Philatelic Association of Wurttemberg which will be newly indexed, the library of the Philatelic Association of Essen which also will undergo a revision and the libraries and the Philatelic clubs of Berlin and the regional association Berlin, both with are currently in revision.

The library of the Stamp Collector Club Hallensia with its over 3000 issues has to be considered at that time a s large club library. The club had, as seen out of their "Reports", (Aassociation Bulletins) procured continuously new publication but also older issues in addition to smaller library holdings and received many donations. A. E. Glasewald (1861- 1926) has inherited towards Kurt Zirkenbach his library which whoever burnt in a large extend during the second World War...

A list of content as of 31 December 1949, prepared by Kurt Zirkenbach in which house the library was stored, contained as Part I the German-Language and as Part II the foreign language magazines. Many of them were bound into yearly volumes and most of them were added to the holdings prior of 1945. A list of content about the philatelic books was not prepared. Peter Laub, from 1990 on president of the new »Hallensia«, described that library as the largest in Munich. He described in bulletin No. 1/1990, Page 3 of the reestablished club the destiny of that collection. As per is explanation demanded the district commission Philately Halle in 1948 from Zirkenbach the surrender of the library, despite that no suitable accommodation was available. The holding was then kept for two years in rooms of the district management of the cultural foundation and was free accessible for all participants of the conferences and gatherings. Then an agreement was reached with the library of the University and Country in Halle to transfer the library to them.

Zirkenbach should have been in charge to organizing and registering the holdings, however, that never happened. Due to lack of space the library has been passed on and ended up at the state library of Berlin where she was lying around, unprotected, in the basement. In the 1970th finally she ended up in Postal Museum in East Berlin, Mauerstraße in the center for scientific historic holdings. The reminders have received a professional treatment in the Museum for Communication and are now included in that holding.⁷³

Carl Schmitt diel from Hamburg was the leader of the imperial federation for philatelic literature in the management of the imperial federation.⁷⁴ Among the most important task of his federal association was to act as literature agent for the publication of offers and inquiries for collectors as well as the literature references. Schmitt diel called the later one as one of the main area of work. It was foreseen to create a central office for information for all philatelic questions. Especially the collection of information about philatelic works like books, catalogues and magazines, libraries, literature collectors. It was informed about a bibliography of the German language philatelic literature that has been worked out by the leader of the imperial federation in cooperation with the "Association of friend of literature" Hamburg.⁷⁵ In 1937, Carl Schmitt diel published by the publishing house Noske, Borna, part 1, General index of the German language philatelic magazine literature with 70 pages. It was planned to publish this bibliography of the German language philatelic literature in several parts.

The „German Association of Philatelic Literature“

The formation that has been reported in August 1944 had the goal to integrate all collectors, associations, specialist authors, editors and dealers interested in philatelic literature. She has its roots with Imperial collector supervisor, Ernst Overmann, since the numerous efforts of the past got stuck in their beginnings. The association takes over the implementation of a Central German Philatelic library with the goal of an associated Literature reference and literature purchasing and trade center. The publishing of a catalogue for philatelic literature is a main issue of all tasks. Part of that is also the creation of a comprehensive list of references (bibliography). Furthermore it is requested that the community supports the publishers and philatelic authors to improve the quality of philatelic literature.

This publication appears very magniloquent, the numerous efforts by Carl Schmitt diel where obviously ignored by Overmann.

The Stamp Catalogues

Catalogues are usually declared as the favorite literature of collectors. The proper specialist literature however was widely not appreciated. Even into the late 1920th it was a common approach to prepare “Whole-World” Catalogues. Anselm Larisch called his work Price Index 1889. Senf created the Stamp Catalogue which included already in 1894 stamp images.

A significant catalogue was the one by Paul Kohl, Chemnitz. In 1909 it was published already in the 8th edition and listed in 1526 pages the stamps of the whole world. The 9th edition of 1912, called the “large cataloged” was named Kohl’s Stamp Handbook.⁷⁷ The Schwaneberger Verlag in Leipzig published in 1920 their World-Catalogue. This was understood as successor of the Kohl-Catalogue who did not survive the first World War. However, from that catalogue only one issue was published as he could not compete against the Senf Products which were published at the same time.⁷⁸ The Schwaneberger Verlag, with its Michel-Overseas that was published initially in 1920/21, however was more successful. Included in that catalogue were all non-European Postal Administrations in strict alphabetical order. The issue of 1920/21 contained 520 pages and was already widely illustrated.

Especially in Germany a good number of Catalogues were available from a variety of publishers. Reason for constant critique where the catalogue values which are determined by the producers with very different philosophies. The collector organizations constantly demanded the production of Net-Catalogues, these demands however were rejected by Senf and Michel. Their prices (values) however were very popular among the dealers as the high values enabled them huge discount margins which a yet favorable price for the dealers.

Pioneer of the Net-Catalogue was Hans Froede, a stamp dealer and publisher in Düsseldorf who was in 1930 in direct competition with Senf and Michel. He published his catalogue initially as German-, then as Europe-Catalogue and from 1930 on as World Issue. Here was no lack of criticism among the collectors. In 1930, Kurt Zirkenbach criticized the chaotic numbering system of the different producers. “There is at first the wish of all collectors of German stamps: The sequence of the individual stamps. The large Handbook by Dr. Munk, Senf and Michel, in every catalogue a differed numbering system. For anyone who works seriously with the stamps of our fatherland, the large handbook by Dr. Munk remains the base. After the publisher Moser issued his handbook of stamps from the German Inflation period, the other publishers adopted the sequence created by Dr. Franz Kalkhoff and Dr. Herbert Munk.”⁷⁹

Edwin Müller called himself a sort of “fortune-teller” when he called 1935 as the year of Catalogue reform. The European mainland counted five standard catalogues, the Yvert in French language, the other four, Senf, Michel, Zumstein and Froede in German language. It is not clear why the German speaking area requires four catalogues while the French area manages with one only. There was always another catalogue publisher who had the plan to create another numbering system which was understood as a discontent with the existing catalogues that the textual treatment was not correct. Not seldom was the case that the identical stamp is listed in three different catalogues in 3 different ways. Especially with exotic countries some issues are ones listed as legitimate issue, others are listed as bogus issue or not listed at all. Printings and errors are listed completely different. Müller assumes “listings by favor” due to the often changing listings. Very grave however the price finding is. The catalogue publishers, used to high discounts where 10-20 % more or less is not significant, are not able to cope with a transition. To conclude his prediction, Müller however only expressed the best wishes for improvement; to predict the same he was not ready.⁸⁰

Not only catalogue description and reviews could be found in the stamp magazines. The editors who took pride for them self published comprehensive articles with praise and critique. Every year, in around September or October, the “New ones” contacted the editors with the expectation that their benefits being published in the magazines.

About a promotion of economic development in a special way the Sammler Woche (Collectors weekly) No. 13/35 reported under the header „Subsidy of Exports“. “The 25 % Export bonus for German books which has been introduced some time ago is also beneficial for German Catalogues and Albums which can therefore sell abroad 25 % cheaper compared to local. The Michel Europe Catalogue therefore costs i.E. in Austria only S (Schilling) 5.90 (instead of RM 3.75 = S 7.90. Also the album publishers deliver abroad 25 % cheaper. These privileges are extraordinary welcomed since they will definitely contribute to increase the sale of the German Philatelic publicity products abroad.”⁸¹

The individual issues cannot be viewed on a yearly base. Let's take as example the year 1936. Senf, the “Senior”, issued in 1936 again in 3 volumes. World, Europe and Germany. 5, 2.85 and 1.25 RM where prices which were praised as affordable. Less amused however where noted the strong jump in prices, which, for German areas where up to 100 % compared to the previous year.

The Michel 1936 offered the whole world, either in one volume for RM 5.50 or in two volumes for RM 6.50. Europe costs RM 3.75. All together almost 2000 pages, 300 new pages were additional. This does not wonder – with “the thoroughly editing which makes this almost to a handbook.”⁸²

The Stamp Proice Book of 1936 by Froede was not only differnet in the price which was announced with RM 3.50 for the “whole world” in one volume, in two volumes for RM 4.50, Europe with RM 2 and Germany for Pf. 50: “Contrary to the previously described works, Froede does not want to be a academic advisor, he just wants to present the reader the market value and not Catalogue value.”⁸³

The Europe catalogue published by Zumstein was issued in 1936 in the 19th edition and costs 3.75 Franks (which were converted with the factor 0.8 to RM). Commonly praised were the usual format with cloth binding and the illustration with images of all stamps. In exchange there were no comprehensive descriptions.

The Wrona German Specialist Catalogue of 1936 was the Benjamin (note: the youngest) among the catalogues published in Germany. His inner development can no noticed by an increased volume of 20 pages. In addition, he positions himself, as per the judgment of the specialist paper “Die Post”, contrary to the other catalogues, as “Net-Catalogue”.⁸⁴

Lesser known in the year 1936 were the German Specialty Catalogues by Schäfer, Sellschopp, Drahn and Grobe.

Very dramatically the situation of the collector was explained in 1938 by Dr. Ivan Karl Turyn, the successor of Edwin Müller at the Vienna Collectors Week: “It is not easy for the stamp collector., almost no day without new issues, there a commemorative issue, in that country new Air Mail stamps, in another country some Overprinted issues would be issued. Und to all of this always the question: What my catalogue will say? And that every of our German Stamp Catalogues says something different, that numbering, description and country allocation, especially however the prices are different, that is what makes the life of the philatelists especially difficult.”⁸⁵

Furthermore, Turyn criticizes: Senf – already in 1939 with his 42. Edition, has been dispraised due to his still conservative Discount Catalogues. Michel has been criticized that he makes no efforts to implement Net-Values and makes it himself to easy with it. In addition he does not follow the modern German Grammar by writing Canada, Cuba, Costarica not with “K”.

At the praised Zumstein marked the moderate Price increments the deviation from the discount catalogue with which change in prices can be handled in a more flexible way. The Froede has been praised due to his Net Prices without that no stamp dealer can manage anymore. He also broke new ways with the fusion of associated collecting areas like Liechtenstein to Switzerland Postal Administration, Luxembourg to Belgium due to its combines customs administration and Monaco to France.,

The new Great-German-Catalog 1939 by Turyn has been praised by Wrona beside of the clear arrangement and the net-price character only the comment that a valuable part of Great-Germany is missing, the, even if it is not the youngest, not possible to think about without it, the Ostmark.⁸⁶

The company Richard Borek of Braunschweig issued since 1923 lists for stamps of Europe, the have however not to be misinterpreted with catalogues. They are rather stock lists from that company and indicate their sales prices. Borek in any case had not participated on the catalogue market prior of 1945

In the long run recognized were not the catalogues from the dealers but independent publishers who do not have their own commercial interest in their price fixing.

In 1943 when the stamp magazines had to cease due to lack of paper also the print of stamp catalogues had to stop. Only that exclusive publisher, the Schwaneberger Verlag Eugen Berlin in Leipzig C 1 has been assigned and a simplified version of the issues issued since then was published in May 1944 under the Name Michel "Stamp Catalogue 1944/45"

The Censorship of Stamp Catalogues

During the time of the National Socialism, the German Catalogue publishers encountered the dilemma to conceal politically "obnoxious" stamps from other countries in their yearly periodical publications. A time of common uncertainty was created which issues are allowed. For the publishers who were in competition with other publishers to inform their collectors as complete as possible about the issues of the whole world, enormous difficulties developed in case they when they had been to informative. It was indeed existence threatening to illustrate and register unwelcomed foreign stamp issues in their stamp catalogues. The case of the catalogue publisher Hans Froede, Dusseldorf shall be demonstrated as example.

The district management of the Nazi Party (NSDAP) had reported⁸⁷, that the stamp catalogue (supplement) of the Company Froede of 25 January 1940, on page 4, stamps issued by Algeria, then France were offered. Hence would "with German currency the recruiting of colored troops for our enemies being financed."

The Propaganda Department of the German Empire inquired on 4 April 1940 with the Economic Group Retail, Stamp Department⁸⁸ and received the information that that department unfortunately had several times the reason to complain since that company is lacking any understanding of political behavior. Three points are to emphasize especially: First: Froede included, despite contrary view, the „Dollfuss-Stamp“ with image in their catalogue.

Second: Froede included and valued without concerns the so-called Jew-series of Luxembourg.

Third: Froede considered it appreciate in today's time, even at the year start to do advertising, calling the Froede-Catalogue as the German Yvert. "The Yvert Catalogue is a French catalogue with one of the publisher being a Jew."

Based on the statement of the Managing Director Wilhelm Bernhard, the (Economic Group Retail), Stamp Department has no legal way of influence towards Froede since the publishing of catalogues falls under the responsibility of the chamber for literature within the German Empire. However, "it would be most welcomed if the Propaganda Department of the Empire would exercise some sort of influence since the behavior of the Company Froede especially is a bad example for other companies which, for business reasons, may eventually adopt the some behavior.”

The legal proceedings which were brought forward on 8 May 1940 by the Propaganda Department of the German Empire against Hans Froede which as consequence the dismissal from the chamber and the loss of the business permission may have had however was halted and the case was dismissed. Froede defiance his business behavior in a multiple defense page paper very smart. In a remarkable open way he complained about incompetent colleagues and higher departments and pointed out that even the Propaganda Department of the Germany Empire agreed that stamp catalogues have to be complete.⁹⁰

He presented a letter dated 11 October 1938 from the Postal Administration of Grand-ducal Luxembourg which interestingly explains the reason behind the issue of the surtax stamps issue of Luxembourg:

“The idea to issue charity stamps to support the unemployed intellectuals gained ground in the circles of the league of union already several years ago. That in that work of charitable nature political and other motives were strictly excluded was in the interest of the task itself. This can be proven that different distinguished personalities from the league of nation approached a small neutral country to accomplish this magnanimous plan.”

Also Turkey issued almost at the same time, on 18 April 1955, based on a suggestion of the league of nations a “tapeworm” set of 15 denomination with obligatory surcharges of 100 %, commemorating the 12th international woman congress in Istanbul. Froede argued that also this set, despite it had been initiated by the League of Nations, was not limited for publication.

Note: Numbers in Superscript (^{NN}) appear to be literature references which were not part of the article supplied for translation.

END

Victor Marsh

Philatelic souvenirs: Which, from your philatelic memories, is the one that you find most valuable, or consider the most fun?

[Souvenirs philatéliques: Quel est, parmi vos souvenirs de philatéliste, celui qui vous est le plus précieux, ou que vous considérez comme le plus amusant?]

La Revue Philatélique Française, June 1913, Volume 24, Whole number 257, pp.127-128

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2017

PHILATELIC SOUVENIRS:

WHICH, FROM YOUR PHILATELIC MEMORIES, IS THE ONE THAT YOU FIND MOST VALUABLE, OR CONSIDER THE MOST FUN?

Victor Marsh was a pseudonym used by Herbert Edgar Weston.

This is the kind of memory that I like to recall as a philatelic literature dealer. I have a fond memory of a good purchase. The seller was the late Jules Bernichon – a most likeable man – someone I met frequently. Mr. Bernichon was kind enough to end up saving for me all the old philatelic publications that fell into his hands. Since his prices were always reasonable, I didn't have occasion to bargain with him and we always remained good friends. One day he showed me some lovely things, among which I remember no fewer than 8 copies of the Baillieu catalogue but all from the 3rd edition (1865); an equal quantity of the Guide Manuel by the late Pierre Mahé (3rd edition 1865); 2 copies of the catalogue entitled Timbre-Poste by Laplante (1862); a copy of the catalogue by Potiquet a first edition (1861), which is rare and very sought after by philatelic bibliophiles as the first published catalogue; Le Manuel du Collectionneur by J.-B. Moens (first and 2nd editions, 1862); the first volume of Moens' magazine Le Timbre-Poste; 12 issues in large format; 2 copies of the Berger-Levrault catalogue (Strasbourg, 1867); and many other similar items.

Stamp dealers didn't know much about the early years of philately, nor about the first philatelists, nor about its publications, nor even certain names; but we can't all be philatelic bibliophiles. I must point out another kind of item that I am fond of – autographed letters of philatelists. I don't know any other collectors of these interesting items but it should be said that writings of this type relate to the philatelic life and that they introduce us to details of this philatelic life that are not revealed in any other way. It is not very likely that many letters from 1861 to 1870 still exist but among mine I can mention one from Baillieu (1864); one from Ernest Regnard, who was the editor of the 1865 Nicolas catalogue; one from Van der Maelen (1879), who gave to the public the first philatelic exhibition at Brussels in 1852; various letters from Georgiadi of Bucharest, director of the Austrian postal service (1870) and who had provided Mr. Moens with fake stamps of Moldova; one from Carlo Cocorda (1866) of Florence; and other equally interesting ones.

Victor Marsh

END

3032

The large philatelic library
[Die grosse philatelistische bibliothek]
Berliner Briefmarken-Zeitung, 10th March 1917, Volume 13, Issue 5, p.109

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
March 2017

THE LARGE PHILATELIC LIBRARY

The great philatelic library of the well-known botanist, Professor Ludwig (Lajos) Richter in Budapest was sold in the fall of last year, after his extensive collections of postage stamps ended up in dealers' hands some years ago. Unfortunately, it seems as though his library will not remain intact. However, [the word has gone out] from Budapest that collectors are being sought for individual volumes.

END

Abel Fontaine

The philatelic press in the Republic of Argentina

[La prensa filatélica en la República Argentina]

El Coleccionista, April 1904, Volume 1, Issue 1, pp.3-4;

The philatelic and cartophily press in the Republic of Argentina

[La prensa filatélica y cartófila en la República Argentina]

El Coleccionista, June, Issue 3, pp.2-3; September, Issue 4, pp.4-5 & December, Issue 5, p.5

Translated by Larry DiFiore for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, France

May 2018

THE PHILATELIC PRESS IN THE REPUBLIC OF ARGENTINA

[THE PHILATELIC AND CARTOPHILY PRESS IN THE REPUBLIC OF ARGENTINA]

At the request of the director of El Coleccionista, we begin publishing today a monograph of philatelic newspapers published to date in the Argentine Republic.

We have previously published this same work in L'Annonce Timbrologique of Brussels. We've tried here to extend our previous work, giving it another classification, and we may say, without boasting, that it is as complete as possible.

Despite our efforts, some details may have escaped our attention, and we would be grateful to anyone who could provide us with more information beyond what will follow, regarding periodical publications which have appeared in Argentina.

The most difficult information to obtain is the number [of issues] printed for each newspaper. To avoid error, we will only indicate number of issues of which we can be certain.

Even as we write this notice, we know that [new] philatelic newspapers will be published in the future. We will deal with them in chronological order as they appear, which is the policy we have followed in this review.

Translator's Note: Words in parentheses were added by the translator for clarity.

ABEL FONTAINE

Revista Filatélica, La

Buenos Aires, Argentina.

1874; Issue 1 to Issue 2.

Internationale Post

Luis Husson, Buenos Aires, Argentina.

1891; Issue 1 to Issue 6.

Coleccionista Argentino, El

Juan Soutomayor, Buenos Aires, Argentina.
1891-93; Issue 1 to Issue 8.

Filatelista Sud Americano, El

A. Mettée, Buenos Aires, Argentina.
1893-96; Whole number 1 to Whole number 70.

- From Whole Number 54 of the 15th June 1895, the publication was taken over by Luis Sobrino.
- Whole numbers 1 to 48 were published bi-weekly. Thereafter, it appeared monthly.

Revista Filatélica de la CP.

Adrubal Rodriguez, San Juan, Argentina.
1893; Issue 1.

Rosario Filatélico, El

Daniel D. Garibaldi & A. M. Guzmán, Rosario de Santa Fé, Argentina.
1893-97; Issue 1 to Issue 10.

Buenos Aires Postal

Juhel Renoy, Buenos Aires, Argentina.
1894; Issue 1 to Issue 3.

- Published in both French and Spanish.

Filatélico Argentino, El

J. P. Mendez, Buenos Aires, Argentina.
1894; Issue 1 to Issue 2.

Argentino Filatélico, El

A. R. de Bousquet, Rosario de Santa Fé, Argentina.
1895-95; Issue 1 to Issue 9.

Comerció Filatélico, El

José G. Sardá, Paraná, Argentina.
1893; Issue 1 to Issue 3.

Correo Sud Americano, El

Preus y Cia, Buenos Aires, Argentina.
1896; Issue 1 to Issue 6.

- With number 4 the publication was taken over by A. Pfafle.
- The final issue was numbered 9 in error. Numbers 6, 7 and 8 don't exist.

Aguinaldo Revista Filatélica

E. Asdrubal Rodriguez, San Juan, Argentina.
1897; Issue 1.

END

Carl Beck

Organising Philatelic Libraries.

[Die Anlage Philatelistischer Bibliotheken.]

Der Philatelistische Bücherwurm, Germany, 1924, 7pp.

{Lecture given at the 5th German Philatelists' Day, Carlsbad, Czechoslovakia (Now Karlovy Vary, Czech Republic), 17th August 1924.}

{Reprinted in Sammler-Woche, 1924, Whole number 41, pp.8-10}

Translation by Translator for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac Toupinerie, France

January 2018

ORGANISING PHILATELIC LIBRARIES.

The Creation of Philatelic Libraries

Lecture

Held at the

V. German Philatelic Congress

In the Czechoslovakia

on 17 August 1924

By

Carl Beck

Berlin

Publisher: »The Philatelic Bookworm«

BERLIN 1924

Printed at the Book Printers Dr. Karl Pickert, Limited Liability Company, Leitmeritz a. Elbe

Highly Esteemed Celebration Meeting!

Philatelic Congresses lack in their programs one point, the lectures. That is the opinion of the vast number of those who call them self Collector or Philatelist. About the why it only can assumed that they believe to know the chosen topic with all his Advantages and Benefits and is therefore not willing to endanger himself into boredom. This fact, my dearest attendants, threatens to be a common phenomena and I feel it is my duty, not only here but at every other possibility to fight it with the best of my knowledge and power. You will understand that I will choose a topic which is mastered by me and very few philatelists only and I am convinced that at the end of the lecture of the topic which is of little interest of the most of the audience the necessity of the dealing with the topic.

In my position as Publisher and editor of the "philatelic book work" and my activity for decades in the field of philatelic literature you may agree that I am entitled to have a sufficient overview in this relation to render a judgement on that. I briefly mentioned earlier that the treatment especially of this question is only valued very little but I for this reason I cannot often enough and insistent to emphasis to assure you that the usage of my words in hundreds and hundreds of cases is of higher importance as commonly thought. About the indolence I am faced in the philatelic press I will not further talk. Everyone shall judge himself. On the other hand it is not in my intention to add to you hardly manageable collecting field another area. My task shall only be to show you a way to be what all of you want to be, Philatelists!

My esteemed ladies and gentleman, I may tell you eventually nothing new if I express my opinion that the difference between a collector and a philatelist is a tremendous one.

By uncountable examples I could give you proves but will mention only the statement that only a literate interested collector can be a philatelist because only by study of the literature a insightful assembled collection can be developed while the simple accumulating of stamps and housing the same in pre-printed albums without any charm is anything but no philately.

Call it as you want to call it, hobby or sport, passion or investment, aside all phenomena the collecting of stamps shall have the reason of distracting form the treadmill of the everyday's life, a distraction, a past time, an amusement and do you believe that you have satisfied yourself by fixing a stamp on its predetermined place? Of course, also by that way you may become a comprehensive collection but you do not have the right to claim yourself as a "large collector", and even less to have the title "philatelist".

Only the surrounding and on each stamp, her background, her history and all other things which may be of importance, only the knowledge of these moments may unlock you the real treat of collecting. And do you con form to this fundamental philatelic condition? You own the Senf? Also the Michel? Yes, and in the library of your cub you may also find the Yvert? And eventually you also read the "Stamp-Market" and the "General Gazette for Philately"? But stop, here is even someone who gains knowledge from the insert of the daily newspapers and one even claims to be a subscriber of the "All-round-Collector" which is published in a informal way. It s not funny my esteemed attendees but even if I sound grotesque, be ensured that I am not moving away from the reality by even a thickness of a hair.

The opinions about literature will find their way not in Roma. For one the catalogue is the cornerstone and the latter to the rise, the other believes he does enough by crawling thru hundred of good and bad advertisement, the third swears on the weekly insert of this daily newspaper and the forth believes firmly the Federal News which are published in all word languages by the President of the Exchange Club "Gloria" and among 100 collectors we find, with the exception of the youth, hardly 10 who use a specialist magazine which may be considered narrowly as literature and from this 10 there are not more than 2 who eventually read and other magazine and maybe only one who is in excess of this .It shall not be understood as arrogance what I am allowing me here but a evil can only be eradicated if it is wiped out from the ground even with his roots and lease excuse me if I leave it up to you to judge yourself if my statement is correct or not.

As long as I did not give you your mirror image of your philatelic soul, as long you could reply that you were lacking the respective stimulation or briefing. However now, my esteemed ladies and gentleman that I gave some of you the trigger towards knowledge of his philatelic "I" I may expect that you will not deny me the permission of this open-hearted critique.

Yes, even more. I even have some comfort in hand, at least for those who believe they may survive without literature; for myself however is this comfort only a drop of bitterness in the clarified wine, namely in the common byword "Like Master Like Man" meaning the state of our associations.

I do not like to bring again self-awareness to everyone of you as I promised you some comfort, hence I only ask you to remember in some time the report of the librarian of your association. I am convinced that he could not make much more to the content of his statement of account than the borrowing of catalogues. He is not to be blamed, even not every individual member, but the whole of the members who form the association, in her indifferentism on detailed knowledge but at the end also really at the association itself, namely by the president who failed to add a paragraph in the bylaws of the association.

What is the use, not what is the value, of old catalogues, how a really interested member can find satisfaction in incomplete volumes, what reason does it make if two volumes of Senf-Journals, three of the German stamp magazines and besides the six other available bulletins some individual numbers of other organizations are available, complete brochures, handbooks and similar however are lacking totally. May it be however different in some associations, do not like to count the votes who confirmed to me that I am not exaggerating. I have to say to you that, like a child who fears the fire, I have to bring you the bogey of your future in front of your eyes, namely the philatelic downfall, if you do not think in time and to fight with all of your power against this otherwise unavoidable faith. Even if I can count myself as one of the most advanced collector of literature, you do not need to consider me as a hunter of flaws in the philatelic field who is fanatically in his direction as it may be seen in that way by his fellows. No, I do not deny in any case some difficulties, consider also these and those circumstances, but it shall not be untried to show you as a individual person as well as the community of a association the way which all of have to go in our passion. Otherwise the countless number of works, efforts, time and money will undergo a underestimation in idle or real form. Tweezers and magnifying glass, millimeter ruler and perforation measuring set, watermark detector and chalk tester and who knows what else you have in your set of tools, everything comes only in second line since you only can use them if you know what for they can be used. May your catalogue may give some advice, who tells you what is genuine, what is fake, what is a reprint, what bogus, nobody else than the outlast pillars of the Philately, the Literature!

Nothing is as heavy as it cannot be carried and one of the most wasted thoughts it would be if you may assume that behind the word literature is a so far unconquered or even unconquerable Himalaya, the library in the sense of the daily routine, you cannot bring into the context of the range of the Philately because just the specialist magazines are second to none compared to other collecting areas in the richness they offer to match them self according to the need of the interested party. Hence I like to after this quite long introduction what was more a talk into your conscience, come to the actual dealing of my topic, the formation of libraries.

The reason why I have chosen the Philatelic Congress to propagate this thought is because I can talk to a large number of representatives of numerous philatelic associations and therefore are certain that my good intention will be, thought you, my esteemed Ladies and Gentleman, will be spread into the field of your local work and therefore will find a reproduction for the sake of our mother Philately.

Initially we have to make up our mind what we understand under a specialist library. In our case it relates to all scripts which take reference to Philately which is a case of impossibility to accumulate all, but also goes far beyond the purpose of every individual collector, hence, from the beginning there is a matter of course in a kind of grouping which can be carried out in 3 sections like: 1: for common works and especially necessarily works as accumulation of reference material for wide briefings and encouragements. 2. those which are already more for scientific (philatelic) research and special areas and finally 3. which is being created for their own sake, where the stamp is being replaced by literature.

At that place another separation is recommended depending how the library will be arranged, i.e. if they will only serve the needs of a single individual or shall serve the association. since in the first possibility as base for the average collector much less funds will be required compared to the library of an association where not only the different collecting areas and the depth of the collections have to be considered, on the other hand complete different possibilities of financing are available. It must be said however that the differentiation is only of importance in the second type of libraries and is more applicable for associations. From that point of view I believe I do not make a mistake if in my following explanation I do not consider a strict separation between individual collectors and associations and put the ordinary collector on the same step as a small association, the advanced collector however on the side of a larger association and the real collector of literature side by side with a federal association.

It is not possible to deny that the praxis and the example may be considered as very educational, it is done however in the awareness that such questions may easily lead to overestimation of the own knowledge and some owners of an advanced collection often lack the basic knowledge of the simplest fundamental terms of the Philately. With his 10,000 different (stamps) or "complete collection of Baden" he stumbles over the simple question between the difference between comb perforation and Line perforation and due to that I feel it is important that during the creation of a library not to leave the basic works aside even if the content of the same is often found later on repeatedly in other books. By no means believe that you are already "over the mountain". Especially smaller bulletins explain explains us that in the most simple way. Particularly in libraries of clubs they should not be missing in any way since one of the goals of a club is also the education of young collectors and for them such easy literature is their way to the summit. As such I mention at first the nice fairytale by Bungerz, "How to Collect Stamps" which finds his development in the script "The Hunt for Stamps" of the same writer, also the guide by Senf must be added and if we prepared our self in that way for the comprehension to add further and more extensive terms, the different catalogues link Senf, Michel and Yvert become more important of which every catalogue has his own advantage. Sufficient knowledge we may not gain from those books and as such indispensable work for every collector, the Kohl handbook must be considered; however, it may take a few years until the same will be completed in front of us, but already the inspection of the so far available deliveries will give a proof towards every friend of philately what high mental factor our passion is. And until we can enjoy completely this enormous source of knowledge we have to satisfy our self with similar works; regardless of the fact, that we have in some time this and that topic treated duplicated; the question remains open when the moment has come that the Philately make us the gift of a complete work and we have a work on hand an example for long-lasting work, still the acquisition of substitute works by no means is unnecessary. I mention here in one or the other relation the "Handbook of all known reprints" by Orth which waits since long for his completion but in his present form can already be considered as indispensable.

To know everything is a impossibility and as such we have to be satisfied with what is reachable for us since at the end it is expected that also this work will find his completion. Even if I have here only the smallest basic content of a library in my eyes and the "Large Encyclopedia of Philately" by my old friend Bungerz name only at the last point, this is done because it is a work of very common way and I will remain with it for a longer while. At the end it is prepared by someone and someone can expect from this spirit in a completely researched topic much, but never everything and as such it is a implicitness that also this book has some parts which were criticized. If we realize that the setting of this book took more than two years and has undergone several general corrections, it may be more technical than factual errors it can be stated with clear conscience that we have in this large encyclopedia a real universal work which may only be outclassed i.e. by a bibliography of philatelic literature. Such one however is in the farthest distance of time, hence we can consider the large encyclopedia the undisputed leader.

This would be the first cadre and if I did not mentioned specialist magazines, I did it for the reason because the availability of such is a matter of course. Not only the currently published ones must be paid attention, no, also the older volumes because while a handbook offers us i.e. a ready product, the evolution of the handbook based on the magazines offers big charm.

The purpose of the second group of libraries is that they shall offer the possibility to study, either for the owner as such or the members of the club whom owns it. It is not enough for the really interested people to accept commonly accepted result from earlier research as a matter of course, they will however recognize and verify how these results have been achieved. A library it has to be quite comprehensive if she will or shall fulfill these requirements, handbooks and catalogues, the latest standard works, magazines of older volumes, even magazines with classified advertisements have to be found in larger quantities to give relevant answers over larger periods of time.

Such libraries are, aside of the one owned by significant philatelist, are the one of the clubs of Berlin, Dresden, Frankfurt a. M., Gößnitz, Wien and Praha (the latter I could study recently due to the big kindness of Mr. Eduard Fleischmann and for which I like to thank Mr. Fleischmann on this place ones again)) and an older a library is, as more valuable material she may offer because the vast majority of early literature can be found only at such places anymore and is being offered only exceptionally and randomly from dealers. Such a central place will keep of course everything even if his literary value is currently doubtful because it is not possible to foresee which relevance even the most unimpressive script will have and will be. It must be however to be differentiated not to hunt for every literary work because the value of such a library is not the completeness but the existence of all required study material. The acquisition of such a library for clubs of younger dates it may be the easiest way to try to procure one from private hand whereas the inheritance often give many possibilities, all the more so since as usually the literature oft find the least friends and as such the purchasing price relatively low is. May some is already included in the existing library, the money spend is never invested badly and some valuable work may be found in the new part.

Even philatelic authors, particular however collectors of literature have often duplicated material and they are interested for the sake of research and the distribution of common knowledge to give away some of them. It must be clear to everyone that from nothing nothing can be used again and if nothing is spend never a library will be created. Since however in every club are members who are above others in the seriousness in philately they have to bear the responsibility with all their weight in the club to push for the relevant reforms in the club whereas especially the "poor cousin" of the club, the librarian shall feel responsible. A King without empire is a zero and if a book ward is not seen as such then he must leave the club or shall force with all demand that he shall receive aside of his title also a field or work. Another possibility of enhancement may be an appeal towards the mind of donators of well situated members. If now so or so, in any case any of the possible ways should be untried.

Depending on the size of the library resulting in such a club function, the step towards group three is not big anymore because the difference is only in the way how she will be extended and the purpose for she will serve. Here the literature became an end in itself, compared to the philately, the book, the newspaper or brochure substitutes the stamp only and similar to the stamp is being collected and is being tried to be completed. Aside of the literary value also the philatelic value cannot be denied because i.e. for a researcher it is not only important to know what is right or wrong but also how this or that is wrong in order not to overlook important aspects in his own studies.

This moment however will only come into force at such libraries which are maintained at a large club or federal association whereas the common collector of literature is only concerned about the monetary value of the book. While in group 2 the availability of this or such work or the one or the other magazine is only related if also the purpose of study is fulfilled by that, in this case that purpose is not required here and is been replaced with the requirement that every published work shall or must be represented, irrespective of any monetary value. If the owner of the book is an individual collector then he will be aware of the phenomena which is that certain restrictions will be in place and one collector will only include German language literature in his library and will concentrate to have this completed, another one will also include foreign language literature, the third one will take care of everything and also include price lists and classified advertisement papers. As soon as a library will serve the community then everything has to be taken care of and the scope will only be limited by room- or space constraints. As common property she must be also find common support and this is easier as someone may believe. Many of you consider a specialist magazine or a brochure or a catalogue as concluded after the same was read thru / inspected or a new issue has been published but since a club or federal society does not always have the funds to procure all material, it is in the interest of the case that all material which is considered as unnecessary by them to forward such material to a central place for further use. Do not believe "They have this already" or "they do not need this", no, one send in No. 10-12, another one No. 1-8, the third eventually just No. 9 and completes by that a complete volume. The same is valued also for small prints, even mayfly's of magazines may become rarities and have been disposed earlier by some collector. Where the whole is important it means together and for each other and if everyone takes care of that there will not lack of success.

In the conscience of the shared interest which someone usually devotes to a topic and in the appreciation of the considerations which exists at Philatelic Summits it neglected to do deeper into the various points and concentrated only to explain you the outlines and basic conditions of a philatelic library. I undertook this effort in the awareness of the necessity and hope I also gave you the trigger, especially since you can be assured that I did not talk because of my passion for appropriate literature but only and solely to give your passion a good sense.

In you, my esteemed ladies and Gentleman, I see the competent representatives who will take the main idea of my topic also to those who are still objecting the scientific philately. May this undeveloped field may be hard to plant, the seeds which are distributed there will not be without harvest. And the thought, to have helped mankind and the case shall be under consideration of the bible words "Love your neighbor as yourself" be your guiding star.

END

Dr. Legrand

Minutes of the meetings of the Society. Meeting of the 12th January 1888
[Compte-rendu des séances de la Société. Séance du 12 Janvier 1888]
Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie, June 1888, Volume 4,
Whole number 47, pp.39-40

Translation produced by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
April 2015

MINUTES OF THE MEETINGS OF THE SOCIETY

MEETING OF THE 12TH JANUARY 1888

Presidency of M. Donatis

The minutes of the previous meeting were read by the Secretary. After correcting one point, they were adopted.

The correspondence comprised:

1. Routine letters from Messers Gustave Beil; Moens; Count de Saint-Saud & Chaïdopoulos.
2. A letter from Fréd. Ketterer proposing an exchange of stamps. Agenda.
3. Cornélio Joris of Munich announces a new modification of the stamps of Bavaria. The sheets contain 100 instead of 60 stamps except for the 1 and 2 marks which contain only 50 stamps. The new stamps are perforated 14 and carry the watermark of close horizontal wavy lines. The values already in circulation are the 3 pfennig green, 5 pfennig lilac, 20 pfennig blue, 25 pfennig light brown and 50 pfennig dark brown. The Secretary pointed out that the stamps of the previous series also carried the watermark of close wavy lines, but vertically, in addition the perforation was 11½. It is more accurate to say that the new ones are rather 14½. Thanks.
4. The National Philatetical Society of New York sends a copy of their protest against reprinting the previous series of stamps of the United States.
5. Mr Gorgerat showed the new stamps of Senegal with the surcharge 10 which were mentioned by Vervelle at the December meeting.
6. Emilio Diena drew the attention of the Society to a directory project of philatelic literature which he revealed in a letter to the editor of The Philatelic Record, published in the number of October 1887.
The Secretary, assisted by Mr Winch translated the most interesting passages of the letter for the information of the Society. Following this communication is another letter written by Mr Anderson to the same editor and published in the November number of the same journal and they likewise provided a translation.

At the end of the reading of the letter addressed to the Society by Anderson, via which he applies to submit the following resolution:

The Secretary is invited to communicate with W. K. Tiffany [actually J. K. Tiffany], of St. Louis, a member of this Society, for making a table of contents of philatelic literature, based on the letters of Dena and Anderson in The Philatelic Record, Volume 9, pages 156 and 173.

In the case that Tiffany sees his way as the head of preparation of such a work, the Society undertakes to guarantee the payment of a third of the expenses prior to printing and the postage required for the establishment of the proposed project, the sum guaranteed not to exceed

In the case indicated above, the members of the Society undertake to assist Tiffany as much as they can as individuals to produce a repertoire of philatelic literature in France.

A long discussion followed on that question. The usefulness of a repertoire to each member is without doubt, but the help that any individual can provide to that work does not seem as clear. Also, the Society decided that the subject needs to be studied and that it will decide only after receiving the opinion of those members who are most able to contribute to the work. As a consequence, the question is deferred until one of the next meetings.

The President announced the admission of Mr Hesse of Marseilles as a corresponding member, with no objections to his admission.

Owing to the late hour, the study of the catalogue of the British Indies is held over until the following session.

Dr. Legrand
Secretary

END

Philipp von Ferrary

[Letter to the editor]

Der Philatelist, December 1883, Volume 4, Issue 12, p.114

The translation is preceded by a translation of the part of the article in the preceding issue, about which Ferrary wrote: Der Philatelist, November 1883, Volume 4, Issue 11, p.103

Translation produced by Philip Robinson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2015

Excerpt from: Die briefmarken-börse in Paris., Der Philatelist, November 1883, Volume 4, Issue 11, p.103. (Three quarters of the way down column 2.)

When we speak about collectors who are “pillars” of the stamp market, we must think of the greatest lover of stamps, the young Duke of Galliera (member No 273) who has the largest collection in the whole world, with a value in the region of 1½ million. The young Duke keeps his collection in its own building in the Rue du Coq. The library relating to the collection, consisting of some 300 volumes, can be found at the Hotel Galliera, Rue Varennes.

These stamp treasures will only be made accessible to the public when the collection is complete. The curator of the collection, however, thinks that another nine years will be needed to carry out the classification and completion of the collection. Devotees must therefore exercise a little patience.

Ferrary's response was in the following issue of the magazine: Der Philatelist, December 1883, Volume 4, Issue 12, p.114.

Paris, 16th November 1883.

With great astonishment I read in the most recent pages of Der Philatelist of the 1st November of this year that I am referred to by the name Duke of Galliera. I have never held this name and title, and you can only have mistakenly applied it to me. As a result of private affairs, at the end of the year 1876 I rejected any claim to the above-mentioned title, which in fact now undisputedly belongs to another person. Because, as you will understand, this is very embarrassing to me, to be referred to in the philatelic world by an incorrect name and with a usurped title such as might be accepted by society as a whole, and which differs from my own name of Philipp von Ferrary, I urgently request that in the next issue of your esteemed journal you publish this letter to rectify this mistake which I would find so hurtful and detrimental, if an immediate adjustment were not made. I am attributed a certain status everywhere and in all countries, and so all misunderstandings should be avoided, however in particular in my dearest Germany, a child of which I always consider myself to be, and the true love of which has been preserved in my heart since my tender years. In the dark years of the Bohemian war, the ominous conflict of German against German tore out my heart, this being softened only by the victories of German soldiers and sailors at Custozza and Lissa, accomplished by the coming together of the re-born Reich and the brotherly reconciliation of my beloved Austria. From every German heart came the long-awaited unity of all German-born people, then Germany's flag set my soul aflame with glowing enthusiasm. A German journal will therefore surely allow the correction of an unintentional mistake, and in the sure knowledge that I may count on your friendship and sense of justice in this circumstance, I remain

Yours faithfully

Philipp von Ferrary

END

Dr. Moschkau

Philipp la Rénotière von Ferrary

Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung, 1st August 1888, Volume 1, Issue 15, pp.217-218

Translation produced by Philip E. Robinson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2015

PHILIPP LA RÉNOTIÈRE VON FERRARY

Ferrary! Who in Germany, who in far-off foreign lands does not know this name as one of the greatest and most distinguished philatelists? True wonders can be found among his stamp treasures, confirmation of which comes in the publication of a detailed account of a visit to Ferrary in Paris by Siegmund Friedl of Vienna. This very detailed report, published in Weltpost (Nos. 13 and 14, 1887) tells us that quite a large room has been modified for this enormous collection, in which every postage stamp in the world is to be found in all its varieties, the immeasurable treasures being stored in two mighty cabinets and two chests, with countless drawers. In the cabinets are stamps, in the chests postal stationery, all in simple card folders within strong cartons, and all in alphabetical order. Each stamp has its own page, on which are shown all its types, colour shades and printing errors, each issue having its own envelope, each country its own folder! The size of the cartons is a large octavo. Keeping this collection in order in a systematic way is Pierre Mahé, one of the leading authorities in France, who was engaged as its curator, his son being at his side as assistant. These two gentlemen have worked incessantly for 5 years arranging the collection, and a few more years will still be needed for its arrangement to be completed. As already noted, this collection is complete and quite up to date, the rarest stamps often in used and unused condition, often in rows, in half-sheets, varieties, errors, etc., of which Moens himself has still given no information - in short, a marvel of philately in value and content, and unique in the beauty and magnificence of its arrangement, well worth a journey to Paris to see it and to marvel at it. Value: half a million francs; surely, to spend such a sum on a collection of postage stamps is a luxury granted to only a few mortals.

We have recently acknowledged the merits of J. B. Moens in Brussels, whose catalogue must be regarded as the most complete of all the existing ones. We have in the Meyer-Kloss handbook a work of German industriousness, of German research - the importance of which, however, may become clear when Ferrary's album, in its all-encompassing content of the collecting world, is opened. We philatelists must surely be proud that we can regard a man such as von Ferrary as one of us, a man who by the expenditure of a vast sum created a collection like none other in the world; who strives with intense zeal to include everything in the collection, in all the existing varieties. However, it would be the crowning of his achievement if, when he appears to be nearing his objective, he made these treasures available in a published work, to give a "handbook" to the public, the like of which would only be possible with such a collection.

Our circle of readers would be very interested to read a biography of the owner of this wonderful collection, which would bring us closer personally to this most honourable man. It is probably the all-pervading modesty of the man that declines compliance with this often sought-after and reasonable request. We must therefore restrict ourselves to offering our readers what this man has made available to us for the purpose of this sketch. Ferrary writes: I may tell you that I had already begun collecting as a young child, in my 10th year, when I had the pleasure of dwelling on German soil, and my first set of stamps was one of Hanover, with the head of the king, as my upbringing had an innermost connection with the Hanoverian state, with this noble house whose army was victorious at Langensalza but then was overcome, and at Vionville defeated the French with much courage, just like their forefathers at Waterloo, to the honour and fame of a finally united German fatherland. I am a son of the German fatherland, an adoptive child of a brave Austrian officer, and if in my lifetime I have an opportunity, as is unfortunately rarely the case, to do something worthy for my most dearly loved Austria, I will do so. From the most tender years of my childhood my soul has burned with ardent love of my German fatherland, with the most bitter hatred of Germany's enemies, and my biography is in the most blissful joy that God gave to me when on the fields of Wörth and Sedan the high spirits of the French were shattered, and in my fervent desire, until I draw my last breath, to serve and support as best I can with my feeble efforts my dearest Germany.

Such a great a philatelist, beyond comparison, such a noble, brave and modest person! A German from head to toe, this is Ferrary; a German who can call his own the greatest collection of postage stamps, created with German zeal, with German thoroughness and depth of research! We delight in this message, which should fill us with easily understandable pride.

We extend a thankful, appreciative and honest handshake to him, the greatest German philatelist!

END

[Sigmund Friedl]

Mosaic

[Mosaik]

Welt-Post, April 1887, Volume 12, Issue 13, pp.117-119 & June, Issue 14, p.130

Translation produced by Philip E. Robinson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
October 2015

Editor's Note:

This article includes a report of Sigmund Friedl's visit to his friend Ferrary and gives details of the latter's collection. My interest and the reason for the translation is to have a first-hand account of Ferrary's method of collecting and mounting his collection. Only an outline of the rest of the article is provided. The extensive list of items contained in the collection does not require translating. The postscript about the Caillebotte Brothers' collection has also been translated. BJB

MOSAIC

On the 26th February 1887, Friedl, his wife and old friend (Lieutenant (Retired) Ritter von K[riegsfeld]) of Vienna began a trip lasting for four or five weeks. The party arrived in Paris on the 2nd March.

(Translation re-commences half way down the first column on page 118)

On the 2nd of March I arrived in Paris. My earnest wish was, naturally, to see and evaluate the world-renowned collection of Phil. La Rénotière von Ferrary. How this great collection, acknowledged as the best, has been romanticised! But so far nobody has been able to say anything positive or precise about this collection, about the way in which it is kept, about the rarities and unique items it contains, etc. This is because the owner himself, my old and much valued friend, has carefully kept his treasures away from curious eyes. I can say with justifiable pride that I am probably the only person who has so far been able to see this collection in detail. It may perhaps seem rather grandiose for me to confess that the most famous sights and treasures of Paris, that is the Louvre with its Raphaels, Michelangelos, etc., do not for me have the same power of attraction as this collection. While my wife and our Viennese friend, in the company of our Parisian friends and acquaintances were looking at the sights there, I spent more than eight afternoons studying and marvelling at this colossal treasury of stamps which von Ferrary had the kindness to show me, drawing my attention to unique and so far unknown items. "What can be so special and so exceptional to arouse such ecstasy in him, who has surely seen many wonderful collections!" as some of my readers might exclaim. But be patient! Soon I will give details, and I would like to see the face of the over-zealous critic, after he has read the naturally fragmentary description of the contents of the Ferrary collection that I was able to view. I would have to write out the whole of the Moens catalogue, and in fact add much to it, if I were to give a complete description of the collection, as the collection contains almost all of the stamps that are so far known, also postcards and envelopes. Rarities, of which the ordinary collector might be lucky to have one example, are there in all the varieties and types.*

- * The second and subsequent paragraphs of page 118, column 2, simply provide details of the rarities contained in the collection. The following abbreviations are used in this section: gebr = used; ungebr = unused; gez = perforated; fehldruck = error; selten = scarce/rare; raritat = rarity;

The translation continues from paragraph 4 of page 119, column 2.

My philatelic soul revelled in viewing these rarities, but my patriotic sentiments were also uplifted - Philipp la Rénotière von Ferrary is an Austrian national and the adoptive son of a brave Austrian officer, who fought heroically under the Kaiser's flag. I may now declare with patriotic pride "The greatest stamp collection in the world is owned by an Austrian: my friend, a true Austrian".

This announcement will probably "rock the boat" in the widest circles, as people regard Mr von Ferrary as a Frenchman, though such impertinence would be justifiably rejected by his true German heart, and from his earliest youth he has had the innermost warm feelings for Austria and its rulers. His patriotism and his enthusiasm for Austria-Germany can be seen in many ways.

How is this collection of incalculable wealth arranged and stored?

Everyone will understand that an album, however large, is not suitable for this huge collection. However, it is less easy to describe the arrangement in a way that everyone will understand. But I would like to try!

Every stamp of every country has a separate page, slightly larger than octavo, on strong, brownish paper that was evidently produced for this purpose, and which can accept all the varieties of the stamp, such as types, shades, errors etc.

Each issue, that is, as many sheets as there are values in the issue, is kept in a paper envelope, on which the date and other details are written. All the envelopes, that is, for all the known stamps of a country, are kept in a cardboard folder, on which the name of the country is written. Two huge cupboards hold these folders in alphabetical order, the number of folders being equal to the number of countries that have so far issued stamps.

The envelopes and postcards are kept in strong, brownish envelopes designed for them, arranged alphabetically by issue, in two chests with countless drawers. It is not surprising that this collection has its own large room, but I should mention that, in order to maintain this collection and keep it in order, a custodian and an assistant are employed, who for the past four years have worked on arranging the collection, and for whom there may still be several years' work to do. The custodian of the La Rénotière von Ferrary collection is P. Mahé, known to all philatelists as an authority in the realm of philately; the assistant is his no less capable son.

Although France cannot claim that the greatest and most important collector in the world is one of its subjects it is, however, a Frenchman - or rather two Frenchmen, the C[aillebot]te brothers, who can boast ownership of a wonderful collection. It was also my privilege to view this collection.

Can't France also claim to have some of the greatest and most important collectors in the world among her citizens? In fact one, even better two Frenchmen, the Brothers Caillebote can boast of having in their possession a beautiful stamp collection. I have been able to see the collection and I must say that it is great in almost every way. In particular the appearance and layout is almost impossible to improve upon. It consists of almost 100 albums in a very fancy cabinet. On every page the particular issue is represented on top by a mint example. Then in rows are all the different types, used and unused, curiosities etc. that relate to the issue. This is in contrast to Ferrary's collection where we previously mentioned each stamp is on it's own page. The entires are arranged similar to Ferrary. However, the variety and quality of the entires is not as fine as Ferrary's. The value of the Caillebote Brothers' collection is around 500,000 Francs... a very nice collection.

END

P. von Ferrary

Miscellaneous

[Vermischtes]

Deutsche Philatelisten-Zeitung, November 1883, Volume 6, Whole number 62,
pp.301-303

Only Ferrary's letter has been translated, starting at the bottom of page 301.

Translation produced by Philip E. Robinson for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
December 2015

MISCELLANEOUS

Our much esteemed correspondent writes, word-for-word:

Dear Sir and Friend!

In the last issue of the Dresden Philatelist of the 1st November this year, I was, to my great surprise, referred to under the name Duke of Galliera.

As neither this name nor this title have ever belonged to me, and could only be attributed to me due to an error, I have immediately sent a letter of protest to Dr. Kloss, and the honourable head of the Philatelist has agreed, in a friendly manner, to put right this tiresome mistake. In my letter, which I hope will appear, according to my urgent request, in the next issue of the Philatelist, I have stated that, for private reasons relating to the end of the year 1876, all possible claims to the above mentioned title have been rejected, and that the title has been transferred to another person, who now has undisputed ownership of it.

I also declare that it would be highly embarrassing to me if I were to be regarded in the philatelic world under a false name and with incorrect family history, or if I were to be seen in the community under any other appellation than my own, that is Philipp von Ferrary. I finally added that if in any country I should be held in high regard, then to avoid any misunderstandings concerning this relationship, in particular in my dear Germany, whose child I have always considered myself to be and whose child I want to be, such a mistake should immediately be rectified.

You, dear friend, who honour me with personal friendship, know in full measure the warmth of the feelings that dominate my soul for old Teutonia.

Although unfortunately, by accident of birth, I did not come into the world on German soil, my young heart was nourished on German soil, and I absorbed a love of Germany in the tenderest years of my life. My young heart beat for Germany when Danish hopes were thwarted on the beleaguered hills of Dybbøl and on the beach at Alsensund. [A reference to the Second Schleswig War of 1864.]

My boyish heart bled when German fought German in sinister circumstances! I turned my tearful, grieving face away from Bohemia's blood-soaked fields and looked southwards, to where German soldiers and German sailors were rewarded with victory in the battles against Italy at Custoza and Lissa [During the Third Italian War of Independence, 1866], enriching Austria's laurel wreath with two new and beautiful leaves. My youthful heart was joyous in triumph for Germany and the shining, reborn German Empire! For Germany, my heart rejoices in the beautiful, long-awaited days when my dearly beloved Austria, in brotherly reconciliation with a fellow peaceful, bloodless German nation, alone sought reconciliation for Königgrätz in that memorable hour when two noble rulers reached out their hands to each other and were joined with steel chains, never again to be parted, and the unification of all Germanic peoples finally embraced every German soul, for the preservation of peace and the rule of law from the Alps to the Baltic with pure enthusiasm and undiluted, undarkened bliss. I grew up as a child with these feelings, I reflected on these feelings as a young man, in them I found solace and strength when heavy ingratitude and cowardly abuse affected me adversely, poisoning my life, and in them I will forever linger until my last breath.

The songs of Körner, the heroic and youthful writer, inspired me in the springtime of my life; these songs will be as a friend and mentor to me for the rest of my life, and the flame of my love of Germany will always burn in my breast. In this regard I therefore thank you once more for correcting, in your pages, the error relating to me, and with the expression of my deepest feelings, I remain always

Your true friend
P. von Ferrary

END

P. von Ferrari

Extract from the Register of Births

[Extrait du Registre des Actes de Naissance]

Copy provided by the Archives de Paris, 1st February 1985, 2pp.

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
February 2016

EXTRACT FROM THE REGISTER OF BIRTHS

Prefecture of the Department of the Seine

Excerpt from the register of birth certificates of the (former) First Arrondissement

On January 13, 1850 at 10:00 in the morning, before us, the mayoral vital statistics officer of the First Arrondissement of Paris, Mr. Paul Antoine Dubois, professor at the college of medicine of Paris, 54 years of age, residing at #12 Mr. Le Prince St., presented a child of the male sex that he asserted was born in Paris at #46 d'Astorg St. at the home of his father the 11th of this month at 9:00 in the evening. Son of Rafael Marquis de Ferrari, Duke of Galliera, shopkeeper, 44 years of age and Marie Josephine Francoise Brignole-Sale, his wife, 37 years of age, married at Genova (Sardinia) January 14, 1828 gave this child the names of Louis-Philippe-Antoine-Marie-Augustin-Raoul in the presence of Jacques Anatole Fortuné Defrenne, professor emeritus at the University of Paris, #26 du Rocher St. and Hippolyte Louis Desportes de la Fosse, shopkeeper, 47 years of age, residing in Paris at #24 le la Paix St. Both have signed with us and the presenter acting in lieu of the father, momentarily ill _____*, signed Paul Dubois, Defrenne, Desportes _____*

Exact excerpt, Paris, June 14, 1862

Secretary General of the Prefecture of the Seine

Translator's Note:

_____ *Two words cannot be deciphered

END

Sandro Tanga

To whom will Carter give back the postage stamps contested by the two Germanies?

[A chi restituirà Carter i francobolli contestati dalle due Germanie?]

Il Collezionista - Italia Filatelica, 31st December 1977, Volume 33, Issue 24, pp.5-6

{This translation was found in a copy of the journal that I acquired and is reproduced here for posterity.}

Translation found by Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 2016

TO WHOM WILL CARTER GIVE BACK THE POSTAGE STAMPS
CONTESTED BY THE TWO GERMANIES?

New particulars have come to light regarding the stamps belonging to the Imperial Museum of the Post Office in Berlin, which had disappeared at the end of the war, and have now turned up in the USA.

First of all here is the list of the very rare stamps:-

1. Mauritius 1847, 1 penny orange – Post Office –
2. Mauritius 1847, 2 penny azure – Post Office –
3. British Guiana 1850, 2 cents magenta
4. British Guiana 1856, 4 cents azure
5. Hawaii 1851-52 – 2 cents Missionary
6. Hawaii 1851-52 – 5 cents Missionary
7. Hawaii 1851-52 – 13 cents Missionary
8. Hawaii 1851-52 – 13 cents H. I. & U.S.

The New York Times, from whom we copy the list, does not say anything regarding the conditions (if they are new, used or on letter) or the state of the stamps. It is only known that Martin Apfelbaum, a commercial philatelist from Philadelphia, after he had seen the stamps offered for the group $500,000.

The story started in November 1976 but only now is it known completely.

About one year ago, a citizen of Philadelphia after reading in a newspaper that two Mauritius stamps were sold for $380,000 (evidently they were the two 1 penny – Post Office – sold in New York in October 1968), remembered that he had in the loft a box with some stamps. He went to look for them and found that he also had some Mauritius stamps.

His memory must have gone back to the war years in Germany. He was a captain in the U. S. army and he was in Lipsia in May 1945 in charge of the requisition of the art treasures hidden in the salt mines of Sassonia.

Just a little while before the Americans were leaving the place to be replaced by the Soviet, an elderly German couple frightened for their lives on the approach of the Soviet troops begged the Captain for them to be sent to the American sector. The Captain took pity and did just that. In gratitude they gave him an envelope with some stamps which he put away with the other war souvenirs and forgot all about them till that Autumn 1976.

This is what the Philadelphia gentleman (they have not revealed his name) told the U. S. Custom & Excise people when they started to investigate the case.

And that is all that is known about the first part of the story.

Naturally, it would be very important to know who the old couple were and how they were in possession of the eight “jewels”.

After finding his treasure in the attic, the American decided to put them in a philatelist show with the intention of selling them. He received straight away an offer from an American and one from an Englishman. It was the Englishman who found out from Scotland Yard that the eight stamps were on a list of stolen goods from the Post Office Museum in Berlin and were also on the Interpol list.

A few months went by and in September 1877 the American got in touch with the Englishman about selling the stamps.

The English businessman got in touch with the Pennsylvania Custom & Excise which, in turn, got in touch with the Captain who on hearing about the stamps being stolen, gave them back.

And here the trouble started. Washington reported to the Federal Germany Embassy about the finding of the stamps. The Embassy contacted the Post Office Minister in Bonn. Somebody “leaked” the news to the paper “Die Welt” and it was also read in East Berlin which straight away led to the “complication”.

East Berlin claims the stamps.

West Berlin claims the stamps; and both are saying they are the rightful owners

Carter’s Government is embarrassed and for the time being nothing is done about it and the eight fabulous stamps are in the safe of Mr. La Ratta on officer of the Custom & Excise.

The Berlin Museum

The Berlin Stamps Museum before the second World War was the most important Philatelist Museum of the world. Apart from the eight stamps which came to light in the USA, it had all sorts of rare stamps, etc. During the war all was hidden in a secret hideout and nothing and nobody knows anything about it.

Somebody suspects that the treasure was taken abroad by the Nazi’s.

The “Philadelphia” stamps is the only find of the immense treasure.

END

Author (14pt)
Title
[Title in original language]
Bibliographic details

Complete 718 entry

(Notes)

Translated by Translator for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE 2019

TITLE (14 pt)

END

Louis the Great High School
123, rue St. Jacques
75005 Paris

Paris, September 11, 1985

Mrs. Arribillaga, Librarian and Archivist

and

Mr. K. Langenaken
Florastraat 34
B2200 Borgerhout

Dear Sir:

I regret to inform you that it has been impossible for me to find any trace of a Philippe de Ferrari, either as a student or a teacher. Perhaps he was a student at

Lycée St. Louis
44 boulevard St-Michel
75006 Paris

I recommend that you direct your question to them.

With respect and sincerely,

Y. Arribillaga

Ministry of Culture

Administration, Archives of France
Reference # 10850 R/3456

60, rue des Francs-Bourgeois
75141 Paris CEDEX 3
June 5, 1985

Dear Sir:

By your letter of May 6, 1985 you asked me to search for any document that may have been preserved in the Archives of France on Philippe de Ferrari, renowned philatelist, who was a student at Lous le Grand in 1867, teacher of political economics at the St. Guillaume School and who died in Lausanne in 1917.

I have the honor of informing you that my research has resulted in the following information contained in the open record in his name at the Administration of Public Education (reference F17, 22863):

Philippe-Marie-Augustin de Ferrari obtained a diploma in letters August 5, 1871 then was awarded a BA in Letters (certainly in 1872). He signed a contract in 1872 to spend 10 years in public education. He became a substitute teacher at the College Rollin (middle school) in 1872 and the year following assistant tutor and teaching assistant for 5th grade English at the Henri IV Lycée (high school); he was not remunerated for this work – his great fortune and his passion for education explain his willingness to work without payment. It is also indicated in his record that he “shall take part in the competition for the Superior Normal School” but no trace of his application for the admission examination to the SNS for 1872 and 1873 (reference F17 4202 and 4203) or of any mention of him in the students’ records at the SNS for 1870 to 1876 has been found (reference 61 AJ 215).

Finally, I can inform you that among the documents provided by the Ministry of Justice is a document concerning the stamp collection of Ferrari de la Renothiere, placed in receivership (reference BB18 2627, dossier 214 A 20).

Yours sincerely,

F. Giacomoni

By Proxy the Assistant Director

The Director General of the Archives of France

To: Mr. Langenaken Courant
Foratstraat 34
B 2200 Borgerhout
Belgium

University of Paris

Academy of Paris
Administration of Education (secondary)
2nd Office
Henry IV High School

Paris, October 28, 1873

Mr. Minister:

I have the honor of sending you a certificate of appointment to the position of assistant tutor at the Henri IV High School for Mr. de Ferrari, BA in letters, formerly substitute teacher at Rollin Middle School. The attached report attests to his good services at said institution. Mr. de Ferrari has a passion for education. His great fortune explains his willingness to work without remuneration at the Rollin Middle School and he will continue on the same basis at Henri IV High School. I have temporarily assigned him to assist in the teaching of English to 5th grade. He is handling this job very well.

I am respectfully the Minister, your very humble and obedient servant,

Vice-Rector

To: the Minister of Public Education, Religion and Fine Arts

Ministry of Public Education

Academy: Paris

Department: La Seine

High School or Middle School:

Rollin

First, middle names: Philippe Marie Augustin

Date and place of birth: January 11, 1850; Paris

Marital status: single

Degrees: BA letters

Academic title:

Awards:

Honorary titles:

Date of appointment: January 25, 1872

Years of service: 0

Salary and supplemental remuneration: 0

Miscellaneous information:

Number of students:

In the institution: 312

In the instructor's class:

School year: 1871-72

Mr. de Ferrari

Position: substitute teacher

Mr. de Ferrari was accepted highly qualified, BA Letters by the Faculty of Paris in the April session and shall seek admission to the Superior Normal School.

Recommendations.

True calling to the teaching profession.

Paris, July 20, 1872

The Rector

Ministry of Public Education

Academy: Paris

Department: La Seine

High School or Middle School:

Rollin

First, middle names: Philippe Marie Augustin

Date and place of birth: January 11, 1850; Paris

Marital status: single

Degrees: BA letters

Academic title:

Awards:

Honorary titles:

Date of appointment: January 25, 1872

Years of service: 2

Salary and supplemental remuneration: 0

Miscellaneous information:

Number of students:

In the institution: 324

In the instructor's class:

School year: 1872-73

Mr. de Ferrari

Position: substitute teacher

Mr. de Ferrari replaces his disciplinary services by inquiries into history and geography, in which he performs adequately.

Recommendations.

Continue to employ him.

Good service, highly educated young man, very industrious.

Paris, July 30, 1873

The Rector

Ministry of Public Education

Last name: de Ferrari

First, middle names: Philippe Marie Augustin

Born January 11, 1950 in Paris, department of:

Marital status:

Degrees: diploma: letters

BA: letters

PhD:

Academic title:

Honorary awards:

Awards:

Description of Services	Dates			Length of service		Observations
	Appointment Certificate	End of Services	Years	Months	Days
Substitute teacher at
Rollin Middle School	Jan 25, 1872
Assistant Tutor at
Henri IV High School	Nov 15, 1873

UNIVERSITY OF FRANCE

Academy of Paris
Administration of Education

Paris, January 15, 1873

Dear Minister,

I have the honor of sending you an appointment report for Mr. de Ferrari, who is replacing Mr. Simonin at the Rollin Middle School and whom the Director proposes for the “normal” substitute.

I have no objection to this proposal.

Respectfully,

The Minister

Your very humble and very obedient servant,

Vice-Rector

Rollin Middle School

Rue Lhomond 42

Formerly rue des Postes

Paris, October 22, 1873

I, the undersigned, principal of the Rollin Middle School, knight of the Legion of Honor, certify that Mr. Philippe de Ferrari has worked at said school under a ministerial appointment during the school year 1872-73 as a substitute teacher and that he fulfilled his assigned duties with the greatest zeal.

Rollin Middle School
Rue Lhomond 42
Formerly rue des Postes

Paris, January 16, 1872

I, the undersigned, de Ferrari (Philippe Marie Augustin), born in Paris January 11, 1850, wishing to obtain a ministerial appointment, hereby commit myself to a period of 10 years of service in public education.

Philippe de Ferrari

I attest to the signature of Mr. P. de Ferrari, substitute teacher at Rollin Middle School.

Paris, January 17, 1872
Principal of Rollin Middle School

Rollin Middle School
Rue Lhomond 42
Formerly rue des Postes

Paris, January 16, 1872

Mr. de Ferrari (Philippe Marie Augustin), born Paris January 11, 1850, appeared before me to take the examination required by the Circular of April 2, 1856.

Questioned on the material contained in the 7th Book of the Treatise on Studies of Rollin, he proved by his responses that he understands the importance of his duties and that he has the necessary knowledge to properly fulfill them.

Principal of Rollin Middle School

Ministry of Culture and Communications

Administration of the Archives of France

Mr. K. Langenaken
Florastraat 34
B 2200 Borgehout
Belgium

Matter charged to: Information Bureau
Section: 21.21
Reference: IC/EB – R 1160

007983- April 12, 1988

Dear Sir:

In response to your letter of February 8, 1988, I regret to inform you that the record BB 18 2627, dossier 241 A 20 is not authorized for release until after a waiver is obtained and it is not authorized for photocopying. Furthermore, it does not relate to the receivership of the stamp collection but to the leaks that may have occurred during the receivership.

Sincerely yours,

The Director General of the Archives of France

By proxy Chief Curator of the Information Service

G. Ermissé

Complete 719 entry

Author (14pt)
Title
[Title in original language]
Bibliographic details

Translated by Translator for Brian J. Birch
 Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE 2019

TITLE (14 pt)

ENDMadrid Filatelico¹

113

Obituary²

2. Translator's Note: This is the notice of passing of a highly-esteemed, widely regarded, and much honored member of the Argentine philatelic community, Dr. Jose' Marco' del Pont. Rather than merely translate the article into standard American English, I have chosen to retain the flavor of the original Spanish "flowery" language used to praise the great man on his passing.

From our esteemed friend and correspondent in Buenos Aires, Mr. Fontaine, we have received with much emotion the sad news of the passing of the illustrious honorary president of the Philatelic Society of Argentina, Dr. Jose Marco del Pont.³

Dr. del Pont's death occurred this past July 11. News of his death produced a widespread display of mourning in our sister republic. Representatives of all the artistic, musical, and scientific associations and clubs of that great Argentine capital attended his funeral.

A renowned stamp collector and a historian of note, del Pont was also an enthusiastic coin collector and lover of all learning, culture, and hard work. No one can deny how eagerly he pursued anything he believed to be advantageous or useful in enhancing the image of his country. With this motive he embarked on the historical investigation of the postage of Argentina, contributing a better understanding of its history by such valuable monographs as The Maritime Postage of the La Plata River,^{4,5} and Historical Philatelic Questions.⁶

As a stamp collector, del Pont published various works such as The First Stamps of the Republic of Argentina from 1858 to 1872, containing a comprehensive study of the so-called "Escuditos" (shields) of 1862-63, and the "Rivadavia"⁷ of 1864. Another article, The Stamps of Mexico, reflected his vast knowledge of the first day of issue of that country. He published many other articles regarding the various issues of different countries. These articles are well known throughout the stamp-collecting world because they were published in various important philatelic magazines and journals.

Del Pont was a dedicated and passionate stamp and coin collector. He assembled what many admire as the best collection in the world of the postage stamps of South America. He also put together a very valuable collection of coins and medals, which surely will elicit the admiration of all coin collectors.

Based on his unarguable merit, he had become the President of the Council of American History and Numismatics.⁸ Under the first president, the illustrious General Mitre, del Pont served as secretary. During del Pont's presidency, which his untimely death has sadly shortened, he was able, by sheer hard work and many sleepless nights to annotate, write a preface, and reprint the seven volumes of The Buenos Aires Gazette; ⁹ the Edition of the Assembly of 1813,¹⁰ and the two volumes of the Commercial Telegraph.¹¹

Books and his homeland were always his greatest loves. He amassed a large library of (South) American books, to which he devoted as much time as his important positions allowed, and thoroughly enjoyed the labors of a booklover in the midst of his treasures and collectables, which his patience and good taste had prompted him to accumulate.

Page 2

In addition to the written works already mentioned, we also recall his Overland Mail in the Viceroyalty Period of the La Plata River Region,¹² and his Bank Notes, a painstaking study of monetary issues.

Dr. Jose Marco del Pont was born in Buenos Aires in 1851, and in the same city studied law and received a doctorate in jurisprudence in 1874(?)¹³ He practiced law for many years, always with the precision and great care that characterized all his undertakings. He also was a well-known figure in politics, always associated with the Liberal Party. As a young man he discharged the duties of Under-secretary of Finance¹⁴ at the side of the equally famous Dr. Tejedor.¹⁵ In the turbulent year of 1880 he resigned from the high post of Under-secretary during the struggle between the two opposing political parties that would decide the future of Argentina.¹⁶

Leaving politics, del Pont then discharged the duties of various prestigious positions, such as the Manager of the South American Bank, Director and Manager of the Provincial Bank of Argentina, and other similar positions. In all of these positions he distinguished himself by his vast financial knowledge.

The beautiful and prosperous Republic of Argentina is in mourning. The death of the unforgettable Dr. Marco del Pont is no less than the loss of one of Argentina's most beloved sons, who was blessed with great intelligence and who dedicated himself completely to the enhancement and the culture of his homeland. From these columns we send our most heartfelt condolences to the people of Argentina.

Madrid Filatelico (this magazine) and its owner, our dear friend Mr. Galvez,¹⁷ who had the honor of personally meeting Dr. del Pont in Buenos Aires, join in the sorrow, which his death has caused. We send condolences also to his grieving wife and sorely afflicted family. We also send our condolences to the Council of American History and Numismatics and to the Philatelic Society of Argentina for their irreparable loss.

See Footnotes below.

Page 3

Footnotes

1. Madrid Filatelico (Philatelic Madrid) was a stamp magazine first published in 1897. Its last issue was No. 1176, April, May, June 2009. At that point the then publisher Jose Antonio Reol stated “they would take a rest from publication for a while, with the intention of resuming in the future.” This obituary appeared in an issue of the magazine in 1917, the year of Dr. del Pont’s death. See also footnote 17 below.

2. Dr. José Marcó del Pont (1851 - 11 July 1917) was an Argentine philatelist who was one of the "Fathers of Philately" entered on the Roll of Distinguished Philatelists in 1921. This Roll was created by the Philatelic Congress, which met in Harrogate, England in 1921. Percy Bishop, a member of the London Stamp Club, originally put the idea for such an honor forward in 1919. Dr. del Pont was one of the original nominees to the role in its first year of existence (1921) and so the honorific title “Father of Philately” was bestowed on him along with the other honorees enrolled between 1921 and 1935.

4. An eBook version of this work is available on line from www.worldcat.org. The web site gives a listing of libraries that hold this monograph. To access the eBook enter the Spanish title “Correo Marítimo del Río de la Plata” in worldcat.org’s search window.

5. The La Plata river forms part of the border between Argentina and Uruguay, and so mail from Buenos Aires to Montevideo would be sent by packet boats and involve higher (international) postage rates. The word plata in Spanish means silver. The word plata can refer to the precious metal or to money in general.

6. An Internet search for Cuestiones historico filatelicas did not produce any results.

7. Escuditos or Shields were the first stamps issued by the unified Republic of Argentina in 1862. They may very well be the most written about stamps of Argentina. The Rivadavia refers to the stamp bearing the likeness of Bernardino de la Trinidad González Rivadavia y Rivadavia (May 20, 1780 – September 2, 1845) who was the first president of Argentina, then called The United Provinces of the Río de la Plata, from February 8, 1826 to July 7, 1827.

Page 4

8. The National Academy of History, founded in 1893 by General Bartolome’ Mitre, the Father of Argentine History, was commonly known as the Council of American History and Numismatics. Its mission as set down by its first president, Mitre, was to preserve (South) American history and to issue medals commemorating historic events. Del Pont was its third president, from 1915 until his death in July 1917.

9. Founded 2 June 1810 and first published 7 June 1810, the Buenos Aires Gazette was a weekly newspaper of the post-Colonial period of Argentina. News of government proceedings, important happenings, and cultural features were reported. It ceased publication in 1821 on order of Bernardino Rivadavia, then minister of government. (See footnote 7 above.) The first editor of the Gazette, Mariano Moreno emphasized two democratic principles, freedom of thought and publicizing the enactments of the government. Due to the high rates of illiteracy at the time, the government ordered that the Gazette be read by priests after the celebration of Sunday Mass. Some historians suggest that the Gazette influenced and helped shape democratic ideas in the people. Since 1938, June 7, the first date of publication of the Gazette, is celebrated as Día del Periodista, Journalist’s Day. A listing of the collected seven volumes of the Gazette shows del Pont as one of three editors.

10. Published between 27 February 1813 and 30 January 1815, this 98-page newspaper reported the weekly enactments, resolutions, and other documents of the Constitutional Assembly, the ruling government body at the time. The editor of the paper was purported to be Friar Cayetano Rodriquez, but editorship is also attributed to Bernardo Monteagudo. A total of 24 issues were published.

11. The Commercial Telegraph, subtitled Rural, Political, Economic and Historical news of the La Plata region, was the first newspaper ever edited in Buenos Aires. Founded on 1 April 1801 by Francisco Cabello y Mesa and Manuel Belgrano, it had the official approval of Gabriel de Aviles, Fourth Marquis of Aviles, appointed Viceroy to Argentina by King Charles IV of Spain.

12. The viceroyalty period refers to the earliest times in the history of Argentina when it was part of the vast Spanish empire ruled by the Bourbon kings of Spain.

13. Translator's note: The last number of the year is unreadable in the photocopy.

14. The Secretariat of Finance oversees among other duties the treasury and monetary policy for the government.

Page 5

15. Dr. Carlos Tejedor was the governor of the province of Buenos Aires at the time.

16. In 1880 a trade conflict caused turmoil in Buenos Aires, which led Governor Carlos Tejedor to declare secession from the republic. President of the Republic Avellaneda denied them this right and proceeded to send army troops to take over the province. Tejedor's secession efforts were defeated and Buenos Aires joined the republic definitively, federalizing the city of Buenos Aires and handing it over to the government as the nation's capital city.

17. Miguel Galvez Jimenez was the founder and first publisher of the Spanish stamp magazine Madrid Filatelico in which this obituary appears.

Translated by:
Lawrence A. DiFiore, Ph.D.
APS Translation Committee
APA Member #203951

END

Ricardo D. Eliçabe, Dr. Máximo Castro & Dr. Antonio Dellepiane

Doctor José Marcó del Pont: Died in Buenos Aires on the 11th July 1917

[Doctor José Marcó del Pont: † en Buenos Aires el 11 Julio de 1917]

Revista de la Sociedad Filatélica Argentina, July/August 1917, Volume 21, Issue 4,
Whole number 181, pp.71-75

Translated by Andrés J. Schlichter for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
May 2016

DOCTOR JOSÉ MARCÓ DEL PONT:
DIED IN BUENOS AIRES ON THE 11TH JULY 1917

The Sociedad Filatélica Argentina and its publication, the Revista de la Sociedad Filatélica Argentina, have just experienced the the most important loss with the passing of Dr. José Marcó del Pont who was the first Honorary President, and the President for many years as well as editor of this publication. He passed away last July after a long illness.

His death leaves a space impossible to fill. His life has been so linked to the evolution of our Philatelic Society that his absence will produce a profound shock amongst all of us.

This Publication, to which he gave his life and energy with his constant work and to which he gave his own stamp of authority treating all aspects with the highest degree of attention, cannot overcome his loss.

A cultivated spirit, well defined character, lover of fairness and justice, that was José Marcó del Pont.

Disdainful of all types of conventionalism, specially where these tend to the superfluous and sterility, he dedicated his time to the love of his family. Furthermore he dedicated his life to the research of the history of American matters, specially Argentinian, concentrating on what mostly concerns us, to the unveiling of all the secrets of the Argentine postage stamp issues.

His love for philately, means that his passing is very much felt as an important loss by not only the Argentinian philatelists, but by those of all the world, because he was one of the few thought to have the knowledge to be considered an outstanding philatelist. Proof of his importance and the respect and consideration that his long life of work produced beyond Argentina, is the Lindenberg medal he obtained. That distinction was given by the Berlin Philatelic Society as a stimulus and reward to those cultivated spirits that were outstanding for their research in the area of philately. Thus, this was only obtainable by individuals with a high cultural level and with a superior select spirit. This was the first time this prize was given to a person outside Europe.

His studies on the Argentinian stamp issues have the double merit of having been done at a time when these were almost unknown and that these were so thoroughly done, that even today when the enormous development of collecting and the important relationships among collectors make research easier, those made by Marcó del Pont still remain as models and cannot be modified in their essence. An example of this is his research on the Rivadavia issue, that have been done subsequently by Argentine, American and European collectors, that moved away from the path trodden by Doctor José Marcó del Pont, have failed and made artificial and theoretical divisions.

His studies on the stamps of the Argentine Confederation, the stamps of Corrientes and the issue known as the Escuditos (Coat of arms) are the most complete known till now.

His studies on the Mexican stamp issues, among which we will mention the “overprints” are very interesting, and some were presented by the author to the Société Française de Timbrologie in Paris in 1884, and published in the magazine of that Society.

His research on the postage stamps of Uruguay and the many articles that have been published over many years in the pages of our publication and in others of various countries are the proof of his indefatigable energy.

His work on the Maritime mail of the Rio de la Plata, finished not long ago, is unique of its type amongst us.

Besides his works and exclusively historic publications that were already mentioned in the funerary sentences in this number, he left unpublished manuscripts: El Correo Terrestre en el Rio de la Plata, and unfinished: his work on the 1892-95 issue, whose first part was published in our previous number.

His work in our Society was completely outstanding, and showed the way forward. Thanks to him our Society has now a number of researchers, that maybe aren't of his calibre, but they follow the way he showed. He always knew how to put energy into accumulating little pieces of paper, dignifying them by studying and researching the secrets they had and it was always his aim that the Sociedad Filatelica Argentina should not be a number of collectors but also, and this was his most important aim, a group of researchers.

Those of us that were fortunate to learn at the side of the great teacher, will never forget his teachings, as he sowed in us with his lessons, the fruit of his experience and work, the love for researching and studying those small little coloured pieces of paper that say so little to the unknowledgeable and that say so much to the one who knows how to extract their secrets.

Another merit of he who was our worthy President was his courage to open the ways for Argentinian philately in the midst of the indifference and even ridicule to which Argentine collectors were treated. This type of consideration was due to the fact that philately is an exclusive heritage of some superior spirits and is thus only understood by the few that cultivate it.

The work of Marcó del Pont will always be an example and shows the course for our Society. And, as human law is fulfilled with him when we could have expected even much more of his work and experience, we shall be worthy of his spirit and let him be a guide for the greater glory of philately and culture of our country.

The Sociedad Filatélica Argentina, to do him honor and perpetuate his memory, has decided that the name of Doctor José Marcó del Pont should always appear as our Honorary President and his picture always be present in the meeting room of the Society. Furthermore, the Society will send a message of condolence to his family and place a plaque at his grave as a remembrance of he who was the soul of Argentinian Philately.

This publication also wants to be associated in this by dedicating this number as a tribute to his memory in which we show the grief his absence has produced.

Buenos Aires, August 1917

Speech of Dr. Máximo Castro

Gentlemen:

The Commission of Directors of the Sociedad Filatélica Argentina has asked me to communicate at this moment the feeling of deep sorrow that overwhelms the spirit of all its members because of the loss of its Honorary President, Doctor José Marcó del Pont. His death means an irreparable loss, not only for Argentine philately but also for Argentine culture, of which he was a beautiful and dignified exponent.

Dedicated to historic and numismatic research, to which he gave most of his life, he knew how to combine them together harmoniously with philatelic research, showing that it is a legitimate daughter of history, and that it deserves attention of the strong and superior spirits, especially when stamps stop being a simple hobby and starts to be a document of historical evidence.

His studies on the stamps of the Confederación, to mention only one of his numerous philatelic publications, managed to shed light on aspects of this issue that seemed to remain unclear. And one may state without fear of exaggerating that his conclusions based on official documents that he was the first to unveil, will never be surpassed. His particular knowledge on all aspects of stamp issues allowed him to give excellent and valuable service to the National Commission on Postal Issues. The stamps produced under his direction and counsel, are among the finest that our postal authority has issued.

The history of these issues that have been published in our magazine will not be completed, as this author has been silenced for ever, having had no time to complete his work.

He was no doubt, the most important philatelist in Argentina, and his prestige expanded beyond the limits of our country.

In 1914 he was honored with the Lindenberg medal, that is the highest award for a philatelist, and its possession constitutes a definitive consecration. To understand the importance of this distinction it has to be mentioned that Dr. Marcó del Pont was the first South American that received it.

The irresistible attraction that historic research had on his mind, led him to found together with General Mitre, the Junta de Historia y Numismática Americana (American Organization of History and Numismatics), where his work showed the highest standards. He was the first Secretary of this organization and death took him away from its Presidency. To his intelligent and sustained efforts without a single fainting moment we owe the facsimile publication of the Gaceta and the Redactor de la Asamblea.

The study he read at the meeting of the Junta about the coin of Tucuman [Province], first published in the Revista de Derecho, Historia y Letras, and later in a brochure, was a true revelation, because up to that moment it was not known that Tucuman had issued a copper coin. That important discovery could only be performed by an analytic spirit, disciplined in the research with a firm and sure direction.

With serenity and resignation he understood the disease that undermined his existence, and he sensed his end without fear. This tireless worker, relegating to second place his physical and moral pains as he arrived to his last day working on his chosen subjects, but unfortunately away from active participation in the Society. His interest in the Society did not decrease a single instant, and he always sent us his wise words with his healthy and moderate advice.

As time passes and the wound that Dr. Marcó del Pont's death opened in our heart heals, our intelligence will value the enormous void that his absence leaves us, and his memory will become more poignant. Even though we could have expected a lot more of his robust brain, the page of his life is well written and filled with invaluable teachings. His life will be a sure guide, a perennial inspiration to all of us and a noble example to try to imitate and to inspire us. This conviction, strengthened in the mind of his dear people will help to mitigate their sorrow.

Speech of Dr. Antonio Dellepiane

Gentlemen:

Without having healed yet the wound opened in our hearts by the disappearance of one of the conspicuous members of the Junta de Historia y Numismática Americana, Dr. Juan B. Ambrosetti, another hit as hard and cruel as the previous, comes to shake again painfully the most intimate and sensitive fibers of our being.

The death of Dr. José Marcó del Pont is really for our Junta the worse loss that could happen. Founding member of this learned society, in conjunction with General Mitre, Dr. Mantilla, Dr. Angel Justiniano Carranza, Don Alejandro Rosa and other historians, its most worthy Secretary during the presidencies of General Mitre and Don Enrique Peña, and its current President, Dr. Marcó del Pont was linked to each and every one of the members of the board by intimate bonds of sympathy and sincere friendship that he had closely tied with his kind, balanced and fair character.

The modest but no less important work, the re-publication of the Gaceta de Buenos Aires that the Junta asked us to perform gave me the opportunity and the joy of knowing him more closely. It was in these intellectual talks of entertaining and affectionate camaraderie, performed at Marco del Pont's home, that I could value all his domestic and social virtues with his enlightened and positive qualities of a patient and sagacious researcher present in our excellent companion.

Heir of a patrician family and freed from the obligation to work in order to live comfortably, Dr. Marco del Pont nevertheless understood that there is no right to idleness; and that all social beings and every member of the civil and political society is obliged to return, by cooperating in some collective utility work, the enormous benefits that he daily receives from the community. He was often seen to accept selflessly executive positions, often uncomfortable and that required a lot of time, and sometimes even with money but only with the high aim of helping the country by contributing to the improvement of its institutions.

Unlike other people in the same position who seek after personal frivolous pleasures, he adopted as a rule of his life program the saying expressed in the beautiful English formula “Plain living and high thinking”. He dedicated himself to the hard and delicate tasks of the spirit, the cultivation of science and friendship. Furthermore, he dedicated himself intensely to historical studies with all his ability, putting into this hobby all his imagination and poetry, all of which ennobled and elevated it. He loved these studies only because of the study, because of the pleasure he had researching our past and has thus contributed to the better knowledge of our history. His monograph on the Maritime mail of the River Plate and other philatelic publications were important contributions.

His love and dedication to our Junta were truly exemplary. He did his best to obtain respect and recognition for the Junta.

The team spirit that he possessed led him to put beyond the small frictions of passions inherent in all human groups, the interests, success and added glitter of the institution to which he belonged. He was aware that the prestige of a society always pours prestige on each one of the members and that the good or evil of the whole is also the good or evil of each of the parts.

Just one week ago I visited our friend and I couldn't suppose it would be the last time. I found him as always in his office, in the middle of his favorite books, lovingly surrounded by his furniture, papers and objects of art, silent witnesses and beloved confidants of his vigils and sleepless nights.

His spirit, a little subdued by the prolonged and troublesome illness, was far from being broken much less beaten. He used his concerns for occupations, according to the wise counsel of the philosopher, to entertain his sick impatience and soothed the physical and moral agonies, with the great anesthetic: work!

Death found him intensely working on historic research on numismatic pieces minted in Córdoba and the bank notes of our country.

It is not possible to have defined the figure of Dr. Marcó del Pont with these few words. Nor have I expressed the profound sorrow of our spirits because of this great loss.

Only an urgent and inescapable duty could force me to break in this case my invariable silence at the tombs. We the emotional and affective ones are certainly not the best to speak in circumstances like this.

As already said in olden days with the unsurpassed strength and elegance of the Latin language: Exat sine voce dolor.

Both myself and all friends of the perfect gentleman that was Dr. José Marco del Pont pay homage to his memory as the sweetest palliative to our immense and just sorrow.

END

Otto Sedlmayr, Ant[on] Bacht [actually Bache] & J.-B. Moens

Munich philatelic exhibition

[Exposition philatélique de Munich]

Le Timbre-Poste, December 1889, Volume 27, Whole number 324, p.106

Translation prepared for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit Le Guinot, Route de St. Barthelemy, Montignac-Toupinerie, 47350, FRANCE

August 2016

MUNICH PHILATELIC EXHIBITION

106

THE POSTAGE STAMP

#324

A notice from the postal administration reports on this issue:

NOTICE

By order of the General Administration of the postal service, on the 14th of this month a series of provisional postage stamps of 5c each will be issued. They will be of the same type as those issued December 1st 1886 but with the black overprint "Provisorio".

Montevideo, October 12, 1889

Office of the secretary

Munich Philatelic Exposition

Since the Bayerische Philatelisten-Verein (Bavarian Philatelic Association) of Munich had asked us several times to participate at its exposition, we sent them the collection of "The Postage Stamp" (Le Timbre-Poste), of "Revenue Stamp" (Timbre Fiscal) as well as the Philatelists' Library. We learn of the results that concern us by the following letter:

Munich, October 20, 1889

Mr. J.-B. Moens in Brussels:

By order of the Bavarian Philatelic Association we have the pleasure of informing you that your "Philatelists' Library" (Bibliothèque Timbrophilique) has been awarded the "Bronze Medal"

At the 3rd international philatelic exposition.

It is unfortunate that your large catalogue was not present, as it could have competed successfully for the grand medal.

Respectfully yours,

Otto Sedlmayr,

President

Ant. Bacht,

Secretary

After returning this medal that was so generously offered, we sent the following lines:

Brussels, October 29, 1889

Dear Mr. President of the Munich Philatelic Society:

I regret to inform you that we have returned by rail, freight paid, the medal that you have sent, according to your letter of the 20th of this month. Here are my reasons:

I sent you the complete collection of my journal "The Postage Stamp", upon your explicit request, comprising 26 volumes plus 17 of the "Philatelists' Library" (Bibliothèque des Timbrophiles), that I wrote.

You judged that all of this was not equal to a German catalogue and that my 43 volumes should be evaluated on the same basis as certain catalogues and albums of German private stamps!

After being awarded the highest honor by the French philatelic societies of Paris and the Dutch societies of Amsterdam, I have reason to be surprised by such a decision. I am not accustomed to singing my own praises but I can say without bombast that “The Postage Stamp”, the oldest publication of its type, enjoys a good reputation among collectors; and that the “Philatelists’ Library” is not without merit either, since you yourself requested permission to have the works translated into German.

That you wanted to encourage German writers, that is excellent, I approve, and I congratulate you for this idea, which, unfortunately, is little to be heard in France; but that you urged me to exhibit my works in Munich so they can serve as a springboard for a German catalogue, whose merits I do not dispute, that is a slight that I am unable to explain and that nobody would approve.

Very sincerely yours,

J.-B. Moens

It seems sure that the jury’s decision was not to everyone’s liking, as we have learned that Dr. Kloss, C. Joris and Mr. Pétritz have returned their medals as well. The last had taken himself out of competition and protested the decision of the jury of which he was a member.

Does one wish to learn now how the jury was selected? “The Postage Stamp” will inform us. This joke of a jury, it reports, was composed of Messrs. Lindenberg and Th. Hass (silver medals), Castle (gold medal), E. Pétritz (bronze medal), Mr. Bachl (no award): but he had not exhibited!

In the presence of such great self-sacrifice, we offer Mr. Bachl the bronze that we returned. No matter, it must be admitted that the jury was well selected: all of them men of merit who know how to appreciate their value at least, even if it is not appreciated by others.

A great rarity

Mr. Granberg of Helsingfors has made an interesting discovery. At least he says so. This discovery is a Finland cover, 10 kop., red, type of 1845, whose official existence has been denied and disproved by Mr. F. Breitfuss.

Mr. Granberg showed this cover to the stamp bureau “Charta Sigillata”, where the dies of the stamps are preserved and it seems that the folks there immediately recognized that this cover was perfectly authentic and belonged to an issue of only 100 stamps. There is news that will confound our friend Breitfuss.

But let us examine this discovery. The cover is made of plain grayish white paper and of small size (117 mm X 73 mm). The oval stamp is in the lower left corner like the 10 kop. black and 20 kop.

M. P. Castle & [Louis François Hanciau (Editor)]

The Munich philatelic exhibition

[L'exposition philatélique de Munich]

Le Timbre-Poste, February 1890, Volume 28, Whole number 326, pp.15-16

Translation prepared for by Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit Le Guinot, Route de St. Barthelemy, Montignac-Toupinerie, 47350, FRANCE

August 2016

THE MUNICH PHILATELIC EXHIBITION

To J.-B. Moens at Brussels

I have neither the right nor the will to defend the awards given by the jury at the Munich exhibition against the attacks of exhibitors who succeeded in winning only the sympathies of others; but I take the liberty to present some observations for the edification of your readers.

1. The names of the members of the jury were announced everywhere by the organizers;
2. There were 30 medals, 4 of which were awarded to members of the jury;
3. Whenever a member of the jury was also an exhibitor, the former would remove himself from the committee and the vote would proceed in his absence;
4. The members of the jury who were awarded medals were Messrs. E. Pétritz, Th. Haas, C. Lindenberg and myself;

Mr. Pétritz returned his medal, as you stated, which you seem glad about, as you hold him blameless.

Mr. Haas had no competitor in his class: a philatelic library of 500 volumes, a life-time collection.

As for me, I was asked upon my arrival to be a member of the jury under the absolute condition of not being a competitor, like the other members. I consented and it was not until 2 days later that I learned of the reversal of this decision.

Before publication of the results of the competition, I offered to give up my gold medal to an exhibitor who deserved it: I reiterate my offer today. Finally, if the London society, for example, feels I am not entitled to the medal, I am prepared to give it up.

That leaves Mr. Lindenberg, who seems to be the one who prompted your acerbic criticism. I have had the pleasure of meeting you and Mr. Lindenberg. I congratulate both of you. But let me point out that your philatelic reputations and positions don't need bronze or silver medals and it would have been better to let this incident pass without notice and just be satisfied with your friends' esteem, including me, a "joker" who is proud to be in that group.

Your devoted
M. P. Castle

[Louis François Hanciau (Editor)]

So, the first action, which is always the best, was to exclude the jury from competition; but the second action followed closely upon the first. This exceptional jury, this joke of a jury, as the Timbre put it, it recognized that nobody could judge its own merits as well as it could: it simply reversed its decision and set itself up as a competitor against those who it was supposed to judge!

There were 30 medals to be awarded, as Mr. Castle informs us, and it awarded only 4 to itself, of various metals! But isn't that the pinnacle of modesty and impartiality? After all, the jury could have awarded all the medals to itself....

One sees from here the scene that came to pass.

A member of the jury is in question, modestly he leaves, because for nothing in the world would he want to hear the praises which will overwhelm. Later, he returns moved and triumphant. He knows what he is waiting for. One passes him the puck, he smiles, always moved, receiving the congratulations of his colleagues and taking (his) place next to them.

The same game for the comrades, each in turn modest, moved and triumphant.

Well! In front of a self-denial so rare, we ask for a supplemental payment for each of the members of the jury so well composed; a dawn for example would not be too much (we didn't write hullabaloo)

We owe the truth to his friends. We will therefore say to Mr. Castle:

Maybe you deserved 100 times the medal that we reproach you, but under the conditions that it was offered to you, it doesn't belong to you, you have no right to it and despite the sweet violence that was done to you

To Mr. Lindenberg and Mr. Haas, who we don't know, we don't have any advice to give them, it seems that for the rest they hold too tightly to their medals so laboriously won to listen to reason. But it's equal to decide on a silver medal because one exposed that which is called "the collection of his life." THE TOIL OF OTHERS, it's a genial idea that could sprout nowhere but Munich where the elites don't lack.

The incident is closed.

END

Personalities

[Personalien]

Deutsch Briefmarken-Zeitung, June 1895, Volume 5, Issue 9, p.139

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350, Montignac Toupinerie, FRANCE

11th March 2017

PERSONALITIES

Mr. J. B. Moens of Brussels undertook a trip to Germany in the past month, which led him to Bamberg, Berlin, Leipzig and Hannover. In Berlin he stayed for a few days during which he had the opportunity to meet the most distinguished collectors and dealers in person. The director of the district court, Mr. Lindenberg himself showed him the collections of the Postal Museum of the Empire, which rightfully thrilled his admiration. In repeated get-togethers with local collectors apparently all important actual issues and discoveries were discussed. Mr. Moens, who despite his age of 62 years, was agile as a young one stood on the zenith of sciences. None of their areas of collecting was unknown to him, in everything he was a sound connoisseur, yet of a winning amiability in personal discussions which one hardly suspected that this personality was the originator of the sharp and brilliant articles in Timbre-Post, which have hurt many. The reason for this and also their excuse often may have been the fact that Mr. Moens was only able to understand the French language. It was necessary that every paper in the German language had to be translated by a not very reliable paid translator. Therefore, it was not surprising that he, whilst evaluating German works, made several mistakes such as with a comprehensive work like the one by Friedrich about Spain and her colonies which he could not have gotten translated in its complete extent and content. In any case, the philatelists of Berlin were pleased to greet this “Dean” of philately in their group; they have gained an extraordinary impression about him and hope also that he left Berlin fully satisfied.

END

L. Hanciau

Yesterday and today

[Autrefois et aujourd'hui]

Le Philatéliste Belge, July 1921, Volume 1, Issue 10, pp.224-227 & September, Issue 12,
pp.277-279

Translated by Phill Provance for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

11th March 2017

YESTERDAY AND TODAY

Although postage stamps date back to May 1840, it wasn't until the end of 1851 or the beginning of 1852 that young people in Belgium first evinced an enthusiasm for collecting them. Badly misinformed, Larousse claims it was in France, in 1849, that this innocent passion for stamps—a passion “a mother might safely inspire in her daughter”—first stirred, and yet we read elsewhere that stamp collecting first began in England on June 23, 1860—a date far too accurate not to raise eyebrows.

Whatever the exact date of the hobby's inception, however, it was certainly in the pockets of schoolboys' knickerbockers, among their other fancies, that the vanguard of the first stamp collections formed. And that is, indeed, if we might call them collections at all, for in principle, at such an early date, such “collections” didn't consist of postage stamps but were no more than hordes of images in young boys' minds, representing, quite simply, the various values each held dear—be those values what they may from individual to individual and from moment to moment.

The hobby's beginnings were therefore modest, and collecting was hardly difficult: a tear wasn't viewed as a major defect, considering how difficult it was to obtain certain stamps. Rather, we brought such pieces together, occasionally concealing their defects with the stroke of a pen or a dab of glue. The order of the day was to “fix” stamps, and by our standards that was easy to do: in the case of margins, for example, they weren't initially considered part of the stamp anyhow, so most early collectors were hardly bothered if they disappeared between the blades of a pair of scissors. Large margins, moreover, were considered defects early and so were rooted out with exacting prejudice.

Still, in addition to these early innocents, there were other, more serious, more exacting collectors with more foresight and circumspection than the ankle-biting set to which I belonged at the time. Included in this small yet distinguished group were Hector Denis, Kochtchinson, Pierre Maus, J.-B. Moens and others in Brussels whose names presently escape the author's recollection; the Baron Van Crombrugge and Mr. Zamen-Van Combrugge of Ghent, the Reverend Father Bernardin, principal of the Melle Boys Academy, and so on. These gentlemen didn't need catalogs to tell them there was a difference between perforate and imperforate stamps, but they hadn't yet gone so far as to note the differences between paper types and watermarks; indeed, at this early date, the ink on the first private U.S. printings was hardly dry, so such matters were understandably overlooked as minor peculiarities.

And yet still others, including, much later, myself, didn't share this view, and we rooted out every stamp we could find. Among the materials discovered in this way were copies of the Boyd's City Express issues, whose bizarre designs earned our little group the nickname of "reel-label collectors"—a disparaging term due to the obvious fact that one could always be mistaken in classifying such material as postage. How we first discovered the labels, though, was that, on one occasion, a certain postman who encouraged our endeavours procured a one-cent Baltimore dispatch by removing it from a newspaper addressed to Brussels, expressly so that we could study it; in his eagerness to get it to us he'd accidentally torn the label's band in half, then so as not to be caught, he'd gotten rid of the newspaper by tossing it into a cellar—thus depriving its addressee of his presumably long-awaited paper. To our shock, we discovered this particular stamp was missing from our community collection, and we wondered how such an unusual specimen could have been accepted as postage with such a crude design, and why as well it was printed in purple when the normal color for such stamps was red-vermilion.

Of course, to be fair, our ignorance was primarily due to how, at the time, collecting consisted mostly of what one might call, "vignette collecting"—that is, stuffing binders with sheets of paper on which stamps were haphazardly glued to display old and new denominations on the same page. The idea was that such "albums" allowed you to compare stamps from neighboring countries, such as France, Belgium, the U.K. and Germany, on the same page, giving off the impression that these countries' postage were in some sort of "Beautiful Alliance." Childish dreams of world peace aside, though, the sad fact was that if the paper inserts in these early albums were carefully arranged and organized, glue was applied so liberally on the back of each stamp—as an easy way to avoid loss and theft—that it would ooze out every which way. And, once a sheet had been filled, new stamps were often slapped carelessly onto subsequent pages without the slightest rhyme or reason. Suffice it to say, devaluation and damage weren't our prime concerns, again given how ostensibly easy it was to repair ruined material.

Still, despite these slapdash practices, so many of us became obsessed with rooting out certain stamps that, before long, stamp collecting was no longer considered just another childish fad. And, seeing our obsession as the opportunity it was, one early adult collector, J.-B. Moens, started the first stamp dealership in 1852, at first testing the proverbial waters by selling us the duplicates in his collection. Obviously, his thinking was that if his little enterprise took off it would allow him to make a living while also focusing on his collection full-time.

Well, the results of Moens's venture were soon apparent: he quickly liquidated his initial stock despite his exorbitantly high prices, as we kids could still count on mom and dad to buy us the choicest material. Otherwise, we'd have never been able to afford 10, 20, even 50 centimes for a 1-centime stamp at a time when the average worker made about 10 or 11 francs a week, and it's a surprise none of us sent our folks to the poorhouse! Of course, it is true Moens's stock included some real rarities. ... but rarity back then was relative; much of what he sold us at such exorbitant prices would sell by the kilo today. Still, our (or our parents') loss was apparently Mr. Moens's gain, and having in such short order all the evidence he needed of stamp dealing's viability, he went abroad to increase his selection of wares and satisfy several customers who had made special requests.

Now, at the time, Moens's inquiries into purchasing postage stamps in bulk were highly unusual; it simply wasn't done in those days, and so postal authorities elsewhere in Europe regarded him with suspicion: categorically, they couldn't imagine why anyone would want another country's postage, let alone so much of it, and so, in short, many post offices simply refused to sell to him, while in Tuscany the police even went so far as to open an investigation into Moens, initiating what became a burdensome, lengthy affair. Eventually, it came down to a question of counterfeiting, and it wasn't until the Tuscans were completely satisfied that Moens only wanted to resell the stamps to kids that they finally let him purchase them, at which point he forthwith resold them to us at the astronomical price of 25 centimes for a 1 quaterino, 1 soldo and 1 crazia set!

Such prices from Moens continued going up ever after, and it goes without saying that we collectors weren't very enthusiastic about the fact. But perhaps the biggest stink we collectively made came when one of our number, H. Denis, found Moens selling a Mecklenberg-Schwerin $\frac{1}{4}$ schilling for 1.75 francs! Immediately, Denis went all over town preaching the gospel of how badly things would turn out for anyone so extravagant in his stamp buying habits that he paid this price—though, to be fair, I have it on good authority that Denis did in fact purchase said stamp at said price and he ended up a prominent professor at the University of Brussels and, later, a member of the Belgian Parliament!

And so it was that we spendthrifts and our open pockets caught the attention of our elders, who no longer considered our quirky little hobby a “craze” but stamp collecting, and, later, the ever prim and proper philately¹ a term, I've heard, that was coined by a certain Parisian enthusiast, one Mr. Herpin, who felt a new hobby deserved a new name.

From about 1860 onward, then, several serious collectors from France began showing up in Brussels, including Messrs. E. Belleville, O. Berger, Chandelier A. Compere, Couraud, Donatis, Ferrari, Herpin, Leglise, Legrand, Monnerot, Périnelle, de Primoli, Régnard - all of whom have now passed on—and, from England, moreover, Messrs. Bacon, Evans, Image, Kanc, J. Pauwels, Philbrick, Tapling and Westoby, as well as many, many others. They shared the results of their extensive philatelic studies with us, and eventually, Dr. Legrand distinguished himself as a sort of expert in Belgian philately, leading us in a more serious direction. Meanwhile, having seen how successful Moens had been, little printing, engraving, music and office-supplies shops everywhere began selling collectible stamps until stamp dealers became practically as numerous as dust mites.

What's more, it was around this time - 1860 or thereabouts—that the first stamp expo took place in Brussels at the Vandermaelen brothers' Geographical Institute. You see, every September the Vandermaelens would organize exhibits of various curiosities. The stamp bug having caught on, then, a philatelic exhibit was viewed by the Vandermaelens as being sufficiently interesting to the general public, while for our part, what interested us collectors most was how many postage stamps were on display: there were at least 150, which was a remarkable number at the time, and we often visited the exhibit to admire the rarities in silence, having gained special authorization to do so from the Vandermaelens themselves. Among the stamps on display, I remember there was a 21 x 23 mm, hand-drawn essay from France of the imperial eagle with thunderbolts. The stamp was rather crude by today's standards, having hardly any inscription at all except the initials “N.L.” Yet our little community had never seen such a gem so worthy of issuance. And, lo and behold, in September 1864 Russia issued a reproduction of the very same essay!

And so it was that Brussels became the first Belgian city to host a stamp show, followed soon thereafter by Antwerp, where an exhibition of philatelic forgeries was the next show held. This was because it was an Antwerp resident who first thought of forging collectible stamps like the 1850 Brazil—which issues were in such high demand that he'd long sold out of forgeries before anyone even suspected his scam.

Sadly, too many others have since followed in this original criminal's footsteps, and so it wasn't long before, in December 1861, a Mr. Potiquet published the first French-language philatelic catalog in Paris, to help prevent such deceit. Not wanting to be shown up, J.-B. Moens then published his own catalog in March 1862, and his volume distinguished itself as being the first to differentiate between various perforation types. Similarly, after Parisian J. Lallier published the first album in 1862, J.-B. Moens quickly leaped on the proverbial bandwagon, issuing his own album in 1863, in addition to editing and publishing, in both French and English, the first ever pamphlet on philatelic fakes and forgeries in March 1862. And it was around the same time as well (on December 15, 1862, to be precise) that the first philatelic newspaper, The Monthly Advertiser, began publication in Liverpool. Subsequently, from February 1, 1863, to October 1874, The Stamp Collectors Magazine was circulated by a publishing house in Bath, and fifteen days later, we Belgians had our own such newspaper, Le Timbre-Poste, coming out of Brussels.

However, returning our attention to Mr. Moens for a moment, as I mentioned above there was little if any love lost between us collectors and him, considering how he was practically extorting us. But of the many publications he produced in these years, his album was especially prized, for no one serious about stamp collecting in Brussels denied it was superior to its competition; Mr. Lallier, it seemed, had had more money than sense, insomuch as though he'd discovered a need of ours and tried to fill it, a philatelist he was not. Rather, he had been obliged, in the face of so much esoterica, to rely on Parisian collectors and dealers for information, resulting in a plethora of incorrectly sized and shaped frames on his album's pages. Thus, it was mostly thanks to Mr. Lallier that so many examples of our earliest issues were ruthlessly trimmed to make them fit their designated spots!

Meanwhile, it was in or around the same time that we Belgian collectors began meeting several "interesting" people, the foremost of whom was an Englishman who had moved to Louvain and had a markedly unique approach to collecting: he wasn't interested at all in a stamp's margins and was worried even less about perforations and watermarks; rather, what interested him were stamps' center designs, which he would use to adorn various frames on each of his album pages. Thus, with the 1851 Belgium issues, for instance, he would cut out the portraits of King Leopold I and, doing this with every stamp he could get his hands on, create designs with the resulting medallions in the middle of his album pages! What he was apparently attempting was to construct postage mosaics, and truth be told, he eventually succeeded thanks to his enlisting the help of an artist-painter who also worked as an illustrator. In fact, arguably their efforts yielded true works of art and so they eventually had their own imitators, including, most notably, the numerous drawings and posters composed entirely of postage stamps that were exhibited at the 1887 Antwerp stamp show by people with apparently too much time on their hands.

Furthermore, Brussels in those early days was home to another such "character" who had two collections, one of mint and one of canceled stamps. In both collections, the stamps were of every type and category conceivable, including envelopes, bands, cards, and money orders, plus a collection of forged stamps he'd labelled with the names and methods of their manufacturers. He was never so happy as when calling out an amateur collector for ignoring some minor detail or other, and I suspect even his seeming eccentricity was something of a pretense, though in his own mind he certainly believed himself to be an indispensable part of our community, an aficionado among aficionados, one of the very first people to have ever thought of collecting stamps. Well, the truth was he was mostly no more to us than a nuisance to our stamp dealers, discouraging as he did so many new collectors when dealers were trying so hard to beat the philatelic drum and foster new interest in the hobby while also encouraging repeat business from us holdover "stamp maniacs."

And these were just two philatelic eccentrics living in or around in Brussels in those days. Still another enterprising early enthusiast arranged his collection in three columns of three stamps per row, such that all the material on the page was organized around the stamp at the page's center. Naturally, this ensured that the eight peripheral stamps were practically worthless, but the ultimate outcome of this practice was it increased the value of a single page substantially. After all, the center stamp was invariably rare and sought-after, but to get it a collector would have to purchase the entire page, paying for the lesser stamps as well, and then, it would be up to the purchaser to decide if he wanted to pick out the center rarity or keep the set of nine as he'd purchased it. It isn't hard to see why this practice became very popular for a time and why this particular gentlemen had several imitators. But, ultimately, the practice didn't last very long, as other, more forward-thinking collectors preferred arranging their stamps in rows of four, with each successive stamp more valuable than the last.

The reason I mention this rogues gallery, then, is to illustrate how, before there were standard practices, you could easily find collectors who preferred arranging their stamps in groups of 8, 9, etc.—which was simply too many stamps on a single page unless you were speculating on stamps or displaying varieties beside standard issues. For our part, the members of my group typically preferred grouping stamps in fours, especially if they were imperforate issues whose genuineness was indisputable. Suffice it to say, what was more interesting to us was the prospect of reconstructing whole sheets as they had been printed, but this of course required deep pockets, and already at this early date, it was nearly impossible to do so for the earliest printings.

(To be continued)

*Yesterday and Today*¹ (Part II)

The previously mentioned interactions I've had since my youth with serious collectors showed me that not one of these gentlemen ever turned down a stamp simply because it wasn't perfect. Now, this doesn't mean they preferred damaged stamps; rather, much like numismatists, they felt - contrary to popular sentiments today - that stamp collecting wasn't about gathering up little vignettes or images but about preserving historical documents imbued with intrinsic value, even if sometimes, as these gentlemen would have gladly admitted, said documents were practically mangled. Today's stamp collectors, in contrast, are becoming a pack of incorrigible snobs, searching for impossible finds and rejecting any stamp missing the slightest bit of a single perf or featuring a design even a quarter of a millimetre off-centre. Or if such minuscule faults don't exist, these newer philatelists will instead reject a gem of a stamp merely because its "freshness" isn't up to their standards. Well, to such youngsters I say without the slightest qualification that whatever you're looking for doesn't exist.

For my own part, I myself am of the opinion that completing a collection is impossible if you let yourself get lost in the weeds with such trivialities. Yes, of course the idea of having a complete, mint collection of every stamp back to the Penny Black is a nice dream, but those who clamour most loudly for such perfection would be hard-pressed to produce an example of a single stamp, let alone a complete collection, that meets their standards. And what, then, will become of our hobby if such standards remain so unreasonably high as to prevent would-be collectors from purchasing a single piece?!

What's needed is a bit more graciousness for those stamps that, like ourselves, might make a good show overall but aren't entirely perfect down to the nittiest and grittiest of details. What's needed, I say, is a return to the view that you place the best material you can find in your albums provisionally, replacing stamps as you find better copies. For isn't completing a collection the primary goal of any philatelist, or did I at some point miss a memo stating that filling albums was passé?

Perhaps I am preaching in the wilderness here, but don't so many impossible standards ultimately lead to abuses? The buyer, we must concede, is not at all at the mercy of the seller. A stamp dealer can have all the eloquence and seemingly elite qualifications imaginable, can, in a word, be a paragon of perfect, yet this has nothing at all to do with the price he charges for a perfect stamp; such specimens often quite naturally cost more than the highest pricing listed in the most accurate catalogues. And yet despite making immense financial sacrifices, the collector will never see his collection grow by purchasing such rightly overpriced stamps because he will inevitably always run out of money - and this will necessarily lead him to loathe building a collection as an absurd and impossible task.

1 See no. 10 from July 15

So, my point in this second instalment of the present article is that I feel we philatelists must ask ourselves if our obsession with perfection is a help or a hindrance.

Or put another way, when an archaeologist, say, or a palaeontologist carries out an expensive excavation is it with a view to junking any find that isn't exactly the same as it was the moment it was made? For, if this were the case, it's hard to imagine any museum on the planet would have much of a collection. Indeed, archaeologists and paleontologists, as well as their museum benefactors, are always eager to put on exhibitions of whatever they can find, including minuscule fragments of Julius Caesar's shattered bedpan! For example, that august institution, the Louvre - which isn't exactly directed by imbeciles - is hardly ashamed that it has purchased and exhibited the badly mutilated Venus de Milo and the Venus d'Arles - the latter of which was reconstructed from three pieces. Nor has the British Museum yet passed up an opportunity to display its sublime Demeter of Knidos simply because the statue has neither a nose nor lips. Nor again is it imaginable that we in Brussels would shove our dear Manneken-Pis, just returned to us by some French infantrymen, into a storage cellar simply because its legs broke off when it was stolen in 1819. Do such defects make the Manneken-Pis, for instance, less interesting? One must, after all, admire the little guy's perseverance in uninterruptedly fulfilling his duties despite such debilitating injuries!

Or take as well, the Van Eyck brothers' Mystic Lamb, which famous altarpiece was recently returned to Belgium as an indemnity written into the Treaty of Versailles for the Germans' ransacking our country, and consider whether this masterpiece could be called perfect, or if, in other words, it hasn't seen better days. And yet it was still received in such a state with open arms. And who can fault such a reaction, considering the piece's long and storied history, as related in the Belgian Touring Club's 16th and 17th bulletins: originally commissioned by J. Veydt, burgomaster of Ghent, for the Church of St. Bavo, the Mystic Lamb was completed in March 1432 after ten years of work. In 1775, then Emperor Joseph II, in a fit of inexplicably excessive prudishness, hastily decided the two panels depicting Adam and Eve (in their birthday suits, naturally) should be sawn off and relegated to an attic where, according to Béranger, they was stored for 20 years (not 350 as others have stated). And so, these detached pieces remained in storage until 1816, when the Brussels Museum purchased them.

What all the moral fuss was about is hard to say. Certainly, what ought to have somewhat diminished the shocking simplicity of Adam's and Eve's attire was if the Adam's fig leaf hadn't been so large, if Eve's vine hadn't been in full bloom, and if Parisian department stores hadn't begun selling depictions of the pair in this state. In any event, though, the Van Eycks' depiction of our ancestors' respective ensembles is hardly scandalous; in fact, such dress would be adopted by many today if decency laws weren't as stringent as they presently are: seen in profile, Adam easily succeeds in maintaining his modesty, while Eve, more engrossed in serving him an apple, doesn't seem to notice what's going on below in the least. So everything in the painting is correct and natural, and at most, we might reproach the Van Eycks for having, in their ignorance, inaccurately gifted our earliest progenitors with belly buttons, ornaments absolutely reserved for their descendants, including Cain, Abel, Seth and the twin sisters Aclima and Lebuda. And this we might easily chalk up to the Van Eycks' inability to locate an accurate photograph of our prelapsarian parents.

As for the central portion of the altarpiece, to prove how highly they esteemed our art Belgium's French occupiers absconded with it in 1796 and exhibited it at the Louvre without its panels! Thus, it was only later, after the Napoleonic debacle came to a firm conclusion in 1815, that the Church of St. Bavo managed to obtain restitution in the matter - and, even then, the moment the centerpiece had been returned to Ghent, the church's ever-scandalized wardens set about selling it to an art dealer who resold it for 100,000 francs to an English collector, who in turn resold it for 400,000 francs to the King of Prussia in 1823. As a result, the altarpiece made a sensational splash at the Kaiser Friedrich Museum, where it remained a certain number of years before returning, finally, to its birthplace on the 2nd July 1920. Now reconstituted so it is once again whole, it has resumed its residence at the very same church in Ghent where it began its centuries-long adventure.

To be sure, my reason for recounting all this is that, if it were a stamp, contemporary philatelists would deem the Mystic Lamb of no value whatsoever because of all the tinkering and repairs it's undergone. This mentality is of little surprise, though, considering that one such "connoisseur" is so obsessed with appearances to the exclusion of all else that he once made the following asinine, sour-grapes assertion: Before you decide to buy anything inferior at a post office, make sure the margins are completely intact.

The insanity of this statement is that no post office on the planet offers stamps with the same margins they had when they were printed. Apparently, according to this fool, stamps printed separately should have margins of at least 2 to 3 centimetres and these should not be reduced by postal workers or couriers to, say, sell the rest of a sheet to those buying postage for practical use. Simply put, all stamps procured at an actual post office must inherently be mangled in his eyes!

The only logical conclusion I can personally draw from such impossible statements is that the best way to collect is to accept such material as we find it, without worrying about its condition. It is well-known, after all, that most numismatists are fond of their wallflowers. Or am I the only one to have never met a numismatist who will turn a piece out of his collection because a bit of its design is worn or it has seen too much use? Why should our practices be any different? Indeed, if a stamp has no value unless it is perfect and must only be collected when it is in an irreproachable state, we should also reject the following:

1. All stamps with errors, be they tête-bêche printings, irregularities, defects or spelling mistakes
2. All stamps with blurry or duplicate surcharges
3. All ugly stamps, including the Philippines' 1854 issues, New Caledonia's 1859 issues, various Colombian issues, etc., etc.
4. All the highly sought-after partial-perforation issues
5. All the absurd-looking stamps printed provisionally during and since the Great War
6. All stamps cut in half for lack of lower denominations
7. All obliterated stamps, since their obliteration renders them worthless as postage and therefore flawed

On the other hand, we philatelists might take a page from the hobby that gave rise to our own: in 1806, numismatists worldwide began appraising coins and medals according to their rarity, not according to their state as is now common practice among philatelists, and they arrived at a far more logical valuation system:

- C. Ordinary/common material
- R1. Uncommon material
- R2. Scarce and rare material
- R3. Nearly unique material
- R*. One-of-a-kind material.

Instituting a similar rating system for postage stamps would signal a sea-change from today's practices of judging a stamp by its margins, freshness, obliteration, paper, stitching, etc., etc. And, in my opinion, this would be a good thing, for we must not, after all, take after our friend Galimar, of whom Captain Belleville writes in the Timbre-Poste, numbers 18 to 20 (1860): Galimar, according to Captain Belleville, never got out of bed but would lie around all day, dreaming of possessing every stamp ever printed. Indeed, this state of affairs got so bad with Galimar that he even wished all the kings of the world would die so that he could achieve these ends more easily. But then, one day, he realized what his fancies actually portended: his only ambition in life was to have something others didn't and couldn't have. And viewing his sentiments for ugliness for what they truly were, he fell into despair and began wishing instead that he could liquidate his entire collection because it no longer interested him. The outcome of this little fable, however, was that before Galimar went through with selling his collection, his perspective changed and he found himself excited about collecting again. Consequently, what Belleville writes at the end of his tale should resonate with us today: As it turns out, Galimar didn't abandon philately after all, but instead turned his attention away from his amateurish dream of creating vast stamp mosaics. Instead, he began to study only those stamps that interested him. And so it was that he experienced a new-found pride in his collection, the pride of someone who doesn't value his stamps based on how much he might sell them for but on the enjoyment they bring him. For Galimar had discovered that there were already many beautiful, irreproachable stamps in his collection, stamps, he realized, that were each a unique piece of history, entirely different one from the next.

And thus it was that he became a far more serious collector than he had ever been before—a collector, that is, who disdained collecting mere images, preferring the methodical, rational approach of the true philatelist.

In conclusion, let me urge my fellow philatelists again to embrace those among us who might lack perfect stamps but who know how to make do, in the meantime, with imperfect stamps - who, that is to say, focus on the overall forest, rather than hamstringing themselves by obsessing over individual trees. The goal for any collector, after all, should be to complete a collection and occasionally improve it. And, as for those who do not share the views set down here, I would suggest they would do better to focus on collecting according to shade and colour, for in doing so they will likely find what they desire more easily and at lower cost, opening even broader horizons to them than they can, I would surmise, presently imagine.

Philippe de Ferrary & A. Maury

Correspondence

[Correspondance]

Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste, January 1866, Volume 3, Issue 1, pp.150-151

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

11th March 2017

CORRESPONDENCE

Dear Mr Editor,

I am astonished to see that you have published my article without sending me proofs of it ... Not only have you deleted the sentences concerning politics generally tolerated only in Austria, which in one sense I could understand, but in two sentences you have given it a character contrary to that which I had perhaps emphasized too strongly. You also changed a host of sentences in the body of the article and substituted your style for mine; yet I daresay that I know the French language as well as you ... etc. ...

Under these circumstances you should have signed your name ... and if you do not retract this article in your next edition, etc., etc. ...

Philippe de Ferrary.

Dear Mr Philippe de Ferrary,

I am the editor and owner of my little journal; I am responsible for the articles it contains, not only vis-à-vis censorship but also the public. Thus, I have the right to modify articles, when necessary, that I receive from young collectors not very accustomed to journalism. You forget, sir, that politics must remain completely outside the purview of my little paper and if it had been otherwise, I would have been careful to not publish the sentences that you find missing because they would not have been appreciated by the French and Italians and moreover, they are not consistent with history.

I have already received several requests like yours; my aim in publishing it is to answer all such requests past and future.

Yours, etc.

A. Maury

END

Special 175th Anniversary of the Birth of Doctor Thebussem
[Especial 175 Aniversario del Nacimiento del Doctor Thebussem]
Puerta del Sol, December 2003, Volume 3, Issue 8, ?pp.

Taken from the copy on the magazine's web site: www.revistapuertadelsol.com in 2014, which had no pagination.

CONTENTS

1. Cover page and Editorial. Doctor Thebussem. [Portada y Editorial: Doctor Thebussem.]
2. Yolanda Estefanía Aparicio:
Doctor Thebussem and the Post. [El Doctor Thebussem y el Correo.]
3. Ramón Pérez Montero:
The geniality of the eccentric. [La genialidad del excéntrico.]
4. José Amosa Utrera
My affection for books. [Mi afición a los libros.]
5. Jesus Romero Valiente
Doctor Thebussem's genealogical notes. [Las notas genealógicas del Doctor Thebussem.]
6. Jesús M.^a Armengol Butrón de Mújica
Doctor Thebussem writer on bullfighting. [El Doctor Thebussem escritor taurine.]
7. Back cover photograph. [Fotografía contraportada.]

Note: This information was required for a biography of Mariano Pardo de Figueroa [Dr. Thebussem] that I was preparing. It was too large to have formally translated in the time I had available and so I used Google Translate to give me something that I could work with to ensure that I had not missed anything substantive in my work. Rather than just bin my effort, I did my best to edit it and added it to my other philatelic translations just in case it might be useful to others in the future. (BJB)

Translation prepared by Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, France
November 2016

PUERTA DEL SOL
Medina Sidonia (Cadiz), Spain
December 2003, Volume 3, Issue 8

Cover illustration: Portrait of Don Mariano Pardo de Figueroa in 1860, the work of the Swiss painter Franz Buschen. This little-known image of Doctor Thebussem is located at the Royal Academy of History in Madrid. He sent it there after receiving complaints that he seldom frequented the institution: in this way, he would always be present at the Academy.

EDITORIAL: DOCTOR THEBUSSEM

“... the newspapers publish paragraphs, articles, obituaries and portraits of the deceased, and when he was insignificant as a visible person, they usually put his last name on the street where he lived ...”.

The above text is taken from one of Dr. Thebussem's writings, "Paper of Mourning," inserted in his book published in 1902 under the title Fourth Ration of Articles.

In a nutshell it comes to explain perfectly the treatment we give our featured characters once dead. Some, the most fortunate, who by their actions could be classified as illustrious, are still present in the memory of the people.

This is the case of our countryman, D. Mariano Pardo de Figueroa, better known as Doctor Thebussem, who, in addition to giving the pamphlet with his pseudonym "to the street where he lived", was placed a headstone on the front of his house, The same name was given to a public school and the theater-cinema that is next to it. An Asidonian cultural group that emerged in the 1980s and lived ephemerally, was named in its honor 'Thebussian Academy of Sciences, Letters, Arts and History', dedicating a series of acts to our distinguished person in the month of November 1984, one of them being the placement of a bust in his memory (which, by the way, would have to pay some attention to his cleaning and replacement of texts lost from the pedestal).

In the 'II Week of Medina Sidonia', organized by the Hon. Ayuntamiento in 1989, dedicated to the nineteenth century, was treated in one of the lectures on his life and his work; Which took full care of the 'XII Week of Medina Sidonia' in May 2001, giving some lectures on his life and his work and editing the book The Gold Box and other writings of Dr. Thebussem.

Outside of our municipal borders, in Vilanova i la Geltrú (Barcelona) there is the Library-Museum Víctor Balaguer, which has the legacy that D. Mariano did on gastronomic and bibliographic matters, a collection that is still being studied and disseminated; There are not many researchers of different subjects who are interested in his extensive work (we can see them even on the Internet); In the Postal Museum of Madrid occupies a prominent place; And, finally, in the Academy of History, also in the capital of the kingdom, are stored items, manuscripts and printed works of our author.

Now we dedicate a special issue of the magazine Puerta del Sol to various aspects related to it, without even intending to exhaust the subject. Asking him not to consider the statue, he will not complain about the treatment and memory that you keep, eh, Don Mariano!

Or if?

Perhaps, for example, it occurs to us that it would not seem wrong for the municipality to have in the library all of his works, acquiring some of his original books that may still be on sale in "old bookstores" Facsimiles of others or, simply beginning by requesting copies of volumes that other public institutions or private persons have; At the same time as obtaining a bibliography of other authors who have dealt with his life and his writings.

DOCTOR THEBUSSEM AND THE POST

Yolanda Estefanía Aparicio

Head of the Library of the Postal and Telegraph Museum of Madrid

This issue that the magazine Puerta del Sol dedicated to Mariano Pardo de Figueroa, better known as Doctor Thebussem, could not omit a reference to the figure of this person and his connection with the Post, of which he was named first Honorary Postman of The history of the Spanish mail.

Mariano Pardo de Figueroa was born on November 18, 1828 in Medina Sidonia (Cádiz) and died in the same town on February 11, 1918. Therefore, this year 2003 marks the 175th anniversary of his birth and the 85th anniversary of his Death, reasons why his hometown remembers him in a special way.

His biography is widely commented on in this issue of the journal, but as a summary and for giving two brushstrokes about this unique character it is worth noting that he was the author of more than 100 works of general character and countless newspaper articles. Gifted with a great sense of humour, cultured and affable, in 1854 obtained the degree of Doctor in Legal Sciences. The Count of the Navas, with whom Thebussem maintained a fluid correspondence and was the author of one of the biographies published on him, states that "at first he felt real enthusiasm for the practice of law ... but in a few years He decided to hang up the toga forever, gaining invincible animosity towards the lawsuits ... he was secluded in his library and can be said to have spent his whole life reading, studying and lettering with half the world of Spain and abroad. He knew French, English and Italian, which allowed him to correspond with people of different nationalities; Was a member of the Royal Spanish Academies and History and belonged to numerous national and international societies and institutions.

The link between Thebussem and the postal service was evident in the numerous writings published in the press at the end of the 19th century, in which he clearly and emphatically asked for improvements for staff and postal services. He also requested a new post office for the Madrid post office, located at Calle Carretas, and was an ardent supporter of the postal service, getting to the technicality of the service such as "battle table", "blind package", " Estafeta ", " faja "and many other words were included in the dictionary of the Real Academy.

Curiously, and in relation to philately, it should be noted that Dr. Thebussem was never a stamp collector, but he fought hard to get the Spanish stamps to have a technical and artistic quality comparable to those of the most advanced countries. He was the author of the first book on Philately in Spain and signed the first section on this subject published in El Averiguador, newspaper of general information. He also had an outstanding performance in philately by circulating his own postcard in May 1873, according to the requirements set by the authority, thus advancing in several months to the issuance of official cards that would make the Government itself on 1 December 1873.

HONORARY PORTFOLIO

Mariano Pardo de Figueroa was named the first Honorary Postman of the Spanish Post Office, wearing uniform and without salary, on March 20, 1880 as rewards for his "remarkable work related to various matters of the post office", among which his Collaboration in the publication of the Annals of Ordinances of Post in Spain. This work, made up of six volumes, was published at the end of the 19th century on the orders of Gregorio Cruzada Villaamil, General Director of Post and Telegraph, and collects all the regulations on mail from 1283 to 1889.

As an Honorary Postman and to make use of the franchise that corresponded to him, Doctor Thebussem was granted five stamps of postal franchise. In four of them he wrote the word "postman" with the abbreviation "KRTR", showing off his deceptions and his good humour.

Subsequently, four other names have been added to the list of Honorary Postmen; A title that is only granted to persons who, without being postal officials, have defended and honoured the postal institution at some point in their career. The main prerogative consists of being able to send the correspondence without need of postage and stamping a special mark in which the title of Honorary Postman appears. These four names are: Rafael Álvarez Sereix, named in 1893; Camilo José Cela, in 1982; Ramón Carande, in 1985 and Antonio Mingote, in 1998.

LEGACY TO THE POSTAL MUSEUM

In 1920, the Postal and Telegraphic Museum received the legacy of Doctor Thebussem, which allowed to increase considerably its funds with unique objects and documents of great interest to the students of the mail. The donation was made by his nephew Salvador Hidalgo Pardo de Figueroa, Marquis de Negrón. The legacy consists of 39 volumes of Various-Post Papers, containing a total of 724 documents, as well as personal items such as the Academic History Medal, the Honorary Postman uniform, the office desk folder, a Bronze bust of Thebussem by the sculptor Macías and the five franchise stamps stamped in violet on paper of various colours.

The Various-Post Papers collect the specialized part in mail and philately and are part of the collection that, with the same title and express wish of the testator, was delivered to the Library-Museum Balaguer, Villanueva and Geltrú (Barcelona). All the material was collected and bound by the own Doctor Thebussem and constitutes documentation of great interest and curiosity.

Among these documents are publicity pamphlets, Christmas greetings cards for postmen, photographs, newspaper articles of the time, opposition manuals for entry to the Post Office, and so on. Regrettably it should be noted that Volume XV disappeared in 1988. All this material has been cataloged computerized by the Library of the Postal Museum and is available to researchers and scholars.

BIBLIOGRAPHY:

- BULLETIN of the Iberoamerican Academy and Philippine Postal History. No 146/149 extraordinary, (1984).
- BULLETIN of the Iberoamerican Academy and Philippine Postal History. No. 150/152 Extraordinary, (1985).
- FRANCÉS, José. "Evocation of Doctor Thebussem" / speech Posted in: Bulletin of the Iberoamerican Academy of Postal History, No. 1 (January 1945).
- LOPEZ-VALDEMORO AND OF QUESADA, Juan Gualberto, Count of the Navas. Doctor Thebussem. Madrid, 1928.
- MONNER SANS, R. The Doctor Thebussem: (D. Mariano Pardo de Figueroa): biographical notes and critical notes. Buenos Aires, 1918.
- VARIOUS-CORREOS PAPERS, collection of documents in 38 vol. Formed by Mariano Pardo de Figueroa (Legacy of Dr. Thebussem).
- RUIZ COBOS, Andrés. Doctor Thebussem: critical-biographical study. Madrid, 1890.
- TARILONTE, Irenaeus. "Honorary mailmen". Revista Correo Postal y Telegráfico, no. 10 December, 1989.
- TARILONTE, Irenaeus. Doctor Thebussem, his legacy and philatelic work, 1828-1918. Philatelic document of the National Exhibition of Philatelic Literature. September 10 to October 1, 1993. National Library. Madrid.
- THEBUSSEM, Doctor. Appointment of Principal Postman Honorary of Madrid: with uniform use and without salary. Madrid, 1880.
- TOMÁS ESPINOSA, Manuel. "Doctor Thebussem, extraordinary personage of century XIX, multifaceted writer and first honorary mailman of Spain": speech pronounced in the Association. Madrid, 1983.

- UHAGÓN Y GUARDAMINO, Francisco Rafael, Marqués de Laurencín. Doctor Thebussem: memories and intimacies. Madrid, 1917.

Description of the images:

- (1) Bronze bust of Doctor Thebussem in the Postal Museum, by the sculptor Macías.
- (2) Collection of 39 volumes of Various-Post Papers, donated in 1920 to the Postal and Telegraphic Museum (Madrid).
- (3) Honorary Postman franchise marks used by Doctor Thebussem (1880 for Madrid, 1881 for Havana, 1882 for Spain and his Indies, 1882 honorary postman of Spain and last seal of Franchise granted in October 1890).
- (4) Uniform of honorary postman exhibited at the Postal Museum.
- (5) Personal objects of Thebussem donated to the Postal and Telegraph Museum of Madrid, which are located in the Thebussem Hall: Corresponding member of the Royal Academy of Spanish Language and gala uniform, tie bow tie; Sword and medal of the Royal Academy of History.
- (6) Philatelic document in tribute to Dr. Thebussem
- (7) Stamp published on October 12, 1944 for airmail, honoring Dr. Thebussem on the Day of the Seal and Feast of Hispanity, with a circulation of 100,000 copies.
- (8) On November 30, 1981, Block Sheet dedicated to the Postal Museum was issued, with 4 values and motives; The last one honors the legacy of Doctor Thebussem.

THE GENIALITY OF THE ECCENTRIC

Ramón Pérez Montero

I close my eyes and try to imagine Don Mariano. I see the bearded, scrawny fellow who barely gives for the bronze model of his future statue. I see him walking with his hands behind his back in the streets of the town, serene and aristocratic, at those times when, so early, one does not stumble upon people on the sidewalks. I see in him the strange man who shuns the people as much as possible and who prefers to be locked up all day, devoting himself, an artist in his marble tower, to see how life passes from below the high balcony of his house.

Don Mariano must be the methodical man who has everything in his place and every hour of the day destined to his specific task: the disciplined descent of the bed with the first lights, quietly taking breakfast, reading the book with greed The daily rite of the lunch, the sacred time of the siesta in the old rocking chair, the moments of social gathering with the friends of his sisters in front of the clink of the coffee cups, the frugality of the Dinner, the last review of the pages before getting in, tightly fitting the sleeping cap, very early again in bed.

Some mornings, especially in summer, almost with the roosters, approaches the family garden. I close my eyes and I'm already watching him walk down the Christ Street in search of the cemetery, doing the same route of burials, from Victory to the last dwelling. Then twist through the narrow, steep hijuela of loose stones and reach the garden of the Cicada. He has a leather folder under his arm. Inside it blank sheets that will scribble in the shade of the vineyard, in front of the entrance of the sober country house. That is if the playful Levante does not end up pulling them out of their hands. Don Mariano, page by page, perhaps without fully realizing it, is dedicated in body and soul to the task of building himself.

Now he must walk on the fifty. It is known in full human and literary maturity. At this time, just entering the third quarter of the nineteenth, Flaubert has already written Sentimental Education and Zola has given life to his Germinal. Also Tolstoi has already given the world his Ana Karenina. Dostoyevsky may not have put the finishing touches to the Karamazov brothers. Galdós, a few years ago, has given Fortunata and Jacinta the printing press. And Clarín almost at the same time has done the same with La Regenta. While the great feathers of European realism are devoting themselves to the enormous task of making novels of eight hundred, nine hundred, a thousand pages, Don Mariano, in this humble corner of the world, is content to complete strings of articles that barely manage to overcome costumbrismo. Of those romantic times. He does not care. The main thing is to keep writing to yourself.

Already people have begun to believe him that every spring sends to white not his own, but the front of the neighbor in front because it is the one that his eyes contemplate from his house. He has already run the species that when he takes to the street he removes the wooden block from the glass urn placed for that purpose on the marble mantel of the hall, and that when he returns he puts it back inside so that they know what Those who come to visit. Don Mariano has already created fame of a curious character, 'manioso', something eccentric. But the only thing that interests him is to take life among his pages, which, more than a century later, we can say that he is still alive.

Yes, Don Mariano continues to breathe today in a prose as elegant and neat as its owner, exquisitely respectful with the norms of that Castilian who, when the occasion arrives, knows how to carry the filigree. Always a disciplined and measured prose that, while being sparkling, is entertained in the gastronomic trifle, in the philatelic curiosity, in the postal nimity, in a certain passage of Don Quixote, in historical extravagance, in the most trivial of anecdotes. And all this with the clean humor of a mocking spirit that when the circumstance allows, is ready to give us, cervantinamente, cat for hare. Don Mariano, concealed behind this pseudonym of false Germanic resonances but eloquent, always at any time unaware of any social concern, is pleased to deceive the reader with a sort of epistolary literature in which he seems so deceptive in most of the Occasions the recipient of the missive as delusional the sender.

And it is right there where in my opinion our man is right. Not only to endow their interlocutors with the attributes of the literary characters but above all to create himself as the protagonist, if he wants antagonism, his peculiar exchanges. It is right there, because of the miraculous act of the intelligent management of language, where the man who speaks and thinks, polemizes, is passionate, informs, replies or advises, and who manifests for this reason paradoxes of art, authentic being of Ink and letters, as a real man. It was right there the genius of the eccentric who was able to fill the hollow shell of the quirky character with life.

I close my eyes and see Don Mariano in his robe, sitting at his desk. Wet the pen in his inkwell, write his last sentence and put the end point to his work. He stands up satisfied and heads for the mahogany frame mirror hanging on the wall. From the bottom of quicksilver, while the knot of his tie is tightened, Dr. Thebussem smiles at him.

MY AFFECTION FOR BOOKS

José Amosa Utrera

In the last years of the eighties of the last century XX, I had the opportunity to meet several times with D. José Amosa. The reason was to gather some information about the city, from someone who had evidence that could help me in the study of the nomenclatures of the streets of Medina Sidonia that I was performing at that time; Not only because of the great amount of data he treasured, given the advanced age he had at that time but, above all, because he had long been an official of the City Council, exercising various positions such as that of accidental Secretary, which allowed him to approach more than once the sources of our magnificent Municipal Archive. He also provided me with some photographs of the population made by him in the sixties, which I used in the book El Callejero de Medina Sidonia to be published in 1992.

In one of these meetings I was able to know that Don José had met Doctor Thebussem, and seeing my interest in this fact, he gave me a manuscript in which he had taken care to collect his memories and aspects about the biography of our distinguished personage.

It reproduces the part of the text referred to, mainly, to the years lived by Amosa next to Doctor Thebussem and the influence that exerted on him, since I understand that it is the most interesting and original, for the unpublished, of this manuscript. Finally, to say that I have limited myself to transcribing, with the exception of some formal corrections that the typewriter did not allow to realize to the own author. (Salvador Montañés Caballero)

MY AFFECTION FOR BOOKS

José Amosa Utrera

In the first years of my life - up to eleven - I lived with MARIANO PARDO DE FIGUEROA Y SERNA (DOCTOR THEBUSSEM), at No. 2 of the then called Tapia street, which later took his name, that is, that of his famous Pseudonym, and in whose domicile my father was the Butler of such an outstanding polygraph and outstanding Cervantes student; and almost constantly, in the moments when his pen rested, was pleased by my childish company; Probably because of that singular affection that is had to the minors, by which, in an old age, rested and friendly, they enjoy having them at their side.

This circumstance took me many times and with my natural joy, to accompany him to his impressive Library, before which my incipient admiration was surprisingly dazzled by the multitude of books, perfectly ordered and I could hardly understand why They were there. Then, as the passage of time caused me to reason, I realized that it had been the source of knowledge that the talent of Doctor Thebussem treasured and allowed him to be one of the most prolific and multifaceted writers of the nineteenth century, known in all fields of the literary world, although the editions of his books were very small, and that he dedicated and gave to his friends in the knowledge, among them Zorrilla, Castro and Serrano, Juan Valera, Gaspar Núñez de Arce, Francisco Silvera, Francisco Romero Robledo, Rodríguez Marín, Menéndez Pelayo, Fernández Guerra, Hartzenbusch, Muñoz Pavón, etc.

An exception was in the books of his books, and that by curious and original I want to leave it here, Fruslerías Postal, which he wrote as an addition to the title Un pliego de Letras, published in 1891. The print, breaking his tradition, Was at the expense of his heirs, of 1,110 copies, distributing them as follows:

- To the postmen of Madrid so that you can sell or use them as best you want 1,000

- Intended for libraries, newspapers and friends of the author 100
- Available for sale in Madrid (Librería de Fe) at the price of 10 Ptas. a copy, so that no one buys them 10

TOTAL 1,110

One of the entertainments I liked most was when, in the library, the Doctor was engaged in ordering and binding the numerous correspondence of the friendly writers of whom I have just mentioned, since he was a skilled bookbinder; Letters that, in volumes, were then chronologically stored in a special shelf for this purpose, located behind the armchair that always used when it remained in that place. Likewise, I did not dislike (as was natural) the copper coins that I kept in a tin container and that he used to give me some of them on frequent occasions, to buy candy.

DON MARIANO, JOSE MARÍA, ODON OF THE HOLY TRINITY, PARDO DE FIGUEROA AND DE LA SERNA, was born in Medina Sidonia on November 18, 1828, the legitimate first-born son of Don José María Pardo de Figueroa Manso de Andrade and Dona Maria Luisa de la Serna y Pareja. He was baptized the same day of his birth, his godfather Don Francisco de Paula de la Serna and Montes de Oca, maternal grandfather, and witnesses of the solemn act Don José María Butrón, retired naval lieutenant of the Royal Navy and Don Pedro Jiménez Cote, retired Infantry Colonel.

In his long life he dedicated himself to writing on subjects of Administration, archeology, biography, hunting, Cervantes, commerce, mail, customs, tales, challenges, fables, philately, philology, gastronomy, genealogy, grammar, treasury, heraldry, history, printing, Hieroglyphs, jurisprudence, lexicography, fishing, politics, sigilography, bullfighting and theater. Dr. Thebussem, was considered an outstanding Cervantes student and deserves special mention, for his Droapian Epistles, to which he dedicated eight years of intense work.

Although I have already recorded themes that characterized his extensive literary production, since some of his biographers estimate that he wrote eighty-one books, I will mention some of their titles: Rations of articles, which consist of five volumes that were published in the years 1892, 1894, 1898, 1902 and 1907 (the one that coincided with the one of my birth), Kpankala, Modern Table, Doña Blanca de Borbón, Philatelic Literature, Renaissance of the Right, A sad capoe, Bibliographical Notes, Appendix to the same, Chascarrillos Andalusian, Garlic branch, Folder of Letters, Fruslerías Postcards and Genealogical notes that to take the Habit of Santiago, presented Don Mariano, Don Francisco and Don Rafael Pardo de Figueroa Serna Manso de Andrade and Pareja. In relation to this last writing, to say that the act of taking the Habit of Santiago took place in the Parish of the same name of Medina Sidonia, on January 13, 1889. Don Mariano, after crossing Caballero, successively armed his brothers And then the three knights embraced their father, venerable nonagenarian.

As it has been said, Dr. Thebussem had three brothers, D. Francisco, D. Rafael and D. José Emilio, all of them marine (the last one died in Cavite, Manila, Philippines). He also had a sister, named Doña Josefa, who was also fond of letters and the exercise of charity, which Castro and Serrano portrayed with the following phrase: "This Parda is worth more than all pardos, although these are not lame."

Don Mariano, who immortalized in the Republic of Letters the pseudonym of DOCTOR THEBUSSEM, died in his native city on February 11, 1918, at seventeen hours, when that prodigious brain paralyzed with his heart, 89 years old; As a consequence, according to the facultative part, of senile weakness. When the sad news became known, the house where the Doctor was filled with people from all walks of life, to express his feeling of regret for the death of such an illustrious personage who was always loved, respected and admired by all.

I, who, for my few years, constantly walked all the premises of the building with the uneasiness that the sad event and that crowd produced me, I went to his bedroom, where the corpse was, who seemed to be looking at the picture of the Dolorosa with his Dagger of silver piercing his heart. This, together with the tombstone containing the visigothic epitaph to Servanda that was placed in the courtyard and the Morrion of Fermoselle, were the three antiquities that Don Mariano, on several occasions, had made me known and which constituted a very treasured treasure.

Also, a little later, I passed the room where the still-discovered coffin had been placed, in which lay the corpse dressed in his silver-embroidered uniform, with which the Chiefs and Post Officers had been given him when he was named Honorary Postman of Spain and the Indies; That appeared covered with the habit of Knight of Santiago, and touched with the birefring of the same Order.

The funeral took place the following day 12, constituting an impressive manifestation of sorrow, appearing in the funeral procession all the Venerable Clergy, with raised Cross and several banners. Behind the coffin were, in addition to their families, the people who were or were members of the Municipal Corporation, preceded by the Maceros and Clarinero; Which took turns in the municipal government in the different electoral processes, some as members of the Conservative party and others of the Liberal, who were the political nuclei that prevailed at that time, and that in the act of burial they wore a frock coat and shiny top hats ; Behind, the immense crowd that wanted to pay his last tribute to the pre-assertive Asidonense or Medinese, a gentilicio who liked to use the deceased more.

When my father found himself among those attending the funeral, I used his absence and, mixed among the children, accompanied the corpse to the Catholic Cemetery where a tombstone was placed a day before, covering a niche, which read " Of Mariano Pardo de Figueroa, "for, not long before his death, he had acquired not only that place, but also, in a warehouse in his home, whose floor was, indeed, covered with zinc, Kept what should be his coffin and also the candlesticks and candles that should have been lit the hours that, after his death, remained in his home.

Shortly before this sad event occurred, the magazine "Coleccionismo" organized a national tribute to Doctor Thebussem, coining with this reason commemorative medals, of which I own a silver and a bronze one, and whose homage was not celebrated for the cause Exposed.

His memoir was also honored in 1968 by the "Lope de Vega" Cultural Association of Barcelona, celebrating the 50th anniversary of his death, with a stamp exhibition on 6, 7 and 8 April, authorized by the Dirección General del Ramon a special cancellation for Medina Sidonia with the effigy of Thebussem.

In the house where he lived until his death was placed a tombstone, in which appears in its upper right corner the Cross of Santiago in red, and in black characters the following inscription: "HOUSE OF ADDRESS OF THE EXCELLENCY D. MARIANO PARDO OF FIGUEROA, KNIGHT OF THE HABIT OF SANTIAGO WHO KNEW GLORIOUS IN THE REPUBLIC OF THE LETTERS THE NUDE << DOCTOR THEBUSSEM >> IN HER LIFE WAS BETTER ON FEBRUARY 11 OF THE YEAR OF OUR HEALTH OF 1918. LAUS DEO " .

In addition to Knight of the Habit of Santiago, Doctor Thebussem was Correspondent of the Royal Academies Spanish and of History, belonged to the Historical Society of Utrecht, to the Archaeological Institute of Rome, to the Real Academy of Good Letters, to the Societies of Gastronomy And Philatelic of London, being also President of "The Culinary Art of Madrid".

Don Lorenzo Domínguez Pascual, a few days after being appointed Minister, granted him the Great Cross of Alfonso XII for his extraordinary merits. It did not take much work for the family that the Doctor accepted the Violet Band. The modesty and detachment of man so original, in everything were proverbial.

In his last years he used to go to the Church of Victory, near his house, to hear Holy Mass; Also sometimes went to the Casino located on Calle San Juan, to meet in a gathering with friends or play a game of triplet.

Interested in knowing the news that was produced in the world, not allowing his sight tired reading of the press, gave occupation to a reader named Manuel Sánchez Moreno, who daily made him aware of how much the newspapers published.

Various writers have narrated the many world-known Dr. Thebussem's originalities, but as a sample button I want to refer to two of them:

He owned an orchard that he called "Castillo de la Huerta Cigarra", a castle that never existed and where he dated many of his writings, and some say he never stepped on the garden. He used to write his letters a letterhead in him that contained the imaginary Castle with its two turrets and port ogival; At other times he used for this purpose a role with the Cross of Santiago, as Knight who was of the Order.

As the strong wind of the Levant prevailed in Medina, he placed in one of the locks of his house a small curtain of red, from which hung several cobra-ones, which with the force of Eolo sounded constantly, and it was the faithful warning that no It was possible to go out into the street and, consequently, it would not be possible for him to go to the Casino to meet with his friends.

Lately, on November 18, a monument was discovered in the Plaza de la Cruz, which, after a legend alluding to the honoree, is crowned by the bronze bust of such a prelate son of our City. The Honor Committee of this new tribute and the exhibition "Legacy of Doctor Thebussem", as well as the various conferences and meetings of the Philatelic Societies of our province, was composed of the President of the Junta de Andalucía, the General Captain of the The Maritime Governor of Cadiz, the General Director of Posts and Telecommunications, the President of the Cadiz Provincial Council, the Mayor of Medina and Luis Martel Hidalgo.

After what I had noted, the constant and affectionate contacts that I had the good fortune to have with Dr. Thebussem, almost all of them in the Library for much of the day, and although with the danger that he represented for his advanced age, Rolling down the stairs (the Library was on the ground floor of the house); As it happened on one occasion, and for my few years I could not only help him (he was tall and thin), having to put all those in the house on the occasion: my father, Nicolasa, the cook, and Maria Josefa, the body of the house, to come to their aid, although luckily nothing happened to her.

These contacts were the fertile seed for me to begin to estimate and consider an incipient fondness for books, despite my young age, in which I almost could not read, but then in the course of time to be by his side, I was inculcating what later became my great hobby, and that allowed me throughout my youth, gradually compiling books until I got a modest Library, where I have the complete works of Cervantes, Francisco de Quevedo, Lope de Vega, Duque de Rivas, Santa Teresa de Jesús, Miguel de Unamuno, Baltasar Gracián, Alejandro Casona, Benito Pérez Galdós, Vicente Blasco Ibáñez, Amado Nervo, José María de Pereda, Armando Palacio Valdés and Federico García Lorca; And among the foreigners, those of William Shakespeare and Molière; There are also twenty-two volumes of Spanish Theater, nineteen of the Dictionaries Salvat, Monitor and Amaya; Four of Spring and Flower of Hispanic Literature, six of the History of Spain of the Marquis of Lozoya, nine of the History of Art, three of Natural History, two of the Spanish Heterodox, two of the Second Vatican Council, Critical Version of the Sacred Bover and Quarry Bible, Life of Jesus Christ by Giuseppe Ricciotti, Paintings of Madrid by Bernardino de Pantorba, Breviary of the History of Humanity by José Píojan, Boccaccio's Decameron, History of the French Revolution by A. de Lamartine, The Devil by G. Papini, Extraordinary Journeys of Jules Verne, Rhymes and Legends of Bécquer and Acotaciones by a Listener by Wenceslao Fernández Flores. Among other twelve volumes of the Great Encyclopedia of Health and one of Medicine for all.

In addition to the titles I mentioned, I keep numerous volumes that might make your reference monotonous, but I do not want to forget the title "MIL BOOKS" authored by Luis Nueda, with its 1,868 pages to two columns, which are collected from extracts from works by 347 authors dealing with Sciences, Philosophy, Religion, Literature, Essays, Novels and Theater, which I like to reread from time to time.

For the many years of pleasant drunkenness that the reading has given me, I undoubtedly have a tenuous layer of cultural varnish, which although slight, I have been trying to keep in the course of all my activities.

In relation to all that I have just stated, I had the desire to make some "pinitos" in the Diario de Cádiz and in the Union of Seville, of which I was correspondent for several years and in which, besides the news of Our locality, allowed me from time to time to write an article about events or outstanding events, all of which can be checked in the newspapers of both newspapers.

This enthusiasm was not enough for me to collaborate in the press, but I dared for several years to direct the brochure that on the occasion of the Fair and Festivals of Medina Sidonia distributed the City Council and in which brilliantly collaborated Tomás Gómez Cárdenas, Enrique Hormigo Sánchez, Emilio Corbacho Pérez de Alba, Miguel Rodríguez Pantoja, Jesús M^a Butrón de Mújica and Ruiz, the extraordinary poet and rapsoda Isidro Gómez García; Although some of those mentioned also cultivated the poetry, in relation to the natural charms of Medina. Among my articles published in the Reference Booklet I recall the following: "Medina Sidonia in the absence and memory", "Five illustrious sons of Medina Sidonia (Villavicencio, Montes de Oca, Doctor Thebussem, Sánchez Moguel and Admiral Cervera) "" The Castle of Medina Sidonia ", " The Doctor Thebussem ", " The Municipal Shield of Medina Sidonia ", " Notes of the Fair ", " Farewell to the watermen ", " Livestock and Farming"; And some others who signed X; As well as those entitled "100 years ago," in which he recounted annually in the reference booklet the events that occurred in the previous century.

DOCTOR THEBUSSEM'S GENEALOGICAL NOTES

Jesus Romero Valiente

In 1889 Mariano Pardo de Figueroa published in the printing press that he had ordered installed in his own house Genealogical Notes that to take the Habit of Santiago, presented Don Mariano, Don Francisco and Don Rafael Pardo de Figueroa, natives of Medina Sidonia. In this work were contained the genealogical data of his family, which he had assembled in order to prove his hidalguía and legitimacy of birth before the Order of Santiago, in which he had just entered as a gentleman along with his brothers.

In 1888, when they approached sixty years of age, Don Mariano Pardo de Figueroa and his brothers Francisco de Paula and Rafael, both prestigious sailors, had applied to join the Order of Santiago. It was a good way to give lustre to some surnames whose nobility clearly evidenced a multitude of documents contained in archives, known merits and irreproachable conduct throughout generations. It was not, according to the preamble of the Genealogical Notes ... written by Dr. Thebussem with the approval of his brothers, of a simple vainglory, but of the conspicuous merit of some gentlemen who had known how to be faithful to what was Expected of his lineage:

The brothers Pardo de Figueroa, who had achieved great prestige in their respective professions, had several reasons to decide to request the honour of being received as knights in the Order of Santiago. On the one hand, some of the most notable ancestors of the various branches of the family had worn the habit of this order of chivalry. According to the Index of tests ... of the Order, written by Vicente Vignau and Francisco R. de Uhagón, the Knights of Santiago were the Asidonenses: José Pareja y Garcés (year 1677), Gaspar Herrera y León (1682), Luis de Parejo And Jiménez (1703), Alonso de Pareja y Novela (1774) and Fernando de Pareja y Pareja (1862), in addition to our three brothers. On the other hand, the Pardo de Figueroa came from Galicia, the land of the Apostle, so linked to the Order from its birth. In Medina Sidonia, at last, there was a tradition that the apostle James himself had appeared in the meadow of the hermitage of the Holy Martyrs "giving battle to the Moors in defence of the inhabitants of this land." The image of Santiago Matamoros had remained on the shield of the city and the Holy Apostle had become its patron.

The history of the Order of Santiago is more than known, and there is a specialized bibliography about it. However, it may be interesting to make a small sketch about it to understand the value that was attached to membership in this institute at the end of the nineteenth century, and to remember some of its rules and ceremonies, which will allow us to understand in its right measure the Proceed from our three suitors knights.

We have testimonies of the existence of an ancient brotherhood, formed by thirteen knights - in memory of Jesus Christ and his apostles - under the patronage of the Patron of Spain, whose purpose was to defend the pilgrims who came to Compostela. It was instituted, apparently, following the victory of King Ramiro I in the Battle of Clavijo (846) and dissolved shortly thereafter. The Military Order resurfaced around 1170 on the occasion of the agreements that put an end to the clashes between the Castro and Lara families, who pledged, from now on, to wage war against the infidel and in defense of the Holy Church of Jesus Christ, A cross on his breasts like a sword. At first, these crusaders were called "Freiles de Cáceres", the first city possessed by the knights under a donation of Fernando II of Leon. But Caceres soon returned to the Moors. The Order was soon linked to the archbishopric of Santiago de Compostela by receiving, among other privileges, the Compostela income derived from the so-called "Santiago Vote". Therefore it changed its name and was called from 1171 Order of Santiago. The papal approval of Pope Alexander III dates from 1175, when he issued a bull stating the obligations of the knights and the prerogatives obtained.

The Order was spread rapidly by the peninsular Christian kingdoms and distinguished itself from the other orders by its hospitable character, for its knights lent aid to the pilgrims who, from all over Europe, were approaching the tomb of the Apostle. The brotherhood was ruled by a master and a major commander, and among its members some had received sacred orders, some were monks, and most were secular. In their statutes, derived from the papal bull, they were compelled not to fight against Christians or to do harm to their property, to renounce worldly pleasures and to live according to the Commandments, to be faithful to the king and to the master of the Order. They had daily mass and prayer; On Sundays, communion; And fasted Lent. They were to feed the poor, serving as their servants once a year. During Lent, when they fasted, they would not be with their wives. At the most delicate point of his statutes, marriage was permitted. Punishments were applied according to the gravity of the offenses committed, being able to incur them by boasting of the nobility of their lineage despising the others, for hurting the woman herself, for killing or maiming any member, for disobeying the Order, for contradicting To the master, etc. Among his privileges were exemption from royal jurisdiction, exemption from the jurisdiction of the secular clergy and direct submission to the Holy See.

The Knights of Santiago wore a uniform habit. The insignia of the Order stood out above the crude tunic of arms, a cross shaped like a sword and topped with lily flowers on the hilt and arms, crimson red. The cloak was the same color as the robe. If it was a closed layer, it would take two small crosses, one on the right side of the chest and the other on the left arm; The open cloak would carry only a small cross over the left arm.

The Order of Santiago established its centre, by concession of the king Alfonso VII (1174), in the town of Uclés, and from there extended its properties by lands of the Mancha (Ciudad Real, Toledo, Cuenca). During the process of the "Reconquista" the Order was becoming strong. His master, chosen by the thirteen, was invested with great powers. His commanders administered ample possessions, and his knights came from their castles or convents to the first call to fight against the enemy. They were the vanguard of the Christian armies against the Moors. The history of the Order is marked by glorious acts of arms, in which not only the nobles took part, but the militias of the cities incorporated to Santiago. It was a time of continuous struggles in which the santiaguistas always found themselves in the front line.

The Catholic Kings linked the Order to the Castilian Crown in 1493, in favor of Ferdinand V (the Catholic), and this incorporation was recognized by Pope Adriano VI in 1523. Since then the Spanish kings have held the dignity of masters of the Order from Santiago.

During the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, when the military sense of Orders disappears, these institutions are dedicated to exploit their extensive patrimony and constitute a sign of social identity and nobiliary for the holders of their coveted habits. Habits that, by the way, will be simplified, although the cross embroidered on the chest will be incorporated into the usual dress of the knights.

In the nineteenth century the prerogatives obtained by the military orders in the previous centuries are gradually disappearing. The Cortes of Cadiz decreed in 1813 that the State should serve, among others, the revenues of the encomiendas and maestrazgos of the military orders to satisfy the public debt. In 1820 proclaimed the abolition of their jurisdiction over the territories that belonged to them. This seizure of property follows the abolition of its privileges and exemptions, and that of the military orders, first in 1836 (Royal Decree of March 8) and then, after the proclamation of the First Republic (undertaken by Emilio Castelar at Assume the state portfolio).

With the restoration of the monarchy, Alfonso XII assumed the status of Grand Master of Orders in an attempt to revitalize his prestige. The Holy See appointed a prior of them⁶, a bishop, wanting to recall the character of religious fraternities with which military orders had arisen during the Reconquest. In the ceremonies of this period, the knights' clothing and habits achieved an unrivaled sumptuousness, far removed from the primitive spirit of uniformity. However, obtaining the title of Knight was no more than an honorific distinction within the nobility.

The rules of the Order of Santiago demanded that the pretenders to be part of the Cavalry were examined before taking the habit and professing it. The information process, or "probanzas", was intended to clarify the hidalguía "to the jurisdiction and custom of Spain" of the four surnames of the candidates, to show that they did not come from Jews or Moors, to show that neither their parents nor their grandparents had Exercised offices of the considered mechanical or vile ... Once got the acceptance of the candidacy, the so-called "mercy of habit," began, therefore, a process of examination⁷.

At this point, the Council of Orders chose other members of the Order as examiners (at least this was so in the Primitive Rules, ⁸ although we shall see that in the nineteenth century things had changed in this respect). Informants could not be excused from this obligation, except force majeure. It was to certify in files and protocols the veracity of the data provided by the suitor, to investigate in places and to require of different people answers to precise questionnaires. The expenses of travel and maintenance caused by the process were paid for by the suitor; And no information could be made "without and to the land where the knight was natural, even if he were a stranger to these kingdoms."

In the middle of 1888 Doctor Thebussem wrote a letter to his friend the Marquis de Laurencín, Francisco Rafael de Uhagón, knight of Calatrava, notifying him of his desire, and that of his brothers, to enter the Order of Santiago. He asked her to take charge of the information process and to initiate the necessary procedures. It enclosed a series of papers and the itinerary to follow in that process. "No one like you," he said, "has to do our trials-not with so much affection, with more activity, or with more skill." Probably the remitted papers were no more than a draft of the future Genealogical Notes ... Well, as Thebussem says in the preamble of the book: "In order to excuse, as far as possible, difficulties and inconveniences to the infor- Had to practice the tests for our entry into the Order of Santiago, we gathered the data that seemed necessary to believe hidalguía and legitimacy of birth.

Don Francisco Rafael de Uhagón and Guardamino¹¹, who will later dedicate the Genealogical Notes ..., was a great friend of Doctor Thebussem¹². With him "shared" seat in the Royal Academy of History¹³ and in the Sevillian Academy of Good Letters, although the Asidonense was not much given to attend the meetings of these institutes. In fact, we know from the Marquis that Thebussem rarely visited Madrid, because he enjoyed more caring for his father and the life he had in Medina. Don Francisco de Uhagón tells us that the proverbial Assidanian had a portrait he had painted in 1860, when he returned from the campaign of Africa, the Swiss painter Franz Buschen. Well, to avoid attending meetings and conferences, Thebussem had given it to the Royal Academy of History through Don Aureliano Fernández Guerra. So at least they could count on his effigy.

The marquis's errands had a quick effect. The favors of habit in favor of Francisco and Rafael Pardo de Figueroa are dated in Palace to 10 of October of 1888; Don Mariano had to wait until the 31st day of the same month and year to obtain it. I am ready to please his illustrious friend, Don Francisco de Uhagón also hastened the process in his Order of Calatrava "to be appointed informer in the process of tests to be carried out to ascertain whether the qualities which the Establishments and the Rule of Saint James were asking for That <the suitor> was armed Caballero¹⁴. Soon, he began his journey.

In Cordoba he joined his acting partner, Don Rafael Fernandez de Padilla, knight of Santiago, and together they went to Seville to start the file. The investigation took them by archives of Madrid, Bollullos of the County, Arcos of the Border, the Port of Santa Maria and Cadiz. But it had to end in Medina Sidonia, of course. The Marquis, invited with Don Rafael Fernandez to spend a few days in the house of the Pardo de Figueroa, was anxious to meet his friend to congratulate each other on the success of his researches: "With what impatience and eagerness, I will say more, with which religious Unction, scanned the horizon in search of the crenellated silhouette and the square towers of the Huerta de Cigarra, famous already in our country, and known by the engraving with which the Castilian Doctor wrote.

In 1917, when the National Homage to Thebussem, which would die a year later, was prepared by the Organizing Board of the event, the Marques de Laurencín was entrusted with a report that served as a testimony to the merits, virtues and works of the honoree. The writing, entitled "The Doctor Thebussem. Memories and Intimacies ", is a very friendly compliment and a true" pearl "for those interested in the biography of the Asidonian scholar. The Marquis, "Paco" for Thebussem, after mentioning the well-known merits of his friend (stopping especially in the title of Honorary Postman of Spain, of which the assidanense was so proud) and to mention the luck that had had to share with Thebussem Place in the Academy and "brotherhood in the chivalrous religion", recreates in a very tasty story the moment in which both became friendship, while they took the waters in the spa of Marmolejo (Jaén), to which Thebussem was assiduous. "The frank, expansive and jovial character of the Medalan nobleman," he says, "soon conquered the sympathies of all." The friendship between the two was strengthened by the epistolary treatment and by the times shared in Madrid, Seville and Marmolejo, whose Fonda de los Leones, the Assidencian, was "obliged guest", since the enjoyment of the medicinal virtues of these waters formed part Essential of his diet, characterized by "sobriety in eating, being abstemious and continuous breathing the pure and healthy breezes of his native city." This was the secret of the lucid old age of the nagual Thebussem, of "enjuta complexion" and "apparent weak nature," "inept dyspeptic, 16 eating less than a little bird and abusing bicarbonate."

The Marquis de Laurencín narrates next the pleasant moments lived next to the Pardo de Figueroa in his house of Medina, where he had been invited of the family - as we have said - in the middle of November of 1888, while its final investigations lasted like informant of the Council of Orders. The story brings us closer to the daily life of the noble family (description of their house, their habits and customs), and offers an unparalleled testimony of the personality of its members and, especially, of Thebussem (his generosity, His love of books, his hobbies, his hobbies ...). I think it is worthwhile to transcribe literally the text of Don Francisco de Uhagón since his arrival in Medina.

Between two lights the carriage that led us stopped, and it was certainly not before the hard walls of the feudal castle with which we dreamed, not before the embalmed fronds of its picturesque orchard, but before the broad doorway of a large and lordly dwelling, Calle de Tapia, where the arms of the three Pardo brothers welcomed us with affection and effusion, leading us to our respective rooms, comfortable and elegant.

"Tell me, Marianus," he said, asking, "Do you see much of the city of your beautiful castle of Cicada?"

"I'll tell you," he replied, "we'll go to the garden every day for a walk, because it's quite close and, although small, there are plenty of tasty, fragrant, fragrant flowers and fragrant roses in the country; As for the castle ... that is another song: it is uninhabitable.

"Maybe ruinous?" I argued. Although no one would say it judging by the aspect of the engraving.

"Nothing like that," he said. It is intact, as you have seen in my timbered epistles to which you allude; But that Gothic mole is only the project, the drawing, the dream, if you will, of the castle that I would raise if I had the intention to do it and money to build it.

"Apparently-or rather by the unseen-you have made the phrase Castles in the air good."

After a short period of time, we were introduced by my companion Padilla and I, in the main hall of the house, to Don Jose Pardo de Figueroa, a nonagenarian old man, father of the suitors, who called him masterfully and affectionately the master.

I do not forget, nor will I ever forget, the impression of the venerable figure of that gentleman, all sweetness and kindness, exquisite correction and fine treatment. Small of body, but of robust and vigorous complexion; The colour serene and penetrating the look, with the accent purely Andalusian, was the perfect and finished type of noble lord, of the hidalgo of province.

In his company I had pleasant and fleeting days; It was not possible to find greater tolerance than his own for things and persons; I never heard him criticize anything or anyone; Without the forced disorder of food to which our informative work condemned him, nor the constant hustle and bustle of people who invaded his quiet abode and stirred his peaceful and methodical life would cause him the slightest impatience, not even glimpses of annoyance in his ingenuity Goodness and in that natural one of his so complacent and peaceful. "The only thing that would cause me grief," he told us incessantly, "is that you worry about me, that I only aspire to be happy and satisfied, as I am delighted to have them in my house." Excellent D. José! Adorado of his, blessed of the poor, and of all wanted and respected, was, by his virtues and his years, the patriarch of Medina.

His children kept from him the pious secret of the cause of the death of his eldest son, the bizarre lieutenant of the ship, Don Jose Emilio Pardo de Figueroa, whom he cried dead of natural disease in the little village of San Roque, a few miles from the arsenal of Cavite, when, bedridden by grave and cruel ailment, was vilely murdered by the Indians in the Manila revolution of 1872.

In memory of his brother and dedicated to his parents, he collected and published Thebussem in a book: Some writings of the lieutenant of the ship Don Jose Emilio Pardo de Figueroa, 17 among which there is an extract, very interesting indeed, of the five manuscript volumes of the Journeying around the world of the famous frigate Numancia.

At the end of the meal, succulent, which corresponded to the table of Thebussem, as full of delicacies as expert in theories and culinary masterpieces, surprised the guests with the sound of the old butler of the house, who, , He chanted like a muezzin in his minaret: "Praise God! Tomorrow, Friday, November 16th. San Rufino and fellow martyrs. Santos Edmundo and Fidencio, Bishops. It is not fasting or vigilance. Goodnight!

-Goodnight! The diners answered in chorus.

The Doctor explained to us, in the face of our dumb wonder, what we had heard the old custom in the house. "Thus we know the new day when we enter, then the feast that is commemorated, avoiding forgetfulness that might bother mourners and picajosos friends who celebrate the feasts of their patrons and, as Christians we are, we know if it is abstinence or vigilance to comply with The precepts of God and the Church. "

At eleven the master retired to rest; And it was to see the loving solicitude and the diligent care with which his three children accompanied him: Mariano clothed him by throwing the warm cloth on his shoulders, leaning on his arm; Paula lit the old man's footsteps, carrying the silver candlestick in his right hand; Rafael acted as herald or beater by galleries and corridors that led to his father's apartment, at whose door they kissed his hand respectfully; And the noble old man, caressing their faces, said: "May you rest, my children, and until tomorrow, if God wants us to see ourselves healthy and good."

And indeed, it was a tender spectacle that moved and comforted the spirit in these modern times when the paternal authority is shaken, and I do not know if it collapses, because of the regrettable oblivion of the fourth of the precepts of the Holy Law of God, seeing In the height of their well-earned literary fame, in the high places of the royal navy, the other two, lavish treasures of tenderness which, by sowing it with flowers, prolonged the venerable old age Of that beloved father.

The morning visit of Mariano allowed me to show him my desire to know his home with palace honors, and together we toured his numerous rooms and various apartments, his courtyards in the Andalusian way and their flowery terraces and roofs.

Then I was able to satisfy my curiosity by contemplating to my taste the Gothic inscription, the morrion of Fermoselle, and the painting of the Virgin of Solitude which, by way of bond, preserved in the family and described by Thebussem, explaining its origin and its history, In the pamphlet titled Three antiques ..., which gave the picture in 1882, in a very limited edition, as it always did.

The admirable, wonderful library of the Doctor, whose richness in incunabula, unique examples and editions of peregrine rarity, tongues were made tongues, provoked in advance my greed when I did not even dream of visiting it; So when I opened the door of the room that held such a treasure, the doctor's sancta sanctorum, I felt the chill of the bibliophile. And for everything to have the original, typical, proper and exclusive stamp of the great Medinese writer, I must say with truth that neither the number nor the importance of what it contains correspond to the fame and renown proclaimed.

True, he has rare and curious books, many acquired, others gifts; But, apart from the manuscripts and printings which they treat and contract with their native city, what I drew most attention to is the series of tomes of Varios, where I assembled, without order, method, or concert, as I acquired them and reached their Hands, short books, pamphlets and pamphlets bound by size; So it was common to find in the same volume, as it were, a Gothic relation of feast, battle, or marriage of sovereigns, next to a list of shareholders of the Bank of Spain, or a romance of the seventeenth century beside the prospect of mineral waters. "There is no useless book," says the hidalgo Santiaguista, "and all of them collect and bind.

Because it is to be noticed, which is surprising to many, that he has a small book-binding workshop where he binds these various volumes and even books of a larger height. I do not think that it should attain or merit in this office the laures and praises due to a Grolier, Trauz Beazonnet, Chambolle, or Lortic; But he has no doubt that he mates, sews, frames and covers; And as firm and submissive they are, they do not go away in three tugs, and are well bound.

I preserve as gold in cloth, for being a gift of this generous man as a prince and for being bound by his hand, a very rare work of which the great writer Antequerano Pedro de Espinosa is author and who calls itself Forest of Dona Ana in the presence of Felipo Quarto, catholic, pious, felice, augusto, describing the splendid parties and sumptuous hunting in that famous stump with which the magnificence of the seventh Duke of Medina-Sidonia, eleventh Count of Niebla, D. Manuel Alonso Perez de Guzman the Good, gave And gave to his Sovereign in 1624, the year of the printing of this story, which saw the light in Seville.

The specimen also has the singularity of containing the primitive ex libris of Thebussem, which, printed on plain paper, says:

From Doctor Don
Mariano Pardo de Figueroa
Medina - Sidonia
Year of 1869.

And, added after his letter in the same ex libris, "pass to the Uhagonian Library, which will be better accompanied there than in that of Dr. Th." Below is another carton, of shape and size identical to the previous one, although with more adorned fillet, where it reads in printing characters:

Books, Papers and Notes
Relative to the city of Medina-Sidonia
Volume number 3
Of the collection formed by Doctor Don
Mariano Pardo de Figueroa.

In the final custody of the book an extensive bibliographical note of the booklet in question is written, which was given to him by the illustrious Captain of Engineers D. Eduardo de Mariátegui, a written note signed by Mariano Pardo de Figueroa.

As it turns out, the Doctor, in my gift, detached himself from one of the most interesting numbers of his favourite collection of papers from Medina Sidonia, which he patiently acquired, many of them in the stalls and slums of the Cadiz fiords, one of whom On the eve of my excursion to Medina, who, suspecting the Doctor, asked him for a double price, than to the other purchasers, knowing that he was rich and unmarried, and acquiring, as he used to say "at the expense of my heirs", he devised the To go to such places between two lights, setting an old hat, with enormous black spectacles and muffled in shabby brown cloak.

One day when, in ecstasy, he stirred up a heap of books, proud of his invention and not discovered incognito - "You see that other pile, Mr. Thebussem," said the smart-mannered slyly, Whether the bookseller was a poet or a doctor's joke.

At the end of my visit, which, by my curiosity, we shall call inspection, as I transposed the doorway of the street, I saw my lord D. Mariano approach the canvas on the right, where a coquettish glass urn was attached, and, opening the door, He removed a wooden block, smooth, clean and polished, placing it on the upper deck of the said urn.

"You know, dear Paco, since this house is so large and many of the kind friends who come to visit me, it is not something that the domestic ones run and fatigue in my search and capture for the house and its annexes: They look at the box; Being the dowel out, is a sign that I have gone out; What the stupidity is inside ?, because I have already returned.

-Bravo! -I answered-. I dare not advise you to ask for a privilege of invention; But I concede that the billet system is practical, with no other possible risk than that of a servant.

After our work in the notarial protocols, when we settled in the sacristy of the Major Church of the city for the necessary compulsa of the parochial books, which are to be made by the informant knights in the presence of the parish priest or the lieutenant, With natural seriousness:

"It is true, my lords, that their reports and the agreements of the Council of Orders are very secretive and secret; That, once you have seen the process, you stuff it, sew it and keep it in your files?

"That's the way it is," said Padilla and me.

"Well then, trusting in that reservation, I do not care what you are aware of, reading my faith of baptism, which I have been suppressing for some years; Because, between which one is removed and those who add generous friends tip, is an approximate average, but always to the detriment of the one who hides.

And so it was then, in this of the years, that he at that time made honour to his famous anagram of Thebussem, which means in-bus-Thes.

Our official mission was terminated: we terminated the proceedings and orders, orders, and declarations leading to knowledge and confirmation, informing the Council of Orders if they could bear the red cross of the Apostle, knitting Knights, those who were already by blood and birth, By their conduct and deeds, by merits and services which they rendered to their country and to their King.

With deep regret we had to bid farewell to the lovely family who had given us noble, frank and splendid hospitality.

"I'm tempted to cross," I said, just for the pleasure of having them back in my house, "said Don Jose giving me a tight embrace.

I never saw him again; Very few months later, in February of '89²⁰, sleeping peacefully in his bed and woke up in the sky. There Paula and Raphael went to find him, faithful to his pious habit of never abandoning him.

Sunt lacrimae rerum.

Only the Doctor remains, the last male of his lineage, who will seal with gold the male succession of the Pardo de Figueroa, whose glorious timbres he has managed to raise to the high peaks of intellectual celebrity as an eminent polygraph, by a notable historian, as A writer who is a scholar and a scholar who, with the glories and beauty of his pilgrim wit, with his profound knowledge, ample and varied, with the best of his style and most charming words, with the happy geniuses of his personality, his peculiar physiognomy, Typical, exclusively his own, has made and disseminated, without fatigue or fainting, a work of immense culture, placing his illustrious and preclair name among those who most enhance, by the prestigious achievements, the country literature (...)

Madrid, November 1, 1917

But let us return to our subject. According to the preamble of the Genealogical Notes ..., the file made by the informant knights was presented to the Court of the Order on December 9, 1888; On the 13th, it was unanimously approved, and on the 15th of the same month King Alfonso XIII²¹, as Grand Master and perpetual Administrator of the Order and Cavalry of Santiago, and in his name the Queen Regent, deigned to "issue titles of Knights of The Military Order of Santiago in favor of the suitors ". He wrote the titles "Don José de Nájera y Aguilar, Marquis de Nájera, also bear the signatures of the Chancellor Conde de Altamira, Frey Baron del Sacro-Lirio, Frey Don Felipe M. de Setien and Frey Don Enrique Íñiguez." The documents were accompanied by royal cédulas that granted leave, just as the suitors had begged his majesty, so that the ceremony in which they would be armed knights and invested with the habit of Santiago would be celebrated in Medina Sidonia. The records of the three brothers can be consulted in the National Historical Archive in the Military Orders Section and in the files below:

- Pardo de Figueroa and Serna, Francisco. Santiago. Years 1889 and 1893. Legajo 206, number 18.921, folios 32 and 112.
- Pardo de Figueroa and de la Serna, Mariano. Santiago. Years 1889 and 1893. Legajo 206, number 1,892, folios 28 and 106.
- Pardo de Figueroa and Serna, Rafael. Santiago. Years 1889 and 1894. Legajo 206, number 18.921, folios 37 and 124.

On Sunday, January 13, 1889, "Thebussem continues in the preamble of his Genealogical Notes ..." the parish church of Santiago "was adorned and illuminated as in the most solemn feasts, with organ attendance, music chapel and singers There were five armchairs and cushions of red and gold velvet at the side of the Gospel for the Knights and Pastor, and two in the epistle for Don Jose Pardo de Figueroa and Manso de Andrade Excited father of the knights> and for the Notary Don Jose Maria Buitrago and Navarro. " Don Rafael Fernandez de Padilla had also offered to come to the ceremony. An immense crowd had come to see such an unusual event, for this ceremony could rarely be seen outside the court. After the blessing of the robes and other insignia of the Order, 24 by the parish priest, Casimiro Rodríguez de Bustillo, assisted by the master of ceremonies, Don Antonio Pérez y Díaz, and by the coadjutor Don Andrés Robles y Benítez, he was knighted and dressed Don Santiago Mariano Pardo de Figueroa, who in turn armed knights to his brothers Don Francisco and Don Rafael. The profession of knights was likewise verified in the Church of Santiago de Medina on August 25, 1893 and February 16, 1894.

Shortly after the investiture ceremony, the Genealogical Notes came to light ... Thebussem himself recounts the little work when he is already resting on the shelves of his library. In his Bibliographical Notes of Medina Sidonia ... 26 notes:

Genealogical notes ... Year of (cross of Santiago) 1888. It was printed in Medina Sidonia. Private typography by Dr. Thebussem. Calle de Tapia, number two. Year eighteen hundred and eighty-nine. (For private distribution.) Issue given by the publishers. With four coats of arms and a family tree. -In fourth; 50 pages, unnumbered.

Following the order marked in the precious index, the biography of the three suitors, the genealogical study of the four family surnames, a supplementary bibliography, the representation of the four coats of arms and , Finally, the genealogical tree.

We reproduce literally the biographies of the suitors:

DON MARIANO PARDO DE FIGUEROA, SERNA, MANSO DE ANDRADE AND COUPLER: Doctor of Civil and Canon Law, Correspondent of the Royal Academy of History, of the Archaeological Institute of Rome, of the Historical Society of Utrecht, of the Royal Academy of Good Letters Of Seville and Honorary Postman of Spain. It was baptized in the Greater Church of Medina Sidonia to 18 of November of 1828.

DON FRANCISCO PARDO DE FIGUEROA, & c.: Navy Captain of the Navy, Knight Cross and Royal and Military Order of San Hermenegildo, of San Fernando of 1st class, of Naval Merit of 3rd, Commander of the Royal Iron Crown of Italy, decorated with the Cross of the taking of Joló, with the medal of Isabel II and with that of His Holiness Pío IX. He was born in Medina Sidonia and was baptized in the Major Church on September 29, 1830.

DON RAFAEL PARDO DE FIGUEROA, & c.: Navy Captain of the Navy, student and teacher who was in the course of Major Marine Studies, Deputy Director of the Institute and Astronomical Observatory of Marina de San Fernando and Head of the Hydrographic Commission of Spain in the Mediterranean; Corresponding Academician of the Royal Academy of Good Letters of Seville, Knight Cross and Plate of the Royal and Military Order of San Hermenegildo, decorated with the Crosses of 3rd and 2nd and two of 1st class of Naval Merit, Cuba Medal with three pins and Benemérito de la Patria, Gold Personal Medal of the Barcelona Exhibition, for progress in Astronomy and Campaign Geodesy. -Natural of Medina Sidonia and was baptized on January 8, 1837 in the Major Church.

For the study of his surnames, Thebussem establishes a similar structure in his writing: first he speaks of the origin of the family in question, after his arms, refers to the place where his manor house and family burial is, comments the etymology of patronímico And, finally, following a chronological order, presents the biography of his most outstanding individuals, whose names are then included in the genealogical tree that culminates the work.

Among the Pardo de Figueroa, from Galicia, mention is made first of captain Don Matías Pardo de Figueroa y Gómez, a native of San Martín de Valdeiglesias (Madrid), knight of Santiago and Perpetual Regidor of the City of Cadiz in 1689, where Founded a mayorazgo before dying. Francisco Pardo de Figueroa and Arias (Cádiz, 1674-Rota ?, 1726), Matías Pardo de Figueroa and Márquez of the Castle (Cadiz, 1699-1738) and Francisco Pardo de Figueroa and Legobien (Cadiz, 1731-Arcos Of the Border, 1764). The sixth and final biography is the venerable father of Doctor Thebussem:

DON JOSÉ PARDO DE FIGUEROA AND MANSO DE ANDRADE, Perpetual Regent of Cadiz etc. And current possessor of the Mayorazgos de Pardo de Figueroa, Fernandez Hidalgo and Patronato de Juan Arias: born in Arcos de la Frontera and baptized in the Parish of San Pedro on January 25, 1800. He contracted marriage with Doña María Luisa de la Serna And Pareja, in the Major Church of Medina Sidonia to December 31, 1827.

The maternal family, the Serna, was originally from Zamora and was "settled in Medina Sidonia and Chiclana since the middle of the sixteenth century." In our city they had their manor house in the street of Postiguillo number four. They made their burials in the chapel of the Tabernacle of the Church of San Agustín. The first biography of the family is Don Antonio de la Serna Spínola and Cameros, baptized in the Church of Medina on December 13, 1675 and owner of the mayorazgo founded by his father in Medina and Chiclana. They follow the biographies of Antonio de la Serna Spínola and Valdes (Medina Sidonia, 1712-1796) and Francisco de la Serna and Serna (Medina Sidonia 1740-1797). The Serna frequently held the positions of regidores of our city and alcaides of the castle of Medina. As expected, the latest biography belongs to the mother of Doctor Thebussem:

DOÑA MARÍA LUISA DE LA SERNA AND PAREJA, born in Medina Sidonia. She was baptized in the Major Church on April 22, 1805. He contracted marriage with Don Jose Pardo de Figueroa and Manso de Andrade in said Parish on December 31, 1827. Abintestato in the protocol of the notary Don Jose Maria Buitrago, Medina Sidonia, On January 9, 1883.

The Manso de Andrade, of Portuguese origin, settled in Medina Sidonia in the seventeenth century, coming from El Puerto de Santa María, where they had their manor house. Thebussem summarizes the biographies of:

1. Don Antonio Manso de Andrade y Salazar (Port of Santa Maria, 1599-?), Regidor of Medina, married to the Assiduous María Guzmán Calderón, who owned the mayorazgo founded by his father in our city, "among whose property Counted the house called the Link. " In this one "lived Don Antonio Manso de Andrade from the time of their marriage, and for that reason the street took then and conserves the name of Manso".

2. Blas Manso de Andrade and Guzmán Calderón (Medina Sidonia, 1655-1747), Regidor of Medina.

3. Antonio Manso de Andrade and Montes de Oca (Medina Sidonia, 1694-¿?).

4. Juan Manso de Andrade y Vergara (Medina Sidonia, 1722-Arcos de la Frontera, 1804).

5. Doña Vicenta Manso de Andrade and Moreno Fontiveros, paternal grandmother of Doctor Thebussem, born in Medina and married in 1793 in Arcos de la Frontera with Don José Pardo de Figueroa and Yuste de la Torre.

The Pareja family settled in Medina in the early seventeenth century, where it had its manor house (in the street of the Tahona number six) and its place of burials (in the chapel of the Conception of the Greater Church). Thebussem names among his most distinguished subjects Luis de Pareja Spínola and Jiménez Carrión (Medina Sidonia, 1681 -1717?); José de Pareja and Serna Spínola (Medina Sidonia, 1713 -1783?); Luis de Pareja y Novela (Medina Sidonia, 1736 -1798?), Lawyer of the Royal Councils, Corregidor of the town of Almonte and Master of Seville, among other things; And Doña Rosa de Pareja and Dávila Morón (Medina Sidonia, 1769 -1851?), Maternal grandmother of Thebussem and wife of Francisco de la Serna and Montes de Oca.

Thebussem said in his preamble that the edition of the Genealogical Notes ... consisted of very few copies, since it was destined to "give some friends and relatives." The abundant compromises made this tirade exhausted soon, and Thebussem and his brothers felt obliged to pay for a second printing of the booklet, which came to light in 1905²⁷. The new edition, made in two colors (black and red) by the printer Juan Oliva y Milá, in Vilanova i la Geltrú²⁸, is also described in his Bibliographical Notes of Medina Sidonia ... ²⁹:

Genealogical notes ... Second edition increased. Year 1905 (Cross of Santiago). Privately Printed. These genealogical notes were printed in Villanueva and Geltrú by Juan Oliva and Milá the year one thousand nine hundred and five. Laus Deo. "Folio; 110 pages. It carries several vignettes, coat of arms and a family tree. On strong yarn paper.

This second edition contains great novelties with respect to the first. Along with the dedication to the Marquis de Laurencín, now accompanied by his titles, appears a letter addressed to the brothers Pardo de Figueroa, in a tone of frank friendship, in which they refer to the changes made:

Dear Marquis of Laurencín:

The short tirade of these GENEALOGICAL NOTES that we made the year of 1889, was exhausted soon after sharing it among friends and relatives. And as there are now subjects who honour us desiring copies of such notes, we have the present reprinted with some news published before now, and that relate more or less directly with our family.

With these appendices we try to mitigate the aridity of genealogical quotations; But perhaps the remedy is worse than the ailment, and we have incurred a tired heaviness by abandoning the brevity which he so gladly does to reasoning ...

It is enough to take a look at the index of this second edition (whose folios are carefully numbered unlike those of the first one) to verify how the additions (the appendices referring to each one of the four surnames) occupy much more space than the primitive Genealogical Notes ... which, incidentally, have also been slightly touched up in some detail.

In the biographies of the suitors are added some data, such as the possession by Doctor Thebussem of the Great Cross of the Civil Order of Alfonso XII, the status of seamen retired from their brothers or obtaining the Great Cross of Naval Merit by Part of Francisco Pardo de Figueroa.

The data related to the Pardo de Figueroa lineage are completed: properties related to the surname are mentioned and some biographies are expanded. A complete list of the services rendered by Captain Don Matías Pardo de Figueroa and Gómez appears. And it is confirmed the death of Don Jose Pardo de Figueroa and Manso de Andrade, father of Thebussem, on February 14, 1890.

Precisions are added on some places where the heraldic shields of the Serna, the Manso de Andrade and the Pareja can be found. Also corrected some data in the biographies of the members of these three families.

The first appendix, dedicated to the "Line de Pardo de Figueroa", contains:

1. A biography of Juan Arias, servant of Philip II (p.37).
2. The brief but interesting article "Old post house of Madrid" (pp. 39-41), referring to the building where the first post office of the Spanish capital was located and which had been owned by the father of Doctor Thebussem. Our doctor, resident in Madrid (Calle Mayor, number 61) in the spring of 1857, was commissioned by his father for the removal of a painting of the Virgen de la Soledad placed in an altarpiece of the entrance hall of the house. The painting was brought to the family home of Medina and was mounted on a carved mahogany altarpiece.
3. The novelesque biography (pp. 43-48) of the excellent rider and chopper Don Pedro Yuste de la Torre (1776-1824), dated Medina Sidonia in 1888.
4. The letter sent to the Viscount of Betera in which Thebussem recounted the chivalrous "Challenge between Don Juan Pardo de Figueroa and Don Garcia de Avila," both knights of Santiago, succeeded during the reign of Philip IV. The letter is dated 1883 (pp. 49-64).

5. The biographies (pp. 65-71) of Joseph Pardo de Figueroa y Lupidana, knight of Santiago and assistant of Seville in 1665; Of the scholar Joseph Pardo de Figueroa, author of a brief dissertation on the foundation, name and antiquity of the cities of Seville or Hispalis e Itálica. Year of 1732; Of Joseph Pardo de Figueroa, Marquis of Valleumbroso and Corregidor of Cuzco in the middle of the s. XVIII; By Antonio Pardo de Figueroa; Of Baltasar Pardo de Figueroa, count of Maceda and marquess of Figueroa, died in the battle of Rioseco in 1808; Of the scholar and military Benito Pardo de Figueroa, ambassador of Spain in Berlin in 1806 and ambassador of the court of Joseph I Bonaparte in Russia; And, finally, the brothers of Thebussem, José Emilio, who died in Cavite (Manila) in 1873, and Rafael, author of many works on navigation techniques, astronomy and nautical measurements³⁰.

The appendix dedicated to the "Line of Serna" contains:

1. A biography (pp. 75-76) of Ensign Cristóbal González de Fermoselle († Zamora, 1569).
2. The article "Things and houses of hidalgos" (pp. 77-92), dedicated to Francisco Rafael de Uhagón and dated Medina Sidonia in 1888, contains valuable data on Alonso de la Serna Espinola (Medina Sidonia, 1617) and Antonio de la Serna Espinola (Chiclana, 1645), both governors of the castle of Medina, and Antonio Josef de la Serna Espinola (Medina Sidonia, 1675), stables of Queen Mariana de Neoburg, wife of Charles II.
3. Biographical references to Luis de la Serna Espínola y Pareja and Francisco de la Serna and Montes de Oca (pp. 93-94).

The appendix dedicated to the "Manso Line of Andrade" contains the beautiful story titled "The Golden Box" (pp. 97-103), dated in Medina Sidonia in 1880 and whose main character is Doctor Thebussem.

The appendix dedicated to the "Line of Couple" refers to documents referring to Joseph de Pareja y Cortés (born in 1750) and Antonio de Pareja y Serrano, knight of Santiago and member of the Royal Navy, with whom he participated in the battle of Trafalgar.

The work closes with the familiar family tree, as the family crest appear in this second edition at the beginning of the study of each family.

As we have seen, the Genealogical Notes constitute a work of special interest to the student of Thebussem. First, because the author traces in it a large genealogical picture of his family, which allows us to know his lineage and his connection with our city. Secondly, because he presents brief but juicy biographies of his ancestors - many of whom demand a prompt investigation - of himself and his brothers. It also supposes a testimony of the recognition that this asidonense family had reached on the part of its contemporaries and equal, since it is not frequent at the time that three brothers entered simultaneously like gentlemen in a military order. At last, it is a precious memory of the bibliographical interests and of the love for the books that Don Mariano had.

Being Knight of Santiago was a great honor for Thebussem. Since he was invested as such, he recorded this on the cover and in the colophon of his books, where he ordered the cross of the Order to be stamped. Thus, for example, in the cover of Un Triste Capeo, compendium of articles on bullfighting published in 1892, it declares "Knight of the Habit of Santiago"; And in Something of Philatelia (1899), "Professed of the Habit of Santiago".

Notes:

(1) Genealogical notes that to take the habit of Santiago, presented Don Mariano, Don Francisco and Don Rafael Pardo de Figueroa, natives of Medina Sidonia, Medina Sidonia, Private typography of Doctor Thebussem, 1889. We handle a facsimile edition that does not contain data Some about the person responsible for it.

(2) This fact is clearly evident in the biographies offered in these Genealogical Notes ... and in the genealogical tree that culminates them (Fig. 13).

(3) V. Vignau and F. R. de Uhagón, Index of evidence of Knights who have dressed the habit of Santiago from the year 1501 to date, Madrid, Widow and daughters of M. Tello, 1901.

(4) F. Martínez and Delgado, History of the city of Medina Sidonia, Cádiz, Printing and lithography of the Medical Journal, 1875, pp. 65-67.

(5) We handle in the summary that follows the works of A. Ruiz de Morales y Molina, The rule and establishment of the Order of the Cauallería of Santiago of the Sword, with the hystoria of the origin and principle of the one (edition, introductory study, notes And indexes M. Isabel Viforcós Marinas, J. Paniagua Pérez, fixation, annotation and Castilian version JF Domínguez Domínguez), León, Secretary of Publications of the University of León, 1998; Derek W. Lomax, The Order of Santiago (1170-1275), Madrid, C.S.I.C., 1965; E. Postigo Castellanos, "Santiago, Calatrava and Alcántara", <http://www.moderna1.fh.csic.es/oomm/Castellanas-historia.htm>; And A. Domínguez Ortiz (dir.), History of Spain. The Restoration (1874-1902), t. 10, Barcelona, Editorial Planeta, 1990.

(6) The creation of this priory was made effective by the Bull Apostolicam of November 1875, although it had already been foreseen in the Concordat of 1851. The misunderstanding between the State and the Holy See during the years of the " "Had prevented it then (A. Domínguez Ortiz (right), op cit, p.144).

(7) A period of special penance (a year, at the beginning) was followed by the granting of the mercy of habit, during which the knights resided in the monastery of Uclés. Then came the time of the profession, which took place primitively also in this same convent. This was no longer the case in the nineteenth century.

(8) A. Ruiz de Morales, The rule ..., third title, chapters 1 and 2, pp. 275-276.

(9) Ibid.

(10) The Marquis de Laurencín himself extracts it in "The Doctor Thebussem, Memories and Intimacies," B.R.A.H., tome LXXI, notebook VI (December, 1917), pp. 449-463.

(11) This brilliant historian and scholar was born in Bilbao in 1858. He received his doctorate in law at the age of nineteen and in 1898 he entered the Royal Academy of History, which he went on to direct in 1918. He belonged to the academies of science and geography From Lisbon, to the Royal Archaeological Museum of Belgium, to the Hispanic Society of America ... He was twice a senator from Córdoba for the liberal party and minister of the Tribunal and Council of Military Orders, counselor of public instruction. Thebussem, a magnificent library. He worked tirelessly, wrote on various subjects: bullfighting, hunting, history (on military orders, mainly), literature (studies on Garcilaso de la Vega, Chancellor Lopez de Ayala) ...

(12) Thebussem also dedicated to the Marquis two other works: Things and Houses of Horsemen and King Philip IV and the Duke of Medina Sidonia.

(13) Mariano Pardo de Figueroa entered the Academy on March 22, 1861, after having proposed his candidacy Pedro Sabau, Pascual de Gayangos and Antonio Delgado on February 15 of the same year.

(14) Marquis de Laurencín, art. Cit., P. 454.

(15) Marquis de Laurencín, art. Cit., P. 455.

(16) Apparently, Thebussem had severe stomach problems that made his digestion slow and laborious.

(17) We hope that our study on this most interesting work of Thebussem will soon see the light. May I accompany the "fortune" to our magazine Puerta del Sol and respect their existence.

(18) "Turn into a billet," "be stunned."

(19) "Becoming a gentleman."

(20) In the second edition of the Genealogical Notes ..., which we shall soon study, it is said that he died on February 14, 1890.

(21) The King was a little over two years old, since he was born on May 17, 1886.

(22) We extracted data from A.H.N., Military Orders Section. Index of expedientillos and dates of the knight's habit of Santiago, Calatrava, Alcántara and Montesa, Madrid, M.E.C. Publication Service, 1976, s.u.

(23) Recall that this year Dr. Thebussem will travel to Paris to visit the Universal Exhibition there.

(24) The sword and the golden spurs.

(25) Genealogical notes ..., Vilanova i la Geltrú, Juan Oliva y Milá, 1905, 2nd edition, p. 13.

(26) Bibliographical notes of Medina Sidonia, various articles and hieroglyphs, "Biographies, heraldry and genealogy", no. 100, Madrid, successors of Rivadeneyra, 1909, p. 47.

(27) We consult an original copy of this second edition of the Genealogical Notes ... existing in the Library of the University of Seville. In the B.O.E. Of 17 May 2000, in an annex to the Order of April 7, 2000, p. 18,168, the purchase of a copy of this book is reported by the M.E.C., for the Department of Bibliographic Heritage of the National Library. It was acquired by 43,000 pesetas in an auction realized in Madrid.

(28) In 1900, Doctor Thebussem had already donated part of the funds of his library to the Library Museum Victor Balaguer of this city of Barcelona.

(29) Bibliographical Notes ..., "Biographies, Heraldry and Genealogy", no. 101, p. 47.

(30) Both characters deserve a slow study.

(31) It has recently been reprinted by Luis Puellas Romero in La caja de oro and other writings by Doctor Thebussem, Cádiz, "ABC, Pocket Collection", Publications Service of the University of Cadiz, 2000, pp. 73-83.

Description of the images:

Fig. 1. Cover of Genealogical Notes ... (1889)

Fig. 2. Imprint of Genealogical Notes ... (1889)

Fig. 3. Image of Santiago Matamoros on the shield of Medina located on the tympanum of the portal of the church of Santiago (Medina Sidonia)

Fig. 4. Cover of the Estoria of the order of the cavalry of lord Santiago of the sword, A.H.N.

Fig. 5. J. Siguenza. Meeting of the Grand Chapter of the Military Orders to invest Alfonso XII as Grand Master. Palace of the Senate (Madrid).

Fig. 6. Dedication of the Genealogical Notes ... (1889)

Fig. 7. Franz Buschen. Portrait of Doctor Thebussem in 1860. Real Academy of History, Madrid

Fig. 8. The Orchard of Cicada according to the engraving used by Dr. Thebussem in his stamp

Fig. 9. Retablo of the church of Santiago

Fig. 10. Typographic details of Genealogical Notes ... (1889)

Fig. 11. Coat of arms (1889)

Fig. 12. Coat of arms (1889)

Fig. 13. Genealogical tree (1889)

Fig. 14. Cover of the 1905 edition

Fig. 15. Modernist typographic details (ed. 1905)

Fig. 16. Index of the 1889 edition

Fig. 17. Index of the 1905 edition

Fig. 18. Coat of arms (ed. Of 1905)

Fig. 19. A typographic detail headed "La Caja de Oro" (1905 ed)

Fig. 20. Colophon of A Sad Capeo (1892)

DOCTOR THEBUSSEM - WRITER ON BULLFIGHTING

Although Don Mariano Pardo de Figueroa, Dr. Thebussem, insisted again and again on being considered indifferent in matters of bullfighting and resisted being recognized as a bullfight supporter, the truth is that he left us in some of the articles that make up his book A Sad Cape (1892) data of extraordinary value for the history of bullfighting, as well as others worthy of mention for their curiosity.

Before entering into the subject, the inclusion of our erudite countryman in the list of writers who have dealt with bullfighting themes since its origins should be clarified. This is not a trivial question, since Don Mariano himself insisted more than once that he only wrote on the subject in order to correspond to obligatory commitments with some of his friends, famous bullfighters of the nineteenth century. It is known that he did not attend more than half a dozen bullfights and that he refused any collaboration in which he had to make technical assessments on the development of the fighting or the bullfighters and subordinates who intervened in it. As for his attendance at bullfights, this is his impression of the spectacle: "it results to me, as the poet said, uniform, monotonous and tired", and this after attending a clamorous triumph of Mazzantini in the Plaza de Cádiz². As regards criticism, he responds to Tomás Orts Ramos, who asks him for a prologue for his work on the Royal Tauromachy of Seville: "Excuse me in the future to ask for pears to the elm, if you do not want to receive a New disappointment of his attentive friend." ³ Notwithstanding what has been said, I believe that the solution lies in the nuance that goes from critic to bullfighting historian: to exercise as a critic it is necessary to know in depth the bullfights and to be fond of the spectacle; However, it can be investigated on subjects of diverse nature from a historiographic point of view. For the latter, the fundamental requisites are good intellectual formation and scholarship, qualities both of which Dr. Thebussem enjoyed. Neither should we ignore his penchant for honoring his pseudonym - anagrama of the word fraud - for, as Don Ventura points out, "mocking mockery" to write about the most varied subjects and, among them, the taurine.⁴ The truth is that Accepting his status as a bullfighter, historian, compiler, or "library ferret"; And we can support this affirmation by Don Mariano's inclusion in the list of bullfighting writers elaborated by José M^a de Cossío, which is included in the second volume of his encyclopaedic work Los toros (bibliography). In this relationship, Dr. Thebussem assiduously collaborates in two of the most prestigious bullfighting magazines of all time: La Lidia and Sol y Sombra.

Of its collaborations in the first of the mentioned magazines the publication of Un triste capeo, published work in 1892 by the printings of the successors of Ribadeneyra resulted. The content is structured in three parts: Platonic Tauromachy, Homeopathic Tauromachy and Vintic Point; The one that interests us the most is the first, since, as the author himself points out, the second one only makes clear that "Josef Napoleon attended for the first time a corrida in the Port of Santa Maria, which Don Antonio de la Serna Espinola rejoneó At a certain festival of the Good Retirement, and that a black bull, of a lot of sense and sticky, was the true lord of the outcome that Medina Sidonia had the famous Rosario de la Aurora "(pp. X and XI). The third part is nothing to do with bullfighting.

The fifteen articles that compose the first part can be organized into four groups:

A) Articles in which documents and news of bullfighting history are provided, in most cases, from the 16th and 17th centuries: From bullfighting, Bullring, From the bullfight, Almodrote, Golletazo, Don Pedro Yuste de The Tower and Bibliography.

B) Articles that give news of events related to great bullfighting figures: Don Diego and Paquiro, Los toros de Cádiz, Aclaración and Pepeillo.

C) Articles on certain linguistic uses in the world of bulls: *Voz en tauro*⁶ and Don Antonio Pérez, Don Juan de Herrera and Don Gregorio López. D) Articles about whether or not they belong to the bullfight guild: Antipodium and what I see, what I see!

We will focus on section (b) beginning with the writing that was once warmly welcomed by the bullfighters of the time: Pepeillo (dated November 30, 1886, pp. 85-105). Renowned feathers of the feast of the nineteenth century had turned in the study of the biography of Jose Delgado *Pepeillo*⁸ since his death, which occurred in Madrid on May 11, 1801, as a result of the wounds that produced the bull. However, many data on the life of the dexterous Sevillian - date and place of birth, contracting conditions, property deeds, testament, etc. - were not fully clarified until the publication of Dr. Thebussem's article. In it are contributed the baptism of the right hand, that of his marriage to Maria Salado, contracts, deeds of property, the testament granted by Pepeillo and his wife on April 7, 1800 (little more than a year before his tragic Death!), The inventory of property of the bullfighter and the partition of the same. Also, the confusion that had led different taurinos to identify the right-hand man from Sevilla with two other countrymen of the same name and surname was completely solved.

After the investigation carried out by Don Mariano, the data of his article, considered definitive, have been reproduced in articles and books of bullfighting history. However, less luck has had the last part of the writing that shows the mistake of writing the alias of bullfighter Pepe-Hillo or, also, Pepe-Yllo. Our countryman argues that the Hillo or Yllo voices do not exist or mean anything, whereas the Latin form betrays the familiar and affectionate treatment that would derive from forms such as Joselillo, Joseillo or Josephillo. In addition, it provides a facsimile reproduction of the signature of the bullfighter who, intentionally, placed a dividing comma between his name (Joseph) and the ending of the diminutive (illo). Today, as we said, in paper and bullfighting books, even in street signage, the form that has had fortune is that of Pepe-Hillo. That we can not claim the thesis of our countryman.

The article titled Don Diego and Paquiro (dated January 25, 1885, pp. 66-73) extracts the taurine adventure that led in 1615 D. Diego Duque de Estrada and then tells an anecdote about the chiclanero Francisco Montes Paquiro⁹ that leaves us an image of this great figure of bullfighting hitherto unknown, at least, for whoever writes. Paquiro's biographers focus primarily on his bullfighting feats, of course, and in his many demonstrations of manhood and courage; Little is known of his life outside the arena, except for a certain inclination to brandy which many consider one of the causes of his untimely death. The anecdote transmitted by Dr. Thebussem has nothing to do with the Chiclana bullfighter's passion for reading and, in particular, the immortal work of Cervantes, Don Quixote de la Mancha. This is that, in 1850, Paquiro gave to Dr. Thebussem his copy of the Quixote, that reads with assiduity, dedicating it to him affectionately. Don Mariano discovered at the end of each chapter notes and handwritten numbers of the teacher, who asked him to clarify what these notes were: "I was sick," answered Montes, "and for entertaining me sick manias!" Which was named Don Quixote and Sancho in each chapter. "Needless to say, our learned countryman quickly set to work to see if the numbers were accurate, and checked the fidelity of the numbers of Francisco Montes in a few chapters taken at random. His conclusion was that, in fact, the accounts of the bullfighter were accurate: both Don Quixote and his squire Sancho were named 2,168 times throughout the work. The data is true only as far as Sancho is concerned, not so as for the manorgo hidalgo that surpasses it in forty-two nominations, that is, it appears 2,210 times. Numerical accuracy is the least, what is striking is that the article reveals to us a Paquiro inclined to letters and culture and, apparently, with a deeper inner life than what his biographical semblances have left us.

The articles "Los toros de Cádiz" (dated June 30, 1885, pp. 74-78) and Clarification (of July 14 of the same year, pages 79-84) revolve around the bullfight held in Cadiz June 28, 1885, attended by Don Mariano at the request of Luis Carmena and Antonio Peña y Goñi to meet the right-hand man Luis Mazzantini.¹¹ The experience was most satisfactory, because it called the attention of our character a man who "An expert in music, directs the orchestra of the Spanish theater one night, in another it represents a comedy, then writes the prologue of some poetry, and then kills bulls with the sword. Widely impressed by the treatment of the right-hand man and by the exquisite education and culture exhibited, Don Mariano had no other idea than to propose that he prove himself fortunate in the world of politics, a counsel which Mazzantini received with smiles and disbelief. Well, twenty-one years later the advice of our countryman bore fruit, and Luis Mazzantini, who did not like being a teacher or a gifted man, was elected councilor by Madrid and years later held a congressional seat. This clairvoyance to capture the value of the bullfighter outside the arena also extends - despite Don Mariano's confessed imperiousness of bullfighting - to know how to value the outstanding exercise of director of Mazzantini fighting, currently considered by historians the only one able to match With Frascuelo in this regard.

This approach to the taurine facet of Dr. Thebussem is only a small contribution to the knowledge of this Asidonense who, like no one, holds the title of polygraph, since he also wrote "philology, history, archeology, jurisprudence, hacienda, Folklore, gastronomy, heraldry, theater, cervantophilia, customs, bibliography ... "¹² Serve this as an incentive to continue deepening in the work of personality so pronounced and polymorphic.

BIBLIOGRAPHY:

- CERVANTES, Miguel de, Don Quixote de la Mancha, edition of the Instituto Cervantes directed by Francisco Rico. Barcelona, Critique, 1998.
- COSSÍO, José M^a de, Los Toros, Madrid, Espasa-Calpe, 1986 and 1988 (volumes II and III).
- DON VENTURA, Spanish bullfighting writers of the nineteenth century, Barcelona, Ed. Lux, 1928; Facsimile edition of 1993.
- DR. THEBUSSEM, A sad cape, Madrid, Successors of Ribadeneyra, 1892; Facsimile edition of 1993.

Notes:

(1) Especially Antonio Peña and Goñi, and Luis Carmena y Millán; Both renowned critics and bullfighting researchers of extensive journalism and book work. The first was for many years director of La Lidia.

(2) A sad cape, p. 78 (see bibliography).

(3) Ibid., P. 134.

(4) Spanish bullfighting writers of the nineteenth century, pp. 88-91 (see bibliography).

(5) A sad cape, p. 130.

(6) It is argued that the term inappropriately used to designate certain localities of bullrings, instead of using the correct andana form (Ibid., Pp. 22-27)

(7) Although, as we have pointed out above, our author resisted being considered a bullfighter, at the end of this article he says goodbye to José Sánchez de Neira as follows: "I confess, then, a bullfighter and ratify myself Your most affectionate and grateful friend ... ". This does not invalidate all of the above, since, because of the tone of the article, rather than conviction, it seems to be a temporary concession of Don Mariano for the compliments received from the aforementioned, prestigious bullfighter.

(8) José Delgado Pepeíllo (Seville, 14-3-1754, Madrid 11-5-1801), the first figure of bullfighting at the end of the 18th century.

(9) Francisco Montes Paquiro (1805-1851), a natural bullfighter from Chiclana, was an outstanding pupil of the Royal Tauromachy of Seville, where he had the master Pedro Romero as his teacher. It is considered one of the great milestones of bullfighting for its contribution to the evolution of bullfighting, initiating "that chain of bullfighters that we call general or long and in which are fundamental links Chiclanero, Lagartijo, Guerrita and Joselito el Gallo." (Cossío, Los toros, s.v. MONTES (Francisco) Paquiro, vid bibliography). In its stage of greater fame, it was the author of a bullfighting that, still today, maintains all its freshness and value.

(10) We handle the quantities from the edition of Don Quijote de Clemencin, without taking into account the prologues or additions to the first part of 1605. Today we know that Don Quixote is named throughout the work 2,240 times and Sancho 2,187, as Can be verified in the edition that is currently considered as definitive: that of the Instituto Cervantes (see bibliography).

(11) Luis Mazzantini Eguía (1856-1926), of Italian-Basque ancestry, started earning his living as a railroad employee and, desirous of ascending economically and socially, soon passed from amateur practitioner to alternative killer. A prominent contender, attentive to helping his colleagues during the struggle and hard-hitting matador, he alternated successfully-until he retired in 1905- with the main figures of the moment, that is, Rafael Molina Lagartijo, Salvador Sánchez Frascuelo, Manuel García el Espartero, Antonio Reverte, Guerrita, etc.

(12) Don Ventura, Bullfighting Writers ..., p. 90.

BACK COVER PHOTOGRAPH

El "Castillo" de Huerta Cigarra. [The "castle" of the cicada orchard.]

END

Dr. A. M[oschkau]
Philately (Stamp collecting)
[Philatelie (Briefmarkenkunde)]
Welt-Post, 1881, Volume 6, Issue 11, pp.93-94

Translated for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
2016

PHILATELY (STAMP COLLECTING)

It was in the second half of the 1850s that the idea of removing cancelled postage stamps from letters and collecting them spread from England to Germany. While France and Belgium soon greatly enthused about these new collectibles, publishing catalogues of the known stamps and having specialist publications, at first Germans cautiously lagged behind, their ardour for collecting stamps developing in the 1860s.

England seems to be the motherland of the stamp hobby; Belgium however is the country where the new craze developed scientifically, something in which Germany participated fully. The enhancement of this obsession to a scientific level was primarily done by the following: Moens in Belgium, Dr. Magnus in France, Dr. E. Gray and L. Pemperten [sic] in England, O. Berger-Levrault, G. Bauschke, Dr. Moschkau and A. Treichel in Germany. In France the new science was given the name 'timbologie', in England it was baptised 'philately' - this latter term is becoming more and more dominant. Philately has literature in almost all the living languages and in its twenty years of existence has acquired a range and scope beyond either of its sister-studies: numismatics and heraldry. A brief look at J. Tiffany's Philatelic Library will surprise the laity with the richness of the specialist philatelic literature, and even more the fact that since 1874, when this noble work appeared, philatelic literature has doubled in extent. Some weighty voices have spoken of the value of collecting stamps. The best of these came from the pen of the Director of the British Museum, Dr. John Edward Gray, who clearly stated that collecting stamps is comparable with collecting coins, as apart from the improvement and sharpening of the mind that applies to any form of collecting, it teaches us about geography, other countries, world history, coins and currencies, artistic styles, etc., and a well-assembled stamp collection must be regarded as an "extract from the history of civilised peoples during the last four decades". It is impossible to deny the importance of stamps in regard to communications; the cultural and historical value and the privilege of collecting and philately are self-evident. For the furtherance of scientific philately there are, apart from specialist authors, the collector's clubs that are dispersed over the whole world, the demand for collectors' items being met by more than 3,000 stamp dealers. Of these, the main ones are in Paris (Maury), Brussels (Moens), Vienna (Friedl), London (Stanley Gibbons & Co.), Leipzig (Zschiesche & Köder), Hamburg (Goldner), etc., and hardly any of the largest coin dealers have annual turnovers that are comparable. That philately has recruited its disciples in large numbers from the youth of the world is easy to understand, because stamp collecting has incentives unlike any other type of collecting, but at any time we can show an even greater number adults, men and women, of all social and professional circles, who pay homage. Just as a stamp album may be found in a student's satchel, it may also find a home in the workshop of the craftsman, in the office of the merchant, in the study of the academic, in the cell of monk, in the cabinet of the Minister and in the ceremonial chamber of the prince.

Dr. A.M.

END

Michael Trost

Vagrant, Tramp or even a “King”?

[Clochard, Penner oder gar ein “König”?]

Philatelie, October 2016, Volume 68, Whole number 472, p.17

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350, Montignac Toupinerie, FRANCE

June 2018

VAGRANT, TRAMP OR EVEN A “KING”?

The question posed in the title could be framed differently: Millionaire, Billionaire or ultimately a “poor soul”? Alternatively: Evil, Illegitimate or a Psychopath? These are only a few of the labels that were ascribed to the “Stamp King” Philipp de Ferrary, who died almost a hundred years ago, during his lifetime. As Prof. Dr. Helmut Swoboda says “How little we know of this King of Philatelists that is actually true. Almost everything is legend, half-truth, invention, discarded gossip”. When Swoboda wrote this in 1982, research into Ferrary was only beginning. Much has happened since then and much unknown material has been discovered, confirming Swoboda’s assessment.

Caption:

Two photos which show Philipp von Ferrari in about 1880 and in the mid-1890s. From Charles J. Phillips of Stanley Gibbons.

On the 22nd October 2016 the President of Consilium Philatelicum, Wolfgang Maassen, will present the current state of research with a so-called “Philatelic Breakfast”. He will give insights into a worldwide “Ferrary-Project” - his new, comprehensive and historically accurate biography of the legendary King of Collectors that is currently in progress.

The event begins at 11am and lasts - naturally with a break - until about 1pm, including a discussion. The overall event is enhanced by a subsequent meeting of members of the “History of German Philately - German Federation- and Philatelists’ Day” society which begins after a snack at about 2pm. Admission is from 10.30am. Interested people and visitors may also take part in this meeting (without the right to vote).

No attendance fee will be charged; a small contribution as a donation is however desirable. Advance applications to be sent to w.maassen@philcreativ.de by email or by post to Wolfgang Maassen, Postfach 10, 41364 Schwalmtal, or telephone 021 63/4 97 60. The venue of the meeting is the Haus der Philatelie und Postgeschichte, Mildred-Scheel-Str. 2, 53172 Bonn.

END

Literatur Nachrichten
2001, Volume 101

Translation Digest

Translated for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, France
June 2018

Literatur Nachrichten

2001 Volume101

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.1

Contents
Part I

Foreword	4
List of Working Groups	5
Alphabetical keyword index to new literature	32
Publications of the BDPH working groups	46
Newly published specialist literature	74
List of the reviewed magazines with publisher's address	144
List of the reviewed exhibition catalogues	155
Alphabetical index of the abbreviations	156
Addresses of the philatelic libraries	163
Location code overview	164
Country studies (to Europe)	182

Part II

Country studies (from America)	552
Thematics	612
Other areas	745
Miscellaneous	1056
Epilogue	1068

p.4

Foreword. [Zum Geleit.]

Franz-Karl Lindner

Again a new issue of Literatur-Nachrichten is available, which was compiled by Franz-Josef Lindauer in proven, meticulous form. An enormous number of writings were evaluated by him and the articles were arranged according to their contents. Thus a compendium of all philatelic articles published in 2001 has again been produced, which is simply a must for the researching philatelic philosopher, no matter what the subject, whether a postal historian or a subject matter expert. Franz Josef Lindauer deserves a big thank-you for his hours of work in writing this volume.

For me it is always highly astonishing that every year hundreds of articles with philatelic content appear in Germany alone, which contain new findings. These findings ultimately stem from the curiosity of many serious philatelists who do not cease to elicit the last secrets from their collecting fields and to fill in the final blanks.

At first glance, the end to this may also be possible. Yet - every scientist singing a song about it - every answer to a question raises new questions and problems that need to be solved. This phenomenon can also be observed in research philately. For this reason alone there is no reason to fear that the abundance of philatelic articles will decrease or even dry up. In addition, there are numerous new trends in philately which almost provoke philatelic research.

The working groups of the Bund Deutscher Philatelisten e.V. play an eminently important role here. Because they are the ones who have expressly committed themselves to philatelic research. This is where specialists meet whose specific knowledge and insights are collected and compressed and then presented in writing. Thus, our working groups guarantee the continuous development of philately. But also the numerous individual authors who are not organized in working groups have to be mentioned. They are also involved in the extraordinary recognition of German philatelic literature. Our thanks therefore go to all those who have written down and published the results of their research.

Literature Nachrichten also reflects the achievements of the modern information society. The constantly growing amount of data that has to be processed in this context makes it more and more difficult to quickly extract individual data from a printing unit such as this. The handling of such a two-volume work is problematic! For this reason Literatur-Nachrichten will in future appear on CD-ROM, i.e. in digitalised form, which makes it possible to find individual data quickly and securely within the entire data volume with the help of keywords. We assume that almost every researching philatelist uses the modern media to research the amount of data available worldwide. Surveys have clearly confirmed this to us. We expect this new form of presentation to provide us with a far greater degree of practicality, which will benefit all users.

Soest, August 2004

Franz Karl Lindner

Bund Deutscher Philatelisten e.V.

p.1068

Epilogue. (Nachwort.)

Franz-Josef Lindauer

Dear user of this Literature Nachrichten,

These and also the issues from 1986 on electronic data carriers are available from Phila Promotion GmbH, Publishing house at Siegfriedstr. 23, 53542 Remagen, Germany. Although several of my colleagues - headed by Mrs Johanna Finger - as well as my dear wife tried to find all errors during proof reading, one can assume that you will certainly find some more. I would therefore like to ask users to inform me of any spelling or factual errors they find. If an issue of a journal or an article has not been evaluated or listed, please let me know as well. These errors can then be corrected on the electronic data carrier.

Thanks to everyone who has already written to me.

Finally, I would like to thank heartily all my helpers in the working groups for the evaluation of their publications, and in particular Messrs Hartwig Danesch, Schwelm, Jörg Maier, Munich, Dr. Walter Möbs, Rainer von Scharpen, Mainz, Christian Schanck, Cologne, Gerhard Trögel, Leverkusen, and Jürgen Zaleszewski, Manching, who are responsible for many foreign journals, as well as the editors. Without their work the Literatur-Nachrichten would be worth only half the amount.

Thanks again!

Franz-Josef Lindauer

Federal Office Manager,
Research & Literature

END

Joaquín Amado

The Written Flame of Philately

[La llama escrita de la filatelia]

Exposición Nacional de Literatura Filatélica, Madrid, Spain, 10th September-1st October 1993,
pp.33-40

Translated by Translator for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE 2019

TITLE (14 pt)

END

The Written Flame of Philately

A reliable census of philatelic writers, publishers and experts, who share their knowledge and channel their enthusiasm for popularizing philately in media other than those of the collecting community, has not yet been created. This is not for lack of appreciation of this great collective effort, for it is well known how difficult it has been to obtain space in non-philatelic Spanish media, however meager, for philately, called by some a childish hobby and by others objectionable misanthropy. Thus, once again the credit for firing the parting shot in this direction falls to Dr. Thebussem, the first and distinguished popularizer of Spanish philately. This Cadiz writer of many works in diverse subjects was the author of the first philatelic column in a general-interest newspaper in 1871, called “El Averiguador” (“The Investigator”).

Meanwhile, hungry for information and above all confident in others’ contributions, we pursue our study of the pens that shared philatelic erudition and expertise in the press outside of our common hobby. If the reader will indulge me, I should like to call attention to a medium which by virtue of being close to me professionally I was able to study thoroughly and at my leisure. I refer to ABC Diario (ABC Daily) of Madrid, the first national newspaper, as far as I know, to offer a fairly regular column of specialized philately to its readers between May 12, 1933 and July 17, 1936.

The stamp column of ABC in those 3 years was the responsibility of Mateo Fernández, who always used the pseudonym “Stamp”. What do we know of him? Little, unfortunately. Except that in addition to being a collector and philatelic expert he was a physician with a practice in the Puerta del Sol section of Madrid on the second floor of a house on the corner of Mayor and Arenal Streets. We can also presume that he was a friend and perhaps personal physician of the publisher of the newspaper at the time, Juan Ignacio Luca de Tena. And very probably that he died in the whirlwind of the civil war, as never since did his name appear in the pages of the newspaper.

But if there is so much we do not know about his life, we surely have evidence of his philatelic knowledge. Mateo Fernández’ articles always dealt with classic stamps, usually Spanish, his great passion, and show his desire to transmit to his readers knowledge essential to identifying genuine stamps and detect fakes. That was still a time when one could assemble a collection of Spanish classics comfortably and without great expense. The scarcity of literature and the near inexistence of expert committees such as we know them today made it the responsibility of collectors to educate themselves in order to protect themselves from being tricked.

Mateo Fernández' first article was published without prior announcement and dealt with the primitive issues of Chile and included some brief comments on important auctions of the time in Madrid and some digressions on market trends and stamp prices. That article continued 2 weeks later and the 3rd installment included brief comments on secret marks on the Spain issue of 1878. This article would be the first of a large mine of information that Mateo Fernández would probe with supreme mastery in future articles. His articles would deal with practically all the classic issues, starting with the 6 cuartos of 1850, to which he dedicated 3 articles, with identification of 40 distinct types and – what today would be unthinkable for a newspaper – blown up images of each showing their secret marks. He also delved into the primitive Spanish cancelations and into what he called “accidental non-usages”, as well as fakes of the period and stamps and cancels of the Carlist period, another field in which he boasted extraordinary expertise. His articles are also a valuable reference source on the 1935 Reus Philatelic Exposition and the National, held in Madrid from April 2 – 6, 1936, just a few weeks before the outbreak of the conflict that would put an end to the column.

The other major publication of the Spanish press, “Blanco y Negro” (“Black and White”), also had its own philatelic column from July 1934 until July 1936. Given the extremely graphic nature of the magazine, it tended to favor coverage of Spanish and foreign new issues with photographs but did not omit coverage of auction results and even had a philatelic advice column. Although not signed, the column was presumably the responsibility of José María Francés, who continued to author the column in later years when the magazine reappeared in 1957. He continued the column into the 1970s, occasionally collaborating with Néstor Jacob. These were not the only Spanish national-circulation newspaper and magazine to open their pages to philately but we believe they did so earlier, with greater regularity and over a longer time frame than others. Those of us who are still trying to keep the philatelic flame burning in non-specialized publications know how much effort is required to convince editors and publishers to dedicate space to our hobby in competition with the pressure of informative news and paid advertising. In this effort and in homage to those who preceded us in this effort we shall attempt to compile their biographical register. Although the study of this interesting field at the confluence of journalism and philately is far from being completed, we do believe that it would be interesting to compile a modest inventory of collectors and experts who have shared their knowledge in non-philatelic publications. I trust that the reader will forgive the many omissions; the author of this study is grateful for all the supplementary data provided, which will enable this biographical compilation to quickly take form and become a substantial work.

Amada, Mariano
 Boado, Emilia
 Bonet Fusté, Juan
 Cadena, José Maria
 Conte, Jesús
 Dabán Jijazo, Carlos
 Escalada Goicoechea, Eduardo
 Fermentino y Saludes, Manuel de Fernández, Mateo (“Stamp”)
 Fernández Pombo, Alejandro
 Francés, José Maria
 Franco Crespo, Juan
 Galarón Calvo, Andrés
 García Martín, José Ramón
 Gilabert, Francisco
 Fomis Seguí, José Maria
 González Rábago, Pedro
 Huertas, Manuel

Ignacio, José
Iniesta I Bosch, Nuria
Jacob, Néstor
Jiménez Torres, A.
Lázaro Bayarri, José A.
“Linares, Javier”
Linares Castilla, Juan de
Lorente Rodrigáñez, Luis Maria
Martinez, Javier
Masriera, Arturo
Mayo Péez, Leoncio
Montaner i Giró, Pere
Moreno Casado
Palacios, A.
Palau Rabassó
Pardo de Figueroa, Mariano
Pérez Rodriguez, Ángel
Piracés, Agustin
Quesada, Eugenio de
Ribalta Escoda, Jorge
Rodó y Vidal, s.
Romero Rodriguez, José Javier
Sierra Monge, Gregorio
Solá Ruiz, Juan Bautista
Soler Vilá, José Maria
Tharrats, Juan José
Torruela Alsina, Juan
Yáñez Capella, Ricardo J.

END

Enzo Diena

A great sadness for philately: The death of Leon V. Rapkin

[Un grave lutto per la filatelia: La scomparsa di Leon V. Rapkin]

Il Collezionista Italia Filatelica, November 1991, Volume 47, Issue 11, p.16

This translation was found as a typescript in a copy of the issue of the Italian magazine carrying the original article. I included it in this work to preserve it for posterity.

Made available by Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

January 2019

A GREAT SADNESS FOR PHILATELY:

THE DEATH OF LEON V. RAPKIN

British philately is in mourning through the death of Leon Victor Rapkin, who died at his home in London on the morning of 23rd September, at the age of 63. All his friends knew that the health of Leon Rapkin had suffered a few months previously from a serious illness, the first symptoms appeared last April, just when he graciously accepted the organisation of the annual presentation of medals for the Royal Philatelic Society, one of which was received by Nino Aquila.

But nobody thought his end would be so soon let alone on the evening of Saturday 21st September in Cardiff, following the ceremony of signing the Roll of Distinguished Philatelists. Even this year he worked enthusiastically, directing and organising to produce an admirable speech.

Fate however intervened tragically a few hours afterwards, leaving in deep mourning his wife Franceska, his children Simon and Sarah, and numerous philatelists, many of whom attended his funeral. This took place on the afternoon of 25th September in the same cemetery at Golders Green where only 18 months earlier a tribute was paid to Ronald A. G. Lee, the great British philatelist who was a close friend of Rapkin.

Leon was not a veteran of our hobby, he was interested in philately only in 3 colours and in unusual types. He wished to share an interest with his wife Franceska, already well known as a specialist in thematic philately, particularly the issues of the 1936 Berlin Olympics, in memory of the city where she was born. Around 1975 Leon also wished to be close to his wife in the field of philately and became a collector, but traditional not thematic. Also of German origin, he began to collect first issues of the German Empire, the famous "shields" of 1872, both small and large. So he entered the world of the philatelic and soon in London he showed his exceptional talents as a gentleman and organiser. Later, in 1978, he was asked to become secretary to the Committee of the Roll of Distinguished Philatelists, a duty which, as we have seen, he carried out superbly to the end of his life.

A change of ownership in the great multinational companies of products he controlled led several years ago to his early retirement. Leon had no doubts, from then onwards he dedicated himself totally to philately although always in an honorary role.

Whilst his German Empire collection was continually expanding, so as to gain him an international gold medal, the philatelic career of Leon Rapkin reached its peak with the signing of the “Roll”, in the Isle of Man in 1984, with the three years as President of the British Philatelic Society (1988-1990) and with his election as President of the Royal Philatelic Society London. He was due to take this title in June 1992, however fate did not allow him effectively to succeed to this prestigious post. The most noteworthy proof of his ability came as Executive President of “Stamp World 1990”, the great world fair at Alexandra Palace in London in May last year. He directed operations in meticulous detail, transferring himself full-time to the small, elegant base in Charterhouse Road in the City, which hosts most of Britain’s philately; with brilliant reasoning he overcame the infinite difficulties which he continually met.

He was preparing to transfer to Genoa in September 1992 the precious parchment of the “Roll”. Others will continue this delicate operation, people pass but life goes on. After Leon Rapkin, philately and not only British, will not be the same; nobody can forget the lessons of efficient organisation, smiling tenacity and impeccable style that he gave in these years.

END

Gerhard Lang-Valchs^b

The Engravers of Jean-Baptiste Moens^a

[Los grabadores de Jean-Baptiste Moens]

El Eco Filatélico y Numismático, September 2017, Volume 73, pp.28-30 & October, pp.25-27

Translated by Lawrence A. DiFiore for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

January 2018

THE ENGRAVERS OF JEAN-BAPTISTE MOENS

PART 1

Translator's Note: The author's references are numbered; the translator's notes are indicated by letters.

Jean-Baptiste Moens (1833-1908) was a bookseller, antiquarian, publisher, and one of the most famous Belgian and European dealers and stamp collectors. He first began publication in 1862. After his death, the philatelic world found out that the majority of his articles and books were in fact the work of his collaborator, Louis Hanciau^c. This article will focus on discovering who were the other collaborators who worked with Moens and Hanciau, the illustrators of hundreds of publications between 1862 and 1900.

For the major part of almost four decades of editorial activity, Moens published many different types of material: books on philatelic subjects like Postage Stamp Forgeries; his monthly magazine Le Timbre-Poste, into which he later combined Le Timbre Fiscal; seven illustrated editions of his Catalogue Prix-Courant between 1864 and 1892; and monographs on the stamps of dozens of countries and territories.¹

Comparing the different illustrations and the cover pages of his works, one realizes that he had to have employed different artists for these illustrations. Although he himself never said anything explicitly about this, it is clear that the engraver who made the plates for his magazine could not have been the same person who supplied the wood block engravings for his books and parts of the last two editions of the Catalogue Prix Courant.

The First Engravers

Young Moens's first project was something completely new for both Europe and the world: a catalogue of all the postage stamps issued to date, with illustrations of the majority of the stamps. There were about 550 different illustrations printed on 54 engraved plates published in 17 installments. In March of 1864, when he updated the catalog, it included illustrations of all the stamps in the new edition.²

The database for this work was his own stamp collection. The illustrators in charge of this project were two engravers from Brussels, Pierre Schmitz and François Rademaeker. Both men had vast experience in the field of map-making. François Rademaeker (1822–ca.1895) began working as an engraver in the Établissement Géographique [Geographical Institute] (See illustration), a private workshop started by Philippe Vandermaelen. Over the years the workshop gained a reputation for the excellence of all its various kinds of engraved topographical maps.³ While employed in the Geographical Institute, Rademaeker worked on the Topographical Map of Belgium as an illustrator; and later worked on adding the colors to the Geological Map of Belgium. At the end of these two projects his employment at the institute came to an end. Rademaeker's employment with Moens was temporary, as was his work on the designs of the humorous envelopes, the English propaganda envelopes against slavery, and his work for the Ocean Penny Postage.^d In 1865 the French Department of Military Archives and Cartography needed map makers, an opportunity which presented Rademaeker with the prospect of full-time employment.⁴

We know much less about the second worker, Pierre Schmitz. We must assume that both men's professional training had to have been similar, and that Schmitz also may have worked at the Geographical Institute, and had worked there for some time as an engraver or illustrator. After working with Moens, Schmitz also went to work for the French Department of Military Archives and Cartography. Much later (1878–1947) Schmitz worked at the Institute of Military Cartography, where both he and Rademaeker finished off their professional careers.

Moens not only provided dealers and stamp collectors the ability to actually see the authentic designs of stamps, but was also recognized and praised throughout the philatelic world. The English writer Charles W. Viner^e translated the Catalogue into English, making it available to the English-speaking world. The quality of the images was so good that Edward Loines Pemberton^f, a stamp expert, was able to detect that seven of the illustrated stamps were copies of forgeries.⁵ Since Pemberton's attention apparently was focused only on the most expensive stamps, he did not notice that there were some Spanish forgeries; and possibly there remain some forgeries from other countries yet to be detected.⁶

The Changeover

The Les Timbres-Poste Illustratés catalogue was the first and last project that Moens and his engravers worked on together. None of the illustrated stamps in this catalogue were ever updated in any of Moens's other catalogues or in his magazine. For the reasons why Rademaeker and Schmitz left Moens's employ we can only speculate. Possibly they wanted to protect all their rights as the authors of the illustrations and typographic plates. Or perhaps continuing to work for Moens held little interest for them, or maybe their ongoing employment was becoming too expensive for Moens.

When, in March or April of 1864, Moens published both the catalogue and the stamp images, some of these illustrations, but not the lithographic engravings, were obviously not the work of either of the two engravers (Rademaeker and Schmitz). The same illustrations had already appeared previously in various issues of Moens's magazine Le Timbre-Poste.⁷

Since we come across very few references to Moens's engravers in his publications, it is not easy to identify this other engraver. None are ever directly named. Out of about twenty workers mentioned across almost 40 years until the magazine ceased publication, we can conclude that there was no direct and personal contact between Moens and this other engraver, and further, the unnamed engraver did not live in Brussels. Based on these deductions, we shall attempt to reveal his identity in an unorthodox, but ultimately successful manner.

The first postage stamp of Antigua (See illustration)

This stamp is the only one that represents the island of Antigua in Torres' Album [of Postage Stamps]⁸. This stamp could be seen for years on the cover of the French magazine Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste beginning with its first issue in November 1864. But even before that we come across the same stamp in one of the first issues of the English *Stamp Collector's Review and Monthly Advertiser*⁹. More than ten years later it also appears in Moens' Catalogue Prix Courant¹⁰.

A comparison of an actual original and one of the illustrations will show the differences in design between the two. This analysis will be done by comparing the illustrated examples which we have taken from Torres's Album. The results will be surprising.

For both types (original and illustration) nine columns with alternating lines form the background of the image, over which the profile of the queen of England is superimposed, between two panels above and below containing the inscription and value. The first type of decoration is composed of fine lines crossing diagonally in the middle of the columns forming a red-colored rhombus or diamond shape. There are 17 on each side. The second type shows 27 rows of small vertical stripes, six or five alternately. The face and neck are entirely covered by shaded lines formed by dots. On the nape of the neck can be seen crossed lines.

In the illustrations, the crossed lines lose their symmetry. While the 24 diamonds of the right column still have, more or less, the vertical orientation, to the left it is lost above the tenth lower diamond and it is difficult to determine exactly the total number of diamonds that, according to the way of counting, varies between 23 and 25. The columns with the dashes show 28 rows to the left and 23 to the right, the number of stripes is always 4.

These differences are seen in every one of the illustrations shown. The same happens again with the following details: in the original the panels above and below the face touch the exterior columns, but in the illustrations the panels cover part of the columns. The face and neck are no longer completely covered by the shading lines. 17 are counted in the face until the chin, 15 on the neck and nape of the neck, the three shortest are sometimes hard to see.

The three illustrations are practically identical except for some small imperfections due to the printing process. It was not possible in that era to use some photographic technique to reproduce those stamps. When making a manual copy it is impossible to get the perfection and fidelity of reproduction that we see here. The coincidence of all the basic strokes and even of all the details indicates that all these illustrations were copied from the same original stone.

The engraver was a lithographer who supplied his products to various editors including Moens who in this case was his last customer¹¹. There is a very strong probability that Plácido Ramón de Torres is the author of these illustrations. There is a good chance of finding more, similar examples to these illustrations in his Album.

The La Guaira Stamp

We came across illustrations of this stamp in various European stamp journals¹². [These included Moens' Le Timbre-Poste, 1869 number 78, p.44; the Stamp Collector's Magazine, 1869, p.120; and the Le Timbrophile, 1869, p.456.] As in other similar cases, analyzed in previous publications, the illustrations' perforations do not correspond to the perforations of the authentic original stamp. The perforations are the work of someone who tried to copy the original perforations¹³. The present model, nevertheless, is the same in all the illustrated stamps [a: 12, b: 14, c: 11, d: 14], something which tells us that they are all most probably the same¹⁴.

It is impossible to see any differences among the three illustrated stamps. The defects of the engraving have been transferred to the images in all three publications. We have even been lucky enough to find a plate of the illustrations. It shows the same defects to which we referred earlier. The lack of differences in the illustrations confirms that it really was a single plate, one which suffered a small flaw in the perforation of the lower left after it was used.¹⁵ The differences between the original and the copy, present in all the illustrations and, of course, also in the plate, are found mostly in the wavy line that forms a kind of second perforation or outer frame. There is a total of 9 breaks. Three above, just in the left corner, above the left arrow and on top of the "U" of "PAQUETTE", two on the right, at the height of the "T" of "PTO" and the second "L" of "CABELLO", two below, one below each "2" of the value and finally two on the left side at the height of the first and second "A" of the inscription. These coincidences and the absence of differences in the design of the boat and the waves, the hardest parts to reproduce, confirm to us again that the illustrations presented, including the plate, are identical and come from the same stone and the same engraver. It connotes the existence of an engraver who did not supply Moens exclusively with his illustrations, but also supplied other European publishers such as Pemberton, Maury, and Mahé. One could present many other cases which confirm parallel and continuing deliveries over the years.

Article References:

1. A. Leclercq, G. Waroquiers: Jean-Baptiste Moens (1833-1908), Father of Stamp Collecting, Brussels, 1981.
2. Jean-Baptiste Moens [JBM]: Postage Stamps Illustrated [TPI], Brussels, 1864.
3. The spelling of his name is changing. (Translator: I am not sure whose name is being referred to here, although the referenced sentence contains Vandermaelen's name.)
4. Marguerite Silvestre: A Collection of Vandermaelen's cartography kept at the Royal Library of Belgium, Volume 6 by Philippe Vandermaelen: Bibliography of employees at the Geographical Institute of Belgium and the Teachers' Training College of Brussels, 2014, pp.86-88, 413-14.
4. Stamp Collector's Magazine, 1863, pp.63-64.
5. Gerhard Lang-Valchs [GLV]: The father of philately and the forgeries of Spain, El Eco Filatélico y Numismático, March 2013, pp.28-30.
6. Jean-Baptiste Moens: Postage Stamps Illustrated, pp.41, 48, 70, 88, 96, 121; Le Timbre-Poste, 1863, pp.10, 12; 1864, p.4, 19, 20, 25, 26.
8. Plácido Ramón de Torres [PRT]: Postage Stamp Album..., Barcelona 1879, p.163.
9. Stamp Collector's Review and Monthly Advertiser, 1863, p.36.
10. Jean-Baptiste Moens: Catalog Prix-Courant, 5th edition, Brussels, 1877, plate 1, number 34.
11. Currently there are two other documented and published cases which lead us to the same conclusion. Gerhard Lang-Valchs: How an Old Album threw new light on 19th century forgeries, Stamp Lover, Volume 108, December 2016, pp.174-176; Gerhard Lang-Valchs: The First British Stamp Experts and 'Their' Spanish forgeries, London Philatelist, 2017, not yet published.

12. Le Timbre-Poste, 1869, n° 78, p.44; Stamp Collector's Magazine, 1869, p.120; Le Timbrophile, 1869, p.456.
13. Gerhard Lang-Valchs: How..., p.174.
14. The letters indicate the side of the stamp, starting with the top (a) and following in a clockwise direction, the numbers refer to the perforation holes.
15. The plate image has been inverted to facilitate comparison. Naturally it can be a plate that was used by a magazine or a catalog that is unknown to me that already had the aforementioned defect, transferred from the original engraving.

Translator's Notes

Preliminary note: Lithography is the art of printing images from stones, while xylography is the art of printing images from engraved wood blocks. Both types of artists can collectively be called engravers. The engravers referred to in these two articles used both lithography and xylography to print original stamps and the stamp illustrations or artwork that appeared in stamp magazines and postage catalogues.

- a. Jean-Baptiste Moens, born 27th May 1833 in Tournai – died 28th April in Ixelles, was a Belgian stamp dealer and publisher of stamp catalogues, who is regarded as the first dealer in stamps for collectors. Together with Louis Hanciau, Moens published the first Belgian stamp catalog in March of 1862. This article delves into who the engravers were who worked for Moens and produced his stamp catalogues. On Moens' death, numerous obituaries in the philatelic press referred to him as the Father of Philately.
- b. Gerhard Lang-Valchs, the author of this article, was born in 1951 in Dudweiler, a borough in the German city of Saarbrücken. Educated in German and Spanish studies as well as Theology, he earned a doctorate in History from the University of Saarland in Saarbrücken. After a career in teaching History, he retired in 2013. He is the author of many works on postal and philatelic history. Lang-Valchs is also a translator and interpreter of German, Spanish, and Catalan. He currently resides in Bilbao, a city in Northern Spain. This article was published in El Eco Filatélico y Numismático, September 2017, pp.30-32, known simply as El Eco. It is the monthly magazine of the Federación Española de Sociedades Filatélicas (FESOFI) (Spanish Federation of Philatelic Societies).
- c. Louis Hanciau, born 9th April 1835 – died 11th November 1924, was the collaborator of Jean-Baptiste Moens. After Moens' retirement in 1900, Hanciau wrote for Stanley Gibbons Monthly Journal. In one of his Journal articles, Hanciau describes how as a young man of 17 he used to pay postmen for stamps they tore off letters. So many customers complained about receiving "damaged" mail, that the practice became an offence punishable by dismissal of the postman. Hanciau signed the Roll of Distinguished Philatelists in 1921.
- d. The Ocean Penny Postage was the initiative of Elihu Burritt (1810–1879), American diplomat, philanthropist, and social activist. Founder of the League of Universal Brotherhood in 1846, Burritt devoted his life to working for international peace. He organized the first international congress of the Friends of Peace, which met in Brussels in 1846. The Ocean Penny Postage was Burritt's attempt to get Great Britain to issue an international "Ocean Penny Post" and reduce the cost from one shilling (12 pence) to three pence. He argued that this would increase international correspondence, trade, and, therefore, universal brotherhood. He also urged the use of propaganda envelopes as well. Although the cost of the carriage and delivery of mail was gradually reduced, his Ocean Penny Postage initiative was unsuccessful.

- e. Charles W. Viner (1812–14th March 1906) was a British philatelist who was a founding member of the Philatelic Society, London, which later became the Royal Philatelic Society London. He served as its secretary from 1871 to 1874. and was present at the initial meeting of the society on the 10th April 1869. On his death, The London Philatelist referred to him as the “Father of Philately” and elsewhere he was described as the vieille garde (old guard) of philately having been actively collecting and writing about stamps since 1860. In 1921 his name was entered on the Roll of Distinguished Philatelists as one of the founding Fathers of Philately.
- f. Edward Loines Pemberton (10th December 1844 – 12th December 1878) was a pioneering philatelist and stamp dealer. He was a proponent of the scientific (or French) school of philately and a founding member of The Philatelic Society, London, now The Royal Philatelic Society London. Pemberton’s name was entered on the Roll of Distinguished Philatelists in 1921 as one of the Fathers of Philately. Although born in New York City, he was educated in Britain by relatives when his parents died shortly after his birth.

THE ENGRAVERS OF JEAN-BAPTISTE MOENS

PART 2

Translator’s Note: The author’s references are numbered; the translator’s notes are indicated by letters.

The Parisian publishers Arthur Maury^c and Pierre Mahé^d

Without a doubt, our engraver was the sole supplier of artwork for the magazines of the two most famous and widely known French stamp dealers, Arthur Maury and Pierre Mahé. The clearest poof of this is found in their publications between January and August 1867. Le Timbrophile^e (Tph) did not publish any illustrations between the months of January and April and so left empty spaces where they should have appeared. Le Collectionneur de Timbres-postes (CTP) was also obliged to suspend publication between February and August^f.

At the beginning of 1867, French Customs had confiscated shipments containing the plates, thinking them to be forgeries which were part of some criminal activity. After months of negotiations with the authorities and several official requests, in July or August the impounded plates were handed over and publication could once again resume without fear of government reprisals. The comparison of the illustrations, now published at the same time, by both dealers clearly shows they were the same illustrations made by the same engraver.¹⁶ Since Moens resided in Brussels and was not affected by interference from French Customs, a comparison of these illustrations with those published by Moens during the same months, confirms once again that we are dealing with identical copies engraved from the same stone. That is to say, all of the illustrations are coming from the same source.

The Elephant of Catania^g

Up to now it has been clear that the author and engraver of the illustrations published in the three central European philatelic journals is the same person. We have been able to locate him abroad, outside France. His identity remains to be confirmed despite some well-founded suspicions. Documentation from the case of the municipal stamps of Catania will effectively dispel any remaining uncertainty.

In the Spring of 1874, when Torres^h was still living in Italy, the Gazette des Timbres (Stamp Gazette) published two articles on the municipal stamps of eight Italian cities.¹⁸ The text of the articles was accompanied by illustrations of one stamp from each series. Among them was a very informative and striking design: The Elephant of Catania. The series from which this stamp came was the invention and creation of Plácido Ramón de Torres, who publicized and offered those stamps in his own journal. He also sold them, including used stamps, even though the municipal authorities of Catania had not yet decided to accept the Spaniard's offer to print them and accept his plates as the official stamps, which actually never happened. As a result, these initial stamps became worthless and Torres was obliged to buy back the ones he had already sold¹⁹.

To eliminate any remaining doubts about Torres' authorship, we shall now move on to a detailed comparative analysis of the various original 1 lira stamps and the illustration²¹.

The number of bottom lines which touch the corners on the left side (a) and on the right side (b) are always the same in both the originals and in the illustrations.²² Other minor matching details are the small break in the internal and external lines of the left panel at the same height as the "O" (of "Diritto"). The "O" inside the opposite panel shows a defect that resembles an accent mark on its upper part. The eleventh line of surface III, counting from the bottom, penetrates from the bottom up into the white space which surrounds the small circle, partially covered by the lower left corner of the shield. The top line that delimits the bottom panel is interrupted and doesn't touch the circle containing the small "1". The space on each side of the small "1" is a distinctive feature of this value and mistakenly suggests that the last line on the bottom has been removed. Some re-touching in the frame and in the two background lines above the "A" have eliminated the break which was seen in the originals and reinforced the lines in this area. This, along with a slight excess of ink and seen without magnification, tricks the eyes and gives the impression that the "A" of "LIRA" in the illustration is larger than in the original. The results of our analysis show a complete match in all the details. This in turn, indicates that it is impossible for the illustration to be a manual copy of an original, just as it is unlikely to be an older copy, made by hand and taken directly from an original plate made by another engraver. Therefore, what we see before us is an identical copy taken directly from the stamp's original stone.

The only time that Moens presents a stamp from this never-issued series was in his catalogue of 1877.²³ In this case, he presents the 5 Lire value. However, even in this case, the comparison of the 5 Lira image with the matching originals of the series give the same result, reaffirming our previous conclusion.

I believe it is now clear that the author of this artwork is Plácido Ramón de Torres and it was he who supplied the most important European philatelic editors, including Moens, with their stamp illustrations.²⁴

Some Biographical Notes

Plácido Ramón de Torres was born in Estepona (Malaga) in 1847. He spent his youth in Italy, most likely in Florence. While there, Elia Carlo Usigli, the son of the antiquarian and publisher Angelo Usigli, discovered Torres's talent when he was learning to be a lithographer. Usigli was one of the first Italian and European stamp dealers, and he made good use of the young Spaniard's talents to engrave and sell illustrations of postage stamps to the editors of the new philatelic journals throughout Europe. The engraved stones served much later to make forgeries.

In 1872/73 Torres opened his own shop in Livorno. His stamp journal, La Posta Mondiale and the two or three editions of his Catologo Prezzo Corrente di tutti Francobolli ... were co-financed by his mentor. In 1874, the failed attempt to sell the municipal stamps of Catania ends the relationship with Usigli and forces Torres to leave Italy forever.²⁵

Torres then establishes his residence in Barcelona, opens a stamp shop there, and continues to produce his illustrations and forgeries. Very little is known of his commercial activities. The most important, without a doubt, is the publication of his stamp album in 1879. He seems to retire from business at the beginning of the first decade of the new century, possibly coinciding with the closing of Moens's business and magazine.

The Identifying Hallmarks of Torres

An artist's work presents unique and personal strokes which identify their author. In the case at hand, dealing with copies of stamps, it is much more difficult to see such unique details because the supreme goal of the artist is to produce a faithful copy, which leaves no room for any unique deviations.

Torres is, nevertheless, a special case. From the beginning of his lithographic work, he involves both publisher and collector in a very special and daring game, one difficult to discover, a game that includes deliberate "errors" in the copies. He was convinced that nobody was capable of detecting his true "errors", his forgeries, which came to play a large part in almost all of his illustrations.²⁶ And he was right. Very few people realized that he was presenting these continuing "mistakes" over and over again; and no one realized that these were not accidental errors, but rather intentional and provoked by his desire to play a game, the scope of which was never discovered, or at least publically denounced.

On a few occasions, during almost 40 years of appearance, one can barely count a dozen, there appeared letters to the editor in the (Moens) magazine or in other philatelic publications, denouncing a specific stamp as a forgery. Moens always had an excuse but the matter never went away. However, the documented cases form only a small part of all of the existing examples. The Russian stamps known as *Zemstvo*ⁱ show a surprising accumulation of those errors. A recent article about the affected stamps in Samuel Koprowski's 1875 book, published by Moens and illustrated with lithographs from his magazine, shows the most striking errors, arguing that they were not accidental but intentional²⁷. This game continues throughout the existence of the Le Timbre Poste. In a new edition of a book about local Russian stamps in 1893 we once again see the errors already recognized, in addition to new examples also published in the magazine, examples gathered during the later years²⁸. The errors, however, are not limited to Russian stamps. Examples abound in stamps from all over the world.

We see the most convincing examples in La Posta Mondiale, the magazine founded by Torres. In each issue, there was an additional page with some of his creations. Here we present two elements of the deception taken from some of these creations.²⁹

The inscriptions are the preferred location for this deception. First, the inversion of the “S” and the “N” of “RISCONTRO”; the second is changing the form of some letters, here the first letter of “PERC^o” has been changed to an “R”. These two changes make up the majority of cases. There are however, other examples, such as the stamp of the Carlist War^j. On that stamp, the three fleur de lys^k of the shield are converted into a face with a satirical smile³⁰.

A Shared Continuity

At some point between the fifth edition of the Catalogue Prix-Courant in 1877 and the next edition in 1884, the basis of cooperation between Moens and Torres seems to have changed. Moens begins to commission xylographic plates for his monographs. Up to the present day we have not been able to find any reasons for this change. Possibly the publication of the first book on Russian stamps had something to do with it. Moens seems to have given the engraving plates to the author without consulting Torres. On the other hand, Torres had published his own stamp catalogue in 1879 and did not want more competition. Torres had sold copies of the plates to a dealer from Madrid named Leopoldo Lopez who, before using them himself, gave them to Antonio Fernandez Duro to illustrate his *Reseña Histórico-Descriptiva*³¹.

The most curious aspect is that the artwork redone as engraved plates are based on those made by Torres and not on the original stamps. This is clearly seen in the fact that the new engraver faithfully copies all the errors made by Torres. This phenomenon is not only seen in the second edition of the book on local Russian stamps, published in 1893, but also in Moens' monographs and in the last two editions of his Catalogue Prix-Courant.

The sixth edition of the catalogue shows 4,902 illustrations of which 4,750 are xylographs according to indications from the book itself. It is difficult to affirm outright, but it seems that none of Torres' illustrations, published previously in the magazine, reappear in later catalogues, a situation reminiscent of 1864 when Moens was parting ways with his engravers. Although Torres disappears after 1899, his illustrations will continue to be with us in Le Timbre-Post along with their forgeries. At this point Moens placed on sale his more than 10,000 postage stamp plates and 2,300 tax stamp plates, most of which were made over the years from the artwork of Torres.³²

In the photo we see one of the few examples that were discovered and publically denounced³³ (Victoria/Vicdoria).

The identity of Moens' xylograph engraver remains at least for the moment in darkness. Identifying Torres as the author of practically all the artwork used in Moens' magazine opens new pathways for investigation, for example, of the Haitian forgeries or the private company seals used for mail in the United States, which up to now have been attributed to the Belgian.

References

16. CTP, 1867, number 32, pp.333-337; Tph, 1867, number 27-29; 30, p.241.
17. In this case, which seems quite obvious, we save the reader from the explanation and details of the analysis because the corresponding illustrations are easily accessible on the internet and can be downloaded here: <http://memoires.timbrologie.online.fr/> (23rd November 2016;10.50.)
18. Gazette de Timbres, number 6, February 1874, pp.47-48; number 7, March 1874, pp.55-56.
19. La Posta Mondiale (LPM), number 4, p.32; number 5, p.40; number 9, pp.65-66.
20. In comparing these illustrations with those in Torres' Postage Stamps Album, we can see that they are identical. Plácido Ramón de Torres: Album de Sellos de Correo ..., Barcelona, 1879.
21. Torres had engraved a separate stone for each value. Therefore, the different values cannot be compared with each other, something which is clearly seen in the configuration of the bottom lines.
22. I (a: 29, b: 13); II (a: 27, b: 13); III (a: 11; b: 25); IV (a: 11; b: 25) beginning at the upper left corner and proceeding around clockwise.
23. Jean-Baptiste Moens: Catalogue Prix-Courant, 5th edition, Brussels, 1877, plate 33, number 2149.
24. Gerhard Lang-Valchs: Early British stamp experts and Spanish forgeries, London Philatelist, Volume 126, No. 1444, April 2017, pp.132-138.
25. Gerhard Lang-Valchs: Count Julius Caesar Bonasi, accused of fraud, Qui Filatelia, 85, September 2016, pp.8-12. (Translator's note: Qui Filatelia is the journal of the Federation of Italian Philatelic Societies since 1995.)
26. Forgeries seized in Germany (Bremen 1886) and later in the United States (1891/92) have never been published as illustrations.
27. Samuel Koprowski: Rural Postage Stamps of Russia, Brussels, 1875.
Gerhard Lang-Valchs, Olga Frey: Moens, Torres and the Zemstvo Stamps, Deutsche Zeitschrift für Russlands-Philatelie, number 105, January. 2017, pp.19-26.
28. Jean-Baptiste Moens: Les Timbres de Russie, Brussels, 1893.
29. La Posta Mondiale, 6, table 6, number 5; 11, table 11, number 2.
30. This "error" is one of the few that resulted in a letter of complaint to the editor, published in the magazine. Le Timbre-Poste number 136, p.29.
31. Antonio Fernandez Duro: Reseña Histórico Descriptiva de los Sellos de España, Madrid, 1881. In a final note Duro thanks López for lending him the plates to illustrate his book.
32. Jean-Baptiste Moens: Prix-Courant de Timbres-Postes, enveloppes, cartes, etc., Brussels, 1899, Part 1, last advertisement page (not numbered).
33. The Philatelic Record, III (1881), number 26, p.26.

Translator's Notes:

- c. Arthur Maury (Paris, 31st July 1844 – 1st December 1907) was a French philatelist who was one of the Fathers of Philately entered on the Roll of Distinguished Philatelists in 1921.
- d. Pierre Mahé (1833? – 2nd February 1913) was French stamp dealer who was acknowledged as one of the Fathers of Philately on the Roll of Distinguished Philatelists.

- e. Maury's publication.
- f. The brown illustration contains Mahé's notice of suspension of publication "due to administrative reasons beyond our control..." with an explanation of the empty boxes where the stamp illustrations should normally appear; and a reassurance of resuming publication as soon as possible.
- g. Second largest city of Sicily, ranked among the ten largest cities of Italy, it is located on the East coast of Sicily, facing the Ionian Sea. Catania is situated near Mount Etna, famous for its historic volcanic eruptions.
- h. Recall Plácido Ramón de Torres [PRT], publisher of the Postage Stamp Album ..., Barcelona, 1879.
- i. Zemstva were local government officials who ruled from 1861 during the Great Emancipation Reform of Alexander II. These officials were shut down after the October Revolution of 1917.
- j. The Carlist Wars were three wars fought at various times in Spain from 1833 to 1876. In each war, the followers of Carlos V attempted to install him and later his descendants on the Spanish throne.
- k. In heraldry, a Fleur de Lys is a stylized lily.

END

H. Edgar Weston

A note on J. B. Moens's Catalogue Prix-Courant of 1868

The Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society, October 1912, Volume 5, Issue 4, pp.61-62

{Although the article is given in its entirety, only the letters from L. Hanciau and J. van der Maelen, which were quoted in their original French, have been translated.}

Translation by Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 47350 Montignac Toupinerie, France
January 2018

A NOTE ON J. B. MOENS'S CATALOGUE PRIX-COURANT OF 1868

Amongst the varieties of editions of the publications of J. B. Moens, one may cite his Catalogue prix-courant of 1868, printed on coloured paper. The copy in Lord Crawford's library is inscribed at the top of the half title à Monsieur de Seville, Souvenirs de J. B. Moens. Ce 27 Mai 1868. Through the kindness of M. Hanciau, I have lately obtained some information with regard to this particular catalogue and the remarkable individual who originally possessed it. Curious to relate, he was neither a collector of stamps nor a collector of philatelic books in particular, yet it is well within the bounds of possibility that other varieties of paper are due to the whim of this lover of rare editions. As to the year in which M. Moens came in touch with him, that is not yet recorded, neither have I yet been able to obtain particulars of the date of his decease. Can it be that the volumes of Le Timbre-Poste dating from 1866 as original printings issued on papers of various colours were due to de Sévilla? Further, as M. Hanciau suggests, there may be other variations of the regular editions of the catalogues of Moens, which have, so far as I am aware, yet to be discovered. Herewith I give extracts from letters bearing on the subject:-

Brussels, 22nd September 1912

Dear Sir,

I received your amiable letter of the 19th and in response I can tell you that the dedication of Mr. Moens reminded me of a fact that was quite out of my memory. It's not Mr. de Seville, but it must be Mr. de Sévilla. He was a marquis, an old boy living alone like a bear. He had the hobby of rare books. He asked Mr. Moens to print for him alone a catalog on special paper. And I think he must have had this done for several editions. Those were things I did not care about, it was Mr. Moens who was dealing with these things.

I believe there was only one copy of this printed. If there have been several certainly Mr. Moens would have kept a copy of it. I will ask his eldest son if he has found a copy in the estate and I will inform you in time. Mr. Moens' son lives in the country, but he often comes to see me, and I will not forget to talk to him about it. . . .

Cordial greetings,
L. Hanciau

The next letter bearing on the subject is as follows :-

Brussels 4th October 1912

Dear Sir

I was slow to answer you because I was waiting for Mr. Moens' visit and he was slow to answer my call because he wanted to consult his brothers. As a result of this general consultation, no one has had a catalog on colored paper and therefore my friend Moens has left nothing to his heirs which recalls what you are talking about. Mr. de Sévilla has never been a collector of stamps. He was a filthy maniac like a louse, eating like a laborer, but not sparing any expense for his books, many of them obscene. Living in a slum where he did not receive anyone, his house was full of books. In short, an uninteresting person who bought stamp catalogs like books. So there is no reason to talk about it. As for M ... he will have bought the catalog [the copy in the Crawford library] at the death of Sévilla, I do not know when this was. I urge you for Moens' publications to refer to the book of Mr. de Bosredon Bibliothèque Timbrologique de la France et de la Belgique, written according to the notes of the Moens/Hanciau collaboration. I cannot give you more because we searched our memories and many, for me, have faded. . . .

Cordial greetings,
L. Hanciau

It will be observed that M. Hanciau expresses the opinion that only one copy was printed of the catalogue of 1868, no other having been found at the decease of J. B. Moens. In de Bosredon's Bibliographie, however, it is mentioned that some copies were printed on coloured paper. The edition was, doubtless a very limited one, but two copies at least are known, one being in the possession of Lord Crawford, and the other with the president of this Society [Edward Denny Bacon]. Possibly the publication of these notes may bring to light others—either of the 1868 or of subsequent varieties of edition. The following postscript to a letter of M. J. van der Maelen of 6th August 1879, was, I anticipated, connected with the de Sévilla mentioned in this paper: Perhaps you could usefully consult for the arms of the Philippine Islands Mr. Frédéric Sevilla formerly attached to the Spanish Embassy, I do not know his address but I met him again yesterday, if your letter had reached me one day sooner I would have spoken to him, he is an avid fan of book sales, you must know him and his address. Mr. Hanciau replies, however, as follows: Mr. J. Vandermaelen's letter cannot relate to Mr. de Sévilla, who he should not know. I did not read the rest of the letter in question that did not relate I think only to the coat of arms of the Philippines.

END

Louis Ottinger

The stamp trade in Paris under the second empire

[Le commerce des timbres à Paris sous le second empire]

Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste, July/September 1964, Volume 100,

Whole number 716, pp.1-3

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac Toupinerie, France

May 2018

THE STAMP TRADE IN PARIS UNDER THE SECOND EMPIRE

Editor's Note: The French Second Empire lasted from the 2nd December 1852 when Louis-Napoléon re-established the Empire and declared himself Emperor Napoléon III. It ended on the 1st September 1870 with the surrender of the French Army and Napoléon III to the Prussians at Sedan.

While the Amicale Philatélique is organizing a convention dedicated to classic stamps to celebrate its 50th anniversary, this seems a good time to remember certain pioneers of the philatelic business that has become so important today.

Closing our eyes we can allow ourselves to be transported back to a time when the post offices sold the "Imperial Franc", paying no attention to "tête-bêche" and when our forefathers would receive covers from abroad franked with some of today's greatest rarities.

The desire to collect is part of the essence of being human and we can be sure that philately was born as soon as the first postage stamp made its appearance.

It was at the Tuileries Gardens in Paris that we encounter the first transactions between school children and future sailors at the Grand Bassin: the stamp bourse made its appearance.

A little later, at the Jardin du Luxembourg, a second bourse appeared that would become quite important.

These gatherings raised the eyebrows of the security services as a potential cause of civil disturbances so the bourse moved permanently to the corner of Gabriel and Marigny Avenues, where it boldly pursued its activity for over a century.

The participants at first exchanged stamp for stamp but quickly realized that certain stamps were available in quantity while others appeared only rarely. Thus, cash transactions soon followed.

Edard de Laplante can be considered the first stamp dealer in Paris. He was a talented engraver and a distinguished numismatist who one day in 1860 discovered a full pane of the 20c black of 1849 in the stock of a second-hand dealer. He bought it for 30 francs and sold it for a large profit.

After this success he dedicated all his activities to stamps and we find traces of them in his correspondence with J.-B. Moens of Brussels early in 1861.

From his office in rue Christine, E. de Laplante was the first pioneer in the new issues business, as his relationship with De La Rue of London allowed him to offer the stamps of the British colonies at the uniform rate of 15c per penny.

He was a serious merchant who could foresee the science in philately and had the confidence of the first great collectors such as de Saulcy and Arthur de Rothschild, whose collections he organized and completed. By 1862 de Laplante had published a price list of 1083 stamps and 100 postal stationery items.

This leads me to mention in passing that at the end of 1861 the first work bearing the pompous name “catalogue” made its appearance. Compiled by a historian named Alfred Potiquet with the collaboration of de Laplante, it was simply a listing of about 1200 items including envelopes.

Potiquet had serious conflicts with Moens, who he accused of having plagiarized him in his own catalogue of March 1862.

We shall now move on to an intellectual second-hand dealer, François Valette, who had a shop at 32 rue St.-Sulpice. Valette hung frames on his door, each containing 100 stamps and offered at 2 francs per stamp. 2 francs in 1862 was a huge price and he had little success but for some very rare items that he put in there through ignorance... “Chopin” was born.

The name Valette would have been forgotten if he hadn’t been the author of The Collector’s Manual, in which he advised cleaning stamps in bleach, trimming the margins as far as possible, lightening the cancelation with Epsom salts and using paste to affix them in the album! Many rarities became extremely rare thanks to such “wise” counsel.

The following portrait will be of Alexandre Bailleu, whose father had a book store at 13 quai des Grands Augustins.

Seeing the growing enthusiasm for stamps, this young man got the idea of displaying his collection in his father’s window display. This was successful: 25 francs income on the first day! The whole family got involved and thanks to some large purchases, the Bailleu firm soon became one of the busiest in Paris.

At that time the British Colonies had the most favored place in albums. Bailleu got the idea of contacting 25 French consulates in those colonies, sending them 125 francs each and asking them to send a selection of stamps of that value. He was quite successful and this further increased the reputation of his firm.

It was the young Bailleu who collaborated in 1862 on the compilation of the first album published in France: the Justin-Lallier.

It was in 1860 that a newcomer whose name is still famous would settle in Paris: Arthur Maury was 19 years old but since the age of 16 he had attracted a good clientele in Boulogne-sur-Mer, where his father was a glove maker.

He had his first location at 5 rue de Richelieu, then rue Le Pelletier, later rue St-Lazare and cité Malesherbes. Finally he moved to boulevard Montmartre in 1891, where the firm is still located today. Roger North, the current director, erected a remarkable plaque to mark the centenary of the firm. It recounts the history of the firm, which is an important part of the history of the development of philately in France. For more details on Maury, I refer you to his catalogs, the first of which was published in 1865, and to the newsletter, which he created in 1864. He is the one who promoted the term “philatélie”, still current today.

Arthur Maury died in 1907 after 47 years of prodigious philatelic activity.

Next I shall mention Madam Nicolas, whose shop at 37 rue Taitbout was a “philatelic salon” where all the great collectors gathered and exchanged their views.

It was in her shop, by the way, that the term “philatélie” was coined by G. Herpin, which Maury later adopted.

Madam Nicolas published a small catalog in 1865, which was the first to list the watermarks of many countries.

In 1866 we find traces of a young merchant named Thirifocq who also published a catalog and whose layout was adopted by all the major modern works.

We can't forget Pierre Mahe, who was the wise counselor of the most important collectors, including the fabulous Philippe de Ferrari. Pierre Mahe wrote some very interesting works and one of them was the source of much of the information that you are reading here.

I shall end my portrait gallery with Charles Roussin who after a difficult beginning in 1863 managed to make his mark, thanks to hard work, perseverance, integrity and a friendly demeanor.

In 1874 he founded a monthly newsletter-catalog, which was perfectly laid out and presented reproductions of all the new issues and much valuable information. But this is beyond the scope of this article.

The preceding gives a clear picture of the vitality of philately during the decade we are focusing on. I have not even mentioned the numerous bourse dealers of the “quais”. Obviously many people engaging in the stamp business disappeared without leaving a trace.

I also think that the proportion of dealers to collectors was greater then than today. That makes sense, given that today the large capital requirements, the expenses and the enormous number of stamps necessarily limit the number of dealers. Also, I hardly need to mention the complex philatelic knowledge required today in order to serve a clientele that is understandably more demanding.

The necessarily limited scope of this article forced me to greatly summarize the subject but I hope I have succeeded in giving a rather clear idea of an era in which stamp collecting was purely a hobby, governments did not see any profit and speculation had not yet been born.

I do not wish to lead you to believe that I am railing against a development that is characteristic of modern times but indulging in a bit of nostalgia for an era gone forever is not without its charm.

END

Elena Catena de Vindel

Correspondence between Menéndez Pelayo and Thebussem

[Correspondencia Menéndez Pelayo y Thebussem]

Coleccionismo, August 1959, Volume 46, Issue 3, Whole number 224, pp.8-12

Translation by Dr. Larry DiFiore for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

February 2018

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MENÉNDEZ PELAYO⁽¹⁾
AND THEBUSSEM

Elena Catena de Vindel is a professor of crystallography and mineralogy at the University of Madrid.

One of the most cultured and charming collectors in Spain was Mariano Pardo de Figueroa, the so-called “Doctor Thebussem”. He was born in Medina Sidonia (Cadiz) on the 18th November 1828 and died there on 12 February 1918, loved and admired by all according to La Palma⁽²⁾. From an early age and throughout his long life, de Figueroa dedicated himself to collecting papers, books, manuscripts, and other wide-ranging things. Nevertheless, he did not collect works of valuable or grand art, rather his tastes and his character steered him toward the small, the common, ordinary everyday objects. So, he became the first Spanish author who concerned himself with and wrote about postage stamps; even offering suggestions for improving the postal services and raising the quality of the nation’s stamp collecting.

To date, no one has attempted to publish, seriously and completely, the entire body of his written works, numbering about one hundred, some published as books or brochures, others scattered in the various journals of his time. This “delicious” task is one which I am currently undertaking. He was the one who started the widespread use of postcards in Spain. The first postcards were authorized by royal decree on the 10th May 1871, but the government delayed issuing them until the 1st December 1873. On his own initiative and for his own use, in May 1873, Dr. Thebussem printed a run of postcards and put them into circulation, after complying with all the legal requirements! His postcards were mailed throughout our entire nation and criss-crossed our borders hundreds of times. In a country not yet given to the noble task of communicating by postcard, Dr. Thebussem became a constant and prolific postcard writer. By doing this he became a true success among us and to all who replied to his postcards.

The current Marquis de Negrón, nephew and heir of our learned doctor, has preserved in his private archive at Jerez de la Frontera⁽³⁾, some 14 thousand of his uncle’s postcards. This huge collection of postcards contains some of the most illustrious names of the entire 19th century. This archive has been used, thanks to the most gracious kindness of the Marquis, by a few scholars who were interested in one or the other of the famous names in the postcard archive; but only about 100 examples have been published from such an enormous collection. Now, because of the 100th anniversary of the death of Menéndez y Pelayo, I have gathered from various places some 29 postcards written by Dr. Thebussem to Menéndez y Pelayo. Later on, the Marquis de Negrón most kindly put at my disposal some postcards written by Don Marcelino (Menéndez y Pelayo) to Don Mariano (Pardo de Figueroa). Below are reproduced two of these postcards, never seen until now, one from Menéndez y Pelayo to Thebussem and the other is the Doctor's reply.

Postcard from Don Marcelino Menéndez y Pelayo to "Doctor Thebussem"

Dr. Thebussem
Madrid, 31 March 1896

My Dear Friend:

I wish to do a favor for a fellow countryman of mine who is a stamp collector. He wishes to obtain the five different (handstamps) you use, and also wishes another three sets of the cancellations for his stamp collector friends. Since I am not knowledgeable about these matters, I don't know if this is asking too much, but whatever it is, I merely pass on the request with my humble recommendation.

Your most affectionate friend hopes for a reply soon, I remain your most humble and affectionate servant who kisses your hand,

M. Menéndez y Pelayo

(From the personal archive of Dr. Thebussem, today the property of the Marquis de Negrón)

As can be seen from the context of this and the following postcards, Don Marcelino asks the Doctor for copies of the five handstamps he (Thebussem) used to stamp his postcards, and which are reproduced here. They are known by their inscriptions: "Spain", "Havana", "Madrid", "Dr. Thebussem", and "Spain and her Indies". The rarest one, marked "Habana" was destroyed by Thebussem himself after Cuba was emancipated from Spain. Because of this the "Habana" handstamp is very difficult to find. The Doctor tells Don Marcelino that the die no longer exists and as one can see by his reply, he even destroyed any remaining reproductions and prints in his possession. The Doctor fulfilled the request and even had the graciousness to send Menéndez y Pelayo information about the handstamps he was asking for.

Postcard from Doctor Thebussem to Don Marcelino Menéndez Pelayo

Medina Sidonia, 4 April 1896

Excellency, Don Marcelino Menéndez y Pelayo, My dear friend, I have just received your card of the 31st March and I hasten to send you the three collections of handstamps you ask of me. I only wish you were asking too much so that my small gift would have some value.

The "Havana" handstamp, designated by the blue X no longer exists and therefore this is now rare. I have only found one copy. If I come across two more, I will send them right away.

The descriptions, dates of issue, and reproductions can be found on page 196 of J. B. Moen's excellent History of the Postage Stamps... of Spain..., Brussels, 1891.

The fifth handstamp, the one with the star and the name is included in the edition of 1890. (At least that is what Master Pedro and his monkey have to say.)

I was delighted by the publication of the Bibliographic Critique (of Cervantes) by my friend Rius⁽⁴⁾. Such grand work and such grand persistence! The help you offered gave me great satisfaction. I believe that this book will enchant book lovers and scholars around the world.

I remain you most affectionate and grateful friend who kisses the hand,

Dr. Thebussem

(From the archive of Don Marcelino in the Menéndez y Pelayo Library in Santander, Spain.) There is a phrase between parentheses “At least that’s what Master Pedro and his monkey have to say” which Thebussem literally copied from Chapter XXVII, part 2 of “Don Quixote” of which Don Mariano was a most devoted admirer. To him we owe the famous Epístolas Droapinas, in which he wrote about the many and most curious themes of the immortal work of Cervantes.⁽⁵⁾ “Droapinas” was [based on] an anagram for his name, Pardo, and for him this had an inescapable fascination: “Droap”, “Pardo”. The phrase used for “Thebussem” (“embuste” (liar) backwards with a Germanizing “h” thrown in for translation purposes, was used by Cervantes after he gave a detailed account in his great work of who was Master Pedro, how he performed his famous puppet show, how he met the famous little monkey and how the monkey served his purposes. Thebussem does the same thing: after giving a detailed account of his postmarks, probably using a logical connection of ideas for such a scholar of his (Thebussem’s) magnitude, the Doctor then brings up for Don Marcelino the publication of his (Thebussem’s) friend Rius’s book, A Critical Bibliography of the Work of Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra, which appeared in Madrid in 1895, and was later joined by two new volumes (Barcelona and Villanueva y Geltrú, 1905).

As far as the farewell formula used by Thebussem in his postcard (q. l. b. l. m.; Spanish initials for words that mean “who kisses the hand”), instead of the traditional q. l. b. s. m which means “who kisses your hand” and which Menendez y Pelayo used on his postcard, there is an interesting article entitled “Formulas” which is precisely dedicated to Menendez y Pelayo in a book called “Thebussianas” (pub. in Valencia, no year of publication). In the book, the Doctor explains the reason for the new way of signing off in a letter or card.

Translator’s Footnotes:

1. Marcelino Menendez y Pelayo, 3rd November 1856 – 19th May 1912, was an illustrious Spanish scholar, historian, and literary critic. Nominated for the Nobel Prize for Literature five times, he was Professor of Spanish Literature at the University of Madrid from 1878 to 1898.
2. A reference to a Cadiz newspaper named La Palma exists in the national archives of Spanish newspapers and magazines. It published daily news items as well as business, farming, and literary news. Its dates of publication were from 1853 to 1896. Since de Figueroa died in 1918, unless it was published in his lifetime, this may not be the La Palma mentioned in the article, or perhaps, the newspaper enjoyed a revival in the early 1900’s.
3. Jerez de la Frontera is a city in the southwestern region of Spain in the province of Cadiz. It is the center of the world-famous Sherry wine-producing grapes.
4. Critical Bibliography of the Works of Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra, Vol. 1, by Leopoldo Rius. A search of the Internet did not reveal any further information about Rius.
5. As the author explains, “Droap” was an anagram for “Pardo”, so the title “Epístolas Droapinas” may be rendered in English as “Letters from Pardo”.

END

S. F. [Sigmund Friedl]

James Chalmers, the inventor of the postage stamp

[James Chalmers, der erfinder der Briefmarke]

Welt-Post, August 1887, Volume 12, Whole number 15, pp.137-138

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

January 2019

JAMES CHALMERS, THE INVENTOR OF THE POSTAGE STAMP

Today we bring the picture of the man who for us philatelists is of highest interest; the picture of the real inventor of the postage stamp, James Chalmers, bookseller of Dundee in England [sic], born in Arbroath in Scotland in 1782, died in Dundee in 1853, therefore at the age of 71 years.

So far the invention of the postage stamp has generally been ascribed to the ingenious postal reformer Sir Rowland Hill, which is incorrect as we will immediately prove, since the youngest son of Chalmers, Patrick Chalmers, succeeded in securing this merit for his father through tireless energetic research.

In the year 1832, more emphatically still in the year 1834, an agitation was undertaken by various persons in England against the newspaper stamp in use at that time (4d. for each newspaper, which included the postage fee), which did not remain without effect on the later postal reform, at that time however without practical results. An outstanding publicist, Charles Knight, in his magazine (The Companion to the Newspaper) published on June 1, 1834, discussed the idea that this postage should be collected "by selling stamped envelopes of 1 penny, through which one could pay the postage", and this caused the bookseller Chalmers, who at that time also published a smaller local newspaper (Dundee Chronicle) and as a printer and publisher could most suffer the inconvenience and loss he suffered from the spoiling during printing the 4d. printed sheets, began to contemplate a remedy.

In August 1834 - we emphasize this date, since Sir Rowland Hill was not involved in postal reforms at that time - he had stamps (Essays) designed in his office and printed on sheets of paper, then gummed on the reverse with a sticky substance - exactly according to the principle now in use - which he presented to various respected people in Dundee, including the postmaster at that time, and declared that it would be better to have an adhesive stamp (in values of 1d.) for postage purposes instead of one to be printed on the envelope.

These facts are confirmed by the records, and by three people still alive who worked with Chalmers at that time.

In 1837, when Rowland Hill published his famous pamphlet on postal reform, which had the effect of giving rise to a state commission entrusted with the task of dealing with this matter, Chalmers sent a letter to Mr. Wallace, in November 1837, i.e. 18 months prior to the the Postage Bill in the House of Commons, submitting his plan together with a sample of the stamp to be affixed, as well as in February 1838 to the Mercantile Committee of the City of London, which was entrusted with the support of the proposed reform system, and this document, which is of historical value today, was bequeathed by the same to the South Kensington Museum after the death of the then secretary of this committee, Henry Cole. In this file Chalmers discusses in detail his idea of the adhesive postage stamp and attached some samples of his project. These samples of his proposed stamps are about 1 square inch in size and has printed on it: "General Post Office - not over half an ounce - A Penny" and similarly "Not over one ounce - Two Pence". An interspace separates each stamp so that they can be cut individually and the back is gummed. One of the samples is experimentally cancelled with "Dundee 10 February 1838" as an example of how to prevent the stamp from being used a second time.

When Sir Rowland Hill's system, which had suggested that stamps should be printed on envelopes or letterheads (see Mulready envelopes), threatened to become a fiasco because English merchants preferred to use their own stamped paper, the Treasury looked for improvements from the public with a decree of 23 August 1839.

Again Chalmers sent in his plan for the postage stamp, which, together with 49 other projects now arrived, and the system of adhesive stamps was adopted by decree of 26 December 1839, the engravers Bacon and Petch were entrusted with the manufacture and production of stamps, and the first issue of stamps (head of Queen 1d. black) was issued on 6 May 1840.

Why Chalmers, for his excellent invention which was of such high practical value, without which the Penny Post system would not have been feasible, did not receive the deserved reward from his country? We cannot answer this question - it is sufficient to state that Patrick Chalmers is entitled to claim that his father James Chalmers is the inventor of the stamp. Honour to his memory.

END

[Arthur Maury]

English stamps with punctured initial letters

[Les timbres Anglais avec lettres initiales piquées]

Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste, January 1874, Whole number 42, p.396

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

May 2018

ENGLISH STAMPS WITH PUNCTURED INITIAL LETTERS

We are asked about the utility of perforated initials that we see on certain English postage stamps and excise stamps. These letters are the initials of various companies. They do this to stamps that are necessary for correspondence, so that employees in charge of affixing stamps, are not tempted to keep some and re-sell them.

We have seen perforated initials on Hong Kong stamps.

It is again for the above reasons that the stamps of Western Australia, used by the official services, have a round hole removed from each one.

For a very long time the important distribution house, W.H. Smith and Son of London, had considered printing, on the reverse side of postage stamps, the following inscription:

W. H. SMITH
AND SON
186 STRAND.

That we still find, in the rings around envelopes and wrappers.

These precautions are all the more useful in that, contrary to what is happening in France, the English Post buys back from individuals an average of 3% of the stamps sold to them. They become, therefore, virtual paper money.

END

Dr. Legrand

Meeting of the 1st March 1888

[Séance du 1^{er} Mars 1888]

Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie, June 1888, Volume 4, Whole number 47,
pp.41-42

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
November 2018

MEETING OF THE 1st MARCH 1888

Mr. Donatis presiding

The secretary read the minutes, which were adopted without discussion.

The correspondence included:

1. Letters and business cards from messers Hugo Lubkert, Alfred Heits of Marseilles; Coolidge, Florencio de Uhagon, A. Lanotte de Bijceglie.
2. Mr. Wonner referenced the 3rd December issue of Ferro-Carril (page 3, column 1) announcing that per order of the Postal Administration a new issue will be placed in service January 1 comprised of the following values:

stamps: 1c green
 2c carmine
 5c blue
 7c orange
 10c violet
 20c brown bistre
 25c vermillion

and 2c blue postal cards

The 90-day period starting with that date is intended to allow the stamps and cards of the same values to be removed from circulation, with the exception of the 1c, which is of the same type and color of those of the new issue.

3. Mr. Campbell informed the secretary of the details of the varieties of the current Wells Fargo entires for Mexico and asked him to present the list to the Society.

Here is the list:

A. For Mexico – numeral stamps

10c	1/2 oz. red	15c medium size
20c	1 oz. violet	25c medium size
20c	1 oz. violet	25c large size
20+20c	2 oz. violet	50c medium size

B. For USA – Mexican numeral stamps

5c	1/2 oz. blue	15c medium size
10c	1 oz. violet	15c medium size
20c	2 oz. violet	50c medium size
10c	1 oz. violet	25c large size
20c	2 oz. violet	50c large size

C. For Europe

- | | | |
|-------------------------------|---------------|-----------------|
| a. Stamp with image of Juarez | | |
| 12c | 1/2 oz. green | 20c medium size |
| b. Mexican numeral stamps | | |
| 20c | 1 oz. violet | 35c large size |
| 20+20c | 2oz violet | 70c medium size |

The same member included:

1. A notice from the Liberian minister of posts reading as follows:
Pertaining to sales of the 1880 issue, I personally had the stamps printed during my stay in England and I carried them with me here. Those that you say were sold on the 1st October (2.25f) can only be fraudulent and counterfeit.
2. A letter from the South American Philatelic Society concerning stamps of Peru, who consulted the Society about them, and who has presented them to the Society.

The first is a stamp of 1 dinero green which bears simply the cancelation TRUXILLO and dates from well before the war.

The second, 2c deep violet, bears a triangle that the South American Society considers fake.

The third is a 5c ultramarine stamp bearing the genuine overprint PIURA.

The fourth is a 1c postage due stamp bearing the overprint AREQUIPA in aniline carmine. The Society thinks that the device used to overprint the stamps is genuine but the ink is different from that used on the stamps recognized as genuine. It feels that this is the work of a postal employee.

The fifth is a 1c orange stamp bearing the overprint AREQUIPA in black. The overprint is genuine but since a postally used copy has not yet turned up, the Society cannot say whether it is a legitimate issue or a novelty produced by a postal employee.

Expressions of gratitude are made for these communications.

4. Mr. Emile Diéna [sic] (actually Emilio Diena) answered a letter from the secretary that informed him of the resolutions of the Society and deals with the first and second issues of Das Postwertzeichen of Munich containing an article on the Répertoire. He pointed out also that John Siewert expressed the desire that the Internationaler Philatelisten-Verein of Dresden publish said manual (December 1887 issue, page 151).
5. Various periodicals and works. Among these, the secretary pointed out the Katalog der Markensammlung des Reichspostmuseums by Mr. Lindenberg, District Judge and President of the Berlin Society, who also is sending the by-laws of that society.

Mr. Schoeller presented the work that he prepared together with Mr. Campbell on postal cards. Upon motion of the member, seconded by the secretary, the Society decided that said work will be part of its philatelic library, that it will be printed in the format of the book of the International Philatelic Congress, octavo, and that it will be the first in a new series in this format.

Finally, as the publication of excerpts of the works of messers Rodét and Wonner have significantly held up the release of the 1887 Bulletin, whose first installment has only just been issued, the Society decided that two installments of that year will be canceled; the same will be true of the 1888 Bulletin; and instead of those four installments, the works of Messrs. Campbell & Schoeller will be sent free of charge to all the Society members who have paid their dues for the two years; those members who have paid the dues for only one of those years will receive a voucher which will entitle them to purchase the book at one-half of the retail price.

The Society authorized the secretary to take the steps necessary to obtain the publication in a journal of a summary report of its meetings.

Given the small number of members present, the discussion of the Antilles catalogue was postponed until the next meeting.

Dr. Legrand
Secretary

END

J. Majó Tocabens & Andrés Majó Díaz

“Natalis Rondot”, pseudonym of Armán Martín

[“Natalis Rondot”, seudónimo de Armán Martín]

In: Postas y Filatelia en la Barcelona del XIX., Editorial Ramón Sopena, Barcelona, Spain, 1975, pp.90-92

Translated by Dr. Larry DiFiore for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, France

December 2018

“NATALIS RONDOT”, PSEUDONYM OF ARMÁN MARTÍN

Pioneer of the popularization of stamp collecting among the public through the use of non-philatelic magazines

The collecting of stamps is not merely to accumulate them, but to develop culture, art, and science.

Barcelona had excellent information about stamp collecting, thanks to the unusual and well-documented French magazine, Magasin Pittoresque, from 1862 to 1866. Each month, the stamps issued by a certain country in turn, in the form of catalogue pages which contained first-hand information complete with interesting facts, were published in this magazine which was not primarily dedicated to stamp-collecting.

Spain's turn came in 1865, and thanks to the large sales of the magazine in our market place, future stamp collectors came to realize the importance of stamp collecting, just as current stamp collectors, as they read the other articles, realized that this popular magazine was dedicating space to them in each issue.

The person who developed the public's interest in stamp collecting and knew how to maintain that interest hid himself under the pen name of Natalis Rondot. He was none other than Armand Martín. He has the honor of being the first stamp collector to encourage the hobby in a pleasant and scientific way, by using a magazine not related to philately.

Born in 1821 in Saint Quintin, he was still a young man when he brilliantly completed his studies in Chemistry. In 1842 he entered employment in a textile manufacturing plant in Rheims. The local chamber of commerce of Rheims sponsored him to study the manufacture of wool and silk in China for three years. On his return to France, he represented the chamber of commerce of the city of Lyon for 30 years. He wrote various books on art, some of which are very interesting and noteworthy. Examples include a study of printers, sculptors, the lioness statues of the 14th to 18th centuries; he studied medal makers and wrote biographies of the most famous ones. He wrote many other books which display his vast knowledge of art. He died in Lyon in 1900.

Translator's note: Page 91 illustrates an (unreadable) example of a page from the Magasin Pittoresque, depicting the catalogue-like presentation of stamps with accompanying information.

The Caption at the bottom of the page reads as follows:

Natalis Rondot, the wise stamp collector who spread interest in stamp collecting using a magazine not related to stamp collecting. The print reproduced above shows an example of the pages he inserted to create interest among Spanish stamp collectors.

Martín was one of those priceless and advanced stamp collectors. His articles [in Magasin Pittoresque] arouse even today the curiosity of those who read them. He knew how to put into those articles the information which he gained from his earlier study of stamps. He clarified and expanded on that information in such a masterful way; and at the same time, one could see how much he enjoyed his own stamp collection. When all is said and done, he was one of the most distinguished hobbyists, the kind who dedicate themselves to stamp collecting in every city.

He was a champion who spread interest in the hobby and raised people's curiosity in his own country, so much so that he dedicated himself to writing stimulating articles about the search for new stamps with which to initiate newcomers into stamp collecting.

We know that Magasin Pittoresque was well subscribed to and had good sales in Barcelona. It helped greatly to create new stamp collectors. We are happy to include this chapter, reproducing part of an article about Spain, which will form a new nucleus [of interest?], expanding the one which already exists.

END

J. Majó Tocabens & Andrés Majó Díaz

A great idea by James Chalmers put into practice by Rowland Hill

[Una idea genial de James Chalmers puesta en practica por Rowland Hill]

In: Postas y Filatelia en la Barcelona del XIX., Editorial Ramón Sopens, Barcelona, Spain, 1975, pp.57-62

Translated by Dr. Larry Fiore for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, France

December 2018

A GREAT IDEA BY JAMES CHALMERS PUT INTO PRACTICE

BY ROWLAND HILL

The extraordinary bookseller and inventor of adhesive postage stamps and their postmarks.

The first stamps in the world were placed into circulation on 6 May 1840 in England.

The English were looking for a new system to transport mail, which unleashed active agitation for postal reform. The main objective of this reform was to bring about consistency to the transport of letters: to pay for mail by weight instead of by distance, as was previously done. Advocates of reform wanted payment for service, not the imposition of a tax as was the case for more than 200 years. After studies were undertaken, it was deemed unfair that there should be a profit margin. The reformers were interested in lowering the cost of mailing correspondence, thereby raising the economic level of the country, without loss to the public treasury.

As businessmen they sensed that a readily available mail service that was secure, cheap, and fast, would provide them with greater commerce, and a greater volume of purchases and sales.

A bookseller and printer, located in Dundee, Scotland, a city of about 125,000 inhabitants, by the name of James Chalmers (1781-1853) had an idea in 1834 involving adhesive labels representing the cost of mailing. These labels would be affixed on top of the letters and the postal system would cancel them with a postmark. He demonstrated the different types of adhesive labels he had created and the types of postmarks. He also at the same time expounded the advantages of sending already stamped letters by placing them in mailboxes. The primary advantage was the savings in time by not having to go to the post office to pay the fee in cash. And so, Chalmers invented the adhesive stamp in order to implement his idea. He campaigned continuously until the country took notice of his invention. The periodicals of his day understood the advantages of his invention and began to give it publicity. Chalmers himself developed more ideas. In 1834 he launched a complete program to develop his brilliant invention of the postage stamp and its postmark.

That innovative attempt aroused the curiosity of Rowland Hill and made him take an interest in things related to the postal service. Hill was the son of a school teacher from Kidderminster, (Worcestershire) England. Hill was one of eight brothers, all of whom became distinguished in the various fields they entered.

Rowland had early on been interested in astronomy. He invented a paperbased press for the more rapid printing of newspapers. He participated in the studies that were undertaken to explore the feasibility of colonizing Australia. He collaborated on the education of poor children, and a multitude of other endeavors, usually with outstanding results.

The caption next to the likeness of James Chalmers on page 58 reads as follows:
Chalmers, the true inventor of the postage stamp. A bookseller by trade, living in Dundee, he worked on his invention of the adhesive postage stamp and postmark for many years, coming up with many different projects which always revolved around his original idea. He published several brochures, always sending them to anyone in authority who had anything to do with the postal system. Rowland Hill also fought tirelessly so that the authorities would pay attention to the great transformation that the two of them were preaching, each in his own style.

In 1835, Hill was busy working on reforming the postal service. He fought with determination to unify the postal rates, so that letters would be paid for according to their weight and not by the distance they had to travel. He worked on this task for three years but his vision, expressed both in speeches and in writing, did not prevail. In 1837 he published a critical brochure explaining the importance and practicality of Chalmer's system of adhesive stamps and postmarks. With each new edition of his brochures, Hill brought out new ideas, as any man of natural talent would, ideas always revolving around the adhesive stamp.

His brochures met with the total rejection of the director general of the postal service, Lord Lichfield, who said that Hill's ideas were those of a dreamer, ideas without head nor tail, the most outlandish ever proposed.

A man of such gifted intelligence such as Hill could not abandon the ideas which his intuition had created to introduce needed improvements. A law was published on 17 August 1839 which initiated the uniform penny postage rate of a penny per ounce of postage. Hill immediately leaves his post involving the Australian colonization, and takes residence in London, where he can supervise the march towards a unified penny postage system using adhesive stamps, now justified by the new system of paying a penny an ounce for letters. In September (1839) the government announces a search and with intent to purchase a new idea that can be applied to the proposed reform of paying for postage that would be better than the old way of paying (by distance). Two thousand six hundred responses were received, none were satisfactory. Four prizes of 100 pounds sterling each were offered to the contestants whose ideas were the easiest to put into practice.

The world's first stamp, showing the likeness of Queen Victoria, was the idea of the reformer (Hill). He said that the stamp must represent the nation, and the most symbolic image was that of the queen. These arguments proved persuasive and it was so ordered. He further concluded that because of the danger of forgeries, something that was well known such as the image of the Queen must be made from an original drawing.

The caption under the English language image headed STAMPS reads as follows:
The circular put out by James Chalmers, in November 1837, publicizing his idea for adhesive stamps, paid for prior to affixing to letters. He is considered the father of the postage stamp.

Rowland achieved success and begins to contemplate how to introduce the penny per ounce postage. The 10 January 1840 is usually given as the date of issue, but actually it was not so, there was a delay. Rowland Hill, a meticulous man, took every conceivable precaution with security and had to deal with all the difficulties that emerged. In order to place on sale something so well-conceived and perfected, he aimed for the first of May for their appearance, but they were not valid for postage until the sixth of May (1840).

Despite the thousands of stamps which have since been issued, none of them have the exceptional beauty of those first stamps in the world. The world can contemplate the quality of these first victorian stamps.

Sir Rowland Hill received 20,000 pounds sterling for the introduction of the stamps and for unifying the cost of postage stamps; and, by public subscription, another 13,000 pounds sterling.

The caption to the right of the Penny Black on page 60 reads as follows:
The first stamp ever to be issued in the world. Its exceptional beauty has never been surpassed, despite the 135 years which have passed since it was placed in circulation.

The caption under the Mulready caricature on page 60 reads as follows:
British humor is seen in the above drawing which depicts the people's immense satisfaction knowing that postage rates have been reduced. Everyone in the drawing is happy including the lion, who licks the lips on his rogue's face with satisfaction.

The caption next to the photograph of Sir Rowland Hill's statue on page 61 reads as follows:
The statue of Sir Rowland Hill, in front of the Office of the Postal Headquarters in London, enables us to remember this brilliant man who fought and eventually succeeded in bringing about uniform postage rates by weight rather than by distance by adapting and introducing the adhesive stamp conceived of by Chalmers.

In the statue's hand there is a rolled-up sheet of the Penny Blacks issued in 1840. A few doors down is the Postal Museum, in which one may view all the projects he submitted for the greater good; but, was awarded for the one which would show the image of Queen Victoria.

He was awarded a knighthood, medals; and, the City of London conferred on him the title "Favorite Son", awarding him an annual pension of 2000 pounds sterling. Few men receive such genuinely warm and heartfelt praise from an entire nation. In 1879, the world lost a man, who, like none before, had undertaken to implement such a simple yet wonderful invention.

National sorrow on his death was so great that he was given the honor of being buried in one of the chapels in Westminster Abbey. To commemorate his burial, a plaque was put up with the brief phrase "To the memory of the creator of the Penny Black". A bust of Sir Rowland Hill is mounted on a stand in the wall next to his remains, honoring that man who, without warning, forged a bond among all races with his "Label" (the name given to stamps in the beginning) inspired by Chalmers. The stamp is the connection that lets us know about both the painful and joyful events in life.

The city of London as well as many other cities, raised up monuments to that brilliant inventor. His monument in London stands in front of a Victorian building constructed in 1837 and destined to be the Office of the Headquarters of the British Post Office. The building is located on St. Martin le Grand Street. In the hand of the bronze statue of Sir Rowland, there is a rolled-up sheet of Penny Blacks. The inscription on the pedestal reads “Sir Rowland Hill, 1795–1879”. The rolled-up sheet of stamps says it all.

No one could have imagined that the introduction of postage stamps would give to millions of people who collect them so many hours of pleasure. Among the many collectors was one who 15 years after the first issue, asked all the governments who adopted the adhesive stamp system, to send him (his father, Sir Rowland) a copy of every stamp they had issued since the beginning; (the son asked this because) his father was completely captivated by collecting and classifying stamps from every country. (His father felt) these stamps were a lesson for the entire world, without equal, in the history of civilization. The stamp creates friends and forges strong bonds in the family of collectors throughout the world. They did not reckon that the stamp is a command which millions follow and by which millions are moved. Who would have ever thought that such a tiny piece of paper which had just been invented, would give such enjoyment in such a short period of time?

Caption to the English letter from Sir Rowland’s son on page 62 reads as follows:

The person who introduced the postage stamp has been captivated by collecting them. His son begs postal directors of all the countries who have adopted his father’s system to send him a sheet of each postage stamp they have issued and if some are no longer in existence, to kindly print them with the dies which they had saved. His request was taken into account and granted.

The above letter of request was written by Rowland Hill’s son on 5 October 1862.

Translator’s Note:

The entire article, especially the last few paragraphs, uses grandiloquent, lofty language which usually does not read well in English translations. Therefore, I have tried to tone down the “floweriness” of the language without losing the true spirit of what the authors are communicating.

END

Arthur Maury recounts a day in his memoirs
[Arthur Maury racontait un jour dans ses mémoires]
Story Post, October 1973, Whole number 124, p.3

Translated by Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, France
December 2018

ARTHUR MAURY RECOUNTS A DAY IN HIS MEMOIRES

I clearly remember a meeting I had at the small Bourse des Timbres, in 1861 or 1862. I was seventeen or eighteen years old; although a Parisian, the chance of a holiday resort had sent me for a year at Boulogne-sur-Mer, where my family had opened a modest glove shop. Possessor of a small collection of stamps and a hundred duplicates, amassed laboriously in Paris, I had the idea of slipping my album into the window of the shop, with the intention of making exchanges; this intention was perfectly understood by the English youngsters at Boulogne, and I rapidly increased my collection of the various colonies that I had never even seen; Canadian beaver, swan, graceful Queens, etc. ...

When all of my duplicate stamps were exchanged the English youngsters wanted to start on my collection at golden prices: three francs for a green Republic, ten francs for my old Swiss. - Never! ... It was necessary to capitulate; anyway I wrote to Paris, we sold the Republic 5 sous [25c] green, not so beautiful as mine, they had many small faults, but still I sold dozens at two francs, then at a franc, then at ten sous.

So, I wrote to Laplante the well-known Parisian dealer, who, in exchange for a mandate for ten francs sent me an assortment of magnificent mint stamps of Luxembourg, Lubeck, Hanover with a hunting horn. My English were open-mouthed. I was henceforth a postage stamp dealer.

My correspondence with Laplante became active; a year later, I resolved make a trip to Paris where I arrived with a few hundred francs and good book of English colonies to exchange. going to the premises of Laplante, who lived on the other side of the water, rue Christine, I crossed the Tuileries, when the idea came to me to check out the little Stamp Bourse which I had never before seen except from a distance.

It was a Tuesday, I approached timidly a group, there were not many that day; I exchanged some stamps with one and then the other, and I soon noticed that they were fighting over the Victoria, half-body queen, 2 pence gray, which I judged common, having obtained at Boulogne more than two hundred at a time for very little.

I heard whispering: "He has fileuses" "He has grey fileuses!" A well-dressed man decorated with several overlapping ribbons, very friendly, with an Italian accent, and that besides, was repeatedly called Mr. Fossi, pulled me aside, taking two seats, he said to me: we will be better out of this "mob".

I exchanged with him one, then two, then three "fileuses", because that is how they designated my Victoria stamps, and finally he proposed to me that he would exchange or buy from me en-bloc all that I had; I thanked him and with some trouble ended the meeting, in no doubt that my stamps were rarities.

I arrived at Laplanter's, of whom I still only knew the bizarre correspondence, and he told me first that his name was not Laplanter, but de Laplanter and even Edgard de Laplanter, then he flew into a mad rage knowing of me that I had exchanged "fileuses" at the Stamp Exchange: he raved about his competitors in general, then demonstrated to me that I was nothing but silly for having accepted penny stamps for these rarities. "Here", he added, "I am going to give you in exchange for all your Victorias, some of these Moldavian stamps which have just arrived to me, they are unknown, you will sell these in Boulogne as easy as bread."

I didn't like the stamps, they were ugly, yellow, badly printed, I bought two to please him, he asked to give me something else, he pressed me because I only took his Moldavians, which had to remain, for sale for fifty-five centimes and soon after flew into such a rage that I wondered if he had his senses and what would become of me, a frail young man, locked up with this delirious colossus; but he suddenly softened, smiled and talked about something else.

END

J. Siewert

On the Chalmers-Hill question

[Zur Chalmers-Hill frage]

Der Philatelist, 1st December 1890, Volume 11, Issue 17, pp.261-263

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

January 2019

ON THE CHALMERS-HILL QUESTION

As soon as I had believed that this highly boring question had been happily resolved as a result of the decision of the Second German Philatelists' Day, at least as far as German philatelists are concerned, the tireless Patrick Chalmers does not leave us alone, but delights us again with one of his numerous brochures, which, like most of his pamphlets, is calculated to confuse the minds and to make the matter itself as confusing as possible.

Most of us realize how disgusting and tedious it must be to be forced to repeat the same thing all the time. Now that I had asked the Dresdener Stamp Association to make the request, which was also accepted by the latter, at the Second German Philatelists' Day, I feel compelled, albeit against my will, to take the floor again in this matter as a result of the above-mentioned brochure addressed to German philatelists.

P. Chalmers tells us to his and our, but especially to his highest satisfaction, that he has long since succeeded in convincing his compatriots of the truth and cites as confirmation of his assertion that the city council of Dundee, the Encyclopedia Britannica and God knows who else had long since spoken in favor of James Chalmers. His son, Patrick, however, is wisely careful to inform us that this recognition and decision is based solely on the brochures with which he has delighted those authorities, some of whom, such as the Dundee City Council, probably out of local patriotism and because they really believed they were dealing with a truthful account, spoke out in favor of Chalmer's claims. Others, such as the Encyclopedia Britannica, which he so lovingly quoted, used at least the caution of informing the public in a note that it based its judgment only on the brochures of P. Chalmers, because it had no other evidence at all.

I now ask the readers, what is the value of such "evidence" now? By P. Chalmers only telling us what is useful for him, and with forethought concealing everything that could somehow harm his cause, such as the aforementioned note in the Encyclopedia Britannica, we are entitled to claim that P. Chalmers is not at all trying to establish the truth, but that he is pursuing completely different purposes.

If we continue, in the last brochure addressed to us, we find a claim against the London Philatelic Society, in which P. Chalmers has the effrontery to state that its well-known resolution is attributed only to a clique that conspired against him, and because Pearson Hill, the son of Sir Rowland Hill is a member there. We all, I think, know exactly what the London Philatelic Society is, and that it is made up of men whose respectability is beyond doubt, and that any attempt by Chalmers to shake the respect which those men enjoy can only lead and must lead to all honorable characters turning away from him. With people who don't let another opinion come up at all except to see a personal motive in it, every discussion stops by itself, and the only sensible thing you can do is to avoid them. This is what the London Philatelic Society did, for which Patrick Chalmers apparently no longer exists. But if P. Chalmers has nothing to say to the London society other than that the members of the London society are only puppets in the hands of Pearson Hill, according to whose whistle they have to dance, then he damages his cause more than he apparently imagines - but that is his cause and is none of our business.

Also P. Chalmer's attempt to belittle Major Evans in the public opinion will not help him but only harm him. The version of the article by Major Evans, translated by me and published by Der Philatelist in No.11, leaves absolutely nothing to be desired in objectivity and can serve Chalmers as a model for how a decent discussion should be conducted.

In a perfectly correct way, Major Evans has merely adhered to the matter and treated it as impartially as possible, but has hardly been in contact with Pearson Hill, nor with P. Chalmers. One would think that this very circumstance would please the sympathies of any decent person, but Chalmers is of a different opinion; he understands how to turn the matter around so that the reader of his booklet is involuntarily induced to see in Major Evans a personality whose statements and opinions are not fully valid, because he has failed to wash Pearson Hill's head [criticised him] for the fact that the latter has used unparliamentarily expressions against Chalmers. So, according to the will of P. Chalmers, Major Evans should not be concerned at all with the matter itself, and certainly not with the Chalmers-Hill scandal and interfere in it. Do any of my readers agree?

As for the unparliamentary expressions used by P. Hill towards P. Chalmers, they are at least very forgiving in nature, bearing in mind the provocation to which the former was subjected by the latter. If P. Chalmers, on the basis of his inauthentic "evidence", likes to pull the memory of a highly deserving man into his droppings and to speak of Sir Rowland Hill in no other way than as a cheater and thief who stole other people's ideas, it is of course natural that the son of a man subject to such an attack must run out of patience and overflow with bile. Chalmers is primarily to blame for P. Hill's behavior himself, and his present Jeremiads vividly remind me of the schoolboy who started teasing one of his comrades, and she started teasing him to death. But he didn't know how to do anything better than run straight to his mother and complain about his comrade howling at her. Chalmers does exactly the same; first he attacks Sir Rowland Hill in the most outrageous way and then he starts crying and complaining because his opponent speaks of him with some coarseness. If Chalmers may be unaware of the saying "What you call into the forest echos back", he should at least know the English saying "How you make your bed, so you shall lie".

It is impossible to get involved with or refute the other inaccuracies contained in Chalmer's brochure as long as I wish to be as brief as possible, which is a difficult thing to do.

If we now go into the matter itself, I noticed first of all that at the time of my presence in Vienna, at Friedl's place, I saw that essay which Chalmers now claims is from the year 1834. By which right he claims this is completely unclear to me, at least in my opinion he can claim with exactly the same right that it originates from the last century since this essay does not bear a date at all. The reader finds the drawing of the same in No.11 of the Postwertzeichen-Kunde of the year 1888. The inscription on this stamp reads: General-Postage - Not ex. one ounce - underneath: 2d.

In England, however, such a postage rate did not exist at all in 1834, the lowest was the postage between two post offices which did not lie further than 15 miles apart, 4d for 1 ounce; but if the letter contained more than one sheet, it cost twice the postage or three times as much, even if the letter weighed only $\frac{3}{4}$ ounce. In the provincial cities the postage was 1d for 4 ounces, but not for 1 ounce. The London local post again cost 2d or 3d depending on whether outside or inside the 3 mile radius and the weight intended for it was 4 ounces. Neither could this essay be intended for newspaper stamps, for according to Charles Knight's proposal the postage for the same should cost only 1d, but not 2d, regardless of the weight. Neither is it to be assumed that it was intended for the reduced postage on Price-lists because the reduced postage was only suggested in 1836, according to which the postage amount for $\frac{1}{4}$ oz was only $\frac{1}{2}$ d, while newspapers should be carried for 1d, without weight limit.

The rates, however, which Sir Rowland Hill proposed in his brochure, were as follows: General Postage not exceeding $\frac{1}{2}$ Ounce: One Penny; General Postage not exceeding one Ounce: two Pence. Isn't it strange, then, that this essay is said to have been printed in 1834, not bearing the postage of that period, but that of Hill's proposal, made three years later in 1837? What can P. Chalmers say in view of such facts and where is the 1834 fairy tale with the known 3 men? It is clear how the son can only prefer the essay belonging to Friedl over those essays which James Chalmers submitted in the years 1838 and 1839, but which were rejected by the authority concerned because they were unsuitable.

We can summarize the whole thing by saying that, as a result of the documentary evidence available to us, there is no doubt that Rowland Hill first proposed the adhesive stamp in February 1837; this is bomb-proof, so to speak, and is denied by no one, not even by P. Chalmers. However, that a similar proposal had already been made by another side before this period is nowhere apparent and there is no trace of evidence of such.

However, there are assertions according to which adhesive stamps are supposed to have been printed as early as 1834, but in view of all and any lack of evidence, all such assertions are completely worthless. The whole thing, however, is completely shattered by P. Chalmer's own father, James Chalmers, who wrote personally to Sir Rowland Hill on the 10th October 1889: "Should pieces of paper (slips) be used, I believe I may claim the priority of the suggestion, since it is now nearly 2 years since I published the same and submitted them to Wallace". This would bring us back to about October 1837 and in fact we know that James Chalmers submitted his proposals in November 1937, 9 months after Rowland Hill had already proposed the adhesive stamp in February of the same year. In view of these facts, who would doubt that James Chalmers in his letter to Hill would necessarily have indicated the year 1834 as the date if he had already made the discovery in question in that year? So while James Chalmers of 1834 does not know anything and writes nothing, but positively indicates the year 1837 as the earliest point in time, we should now suddenly believe Patrick Chalmers and the claims of his 3 old men more than James Chalmers himself!

In my eyes, neither Hill nor Chalmers are the real stamp inventors, because we do not know what the stamp Hill proposed in February 1837 should look like, while the samples submitted by Chalmers were simply discarded. But since we know that the first stamp that was effectively issued, the 1d black, came from Bacon, who not only made it, but also designed it, I believe he is the sole and true stamp inventor, if we need one at all. Who has ever racked their brains about who was the inventor of fiscal stamps or telegraph stamps?

If P. Chalmers is really to do with the truth, then he should accept his opponent's proposal that both parties to the dispute submit their case, together with all the evidence, to an English Court for decision and the loser then donates 100 pounds to a good cause. This is a decent and just proposal, but P. Chalmers should not be like a cat on a hot tin roof, stirring up the whole foreign world and asking foreign philatelists to give their verdict on a matter, in his favor of course, where they lack all and any material to judge this question.

END

Karl v. Gündel

The Chalmers essay in the Postwerthzeichen-Museum

[Das Chalmers'sche essai im Postwerthzeichen-Museum]

Welt-Post, November 1892, Volume 17, Whole number 43, pp.474-475 & January 1893,
Volume 18, Whole number 44, pp.483-485

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

January 2019

THE CHALMERS ESSAY IN THE POSTWERTHZEICHEN-MUSEUM

Some unappointed parties doubted that the Chalmers' Essay, located in the Postage Stamp Museum of Sigmund Friedl in Vienna, was really the work of James Chalmers. This prompted me to examine the matter again from all sides in the most in-depth manner and the result was that I was rightly confirmed in my conviction that the Essay in question can undoubtedly be regarded as a genuine copy of the first essay of the adhesive stamp invented by James Chalmers in August 1834 and also produced at that time on a trial basis.

But the space in this magazine does not allow me to make my treatise as detailed as I may have wished - namely, not to even enumerate all the documents relating to the matter - even less to reproduce them in their wording; all this must be reserved for a detailed history of the British postal reform of 1840, with which I have been occupied for years. Here I can only very briefly say the following: By the statements of different persons, whose credibility to doubt not even the slightest reason exists, it is established with all certainty that James Chalmers in August 1834 in his printing works made samples of adhesive postage stamps and also showed the same to many of his acquaintances. Individuals, e.g. Pearson Hill, E. B. Evans and some others deny this - wrongly. In order to pick only one from numerous examples, I choose the information of David Maxwell, chief engineer of the Hull Waterworks. The same explained that he had been employed at Chalmers' printing works until 1st November 1834 and that he had cut the stamps, of which about a dozen had been printed on one sheet each. In 1890 I had in my hands a letter from him dated 21st February (1890), in which he confirmed this anew and in which he had also enclosed some small pieces of paper about half a hand in size, set into type by himself before the 1st November 1834 in Chalmers' Printing works, whose peculiar border corresponds exactly with the Essay in the Postage Stamp Museum. On one of these notes, were the words written by Maxwell himself: "The above name note (visiting card) was placed by me in type at James Chalmers' printing works in Dundee before the 1st November 1834." Hull, 21st February 1890, "Maxwell", whereby it is established with all certainty that the ornaments, as well as the letters on the Essay in the year 1834 were actually present in Chalmers' printing works, I left it for the museum.

Maxwell wrote to him on the 8th March 1890, in response to an enquiry by Evans concerning the stamps of 1834, among other things: ... "During the time (until 1st November 1834) that I spent in Mr Chalmers' printing office, we printed a number of circulars etc. relating to postal matters and I certainly remember a kind of proposed adhesive stamps that were printed and the back of which was then coated with gum in the office. Not only did I see them, I also had to deal with them myself; I trimmed them to give them the right shape. What happened to them I do not know, nor can I remember the exact wording of the inscription, but I do know that they were larger than our present stamps and not of elongated vertical form. I cannot give the date with any approximate certainty, but I am certain that it was shortly before my resignation (1st November 1834)."

In a second letter Maxwell wrote: "Two bookbinders, James Paton and William Whitelaw, stayed a few years (with Chalmers after Maxwell's departure) and I met with them now and then. The same people knew about the 1834 stamps and when the adhesive stamp became one of the new postal reforms, I remember that James Paten and I talked about our old employer's suggestions and that he was the actual (original) inventor of them. ... I maintain from the most definite (most distinctly) that the stamps I refer to were printed in the printing house before I even left there." (So before 1st November 1834.)

There is still so much other credible evidence that samples of adhesive stamps were undoubtedly made in Chalmers' printing works in 1834, but I cannot go into it further for lack of space; but I think that the above should suffice to show that at that time samples of such stamps were actually produced in Chalmers' works.

On 8th February 1838, J. Chalmers sent several commissioners, as well as Rowland Hill himself, a printed memorandum with 5 samples of adhesive stamps. However, these samples are no longer round like those from 1834, but square. The outer ornamentation is also wedge-shaped like that of the 1834 design, only with the difference that its interior is not completely filled, but open and with a dot in the middle; the text is the same for both designs; however, all words are printed completely: "Not-Exceeding-One-Ounce-Two pence", while these words are abbreviated for the 1834 stamps: "Not ex. one ounce.- 2d." The blue imprint of the word "Used" is no longer suggested as a sign of cancellation, as in the case of the 1834 stamps, but rather the place of posting together with the date: "Dundee. -- 10th February 1838". The fact that these trademark designs really originate from J. Chalmers has been established with specific certainty.

On 23rd August 1839, when the Treasury issued an invitation to the public to submit suggestions on how and in what way franking the letters could be carried out most easily and expediently, J. Chalmers sent a letter on 30th August 1839. However, the enclosed designs are no longer square as those of February 1838, but round again, exactly as the ones of 1834, with the exception of a few insignificant differences noticeable only to the trained eye of a philatelist, thus forming the basis of the new design. i.e. the marks of 1839 are no longer as they were in 1834, an oval of 32 mm height and 30 mm width, but a circle of 30 mm diameter - the wedge-shaped decoration between the words "General" and "Postage" at the top, then the words "Two" and "Pence" at the bottom, stands exactly under the star, or under the number 2, respectively, while this is not the case with the stamps of the year 1834 - furthermore, the last e in the word "Pence" of the 1838 stamps is noticeably higher than with those of 1834, etc. In his submission to the Treasury, J. Chalmers says: "The stamps should be about the size of a 1 shilling piece (i.e. round) and should be stamped with the place and date of posting by the post offices concerned to prevent them from being used a second time."

The Essay of Mr. Hansen in Cardiff is cut round, so that only the letters "NDE" and the trace of a letter (probably E.) are left. (Dundee) and "PT." above it. (September) "24", then still traces of a further impression, (presumably the year 1839) are to be seen. From this it can be concluded that this essay comes from the samples that Chalmers had had made for his memorandum of 30th September 1839; whereas Friedl's essay can only derive from the first stamps produced in August 1834, since Chalmers simply wanted to have the word "Used" printed as a sign of cancellation.

Of the essays from the year 1834, about a dozen of which were printed on one sheet, several, perhaps even quite a few, were undoubtedly printed and therefore it is not impossible or unlikely that a copy of them could have come to our time. The fact that Friedl cannot give any more details about his essay and that he only came out with it a few years ago does not matter; when the essay came into his possession, in Germany they knew nothing about Chalmers and therefore Friedl did not investigate the matter any further at that time - yes, he probably did not even have a clue at that time what a strange, beautiful and valuable piece he had there in his collection.

My conviction, based on in-depth research, is that it must be considered proven that:

1. Chalmers made his first samples of adhesive stamps in 1834 (probably in August).
2. The samples of adhesive stamps were attached to his officially submitted memoranda of 8th February 1838 and 30th September 1839 and that both must be regarded as absolutely certain, since - of which there can be no doubt any more - it has been proved that some of these essays still exist.

and

3. The essay in the Postage Stamp Museum - because the same does not bear place and date as the samples from 1838 and 1839, but the imprint "Used", which J. Chalmers wanted in 1834 as a sign of cancellation, according to which it can only originate from the year 1834.

As I have already said, the wording of the numerous documents, by means of which the one I have just mentioned is also proved conclusively, I cannot, since there is no room for it, reproduce in detail - just as I cannot for the same reason also note the many inaccuracies, contradictions and erroneous views which occur in Evans' article, because the complete omission of so many of the most important facts which are inevitably necessary for the correct understanding of the whole proof. All this must be reserved for a later more detailed work, which I will publish in another magazine. Until then, I ask you to have confidence in me that I will carefully examine and think through everything I write down, and that I will rather not put something down as safe and proven until I have found incontrovertable evidence for it.

END

L. Bernard

The third sale of the Ferrary collection

[La troisième vente de la collection Ferrari]

La Philatélie Française, March 1922, Volume 4, Whole number 29, p.54

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

January 2019

THE THIRD SALE OF THE FERRARY COLLECTION

M. Gilbert, the well-known Parisian expert, will proceed with the third sale of the famous Ferrary collection on the 5th, 6th and 7th of April.

Our readers may have noticed that to date we have spoken little of the sales of this collection. This was intentional: we wanted above all to give an exact account of how it came off. After studying the mechanics of these sales and analyzing the conditions under which they were realized, we have come to appreciate how much effort they demanded of the expert in charge of directing them.

As expected, the fabulous value and the fame of this collection attracted a mass of buyers. But given the circumstances at the beginning of the first sales, a high degree of experience was required to safeguard the treasures and proceed with the care that only great professional experience could afford.

With such a vast quantity of rare stamps hitting the market, the slightest lack of skill could have caused it to panic; whence the necessity of choosing the right countries to sell first in order to cause the French capital markets, already exhausted, the least stress possible. Also, the lots had to be offered judiciously in order to preserve their value and avoid a collapse that a random offering of items would certainly have brought about.

So, we see that M. Gilbert operated very wisely. For the first sales he chose the countries likely to attract foreign capital to France from countries with a strong currency. We see that the result rewarded his efforts, as of the total 3,300,000 francs realized in the first sales, the amount provided by our country was relatively small.

One must recognize that M. Gilbert has managed to juggle all the different interests intelligently and adroitly: those of the state, of the public and of the philatelic market. The sale of the Ferrary collection will be the crowning achievement of his already brilliant career but, we hope at least, not the last.

L. Bernard

We bring to the attention of our readers in the list below, the rarities and unique pieces to appear in the third sale. They are in the numerical order of the catalogue.

NEW SOUTH WALES – Sydney Views, 890 pieces. N° 132 3d green, 38 copies with all their gum in a single block, unique piece.

ARGENTINA – Superb collection. Buenos Aires, Cordoba, Corrientes, etc.

BRAZIL – 600 reis black, superb pair.

CANADA - N° 216, a splendid pair of the 12d black, unused with gum, valued at 10,000 francs.

MAURITIUS – Very beautiful copies of the first issue.

BRITISH GUIANA – A 1c black on carmine (“one” cent instead of “four”), which is considered rightfully the rarest stamp in the world.

NEW ZEALAND – Very complete, many very rare pieces.

MOLDOVA – 27, 54 and 81p superb copies.

SWITZERLAND – Double Geneva with upper selvedge, 4c Vaud pair; 3 or 4 pairs at most are known.

TUSCANY – 1q and 1s in blocks of 25, showing the full crown watermark, 8 pieces of 3 lire.

USA – all the first engravings of 1861, not listed in Yvert. Very pretty collection of St. Louis (25 pieces). Alexandria 5c black (only 3 copies known). Entire of 5c red Annapolis, only one known. Baltimore 10c. The famous 5c Boscawen unused, on cover that Ferrary apparently obtained in exchange for a Post Office [Mauritius]. Finally, the 5c Lockport - the 10c Baton Rouge - covers from Danville, and also the 5c red with the famous Goliad 5c black bearing the “Goilad” error complete this, the greatest US collection in the world.

END

The Ferrary collection: Third sale
[La collection Ferrary: Troisième vente]
La Philatélie Française, May 1922, Volume 4, Whole number 31, p.94

Translated for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
January 2019

THE FERRARY COLLECTION: THIRD SALE

We have notified our readers that the highest price in this sale was achieved by the 1c British Guiana. The French press and that of the whole world has been publicizing this fabulous auction in every imaginable way. In Paris itself, the famous stamp projected on the screen in movie theaters caused reactions ranging from appreciation of the price paid to astonishment at the lack of aestheticism of the stamp.

It seems the public, especially in France, does not understand philately. While it is easy to explain the high prices paid for paintings of the great masters, whose coloration, design, execution and creation constitute masterpieces, the layman cannot comprehend how a collector could pay more than 350,000 francs, the price of a painting of a grand master, for a bit of sorry looking paper claiming to be a rare stamp, even if it is unique. Nevertheless, the public, uninitiated but rational, ends up convinced that stamp collecting has a practical side, since collectors compete for these bits of paper with 1000-franc notes.

Thus, these auctions, so often derided by many, have a good side after all: they stimulate increasing interest among laymen and without a doubt bring many new enthusiasts to philately. In a previous edition we presented our readers with the principles that guided Mr. Gilbert in the management of these sales. In the last one, as in those preceding it, the results confirmed all the predictions. The market did not suffer in any way from the financial stress imposed on it by the actions of that expert, as we explained in last March's column.

We shall list hereunder the lots achieving more than 20,000 francs, for the edification of our readers:

- New South Wales – Sydney Views, 1851-54 block of 36 of the 3d. green, unused with gum, superb, 40,000 francs.
- New South Wales – Sydney Views, 1860, superb collection of 1397 copies including the rare watermarks, Registered and Service, including many unused, 26,000 francs.
- Canada 1851 – 12d. black, superb pair, unused with gum, 38,000 francs.
- Cordoba 1858 – 10c black, very pretty complete pane of 20, unused with gum, 22,000 francs.
- Romania 1858 – 81p blue on blue, unused with gum, 32,000 francs.
- Switzerland 1843 – 5+5 black on green block of 3 with upper selvedge and inscription, unused with gum, 62,000 francs.
- Tuscany 1851 – 1s orange block of 25 with crown watermark, unused and gum (3 stamps slightly clipped), 25,000 francs.

USA 1857-60 – imperforate 5c brown, 24c violet (2), 30c orange (3 including a pair), 90c blue pair, all unused, 78,000 francs.

Annapolis 1846 – 5c red entire canceled, only piece known, 26,000 francs.

END

V. Suppantschitsch

An old, apparently lost postage stamp catalogue

[Ein alter, anscheinend verschollener briefmarken-katalog]

Die Postwertzeichen-Kunde, November 1891, Volume 2, Issue 11, pp.160-161

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

January 2019

AN OLD, APPARENTLY LOST POSTAGE STAMP CATALOGUE

by Higher Regional Court Councillor Suppantschitsch in Graz.

Soon it will be thirty years since the first German stamp catalogue was published.

The number of collectors who had already paid homage to stamp collecting at that time will not be a great one anymore, which in the meantime has almost a human age passed away and the greater part of the generation of that time has left the scene of this world.

Those who delivered themselves to the great Guild of Philatelists only after 1863 can probably no longer imagine that there was a time when there was no catalogue, no manual, no stamp newspaper.

Today, when the young collector is literally overwhelmed by an abundance of the best philatelic literature, when a multitude of excellent general and special manuals, lyrically detailed albums and competent journals are readily available to him, when club life has reached an unprecedented development, one may commemorate with a pitiful smile that time when there was nothing of it at all.

And yet there has been such a time. I and with me a still considerable number of philatelists living today experienced it.

How was it collected then I hear the reader ask. Well, that was quite simple. One collected into the blue. One tried to find out whether this or that country had stamps, about which the letters arriving from there provided information, and tried to obtain such stamps.

Someone told him he had seen a stamp from Canada or Brazil here or there, another time it was said X had received a letter from the United States of North America with a stamp on it. Now it was hunted.

Merchants were approached to allow the search and exploitation of their business correspondence.

In the meantime, collectors from different countries had entered into correspondence and had informed each other about the stamps of their countries and sent each other some.

From time to time, instructive entertainment magazines also brought articles about stamps and stamp collecting.

For example, an article on stamp collecting appeared in the Illustrierten Leipziger Zeitung No. 1014 of the 6th December 1862.

Nobody alone had a complete knowledge of which countries and states issued stamps and what stamps were issued.

One lined up the stamps that one was so happy to obtain in a book or on loose sheets together and called this a stamp collection.

Only at the beginning of the sixties stamp albums appeared (from T. Ludwig, G. Wuttig, etc.) which contained a makeshift indication of the existing stamps and offered to the collector some reference point regarding what he had to look for and collect.

It is therefore very understandable that it was greeted with great cheers by the collectors when the first German trade journal Magazin für Briefmarkensammler by Zschiesche & Köder was published in Leipzig on the 1st of May 1863. In its first issue it already began the publication of a catalogue of all known stamps issued between 1840 and 1863, including the prices at which the stamps were available from the publishers.

The publication of this catalogue progressed only slowly, because each issue of the monthly newspaper brought only one page of it.

Finally, Zschiesche & Köder decided to publish the catalogue on its own, which appeared at the end of July 1863 in the form of a stately booklet and soon went through a series of editions.

This was the first known German stamp catalogue.

In the same year a Handbook for Stamp Collectors was published by the Dürr'schen bookdealer in Leipzig, which went one step further and included a short presentation of the history of postage stamps, as well as instructions for setting up postage stamp collections, followed by the catalogues of Leopold Priebatsch in Breslau, C. Breyfuss in Hannover and G. Wuttig in Leipzig.

Even today in all lists of German philatelic literature only these four named catalogues are mentioned as published in 1863, thus listed as the oldest German catalogues.

How astonished I was when I recently was presented with a catalogue from that time, which my friend Czegka kindly left to me, which is not mentioned in any German literature as far as I know.

The purpose of these lines is now to acquaint my denied readers with this lost old German stamp catalogue and thus to make good an injustice that has happened to him through his previous complete ignorance. Its title is: Overview of all Known Postage Stamps Issued between 1849 and 1862. By Tramburg's Erben, Zollenbrücke No. 2, Hamburg. Printed by J. H. Meyer's book printers in Hamburg.

Its format is small quarto and it lists everything from 1840 - not 1849 as the title inscription erroneously says - to 1862; issued stamps and envelopes including the emission data.

Each issue is preceded by a brief description of the stamps, in which the individual stamps are listed according to their postal value, colour and, where necessary, shape and method of production.

Prices are not given in the column pre-printed for this purpose, but the remark is added to the introduction that all stamps listed here are available in large numbers at Tramburg's Erben and can be ordered under the number "A B 1863". That we are dealing here with one of the oldest German stamp catalogues seems to me undoubted.

However, the following circumstances: that the catalogue still lists the so-called supplementary stamps in Austria and the Bernese tax stamps in Switzerland (Bear with Crown 10 r. Chamois), of which the Zschiesche & Köder's magazine had already shown in numbers 2 and 4 of the 1st of June and 1st of August 1863 that they are not postage stamps and which therefore do not appear in the aforementioned four catalogues, while it lists the stamps of Turkey, which appeared on 1 January 1863, and does not contain those of Costa Rica and Nicaragua which also appeared at the beginning of 1863, justify my assumption that this catalogue appeared earlier than that which appeared at the end of 1862 or at the latest in the first months of 1863 and that it is thus the oldest German stamp catalogue.

As I cannot believe that the same catalogue is not known to anyone else and that at least the Hamburg collectors must know the publishers and therefore probably also the discussed catalogue, I would be very grateful for some more detailed notification concerning the same, which I would ask to be addressed to me directly.

END

K. Kouwenberg

Postage Stamp Exhibitions in the 19th century

[Postzegeltentoonstellingen in de 19e eeuw] in: Filatelie Informatief., Samson Uitgeverij, Netherlands, November 1981, Section 6010, 10pp.

Translated for Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

January 2020

POSTAGE STAMP EXHIBITIONS IN THE 19th CENTURY

Origin

Even in the days before stamp collecting existed, people were convinced that showing collections around closed circuits [i.e. passed from person to person in a room] was insufficient. An expanded, preferably international exchange of views was necessary, not only to get better insights and new ideas, but also to make it known that stamp collecting is very desirable. Besides, caressing a modest vanity is not odd for the collector: he likes to show everyone what he was able to accomplish. Besides, the need to do just a little better than his co-exhibitor is a stimulus for healthy competition. These are just a few factors that led to the establishing of stamp exhibitions.

The first

The first exhibition of postage stamps mentioned in the philatelic literature (Le Timbre-Poste, 1863 page 29) was in 1852 by the Belgian geographer Philipp Vandermaelen. It was part of an exhibition of ethnological, mineralogical, and exotic objects which Vandermaelen had collected on his many travels and exhibited in a kind of museum that would even enjoy a visit of King Leopold I. (of Belgium)

Adolph Reinheimer, the author of the work Kurzgefasste Beschreibung der Essays-Sammlung von Martin Schroeder [Short Description of the Essay Collection of Martin Schroeder], Leipzig 1903, made a drawing of this exhibition in 1906 based on what he remembered from a visit in his youth. (Illustration 1)

Paris 1867

Such a general exhibition naturally didn't have much value for philately and had little value as propaganda for stamp collecting. It was still several years before stamp collecting came more expansively to the fore. As a result of the Industrial Revolution and the social changes resulting, there occurred in abundance world exhibitions and postage stamps also became part of the new achievements. So, at the great world exposition of 1867 in Paris, sheets of the issues of King Willem III of 1867 could be seen among others, being a part of the Harlem postage stamps production issue of June 1867, mentioned in the article by J. Dekker in the Nederlandsch Maandblad voor Philatelie (1964 p.358). The Expo committee of that time probably did not know what to do with the stamp collecting section because a large world collection in 8 albums, sent in by the then well-known Frenchman, L. F. de Sauley, was put in group 10, class 89, "Material and Methods for the Education of Children".

A critic, Dr. Magnus (pen name for Dr. A. Legrand) wrote in Le Timbrophile (1867, p.254) I don't understand how a collection with a value of 3500 francs can be of any value for the education of children. It is not difficult for people who are as rich as the owner to gather such a collection together. It has no value because it exhibits no trace of study. It is a disorderly mix of used, unused, proofs, reprints, fakes all mixed together, sometimes on one page.

De Saulcy was criticized badly in the above named periodical and also in the English philatelic press where expansive reviews of the exposition were published (The Stamp Collector's Magazine 1867 pp.134, 154 & 165; The Philatelist 1867 pp.148, 161 & 179) although some propaganda for his collection at the exposition resulted. Above all, the criticism shows that people started to have an insight into the standard the collection should meet in order to be exhibited.

Philatelic historians are not in agreement over the question of where and when the first stamp exhibition as we now know it, organized by a local or national society or a committee not on a commercial basis was held. Some say Vienna 1881, others Antwerp 1887. The former exhibition took place from November the 13th to 20th, 1881 in a hall from the K.K. Gartenbau Gesellschaft (Imperial Horticultural Association) in Vienna and was organized by the Vienna Philatelic Club. The President of the club was Sigmund Friedl (Publisher of the philatelic periodical Wiener Illustrierter Briefmarken Zeitung (Vienna Illustrated Stamp Newspaper) after 1880 called Die Weltpost (the Worldpost) so that a not-for-commercial-basis for the exhibition might well be doubted, although we can't fail to notice that the difference between collectors and dealers was narrower than today.

The exhibition was international but there was only one foreign exhibitor, the well-known German collector and author Dr. Alfred Moschkau. From the second illustration it is clear that the exhibition differs from what we are used to today. The members of the exhibition committee, Sigmund Friedl and Dr. Moschkau made a good advertisement for themselves.

The exhibition was divided into different groups:

Group 1: Literature

Naturally they exhibited the Weltpost, the philatelic periodical of Friedl and the handbooks of Dr. Moschkau as well as the handbook of Ferdinand Meyer, also albums, among others, the albums of Alwin Zschiesche and also the Stamp Polka by the composer named Müller.

Group 2: Albums with Stamps

In this group a collection of 4,200 received a diploma.

Group 3: Special Collections

This is the most important group in which there were really no special collections as would be qualified today, but just country collections. The collections were put in glass cases while a part was put on tables covered with plates of glass. There was a collection of Austria, one of Hungary, one of Bosnia and collections of Peru, Columbia, etc. But there were a few collections of a special kind, like one of telegraph and fiscal stamps, a collection by Dr. Moschkau concerning the Franco-Prussian war and also a collection of postage and fiscal stamps printed by De la Rue of London.

A lot of interest was shown in the collection of Miss Caroline Sorer, the sister-in-law of the stamp dealer S. F. Friedmann (a friend of Dr. Moschkau), who had sent two cartons of rarities including the one shilling lilac of 1851 of New Brunswick and the medio peso of 1858 of Peru. The interest was shown because Miss Soror, as co-worker of a stamp dealer, had felt it necessary to mention the values of the stamps.

Group 4 Production of postage stamps.

Already at the first stamp exhibition there was an official authority present. In illustration 2 you can see on the right a contribution from the Kaiserliche-Konigliche General Post Direction, while at the front is seen the table of the K.K. Staats Printery. On the left side of this you see a printing press on which they demonstrated the printing of stamps with the use of a plate of the first issue of Austria from 1850. On this plate the value indication was replaced by the year 1881. (Illustration 3)

Next to the press is a worktable with a female employee behind it who is using a sort of toilet brush to put gum on the stamps which came in sheets from the press. In front of the table you see a left-handed clerk who is separating the stamps before he gives them to the visitors of the exhibition free of charge. On the picture he with a concerned face shows the stamp to the incoming visitor who raises his hands in total surprise over so much beauty.

Group 5 Miscellaneous

Here you could find everything that had little or nothing to do with philately but at that time there was a lot of interest in it, like “marko-typical works”, among which were “artworks” made from postage stamps, also Austrian postcards on which were two poems with a total of 6,000 words, and more of this sort of home industry. Of interest was the correspondence of Dr. Moschkau with Rowland Hill. Furthermore, one could see (illustration 5) a number of “Global” postcards which were sent around the world, as well as an exhibit of one million soaked-off stamps.

Finally to survive all these specialties visitors could have a free glass of “Philatelic health stomach liquor” at the stand of Max Pollaks. His Imperial Majesty, Archduke Carl Ludwig, also one of the visitors to the exhibition had a lot of interest in this stand and qualified the “stomach liquor” as outstanding.

Antwerp 1887

The next exhibition took place in Antwerp from the 15th to 25th April 1887. The organization was in the hands of the “Society of the Palace of Industry, Arts and Commerce”. Also here again the stamp dealer J. B. Moens from Brussels was involved. From the setup of the exhibition you could see that the organizing committee had experience in setting up similar events because by making available 2 gold, 10 silver, and 15 bronze medals there was much emphasis on the competition element which attracted many exhibitors. (Illustration4) The exhibition was accompanied by various activities, such as concerts, fireworks, etc. The committee had even been able to arrange that the commander of a local training battalion made his soldiers available to protect the expo area and the showcases. The biggest exhibit of the expo was from Moens who used the opportunity to make a lot of advertising for his business. He showed the most rare stamps, mostly in complete sheets or on cover, all of them out of the supply in his store. Besides that he showed a collection of 157 different postcards. The committee was smart enough to place this exhibit “out of competition”. Mr. H. J. DeBeer from Utrecht sent in 20 containers, each having 50,000 stamps in packs of 100 collected over 24 years. Mr. John Rijckx from Kampen and Baron Krayenhoff, the Mayor of Kinderdijk each got a bronze medal for their “Marko-typical artworks”. Dr. Moschkau was also present this time with his work about watermarks. But, says the critic, that is just a copy of the work of Dr. Legrand (Dr. Magnus).

A gold medal was given to the Brussels collector, Wallaert Vanderrest, for his collection of the world in 12 albums, of which only the greatest rarities were missing. A silver medal went to the later well-known K. F. Manus from Amsterdam, the only Dutch person that ever had the two Post Office Mauritius stamps in his collection. He exhibited 11,000 different stamps and a collection of postal articles. A critic had in a fast-check counted more than 400 fakes in this collection. From England, the well-known collector Castle from Brighton was there with an extensive collection of the first issue of New South Wales (1850), the so-called Sydney Views and from the first issue of 1854 from Western Australia, the so-called Swans. The prize for this nice collection, a bronze medal, made some critics laugh because the prize was only the same as that for the 1,000,000 stamps of Mr. Beer from Utrecht. The publisher of The Philatelic Record, Messrs. Pemberton, Wilson & Co, exhibited rare stamps from the British Colonies and a series of printed photos of British philatelists from several years of the periodical, photos which caused visitors to the exhibition some hilarity.

Also on view was a so-called Weltumseglungskarte (Illustrations 5 and 6) from the periodical De Katholieke Illustratie published for advertising purposes.

In the class “Collections with Less than 6,000 Stamps” there were many participants, not only from Belgium, but also from the Netherlands, England, Germany and even one from Greece. The Nederlandsch Tijdschrift voor Postzegelkunde (Dutch Periodical for Stamp Knowledge) entered in the class “Literatuur” did not receive a prize, but did get a praising critique in the Nieuwe Rotterdamse Courant (NRC). That was at least something.

Though there was still much to see at this exhibit that does not belong to philately, and while, according to gossip, the highest prizes went to good clients of Moens, thanks to the professional design, more was accomplished than at the exhibition in Vienna.

Revival

Now that tranquility has returned to the society after the economic and political shifts in the seventies of the previous century, followed by the revival of stamp collecting and rise in exhibitions. Almost all, because of the lack of an umbrella organization, were called “International”. In setup and execution, they resembled the Antwerp Exhibition.

Amsterdam 1889

By 1889, the Netherlands Stamp Club in Amsterdam had existed for five years. The board of the club decided to celebrate this with an international exhibition from the 20th to and including the 23rd of April in Amsterdam. Noteworthy enough, the program of this exhibition cannot be found in the club’s magazine the Nederlandsch Tijdschrift voor Postzegelkunde but only as an advertisement (Illustration 7).

The program can be found in Le Timbre-Poste of February 1889, though. From this, it is obvious that again progress is made. Collections in albums were allowed to be sent in but were not exhibited. All stamps and postal pieces to be exhibited had to be put on special sheets provided for the exhibition, available from the secretariat for the price of 20 cents each. Frame rental was not charged but each exhibitor was required to take at least three tickets at Fl. 1.25 apiece for the lottery. Business in the exhibition hall was strongly forbidden; in a nearby area there were four places reserved for dealers, all of whom had to be members of the club (Illustration 8).

The exhibition promised to become a success because, after the organizing committee had reviewed the stack of requests, they had to quickly look for a larger exhibition space than was originally reserved. At the last moment b and w from Amsterdam made the militia hall available, which had the advantage of the proximity of a police station and fire station thus affording police protection and fire safety.

The entrance fee for the first day of the exhibition was set at the remarkable price of 49 cents. The two following days, the fee was just 25 cents.

The festive opening, for which the organizing committee made a few baskets of “Moët” champagne available, took place on Saturday the 20th April at 7:30 PM. Walking the exhibits, the following caught our attention: Europe from the “Union for Stamp Collecting” from Magdenburg (silver medal), Scandinavia from the Dane, M. Borresen, (honor diploma), and 932 different postal pieces from the USA from the years 1853 to 1887, sent in by doctor of jurisprudence Paul Kloss from Dresden (large gilded bronze). There was also the collection of K. F. Manus which, just as in Antwerp, was criticized extensively because of the many fakes. Still, he got bronze. Also, there was a complete (!) collection of Switzerland from Otto Pfenniger from St. Gallen and a collection of Bavaria from Cornelis Joris of Munich, respectively crowned with a gilded bronze given by the jury and a large gilded silver medal. The collection of A. M. Wilson from London with complete sheets of Sydney Views, Mauritius, Philippines and New Caledonia, Reunion, etc. didn’t get any more than an honour diploma inspite of the fact that his exhibit stretched out for 8 meters (about 26 feet). On the other hand, H. J. Provó Kluit from ‘s-Gravenhage received a gilded silver medal for his exhibit of 13 different stamps and 781 postal pieces. His exhibit took up 3 sides of the hall.

While it was not mentioned in the program, there were also curiosities present. Mr. De Beer from Utrecht again showed his million stamps next to Mrs. Josephus Jitta who built an Eiffel Tower from her 1,000,000 stamps in packages of 100. Also, the presentation sheets, games and other tables with stamp mosaics, made of pieces of postage stamps without regard for their value, sometimes even rare stamps; old America, Hawaii, Cape of Good Hope, all snipped to pieces.

Collections worth seeing were the Sardinian Horses of Ernst Keller from Trieste, Spain from Max Richter of Leipzig, and Greece from the well-known A. F. Glasewald of Gossnitz.

In the Literature class there were no less than 180 (!) stamp magazines exhibited. J.-B. Moens, as a publisher of philatelic literature, received silver. The Schwanenberger-Album of E. Heitman of Leipzig received bronze but the Schaubeck-Album from the Senf Brothers, also from Leipzig, just received a diploma, which caused a heated discussion between the two competitors afterwards.

The critics felt that this International exhibition, the first in the Netherlands, was one of the most important that had taken place up to that point, and left the one in Antwerp far behind. It is clear that because of the lack of international direction, there was no unity yet. So the prizes and their names now seem strange. On top of that, many exhibits were allowed which had nothing to do with philately, but this exhibition, because of the participation of so many big collectors from other lands, was an important stimulus in the development of stamp collecting and stamp exhibitions.

END

[Louis François Hanciau (Editor)]

A word on the origin of postage stamps

[Un mot sur l'origine des timbres-poste]

Le Timbre-Poste, March 1863, Volume 1, Issue 2, p.1 & April, Issue 3, [p.2]

The first volume was re-set The first volume was re-set in the then-current smaller size and reprinted in 1867 without the advertisements. The article can be found on pages 21-24 with an illustration of a 1653 “port payé” billet that was not provided with the original article

The reprinted volume was itself reprinted by Il Collezionista - Italia Filatelica and published as a supplement to Issue 5 of 7th March 1970

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

January 2019

A WORD ON THE ORIGIN OF POSTAGE STAMPS

Translator's Note: Words in square parenthesis are comments by the translator to help clarify the meaning of certain words, phrases, or cultural issues in need of greater context to be made clear.

In a previous installment, we gave a report about the origin of stamps, and we suggested that we would not return to the topic, but when new documentation came to us, sent by one of our readers, and when these documents arrived, it seemed that once more we were obliged to look into this interesting discovery.

Let's allow our reader to tell us about it.

The postage stamp, according to Edouard Fournier, is no doubt a recent invention since, as he stated, it can be traced back to March 23rd, 1823, at the time when the Swede, G. Treffenberg, proposed to the noble government of his country to issue a stamped-paper intended to serve as an envelope for letters (a proposal which was, as it were, destined to be rejected by the great majority), the postage stamp, as we were saying, would seem to be, on the contrary, according to the following instructions, conserved in the archives of the Imperial Library of France, and cited by Mr. D'Auriac in his book Anecdotal History of French Industry, written in the 17th century.

There we read what follows relative to a limited postal service:

“16th August, 1653, - It was announced to everyone who would like to write from one to another section of Paris, that their letters, notes, or statements will be faithfully carried and diligently delivered to the address and that they will receive a prompt reply, as long as, when they write that they attach the mentioned “port payé”, because no one will accept cash; the aforementioned notice will be attached to the letter, or wrapped around it, in such a way as to make it possible for the courier to remove it easily...

“The date will be filled in with the day and the month it is sent... The palace courier will sell these “port payé” “tickets” to those wishing to have them, for the price of one sol marqué [a modest currency in use in 1633], and each person is advised to purchase for his personal use the number of tickets he may wish to have, so that when he wishes to write, he will have what he needs to take care of his business.”

This notice indicates that one acquired the “tickets” at the palace, or at convents [where they would deal with the “tourière” ie, the nun who talked with those outside the convent], from the doormen [or porters] of schools and communities [ie, such as monasteries], and from jail-keepers of prisons. The price of each “ticket” was fixed at one “sou tapé”, that is to say, a sou with the royal mark [ie, the fleur de lys]. “Those purchasing the tickets were informed that they should give a few of them to their clerks so they could send word at any time to their families about their state of affairs, whether parents, children in schools, or in convents or monasteries, and that city dwellers should give some to the craftsmen they employed.”

The notice ends thus:

“The couriers will begin to carry the letters on the 8th August, 1653. The delay was established to allow enough time for people to purchase the tickets they would need for their letters.”

We also received the following text from Pelisson, who reported on the same innovation:

“In 1653, a master of requests ^[1], named De Vélayer, received a privilege or a gift from the king, allowing him to set up boxes [une boëste appears to be a small, lockable wooden box of some sort] in a variety of neighborhoods around Paris, and also to set up an office in the palace where one sold tickets for a one sou coin, which were printed with a distinguishing mark. These tickets had nothing other than the phrase: Port payé le _____ jour du mois de _____ 1653 or 1654. To use them, one had to fill in the blanks with the date — the day and the month during which one was writing, and then afterwards, one wrapped the ticket around the letter written to one’s friend, and then one dropped it off in one of the boxes [boëste]. There were people who were required to open the boxes three times a day, and who carried the letters to their intended destinations. Besides the postage paid ticket that one put on one’s letter to send it, one would also include a ticket inside the letter to pay the return postage if one expected a response”.

[1]Translator’s note: A Master of Requests was a counsel of the Council of State - a high-level officer of Administrative Law.

Pelisson did not state if Vélayer was the inventor of this letter franking system; we can only, therefore, make an observation on the discovery without being certain of the person who did invent it.

Vélayer’s stamps came no doubt from the blank franking practices which were so often abused in England under Charles II and continuing until 1784. At that time, people stocked up for a full year’s worth of postage (see The History of the House of Commons, by Charles Thomond).

Those from the Court of Louis XIV, who followed their prince into the army, seem to have used the same means of franking, as ingenious and economical. Letters from Pelisson to Miss de Scudéry, which are in the possession of Feuillet de Conches, have visible traces of some type of postage stamp.

We do not know when or why these stamps, created in 1653, ceased to exist, or how we come to 1823 without their ever having been a question about it. That is when Mr. Treffenberg proposed the adoption of the system in Sweden; we saw earlier how his initiative was struck with a lack of success. Finally, we come to Rowland Hill, the current secretary of the postal administration in England, who introduced postage stamps to his country, after which, as reported by Alphonse Esquiros, we read:

“A traveler was crossing, about three years ago, a district in northern England; he arrived at the door of an inn, where a mailman himself also stopped to deliver a letter. A young woman came out of the inn to get the letter, and turned it over and over in her hands, then asked the price to receive the letter.

It was rather a large sum, for the young woman was obviously poor, and the mailman was asking for a shilling. She took a deep breath, and said the letter came from her brother, but she had no money, and as a result, she gave the letter back to the mailman.

The traveller was a man who traveled the world to learn and observe; having a generous heart, he offered to pay the postage, and despite the resistance of the young woman, he paid the postage. This opinionated resistance by the young woman in such circumstances caused him to pause and reflect. Barely had the mailman turned his back to leave, than the tavern woman admitted that it was an arrangement set up between herself and her brother; a few hieroglyphs marked on the envelope told her all she needed to know; but the letter itself contained nothing written.

We are so poor, my brother and I, she added, that we dreamed up this means of correspondence and franking of letters.

The traveler continued on his way, and asked himself if this fiscal system gave way to such miserable fraud, was not the system itself vicious? The sun had not yet set when Rowland Hill (that was the name of the traveler) had dreamed of organizing the postal service in a new way. He said to himself that in England, where family businesses are so strong, but family members live so spread apart, that the spirit of commerce and business knows no bounds, and correspondence is only limited by the large postage fees; lowering the cost of that barrier would render a great service to society, without harming the resources of the treasury.”

His views were accepted by the British government, and on January 10th, 1840, letters cost only 10 cents to anywhere in the British Isles.

This bold innovation soon exceeded the hopes of the legislators; ten years later, in 1850, the number of letters had grown from 1,500,000 to 7,239,902.

From all which precedes, the result is that the first stamps really date back to 1653. Must one conclude from it that Mr. Treffenberg and Rowland Hill were only the executors of an idea which had been developed before them, or, not knowing of the existence of stamps before their time, were the same ideas born at the same time in each one of their minds?

Both hypotheses are possible. However, we tend to believe the latter. In fact, the stamps of 1653 were valid for only a certain amount of time, and their usage was limited only to Paris, and, if one accepts that the fill in the blank postage used at the court of Charles II and in that of Louis XIV, and which were not for the general public, no one has yet to find a single trace of its usage elsewhere.

There is nothing extraordinary, therefore, that Mr. Treffenberg and Rowland Hill didn't have knowledge of a fact of local administration having taken place 180 years before them, a fact so unknown that in our time, one had to compel the archives to supply documents in order to make the observation of its almost ephemeral existence.

Even so, whether Mr. Treffenberg and Mr. Rowland-Hill had any knowledge about the stamps of the XVIIth century, it is nonetheless true that it is due to their initiative, especially that of the latter (ie, Rowland-Hill), that we are indebted for the franking system of which we enjoy the benefits everyday, and its ease of use.

Leaving to the contemporaries of Louis XIV the honor of having first imagined it, we believe that the whole world must be grateful to England for having developed something which others had declared, before her, that it was impossible to achieve, and for having known how to succeed where France had long ago so carelessly let fall by the wayside.

END

[Louis François Hanciau (Editor)]

About Stamp Collecting. Its origin and development

[De la Timbromanie. Son origine et son développement]

Le Timbre-Poste, June 1863, Volume 1, Issue 5, [pp.1-2], August, Issue 7, [p.2] & October, Issue 9, [p.2]

The first volume of Le Timbre-Poste was re-set in the then-current smaller size and reprinted in 1867 without the advertisements. This article can be found on pages 27-31

The reprinted volume was subsequently reprinted by Il Collezionista - Italia Filatelica and published as a supplement to Issue 5 of 7th March 1970

Translation produced for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, France

October 2019

ABOUT STAMP COLLECTING ITS ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT

I

Since time immemorial there have been observant minds who have enjoyed collecting various objects to which science, the arts and tradition attach a certain value. This gave rise to art galleries, science laboratories, libraries, etc., where one can almost with a glance appreciate the progress in the sciences and the arts and easily study the steady progress of these disciplines as well as their state in any given century. Collections of lesser intrinsic value but sometimes of greater interest occupy a place beneath these majestic collections. This includes antiques and historic objects. Respect for the past creates all of their value. Seeing and touching these objects enables one, with a bit of imagination, to see the famous persons who owned these objects. Likewise, when we observe ruins we conjure up the people they survived; as, for example, Marie Stuart's bible, Voltaire's cane and the famous table upon which the abdication at Fontainebleau was signed – these remind us of the unhappy queen, the sarcastic poet and the victor at Austerlitz.

Finally, in last place, at the bottom of the scale, we find these silly collections of trifles of all sorts, snuff boxes, etc., even gaiter buttons, which owe their existence to an obsessive and idle person whose intelligence is inversely proportional to his fortune.

Without being so pretentious as to elevate the kind of collections we are primarily concerned with to the level of the first category mentioned, we are not shy about saying that however modest and innocent a collection of stamps may appear, it is worthy of being classified well above the last category mentioned, which it surpasses by as much as the useful over the useless, action over mind, in short, by ineptness.

But before getting to the heart of our subject, “postage stamps”, let us take a look back at the period preceding the creation of postage stamps and thus of their collection.

II

Amongst the discoveries that the 19th Century can boast of and which will forever assure its superiority over all other centuries past and future, the most important is steam, or at least the application of this powerful locomotive force to industry, primarily in navigation and the railroad. Thanks to it, distances were shortened or eliminated, lands that hardly knew each other were put into contact, the two worlds that separate the infinite from the ocean are now neighbors and are more familiar with each other than the extremes of their own province were to our forefathers. These means of communication produced a commercial revolution unprecedented in the history of the world and made the commerce of Tyre, Carthage and Greater Venice seem like child’s play.

But it would not be of great import if the powers of steam had been used only to satisfy our material needs. A much larger and more noble mission would be theirs: to be a vehicle of thought. What connects us to relatives far away and informs us about them? What reports about the homeland to one exiled to another hemisphere or simply banished from his native country? What reports to the soldier getting accustomed to the tropics or to the traveler who ends up in the southern hemisphere; in short, what allows us, each in our own situation, to chat a few moments with loved ones, whatever the circumstances, when chance or a mishap has separated us? It is letters. It is this humble missive that discreetly carries part of ourselves to the farthest reaches of the continents, across straits and isthmi: our joys, our sorrows and our wishes – in short, our ideas.

So, if correspondence is of such high moral value, we must gladly greet anything that contributes to its development and that makes it more accessible and affordable to the least affluent classes, that is, to everyone, to the masses. Thus, after steam what led to the astonishing increase in letters and correspondence of all sorts in just a few years was most assuredly the postage stamp.

If our readers would consent to be transported with us a few years back in time, they would be surprised to see the vast array of obstacles that confronted the sending of a simple letter: high fees, nearly always little known to the public, in large cities the incredible amount of time consumed in franking letters; extremely slow delivery of letters; difficulties in relations with various regional authorities; finally, the administration – triple accounting for an extremely small amount of revenue. That is the trouble the old system caused everyone – both administrators and users – not so long ago.

This was essentially the situation when Rowland Hill invented the postage stamp under circumstances that we have already reported (see page 21). Saying he “invented” it is perhaps not accurate, as it seems well established that long before Rowland Hill there was a similar means of franking; but it has not been proved that Rowland Hill knew Velayer and Treffenberg. Moreover, history is full of such discoveries by many actors and if the reader will permit, we shall cite two outstanding examples. It is true that the Chinese started printing well before we did. Does that mean the fame of Gutenberg is less deserving? We don’t think so. Did not other people besides Columbus believe in a land beyond the Atlantic? It is possible, even probable. But he was not content to dream. He acted and gave us a world. To us, only these men of genius, those who acted on what they conceived of, despite innumerable obstacles, are the real inventors.

We shall not dwell upon the benefits of the use of postage stamps; they are obvious and do not warrant discussion; anyone who writes appreciates their value; we shall limit ourselves here to the discussion of stamps from the point of view of the collector.

III

Belgium is the place where the idea of collecting stamps originated. We dare say that we were among the first in Brussels to anticipate that these bits of paper were not destined merely to be marred by a canceling device but that curiosity would be aroused by these little multi-colored paper squares, at the time regarded with disdain or indifference; today, whatever their value, they are eagerly sought and reverently preserved in innumerable albums. Thanks to the premature faith we had in the future of postage stamps as collectibles, we have one of the most spectacular collections in existence. Over nearly 12 years, while no one paid any attention, we amassed these little effigies one by one, sometimes with great sacrifice, and we were motivated by nothing but the collector's passion. We were motivated only by the "love of art" if the reader will forgive this, no doubt, exaggerated expression, which accurately reflects our thought. In a word, the market did not exist, there were not yet dealers. We still remember: fervent collector, we went from time to time to feast our eyes on the 100 to 150 stamps displayed in the establishment of Mr. Vandermaelen, that vast pot-pourri of collectibles from all over the world: and neither the stuffed birds, nor the collection of scientific instruments, nor the gigantic globe attracted our attention – we only had eyes for stamps, the objects of our most salient desires and for whom we would have exchanged all the collectible treasures of the world, even the nail upon which Napoleon is said to have hung his sword on the eve of Waterloo and which the locals sell daily to the English. Philately was in its infancy at that time; it had but few followers; it has since grown up and reached dimensions that are difficult to comprehend but by people like us who are in a position to follow its relentless trajectory. From Belgium the fervor spread to France, then to Britain, to Germany and finally crossed the Atlantic and now stamps are enjoying favor in the USA and the Confederates don't seem to want to stop their progress. As for Europe, stamps have achieved every sort of success, including that of criticism. Oh yes, these poor stamps have been criticized and even slandered. They have been accused of no less than causing youth to become greedy, distracting them from their studies and as for adults, occupying their minds to the detriment of their more serious duties, inspiring hatred and contempt among citizens ... no, not the latter – those are already enough grievances against them. Doesn't this sound like an indictment, dear readers? All that is lacking is a preamble and a ruling – then stamps would be properly convicted. Were they really so guilty, those stamps, as to give rise to such accusations? We think not and we shall try to present their defense while begging collectors' pardon for such a poor presentation.

IV

The first ones to get excited about stamps, when the latter started emerging from obscurity, were children, grade school and middle school students, and there is nothing in this that is irrational or contrary to nature. Could the young, who judge only with their eyes - and are not yet guided solely by cold reason but instinctively love all things attractive, vibrant and young like them - not fall in love with these little paper squares – red, green and blue – which when assembled and attractively displayed create a collection much more appealing to their eyes than the most valuable collection of Roman medals? Most decidedly not. True wisdom then would be to find a way to take what has been considered so far as a frivolous pleasure and apply it to the benefit of education and intelligence. And we believe that this has almost been achieved already. Here we are addressing especially those of our readers who have been out of school for some time and are better able to sensibly judge these matters.

After mathematics, one of the driest of the sciences is doubtless geography, at least the way it is taught by most teachers. For the pupil it is nothing but a long list of capes and gulfs, of seas of all colors, a maze of rivers, a labyrinth of islands; he hears only barbaric names that mean nothing to him and that teach him nothing. In short, the pupil upon leaving school generally knows that America is to the west of Europe and that Belgium is divided into 9 provinces but as for real geography - that is, the division of the continents into kingdoms, their condition, their forms of government, their dynasties, their commerce and their coinage – don't ask him a word about it, as that was not in the curriculum. Well, this may anger the learned teachers but what their learning and routine were not able to do, the humble stamps could and moreover they were fun for the pupils, which the teachers never managed to be. Two weeks spent handling these varied trifles often give a person more knowledge than years spent in school because just in handling them you must learn the geographic location of each country. The vignette usually teaches one the form of government of the country. Finally, of special interest to serious persons, one must learn the currencies in use around the world: dollars, pounds, kopecks, kreuzer, etc. and their relation to our own, the franc.

As to the complaint that this collection fervor inspires greed in our youth, it is no better founded than the first. We have seen it worded differently, spiritually even, in a Parisian publication Le Journal Amusant, that saw fit to dedicate two pages to sketches of stamps. Thank you, Journal Amusant. This complaint was aimed at the little stamp bourse in the Jardin des Tuileries and the Luxembourg. But we think it is undeserved and that the extent of the bourse was greatly exaggerated. The activities of the bourse amount to a simple exchange not intended at all for profit; the budding merchants are motivated only by the very innocent passion of the collector.

After gradually capturing the attention of the young, stamps were not about to stop their remarkable progress and they began to attract the attention of adults, who tended to not get so quickly excited about things as the young. They better understand how to use their reason and experience to achieve unexpected results from this youthful fantasy that gave the young only a transitory thrill. Stamp collectors now have the approval of a variety of serious people: merchants, scholars, officials, etc., who were impressed, like so many people, by the variety of colorful, heraldic vignettes, whose interest is only destined to grow with time. Stamp collections represent an enormous resource for historians and writers who in a century or two will write the history of our time from the points of view of politics, industry and commerce. In order to appreciate the service we firmly believe they are destined to provide as historic documents, let us imagine that we had them, for example, in the past 3 centuries. So much useful information on the commercial relations among nations and their industries – that we almost completely lack on past centuries. But more fortunate than our forebears, we have at our fingertips means that they did not – to transmit contemporary history to our descendants – it is up to us to put it to good use. Furthermore, the road has now been paved and followed by thousands of collectors who are working for posterity, some without realizing it. Furthermore, we are not hesitant to admit that we are glad to have contributed in our modest way to the advancement of philately; and we are happy to have had a hand in its becoming such a universal subject of study and commerce. And who knows? Perhaps future scholars and historians will be grateful to the present generation for preserving such valuable archives for them.

END

S[igmund] F[riedl]

Small messages

[Kleine Mittheilungen]

Welt-Post, June 1887, Volume 12, Whole number 14, p.132

(There are two entries under this title:

The Viennese philatelic literature society and James Chalmers, the inventor of the postage stamp)

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
? 2019

SMALL MESSAGES

The Viennese philatelic literature society

On 2 July of this year, the Viennese Congress for the Specialized Press will host a summer festival in Ober-Meidling, [the proceeds from which] will benefit the founding of its pension fund. There will be a very rich program and the admission cost will be such that a large number of Viennese residents can definitely be expected. Admission per person – 1 F [= Florin?], Family admission at 3 F [Florins].

James Chalmers, the “Inventor” of the postage stamp

It is not Sir Rowland Hill, as one generally assumes, who invented the postage stamp, which is so essential and for the postal service so practical, but rather James Chalmers, a book dealer in Dundee who died in the year 1853 at the age of 71. Already in 1834, this man proposed a system based on a gummed stamp that could be attached [to an envelope], just as we still have today. His son, Patrick Chalmers, succeeded, after constant attempts, to make known the service his father had provided [in inventing the stamp]. We will reproduce in future editions large excerpts from the numerous and diverse brochures available to us that prove this fact. It is, after all, in the interest, especially of philatelists, to honor he who deserves this honor!

END

Wolfgang Fendler

Hans Wagner

in: Bund Deutscher und Österreichischer Philatelisten-Vereine (1896-1924): Die Bundes- und Philatelistentage., Band 9 der Schriftenreihe zur Geschichte der Philatelie in Deutschland, Consilium Philatelicum, Bonn, Germany, 2006, p.6

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

August 2019

HANS WAGNER

Hans Wagner, actually Johannes Wagner, born on the 18th September 1852 in the Lutheran city of Wittenberg, in 1871, after he completed a liberal arts education at the Melanchthon School in his home city, he started a military career and in 1872 was part of the occupation of France. After the withdrawal of German troops in 1873 his regiment was sent to Mainz. From there in the years 1874 and 1876 he traveled to Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, France, Italy and the Mediterranean countries. His biggest adventure was a worldwide trip that brought him to China amongst other places. In 1890 he was promoted to the leadership of his regiment that eventually brought him to Heidelberg.

Already in 1863 when he was 11 years old, he started collecting stamps and in the year 1884 he began writing scholarly articles about stamps. His serious work broadened philatelic knowledge and also served to unite German and Austrian collectors as well as fighting fraud. In 1884 as the result of his great efforts he was awarded honored status in Mainz 1. In the following years he was also honored by other German, Austrian and foreign collecting groups. Hans Wagner died at the age of 88 on the 21st July 1940 in Frankfurt-am-Main.

END

Italian Collectors: The “Distinguished” Deceased - Philipp de Ferrary
[Collezionisti Italiani: I “Grand” scomparsi - Filippo De Ferrari]
Il Collezionista Italia Filatelica, 16th October 1976, Volume 32, Issue 19, p.10

{A correction was published as: P. Panini: La nascita di De Ferrary. [The birth of De Ferrary.], Il Collezionista Italia Filatelica, 27th November 1976, Volume 32, Issue 22, p.27}

Translation by Translator for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
October 2019

ITALIAN COLLECTORS: THE “DISTINGUISHED” DECEASED

PHILIPP DE FERRARY

Filippo De Ferrari

It does not seem strange that the first name among those we will remember is Filippo De Ferrari de la Renotière, about whom, having been adopted by an Austrian noble and having almost always lived in France, his Italian origin is too often forgotten.

In reality, Filippo De Ferrari has all the documents in order to be considered our compatriot, since he was born in Genova in 1848 to the marchioness Brignole-Sale, duchess of Galliera. Since he lived during a time in which, naturally, there were no philatelic expositions, we know only that his enormous wealth made it possible for him to collect an exceptional quantity of stamps from every part of the world, assembling a large number of collections, each of which contained almost all of the unique specimens and all the greatest rarities known at the time. Just to cite one example, he owned 12 specimens of the Tuscany 3 Liras. The first world war eliminated the possibility that Filippo De Ferrari’s descendants could admire his collections. He had left them in his will to the Berlin Postal Museum, but France, considering De Ferrari an “enemy citizen” because he was an Austrian subject, confiscated all his assets, including the stamps, which were sold in a series of auctions that lasted almost five years, yielding proceeds of approximately 25 million francs of that era.

The Birth of De Ferrari

P. PANINI – Genoa. In your [issue] no. 19/76 I see various “medals” relating to “The distinguished deceased”. The first collector cited, Filippo De Ferrari, although he came from a Genovese family, to be precise, he was not born in Genoa but on Rue d’Armstrong in Paris on January 11, 1850, as can be seen from the work of Alfredo Giuggioli, which also contains an excerpt from Filippo De Ferrari’s birth certificate in the footnotes, reported for history with the names of Louis Philippe Antoine Marie Augustin Raoul. I wanted to let you know this because individuals like the one in question, on a par with Rowland Hill, M. Burrus, Théodore Champion and others, are entitled to accuracy in the historical/philatelic field, if for no other reason than to avoid errors [and] omissions.

We thank our reader for his/her kind clarification. While it clarifies that De Ferrari was born in Paris and not Genoa, it does not change the fact of the great collector's Genovese origin on the maternal side; and this is why we included him among the Italian philatelists.

END

Jean-Baptiste Moens 1833-1908: Founder of Philatelic Commerce
[Jean-Baptiste Moens 1833-1908: Fondateur du Commerce Philatelique]
In: Collection Jean-Baptiste Moens de Mr Georges Waroquiers., 223rd Auction Sale,
Maison Williame, Brussels, Belgium, 8th February 2003, n.pp. [pp.3-4]

Translated for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
October 2019

JEAN-BAPTISTE MOENS 1833-1908:
FOUNDER OF PHILATELIC COMMERCE

Jean-Baptiste Moens (1833-1908)

FOUNDER OF THE PHILATELIC TRADE

Mr. Jean-Baptiste Moens was born in Tournai, on the 27th of May, 1833, and deceased in Brussels, on the 29th of April, 1908.

From an early age, he enjoyed an exemplary destiny, and demonstrated an abundant vitality.

At 15 years old, he started selling old coins. With the money he earned, he moved to Brussels in order to rent a store from Mr. BORTIER, who was the owner of most of the shops of the BORTIER Gallery (i.e., a shopping center).

There, modestly, the young Moens set up a bookstore for high quality books. He specialized in selling old books, and was immediately successful.

Through selling across a good part of the world, he quickly acquired quite a number of stamps, which he began to collect. It was in 1852 that he sold stamps for the first time, specifically, those for which he had a number of duplicates.

It was in 1860 that he understood that he could earn a profit from selling stamps professionally.

He quickly understood that there was a great future in stamps, for in 1863, he wrote in The Postage Stamp, "It is in Belgium that first germinated the idea to collect stamps. We dare even to say that we were the first in Brussels to sense that the postage stamp, though only a little piece of paper destined to be smeared by the claws of the postal service, would become so popular. We had the premonition that people's curiosity would be attached to these little multicolored squares of paper, which, up to that point, dismissively or distractedly, were hardly even noticed (or barely noticed). We understood what their value would be today. They are researched with fervor and conserved religiously in numerous albums."

In 1862, he acquired the collaboration of Mr. HANCIAU. He proved to be the providential and indispensable man to realize J-B Moens' ambitions.

It was also in 1862, that he edited the first professional stamp catalogue in French. Moreover, on the 15th of February, 1863, he edited the first philatelic newspaper in French (The Postage Stamp, 1863-1900 – published for 38 years).

With the collaboration (i. e., the support or assistance) of Mr. Hanciau came different brochures. We will not list all of them, since the list would be too long. For 38 years, the highest accolades were attributed to them.

In a late issue of The Postage Stamp, from December 1900, we cite the following text:

“Whether one believes it or not, we make our decision (i. e., to stop the work of publishing) with no light heart. On the contrary, we bitterly regret that we must part ways with our readers, and with these dear stamps which have given us so many wonderful moments, even to the point of forgetting that we were merchants!”

We have the privilege to sell at public auction the greatest collection J-B Moens has ever assembled to this day.

This lot, which dates from 1860 to 1900, is admired for its diversity, its quality, and its quantity. Given the rarity of certain lots, his work was often qualified as “Philatelic Antiquities.”

Some examples from the current sale include:

Lot number	Year(s)	Description
Lot #76	1862	1st World catalogue – 72 pages
Lot # 77	1862	2nd edition + supplement
Lot #109	1862	1st World catalogue (private collection of J. B. Moens)
Lot #142	1862	The Postage Stamp (Quarto Edition) – containing the premier prize (the épaulettes are available for 0,20 centimes each).
Lot #143	1863/1900	The newspaper The Postage Stamp in 8 volumes.
Lot #144	1874/1896	The Fiscal Stamp, in 22 volumes bound in half-leather
Lot #146	1863	The Fiscal Stamp in 3 volumes. Luxury Edition (all months on different paper).
Lot #159	1863	Album. 1st edition (bound in canvas by the éditeur).
Lot #160	1890	Album. 1st edition (bound in bookbinding)
Lot #173	1890	Gold Medal
Lot #120	1900	50th anniversary – the prototype was not issued due to going out of business

NB – there are also 11 lots from the library of J. B. Moens; how does one distinguish them one from another?

All the books are bound, and include a photo Ex-Libris.
The catalogues are only bound Ex-Libris.

Concerning the Baron H. de Rothschild: in his substantive philatelic library, all the volumes were bound in the same leather, and the inside appearance was always the same.

END

Wolfgang Maassen

Who is Who in Philately?

[Wer ist Wer in der Philatelie?]

3rd edition, Volume 1: A-D, Phil*Creativ, Schwalmthal, Germany, 2011, 328pp.;
Volume 2: E-H, 2017, 371pp.; Volume 3, I-L, 2020, 319pp.; Volume 4, M-R, 2020, 358pp.;
Volume 5, S, 2022, 318pp. & Volume 6, T-Z, 2022, 244pp.

Only the Foreword to each volume and On the method have been translated as follows:
Volume 1, pp.3-11; Volume 2, pp.4-6; Volume 3, pp.3-4; Volume 4, p.3; Volume 5, p.3 &
Volume 6, p.3.

Some biographies of individual philatelists of interest to myself have also been translated:-
Volume 1 Dr. Ulrich Brunnert (p.197); George B. Duerst (pp.301-302)

Volume 2 Heinrich Fränkel (Fraenkel) (pp.104-106)

Volume 3 Dr. Ludwig König (p.133); Justin Henri Lallier (p.204)

Volume 4 Otto Rommel (p.321); Ernst Roschlau (p.325)

Volume 5

Volume 6 Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann (pp.17-18); Victor Weinert (p.131)

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
January 2021-June 2024

WHO IS WHO IN PHILATELY?

Foreword to the 1st edition (1999)

Note: This Foreword was originally available as Philat. Trans. 425.

It is certainly no new idea to produce a list of deserving and, in their time, well-known philatelists; there had already been attempts in the first decade of the twentieth century. The World War, particularly the accompanying changes in political boundaries and alliances, the loss of literary and biographical materials, the development of philately into a popular movement, made it seem almost impossible to produce an updated list.

Philately, as a very popular hobby, lacks such a list. A Who's Who should contain the pioneers, living collectors, leading functionaries, and philatelists who have made a name for themselves.

It was decided to issue a Who's Who for the one-hundredth German Day of Philately at Soest in 1999, containing many of the philatelists connected to the German Federation of Philatelists and its predecessors. The support of the German Federation of Philatelists, represented by its President, Michael Adler, is evident in that many leading forces in the Federation are listed in the Who's Who.

The historical connection may be seen by the reader in that the listing contains people from areas that today are in our neighbouring countries that previously were close to the German Federation of Philatelists and who were the pioneers of philately, dating as far back as the middle of the previous century.

Thus, it was not easy to define criteria for inclusion and it was hard to stick to these criteria. The Who's Who should not be just a lexicon of philatelists, but a handbook of prominent philatelists that, in their time, not only left their signatures as collectors, but also as exhibitors, experts, dealers, or authors. The Who's Who should not list only the pioneers and the greats of philately, nor should it found a new "Top 100" club, it should also list the many "small people", the hitherto unknowns, the nameless many without whom the popular movement of philately never could have reached its present state.

It was not always possible to find enough information, dates, and other facts, for listing some people that should have been included. In some cases there wasn't enough correct information to justify putting it in print. Modern technology has come to the rescue, in that a separately issued CD-ROM contains an additional couple of hundred short biographies.

Of course, in the first edition of a work such as this, there will be errors of omission or fact. Furthermore, many biographies are incomplete; others are missing. Here I wish to ask all readers, particularly the connoisseurs and philatelists of today, to support our effort by sending us copies containing dates, facts, biographical information, pictures, etc. We are grateful for any corrections and additional information; these will be reflected in future editions.

I must not forget to thank all those who have supported this effort: Michael Adler for his call for support to the Federation of German Philatelists; Emil W. Mewes, Hans Paikert, and Hans-Georg Shlegel for copies of lists from the early twentieth century; Karlheinz Wittig and Wolfram Grallert for numerous enlargements and references; Wilhelm van Loo for the large number of portraits through which we can see what many of the people named herein looked like.

My particular thanks go to Dr. Udo Schwenk-Bresseler for his editorial work. He worked for almost two years in research, was responsible for the first draft of most entries, and gave form to the Who's Who. Also, his unique sense of humour is reflected in the effort. To him are due certain anachronisms and impossibilities. I must also not forget Norbert Röhm, who must be thanked for more than a hundred entries and even more pictures; these would not have been available to us, if he had not been there. He has accomplished the inimitable feat of preparing, in the shortest time, a row of historical philatelists and made them almost ready for print. A warm thanks!

On the 100th German Philatelic Day (1899-1999)
Soest, October 1999

Wolfgang Maassen

Foreword to the revised 2nd edition (2005-2007)

When I started making biographical notes on well-known philatelists in the mid-1990s, I had little idea what this little “sideline” was going to trigger. Over the years, the number of index cards and notes increased, so that the anniversary of the 100th German Philatelists’ Day in Soest in 1999 seemed the right occasion to publish a book entitled Who is who in Philately?

It was as if I had opened a “Pandora’s box” with the first release. While quite a few people praised and acknowledged the new work, there were others who missed this or that entry painfully, especially renowned examiners and professional philatelists. But collectors in the new federal states also saw themselves and their important personalities from the older and more recent history of philately, especially the GDR, as far too little represented.

One thing I learned from this first attempt: To please everybody is an art that even the best cannot master. And now, more than six years later, I feel further away than ever from the status of “best”. Because with every year that I have become more and more involved in philatelic history - I already agreed to this at the public presentation of the first edition - larger mountains of the past have piled up in front of me, which - in terms of time and effort, but also the space required - have almost overwhelmed me. Modern technical equipment offered little help in the face of such problems.

Since then, many collectors and philatelists have helped to point out new directions with individual reports, a few - such as Peter Fischer, Kurt Link, Dr. Kiepe and Rolf Ritter, to name but a few - with even more detailed compilations and many references to sources. However, it was clear to me from the very beginning that the justified demands could only be met if the problem could be solved systematically and comprehensively. But this would require many, many years of continuous work.

Since my place of residence is not in Leipzig, Berlin, Frankfurt or Munich - not even close to them - and since I do not have the necessary time to spend months in libraries, there was only one way to go: I had to acquire all journals and relevant literature that might be of value as sources. It was a lucky coincidence that shortly after the first edition of Wer ist wer in der Philatelie was published, several large libraries were closed down within three years (including the Roland Library, Taunus Library, Mewes Library, Joseph Hackmey Library), where I was able to expand my archive of German and English journal literature back to its beginnings. Up to now, a small fortune was invested, but at the same time, with every new acquisition, this material was carefully looked through for sources. These were copied, carded and then partly recorded on the PC.

In this way, it has been possible to record many well-known, i.e. well-known and formerly widely circulated, specialist journals since 1863, although the holdings are not always and in many case were incomplete throughout. German journals published after the Second World War were almost completely reviewed, as well as a series of individual issues. There are still gaps in the publications of associations of the 19th and early 20th century, as long as they only consisted of “Confidential Notifications”, but also in some advertising journals and specialist magazines, which were only published in small numbers for a short time, sometimes only for weeks and months. However, I do not think it is an exaggeration to say that up to the editorial status (2005), about 70-80 percent of the German trade journals relevant in this context were evaluated in the last seven years. It will be up to the acquisition possibilities of the coming years to close the gaps that still exist, especially since the majority of the notable German publicly accessible specialist libraries rarely have better overall holdings.

In this respect, this second edition also does not claim to be complete. It can never be and will never be complete, especially as new data and facts are added almost daily, old ones have to be corrected and improved. Philatelic history is and has always been a history of Personalities - and these "live" even if they have long since died. Specialists and philatelists encounter new contexts, devote themselves to individual persons to an extent I cannot match, research in city and local archives and - also when evaluating philatelic collections - always come across something new. How enlightening this can be, I was able to experience for myself when I researched numerous names in the Federal Archives in Berlin, partly together with Hans Meyer and Dr. Kiepe.

If, despite these reservations due to the approach and system, a second edition is nevertheless attempted, then on the one hand to establish the current stock, and on the other hand to have the possibility of publication once again. Because the volume of data is currently so extensive, that they are actually only publishable letter by letter.

However, there was a second, more important reason for the decision to introduce a completely revised and expanded new edition: Some individuals, especially the Consilium Philaticum, were right to criticize the insufficient weighting that allowed historically less important philatelists to sometimes have much larger entries than the real pioneers of philately, who are still well known today and to whom we owe the heyday of German philately (the example of Hugo Michel in the first edition is a good example of this). Now, this was partly due to the urgent production deadline of 1998/99, partly due to the fact that I had to start work, but also due to my oversight that should not be repeated.

In the first edition, the concept was to include alphabetically every philatelist in the same form and structure, regardless of their actual significance. This concept denied exactly what makes philatelic history so interesting: to use biographical data to show the truly significant achievement. And this is only possible if one emphasizes this, not just by summarizing the data and leaving the amount of data to the reader as an indicator.

The solution to this problem was to bring selected philatelists closer to the reader in a more journalistically edited form with specially produced "portraits". This would have significantly increased the information value, but - and this was evident in the final editing of the first letters - it would also have expanded the scope considerably. A further problem was once again the time factor, because such "portraits" cannot be written in a few weeks or months with the necessary density and differentiation. Thus, the publication date of the second edition would again have been considerably delayed.

About the selection one could have argued once more splendidly. What are their criteria? Does the selection also apply to philatelists who are still alive or only to those who have passed away? The reader should understand that the author primarily considers the achievements of former philatelists, especially in the "scholarly" field of philately, to be decisive for their timeless significance to this day, whereas purely associational official services - exceptions only confirm the rule here - are considered less relevant, unless they are combined with the former variety of services, which is certainly the case in individual cases.

Some philatelists would rather be the subject of a book than of a “portrait” of their life’s work, limited to a few pages. This can be done elsewhere, hopefully by others, but is also pursued by the author himself in individual cases.

Deviating from the first edition - following the understanding of the German trade press up to the 20th century - a significantly larger number of well-known philatelists from neighbouring countries, even from the USA and overseas, were therefore included. These played a major role in the early decades of German philately, as the award of the Lindenberg Medal from 1906 onwards shows. It is precisely the relations with English philately, albeit sorely interrupted by two world wars, that were cultivated again and again with great pleasure and should be honoured here. Therefore, it was also a good idea to portray selected well-known foreign philatelists, with whom many German collectors had been in contact since the times of Alfred Moschkau or Dr. Franz Kalckhoff. It should be borne in mind that many collectors in Austria, Hungary or Czechoslovakia were closely associated with Germany and the first German societies before the First World War, and the minds of those times did not necessarily differentiate between domestic and foreign.

If there is one area that I myself - in terms of its importance - always consider to be neglected, it is the area of the trade, professional trade. Although this area in particular was considered significant, actually with the most important newly taken into account (the author himself has the confidential protocols of the IPHV since the 1980s, but also the later trade journals at his disposal!), the result - measured by the number and importance of professional philatelists - is still comparatively poor. This is due on the one hand to the lack of association orientation of the trade, but also to their internal structure, which - unlike collectors’ associations - did not translate meritorious achievements into honorable and qualifying evaluations, i.e. honors, for decades. Therefore, biographically useful notes, even less usable photos, are rarely found in such journals. But I also experience in the present how little well-known professional philatelists, specialist dealers, wholesalers or auctioneers are interested in their own biographical development: you don't keep an archive, you don't keep anything, neither texts, documents nor photos, but you are also seldom willing to bother to investigate this material, if it still exists at all, and to put it together, at best a quarter of the contemporary professional philatelists I asked were willing to submit something; The rate for (professional) expertisers does not look any better. One may ascribe it to the compulsion of daily livelihood and the increase of profit that the insight into the necessity of biographical documentation only grows with a certain age.

In order to facilitate the readability of the individual entries, it was generally decided not to include references to the source of each detailed statement. Only in exceptional cases, where statements contradict each other and cannot be clarified, are they noted. The reason for this abstinence is not to be found in the lack of orientation to scientific procedures of citation technique and the work with the original sources, but to the extent by which the work would have increased. One may well bear in mind that for some individual entries of a person, up to 50 and more different individual sources were evaluated; in the case of Alfred Moschkau, Louis Senf, Hugo Michel, Carl Lindenberg or Dr. Franz Kalckhoff, even this number might not be enough by far. Even with the most clever abbreviation, the necessary source references would result in a multiple extent of many entries, which neither facilitates the flow of reading nor brings greater exploitation benefits. However, in order to meet the demands of future research, for the first time ever, with each entry in this edition, the most important source references for philatelists from the archive of the evaluated material are listed under the respective entry, especially for philatelists living in the past.

The same applies to the illustrative material, which - for philatelists of the pioneering and early days of philately - is often taken from old specialist journals of the time. The reader will easily notice this from the quality of such images; but only in a few cases did I succeed in acquiring original images of the first philatelic decades or at least reproductions of them. I owe many pictures from more recent times to Wilhelm van Loo, Horst Hamann, Dr. Heinz Jaeger and many other philatelists not mentioned here.

Parallel to this work, a digitalization of the paper photo archive, which has been accumulated over 20 years, was begun, but will only be available for use by interested philatelists at a later date. So it only remains for me to thank all the helpers and assisting philatelists, old responsible persons of former and present journals, the editors of many collected works and specialist books for their direct or indirect support. I would also like to thank the Consilium Philatelicum, especially Peter Fischer and Kurt Link, for their critical view of things, which for me was the driving force behind the new edition.

I dedicate this work to the Bund Deutscher Philatelisten e.V., in the hope that in the future too it will recognize the responsibility that will accrue to it from the past, preserve the tried and tested, maintain what is available and try new things - for the benefit of philately in the future.

Wolfgang Maaßen
Summer 2005

Foreword to [Volume 1] of the 3rd edition (2011)

When the author wrote the preface to the 2nd edition, at that time, in 2005, a printed new edition was still planned. This did not come about, as it seemed more important to him to ensure a wider distribution of the work and thus to be able to create a greater benefit. Thanks to the willingness of the Bund Deutscher Philatelisten, it was thus possible to integrate this extended second edition in the “Archives” section of the BDPh website www.bdph.de. This was to ensure continuous further processing.

Things turned out differently. In the past five years, the author found that not only individual entries, but also all information on individual Internet pages, up to and including the illustration, were pirated without any source reference or even a mention of the original author. Truly no motivation for someone who puts in a lot of work and costs to repeat or even continue this experiment.

It is true that the texts offered are my own texts for which a copyright claim exists. Their use is permitted, but should be in accordance with the usual cultural and scientific practices of citing the source with reference to the author in the sense of “fair use”. It is not a question of personal style, but rather of legally relevant copyright regulations.

Since there is no need for the author to promote the proliferation of literature, but rather to make it more difficult, the third and, from the author’s point of view today, last Edition is now once again in printed form. It differs clearly from the two previous ones: not only in content, but also in the more easily readable form. In addition, contributions for which the original sources can still be traced are provided with those in smaller type. Picture credits are also listed where possible.

Unfortunately, in some cases this is not always possible, which is not intentional, but is due to the fact that over many years the author has not been able to find relevant information available to the public without any intention of publication. This later objective only emerged in the mid-1990s, when the collection became so extensive that a book publication seemed the obvious choice. Should anyone feel that their rights have been permanently violated here, please contact the author.

Nothing significant has changed in the basic concept, although names for which there is simply too little information have been omitted. On the other hand, philatelists who are really particularly important are honoured with much larger entries, sometimes even with small “treatises”. All this, especially since the much larger number of entries than in the previous editions, requires a much higher volume. Thus this third edition will be published in several volumes in the coming years.

During the production period, corrections and additions will be noted by the author, which will then be added in a final volume alongside a complete index of persons. This is at least the plan for the next few years, which presupposes one’s own health and of course a certain reader interest in the material.

Wolfgang Maaßen,
Summer 2011

On the Method

The entries are made in alphabetical order, whereby umlauts such as ä, ö, ü, äu are treated like the vowels a, o, u, au which are not umlaut. The spellings ae, ue (in names) are sorted in alphabetical order, etc.

The individual biographies are in the following order: name - life data - profession - collecting activity/specialty(ies) - Memberships and offices/functions - author's work - exhibitions and successes - honours and, if applicable, other activities. In the case of professional philatelists, this is sometimes deviated from in favour of a more summary biographical presentation due to the different and non-comparable performance structure. In special individual cases, the author will evaluate them at the end.

For the purpose of simplification and better clarity, specific abbreviations were used in individual cases where certain references occur frequently or even regularly. These are listed in a separate list of abbreviations. In general, the new edition gives preference to an easier to understand presentation without too many abbreviations.

Deviating from the first edition, the generalisation of association names, which are different in themselves, was waived and the correct and complete name was listed. In the case of associations that are often repeated in the text (e.g. in Dresden or Berlin) or working groups (ArGe), these are abbreviated, but are then also listed in the list of abbreviations.

Generally used linguistic abbreviations were chosen according to the latest edition of DUDEN. Deviating from the first edition, the new German orthography was chosen.

Foreword to Volume 2 of the 3rd edition (2017)

When Volume 1 of this series appeared in its third edition and in printed form in 2011, the author would never have dreamed that it would take six years for Volume 2 to be published. The reason was other obligations. On the one hand, the organization and implementation of IPhLA 2012, the comprehensive book on early literature history, which was published under the title Milestones of Philatelic Literature of the 19th Century at the end of 2013, but also the specialist journal for philatelic and literary history launched in the same year, PHILA HISTORICA, which since then has been distributed digitally and in print with around 1,000 pages a year. Numerous other book projects of the author have also been realized since then: several Guide volumes (2015), a History of the Consilium Philatelicum (2016), two books about Philipp von Ferrari (2017) and much more.

In the intervening period however, it was also important to evaluate holdings of specialist journals that had not been viewed so far, especially those of the trade, whereby biographically relevant new entries were now processed not only for the letters (E-H) intended for volume 2, but right up to the end of the alphabet. Therefore, the preparations for volume 3 (from “I”) are already in progress, which I will hopefully be able to present in a shorter period of time, perhaps in the next two years. This is made possible by the active help of an assistant, Annegret Hols, who incorporates the so-called old paper archive stock, consisting of many thousands of copies from previously published journals, up to the letters “XYZ”. The entire digital archive now comprises well over ten thousand person entries and the number is increasing almost every day. At the same time, research into philatelic history is progressing, which necessitates constant revision of entries. The foreseeable scope, however, requires - especially for an edition to be printed - a limitation that is still geared towards the personalities who came from the German-speaking area or were more or less directly connected with it. Exceptions, especially from the early days of philately up to 1914, when it was still really international, confirm this focus.

Nevertheless, many readers will miss quite a few names, especially those of living, significant people in philately. There may be several reasons for this, e.g. that nothing has been published about them and submitted to the author or that they did not want publication. Too little is known about numerous others - not only but especially from earlier times - to justify their inclusion. The fragmentary information does not illuminate reality, so that a good third of the existing biographical entries are not yet reproduced, as the information available so far only comprises a few lines.

You can argue about the weighting of the entries, measured by their size. This does not follow the question of meaning - the author does not judge, but the scope of achievable data, so that it can happen that a living collector is presented with significantly more individual information than many others who are being presented well known from the past, but about which little is known.

The imbalance of some entries also results from the very different activities of philatelists. Dealers and other professional philatelists. Dealers and other professional philatelists often leave far fewer traces, albeit important ones for philately, than collectors who work in organizations on a very commendable honorary basis. The pattern of division of the portraits that is usual for the book does not always prove to be helpful.

As in the previous volume, this time too, as far as possible, an attempt was made to note the sources used with each entry. This information is not complete, because until the first edition in 1999 neither the author nor his helpers at the time recorded them - the digital inventory was originally only intended for personal use. Nevertheless, the information can be helpful, especially for ourselves, as we then know which sources have already been evaluated. Larger gaps still exist about well-known Swiss philatelists, as many years of the older SBZ editions are not accessible to me to this day.

In 2016 I published a preliminary version of the provisional inventory of the letters “E-J” in PHILA HISTORICA, in the hope of also receiving corrections and additions. This wish has been fulfilled, so that I was able to add a lot of detailed information, sometimes even biographies that are still included. I have given the names of these friendly helpers in the references. Thanks to the support of Peter Fischer from Berlin, numerous philatelists from the former GDR were also taken into account, but also a lot of detailed information on expertising activities that go back to a database that Wilhelm Van Loo made available to me. The latter also provided me with numerous portrait photos, for which I am very grateful. Without his countless philatelic history photos, German philately would be poorer.

However, this greatly expanded and revised edition of this series of books that has now been submitted is unlikely to be complete or correct in every detail. It is absolutely impossible for the author to check every date, every previous information. He can only evaluate what others have written. Exceptions are a number of biographies that the author himself has written and researched in detail in recent years.

As editor and author, I ask readers, authors and journalists alike, to “fair use” this wealth of data. Of course, this work can be used by third parties, but an exact reference to the source is actually a matter of course, especially as it is so easy to do. Extensive, unchanged use in the digital “worlds” that the author reserves for himself for later periods are not permitted. The same applies to numerous photos that the author received as originals from people or from the photographer Wilhelm Van Loo.

Ultimately, we ask for your understanding that the progress of this work also reveals a certain inconsistency in the presentation (e.g. in the case of “honors”, “member” or “author”). Not infrequently with dates before, but sometimes only after naming the honors and the like. Standardizing all of this would have unnecessarily delayed the publication of this volume, which as an advanced aged author, I can live without rather than with such inadequacies.

To give an advance notice for the third volume now with the exact date seems presumptuous in view of the long period since the first to the second volume. But there is hope that Volume 3 can appear at a much shorter interval. I am still assuming that there will be five volumes.

Thanks for all the support!

Wolfgang Maassen
Spring 2017

Foreword to Volume 3 (3rd edition) [2018/2020]

When Volume 2 (letters E-H) came out in the summer of 2017, I promised that the next volume could appear in the next two years. This time, the preliminary editorial work had to be completed much faster than expected, so that the final manuscript for the set was already available at the beginning of 2018.

This was made possible by my colleague Annegret Hols, who had incorporated the so-called “paper copy archive” in the previous months, so that it was my job to make the final corrections, additions and proofreading, but also to provide the necessary illustrations. The preliminary publications in Phila Historica also proved to be valuable, as it attracted a considerable number of readers’ responses. This input from individual readers was noted under “Sources”.

Otherwise, what has already been said in the preface to the second volume applies. The final inventory has been reduced by data that is simply too poor to provide useful information. The Sources, that were introduced with this 3rd edition, are often not complete because they were often not recorded for the first two editions. Nor was it possible to check every entry for correctness. The Work primarily lists information that was printed in earlier and previous times in specialist journals and other literary works of all kinds worldwide. A case-by-case examination using primary source research is only possible in exceptional cases.

This recourse to earlier publications since the 19th century also means - and especially in the case of images/photos - that these can often only be reproduced with limited quality. In exceptional cases, it seemed better to us to do this anyway, in others there were definitely issues because the reproduction quality would have been too bad. It was always easier if we had photos of Wilhelm Van Loo - this applies mainly to the last 60 years - which were again often used with his kind permission.

This volume is slightly smaller in scope than the previous one. If we had put the next letter “M” into it, it would have been much more extensive than the first two, so we decided to keep volumes 3 and 4 largely the same. Volume 4 will then presumably contain the letters “M-R” and the current planning envisages that this may also appear in 2020 as well. Thanks to the preparatory work that Annegret Hols did in our publishing house until she left.

I would like to thank her in particular, but also the readers of Phila Historica, the free specialist magazine on the Internet (www.philahistorica.de) for the support they have given, as well as my family once again for their work with typesetting and design, which will make this subsequent volume possible. 2018 was originally planned as the publication date, but due to the high workload caused by STOCKHOLMIA 2019 and other orders, it should not be until 2020 that this volume can also appear. The current planning provides that the volume 4 will appear in the coming year at the latest.

Wolfgang Maassen
Spring 2018/2020

Foreword to Volume 4 (3rd edition) [2020]

In the foreword to the third in this series of books, it was already clear why Volume 3 (summer 2020) and Volume 4 (planned: autumn 2020) follow one another closely. Thanks to the preparatory work in the last two years, this was possible. The corona pandemic also meant that the usual trips, presentations, participation in congresses and meetings were omitted, but also numerous usually very time-consuming assignments, which created freedom that could now be used. During the rework, which is particularly noticeable in the extensive expansion of the earlier editions, problems emerged that were not there for the creation of the 2nd print (Translator - 1st I think) and 2nd digital edition (1999/2005). The sometimes rigidly handled or interpreted data protection regulations make it difficult to research data on people, even the civil status data of the deceased. In addition, the author no longer receives magazines from many associations, so that he cannot evaluate them in the usual, easily accessible form. This creates a number of gaps that would otherwise have been few to fill.

Otherwise, what has already been said in the Foreword to the third volume applies. The manuscript inventory, to which the author continuously added, was shortened to exclude entries that are simply too small to provide useful information. The sources that were introduced with this 3rd edition are often not complete because they were often not recorded for the first two editions. Nor was it possible to check every entry for correctness. The work primarily lists information that was printed in earlier and previous times in specialist journals and other literary works of all kinds worldwide.

This recourse to earlier publications since the 19th century also means - and especially in the case of images and photographs - that these can often only be reproduced with limited quality. In exceptional cases it seemed better to us to do this anyway, in others there were absolutely no existing ones because the quality of reproduction would have been too poor. It was always easier when we had photos from Wilhelm van Loo - this applies primarily to the last 60 years - which were again often used with his kind permission.

This volume includes the letters M-R. Volume 5, which should contain the letters S-Z, is intended as the final volume in the series. This is expected to appear in two to three years.

Wolfgang Maassen
Autumn 2020

Foreword to Volume 5 (3rd edition) [2022]

Originally - see the foreword to Volume 4, which was published in autumn 2020 - it was planned to accommodate the remaining letters "S-Z" in one volume. But as processing progressed, it became increasingly clear that this would hardly be possible since the biographies for the letter "S" alone exceeded the 300 page limit. As it was our intention to keep the volume approximately the same as the previously published volumes of the book series, I decided to publish the letter "S" in one volume (= volume 5) and the letters "W-Z" in a second (vol 6). They will appear almost simultaneously in autumn 2022.

The increase in size certainly has various reasons. From year to year the level of research advances, new sources open up and previously unknown documents come to light. For the last two volumes I was also able to gain two supporters who either revised and supplemented numerous contributions - Hans-Peter Garcarek - or added completely new ones - Wolfgang Schneider. The latter has become known for many years through his biographical publications on stamp artists, designers and engravers, which have been published regularly in my digital magazine Phila Historica (see: www.philahistorica.de) since around 2018. Hans-Peter Garcarek is a leading researcher in the history of philately. I would like to thank both of them for their support.

In terms of content, the comments that I already made in the editorial for Volume 4 apply. This book series is now completed after a good eleven years. There will be no supplementary volume. This is primarily because there are so many additions and corrections, especially in the first volumes, that would go beyond the framework's capacity. Whether there will be a 4th printed edition is anyone's guess, but I don't want to rule it out either.

Wolfgang Maassen
Summer 2022

Foreword to Volume 6 (3rd edition) [2022]

Originally - see the foreword to Volume 4, which was published in autumn 2020 - it was planned to accommodate the remaining letters "S-Z" in one volume. But as processing progressed, it became increasingly clear that this would hardly be possible because the biographies for the letter "S" alone exceeded the 300 page limit. Since it was our intention to keep the volume approximately the same as the previously published volumes of the book series, I decided to publish the letter "S" in one volume (= volume 5) and the letters "W-Z" in a second (volume 6). They will appear almost simultaneously in autumn 2022.

The increase in size certainly has various reasons. From year to year the level of research advances, new sources open up and previously unknown documents come to light. For the last two volumes I was also able to gain two supporters who either revised and supplemented numerous contributions - Hans-Peter Garcarek - or added them completely new - Wolfgang Schneider. The latter has become known for many years through his biographical publications on stamp artists, designers and engravers, which have been published regularly in my digital magazine Phila Historica (see: www.philahistorica.de) since around 2018. Hans-Peter Garcarek is a leading researcher in philatelic history. I would like to thank both of them very much for the support they provided.

In terms of content, the comments that I already made in the editorial for Volume 4 apply. This book series is now completed after a good eleven years. There will be no supplementary volume. This is primarily because there are so many additions and corrections, especially to the first few volumes, which would go beyond any scope. Whether there will be a 4th printed edition is anyone's guess, but I don't want to rule it out either.

Wolfgang Maassen
Summer 2022

Translated Entries

Volume 1

Dr. Ulrich Brunnert

p.197

Born on the 10th February 1924 in Gnoien/Mecklenburg.

Specialties: Postal history Mecklenburg-Schwerin.

Member: VPhA (from 1996 2nd Chairman); ArGe Mecklenburg (refounder, 1969-1976): 1st Chairman); Deutscher Altbriefsammler-Verein (since 1968; from 1970 Board member, from 1973 second Secretary, from 1976 second Treasurer, from 1982 second Chairman, 1985-1996 Chairman; April 5, 1997 Honorary President); PhilCl Göttingen (Board).

Author: Publications in the DASV newsletter.

Exhibits: Mecklenburg-Schwerin: internationally successful.

Honours: 1972 Honorary Certificate BDPh; 1977 DASV Medal; 1993 Prof. Hans A. Weidlich Medal; 1977 Silver Medal of Honor and 1986 Merit Badge Vermeil BDPh; April 29, 1994 Hans Grobe Medal; 1996 Gold Medal of Honor from the Union Marcophile; 1997 Golden Medal of Merit of the BDPh.

Sources: Application of U. Brunnert from 31st December 1998 and 1st September 1999; Philatelie, 1994, Whole number 222, p.50; November 1997, Whole number 255, p.10.

Geo. B. Duerst

pp.301-302

Born 1862, died 1923. Collector from the age of seven. His first collection was burnt by his father, who considered it prejudicial to success in his school work. The collection included countless Brazilian "Bull's Eyes", brought from Brazil by his uncle, which he later deeply regretted. He did not allow himself to be discouraged and resumed collecting, but this time in secret, so that by 1875 he had a collection of 10,000 stamps to call his own. In 1880 he moved to Manchester, where he lived from then on, and indulged in his hobby according to his financial means. Due to his work he was constantly travelling in Europe and his linguistic abilities enabled him to join many philatelic societies, especially in Germany. He had philatelic friends in every major city and he learned of societies whose meetings he attended from time to time.

Collecting areas: Romania, Russia, Russian local issues, Serbia, Egypt, Spain, Austria, Alsace-Lorraine, Chile. Duerst also collected philatelic literature and he was one of the first in Britain to specialise in postmarks.

Member: Manchester Philatelic Society (founder member), IPhV Dresden, BPhK, Hanover Philatelic Society (founder member).

Author: Die Essais von Rumänien (The Essays of Romania) (commemorative publication, BPhK, 1913). Duerst wrote many specialised articles for various publications, from 1895 to 1897 he was editor of the Philatelic Journal of Great Britain, he wrote for the Philatelic Record (1896-97, but also later).

Exhibits: Romania (London 1897 and 1906, Manchester 1899, Paris 1900): awarded a medal on each occasion.

Sources: Philatelic Record, 1907, pp. 26-28 (with illustration); The Philatelic Journal of Great Britain, No. 109/10.1.1900 (with illustration); Bosshard/Seifert 1931, p. 96.

Volume 2

Heinrich Fränkel (Fraenkel)

pp.104-106

Born on the 23rd October 1853 in Breslau, the son of a wealthy family, he died on the 20th September 1907 in Berlin from pleurisy. According to his wishes, his ashes were cremated in the Hamburg crematorium in Ohlsdorf. Due to his exceptional talent, he was able to shorten his schooling at the famous Magdaleneum in Breslau by two years and then studied law in Breslau. In June 1873, not yet 20 years old, he became a trainee lawyer, and it was then that he met Carl Lindenberg, who held the same position in Breslau. In January 1878, Fränkel became a court assessor, and in June 1878, a district judge, and from 1879, a district judge in Namslau. Thanks to a marriage concluded in 1883, Fränkel became financially independent as a partner in the large Berlin banking business Goldschmidt and gave up his legal career in the same year to become a co-owner of his father-in-law's bank and to manage it until his death.

He also worked as a Commercial Judge at the Regional Court I in Berlin. He possessed extensive knowledge of foreign languages and had been one of Berlin's leading philatelists since the late 1880s. Fränkel and Lindenberg, now both in Berlin, met again there in 1885, and it wasn't until 1887 that Fränkel began collecting stamps. Fränkel joined Lindenberg's first Berlin Philatelists' Club, newly founded in January 1888, and within a few months he became enthusiastic about philately, in which he immersed himself in a very short time. Thanks to his highly intellectual talents, he soon became committed to fighting forgers and counterfeiters, fraudsters and charlatans, ignorant people and plagiarists.

At the same time, he immersed himself so deeply in philatelic literature that he not only became the Club's Librarian in December 1890, but also demonstrably mastered the specialist knowledge of the time. He retained this position until 1901, but then, due to a lack of time, devoted himself entirely to maintaining his own library. In 1893, he joined Lindenberg's side in the fight against the forger Georges Fouré. At the same time, he supported the Philatelists' Day in Berlin, devoted himself increasingly to translating English specialist literature, and published more than ever before in the DBZ. He exposed Sigmund Friedl's Mercury forgeries, was a juror at the 1897 International Exhibition in London, where he was honored by the Prince of Wales as Germany's representative, and visited the exhibitions in Paris.

Specialties: Fränkel was a general collector, but not a stamp collector. He also collected German stamps. Shortly before his death, Fränkel acquired the large postcard collection of the Englishman S. C. Skipton in Salisbury. He owned a collection of envelopes from the old German states valued at approximately 60,000 marks (1907). His stamp collection focused on the English colonies in America (value in 1907: approximately 50,000 to 60,000 marks). Since 1884, Fränkel also collected philatelic literature, particularly from German-speaking areas.

Member: Berliner Philatelisten Klub (BPhK). Fränkel was one of the first members in 1888 and a librarian (1890-1901). He compiled the club's first library catalogue.

Author: Fränkel gave countless specialist lectures at the BPhK. He was a contributor to the DBZ from its inception in 1891, where numerous publications, including countless short notes, appeared. In 1894, Fränkel published a Chronological Table of German Philatelic Journals 1863-1893 (self-published with the support of the BPhK). Fränkel was co-editor - along with Dr. Franz Kalckhoff, Carl Lindenberg, and Paul Ohrt - of the Festschrift Celebrating the Tenth Anniversary of the Bertin Philatelists Club in 1898, in which he also published, together with Oscar Wassermann, a comprehensive work on Romania: Issues 1866-1872 (pp.233-262).

Other information: Lindenberg listed various aspects of his personality in his obituary in the DBZ. Fränkel often polarized opinion - unintentionally, because he remained absolutely incorruptible, unwavering, and uncompromising on factual issues, something that others often held against him. He never cared about the person, only the cause; he was never willing to compromise. This earned him the reputation of a “grumbler” or “tormentor”, but those who knew him appreciated precisely his incorruptible attitude. The Philatelic Record wrote in his obituary: To philately, his loss is irreparable; there is nobody of such all-round philatelic ability, and at the same time such a polished conversationalist and writer, to take his place in Germany. (p.196)

Fränkel owned one of the largest libraries in Germany (at its time, it was considered the third largest in the world). In the mid-1890s, Fränkel acquired Sigmund Friedl's library, which contained many of the earliest and most important literary works on philately, including English-language publications. His library was sold to Lord Crawford in London (reportedly for a rather high price), who himself took only the few items he was missing and, with the help of Edward D. Bacon, donated the majority to the Royal Philatelic Society in London. Thus, Fränkel's former library became the foundation of the later world-famous library of the renowned London Society. In 1908, however, articles appeared in the German press criticizing the sale abroad, arguing that individual societies and individuals would also have been willing to acquire this unique library, especially since it had been offered for only 1,800 marks – virtually behind closed doors. In 1907, the DBZ had still considered the preservation of the library in Germany a patriotic task and – according to its own statements – had even arranged for German buyers, but the family of the deceased had already arranged for the sale abroad without taking this willingness into account.

Fränkel's lasting achievement was his support of the efforts of scientific stamp collecting in the 1880s and 1890s, a cause he shared with Lindenberg. However, many considered him a harsh critic of philately, especially of its associational and organizational structures. In private life, Fränkel was amiable and cultivated sophisticated relationships in the smallest Berlin circles. He promoted keeping the BPhK away from the public eye and its special status, occasionally placing himself at odds with Lindenberg and Kalckhoff. Fränkel only attended the 4th German Philatelic Congress in Prague in 1892 and the subsequent one in Berlin in 1893. He never showed his collections and holdings publicly, only to a very small circle of like-minded people.

Sources: Obituary by C. Lindenberg, in: DBZ, No. 9/30 September 1907, pp.135-139; DBZ 1907, p.202; ditto, 1908, pp.132-133; DBZ 1908, p.19; The Philatelic Record, 1907, pp.194-196 (with photo); ditto, 1908, p.99; IBJ, No. 21/2 November 1907, n.pp.; Philipp Kosack in: BBZ, No. 26/1 October 1907, pp.201-203; BBZ 1908, p.400; Die Post 1907, p.153; Germania Berichte, No. 22/1907, p.257; Der Deutsche Philatelist, No. 10/20, October 1907, n.pp.; The Philatelist 1907, p.417; Max Ton in: Sammler-Woche, No. 38/1925, p.540; Maassen/Schouberechts Milestones of the Philatelic Literature of the 19th Century, Monaco 2013, p.490.

Volume 3

Dr. Ludwig König

p.133

Born in Mainz in 1868, died in Kiel on the 14th February 1915 after a short period of severe suffering; General practitioner in Keil, married, one daughter. Sponsor of the Philatelist Days, was good friend of Emil Pauli and Dr. Alfred Künkler from Kiel. Hans Wagner From Mainz was his mentor.

Member: Association for Stamp Studies Mainz (founder member in 1885); Association for Stamp Studies in Hamburg von 1885 (since 1893); Member of the scientific group of the German Philatelist Days; Suevia (honorary member since 1910); Association of German and Austrian Philatelic Associations (first Secretary of the Standing Committee).

Author: Actually, founder of the Vertraulichen Correspondenz-Blattes; responsible for several years. Editor.

Honours: 1910 Hans Wagner Medal, which was awarded to him at the 22nd Philatelist Day 1910 in Kiel: as a sponsor of the Federation and Philatelist Days as well as the Vertraulichen Correspondenz-Blattes.

Other: König bequeathed his extensive library to the BDÖPhV in his will, which intended to make it accessible to the scientific group of the German Philatelists' Day.

Sources: Philatelistische Monats-Blätter/Suevia-Mitteilungen, 1915, Issue 4, p.15 (with picture); DBZ, 1910, pp.175-176; Hans Wagner: Dr. Ludwig König, in: DBZ, 1915, Issue 3, Title page (with picture); Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal, 1915, Issue 7, p.145 (with picture); A. E. Glasewald: Dr. Ludwig König-Kiel, Philatelisten-Zeitung, 1915, Issue 2, Title page; Vertrauliches Korrespondenzblatt, März 1915, pp.10-11 (with picture).

Justin Henri Lallier

p.204

Born on the 20th June 1823 in Joigny (Yonne department, Bourgogne region), died on the 12th August 1873 in Paris. Lallier was the first editor of a stamp album (Paris, June 1862). He thus determined the (landscape) format and presentation of the first stamp albums. A first English version of the album was also published in 1862, and a Spanish one a year later. The albums were continued annually in various editions and languages until his death.

Sources: Image in Brühl, p.274/2; e-mail from Jan Vellekoop of 8th March 2015 (the information about the date of birth can be found in the Lallier Album, 5th edition of 1866); Maassen/Schouberechts: Milestones of the Philatelic Literature of the 19th Century, Monaco 2013, p.494 (with picture)

Volume 4Otto Rommel

p.321

Born on the 2nd February 1857 in Hildburghausen. After studying law until 1877, he spent the autumn of 1885-1892 as an assessor at the Thuringian regional court in Jena. After that he devoted himself exclusively to philately. Resident in Leipzig, 1931 in Berlin W 15, Ruhlandstr. 162. Collector since 1868. After completing his studies, he expanded his collections and devoted himself to intensive literary studies. Named as examiner for Bergedorf, Lübeck and Peru in the list of the Federal Examination Office of the Bund Deutscher und Österreichischer Philatelisten-Vereine 1897 (he owned an extensive and excellent counterfeit comparison collection).

Specialties: Old Germany; Peru; philatelic. Literature and many others (see under “Author”).

Member: IPV Dresden (since 1883).

Author: Baden, Bavaria, Bergedorf, Deutsche Reichspost (Krötzsch manual); History of the Saxon newspaper stamp 3 Pfg. red: Catalogue of the Nordic Bypost stamps; Morocco - its mail and postage stamps; The Chinese local stamps; The postage stamps of the Bergedorf postal district; The postage stamps of Lübeck; The Courier, Railway, and Steamboat Stamps of Scandinavia and Finland; Special catalogue of the postage stamps of the German postal districts; Study of the postage stamps of Peru (appeared in 1890 and 1891 in Die Postwertzeichenkunde, was also published as an off-print; after that he took over the editorship of this specialist journal). From 1891 he published in, amongst other things, the Philatelistischen Börsen-Courier” and in the Leipzig Illustrierten Briefmarken-Zeitung”. Many of his publications on philatelic literature appeared mainly in Der Philatelist from 1898-1911), he also co-edited the 1892 edition of A. Larisch’s price catalogue and was co-author of the 2nd edition of the Köppe album.

Miscellaneous: Rommel’s philatelic library was acquired by the Prussian State Library in Berlin in 1915. The approximately 2,000 titles were never recorded separately by the Prussian State Library and made available to the public. Around 1952 the inventory of philatelic literature – Rommel’s library and the inventory of the then deceased technical writer Carl Beck, donated by IPOSTA to the Prussian State Library in 1931, came to the library of the then Ministry for Post and Telecommunications on the corner of Leipzig and Mauerstrasse (the former Reichspostmuseum), where it was subsequently combined with other acquisitions from the Saxon Post Office in Dresden and the Hallensia Library. Today the titles are in the library of the Museum for Communication in Berlin in the same place.

Sources: Sammler-Express No. 14/1952, p. 223.

Ernst Roschlau

p.325

Vital dates are unknown. Roschlau was one of the early German stamp dealers, living in Coburg. He advertised in MfB No. 9/January 1, 1864, on p.72 “Very cheap stamps” from overseas. In MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, p.80, Roschlau offered various stamps by the dozen. In MfB No. 13/1 May 1864, p.102, Roschlau explicitly described himself as a “stamp dealer”, which otherwise had not been stated before then. Every month he sends out a “Course Note on Stamps” free of charge. In MfB No. 13/1 May 1864, on p. 103 he advertised as the main agent of the Börsenblatt for the stamp trade.

In an advertisement by Gustav Wuttig in MfB No. 15/1 July 1864, p. 119, he said: “As a continuation of the Börsenblatt for the stamp trade previously published by G. A. Reichel in Kaufbeuren, which has been transferred to Ernst Roschlau’s publishing house in Coburg, it was published by Ernst Roschlau’s publishing house in Coburg from the 1st July under the changed and more appropriate title, the Allgemeine Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung published. by Ernst Roschlau in Coburg. “whose book trade debit has been transferred to the undersigned.”

Source: Phila Historica, 2014, number 3, p.59 (should be p.64) and p.68.

Translator’s notes: MfB = Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler
 PhH = Phila Historica

Volume 6

Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann

pp.17-18

Born on October 11, 1870 in Potsdam, died on February 3, 1938 in Potsdam. Lives in Potsdam, Teltowerstr. 21 II (1931). T. was a trained bookseller and a great lover of literature. T. was a participant in the First World War off Dixmuiden for seven months from September 1916. In 1922 T. became a committee member for the winner's prize. In the global economic climate of 1929/30, he had to restrict himself and downsize his apartment, so that he was no longer able to continue the "Germania-Ring" library that he had previously kept and maintained. In 1930 this was transferred to the administration of the engineer E. Krieger in Göttingen, and then from September 1932 to the university library in Leipzig.

Special areas: Prussia, Prussia stamp on cover; German letters from the pre-philatelic period. Member: T. was a delegate and participant at the German Philatelist Days several times: at the II. DPhT in 1890 he represented the Braunschweig association "Philatelia" (left the association in December 1893); At the VII DPhT in 1895 he represented the Danzig branch of the Frankfurt Association. At the VIII DPhT in 1896 he represented the Landau branch of the Frankfurt Association. T. was a participant in the XVIII. DPhT and M, Bundestag in Nuremberg (1906), here he was a member of a commission at the Bundestag as an examiner that processed the applications; Association F. Briefm.-Kunde Offenbach a.M. (member until March 1894; secretary since January 1893); Association of Stamp Collectors in Potsdam (founding and secretary, deputy chairman, bookkeeper, honorary member in 1929); Germania-Ring (1905-1929 book chairman, deputy association head for Brandenburg until 1929); Association of Literature Collectors Berlin; Literature Association of the Friends of the Kohl Stamp Handbook.

Author: Permanent contributor to the Germania reports from 1906; Work on old German stamps and special features of Prussian stamps; Employee of "The German Philatelist" (1908/09), M. and G.-Ztg. (1922/23): German collector's office. (1924); Bertiner stamp collection. (1928); Postal stamp (1928). The following individual works should be mentioned: Detailed directory of the central library of the Germania-Ring (1912); Compilation of Prussian postmarks according to form and chronology (borna, 1925); Bie Hallenser Prussian forgery 2 silver groschen, edition 1861/65 (Leipzig, 1925, previously in the Germania reports 1916, 1919 and 1923); The German Rayon stamps from 1802 and their creation (Leipzig, 1929); Our Potsdam stamp collection (Festival of the BSV Potsdam 1929); History of the German Ring Library (in: German Philatelic Bookworm, January and February 1936) among others.

Exhibits: Prussia stamp: Berlin 1924 bronze; Prussian writings Köpenick D.

Honors: 1927 to 1929 chapter of the Albert Friedemann Foundation; November 7, 1936 Alexander Bungerz plaque.

Sources: Photo from Germania Berichte, January 1928; Sammler-Woche 1938, p. 40; Der Deutsche Sammler, March 1938, 50-51; Sammler Express, issue 13/1992, p. 522; Vertrauliches Korrespondenzblatt, No. 8/1912, p. 100; e-mail and editing of this article by H.-P. Garcarek, 10th April 2022.

Dr. Victor Weinert

p.131

Born on the 12th July 1890 (Sammler-Woche: June 13) as the son of a Palffy estate manager. He died on the 19th May 1942 in Pressburg, a few days before the first all-Slovak state stamp exhibition which was planned by him. Lived in Pressburg, Chaptergasse 13, CSR (1931). After attending high school, he studied at the University of Budapest, where he received his Dr. jur. He then graduated from the Vienna Commercial Academy and then the University of Natural Resources and Life Sciences in Hungarian-Altenburg (he returned with a diploma in 1917). A collector since his school days.

Special areas: Austria-Hungary and successor states.

Author: Editor of Donaupost from 1918; numerous articles in various specialist journals (including IBJ); Donaupost catalogue (1921), Supplements 1922 and 1923, but also in January 1941.

Sources: Sammler Woche, 1942, p.104; Der Briefmarkenhändler, September 1942, Volume 46, Issue 9, p.83.

END

Wolfgang Maassen

Who is Who in Philately?

[Wer ist Wer in der Philatelie?]

2nd edition, Bund Deutscher Philatelisten web site: www.bdp.de, 23rd January 2010, 1p.

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

June 2019

WHO IS WHO IN PHILATELY?

Editor's note:

The project to digitise this series of biographies began in 2005 and Maassen provided an extensive Foreword at that time. However, by the time I found out that he had decided to terminate this method of distributing his biographies and accessed them in 2010, this had disappeared to be replaced by a much shorter Project Information page, translated herewith.

The original Foreword was reproduced in Maassen's 3rd edition book and will be found in translation as part of Philat. Trans. 754.

MAASSEN 2

PROJECT INFO: WHO'S WHO IN PHILATELY?

Reference books in the style of the well-known Who's Who have been known since the 19th century. Initially, brochures or pamphlets with few pages, they were following in the first 30 years of the 20th century by more extensive works in lexicon format. Generally, it has continued in the same way with individual editions as books or in magazines, with incomplete biographies.

It was only 1999 that the author, Wolfgang Maassen – editor-in-chief of Philatelie, produced a new work under the title Wer ist Wer in der Philatelie?, containing complete biographies of approximately 1,000, predominantly German, philatelists. The work, published by Phil Creativ-Verlag in Schwalmtal, is long out of print.

A revision, to include notable philatelists who were missed as well as members of the trade, expertisers and the philatelists of East Germany, is long overdue. However this project always failed because of a lack of resources or other problems. Thus, in the last ten years hundreds of magazines from Germany and foreign countries were evaluated, so that a stock of approximately 10,000 biographies has been accumulated. After careful consideration and the examination of alternative possibilities, the decision was made in favour of an internet-based database, which also offered the advantage of continuous updating and further future development.

Over 2007 and 2008 material from the first edition of 1999 was brought online into the internet publication, together with that which had already been sorted digitally over the years up to 2002. In subsequent years, the existing material will be continuously supplemented, beginning with the letter A. In addition, the existing material can still be worked on editorially. Who's Who in Philatelie? is therefore an organic work in which everyone can participate by sending on Additions and Corrections. These will then be examined by the author and added to the existing texts. I am pleased about every letter!

Wolfgang Maassen
Autumn 2007

END

Otto Hornung:

Second Guyana one cent: Doubt remains. Results of experts contradict each other.
[Tweede Guyana one cent: Twijfel blijft. Resultaten van expertises spreken elkaar tegen.]
Filatelie, February 2000, Volume 78, Issue 2, pp.102-104

Translation by Translator for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
? 2019

SECOND GUYANA ONE CENT: DOUBT REMAINS
RESULTS OF EXPERTS CONTRADICT EACH OTHER

END

A few words about stamp collecting
[Dos palabras acerca de timbrologia]
La Revista Philatelica, August 1874, Volume 1, Issue 1, p.1

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 1991

A FEW WORDS ABOUT STAMP COLLECTING

Editor's Note:

This page was shown as an illustration in an article on Argentine philatelic periodicals by Oswaldo Mario Giordano. When I had Giordano's article translated (Philat. Trans. 050) my conscientious translator also rendered the illustration into English. Rather than discard her work, I made a stand-alone translation of it for posterity.

EDITORIAL

On the appearance of Philatelic Review, its editorial board greets the press in general and its brethren abroad in particular.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT STAMP COLLECTING

It is hard to be certain about the origin of stamp collecting, although according to our fellow enthusiasts overseas, stamp mania had its origin amongst the pupils of Parisian schools. The children stuck postage stamps over the relevant places on their geographical maps in order to make the study of geography more interesting. It is not very strange to find this craze spreading to mature people, who found impressive collections of stamps being gradually built up in this way and became infected themselves with the stamp mania. Like every new fad, stamp collecting had to contend with ridicule and quickly became known as the most childish of manias. This did not stop the earliest collectors, on the contrary they devoted themselves even more ardently to the study of stamps, classifying their stamps by their date of issue, differences in printing, colour, perforations, etc., until today they are on a level with the most enthusiastic of antiquaries. Effectively, our precious pages are reserved for rare stamps and it might be thought crazy to pay 5 or 10 pounds Sterling for a little piece of paper which to the indifferent eye has little merit but for an "amateur" it has the inestimable virtue of being one of the few examples that exist in the world.

Collectors are not content with just collecting postage stamps and envelopes, they also collect postcards, telegraph stamps, local and fiscal stamps. It is in fact very interesting to see a well-arranged collection of stamps, not only because it is attractive, but because it instructs one in the science of geography and the number of different types of money that are used in the world.

We know many collectors for whom the lack of a special magazine to clear up their problems has lessened their determination to keep their collections in good order.

We shall do our best to make good this deficiency but being aware of our own shortcomings we will gladly accept any contribution which will help to profit philatelists.

END

"Filatelia" and its appearance
["Filatelia" y su aparición]
El Macaneador Filatélico, May 1904, p.1

Translation produced by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
33 Boar's Head Avenue, Standish, Wigan, WN6 0BH, UK
January 1991

TITLE (14pt)

Editor's Note:

This page was shown as an illustration in an article on Argentine philatelic periodicals by Oswaldo Mario Giordano. When I had Giordano's article translated (Philat. Trans. 050) my conscientious translator also rendered the illustration into English. Rather than discard her work, I made a stand-alone translation of it for posterity.

"FILATELIA" AND ITS APPEARANCE

The childish publication, whose owners are the Senores J. Tome' and Alejandro Malaguzzi de Valeri, has just appeared after a gap of six and a half months; that is to say, the issue of 19th April last is a single number corresponding to the issues for October, November and December of the year 1903. This number states:

"Filatelia has appeared somewhat irregularly in recent times (What-ho!), and in the four years of its existence we have managed to give a complete account (That'll be the day!) of the defects that can occur and how they are caused."

To tell the truth, either these gentlemen have a truly amazing cheek, or they are more than commonly simple.

"Filatelia has appeared somewhat irregularly"! Let's not be modest, I just cannot swallow that "somewhat" : if they had left it out we could accept the result : if instead of "somewhat" they had said "very irregularly", I would have taken that as perfect : however like all sensible people I will say "There's nothing perfect in this world",

To proceed :

"in the few years of its existence we have managed to give a complete account of the defects that can occur".

Readers who are reading this whilst laughing inwardly, I ask you to judge as I myself am going to judge.

They say that in four years they have been able to give an account of all the defects that can occur.

It seems to me, good heavens, that two years should be enough for this, and there is no need for four, which would be forty eight issues * . During the first three years when their magazine was appearing more or less regularly, these gentlemen got to know the defects, and if in the fourth year they still did not agree, it seems we should celebrate this as the Catholic Church celebrates the 28th of December. (Holy Innocents' Day)

Let us continue :

"and how they are caused"

Messrs. Tome and Malaguzzi, I whom you judge to be some local bumpkin, ask Your Honours to be more frank, and not to conceal the truth for any longer than you need, since I shall be compelled to declare the contrary, as at present I must speak as God commands.

Now dear readers, if you want to know what they call causes and defects, I invite you to turn to no. 10-11-12 of Filatelia, the 2nd page of this issue.

The causes are not in the public domain, whatever one might suppose. I can tell you in two words. What caused the delay in Filatelia was the fault of those poqui  ; and if they like I will give some supporting dates in the next number.

* Footnote : We are not sure about this number : for the next issue we shall have got the chronology of Filatelia.

 Translators note: This word is not in any Spanish, Italian, Portuguese or Latin dictionary : nor does a Spanish-speaker here recognise it, but the sense is obviously something like "these twerps".

END

Paul Lietzow

The Olympian of philatelie: J. B. Moens of Brussels

[Der Olympier der philatelie: J. B. Moens in Brussel]

Jahresbericht der Internationale Postwertzeichenhändler-Verein zu Berlin, 1899, pp.3-6

Translation by Translator for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

? 2019

THE OLYMPIAN OF PHILATELIE: J. B. MOENS OF BRUSSELS

There are few personalities who are as well known in the world of philatelists as those with whom the present life sketch deals.

J. B. Moens is one of the oldest philatelists and in any case the greatest in view of his astonishing achievements and his merits in the science of postage stamps and the customer of all other stamps, such as telegraph and revenue stamps.

Mr. Moens has been in contact with all known philatelists, collectors and dealers for more than 40 years, and thus also with many members of the International Postage Stamp Dealers Association of Berlin. Our association appointed Mr. J. B. Moens as its honorary member on 20 February 1893. The reader can see how he accepted this appointment from the following letter dated 8 March 1893

"Gentlemen!

By letter dated February 28th of this year, you informed me of a decision by which the "International Postage Stamp Dealers Association" in Berlin appointed me as its honorary member. . I therefore thank you very much! This decision, taken by an important association consisting of such select philatelists, honours me and at the same time encourages me to persevere on the path I have taken so far - the further development of stamp collecting.

I consider the award you have bestowed on me to be the highest reward I have received for my thirty years of work. Please accept, gentlemen, with warmest thanks, the assurance of my complete devotion to the International Postage Stamp Dealers' Association of Berlin.

Brussels, March 8, 1893. J. B. Moen

J. B. Moens (Jean Baptiste Moens) - pronounced Muns - was born on 27 May 1833 in Tournai, Belgium. From childhood on he showed exceptional intelligence and a great sense of activity. At the age of 19 he started the business of a bookseller and coin dealer. Soon, however, numismatics was no longer enough for him, and so he threw himself with fiery enthusiasm on the stamps, those little pieces of paper which have such beautiful colours and are so frequently altered, those modest stamps which reflect the upheavals of all countries, which arouse joy and restlessness in the family and which, by their simplicity, the ease of use and their moderate price, provide such great service.

In 1857, at the age of 24, Moens founded his stamp business. At that time, the science of stamps was still very little advanced, and it was not easy to get the necessary news to be able to determine the order of the different stamp issues. Moens decided to fill in the gap. Through diligence and perseverance, he was able to publish his "Handbuch für Postmarkensammler" (like all his works in French) in 1862. The first edition of 1800 copies was sold out in only 2 months. A second edition was published in the same year and sold with the same speed.

At the same time Moens released his first postage stamp album, which was such a success that it was translated in England and republished in Holland.

His album has then seen many new editions over the years. The same has been worked with great care and accuracy and includes everything from watermarks, colour differences, misprints and private stamps.

In 1863, 2 supplements to his handbook appeared. Since that time, the tireless Moens has published a whole series of works, the whole of which forms a magnificent collection that is unique in philatelic literature.

On February 15, 1863, the first French journal dedicated to the study of stamps appeared under his direction: "Le Timbre-Poste", which has been a great success since its publication. In 1873 this journal was completed by the "Timbre-Fiscal". Also in 1863 his work "the illustrated postage stamps" was published. This gave him a name. The book was quickly out of print and was translated into English at the same time as his pamphlet "on the counterfeiting of postage stamps".

After Moens had founded the "Library for Stamp Enthusiasts" in 1876, he gradually published the following works:

- 1877, The Stamps of Naples and Sicily,
- 1878, The Marches of Parma, Modena and Romagna,
- 1878, The Marches of Peru,
- 1878, The Marches of Tuscany and San Marino,
- 1878, The stamps of Mauritius,
- 1879, The Marches of Saxony,
- 1879, The stamps of both Mecklenburg,
- 1879, The stamps of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg,
- 1880, The stamps of Thurn and Taxis,
- 1880, The Marches of Belgium,
- 1880, The Marches of Egypt and the Suez Canal,
- 1881, The brands of Württemberg,
- 1882, The Marches of the Free State of Argentina,
- 1883, The stamps of Natal.

This is also the year of the first edition of the giant Moens catalogue, which was completely edited by him and gradually supplemented by 3 very important supplements.

1884 saw the publication of the stamps of Schleswig-Holstein, 1887: the stamps of Prussia appeared.

In 1891 Moens had one of his outstanding works published: "The History of the Marche of Spain". This work contains the list of all Spanish postage stamps, telegraph, cancellation, bill stamps, proof prints, forgeries, Don Carlos stamps, etc., as well as the official documents concerning the introduction of the stamps, etc.

So much about the main works of this man. The Dutch Society of the Friends of Marks has already honoured the merits of J. B. Moens in its jubilee issue, as has the French journal "le courrier des timbres-poste" (which has used itself in my work).

In 1887 he was president of the International Postal Stamp Exhibition in Antwerp. In Paris, the Société française de Timbrologie had already awarded him a gold memorial coin for the best philatelic work in 1878.

I. B. Moens also holds three state awards, the Orders of Spain, Romania and Venezuela. For his literary achievements, Moens also received various awards in London, Amsterdam, Vienna, Magdeburg, etc.

J. B. Moens has also been a publisher and owner of a world-famous stamp shop. Everywhere and in every direction he has achieved great success. In Brussels, he has held municipal or public honorary posts for many years. There he has the title of City Councillor.

Now Mr Moens is thinking of retiring from the business. May he enjoy good health and happiness for many years to come.

Paul Lietzow.

END

Generally ignored Franchise stamps
[Timbres de Franchises généralement ignorés]
L'Écho Postal, April 1925, Volume 11, Whole number 81, pp.248-249

Translation by Translator for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
? 2019

GENERALLY IGNORED FRANCHISE STAMPS

Timbres de franchises généralement ignorés
Revenue Stamps which are generally overlooked

La mort du Dr. Thebussem qui eut lieu l'année dernière passa presque inaperçue en France, alors que dans les autres pays de grands articles nécrologiques lui furent consacrés.

The death of Dr Thebussem, which took place last year, went by unnoticed in France, even though in other countries long obituaries were written about him.

Or, ce personnage de légende jouissait d'un privilege unique ; il avait le droit d'imprimer ses propres timbres -poste et d'affranchir avec eux sa correspondance pour l'Espagne et les colonies. Combien de Français possèdent ce timbre original ?

This legendary person enjoyed a unique privilege, it seems: he had the right to print his own postage stamps, and used them on his correspondence to Spain and her colonies. How many French people own this singular stamp?

Le Dr. Thebussem était le pseudonyme d'un savant espagnol, le Dr Mariano Pardo de Figuerora, qui s'attela à l'instar de Rowland Hill, à améliorer et mieux à organiser le service postal espagnol, ce qui n'était pas une petite affaire, car il se heurta au mauvais vouloir des gens en place, mais il était tenace et ses efforts finirent par être appréciés du Gouvernement. On chercha alors à lui offrir une récompense pour ses services, on lui offrit une poste officiel bien rétribué, le Dr Thebussem refusa et demanda qu'on lui accordât le titre de « facteur honoraire d'Espagne » et le privilège de franchise de port dans toute l'étendue du royaume avec le droit d'émettre et de se servir « de ses propres timbres-poste. »

Dr. Thebussem was the pen name for a Spanish intellectual, Dr. Mariano Pardo de Figuerora, who, from the beginning, was associated with Rowland Hill, for the purpose of improving and better organizing the Spanish postal service, which was no small undertaking, since he encountered the malevolence of those in power. Nevertheless, he was tenacious, and his efforts finished by being appreciated by the Government, which sought to give him recompense for his services. He was offered an official job, which Dr Thebussem refused. Instead, he requested that he be given the title of "honorary postman of Spain," along with the privilege to have free postage in the whole realm, with the right to issue and to use "his own postage stamps." mai, 1880, il fut créé, comme il l'avait demandé, premier facteur honoraire d'Espagne. Il fut déclaré que les timbres du Dr. Thebussem affranchiraient ses lettres, non seulement celles qu'il envoyait, mais celles qui lui étaient adressées et qui portaient son timbre de franchise. Bientôt ses timbres furent également admis dans les Colonies. Le Docteur eut plusieurs vignettes, celle que nous reproduisons était la plus courante, elle était gommée. Après 1890, il se contentait souvent de poser un simple cachet de cuivre consistant en une Jarretière avec l'inscription « Dr Thebussem » et les lettres KRTRO (l'abréviation de Cartero, “facteur” en français).

La requête dut étonner les autorités, mais néanmoins elle fut accordée et par décret royal du 20

The request must have astonished the authorities, but nevertheless, his request was granted, and by royal decree on May 20th, 1880, he was proclaimed the first honorary postman of Spain, according to his wishes. It was declared that Dr Thebussem's stamps would adorn his letters, not only those he would send, but also those he would address to him, and which would bear his revenue stamps. Soon his stamps would be admitted in the colonies. The Doctor issued several stamps, including the one we have printed as the most common, and which was gummed. After 1890, he often resorted to putting a simple copper stamp made up of a garter inscribed « Dr Thebussem » and the letters KRTRO (an abbreviation of the word cartero, in Spanish, facteur, in French, or postman in English).

Voici à titre de documentation les cinq types que le Docteur utilisa pour sa franchise postale.

The following list documents the five types of stamps which the Doctor used for his postage.

1) L'Emission de mai, 1880

En haut CORREOS; au centre KRTRO, et sur une jarretière « Dr. Thebussem, Honorario de Madrid. »

1) The issue of May, 1880

At the top CORREOS (Spanish for Post Office); in the center, KRTRO, and on a garter "Dr. Thebussem, Honorary of Madrid."

2) En usage de 1881 à 1882

En haut KRTRO, au centre CORREOS et l'inscription modifiée « Dr. Thebussem, Honorario de la Habana », pour indiquer l'extension de sa franchise jusqu'à Cuba. Le COIN de ce timbre fut brisé en 1882 et c'est la plus rare de ces vignettes de franchise.

2) In use from 1881 to 1882

At the top KRTRO, in the middle CORREOS and the modified inscription "Dr. Thebussem, Honorary of Havana, » indicating the extent of his franking privileges including Cuba. The corner of the stamp was broken in 1882, making it is the rarest of these revenue stamps.

3) L'Emission de 1882

Forme ronde avec l'inscription « Dr. Thebussem, Honorario de España y de sus Indies ». C'était alors la franchise absolue pour toutes les colonies espagnoles.

3) The Issue of 1882

Round format with the inscription "Dr. Thebussem, Honorary of Spain and the West Indies." This was the stamp for all the Spanish colonies.

4) L'Emission de juillet, 1882

Type reproduit ci-dessus, imprimé sur papier bleuâtre ou chamois. C'est le moins rare de ses timbres.

4) The Issue of July, 1882

This stamp is a reproduction of the previous stamps, printed on bluish or chamois-coloured (cream-coloured) paper. This is the most common of his stamps.

5) L'Emission d'octobre, 1890

Une jarretière portant l'inscription « Dr. Thebussem » avec une étoile à 6 pointes au centre.

5) The Issue of October, 1890

A garter with the inscription, "Dr Thebussem" with a 6-pointed star in the centre.

Est-il besoin d'ajouter que ces vignettes sont rares? Si le Dr Thebussem écrivait beaucoup et s'il envoyait facile-ment un timbre pour la réponse, la plupart de ses correspon-dances étaient conservées comme souvenir ou curiosité, et il y en a peu en circulation chez les philatélistes.

Does one need to add that these stamps are rare? If Dr. Thebussem wrote a lot, and if he easily sent a stamp for the reply, most of his correspondence would have been conserved as souvenirs or curiosities, and yet, there are few of them circulating among philatelists.

END

Socrate

Who is the inventor of the postage stamp?

[Qui est donc l'inventeur du timbre-poste?]

Timbres Magazine, May 2015, Whole number 167, p.110

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit le Guinot, Route de St. Barthélemy, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

May 2019

WHO IS THE INVENTOR OF THE POSTAGE STAMP?

In this month of May, our British friends will celebrate as if it were the London Salon, the 175th anniversary of the famous Penny Black, issued May 1, 1840. As one knows, this postal revolution is attributed to Sir Rowland Hill. The story justly recognizes his name, but one must not forget the role played by other people, starting with a certain James Chalmers, book and paper seller in Dundee, Scotland. In August 1834, he had the idea to conceive and also to print labels in order to realize the fact that the carriage of a letter was paid in advance by the sender. They were pretty and well printed in 1834 or in 1837 (the specialists differ on the date), before the reform of Rowland Hill. A good fight would follow among several generations between the Hill and Chalmers families regarding the paternity of our dear labels! The stickers of Chalmers are at present remembered as precursors of the stamp. This memorable fight between Anglo-Saxons made it so we could little forget the story of an accounting inspired by the name Kosir or Kochir. He seems to have had a similar idea to that of Chalmers practically at the same time. Laurent Kosir was born in 1804 in Spodnja Lusa in present-day Slovenia. After studies with the Jesuits, he worked as an accountant in Venice, Milan and then Vienna for the Austrian Post. This was a job which allowed him to learn well the subtleties of the postal service. In 1836 he left for Ljubljana where he stayed about 15 years before concluding his career in Zagreb, still at the post. He was a cultivated man who had mastered several languages: German, French, Italian and Latin. On December 31, 1835, he sent a letter to his Chief of Service in which he proposed new methods to finance the postal service. He evoked especially the use of "gepresste papieroblate" corresponding to what we call today a stamp. An excellent idea but which arrived a bit early. He received a letter dated May 11, 1836, telling him his project was rejected. Some years later the first postage stamp was put in service in Great Britain, which annoyed our gentleman. He sent to the government a letter in which he claimed paternity of the stamp. The authorities in Leipzig agreed with him but this fell upon deaf ears at the UPU which did not respond to his letter. If historians have shared the role of Laurent Kosir, it's not the case for the postal services. It's therefore that Laurent Kosir was honored with a stamp by Yugoslavia in 1948, with a margin with this surprising inscription in French: "In Commemoration of Laurent Kochir, Creator of the Idea of the First Postage Stamp in 1836. Born July 29 1804 in SP. Loucha, RP. Of Slovenia, Yugoslavia."

Our "idea creator" est equally recognized by Austria which issued a stamp with his image in 1979. Logically to Slovenia which honored him in 2004 on the occasion of the 200th anniversary of his birth. We sit on this stamp his birth house as well as his letters translated into German. Who is therefore the inventor of the first stamp? Rowland, James or Laurent? Of what import is it finally as they all gave us stamps for our greater happiness.

END

William Chenevard

Essay on postal bibliography

[Essai de bibliographie postale]

La Revue Postale, February 1898, Volume 1, Issue 2, pp.17-21.

Translation by Translator for Brian J. Birch

Guinot - 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

? 2020

ESSAY ON POSTAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

Year 1

#2

February

1898

THE POSTAL REVIEW

MONTHLY PHILATELIC JOURNAL

Publisher: William Chenevard

The editors hold the authors responsible for their writings

Manuscripts are returned

The rights to translation and reproduction are reserved

SUMMARY: essay on philatelic literature – the Belgian stamped envelope – the stamps of the Mexican expedition – unpublished Acrusliche – our illustrations

ESSAY ON PHILATELIC LITERATURE

The great expansion of philately in the last few years and the ever growing number of hobbyists dedicated to it or spending their leisure time with it have led to the publication of an infinite number of works of different types and value. Thus, there are journals dedicated exclusively to the scientific aspects of philately; others, intended for the general public, alternate between serious or humorous articles and ads intended to help collectors with transactions. Finally, there are journals with ads only, with circulations of 5 to 10,000 and beyond, sent free to all corners of the globe. These last are particularly sought after, as they are aimed at all collectors, who can be roughly estimated at 300 thousand while serious philatelists, those who have sufficient understanding and knowledge of philately to enjoy a scientific journal, number at most 30 or 40 thousand.

This philatelic press has existed for many years already; presently there are nearly 200 periodicals being published and we are convinced that a complete listing of all that have published one or several issues easily exceeds 11 to 12 hundred.

According to Dr. LeGrand, England had the first journal dedicated exclusively to stamps: the Stamp Collector's Review and Monthly Advertiser dates from December 1862 and was published at Liverpool; it was followed a month later by the Stamp Collector's, which appeared February 1, 1863. The Timbre-Poste (Stamp), now the dean of philatelic journals, began in Brussels soon after. Finally, on July 15, 1864, A. Maury, the eminent Parisian philatelist, launched the first edition of the Revue, which he still possesses. In Switzerland, philately progressed more slowly and didn't take off until much later. Its first issue of the Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung (Swiss Stamp News), published by Robert Doyle in Berne, did not come out until July 20, 1879. According to H. Fraenkel, the learned librarian of the Berlin Philatelic Club, the oldest known German periodical is the Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler (Magazine for Stamp Collectors). It was run by Zschiesche und Kueder*, Leipzig, for 7 years. If you compare the first journals to today's attractive publications, you will be surprised at the progress of the philatelic field. Surely anyone who predicted even 20 years ago that the end of the 19th Century would produce such an enormous quantity of publications would have been called crazy. And many of them appear 3 or 4 times monthly and have up to 40 pages. I'd like to call out an American journal that appeared daily for several weeks. The loveliest rose lasts but a day!

We thought it might be well to create a catalog of all the periodicals existing and those whose ephemeral existence has ended. There have already been several attempts of this kind, with varying degrees of success. It is interesting to peruse Dr. Legrand's article published in L'Annonce Timbrologique (The Philatelic Announcer) in 1891-92, from which we will borrow the following information:

In 1874 the first monograph of all works dealing with stamps was published by the late president of the American Philatelic Association, Mr. Tiffany, under the name Philatelical Library in St. Louis. Since then, Tiffany continued to add to his library and in 1889 began the first part of a work destined to be very comprehensive. Under the title The Stamp Collector's Library Companion – Part 1: Periodicals, he compiled a list of all the American journals as of that date; a thankless task, the work stopped there and was never continued. (We shall have the opportunity to make use of that work for the American part of the monograph we plan to undertake.)

In Spain, the Literatura Philatelica en España (Philatelic Literature in Spain) by Dr. Thebussem (pseudonym of P. de Figuera) appeared. In Italy, Mr. Leoni published a Bibliografia Timbrologica dell' Italia (Italian Philatelic Bibliography) in the Guida Illustrata del Timbrophilo (Philatelist's Illustrated Guide) (#16 and 17).

Mr. de Boresdan published a monograph on France and Belgium that ended, unfortunately, in 1877. Finally, in the 1867, 1869 and 1872 issues of the Philatelist, the American Journal of Philately of 1871 and Moshkaus Magazine of the same year there appeared lists of English, American and German publications. These lists are incomplete and not very interesting, as they list merely the starting and ending dates and the number of issues. In recent years, as far as we know, there have not been any serious attempts at a philatelic bibliography. Besides some isolated works specializing in one country and necessarily incomplete, there is nothing. For the sake of completeness we note a list of journals published by Postwertzeichenkunde (Philately) in 1892-93; a catalog of the private library of Mr. Suppantechtech in the Austria Philatelist of 1896-97; an article by Mr. Rommel on the Italian and Spanish press in the Post; closer to us, a superficial monograph of Argentina by Abel Fontaine in the Philatelic Announcer; etc.

And that is all. We believe we have mentioned all the important works dealing with the subject that interests us; perhaps a complete catalog of all the bibliographic articles published to date and updated in each country by competent scholars could serve as a basis for a new work of the kind we are planning – more complete and comprehensive.

We are well aware of the magnitude of the task we are undertaking and of the difficulties we shall encounter; we have thought it best to limit our research to the philatelic press. Thus, we will deal only with journals and will exclude books, albums and catalogs; perhaps later on we shall return to that part of stamp bibliography if an enthusiast more competent than we has not completed the task by then.

We have classified the journals by country, and within each country, alphabetically. This order, already suggested by Dr. Legrand, seems to us more rational than that of Tiffany, who classified publications by language and in chronological order; so, you might encounter in one chapter a journal published in Constantinople and another in Trieste or a magazine from Rio de Janeiro and an advertiser from Montreal – quite confusing and not always easy to figure out.

In closing this preface, we can only express our hope that our efforts will be appreciated and will earn the collaboration of all serious enthusiasts who possess information, if only about one journal; we are calling for their kind cooperation.

William Chenevard

Translator not sure of the spelling, as copy not clear.*

END

Dr. Heinz Schmidt

The "Father of the German Philatelists days" Hans Wagner and his Verein für Briefmarkenkunde von 1885 e.V. Mainz

[Der "Vater der Deutschen Philatelistentage" Hans Wagner und sein Verein für Briefmarkenkunde von 1885 e.V. Mainz]

In: 100 Jahre Deutsche Philatelisten-Tage 1889 - Mainz - 1989., Bund Deutscher
Philatelisten, Ingelheim, Germany, 1989, pp.7-14

Translation by Translator for Brian J. Birch

Guinot - 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

? 2020

THE "FATHER OF THE GERMAN PHILATELISTS DAYS"

HANS WAGNER AND HIS VEREIN FÜR BRIEFMARKENKUNDE

VON 1885 E.V. MAINZ

The "Father of the German Philatelic Days"

HANS WAGNER

and his association for stamp studies of 1885 e.V. Mainz

Dr. Heinz Schmidt

If one wants to advertise the work of Mr. Hauptmann (ret.) Hans Wagner and thus contribute to the development of the German Philatelists' Days, neither can be separated from the history of the "Verein für Briefmarkenkunde von 1885 e.V. Mainz".

From a list of members of the association from the year 1935 it can be seen that Mr. Wagner, born on September 18, 1852 in Wittenberg as the son of a county court councillor, had already contributed to the association in 1876, although the association only celebrated its founding meeting on July 11, 1885 in the Hotel Landsberg in Mainz (Fig. 1).

The fact that already in March 1863 a stamp exchange - considered to be the first one in the German-speaking area - had taken place in Mainz may be regarded as proof of an early philatelic activity (Fig. 2). For us today - 125 years later - the best translation of the word "industrial" is probably "dynamic".

At this time, Hans Wagner had already started collecting stamps as a high school student in Wittenberg at the age of 11. His later travels through large parts of Europe, including China, may have contributed to the fact that he had sought and found contact with foreign collectors at an early age. In 1866 he took over the position of secretary in the association, which was then still called "Verein für Briefmarkenkunde Mainz 1". In this function he prepared the hundredth meeting of the society, which then, after inviting many collector friends, especially from the Rhine-Main area but also far beyond, led to the "First Rhenish Philatelists' Day" in Mainz on August 18, 1889.

Our knowledge of the course of this conference comes from the stenographic notes of Mr. G. Sandkuhl from Main-Kastel, a member of the Mainz Society, which organized the conference. It was thanks to Hans Wagner's organisational skills and charisma that not only members of associations from the Rhine-Main area but also representatives of the three large associations from Dresden, Vienna and Munich came to Mainz. The latter association had also had its section in Mainz since 1886 and was represented by six of its members resident in Mainz. A second participating association from Mainz, the "Collectors' Association for Private Postage Stamps", will be discussed in more detail later.

The ceremonial opening took place in the Stadthalle, where Mr. Bruch, the president of the association, welcomed the numerous guests and thanked them for their interest in Mr. Wagner's plan. Afterwards he handed over the further direction of the day to Mr. Wagner, who initially endeavoured to compile a list of participants. From this list we can see that, in addition to the Mainz associations, representatives from Frankfurt, one of the oldest German stamp associations (founded in 1878), from Offenbach, Wiesbaden, Darmstadt, Cologne, Stuttgart, Strasbourg and also representatives of the three large associations of Dresden, Munich and Vienna took part.

The introductory lecture by Mr. Wagner was under the motto "What we strive for". Mr. Wagner explained that many collectors had initially advised him not to set up a philatelic congress, in view of the fact that all efforts made so far had not been successful. In vain, Dr. Alfred Moschkau from Oybin in Saxony had already invited to such an event in Dresden in 1872, but apart from him and a single guest from Berlin, nobody had come, not even another member of the board of the local association. Similarly, experiments in Lübeck and 1874 in Bremen had been without result.

Even the "Protection and Defense Alliance", formed in 1888 by the largest associations, was for a certain time only of importance in the fight against forgery.

In view of the great echo found at the Mainz meeting on 18 August 1889, one was now allowed to speak justifiably of the "First German Philatelists' Day", as the present mayor of Wiesbaden, Hess, did and as Mr. Blossfeldt then expressed in the magazine "Das Postwertzeichen".

Mr Wagner now explained in detail the criteria for collecting and lamented the fragmentation of the five large and fifty or so smaller German stamp societies. It was urgently necessary to create a central office for all collectors' associations, so that the experience gained in the individual associations could become common property in the most diverse areas. The "Schutz-und Trutz-Bündnis" had also failed. Philately was particularly regrettable due to the selfish way in which the associations had largely been run. He implored the assembly to speak freely about all existing problems in the course of the meeting and, if possible, to come to the conclusion that an annual meeting of all German collectors' associations would finally be brought into being. Now many representatives of the present stamp associations spoke on various topics such as perforations, album questions, misprints, forgeries, types of collectors etc. This is not to be specified here further.

In the end, the motion came about that was most dear to Hans Wagner's heart.

One may decide to hold a general German Philatelists' Day every year, whereby there should be no obligation to participate. Mr. Schindler of the large Frankfurt association asked that the next Philatelist's Day be held in Frankfurt/Main, for which the size and age of the association and the central geographical location of Frankfurt virtually predestined this place. Both requests were granted by a large majority.

Mr. "Premierleutnant" Wagner could be completely satisfied with the success of his efforts. Mr. Schindler then expressed his thanks and appreciation to him and the Mainz society on behalf of all those present, thus closing the First Philatelists' Day, which came to a close in the Rheingau with a pleasant evening drink and the "Goodbye in Frankfurt/Main".

Before we now follow Hans Wagner's life in philatelic terms, we would like to turn to the already mentioned second Mainz Stamp Society, with which Mr. Wagner also had a special relationship, namely the "Mainzer" Sammlerverein für Privatpostwertzeichen (Mainz Collectors' Society for Private Postage Stamps), which he founded on June 1, 1888, and its close connection to the first German Philatelists' Day on August 18, 1889.

The "Society for Stamps Studies Mainz 1", as today's association of 1885 was called at that time, seemed to have exclusively used these stamps for its correspondence since the issue of the first Mainz private stamps, as the following illustrations prove. This can also be explained by the fact that the postage for private mail was considerably lower than that of the Empire Post and that almost 100% of the correspondence took place in Mainz itself. Thus we see on Fig. 3 a pre-printed postcard (the reverse side of which dealt with the already existing broadcasting service of the association) which was sent to the secretary of the Mainz association, Baron Edmund v. Jungenfeld, on a card "out of circulation" with a frame stamp "Only valid for the Society for Stamps Studies".

Due to the slightly faded stamp ink in the course of the last 100 years, the frame stamp is only weakly represented.

Figure 4 shows us a 2-pfennig postal stationery postcard decorated with beautiful ornamentation in Art Nouveau style, whose stamp shows the Mainz Stadthalle, where the First German Philatelists' Day took place.

The text on another postcard of the Mainzer Privatpost (Fig. 5), designed in art nouveau style and overfranked with a Gutenberg stamp, is highly interesting for our topic. This text reads: "RR. The next meetings of the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde will take place on 25/26, 9/7, 23/7 and 6/8. All of these meetings will serve for important consultations regarding the Rheinische Philatelisten-Tag. We would like to ask you to attend in large numbers: The board i.A. v. Jungenfeld".

To conclude the chapter on Mainz private mail and its philatelic significance for the Philatelist's Day, here is a curiosity that is probably unique: As late as 1923, the German Philatelists' Association still had plenty of postal stationery cards of the Mainz Private Post Office at its disposal (Fig. 6), on the reverse side of which it had the resolution of a general meeting held in Gössnitz on September 2, 1923 printed (Fig. 7). With the then red "Gebühr bezahlt" frame stamp, the 2 + 10 Pfennig postcard of the Mainz Private Post Office from 1888 was circulated from Gössnitz to Hamburg on September 18, 1923 with the crossed-out "Hier".

Let us now turn again to the philatelic life of Hans Wagner.

One year after the "First Philatelist's Day" in Mainz, Hans Wagner was elected Chairman of the Mainz Society in 1890 and at the same time made an honorary member. In 1895/96 he became - at that time living in Heidelberg - a member of the so-called Standing Committee, an organ of the German Philatelists' Day. In this capacity, he initiated the founding of the "Bund Deutscher und Österreichischer Philatelisten-Vereine" (Federation of German and Austrian Philatelist Associations) at the 8th German Philatelists' Day in Cologne in 1896, and took over its chairmanship in 1896 and 1897. At the 11th Bundestag in Hamburg in 1907, he was named Guest of Honour, and one year later at the 12th Bundestag in Gössnitz and Altenburg, he was appointed Honorary Member. Wiesbaden is mentioned as his residence. Hans Wagner received the greatest and probably most unique honour at the 25th German Philatelists' Day in Hanover in 1913, when he was made an honorary member of 72 collectors' associations, with the presentation of a silver plate bearing the names of these associations. On this occasion, among other things, a postal stationery card with Wagner's portrait was issued in Hanover, flanked by the coats of arms of Mainz and Hanover, and the dedication contained "Dedicated to the Father of the Philatelist Days for the Jubilee. Hanover, August 18, 1913".

The fact that Hans Wagner had proudly carried this honorary title for years is proven by his handwritten entry of the same (with the addition "Honourable Member of the Federation") on one of his ex-libris cards dated 25.3.1909 from Wiesbaden, a residence at that time (title page). The text page of the ex-libris title page card also bears the handwriting of Hans Wagner (Fig. 8).

It is addressed to the "Bundes-Philatelisten-Klub" in Berlin, at the request of its First Chairman, Mr. Oskar Wassermann, the then Director of the Deutsche Bank in Berlin; Mr. Wagner would like to thank him for kindly sending some magazines.

The commemorative publication celebrating the 25th anniversary of the Berlin Philatelist Club in 1913 states that Mr. Wassermann was the first chairman of the Berlin Club since 2 March 1908. He succeeded Karl Lindenberg, President of the Higher Regional Court, and Dr. phil. Frank Kalckhoff, the bearer of the Hans Wagner Medal 1947. It is necessary to mention a unique map which Hans Wagner had made himself for the 25th Philatelists' Day 1913 in Hanover.

Fig. 9 shows this map of June 23, 1913 from Wiesbaden, which Mr. Wagner addressed handwritten to Mr. Norden in Berlin. From it we can see the foundation day of the Mainz "Collectors' Association for Private Postage Stamps", whose founder was Hans Wagner. Probably at this time (June 1, 1913) a conference of German private mail collectors had taken place in Dresden.

Very little can be seen in the association's documents about Hans Wagner's further life. A letter of congratulations on his 75th birthday in September 1927 can still be found. He is also said to have taken part in all the Philatelic Days in Kassel - except 1937 - until his death. He died at the age of 88 on 21 July 1940 in Frankfurt/Main at Grillparzerstraße 66.

But not only Hans Wagner, but also his Mainz club received a special honour at the 25th German Philatelists' Day in Hanover. In recognition of his services to German philately, he was made the first honorary member of the Bund. The reputation of the Society in his hometown must have been a very good one, too, because as early as 1905 the Governor of the Federal Fortress of Mainz, Major General Ketteler, became a member of the Society and in 1912 its Chairman (until 1920). Special mention in the history of the association is a stamp exhibition on 14.12.1927 in the Rheingoldsaal of the Mainz City Hall, also on 10.4.1932 at the same place.

The association was able to celebrate its 50th anniversary from 16 to 19 August 1935, combined with the 41st German Philatelists' Day and the 12th German Bundestag. Mr. Fritz Fasse (until 1964), who had to call himself "Comradeship Leader", became the new chairman. Since the Wiesbadener Society had also been in existence for 50 years, these days were celebrated together. Special postmarks of both cities appeared on the official festival postcards. There were postal stationeries printed with 3, 5 and 6 Pfennig stamps.

At this time the association "Comradeship of the stamp friends of 1885 Mainz" in the NSG had to call itself "strength by joy".

Shortly after the Second World War it got its old name again and gave itself a new statute on 29.9.1946. One year later the 1st Mainz stamp auction was held in the Brauhauskeller zum Rad auf dem Kästrich.

Already in 1950, the association succeeded again in bringing a federal and philatelists' day to Mainz; it was the 51st German Philatelists' Day and the 4th Bundestag of the new Bund Deutscher Philatelisten(BDPh). From 18 to 20 August 1950, it took place in the Electoral Palace in Mainz, with a special post office and stamp exhibition. For the Bundestag a special postmark in red on a beautiful registered letter in fig. 10.

And after a break of only 12 years, another Federal and Philatelic Day was held in Mainz, the 63rd German Philatelic Day and the 16th Bundestag from 8 to 9 September 1962. The emblem for the special postmark was the pre-philatelic Mainz post horn postmark for the Bundestag and the Thurn und Taxis four-ring postmark with the number "134" (Mainz) for the Philatelic Day. The chairman of the association at that time was Dr. Hermann Müller.

Another event of supra-local importance is the "Mabria 72", a rank 2 exhibition in connection with the Landesverbandstag in April 1972. The special postmark shows a stamp of the Mainz private post office from 1889.

The 100th anniversary celebration of PHILA 85, the association's 100th anniversary, took place from 9 to 12 May 1985 in the new Rheingoldhalle in conjunction with an exhibition of the regional association in the 2nd place.

Liechtenstein, Iceland, France and the UN were represented with special postmarks, the UN with one of its so-called White Cards and an official art card of UNICEF with the image of the Mainz Ivory Madonna.

This concludes the overview of the history of the association. We are looking forward to the big event of the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the Philatelic Days in October 1989.

END

Friedhelm Knappen

Hans Wagner and the Hans-Wagner-Medal

[Hans Wagner und die Hans-Wagner-Medaille]

In: 100 Jahre Deutsche Philatelisten-Tage 1889 - Mainz - 1989., Bund Deutscher Philatelisten, Ingelheim, Germany, 1989, pp.15-23

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

April 2023

HANS WAGNER AND THE HANS-WAGNER-MEDAL

An evaluation of the archive of the Vereins für Briefmarkenkunde von 1885 e.V. Mainz.

Hans Wagner - actually Johannes Wagner - was born on the 18th September 1852 in the Lutherstadt Wittenberg, the son of the district court councillor. In Wittenberg he attended the humanistic Melanchthon Gymnasium from 1864 to 1871. Afterwards he entered military service. In 1873 he became a lieutenant in a Hessian regiment in Mainz. Due to illness he retired from military service as a captain in 1893.

As a grammar school pupil in Wittenberg, Hans Wagner began collecting stamps at the age of 11. His collection soon had a considerable size. Travels to Italy, Switzerland, France and Sweden brought him into personal relationships with foreign collectors. A trip around the world took him to China, among other places. Reading professional journals and studying research reports accompanied his collecting activities from the beginning. From 1886 onwards, he is frequently to be found as the author of lectures to philatelic associations and of essays in the specialist literature.

Hans Wagner was not only a collector and researcher “in a quiet chamber”, but also an ardent supporter of the life of the association. On the 11th July 1885, the board of directors of the Briefmarken-Sammler-Vereins was elected at the Landsberg Hotel in Mainz. Today this day is considered to be the foundation day, although the association certainly existed a long time before. So it is to be understood that in a list of members of the association from the year 1935, 1876 is specified as year of entry for Hans Wagner. In 1886 Hans Wagner became secretary, 1890 chairman of the Mainz association, however, for the year 1892 a new chairman is mentioned.

Still during Hans Wagner's term of office as secretary of the Mainz Club it was stated that the 100th meeting of the Mainz Club would soon be due. Then Hans Wagner had the idea to celebrate this day. Collectors from the Rhine area were invited to a “Rhenish Philatelist's Day” in Mainz. On the 18th August 1889, not only guests from the Rhine area, but also from other parts of Germany and Austria gathered in the city hall of Mainz, so that Mayor Hess from Wiesbaden requested that this event be called the “1st German Philatelists' Day”.

At Wagner's request, it was also decided to hold an annual Philatelists' Day. This earned Hans Wagner the honorary title “Father of the Philatelist Days”. In 1895/96 Hans Wagner, then based in Heidelberg, was a member of the Standing Committee, an organ of the German Philatelists' Day. Following a suggestion made by Hans Wagner in 1895, the Bund Deutscher und Österreichischer Philatelistenvereine was founded at the 8th German Philatelists' Day, which took place from the 20th to 22nd June 1896 at the Lese in Cologne. In 1896 and 1897 Hans Wagner was chairman of the Bund. At the 19th German Philatelists' Day and 11th Bundestag in Hamburg in 1907, he was named guest of honour, and at the 20th German Philatelists' Day and 12th Bundestag in 1908 in Gößnitz and Altenburg, he was made an honorary member. Now Wiesbaden is mentioned as Wagner's residence.

After Hans Wagner had been named an honorary member of the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde von 1885 Mainz in 1890, he received a unique honour at the 25th German Philatelists' Day in Hanover in 1913: 72 collectors associations appointed him an honorary member and presented him with a silver plate bearing the names of the honoring associations.

From this time on, references to Hans Wagner in the association documents become extremely rare. A copy of a letter of congratulation dated the 17th September 1927 is still available, for his 75th birthday. Hans Wagner is said to have participated in all German Philatelist Days until his death. However, Dr. K. Th. Meyer testified in a letter dated 15th October 1950 that Hans Wagner was not present at the 1937 Philatelists' Day in Kassel.

On the 21st July 1940, Hans Wagner died in Frankfurt-am-Main, Grillparzerstraße 66. In the association's documents, neither a date of death nor an obituary can be found. It is astonishing that in 1948 the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde von 1885 had to conduct a search at the offices in Wiesbaden and Frankfurt to determine the date and place of his death. Also the Wiesbadener Verein could not give any information at that time.

The Foundation of the Hans-Wagner Medal, its statutes in the course of time

To honour Hans Wagner's special services, the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde zu Mainz donated a silver medal "for outstanding philatelic activity". It was named Hans Wagner Medal. The foundation was established on the 22nd April 1909. The foundation charter as well as an amendment to the charter of the 8th February 1912, which specifies the rules for the proposals for the award, appeared in print in 1912 and are reproduced below. [See the original document for these rules.]

With the foundation, a fund was established which was calculated in such a way that the medal could be awarded in the long term from its earnings. How high the fund actually was and who had raised the funds for it cannot be found out from the available documents. Due to the war and the great inflation, however, the fund was so devalued that the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde von 1885 Mainz provided the necessary funds again.

On 12 March 1928 a new version of the statutes came into force. The §§3 and 4 were combined, whereby it was newly taken up that the awarding should take place starting from 1928 on the 18th September in Mainz every 3 years, the possibility of the awarding on the German Philatelists' Days was kept open.

The jury was no longer chaired by the chairman of the Standing Committee of the German Philatelists' Days, but by the oldest honorary member of the Mainz Society instead. §7 of the first statutes was dropped, so that 6 of the previous 8 §§ remained. A new §7 read: "Should the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde Mainz be dissolved, the Bund Deutscher Philatelisten will be asked to continue to maintain the Hans Wagner Medal.”

The circumstances of the National Socialist era necessitated a further amendment of the statutes, which was adopted on the 12th October 1942. In it, the Mainz association was referred to as “Comradeship of the Stamp Enthusiasts of 1885 (in the Association of German Collectors of the NSG Kraft durch Freude)”, the chairman as “Kameradschaftsführer” and the members as comrades. The award was restricted to members of the Association of German Collectors. In addition to the 18th September in Mainz, the award could also be presented at a philatelic imperial event. The jury was now made up of the “Comradeship Leader of the Mainz Comradeship”, his deputy, the comrade who had been active in the Comradeship for the longest time and the Reichssammlerwart (Reich Collector’s Expectant). Sections 6 and 7 were amended as follows: “The costs incurred shall be borne by the Foundation Fund, since the Foundation Fund (Note by the speakers: written here without -s at the end. This spelling mistake continues in all versions) is dissolved, the Comradeship of the Stamp Enthusiasts of 1885 in Mainz” and “With the dissolution of the Comradeship the Foundation expires. According to these statutes no Hans Wagner Medal has been awarded because the call for the 1944 award could only be made after the end of the war.

So after the war the life of the association got going again, the statutes of the award of the Hans Wagner Medal had to be revised. The statutes adopted on the 15th December 1946 differed from those of 1942 in that the old names for the Society and its members were reinstated, the “Bund Deutscher Philatelisten” took the place of the Association of German Collectors etc.

In May 1949, a member of the Mainz Association submitted a request to stop granting money for the production of Hans Wagner medals, the awarding of medals being out of date. This request was rejected.

On the 19th October 1967 the statutes were revised. Compared to the 1946 version, there is a change in the composition of the jury and a postponement of the date for the proposals for the award from May 1 to June 1. The jury now comprised 6 members; the Chairman of the Mainz Association and his deputy, as well as the longest serving member, the President and his two Vice Presidents of the Bund Deutscher Philatelisten e.V.

On 17 February 1976, the statutes, which are still valid today, came into force. Regarding §3, the 18th September and Mainz were dropped as date and place for the award. The jury was renamed the Board of Trustees. Its members are: The chairman, the vice-chairman or vice-chairmen and the longest serving member of the Verein für Briefmarkenkunde von 1885 e.V. Mainz. Before each award, the chairman can appoint up to 3 other German philatelists - preferably still living holders of the Hans Wagner Medal - as voting members of the Board of Trustees. The statutes no longer stipulate a date for the submission of proposals.

The design of the Hans Wagner Medal

[See the original document for commemorative covers and the design of the Medal.]

The appearance of the Hans Wagner Medal is defined in §2 of the statutes for the award. The graphic design of the medal and the first version were made by the Lauer Mint in Nuremberg.

Several copies were made for each order, so that the purchase was sufficient for many years. During the Second World War, the association was again in correspondence with the Lauer company because of the stamping of further Hans Wagner Medals. However, a new embossing could not take place at that time. When the association contacted the Lauer Company again after the end of the war, the company informed the association on the 26th February 1946 that it had lost all its embossing stamps and equipment due to the effects of the war, so that the desired medals could not be delivered at that time. After the currency reform, various companies were asked for offers to mint the Hans Wagner Medal. The company Wiedmann in Frankfurt-am-Main received the order. In 1974 the company went bankrupt. Mr. Joachim Frey from Frankfurt was able to buy the printing blocks from the competitor's stock at the last moment and hand them over to the Mainz club. It turned out later, however, that there was only the embossing stamp for one side of the medal left. In 1981, when it became necessary to order more Hans Wagner Medals, the Mainz club started correspondence with Forma Donner in Wuppertal-Elberfeld. This resulted in the fact that the costs for minting tools were so high that it was decided to cast the medals instead of minting them.

The recipients of the Hans Wagner Medal

[See the original document for the list of recipients of the Hans Wagner Medal.]

The list of Hans Wagner Medal winners is rightly called the "Honorary Table of German Philately". Information on the biographies of the winners up to 1959 can be found in Fasse (1960). Knowledge of the fate of some Hans Wagner Medal winners, especially those from the period before 1945, is often incomplete. A suggestion to document the lives of medal winners in a series of publications in the philatelic trade press was very much welcomed, but no action has been taken so far.

Sources for articles:

[See original.]

END

A. Schoeller [& A. Donatis]

Société Française de Timbrologie. Summary report of the meeting of the 8th March 1894
[Société Française de Timbrologie. Compte-rendu sommaire de la séance du 8 Mars 1894]
Revue Philatélique, March 1894, Volume 5, Whole number 47, pp.54-55

Translation by Translator for Brian J. Birch
Guinot - 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
? 2020

SOCIÉTÉ FRANÇAISE DE TIMBROLOGIE:

SUMMARY REPORT OF THE MEETING OF THE 8TH MARCH 1894

French Stamp Society

Summary of the meeting of March 8 1894

Presidency of Mr. Donatis

The minutes of the meeting of February were adopted without changes.

Messrs. Stanley Gibbons offered to the society 2 works: South Australia and Stamps and Stamp Collecting; thanks to them were voted.

The President informed us that Mr. Ph. De la Renotiere von Ferrary did not maintain his resignation; Mr. Lesourd postponed the resignation he had made.

On the other hand, the Society acted on the resignations of Mr. Victor Robert, permanent member and of Mr. de Reuterskiold, corresponding member.

The Society then initiated a discussion on participating in the Exposition of Paris; after considering in depth it was decided that information would be requested from the Director of the Book Exposition to understand exactly the conditions under which the Stamp section will function.

Mr. L Auscher was named a council member replacing Mr. Bernichon who has become treasurer. The next meeting will be Thursday April 5.

The Secretary

A Schoeller

At the moment of going to press, we received a letter from The Director Legrand protesting against the interpretation given in the letter in which he resigned his functions of secretary; at the same time The Director Legrand gave his resignation.

Mr. Donatis responded to Mr. the Director Legrand as follows:

Paris, March 22 1894

My dear Doctor, I received this morning, at my home, where I have been confined by influenza for a dozen days, your letter of the 21st of this month, in which you gave your resignation as a permanent member of the French stamp society. Contrary to the thoughts that you expressed in your letter in resigning as secretary at the same time as resigning as a permanent member, I can reaffirm to you that the terms of this letter are absolutely mute on this last point. Recalling the silence of certain words pronounced by you at the last meeting which you attended at which it seemed to me, as well as to other members present, the result being, despite your disagreements with us, you would remain a member of the Society to better judge the blows that would be brought against it, we therefore concluded with a good faith, I assure you, that that was in effect your intention. Therefore be persuaded that there was no other tactic. You know me well enough from elsewhere to know that if this interpretation seemed to me open to being seen this way, I would not have suggested it. No matter what, your letter of yesterday being formally you intention to separate yourself entirely from the Society and reside as a stranger, it rests to me nothing but to act on your resignation, all in regretting your decision.

Accept etc (Note – French is full of politesse”; that is formal usage depending on the recipients status. For example, acceptez vous les sentiments distingues, translated literally as “please accept my distinguished sentiments”

Signed A Donatis

The affirmation so sharp and categorical of the honorable Mr. Donatis allows us to respond to the polemic of the Universal Postal Union and we content ourselves with regretting that Mr the Director Legrand directs against honorable merchants introduced by him in the Society a campaign in which it is itself only pushed by a merchant.

END

Author (14pt)

Title

[Title in original language]

Bibliographic details

(Notes)

Translation by Translator for Brian J. Birch
Guinot - 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
? 2020

TITLE (14pt)

END

Eduardo Escalada Goicoechea

The first Spanish philatelic bibliography

[La primera bibliografía Filatélica Española]

Atalaya Filatélica, April 2003, Whole number 100, pp.76-77

Translated for Brian J. Birch

Guinot - 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

May 2020

THE FIRST SPANISH PHILATELIC BIBLIOGRAPHY

At the end of 1876 there appeared in Seville, under the title Philatelic Literature in Spain - Notes for Writing a Catalogue, one of the first philatelic bibliographies known in the world. Its author, Dr. Thebussem, at that time had been for more than six years with his particular crusade for the endeavor of postage stamp collecting along with his persistent criticism of the Spanish postal authorities, and always with a touch of humor.

But before continuing, let's go back to history: fifteen years before, in December 1861, A. Potiquet had published in Paris the first postage stamp catalogue in the world, which began an editorial competition between Belgium, France and England during which philately became the most avant-garde and enlightened form of international collecting of that time. In the year 1862, the first stamp album was issued (Justin Lalier, Paris), the first illustrated catalogue (F. Booty, Brighton), the first book about forgeries, in its editions in English and French (J. B. Moens, Brussels), and the first philatelic magazine (The Stamp Collectors' Monthly Advertiser, Liverpool), and together these have brought us to the following text, the first report on philatelic literature included between the pages xv and xvi of the first edition of A Hand Catalogue of Postage Stamps for the Use of Collectors by John Edward Gray, a Curator at the British Museum in London. It calls to our attention that during the year that elapsed since Potiquet's publication, Gray was capable of listing 21 different works. Without any doubt it is the first philatelic bibliography in the world.

However, to find ourselves in front of one individually edited as such, in book format, we have to go to the year 1874 in St. Louis, United States, the year during which John K. Tiffany published The Philatelic Library. A Catalogue of Stamp Publications. This work includes the 1,470 titles owned by Tiffany in his library that later would become part of Earl Crawford's library, currently in the British Library, the most important and complete that ever has been created.

Thebussem, already privileged with the knowledge of all of this information in 1875 was a Founder Member of the French Society of Timbrology, honorary member of the Philatelic Society, London, and the first editor in Spain to have an established column about philately in the Revista de Correos de Madrid [Madrid's Post Office Magazine], has the happy idea of organizing and disclosing all the information he had about the Post and philately in our country. It cannot be taken entirely as a complete bibliography, since it included besides books, booklets, and articles from newspapers and magazines, a variety of objects, and announcements that help us to define him as he has been introduced to us: a genuine man, scholar, ahead of his time, energetic, egotistical, and with a subtle and intelligent sense of humour.

This jewel of Spanish literature, of which only 130 copies were published, made Thebussem known internationally and granted Seville the honor of having been published in this city the first work of philatelic bibliography in Spain and one of the pioneers in the world.

END

Obituary
[Necrologie]

Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste, December 1907, Whole number 326, Cover & p.1

Translation by Google Translate for Brian J. Birch
Guinot - 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
January 2020

OBITUARY

The newspaper was in press when the almost sudden death of Mr. Arthur Maury occurred, who suffered from congestion last Friday, died on Sunday December 1, at the age of 63 years. We share this painful news with readers of the Postage Stamp Collector. Founder of this newspaper which he has continued to actively manage for more than 40 years, Mr. Maury will leave unanimous regrets in the whole philatelic world which loses in him one of its deans. The many expressions of sympathy that flowed from all sides to the deceased's home show how much esteem his colleagues and all those who knew him held.

An early philatelist, he always took care of stamps, and devoted himself entirely to their study. The works he has written on this subject are alive, he has lived them, so to speak. At the same time as a conscientious author, philately loses in him a scholar and a passionate collector.

Heraldist, he had gathered in his Hotel on rue Spontini interesting collections of curious and historical trinkets often cited in the Illustrated Revues.

He endeavored to demonstrate the popular origin of the Gallic Rooster and to make it reappear in the coat of arms of France, which he succeeded in part. We remember the important work (1) he published on this subject, a work which was honored by a government subscription.

Quite recently, it published a volume of 400 pages on French stamps (2), and readers of the Collector saw in the previous issue the reception given to this publication, so complete and documented.

A public education officer, a Nicham Iftikhar official, decorated with several foreign orders, Mr. Maury had been appointed president of the Chamber of Trade Unions in postage stamps since its foundation. He was also, alongside MM. Léo Claretie and from Germany, vice-president of the Society of Amateurs of games and old toys. Expert at the Seine Court, Mr. Maury, in this latter function, and in the multiple works he had undertaken despite the precarious state of his health, had been overworked in recent times; he died so to speak on the breach.

He was an affable man, loved by his staff, always ready to be of service and who will be missed by everyone who approached him.

His funeral will take place Wednesday December 4, at 10 am, in the Notre-Dame-de-Lorette church. We will meet 6, boulevard Montmartre.

References

- (1) Les Emblèmes et les drapeaux de la France : le coq gaulois, par Arthur Maury, Paris, 1904.
- (2) Histoire des timbres-poste français, bandes, cartes, timbres-télégraphe et téléphone, essais, marques postales et oblitérations, par Arthur Maury, Paris, 1907.

END

Henri Leroux André Maurice, Roger North & René Poulain

The Centenary of the House of Arthur Maury 1860-1960

[Le Centenaire de la Maison Arthur Maury 1860-1960]

(Translation of the pages relating to Arthur Maury only: pp.7-9 & 28-29.)

Translation by Google Translate for Brian J. Birch

Guinot - 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

January 2020

THE CENTENARY OF THE HOUSE OF ARTHUR MAURY 1860-1960

It would seem legitimate to all those who love the postage stamp and its history to place the year 1960 under the sign of Arthur Maury, this "grandfather of philately", who was and remains one of his most illustrious pioneers: a century, in fact, will have passed since every young man he decided to sell postage stamps for collection, a century during which this science which owed him so much - and even his name - should flourish even philately.

(...)

Born on January 31, 1844 in the heart of old Paris, rue du Petit-Musc, Arthur Maury was the son of modest merchants. Having specialized in the sale of gloves, his father moved to Boulogne-sur-Mer. A few years later, in 1860, the young Maury, who for several years already collected stamps and exchanged them, in particular with the many Englishmen who every summer pass through Boulogne, obtained from his father that he conceded a whole shop window and it there he installed his stamp sheets, carefully presented at marked prices.

Quickly, a small clientele was formed; to satisfy it, he had to obtain himself everywhere and mainly in Paris, where he entered into relations with collectors, already relatively numerous and with the few people who made more or less trade: the house Maury was virtually founded and this young 16-year-old man had just created a firm, which still carries his sign in the same premises where he was to set it up definitively, after various moves which we will, for precision enthusiasts, give the list:

Three years after having "hanged the rack" in Boulogne-sur-Mer, Arthur Maury, an emancipated miner, rented a small shop in Paris, opposite the French Theater, 5, rue de Richelieu.

In 1865, his store being struck by expropriation, he transported him to 23 rue Le Peletier.

The success, which had already been announced, became such that the location proved to be insufficient to house the activity of the personnel and the reception of the customers. Arthur Maury then rented more spacious premises, 92, rue SaintLazare. A few years later, it was a whole mansion in the city of Malesherbes that he assigned to his business in continuous expansion.

Finally, in September 1891, stores and offices were transported and reinstalled in the heart of business Paris, 6, boulevard Montmartre, where this old and friendly house maintains the tradition of its illustrious founder, under the aegis of its owner-manager. , Mr. Roger North.

His thirty years of commercial activity had already given Arthur Maury an exceptional success which he had to complete during the sixteen years which elapsed until his death, which occurred, 6, boulevard Montmartre, on December 1, 1907.

Even more remarkable than this material fortune, are the scale and the quality of the work which he built during 45 years of ceaseless toil and whose main chapters we will discuss.

(...)

In one of the first issues of the Postage Stamp Collector, Arthur Maury favorably presented a suggestion from Mr. Herpin, a sagacious and probably Hellenizing collector, who proposed the term "philately" for the taste of postage stamps.

Adopted fairly quickly abroad, this term was to be discussed for a long time in France, against those of "timbrolology" and "timbrophilia" defended respectively and with equal tenacity by two "ancestors" of the stamp collection, Mahé and Dr. Great.

Arthur Maury and his newspaper were to end up imposing it definitively and universally.

(...)

One of the happiest memories of Arthur Maury's life relates to a trip he made to Mont-Blanc, around 1900. Being in a hotel frequented by distinguished foreigners, he amused himself, instead of give his real name, to write on the travelers' book: Yruam (anagram of Maury), prince of the Serbmit (anagram of Stamps) and he glued a vignette advertisement bearing the same inscriptions and which he had printed, in various colors, for the needs of his business. This somewhat childish deception had the result that he was the target of several diners and diners and that the butler overwhelmed him with attentions, "which forced him to give twenty cents as a tip."

(...)

Arthur Maury was certainly, in the Paris of the "Belle Epoque" an outstanding personality - and our previous articles clearly show what titles he had to be legitimately.

His fame went far beyond our borders. Let us quote this anecdote:

The Russian prince Wladimir T ... who was staying in Paris, after having had the fantasy of visiting in person - and almost solemnly - the house in the rue du Petit-Musc where Maury had been born, had put himself in mind, following a whim of his fiancée, to sell his stamp collection for 15,000 francs: he threw it into the fire because Maury only wanted to give him 13,500! (They were gold francs).

We have already said that he was received - and listened to - by the most famous political figures of his time. He was legitimately proud of the relationships he had maintained with Victor Hugo, with the former Brazilian emperor Dom Pedro, with many other celebrities.

Holder of several foreign orders, he had been made an Academy Officer in 1888, and promoted to a Public Education Officer in 1900.

He had not yet obtained, when he died in 1907, the Cross of the Legion of Honor: it was, it seems, largely deserved by this giant of the philatelic trade, by this conscientious and learned writer, who left between other works: The History of the French Postage Stamp, and Emblems and Flags of France.

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
October 1938, Volume 18, Issue 10

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2020

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

October 1938, Volume 18, Issue 10

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

p.[1]

Nenes von Büchern

p.[2]

Entstehung und Entwicklung der Post in Bayern

E. Motschmann

p.[3]

“Die Voortrekker” Die geschichte der alten Buren-Züge.

A. E. Johann

p.3[3]

Zwischenstege

p.[4]

Balkan

H. D.

p.[5]

Hoch-, Tief- oder Flachdruck? In welchem Druckverfahren sind diese hergestellt?

p.[5]

Sind behördlich gelochte Postwertzeichen Dienstmarken?

p.[6]

Vorn Werden einer Hitler – Jugend – Briefmarke.

p.[7]

Geheimzeichen auf Briefmarken

p.[8]

Kleine Mitteilungen

pp.[9-16]

Advertisements

END

Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm
December 1938, Volume 18, Issue 12

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2020

DER DEUTSCHE PHILATELISTISCHE BÜCHERWURM

December 1938, Volume 18, Issue 12

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

p.[1]

Die philatelistische Literatur auf der "Brapex".

p.[2]

Autstehung und Entwicklung der Post in Bayern.

pp.[3-5]

Nene Postwertzeichen

p.[6]

Nene Ganzsachen

p.[7]

Nene Sonderstempel

p.[8]

Die Kunstterischen Schöpfer der Briefmarke

p.[9]

Abschwenkung vom der Donan Monarchie wurde von A. Mucha, J. Obrowsky und M. Savabinsky bestritten.

Karl Dopf.

p.[9]

Krinitelle philatelie
Gustav Kabaeltz

p.[10]

Advertisement

p.[11]

Wie Sammele, ich "Ungebraucht".
Peter J. Bohr

p.[11]

Der Sammler. (Weise: Das Wandern ist des Müllers Lust)
Kurt Hesse

pp.[12-16]

Advertisements

END

[Raymond Poulain (Editor)]

The first postage stamp catalogue in France "The Potiquet"
[Le premier catalogue de timbres-poste en France: "Le Potiquet"]
Le Philatéliste Bibliophile, January 1996, Number 0, p.3

Translation by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
April 2020

THE FIRST POSTAGE STAMP CATALOGUE IN FRANCE

"THE POTIQUET"

Alfred Potiquet (1820-1883), surveyor of bridges and roads, drew up maps of railway lines and communication routes in the various countries of Central Europe.

A collector at heart, he obtained the various issues of postage stamps during his many trips. The exchanges he practiced, as well as the generosity of the dignitaries whom he met for the needs of his professional activity, enabled him to create a very beautiful collection.

He considered it necessary to produce for his personal needs a list of the postage stamps he had in order to carry out the most fruitful exchanges with other collectors. This idea turned into the creation of a real catalog of postage stamps issued by the different countries of the globe, which was issued on the 21st December 1861 listing a total of 1,100 postage stamps!

When he retired, he found that he no longer had sufficient resources to collect all the stamps in the world, and he decided to sell his collection through V. Le Ronne, a Parisian stationer based in rue d'Amsterdam.

END

Karl v. Gündel

A bibliography of the German philatelic literature

[Eine bibliographie der Deutschen Philatelistischen literatur]

Welt-Post, September/October 1891, Volume 16, Whole number 37, p.394

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

April 2020

A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE GERMAN PHILATELIC LITERATURE

No. 35 (p.372) of this paper has already indicated the prospect of a bibliography of German philatelic literature. In view of the great importance - perhaps not even suspected by many - that this work will undoubtedly have for the scientific expansion of postage stamp science, I would like to emphasize the following:

Those who are involved in philatelic research or who would like to learn about any philatelic subject are faced with insurmountable difficulties; - He has to go through the very time-consuming effort of looking through a number of years of specialist journals from start to finish in order to find what he is looking for.

If he is lucky, he may find something he wanted to know after a long, arduous job; - But he can never be sure whether he has not missed the most important thing because he has either overlooked the same thing - as can easily happen - or the paper that contained the best was not at hand. But let us admit so sincerely that in the older years of our specialist journals the crassest inaccuracies occur in countless numbers, which have only recently been checked and corrected as such. So those who have overlooked the corrected so far and found only the earlier incorrect will, with the best will in their troublesome lookup, only have a very problematic answer.

We just lack a philatelic bibliography - a reference book in lexicographical form - in which everything that has been published in Germany up to now on any philatelic subject is easily and clearly arranged. Once we have such a work, it will be easy for any philatelist striving for higher education to acquire one. Therefore, a bibliography written by such a thorough connoisseur and astute thinker as Oberlandesgerichtsrath Suppantschitsch will be greeted with great joy by every true philatelist. I am not saying too much when I say that with the publication of the work, scientific postage stamp science will enter a new, brilliant phase.

However, it is still to be expected that there will also be foreign philatelists, who, in a similar way as the type and structure of our German bibliography, will also produce one of their own country.

There can be little doubt that Suppantschitsch's work will be something solid: - but it can also be expected that among the many hundreds of thousands of philatelists there will certainly be 1,000-2,000 from whom - by the way, a not at all considerable pecuniary sacrifice is required - this is truly monumental, and is now unique of its kind.

It would be desirable if the order for this epoch-making work were soon sent to Karl Cl. Sauer in Moravian-Ostrau, because understandably, it can only appear if half the costs appear to be covered due to a sufficient number of subscribers. Prepayment does not take place, but will only be collected after publication.

END

Dr. Moschkau*Ch. Diena*Illustrierte Briefmarken Zeitung, 1st August 1889, Volume 2, Issue 15, pp.219-220

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

May 2020

Ch. DIENA

Italy takes a peculiar position with regard to its contribution to philately. One does not speak much about it, one hears very little from there, and yet philately is widespread in this southern country as everywhere. It was once said that the postage stamps found their admirers in the Castel Sant'Angelo, the late Pope Pius IX is said to have had a fine collection and from Cardinal Antonelli's collection came fairy-tale descriptions to Germany, probably well-known people will also own great valuable albums in Italy, but as if there was a mysterious veil over all this "stamp collecting" that no one from there has yet released and that the country is not able to air at all. As one knows well-known collectors only from "indefinite rumors" or not at all, Italy is also very poorly represented literarily in the philatelic literature. We do not know any specialist journal from there that could have been made viable, there is no manual in Italian that deserves this title - in short, apart from a few journalistic mayflies and better price lists, there is no book that is worthy of the Italian philatelist represented in our general literature. In my History of Postage Stamps I have dutifully reported what can be said and cited about Italian specialist literature, it is not enough and if there have been years since where the trade in postage stamps is very brisk, conditions seems to have changed little in literary terms.

I say little, but something! In Charles Diena Italy has recently found at least one excellent representative of philately, who is serious about studying it, as several of his fine works prove. For this reason, we are happy to give you a brief biographical sketch of this gentleman after we have already published news about the most famous philatelists in Belgium, France and Holland.

Charles Diena was born in Florence in May 1853, started collecting as a child and set up a stamp shop in 1871, which moved to Nice in 1886 and is still flourishing today and enjoys a good reputation. The collector is the same specialist in old Italian stamps and in "stamps on letters". Diena has been a member of the French Society for Timbrologie since 1871, which awarded him a medal in 1879 for several published essays, but especially for an excellent work on Italy's city stamps. The latter work appeared in the Society's Bulletin (July 1880) and again in the "Bibl. Timbr." at the concours in 1881, where Diena was again awarded the silver medal. He took part in the Congress in Paris and became a member of the Internationaler Philatelisten Verein in Dresden and the philatelic associations in Munich and Stuttgart and is therefore also close to the German collector's world. The Dr., who has recently become known through several valuable essays in Munich's Postwerthzeichen Emilio Diena is the brother of the gentleman biographed by us and took part in the work of Charles Diena. Both brothers have a rich library of philatelic works and are likely to bring some more literature-enriching contributions to publication in the future. That this, especially from Dr. E. Diena, which has already been published in German journals and will hopefully be repeated, will only make us more likeable to these Italian peers.

It is certainly reassuring for our common young science to know that more and more, even in countries that do honor philately, but predominantly now practically, find men of knowledge and zeal who also theoretically advocate literarily for this in their national language and thus successfully promote the further spread of philately, but serve their tribal comrades in a recognizable manner. Charles Diena and with him his brother Dr. Emilio Diena now.

Oybin.

Dr. Moschkau

END

Who are you, Alfred Potiquet?
[Qui êtes-vous, Alfred Potiquet?]

Delcampe Magazine, September 2017, Whole number 15, Cover & pp.16-18

Translation by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
April 2020

WHO ARE YOU, ALFRED POTIQUET?

To philatelists, Alfred Potiquet is the author of the first catalogue of postage stamps in the world, with a first edition put on sale on the 21st December 1861 and a second edition in March 1862.

As we will see, the name of Alfred Potiquet has also gone down in history for other reasons. Alfred Potiquet was born on the 4th December 1820 in Magny-en-Vexin. His father, Thomas-François Potiquet, ran an educational establishment there. We know the service records of Alfred Potiquet because he was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour in 1873 for his professional merits and these appear in his file: entered in 1840 in the administration of Ponts-et-Chaussées as an Agent Voyer [officer responsible for the maintenance of public roads], he rose through the ranks and reached the rank of Conducteur Principal, which allowed him to present himself as a “civil engineer”. From 1860, he occupied the function of Chief of the Office of the Chief Engineer for the Seine Department.

Page 16: Illustrations from top to bottom:

Picture Post Card of Magny-en-Vexin, birthplace of Alfred Potiquet
Portrait of Alfred Potiquet
Signature of Alfred Potiquet

His service records mention numerous professional publications. The most notable of these is the Collection of Laws, Decrees, Orders, Circulars, etc., concerning the Ponts-et-Chaussées service, which he published the edition in 1857. This publication will be followed and kept up to date by the Ponts-et-Chaussées Administration well after his retirement and the “Potiquet collection” became part of the everyday language of this Administration until the end of the 1920s!

Next to these works, the list of his professional publications mentions “56 engraved geographical maps, most of them made for the railway companies of the North, the East, from Paris to Lyon and to the Mediterranean and the South”. The consultation of the Gallica site of the National Library (Alfred Potiquet is referenced as an author) gives an idea of this production. We also find his name as a participant in successive editions of the Paris plans “Andriveau-Goujon” between 1860 and 1869, as well as on detailed plans for the embellishments of the Bois de Vincennes.

When he wrote his service records in 1873, Potiquet did not mention that he had authored a catalogue of postage stamps, but pointed to a work which was not linked to his professional activity: he has a rich collection (nearly 500 pages) on the National Institute of France, its various organizations, its members, its associates and its correspondents, published in 1871. You can consult this substantial work, which received the statistics prize awarded by the Academy of Sciences in 1870, on the website archive at the address:

<https://archive.org/stream/linstitutnation00potigoog#page/n7/mode/2up>

Illustrations from top to bottom:

Covers of Alfred Potiquet's first philatelic catalogues

Potiquet catalogue page

Alfred Potiquet's years of service

Cover of the collection of the various works in the National Institute of France of which Potiquet is the author

We will return to Potiquet's interest in famous scholars and literary figures later. At the end of a professional career which earned him promotions and honours, Potiquet devoted himself during his retirement to the historiography of the canton of Magny-en-Vexin, his author's manual of the catalogue of the National Library of France lists more than 20 works devoted to this subject published between 1876 and 1882, as well as a plan, drawn by him, of the town of Magny in 1735. Alfred Potiquet died on the 9th April 1883 in Nogent-l'Artaud, his death certificate mentions that he then lived in Paris, rue Condorcet. The municipality of Magny-en-Vexin paid tribute to him by giving his name to one of the town's squares, a name that this square has kept.

Illustrations from top to bottom:

Map of Paris drawn by Achin and Potiquet

Map of Magny-en-Vexin drawn by Potiquet

Potiquet the Collector

Now back to Potiquet's interest in postage stamps. Potiquet indicates in the preface of his catalogue (2nd edition, page 4) that he himself built an advanced collection in the early 1860s: Most of the stamps that we have indicated are in our collection, and we have seen many of the rest. Potiquet's correspondence with another forerunner, Oscar Berger-Levrault, confirms that Potiquet was an active collector until the early 1860s, but that he planned to part with his stamp collection in the fall of 1861 "To which he was not very attached" (letter of the 15th October 1861).

This announced abandonment explains that Potiquet, unlike the other early great collectors, did not contribute to any of the philatelic magazines which appeared in French from 1863, that he did not participate in the constitution of the short-lived Philatelic Society of Paris in 1865, and that there was no third edition of the catalogue – although the Foreword of the 2nd edition suggested the possibility.

In light of this information, we can look at the Potiquet Catalogue as a “farewell gift” to a passion, coming from a personality with taste and talent for nomenclature.

But we find Potiquet the collector in another field. We have seen that he had, in a personal capacity, written a very complete work on the Institut de France and its members. At the same time, Potiquet has assembled a collection of autographs dedicated to the members of the Institute. This collection, described as “one of a kind” was auctioned off after Potiquet’s death on the 12th March 1886, and catalogued under the title Catalogue of an interesting collection of autograph letters composing the collection of the late Mr. Alfred Potiquet. The extract from this 28-page catalogue reproduced opposite gives an idea of the quality of this collection. For his new passion, autographs, as for postage stamps, Potiquet will have led a taste for collection and writing talent.

END

Paul Friedrich

“Magasin Pittoresque”

Reflexionen über Philatelie, July 1946, Whole number 84, pp.60-62.

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

May 2024

“MAGASIN PITTORESQUE”

The year was 1862, when Edouard Charton published a unique illustrated monthly magazine in the global metropolis of Paris, the Magasin Pittoresque with the beautiful treatise, written for the “elegant world” of the salons, the meeting place of all outstanding minds. Natalis Rondot, a philatelist of rank and reputation, was the first of his clan to attempt to make illustrations of stamps and sketch them in writing. It is extremely attractive and meaningful to see what insights Rondot came to back then, even though his passion for collecting stamps had only very tentatively taken hold. To understand the following words of Rondot’s, it must be mentioned that only around 1,400 stamps were issued at that time, of which around ½ were made from “covers” (postal items) and private items and that these were valued at a total of 650 French francs. The very first catalogue (if one can call it that) from Berger-Levrault of Strasbourg, published shortly before in 1861, was a small paperback stamp directory that Berger-Levrault had only produced for his most intimate barter friends, so that the general public in Paris did not yet know it at the time. Listen now to Rondot himself. He writes:

Collecting stamps is becoming a more difficult and expensive undertaking every day. Only 1,400 stamps are known, issued by 100 states, provinces and colonies. The price of these stamps represents a sum of more than 650 francs, but one must remember that most of them, but especially the old stamps, have a much higher value according to their circulation and it is precisely these stamps in particular which sell for a hundred times more than they cost.

So much for Rondot.

One should consider that the 1,000 stamps known at that time are now all first-class rarities and include almost all the world rarities, as long as they were not discovered later. The very oldest catalogue in Germany already lists the following stamps: British Guiana Nos. 1 and 11, Mauritius 1 and 2, all valuable English colonials such as Australia, Bahamas, Canada, Cape of Good Hope, Confederate States of America, Granada, India, all Swiss cantonals, old Italian states, & etc., which together would be estimated to be worth 10 million German marks

The next section gives a fairly pointless comparison of prices in 1862 and 1946. Since it is in obsolete currencies and takes no account of inflation, I have not bothered to translate it. BJB

This trade was done at the tobacco dealer (a stamp dealer but the actual meaning of the word did not yet exist) not just 1 piece at a time, but several pieces, the stamps were often even presented in bundles: However, there is a downer in this philatelic bliss when you learn from Lietzow that 9/10 of all stamps were fake, although Fouré and Oneglia only appeared around a decade later and blessed the philatelists with their infamous forgeries. What is to be admired, however, is Rondot's clever foresight, who already back then made the rarity value dependent on the numbers printed and expressed the opinion that, despite their high price, these stamps are worth a hundred times more (se vend cent gois plus, qu'il m'a courte) than they cost me. Rondot wrote these words 84 years ago, and the wisdom has remained unchanged to this day. At that time, the passion of collecting stamps was seen as a childish game, at best as a "pleasantry" of the beautiful women who frequented the salons. People didn't really dare to come forward with this matter and didn't want to expose themselves to the ridicule of other, higher-ranking people. Such a "faux pas" would have been unforgivable. You have to put yourself in the middle-class level of the time to understand it. Times have changed dramatically. Statesmen, politicians, kings, financiers down to the smallest man pay their respects to the smallest of all government securities. Everyone with the passion of which they are capable, with the feeling of inner bliss, of possessing treasures. Even if they are still small, they will never disappoint their owner.

*

I add [Presumably the editor. BJB]:

Friedrich admires, not without reason, Rondot's cleverness in relating the value of a stamp to its circulation. However, it must be emphasized that at that time they only knew stamps that were issued for nothing other than postal purposes!

If today one wanted to calculate or measure the value of the stamps that are only minted for collectors based on the mintage size, that would not be clever, but rather a great folly (cf. Letter 42!).

Yes, times have changed dramatically. It used to be easy to buy in 6 monthly installments but today the customer has to maintain a credit balance with his supplier.

END

Konrad Ferdinand Meyer

Chalmers, Hill, Kosir and the Countess of Longueville

[Chalmers, Hill, Kosir und die Herzogin von Longueville]

Schweizer Briefmarken Rundschau, September 1949, Volume 25, Issue 9, p.154

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

June 2020

CHALMERS, HILL, KOSIR AND THE COUNTESS OF LONGUEVILLE

The short glosso in June-Jeft about the radio lecture by a government councilor Steinegger at Sender West, who claims the Slovenian Lorenz Koschier, the inventor of the postage stamp, as an Austrian, has registered a relhe of letters, <A Slovenian philatelist writes, among other things. outraged: one of the Carnioles has lived for hundreds of years his people, who were oppressed under the government of the (Austrian) Imperial Empire, the Slovenes, but externally they were Austrians. In the heart of this country, which today forms part of Yugoslavia, Lorenz Kosir saw the light of the world in 1804> Let's find out that Kosir comes from Slovenia, which until the First World War understood the Austrian crown and has been part of Yugoslavia since then. And in order to return to our postage stamps from this leap into world history, we are adding an article that mentions even earlier inventors of the postage stamp.

The priority of the invention of the postage stamp, which posterity has contested over and over again for hundreds of years and championed with much verve, has long been established. The exact dates give the Scot Chalmers the laurel, who made the first stick-on porcelain stamp in his printing works in Dundee in August 1834. The Viennese stamp dealer Siegmund Friedl acquired this sample for his postage stamp museum in Oberdöbling.

Postmaster General Hill, on the other hand, only had a stamp of his own taste drawn by Perkins, Bacon & petch after Chalmers' design was rejected in the competition in 1839, which he introduced in Great Britain on May 6, 1840.

The Slovenian Kosir, as vice state accountant, made the proposal to the Austrian government to introduce postage stamps in 1835, as a report by the OPS Leipzig announced. In 1836, in an interview with the Englishman Galvay, Kosir passed on his suggestion and thereby perhaps encouraged Hill to introduce the brands already proposed by Chalmers. But Kosir was a year late with Chalmers.

But all three were defeated by the Duchess Anne Geneviève de Longueville-Dunois - Orléans. This daughter, Henri II of Bourbon-Condé, the sister of the great Condé, suggested in 1652 to General Manager Fouquet to print the wafers with which she sealed the letters according to the custom of the time with the coat of arms and the value of 2 soles and this postage to sell in advance. The tenant of the Paris City Post Office, Jean Pacques Renouard de Villayer, complied with this recommendation in 1653 by introducing the <Billets de port payé>. The Duchess can therefore be addressed as the mother of postage stamps.

The readers will laugh, however, because the final glossary about the invention of the postage stamp by the Russians became a reality some time ago. A Russian special catalog wants to show two previously unknown postage stamps, which increase the previously known nine from all over the world to eleven. These two line up as No. 8 as a contribution stamp from Tiflis 1832/33 and No. 11 as the postage evidence stamp from Petersburg. 1839 in these so-called preluders before 1840.

Konrad Ferdinand Mayer

END

Jan Špiryt
Filatelie, December 1973, Volume 23, Issue 24, p.750

Translation by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2020

JAN ŠPIRYT

Jan Spiryt, a long-time head of the SCF Objective Commission, lived to be 18 on the 18th of June. He began to collect postage stamps as a student and has remained faithful to this hobby to this day. He looks at the Czechoslovak postage stamps, which he loves very much, looks like a small artistic field and is actively interested in everything related to their work and creators as a functionary worked in the feiletist movement as early as the thirties. He collaborated in various positions in the exhibitions PRAGA 1950, PRAGO 1955 and PRAGA 1982. For almost twenty years he has been the prize of the subject commission and for the last time he has been the head of the UN working group. We cordially and sincerely congratulate him on his important life as a junior and we wish him good health and success in his philatelic activities.

END

Peter Fischer, Dr. Heinz Jaeger, Wolfgang Maassen & Renate Springer

From the Early Days of German Philately

[Aus der Frühzeit Deutscher Philatelie]

Schriftenreihe zur Geschichte der Philatelie in Deutschland, Consilium Philatelicum, Bund
Deutscher Philatelisten, Bonn, Germany

(Translation of the Contents page only)

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

June 2020

FROM THE EARLY DAYS OF GERMAN PHILATELY

Peter Fischer; Dr. Heinz Jaeger; Wolfgang Maassen; Renate Springer

AUS DER FRÜHZEIT DEUTSCHER PHILATELIE

Mit Exkursen zu Briefmarken in der Schönen Literatur und zum Typus des Sammlers

Schriftenreihe zur Geschichte der Philatelie in Deutschland

INHALT

Zum Geleit	3	Foreword
Peter Fischer: Briefmarken und Briefmarkensammeln In der Literatur	4	Stamps and stamp collectors in the Literature
Renate Springer: Dr. Alfred Moschkau, Sammler und Philatelist	10	Dr. Alfred Moschkau, Collector and Philatelist
Wolfgang Maassen: Alfred Moschkau Der "Urvater" der Philatelie-Fachjournalisten und Redakteure	14	Alfred Moschkau, "Founding Father" of Philatelic specialist Journalism and editor
Wolfgang Maassen: Moschkaus frühe journalistische Beiträge. Ein Überblick für Jahre 1869-1880 (Auswahl)	21	Early journalistic contributions. An overview for the years 1869-1880
Wolfgang Maassen: Von einem, der auszog, die Welt zu erobern: Der Traum des Wilhelm Faber	24	From one, who tried to conquer the world. The dream of Wilhelm Faber
Renate Springer: Das Moschkau-Album: Eine genial Idee und deren Realisierung	34	The Moschkau-Album A brilliant idea and its realisation
Wolfgang Maassen: Auf den Spuren einer "Fata Morgana"	39	On the trail of a "Fata Morgana" named

Namens Georg Sartori		Georg Sartori
Peter Fischer: Deutsch-Deutsches: Alfred Moschkau – Dr. Heinz Jaeger, Auf dem Weg zur Einheit	48	German of Germans A M – Dr. HJ on the way of unity
Dr. Heinz Jaeger: “Sammler – Ihre Leidenschaft – Ihre Liebe”	52	Collection. Your passion and your love

Impressum

Copyright 2004 ♦ Bund Deutscher Philatelisten e.V. Mildred-Scheel-Str. 2, 53175 Bonn. Das Urheberrecht der Autoren bleibt hiervon unberührt. Die Wiedergabe des Beitrags von Dr. Heinz Jaeger Erfolgt mit freundlicher Genehmigung der Deutschen Gesellschaft für Post und Telekommunikation, Frankfurt.

Band 5 der Schriftenreihe zur Geschichte der Philatelie in Deutschland, hrsg. vom Consilium Philatelicum im Bund Deutscher Philatelisten e.V.

Redaktionsleitung: Wolfgang Maassen
Lektorat: Peter Fischer
Layout-Gestaltung: Phil*Creativ GmbH, Verlag & Agentur, Schwalmtal

Der Druck dieser Schrift wurde ermöglicht durch die Stiftung zur Förderung der Philatelie und Postgeschichte, Bonn.

END

Author (14pt)

Title

[Title in original language]

Bibliographic details

(Notes)

Translation by Translator for Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

? 2021

TITLE (14pt)

END

Max Bloch

The Philatelic literature of the year 1919.

[Die philatelistische literatur des jahres 1919:]

Weltpost-Echo, January 1920, Issue 1, pp.114-115 & Issue 2, p.166.

The year 1919 finally brought positive growth to German philatelic literature after several years of stagnation.

As early as January, through the edition of the handbook of the German philatelic literature, which was published in recent years as a supplement to the “Philatelist” Dresden, book literature became an indispensable work for every literary lover and every special collector. Unfortunately, it only extends to book literature and not to newspaper literature. I have a suggestion in this regard in a lecture that has also been printed in “Briefmarken-smaller” Vienna and I have received some suggestions and offers for cooperation in this regard. I'll come back to this in one of the next issues.

The German war stamps - a now closed collecting area - have found three people to work with them. First, Dipl. Ing. Richter published “The German War Stamps in their Varieties and Variants”, then Bütow's “German War Stamps Special Catalog” and, finally, recently by Dr. Stenger “The German war stamps and war stationery”. The most important of these three writings is undoubtedly the last mentioned by Dr. Stenger, which we discussed in our last issue.

M. Stein published “Die Marken der Warschauer Stadtpost” in the new Philatelisten-Verlag von Edmund Stein, Potsdam, and “Altbrasilien” in the same publisher from Consul General E. Heinz. It seems that the publishing house has set itself a high goal, so far it is unmistakably on the way to achieving this goal, because everything we have seen so far has been first class in execution and content. From Berlin we received “The postal stationery for the German protected areas as well as for the German post offices abroad and for the areas occupied during the World War”. By D. F. Kalckhoff. This, with the well-known expertise and thoroughness of this outstanding German philatelist and philatelic. The work created by the writer is a great aid to the small community of postal stationery collectors, especially now in the mustard-free period, and a guide to such a field for collectors who are looking for a still cheap specialty.

In October 1919, Dr. Josef Haymann and Joh. Wilh. Stindt: "70 years. History of the Bavarian Postage Stamps ". Due to the regulations and postal files, this is a very carefully edited catalog, rich in interesting facts, unfortunately without taking into account the differences in watermarks.

Vienna brought us two little books, one of a humorous kind: J. Dörtler "Prodromuseiner Monographie der Oest. Newspaper stamp from the year 1867 ", which is a very successful satire on the specialist, and by Josef Baumgarten: " Westukraina "(My Travel Experience), which deals with the price evaluation of the western Ukrainian stamps, which are quite interesting but also quite disreputable for the average collector .

An article by Alexander Bungerz also appeared in the reprint: "The stamp newspapers of Germany and Austria-Hungary in the war years 1914-1918", and also a few issues in the publishing house of the "Small Collectors Week", among others Alexander Bungerz "How to treat broadcasts" and "Die Handstempelausgabe von Libau" (but I haven't seen it yet).

In 1919 we had two address books: R. Rohrs: "German Philatelist Address Book 1920" and by Paula Schmoll: "International Postage Stamp Collector Address Book 1919-1920", which we a. a. o. discuss in more detail.

In 1919, the catalog editors finally helped out of the terrible inconvenience of having to work without a valuer. After five years of peuse, the mustard catalog appeared again - but only as a European part, Michel came as usual, and between two editions, of which the second is only available to us today. In addition, Michel published a war stamp catalog and Dr. Weinert, Pozxony, Umsturzmarke-catalog - we haven't received the former until today.

I would also like to mention the war stamp catalog by Kümin-Benl, which was published in Switzerland in the German language.

The German trade press has been greatly enriched. In Germany, the "Rundschau für stamp collectors and dealers" appeared in Cölleda, the Hennig-Weimar company publishes its "Philatelic Messages" as a monthly newspaper.

German Austria has new releases: "Briefmarken-Börse, Vienna. German-Austrian stamp newspaper, Vienna. International exchange address list, Innsbruck. The post stamp, Vienna. Universum-Briefmarken-Journal, Vienna, Wiener Sport-Tagblatt, Vienna.

In Czechoslovakia, the following new specialist newspapers appear in German:

Brno Stamp Newspaper, Brno. Collectors' point, Franzensbad, Weltpost-Echo, Teplitz-Schöau.

The change in the editorial team at the Philatelist, Dresden (Hofrat Doenges for Wallner), Illustr. Briefmarken-Journal (Hohnert instead of D. Kroeger) and Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung (d. Kroeger instead of Kroetzsch).

Phila Historica
March 2013 Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2020

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

Current

pp.1-2
Wolfgang Maassen: Editorial.

Dear readers, dear friends of philatelic history and literature!

This first editorial was created at the turn of the year 2012/2013 in the shadow of the Egyptian pyramids, high up on the deck of a ship where we had chosen to think in peace - protected from the Internet and emails - and to do some work in bright, warm sunlight.

I do not emphasize this in order to emphasize the peculiarity of the holiday destination, but only to illustrate this project of a new magazine. Because Phila Historica is and is different, not only produced, but also distributed. Digital, wherever in the world, free and freely available for everyone.

I had the idea for a long time, but I do not hide that I have been influenced by Brian Birch and other role models. Making such a magazine with such a focus simply resulted from experience. Normal consumer magazines like to include a philatelic history article on certain occasions and anniversaries, but usually only in the length that is appropriate for the object and thus predetermined. As is well known, the enthusiasm for the history of philately, even more for the history of literature, is limited, so it only interests a small clientele. To date, there have been no special journals for precisely these circles of interest, although there are certain thematic articles in certain papers (e.g. the Philatelic Literature Review in the USA or the Philatelic Journalist of the AIJP).

A second was added: Especially with the publication of numerous of my own philatelic historical works, I increasingly came into contact with like-minded people at home and abroad, got to know unique libraries and literature collectors and valued their tremendous knowledge. But everyone lacked a kind of communication medium in which they see a kind of “home”, in which they can communicate, in which articles and studies of this kind can be read.

One may object that the Internet offers formidable possibilities and endless space for this. That is true, although my own experience with websites - such as the IPHLA 2012 Mainz - showed how little even such informative pages are read. It seemed to me that the path of a primarily digital magazine that could be conveniently downloaded and/or emailed made more sense.

At the time this editorial was drafted, the concept of the paper was still in development and this should remain so for some time, because there are hardly any rigid, inflexible limits. The problem of the amount of data has to be solved, if necessary with download notices or with several e-mails, there is no obligation to appear on certain dates as well as a limitation of the scope.

Perhaps two, three, four or more issues will appear in a year, whether they have 50, 100, 150 or more pages. Ultimately, it is a question of my own available time and my own research progress, but also of the participation and enthusiasm of third parties.

This magazine is open to everyone for publication. It is a magazine that is published in Germany, but ultimately also read internationally. Abroad in particular, valuable articles appear in various specialist journals that not everyone knows and that not everyone has the opportunity to obtain. For this reason, not only are bibliographical references given, but authors from other countries are also cordially invited to publish their contributions in this sheet in the original language too, be it in English, French, Italian, Spanish or Portuguese. Other languages would also be conceivable, although I will not provide any translations into the German language unless the author or a translator who feels called to provide them does.

True internationality is expressed in recognition and respect for the performance of third parties, regardless of the respective language. Over the years I have had the unique opportunity to get to know great philatelists, literary figures and philatelic historians all over the world and I can only express my heartfelt thanks for this and perhaps return a little of what you have given me with this magazine I have given back.

So while reading I wish you this inner joy and satisfaction that can be achieved with increasing knowledge and new knowledge. Choose what you like, read what you enjoy, tell others, because then the little snowball can turn into an avalanche!

Until next time.

yours

Wolfgang Maassen

p.3

Contents.

pp.4-8

Wolfgang Maassen: Insights into current research projects.

pp.9-27

Wolfgang Maassen: IPHLA 2012 Mainz - Visitor criticism a personal statement.

Market and Market Prices

pp.28-33

Wolfgang Maassen: Market report.

pp.34-39

Wolfgang Maassen: Looking back at a “special” Special auction at Schwanke in Hamburg.

pp.40-44

Wolfgang Maassen: Edition d’Or - Two new volumes, a special edition and a Super-Auction.

History of Philately

pp.45-58

Wolfgang Maassen: Faber unlimited - New facts about the founder of the first German philatelic society.

pp.59-62

Wolfgang Maassen: The dream of the first world association of clubs.

pp.63-71

Wolfgang Maassen: Legends of philately; the “Saxony 3 pfennigs sheet”.

p.72

Wolfgang Maassen: The Oldest Jury photography in the world.

pp.73-77

Wolfgang Maassen: The search for an irrelevant (?) Letter (M.) Gilbert.

pp.78-90

Prof. Richard Zimmerl: 125 years of philately in Austria.

(Originally published in Schweizer Briefmarken Zeitung, 2013, Issues 1 & 2.)

pp.91-93

Peter Fischer: Miscellaneous. On the history of organized philately in the SBZ (Soviet Occupation Zone) and DDR (German Democratic Republic).

(Originally published in Zentralverordnungsblatt, Official organ of the German Economic Commission and its main administrations as well as the German administrations for home affairs, justice and popular education, No. 7 of 10th February 1949, pages 67-68.)

pp.94-99

Michael Ullrich: Siegfried Simon. A pioneer of Baden philately.

(Supplement to the circular of the ArGe Baden No. 69, December 1971 Little postal workers from the Rastatt district by Kurt Haagen, Gaggenau).

History of Literature

pp.100-106

Wolfgang Maassen: Small but nice ... Selected aspects of philatelic literature in Switzerland.

pp.107-119

Wolfgang Maassen: A visit to the Diena Library in Rome.

Reviews, Reports/Minutes, Lists, Attachments, other

pp.120-123

Wolfgang Maassen: Seen elsewhere ...

pp.124-145

Wolfgang Maassen: Read for you ...

pp.146-147

Robert Binner: Extract from the 2012 annual report of the Munich Philatelic Library.

pp.148-160

Robert Binner & Wolfgang Maassen: New literature. / New library acquisitions.

Attachment

pp.161-166

Wolfgang Maassen: Germany, its postage stamp designers.

pp.167-178

BDPh / Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History: IPHLA 2012 Mainz
- Distribution of book entries to the philatelic libraries.

Preview/Imprint

p.179

Preview [of Phila Historica 2, May/June 2013].

p.[180]

Publisher.

END

Phila Historica
May 2013, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2020

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

Current

pp.1-3

Wolfgang Maassen: Editorial.

Dear readers,

In the meantime, more than 600 prospective customers have registered to purchase this new digital magazine. It has been downloaded more than 1,000 times in Interest. And this worldwide! I am pleased with this result within a few months of the dissemination as well as the noticeably growing acceptance and the offers of cooperation that were made to me. Apparently, this new specialist journal fills certain gaps that others have so far not been able to compensate.

If the volume of data is not a problem for the majority of the recipients, this is probably the size of the magazine, i.e. the number of pages. Suggestions, we like to send the issues monthly, so more often, I cannot, because this puts me under a deadline of which I just wanted to be free. Of course, nobody can and does not want to read 200 pages in a row. That's not what this magazine is for. It has different focuses and everyone should first pick out what is of particular interest to them.

I myself would simply like to offer something to different interests: I would like to be a mouthpiece for libraries, offer less well-known to bibliophiles, open charming chapters from the history of philately, but also record laudations, honors or obituaries in a more extensive form than Trade journals of the usual printed type is possible and feasible. All of this is part of the history of philately. In this respect, Phila Historica is deliberately planned as a "documentation archive" and we will prepare more and more material for it in the coming time. A first part of an image catalog from the WM-Photo-Archive now appears with a selection of photos that have accumulated over the years. It is usable for everyone who is interested. And if you don't care, you don't have to download it. It is important to me that all of this is recorded, documented and saved. For further research, for philatelic historical works, be it in article or book form, for the future of philately, which should know its history.

A few more comments about the picture catalog from the WM-Archive: In this issue of Phila Historica only the short form appears, the picture numbers of the first 500 digitized photos along with picture subtitles, insofar as these had to be created. In a series of images, people can no longer be identified today. Notes on this are welcome at any time. In the next issues of the magazine, another 500 images will be indexed in this way, so that in a few years you will get a useful overview of what is available in the WM-Archive. In the abridged version only a few appear, a complete version, in which each photo is shown, i.e. a correct picture catalog. This will be delivered as a separate system in a few weeks and of course only needs to be downloaded by those who may have a use.

Why this division? This is due solely to the scope and effort of the creation. Because the “short version” for 500 pictures already has almost 20 pages, the complete list should be a multiple. In the full version a work of several thousand pages will be created in this way. But the short lists already offer the advantage of pdf search, e.g. by name, by events, by years, etc. So if you need pictures later, you can find them here.

This time-consuming work is a preliminary step to a later Internet database, which I had once promised to the BDPh (which, incidentally, is already programmed in). But the upload times per picture were so annoyingly slow for me that I initially refrained from this idea. In addition, there is, in my opinion, the problem of copyright and usage rights that has not yet been satisfactorily resolved. To be more precise, one should actually realise that the door to abuse on the Internet is still open.

Since the captions (subtitles) of the pictures can actually only be done by myself, this is the main work that I can do anywhere in the world - especially when I'm on the go - but not uploads, e.g. In Spain, Internet connections in small towns are still painfully slow. It is all a question of time and resources. Therefore I ask potential users for patience, - Rome was not built in a day.

The noticeable demand for Phila Historica also encourages me to continue along this path, even to expand it. This is pure motivation that is worth all the effort! In addition to specialist articles by various authors, including one from my friend and colleague Brian Birch from England, we were also able to continue the sections: on new entries, book reviews, on market and market developments and much more. At the end of April we simply broke up, knowing what is already there or at the final stage of processing is already enough for another edition. I do not promise that every issue of Phila Historica will be as extensive as the first two, probably because there is enough material to work with. The thematic field is almost endless.

In issue 3/2013 you can expect a revised version of the list of German graphic artists published for the first time in issue 1/2013. The version published there was edited by Lothar Apelt, whom I would like to thank for this. Also some other readers who sent me additions and corrections. Several readers had - quite rightly - noted that this list only contained the graphic artists of the FRG, not those of the GDR. This is true and certainly a deficit, which I cannot fix myself due to time constraints. In this respect, I am pleased that Alfred Peter, the valued colleague and expert in the field of GDR stamp issues, has agreed to compensate for this shortcoming. In the foreseeable future, he will make a more extensive contribution to this. Personally, it should be noted that this was my little hope: that others would feel addressed and would like to work. Nothing better can happen to all of us than that no-one does everything or even manages.

In a few weeks I will retreat to a main summer break, which I will spend in peace with my library and many manuscripts as I have been used to for a long time. We will be reading each other again by the end of August 2013 with the third edition of this year.

With best regards

Yours

Wolfgang Maassen

p.4

Contents.

pp.5-12

Wolfgang Maassen: News from research and current affairs.

pp.13-14

Foundation for the Promotion of Philately, Switzerland: Literature competition of the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately 2012.

pp.15-16

General meeting of the Philatelic Library Hamburg e.V. 2013.

pp.17-19

Wolfgang Maassen: In memory of a great philatelist: Mr. Albert Louis.

pp.20-23

Dr. Hans-Karl Penning: Köhler Prize 2013: Laudation for Florian Berger.

Readers Write

pp.24-28

Reader's reports on number 1/2013.

Market and Market Prices

pp.29-31

Wolfgang Maassen: Market mirror.

History of Philately

pp.32-48

Wolfgang Maassen: A clever marketing idea: Rarity facsimiles and originals as supplements of the Gebr. Senf in the "Illustrierten Briefmarken-Journal" 1884.

pp.49-56

Wolfgang Maassen: The idea of the first exhibition medals.

pp.57-63

Wolfgang Maassen: Studies on the history of trade: The IPHV Berlin.

pp.64-70

Heinrich Mimberg: The "Hessen Collection" of Dr. Wilhelm Berchermann.

pp.71-78

Wolfgang Maassen: Friendship across borders and continents. The merit of Dr. Franz Kalckhoff and Dr. Herbert Munk.

(After the 125th Anniversary Conference, this article was available in English without the pictures.)

pp.79-88

Peter Fischer: Miscellany from the history of organized philately in SBZ And GDR (2). The Institute for Philately in Cottbus.

History of Literature

pp.89-99

Brian Birch: Which was the first magazine devoted to stamp collecting. (In English)

pp.100-106

Wolfgang Maassen: An attempt at worldwide literary recording in philately. Part I: A historical review 100.

pp.107-112

Wolfgang Maassen: An attempt at worldwide literary recording in philately. Part: II: The loss of uniqueness?

pp.113-127

Wolfgang Maassen: Hugo Kröttsch and his dream of a permanent album.

pp.128-130

Rudolf Buschhaus: "Philatelic Literature Collector" - a largely unknown Maine Journal 1896-1900.

pp.131-134

Wolfgang Maassen: An unknown Schwaneberger catalogue.

pp.135-149

Gerd H. Hövelmann: Ernst M. Cohn's "Post-historical test method". A critical view of linguistic-stylistic objections to the correctness of the so-called "Vineta Letter" (1901).

pp.150-155

Hans Schwarz: 125 years of the SBZ - a success story for philatelic Literatur.

pp.156-211

Hans-Jürgen Dobiatt: The collection area of Old Germany in auction catalogs. So-called "Name Sales".

Reviews, Reports/Minutes, Lists, Attachments, other

pp.212-213

Wolfgang Maassen: Seen Elsewhere ...

pp.214-222

Wolfgang Maassen: Read for you.

pp.223-231

Robert Binner / Wolfgang Maassen: New literature • New library acquisitions.

pp.232-250

Wolfgang Maassen: Inventory of the WM-Photo-Archive Part I.

p.251

Preview [of Phila Historica 3, August/September 2013].

p.[252]

Publisher.

END

Phila Historica
August 2013, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2020

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

Current

pp.1-2

Wolfgang Maassen: Editorial.

Dear readers,

Some things are not easy to handle in summer, especially when outside temperatures clearly exceed 30 degrees. Then your own motivation can reach its limits. The upcoming philatelic autumn takes little account of it and so it means working in heat or rain, so that literary novelties can be presented in a few months.

This third edition informs you about some current projects on the history of philately and literature. Current includes Dr. Hans-Karl Penning's contribution Philatelic Future Chances of an Analog Hobby in Digital Time. This lecture was given by Penning at the beginning of July 2013 on the 135th anniversary of the Frankfurt Stamp Association of 1878. It happened by coincidence that this lecture fits perfectly with a philatelic-historical documentation of the "early private postal stationery ..." of this association in the 19th century. Past, present and hopefully also a future under one roof: that gives hope!

You will find significant contributions to the history of philately. Again - but with completely new insights - on Hugo Krötzsch and his publishing company, on Alphons Bruck from Luxembourg, who emigrated to Brazil, and on his unique first stamp album from Brazil, on Georg Zechmeyer, perhaps the largest stamp wholesaler of the early years of German philately, to John Murray Bartels, also an emigrant who moved to the USA and - last but not least - to Richard Gast and Ernst Petritz.

Market - this rubric can also have historical accents, as already mentioned with the aforementioned names (these were all dealers!). Historically we document the first auction of the Deutsche Reichpost in 1910 ("Hannover-Fund") thanks to new literary finds, but also an early literature auction, namely the auction catalog for the Herbert Clark library in 1924, for which I found a small, little-known brochure by Alexander Bungerz.

As is well known, the Heinrich Köhler auction house celebrates its centenary in 2013. Without repeating the story of Heinrich Köhler and his descendants here (I am currently finishing my work on a book that will be published in autumn), I have picked out a special topic from Köhler: “You shouldn’t expertise!” What he meant and what was behind it - read for yourself!

Michael Ullrich fits in well with a historical counterfeiting process that even has a family connection.

Finally there are some updates in the appendices: Lothar Apelt revised my list Germany, your stamp designers, for which I thank him very much. The IPHLA book distribution list can now also be supplied in its final form Phila Historica has set itself the task of documenting what is often neglected in other places. For example, honors awarded to deserving philatelists. This may not be of interest to one or the other, but such laudations should be kept in one place for the future so that they are not forgotten. That is why I am pleased that the foundations - be it in Switzerland or in Germany - but also the major philatelic libraries are so committed. Consider everyone - but please in a positive sense - this magazine as the “garbage can of the history of philately”, in which everything that does not have to be thrown away but has to be kept, is put. The fact that this often takes many years to develop its explosive nature and that completely new insights and connections can be derived from it is what inspires this work.

Of course, we also continued to work on the sections you already know (book reviews, read from others, newcomers, etc.) - as best we could. Some things had to be postponed for the time being, but this does not mean that they have been canceled. This edition is always extensive.

With this in mind, I wish you all a nice late summer time and a pleasant autumn. If everything goes well, a fourth edition of Phila Historica will appear by December. Exciting topics have already been announced or are in progress, e.g. of the counterfeiters Reinhard Krippner and Rudolf Siegel, perhaps also - if Peter Garcarek makes it in time - a really impressive study of the Zschiesche family.

yours

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.4-24

Wolfgang Maassen: Are catalog number systems protected by copyright?

pp.25-38

Dr. Hans-Karl Penning: Philately - Opportunities for an analog hobby in digital time.

pp.39-43

René Bracher: Foundation for the Promotion of Philately (Switzerland); Annual report and accounts 2012.

pp.44-48

Robert Binner: Impressions from the international exhibition in Melbourne from 10-15 May 2013.

pp.49-56

Wolfgang Maassen: News from research and current affairs.

pp.57-65

Philatelic honours in spring 2013.

Market and Market Prices

pp.66-80

Alexander Bungerz (comments by W. Maassen): The auction of the library of Herbert Clark.

The author is unsure whether there is even a reader to whom the name of Herbert Clark means anything. The name of this Englishman was rather unknown to him. At that time, Alexander Bungerz had already written about this library and its sale. But if you take a closer look at the actual date of the small brochure (1924) and the name of the publisher (Verlag des Philatelistische Bücherwurm, Berlin), you will know why this deficit situation could arise. 1924 was - even if the peak of German inflation was over and a new currency was here - not exactly the year in which such a brochure could enjoy strong demand. Second: Who was interested in such a special topic at the time?

The print run does not appear in the booklet, but it must have been small. There is a copy in the Philatelic Library in Munich, but it can only be referred to in the reading room. The author acquired one when the Röhm Library was sold in 2012. There are two reasons for reproducing this in full text - not as a facsimile: On the one hand, it fits well in the "Market heading", the sales prices obtained in 1924 make it clear what was being sought or was less in demand. Second, they show what was still available at that time in a well-known private library, for example.

Some people may be mourned afterwards today, but life is always the sum of missed opportunities! What remains is the memory, the documentation. That was exactly the intention.

The auction of the library of Herbert Clark

by Alexander Bungerz, Berlin 1924

Since the sale of Alfred Smith's large library in 1916-18, as far as I know, no major library in England has been sold until H. R. Harmer, the well-known auction house, auctioned the Clark Library on February 18 and 19, 1924. The catalogue has 31 pages and 553 lots, including works owned by E. Heginbottom. In itself the number of lots is not very large, but the number is deceptive, since very many lots comprise a number of works, an arrangement which does not exactly make it easy to communicate the contents and results.

The guidelines according to which the catalogue is drawn up have remained hidden from me, in spite of diligent study, there is apparently no systematics, neither according to alphabetical, chronological or bibliophile page; The individual papers, books, and lots are lined up randomly. Even a division of the different language groups is missing, so that it is quite difficult and in any case time-consuming to find your way around the catalogue. A really fruitful and instructive review is almost impossible for these reasons, nevertheless I would like to try to communicate at least something about the content and the results.

Some of the lots have achieved considerable sums, even if for us Germans, who are used to expecting high numbers, the results may often be disappointing. But we must bear in mind that at the time the auction was taking place, English stamp auctions were also getting low prices in our terms. Apparently the desire and power to buy has also decreased in England. In order not to make the list too long, I only mentioned the lots below, which brought in 1 pound and more. Prices achieved in brackets at the end.

Translator's note: The list follows but is mostly in English or the original language of the book and doesn't need translating.

[Commentary by the author]

The above list shows that real rarities, some correspondingly, some well below their value, were auctioned off. Lot 544, the Japan work, of which no other copy in the present edition is known, reached the highest price for £15.10 shillings. Then you can see that in England great value is placed on the finest preservation and availability of all covers, inserts, etc.; the ideal is the completely uncirculated, preferably not yet cut copy; bibliophile interests come into play, not study purposes. Our German book lovers, who often have totally neglected works, should use the results of the Clark auction for learning and buy books and newspapers as well as postage stamps, if possible only in the finest condition. It is not just the number and type of library works that make them valuable, but their preservation even more. So anyone who not only collects philatelic literature for pure study, but also does not want to experience disappointment in the event of a later sale, has been demanding in the selection of his collector's items!

It appears that individual works have already been sold before the auction so are missing e.g. B. Moritz Ruhl, "Der Briefmarkenfreund" (1864), which was available in the library. Unless it was one that, as a German work of insignificant size, was hidden undetected under a lot of manuals.

Almost nothing is represented in German works, newspapers and books, although it can be assumed that German ones were also represented in the compiled lots which contained foreign-language papers. In any case, German rarities apart from lot 462 were obviously not included in the Clark library.

An afterword by the editor

When you read such reviews, you are impressed. For example, from the volumes of magazines and monographs to catalogues and price lists that were contained in this library. Much of it would be very expensive to purchase individually, but best as collective lots. Some things would certainly bid high, especially since - let's just take the publications by Moens and Maury once - there are designated "Freaks" that collect and value the same work in every different version, be it printed on different papers or paper colors and seek to acquire them. The impeccable condition and quality of the titles, particularly in the case of magazines, was certainly also impressive - which the auction house often emphasized.

In this library at that time there was an endless abundance of rarities, including some, without getting rid of the feeling that the auction house did not know how to assess them correctly.

The question, however - from today's perspective - remains how one should evaluate the prices achieved at that time. The author is not an expert on historical currency relations, but he can at least give some clues along the way. It quickly turns out that some things were anything but cheap at the time.

First of all, the question to be answered is what was the relationship between the British pound and the (gold) mark? Figures are known for 1913 - and that should have also applied to 1924, when a stable new currency was introduced again - one British pound was equivalent to around 20.43 marks, i.e. around 20 gold marks.

That still doesn't sound like a lot. Only when you put such a number in relation to the purchasing power or earnings at that time, then you gain more accurate ideas of what amount today would correspond to this amount in terms of value.

At that time an unskilled worker was earning 27 marks a week, from which, considering the working hours at the time, one could deduce that he earned a little more than his British pound per week or around 5 pounds a month. What could he buy for it back then? If you compare the purchasing power of this amount, it was then - depending on the property - five to ten times what it is today. So if our current euro had at that time an equivalent purchasing power. Given today's purchase value, a British pound at that time would probably be comparable to around 100 to 150 euros in today's period.

In view of such considerations, the prices obtained at the time still seem very low to us. The hammer prices at that time would bring many times more today and have already achieved this 20 or more years ago. Whether one can therefore in turn conclude from this that philatelic literature is more in demand than it was back then is doubtful. The reason is more likely to be seen in the fact that too large a wealth of rarities came onto the market at once with the Clark library, which - at that time - overwhelmed the manageable number of interested parties. In Germany in particular, another world war destroyed irretrievable philatelic treasures or damaged many things through these and other catastrophes, so that the local question rose again. Professional philatelists and literary dealers are of the opinion, however, that the prices for so-called "standard goods" in literature have fallen sharply in recent years; much can hardly be bought anymore. But if a private library like that of Herbert Clark were to be sold again, the author is certain that it would achieve the highest level of attention - and undoubtedly also much higher prices - in the market.

pp.81-91

Market Notes: Results of the 340th Schwanke auction 19-20 April 2013.

History of Philately

pp.92-96

Wolfgang Maassen: An inconspicuous form with the character of revelation: Early advertising by Alfred Moschkau.

pp.97-108

Wolfgang Maassen: The world's first "approval book"?

pp.109-111

Wolfgang Maassen: From the history of trade: the Bethel stamp office.

pp.112-115

Wolfgang Maassen: Studies on the history of the trade: The “Bartels Fund”.

pp.116-151

Wolfgang Maassen & Hartmut Flöter: A stamp auction at the Reichspostamt 1910.

pp.152-163

Hansmichael Krug: The early private postal stationery of the Verein für Postage stamp knowledge 1878. e. V. Frankfurt a. Main.

pp.164-167

Michael Ullrich: A forger in Karlsruhe in 1889. How Philately and Family History Combine.

pp.168-171

Heinrich Mimberg: A postcard tells a story or: The great love of a life!

pp.172-177

Wolfgang Maassen: “You shouldn’t expertise!” A poem by Heinrich Köhler (1925).

pp.178-193

Wolfgang Maassen: A “dazzling” personality of the early German stamp trade: Georg Zechmeyer.

pp.194-219

Wolfgang Maassen: Hugo Krötzch - an important publisher of German philately.

pp.220-231

Wolfgang Maassen: Friedemann-Petritz-Gast > Röhm. A little reminder.

pp.232-252

Wolfgang Maassen: Alphons Bruck - a pioneer dealer in Brazil.

Reviews, Lists, Attachments, other

pp.253-261

Wolfgang Maassen: Read for you.

pp.262-263

Wolfgang Maassen: Seen in others.

pp.264-270

Wolfgang Maassen: Germany, your stamp designers! (New version).

New Entries

pp.271-286

New entries.

pp.287-299

BDPh: Distribution of publications by IPHLA 2012 Mainz.

p.300

Preview [of Phila Historica 4, November/December 2013].

p.[301]

Publisher.

END

Phila Historica
November 2013, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2020

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

Editorial

Dear reader of PHILA HISTORICA,

It has been known for a long time how close my weekly appointments are from September to mid-December 2013. Everything was properly scheduled and well prepared. All topics, elaborations, lectures and PP files were conceived, translated and designed in the “philatelic free” summer. That was the plan. The reality turned out very differently. On the one hand, the visit for a visa to ROSSICA in Moscow at the end of September took days (more precisely, one could say weeks) grueling hours, ultimately the visa even had to be picked up in Frankfurt on the last day before departure (and cost just one person 145 euros each, not to mention travel costs of approx. 250 euros), on the other hand, the upcoming BRASILIANA brought a dramatic scenario that both the BDPh office, me and, last but not least, the head of the group tour of ArGe Brazil, Walter Bernatek, caused overemployment for at least seven days.

It was thus foreseeable that from mid-October “nothing worked” and that nothing would be possible after that either. For this very reason, this issue appears earlier than planned. Even to a lesser extent than actually intended. Even though the topics and content are quite presentable even this time, both in terms of quantity and quality.

Allow me to briefly mention a few of the contributions. First of all, I would like to thank Peter Baer, who brings us closer to Phillip Kosack with some unknown facts, Dr. Winfried Leist, who can do the same for Alexander Treichel, one of the first philatelists in Germany, but also Peter Fischer, who is continuing his series on what is undoubtedly the most early history of GDR philately. Hans-Jürgen Dobiak kept his list of “name sales” and the other already common categories (book reviews, read by others, etc.) are continued. In the “Market” area, the Schwanke auction house contributed readable facts about the last major literature auction, for the results of which the Hamburg house can only be congratulated.

I myself have dealt with a number of topics over the years, some of which I presented briefly at a symposium of the Consilium Philatelicum in August. On the one hand, there is a lecture on Siegfried Ascher, who was known about during his life and times but little is known to this day. Two companies are celebrating their centenary this year: On the one hand, a company founded by Karl Hennig in Weimar in 1913, and on the other, the Heinrich Köhler company in Wiesbaden. A report by Köhler from 1926, which is completely unknown to this day, appears on the latter, showing the background to the events surrounding the forger and auctioneer Rudolf Siegel. This first publication in particular gives me pleasure, as it truly offers new insights. The same applies to the article about Reinhard Krippner, for which I want to publish a book in the coming year (which will then, however, be much more extensive because a previously unknown fund of Krippner forgeries is also being published for the first time).

The topic of the Brazilian-German colonist letters, which can be presented here in an updated form, is more interesting in terms of postal history. In terms of content, it would have fit in well with Philatelie, however, in terms of size, this was not an option, especially since this magazine published a shorter treatise on it years ago.

I would like to highlight one more contribution: the one about the Generalanzeiger für Philatelie and about Christian Sauerland. This is for a special occasion, as I keep learning that legends are really long-lasting. When the newly elected President of the BDPh, Uwe Decker, said in his welcoming address to the 113th German Philatelist's Day on October 13, 2013, that the first Philatelist's Day had taken place in Dresden in 1872, when there were only two participants, once more it was clear to me how long completely wrong statements in philatelic circles - hardly contradicted due to a lack of better knowledge - can persist. Of course, there was no first German Philatelist's Day in Dresden in 1872, but the first verifiable general assembly of the former association in Dresden, which was headed by Alfred Moschkau! If anything, Decker's note would have suited the first "German Philatelist's Congress" convened by Louis May in Lübeck on July 14, 1872, which was actually a kind of German Philatelist's Day, at which 30 or more people were present.

For my part, the quiet criticism may also be aimed at those who, instead of the existing specialist literature of recent times, always use Wikipedia as a source of wisdom, claiming that the Generalanzeiger für Philatelie was the first advertising paper in the world. This is just as clearly not true as I show in detail. It wasn't the first, others preceded it. But it was certainly the most important and the longest existing; it only fell victim to "politics" in the middle of the 20th century.

The next issue of Phila Historica is expected to appear in March 2014. Please note that the free downloads of all issues from 2013 on the Phil * Creativ website will end at the end of 2013. The 2013 editions will then only be available digitally on CD, which will be offered for a fee from 2014. Everyone had and still has the opportunity to download these first four issues free of charge until December 31, 2013, but we cannot increase the cost-intensive traffic indefinitely and keep individual issues available for years. All subscribers to Phila Historica were sent initial information about the possibility of purchasing a hardcover annual volume of all issues published in 2013 using digital printing, in which the four issues are then reproduced in black and white. The estimated costs are around 60 euros. More details and then order forms will be sent to interested parties. The fact that over 30 interested parties have already submitted their request for a purchase shows me that so many people want me to do such a thing for them.

As in general, the reactions are still very positive. So I welcome the numerous appreciative letters that my "pleasure project" caused. That makes me happy and motivates me to keep going. Two larger studies have been announced, but could not be submitted in time this time: Dr. Kiepe and his work on the Sammlerverband during the 1930s and Peter Garcarek's elaboration on the Zschiesche family and their involvement in and for philately. Both promise extremely exciting information and will certainly provide valuable enrichment for research on philatelic history. The editorial deadline for the March issue is the end of January 2014.

Allow me - last but not least - to invite you once more to MONACOPHIL, and to the special exhibition there on international philatelic literature of the 19th century. The big “bibliophiles” of this world (I am not one of them) will be present there, also at a symposium of the AIJP, and from December 4th the special catalogue will be available, which I already outlined in the last issue. For 60 euros a work that every literature lover who collects literature of the time simply has to have. Not because I wrote it mainly, but because it provides the knowledge of the era in a form that can hardly be imitated with images that have never been seen before.

Looking ahead, I dare to announce that in Phila Historica 1/2014 I will present a bibliography of international philatelic literature that offers me a kind of “check-off list”, according to which I have been trying for years to collect the writings of the 19th century, which have become rare. The biggest “treasure” that I still need to evaluate over a long period of time is a notebook, a so-called “private copy book” from the Senf brothers, which I - although I have apparently had it for years - only now discovered in boxes that have not yet been cleared out. It contains the important correspondence of the Senf brothers from 1886-1891, a fund of copied original letters from the former Leipzig house, which has not yet been cataloged. Further topics will be found, knowing the breadth of philatelic-historical research is immeasurable.

So get through the winter and into the new year safely. We’ll meet again!

Best regards
yours
Wolfgang Maassen

CONTENTS

pp.1-3
Wolfgang Maassen: Editorial.

History of Philately

pp.5-23
Wolfgang Maassen: The German immigration to Brazil. Examples of Colonists and Colonist’s Letters of the 19th Century.

pp.24-26
Winfried Leist: Early collector’s mail. From the Alexander Treichel correspondence. With an addendum to his biography.

pp.27-57
Wolfgang Maassen: Emil Reinhard Krippner. Musician, artist and counterfeiter.

pp.58-71
Peter Baer: Philipp Kosack, Berlin - 100 years ago a world-famous address.

pp.72-86

Wolfgang Maassen: From Weimar via Hamburg to Santo Domingo: 100 years of Briefmarkenhaus Karl Hennig.

pp.87-88

Wolfgang Maassen: The Siegel case. Finally after almost 90 years light at the end of the tunnel.

pp.89-92

Alexander Leo: The Siegel Forgeries.

pp.93-113

About Rudolf Siegel's counterfeiting. An expert opinion by Heinrich Köhler dated February 18, 1926.

pp.114-126

Wolfgang Massen:Forced emigration during the Third Reich.

pp.127-133

Peter Fischer: Miscellany from the history of organized philately in Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung And GDR (3) - It happened at the time that his bid ran out (Ordinance of 12 January 1949).

History of Literature

pp.134-148

Wolfgang Maassen: Lies have long legs. Mistakes too. Incorrect assessment of the "Generalanzeigers für Philatelie".

pp.149-166

Hans-Jürgen Dobiatt: The collecting area German Reich and regions in the auction catalogs - so-called "Name Sales".

Market and Market Prices

pp.167-200

Wolfgang Massen: 342nd Schwanke auction Hamburg, 29th August 2013. Literature and catalogues.

pp.201-205

Wolfgang Maassen: Market mirror.

Reviews, Lists, Notes, Other

pp.206-215

New issues.

pp.216-227

For you to read!

pp.228-247

Inventory of the WM-Photo Archive. (Part 2)

p.[248]

Publisher.

END

Phila Historica
March 2014, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2020

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-3

Editorial.

Wolfgang Maassen

Dear readers,

the editorial is always the last contribution that I write before the completion of a new edition. Only then will you have an overview of what has happened and what has happened in the past few months. This time it was really not a little. Allow me to briefly draw attention to some very gratifying events.

MonacoPhil in December 2013 offered a good opportunity to unite literature lovers from all over the world. It was a big surprise for me personally that the CG Award for the best digital appearance was given to Phila Historica. This is even combined with a cash bonus! This makes it easier to shoulder the rather expensive typesetting costs, which added up to almost 1,000 pages in the first year of publication.

In the meantime, the announced digitally printed annual volume could also be delivered as a one-volume hardcover edition. Around 20 libraries in Germany and abroad received this free of charge thanks to the support of the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History. The other pre-orderers were able to find this annual volume at a special price of 60 euros. A few copies are still available at a price of 85 euros - then it is out of stock. I sincerely thank you for the friendly reactions I received from the readers. We want to see if we can do this again in a year.

What always impresses and even touches me is the increasing support that we also get from the authors. In this issue you will find some of Brian Birch's specialist articles, which we reproduce in the original English version. All German philatelic libraries participate once again with overviews of their new additions. The associations, especially the BDPH, sent us the original texts of the awards last autumn and individual authors are working on extensive original studies, which we can publish for the first time in this issue.

Allow me to go into a few in particular: Hans-Peter Garcarek has completed the first part of his research on the Zschiesche family. What you read in this longer article is what I personally always like to call “first cream”: scientific standards of research, following historical research with countless previously completely unknown results. First - we now know more about this family, which is so important for the pioneering generation of German philately, and many mistakes of the past can be corrected with it. Some of my own misinterpretations, which I spread years ago due to a lack of better knowledge, are also corrected. But what can be better than letting research run its course? Anyone who reads this draft of Garcarek knows how many years of intensive work are behind it. At this point I can only congratulate him and I was very happy that with my modest material and knowledge I was able to assist the creation of this work. Part 2 will be published later this year. If there are interested parties for a special printed version of this “Zschiesche work”, we will see whether we can achieve this. This study definitely deserves it.

Another example in this issue shows study & research, but also that a printed presentation that has taken place after many years, can always only be regarded as provisional and not complete: A smaller contribution on Edward A. Oppen. Bibliophiles know him well as one of the first English catalog and album publishers, but who would have guessed that he was of German origin? In the recently published book Milestones of Philatelic Literature of the 19th Century you could read a little about Oppen, but it was neither correct nor complete. A year ago no one knew. Yes, and I have summarized this increase in knowledge thanks to the support of two English colleagues.

I would also like to recommend Brian Birch’s view of the early auctions as well as the continuation of the series by Peter Fischer. Some readers will appreciate Hans-Jürgen Dobiatt’s overviews of “name sales”, market reports and other overviews and Documentation. Phila Historica is not only intended for reading selected articles, but is also a documentation work for reference when you need specific information. That is why we have also created an Index for the 2013 annual volume, which may be useful to one or the other. Of course you can find everything using the pdf search; but sometimes more than one would like. History of philately was a lot of fun for me even with my contribution to the topic of “folds” that appears in this issue. The topic has “haunted” me for years and with many open questions connected with it, I thought it appropriate to finally finally conclude this. This does not exclude, rather that later it will be necessary to clarify the open questions, because until today it is not known exactly when, e.g. the first provider in Germany to offer its folds for the first time, which there were all, what they consisted of etc. A valuable addition to this issue is the continuation of the overview of German graphic artists that Alfred Peter has compiled for SBZ/DDR over the past year. He was right: A series Germany, your graphic designers was not only allowed to contain the artists of the FRG. The work of the graphic artists of the GDR also had to be taken into account. He has taken the trouble to compile this overview, truly a Sisyphean task that can only be recognized.

Another special publication will soon be ready and will also be digitally available online: The Federico Borromeo d’Adda library. These are a few hundred pages with an overview of one of the most valuable postal history and philatelic private libraries currently in existence. For bibliographically interested collectors it is certainly a pleasure to get to know this library. A portrait of the owner appears in two languages (German - English) and was made available to us by Köhler/Corinphila. It is conceivable that this publication will also be printed in separately. Interested parties are welcome to contact me.

As I finish this editorial at the end of February, my thoughts are already on the next edition. This is expected to appear in the course of May/June 2014, i.e. before the summer break, which can then be used again for new creative work. For my part, there are already a number of topics that arise from the work for two symposia: two rather unusual topics (on the first large colored picture plates of stamps and on the topic of “Smoking & Philately” - an advertisement for stamp collecting), but also a more precise one Research on early German stamp dealers, as far as they left traceable traces. Since I am currently dealing with continuous entries for my Who's Who in Philately? (Volume 2), I also think it would make sense to come back to Friedrich Breitfuss.

A major contribution of around 50 pages in the coming edition will be the work of Heinrich Mimberg, the editor of the journal of the “Thurn & Taxis” working group. Mimberg writes on the subject of Recycling the remaining stocks of Thurn and Taxis postal stationery and postage stamps and thanks to the evaluation of an extensive recently discovered correspondence between the House of Thurn and Taxis and the Frankfurt stamp dealer J. H. Schloss, he is able to uncover many a secret that has so far been hidden.

So the “wheel” keeps spinning and I would be happy if one or the other of our readers would keep this moving in the future. Thanks to the digital possibilities of Phila Historica, it is feasible for everyone to publish some studies that would otherwise never have been written, published or only available as a small brochure against payment. A concept that, in my opinion, has a future if enthusiasts come together on such topics.

All that remains for now is to wish you an equally beautiful spring after this mild winter,

yours

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.4-5

Table of contents.

Current

pp.6-12

News from research and current affairs.

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.9-10

Congratulations to Brian Birch

The US Philatelic Literature Review (PLR) recently introduced a new award to honor the best article published in this magazine - or rather its author - over the course of a year. The award bears the name Thomas F. Allen Award. Allen was the editor and co-author of the gold-crowned 19th Century Cleveland Ohio Postal Markings, released in 1991, and formerly chair of the U.S. Philatelic Classics Society. The award is given for an article that is particularly concerned with philatelic literature, research or libraries.

For 2013, this award, which was awarded for the first time, went to Brian Birch from England and his study on Schuyler B. Bradt and the First Philatelic Index, which was published in the 3rd quarter issue of the PLR (Vol. 61, No. 3, 2012, pp.221–238). Phila Historica congratulates Brian Birch on this well-deserved award - certainly on behalf of many other readers. Birch's biography has already been published in a short form in Who is Who in Philately? Today he is indisputably the most important bibliographer of our time, a worthy successor to Denny Bacon and Victor Suppantschitsch. We have the honor to count him among the contributors to this magazine and I myself am always happy about our good cooperation.

pp.13-28

Honored Philatelists.

Wolfgang Maassen (Compiler)

Market and Market Prices

pp.29-39

Market notes.

Wolfgang Maassen

History of Literature (Actually the History of Philately)

pp.40-67

First collectors - first dealers - early authors. (I)

Wolfgang Maassen

Sometimes it is believed that everything has already been said and almost everything has been described. Not even close. To date, the history of philately is not lacking in studies and statements on philatelic history, but it is lacking in accuracy and “depth”. These will not be achievable overnight, although a number of established and well-known authors have already provided noteworthy and valuable contributions.

When I open the topic in the title with this first episode of a small series, I pursue the intention of recalling important things that have already been written, but also of critically accompanying this topic, ultimately also in one later study of my own, to describe some things from a more objective and evidence-based perspective.

In this first episode I give a look back at the early beginnings of philately, which Georges Brunel⁽¹⁾ published in 1930 under the title Ce Qu’était La Philatélie en 1867 and which was published by Yvert & Co. in Amiens. This work appeared almost simultaneously in the magazine L’Écho de la Timbrologie, understandably in French, but certainly also for some people the language barrier is not easy to jump over, but the source itself is even less easy to obtain.

(1) Georges Brunel lived from 1860-1951.

Since I managed to purchase this brochure more than a year ago and was provided by Brian Birch with a translation into English (which can also be found on the FIP Literature Commission website), I am pleased to be able to print it now with his approval. I took the liberty of including some personal comments and corrections in footnotes - here now only in German - because more than 80 years have passed since Brunel’s study was drafted, so that many new facts are known and documented. We should understand the occasionally quite one-sided view of Brunel, its narrowing and glorification of French top performers due to historical reasons, with the accompanying devaluation of everything that had an affinity to Germany (see his Ferrari biography).

Despite these shortcomings and errors, Brunel's work still seems important enough for me to make it known to other circles, especially since many names in the MonacoPhil 2013 literature catalog were touched on, but could not be dealt with in depth in this document.

In a second episode, the topic is viewed less internationally, rather from a German perspective, namely purely with a view to facts that can be verified by everyone today, as can be found in the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler from 1863 to 1867. Further episodes (e.g. the presence of German collectors/dealers in foreign magazines are planned.

pp.41-67

The State of Philately in 1867.

Georges Brunel (translation from the French by Brian Birch)

The document is given in English in Phila Historica so only Wolfgang's notes in German have been translated below:

Notes in German by Wolfgang Maassen

1. See above.
2. In my copy, Norbert Röhm noted about illustration: approximately 1900, by Jules Germain (1877–1946).
3. Legrand died in 1912, as Brian Birch noted.
4. As already noted by Carlrichard Brühl in his History of Philately, volume 1, Philipp von Ferrari was born in 1850, not in 1848, see also footnote No. 7, Brühl, page 199. There are numerous copies of contracts, documents, certificateds in my archive from Ferrari's time, it can be clearly confirmed that Philippe Marie Augustin de Ferrari was actually born in Paris on the 11th January 1850.
5. Carlrichard Brühl, op. cit., p.169 and others described this description as completely inaccurate. It was marked by "petty hatred", although Brunel had obviously not been able to cope with the fact that Ferrari in no way valued the country in which he had spent most of his life, France, and even went on to bequeath his collection to Germany. Brunel's guiding principle was "offended National feeling". This may be true, because a factual approach to the psychology and personality of Ferrari shows - in addition to certain neurotic features - the image of a determined connoisseur and expert. The description of the Ferrari collecting style, as Brunel delivers it, corresponds more to a romantic-lurid-melodramatic level. Ferrari was not a "dodgy dandy", as Brühl noted.
6. Here too, Brunel is demonstrably wrong. If he had actually known Ferrari better, he would probably have had an insight into his annual travel calendar, that is, he would have known how many months in the year Ferrari visited major cities and stamp centers in different countries according to a strictly regulated process that he always followed. As a wealthy private individual, he could afford this. There can be no doubt that Ferrari himself built up and continuously expanded his collection, just as little doubt as the fact that as a rich owner he secured the help of employees who had to sort and classify the constant new acquisitions. What shouldn't be normal? At most the fact that very few "normal mortals" could afford it.
7. Again, Brunel overshot the target. The very first articles that Ferrari published showed that he had worked very carefully on his stamps, otherwise he could not have written about them in this quality. This work may not have been known to Brunel or he simply did not want it to be true because it did not fit into his scheme. Other people who knew Ferrari better always confirmed Ferrari's competence and

- expertise (for example: Charles Phillips).
8. Instead of 1863 it should be 1862.
 - 9 How Brunel comes to this statement is completely unclear. Moens may not have been a good student, but to deduce from this that he could not have written - perhaps only just his name - is and remains abstruse. Brühl classified this statement as “smooth slander” (op. cit. Note 1, p.63) and one can only agree with him.
 - 10 The data on Moens’ first early work are still contradictory. According to C. Brühl, he only started his own bookshop in No. 7 Galerie Bortier in 1852, not in 1850. Decades later, Moens was not afraid to claim in advertisements that his stamp shop had been in business since 1848 (!) this is completely out of thin air and has so far not been proven (see, for example, advertisement in the Wiener Briefmarken-Zeitung, No. 1, January 1890, p. 8). Brian Birch (or Vincent Schouberechts) recently gave 1852 as the year, in the Milestones of Philatelic Literature of the 19th Century from MonacoPhil, that Moens started collecting stamps. Not excluding that years later he also sold individual stamps in his bookstore, which probably did not make him a real stamp dealer. This trade only seems to have got off to a more serious start in the second half of the 1850s, because in 1858 he described himself in the imprint of a book he published (Brühl, op. cit., p.49) as “marchand de timbres-poste pour collection”. With Brühl one might assume that he had previously traded in stamps; However, even this has so far not been proven.
 - 11 Certainly there was competition between France and Belgium, between Moens, Mahé and Maury, but Brunel’s pointed interpretation once again reveals his nationalistically one-sided French attitude. French dealers and authors get off well, others are not given this if they are mentioned at all.
 - 12 The year of death is incorrect. Pierre Mahé died on the 2nd February 1913.
 - 13 Edard de Laplante lived from 1820 to 1881.
 - 14 M. de Saulcy died on the 4th November 1880.
 - 15 Arthur Maury was born on the 31st July 1844 in Boulogne-surMer.
 - 16 This statement by Brunel has not yet been verified. Years ago, Norbert Röhm, an excellent Rondot connoisseur, called it “nonsense”.

History of Philately

pp.68-126

You were one of the first stamp dealers in Germany - The history of the hitherto almost unknown Zschiesche family of philatelists - Part 1: The company Zschiesche und Köder.

Hans-Peter Garcarek

pp.127-129

Edward A. Oppen. Blurred traces of an early catalogue and album maker.

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.130-182

From gum arabic to the hinge, to the Bandocoll protective cover to the Hawid strip. A look back.

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.183-192

Philatelic youth memories and more. Insights into the work on "Who's Who in Philately".

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.183-184

(Translation of the first paragraph about Who's Who in Philately only, pp.183-184)

From the last issue of Phila Historica it was already clear that the author has again started preparatory work for the third edition of his book Who's Who in Philately? (It is also only the second in print). Anyone who already knows the first sub-volume of this new edition (letters A–D) could see that not only the number of entries has been significantly increased, even multiplied, but also the scope of each individual personal contribution - if possible. That takes time, sometimes very time-consuming research, much more than you sometimes like.

In addition, this second part of the book will feature biographies of legendary and well-known philatelists. Names like Philipp von Ferrari, Heinrich Fraenkel, Franz Kalckhoff and Carl Lindenberg are just a few examples that stand for numerous others whose biography should not be dealt with on one or two pages. Of course, you can keep everything short, but in a nutshell it is not uncommon for the important data and information to be shortened, the selection of which blocks the view of the whole.

As is well known, the author limits himself primarily to the evaluation of sources that have already been printed, i.e. mostly previously published articles and/or short notes in journals, bibliographies, books, etc. These are usually secondary sources, which often have the unpleasant property that they are quite incorrect. Because one writer copied from the other, sometimes earlier writers also remembered things - e.g. in obituaries - that have been wrong. Since hardly anyone had the time and the opportunity to check existing data, errors are passed on from generation to generation. This also applies to the work of the author, although he does endeavor to disclose contradictions in data, as he has already done many times in his own extensive works on Alfred Moschkau, Hugo Michel, Gebr. Senf and others. However, this arduous work cannot be carried out for every personality in the history of philately, because researching primary sources is usually extremely time-consuming and costly.

There is also a second reason: With your own continuous work, the demands grow, not only from others, but also for yourself. And the available information material, the stock of magazines and other literature of every kind is growing. This does not make any further work of this kind easier. This is exemplified by a preliminary new entry for one of the greats in German philatelic history: Dr. Franz Kalckhoff.

Anyone who compares the first entry for Kalckhoff in the 1st edition from 1999 will find there on pp.97/98 at least two columns, so a whole page. This is contrasted by a new entry of around four manuscript pages. This may or may not be the last word, even for a lexical "short form". But this change demonstrates the difficulties previously described. The following is the current status of the new entry.

(See original in German.)

pp.193-209

Philatelic youth memories.

Dr. Franz Kalckhoff

pp.210-216

Miscellany from the history of organized philately in SBZ and GDR (4) - The German Philatelic Congress 1950 in Leipzig.

Peter Fischer

p.217

Emanuel Domogalla, Birkenthal (Brzezinka, Poland).

Hans-Jürgen Dobiak

History of Philatelic Literature

pp.218-219

A selective bibliography of the most significant philatelic literature of the 19th century.

Wolfgang Maassen

As you know, there are numerous more or less complete bibliographies of 19th century philatelic literature. Individual country bibliographies are more common, and the monumental work of Edward Denny Bacon (Crawford-Library) is still striking and stands out. If such projects were aimed at the fullest possible recording of all known existing literature, such attempts were of little help to those who, in later decades, perhaps came up with the idea of building up a library of the important works of this spring decade of philately. Especially if he dared to strive for such a thought not only with reference to the respective national, but worldwide literature.

It is said of John R. Boker - and he has described it several times - that the systematic plan is part of patiently building up an important collection, regardless of the area. So a list of which pieces (stamps, letters, units, special features) are essential for a collecting area and should therefore also belong in one (provided you have the necessary "change").

Now such procedures can be implemented in the classic collection areas from the just emphasized necessities of financial means for the least contemporaries today, but with literature this is still feasible today. Patience and time (of course also the space required for this) are required. But the philatelic literature reveals another problem. Because unlike classic stamps, there is little evidence which are the really important pieces that belong in such a library for each country ("collecting area"). Crawford, Suppantchitsch & Co. do not help much here, since they have not given any weighting according to the content (in terms of quality and importance of today's criteria for literature exhibitions). In modern times, the four-volume work of Dr. Manfred Amrhein (Philatelic Literature) is a guide, because this also offers a selective bibliography in which the authors and their works, which are more well-known from the author's point of view, are noted. Amrhein offers the advantage that he not only took into account specialist monographs, but also early catalogs and magazines. In this respect, it is highly recommended. However, it can be useful to compare such a listing there with a selective bibliography of the kind that appeared more than 100 years ago and that shows the reader what at that time expert philatelic connoisseurs found important and so valuable that it was useful for putting together a library of important philatelic literature. We owe such a bibliography to Rudolf Krasemann from Upsala, Sweden, who published it in 1907/1908 in two journals, including Der Deutsche Philatelist⁽¹⁾. The author of these lines has benefited from this "list" for many years, because you can use it (and he himself used it) like a "wants list" and you are happy about every piece that enriches your own library. The chances of reaching a more or less complete scope are - given the time required - far better than with any other collecting area. In this respect, this selective bibliography is reproduced in its original wording below. But it also offers a good opportunity to remember this famous literary connoisseur once again.

Who was Rudolf Krasemann?

Hermann Rudolf Krasemann was born on the 21st April 1875 in Mosbach in Baden. He had been collecting stamps since he was nine years old and is said to have had a collection of around 4,000 pieces by the age of twelve. As was often the case later, he sold them at the “youth time” and discovered philately, but then the more serious one, only when he was 27 years old. At that time he was in Paris - he had trained as a bookseller and was now a bookseller in Upsala - and started consequently to collect the stamps of France and Sweden, his new home. He also devoted himself more and more to philatelic literature. He also appeared as the author of important works. First with a German translation of a Directory of Postage Stamps from Sweden, 1906, then he wrote a multi-part series of articles, a Bibliography of the most important special works on the postage stamps of individual countries (1907/1908), which then in 1908 together with Hilmer Djurling, he translated into German the Swedish work Sveriges Frankotecken 1855/1905 (German edition: The Postmarks of Sweden 1855-1905) followed. Shortly before his premature death, a Catalog of the Library of Sveriges Filatelist-Förening was published, in which about 1,700 works were listed. Krasemann, who was also an employee of the Svensk Filatelistik-Tidskrift and the DBZ, died on the 3rd September 1908 in Upsala. He was only 33 years old. But in the short period of his active life he left behind a significant body of work, regarding which Der Deutsche Philatelist wrote in his obituary: “Who, like us, has followed Krasemann’s work in recent years, can overlook the enormous gap death has ripped here⁽²⁾.”

1. See: Der Deutsche Philatelist, No. 1/1908, pp.6–8; No. 2/1908, pp.20-22; No. 4/1908, pp.43-45; No. 5/1908, pp.53-54; No. 6/1908, pp.60-61; No. 7/1908, pp.70-72; No. 8/1908, pp.80-82; No. 10/1908, pp.98-99 & No. 11/1908, pp.111-112.
2. Der Deutsche Philatelist, No. 10/20th October 1908, p.97.

pp.220-250

Bibliography of the most important special works on the postage stamps of individual countries.
Rudolf Krasemann

This is already available in English as Philat. Trans. 406.

pp.251-258

A rare index from Kiel. (In English)
Brian Birch

pp.259-270

Some thoughts on Pioneer Auction Catalogues. (In English)
Brian Birch

pp.271-297

Auction Catalogues. An extract from the “Catalog of the Crawford Library of Philatelic Literature”, Philatelic Literature Society, London, 1911, (Columns 10-33).
[Edward Denny Bacon]

Reviews, Lists, Attachments, Other

pp.298-308

Germany, its stamp graphic artists. (Part: 2: SBZ/DDR)

Alfred Peter

309-321

The collection area: German Colonies and Post Offices abroad in auction catalogues – so-called “Name Sales”.

Hans-Jürgen Dobiatt

pp.322-356

New acquisitions. [By various German libraries.]

pp.357-359

Seen by others.

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.360-374

For you to read!

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.375-389

Phila Historica. Selective bibliography 2013.

Wolfgang Maassen:

p.390

Imprint.

END

Phila Historica
June 2014, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2020

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Editorial.

Wolfgang Maassen

Dear readers,

With the second edition of Phila Historica this year I would like to continue the proven approaches of this digital magazine. In addition to the already familiar sections, you will find some works this time, which were created as a study as part of a symposium of the Consilium Philatelicum. As you know, I usually keep my lectures freely available in short form. At the same time, however, there is always a more detailed documentary elaboration that seems worthwhile to me to be recorded, as it offers much more information.

I am happy to mention contributions from Heinrich Mimberg, Peter Fischer, Michael Ullrich and numerous others who have again contributed to enriching this booklet with their research. It is and remains a nice feeling when so many connoisseurs and experts provide their friendly support unselfishly.

The Borromeo project (in the last edition I had presented the opportunity to have the bibliography of the Borromeo library-approx. 300 pages-also in a small edition-25 copies is to be printed digitally) so far it has not yet been started. Eleven pre-orders are available. I hope that some will be added by autumn.

As is well known, the book can already be viewed digitally on the website. This also applies to the German translation of Milestones of Philatelic Literature of the 19th Century. A printed version of this 200-page book was avoided by round email to all potential interested parties and the numbered and signed hardcopy in an edition of 30 copies was overbooked within two hours. Even the intended 20 unnumbered copies are largely ordered.

Allow me a word on my own behalf this time: After 35 years, my family found it time to change again and move into a newly built residence. With us such a project is not going to be over quickly owing to the full schedule and the amount of work, so that we needed almost two years to build the house and now organize the move to the private sector. Our daughter-in-law, who has since started on Phila Historica also hopes to look forward to the first offspring, so that in the future she can only participate on a more limited basis in the future.

Since we need a good two to three months for the upcoming move alone, my “scope” (the term fits quite well) will be noticeably narrow. I try to work on “stock”, but this is only possible to a limited extent on topics that require more extensive research. So don’t be surprised if we are a little less productive in autumn/winter 2014/2015 than before. But it doesn’t always have to be 300 or even 400 pages per issue.

A dream winter followed a Spanish spring, a weather phenomenon that not only favoured new buildings. So we hope for an equally nice summer that I already wish for all the best and well-being.

We read again - probably at the end of September!

Wolfgang Maassen

p.3

Table of contents.

Current

pp.4-12

Research notes & current news.

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.13-18

Philatelic Library Hamburg e. V. Protocol of Ordinary members' meeting on Tuesday 25th March 2014.

Philatelic history

pp.19-66

The utilization of the remaining stocks the Thurn and Taxis postal stationery and postage stamps.

Heinrich Mimberg

pp.67-68

Biographies of people involved in the J. H. Schloss case.

Heinrich Joseph Dauth

Isaac Herman Schloss

Adolf Reinheimer

Philipp Karl Schauff

Dr. Hessdörfer

Dr. Spier

W. Kromm

Goering

pp.69-76

Badenia. The forgotten forerunner of the today's Baden Working Group in the BDPh.

Michael Ullrich

pp.77-78

Mr. Carl Lindenberg with hat. Two celebratory postcards from 1894.

Horst Lüddicke

pp.79-107

Ludwig Hesshaimer: 1000 Years of Iceland (1930)

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.108-117

Smoke for a hobby or: "Smoking for a good cause!" – Advertising for philately in early times.

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.118-126

Miscellany from the history of organised Philately in the SBZ and GDR (5). From the beginning 1945-1949.

Peter Fischer

History of Philatelic Literature

pp.127-154

150 years ago: The world's first colored stamps. An extraordinary "Literature object" from the early days of German philately 1864.

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.155-156

Moritz Ruhl: The stamp friend. An addendum.

pp.157-161

Sir John Wilson: The Royal Philatelic Collection.

Wolfgang Maassen

Reviews, Lists, Attachments, Other

pp.162-172

The collecting area Germany after 1945 in the auction catalogs – so-called "Name Sales".

Hans-Jürgen Dobiatt

pp.173-181

New arrivals.

pp.182-184

Seen by others.

pp.185-202

Read for you.

Wolfgang Maassen

pp.204

Imprint

END

Phila Historica
October 2014, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2020

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Editorial.

Wolfgang Maassen

Dear readers of PHILA HISTORICA,

This is the third issue this year, which some of you may be eagerly awaiting. This time it was not easy for us to finish the issue, because a new home that had yet to be completed, a move and the associated dissolution of the old home not only delayed things, but also put us to the test for six months to see what we could actually manage in the face of such challenges. Nevertheless, I think that the new issue is also impressive, even though I currently have hardly anything “in stock”. Anyone who knows how I work knows that I use the winter and summer breaks to make the most of my free time during intensive “working holidays”.

Enough about that, now to the issue. Karl Louis writes about the RDP weekend in Ypres (this is the complete version of the article already published in Philatelie), Peter Fischer about Miscellany from organized philately in the SBZ and GDR (Part 6): The relationship with the Association of German Philatelists, Prof. Dr. Wolfgang Scharlipp about well-known stamp engravers in France and the Scandinavian countries.

I myself recall with a special article, the founding year of the second German collectors' association, the Association of German Philatelist's Associations (at home and abroad), which was founded in 1924 in Neuahaldensleben and Munich. On the one hand, I am documenting these events with original contributions from that time, including one by Ludwig Hesshaimer, and on the other hand, in keeping with Neuahaldensleben, I am also depicting preliminary drafts of an artist's journal by Hesshaimer that, to my knowledge, have not yet been published. This was published and offered by Albert Kürzl Verlag in Munich after the Haldensleben conference.

Even more original, thanks to newly discovered sources in the Reichspost files in the Federal Archives, is a documentation of an “image dispute” that concerned images, especially in color, but also in black and white, between representatives of the Reichspost at the time and the stamp trade, especially the Senf Brothers. The end of philately, especially philatelic catalogue, magazine and album literature, seemed imminent. Questions that still concern authors today. At least back then, after years of back and forth, there was an understanding and thus a happy ending. Even today it is still exciting to read about this dispute, in which even the Leipzig Stock Exchange Association got involved.

Original and truly close to the sources is a lecture and comprehensive research on the first early collectors, dealers and philatelists of the 1860s. My intention was to separate the wheat from the chaff, i.e. the later legends from the actually verifiable (mostly literary) sources. What remains can be read on almost 60 pages. These two articles (the second is a pure literature research in the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler 1863-1865) belong together, the latter was the prerequisite for the first, which was then enriched with plenty of documentary material from the Diena library.

As usual, Phila Historica offers new discoveries, reviews, new items from the major German libraries and the World Cup archive in sections. This latest edition is also free for everyone to download at www.philahistorica.de. The publisher simply asks that you register once by email to W.Maassen@philcreativ.de, so that interested readers will then receive a short information email before a new issue of the magazine is published. I don't dare to look ahead to issue 4 of this year. There are still plenty of topics that need to be covered. One of them may already interest you: Philately in 25 years, i.e. in 2039. Of course, there will also be more philatelic and literary history topics, but given an eventful autumn, it is to be expected that issue 4/2014 will be somewhat less extensive. Which is a good thing, because a printed annual volume with almost 1000 pages like last year is not easy to realise.

Nevertheless: Look forward to further editions today, they are sure to come!

We wish you lots of fun,

Wolfgang Maassen

p.3

Table of Contents.

Letters to the Editor

pp.4-16

Current notes - letters to the Editor

Andy Taylor: A correction to the book: "Licht und Schatten ... Ludwig Hesshaimer"

Answer by Wolfgang Maassen.

Jan Vellekoop: Sir Wilson: Royal Philatelic Collection.

Jan Vellekoop: Mail of 26th June 2014.

Answer by Wolfgang Maassen.

Jan Vellekoop: Mail of 8th July 2014.

Frank Walton: Mail of 10th July 2014.

Jan Vellekoop: Mail of 10th July 2014.

Frederico Borromeo d'Adda: Letter of 24th July 2014.

Jan Vellekoop: Mail of 13th August 2014.

Wolfgang Maassen: A temporary closing of the comments.

Further reports on other topics

An unknown Postal Stationery album.	9-11
Art from the pioneer days of philately?	11-16

Karl Louis:	And the RDP goes to...	17
--------------------	------------------------	----

History of philately

Wolfgang Maassen:	First collectors – first dealers – early authors (II): A look at Germany	32
--------------------------	---	----

Wolfgang Maassen:	First collectors – first dealers. Initial research	55
--------------------------	--	----

Wolfgang Maassen:	1924: The second German collectors' association was founded in Haldensleben	84
--------------------------	--	----

Wolfgang Maassen:	A dispute over colour and format. Post contra philatelic publishers and authors	101
--------------------------	--	-----

Peter Fischer:	Miscellany from the history of organised philately in the SBZ and GDR (6): The relationship with the Association of German Philatelists 1949–1953	126
-----------------------	---	-----

Prof. Dr. Wolfgang Scharlipp:	French stamp engravers (I)	131
--------------------------------------	----------------------------	-----

Prof. Dr. Wolfgang Scharlipp:	Stamp art in the North: Scandinavian stamp engravers	136
--------------------------------------	--	-----

Reviews, lists, appendices, other

New entries	144
-------------	-----

Read for you	172
--------------	-----

Imprint	[177]
---------	-------

pp.32-54

Wolfgang Maassen

First collectors – first dealers – early authors (II): A look at Germany

In Phila Historica No.1/2014, this short series of articles began with a reprint of G. Brunel's The State of Philately in 1867, which was kindly provided to us in an English translation by Brian Birch. In contrast, it seems appropriate to focus our attention on philately in Germany at that time, as it was reflected for several years in the first German specialist journal for stamp collectors. This refers to the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler (Magazine for Stamp Collectors), which even today can be considered an extremely valuable source of information for the years 1863-1867.

It so happened that the author of this article had the honor of speaking at a symposium in Naumburg on the 5th April celebrating the 110th anniversary of the Naumburg Philatelic Society 1904 e.V. Given Naumburg's historical connection to Alwin Zschiesche, this presented a natural opportunity to elaborate on the topic, focusing on the Zschiesche family's time in Leipzig. Much of this information, it must be conceded, is already known and has even been published by the author of this article in books.

The complete text of the lecture given there is printed below. This is followed by the research material that formed the basis of this lecture. This may also be of additional use for future research.

Editor's note: The numbers of the slides shown in the lecture are noted in the text below with an indication of their principal contents.

Following in the Footsteps of the First, the Very First Collectors and Dealers from the time of Zschiesche & Co.

In an age of Guinness World Records - worthy achievements, the question of who is the greatest, the most important, or who was the first - not just the first man on the moon - always plays a special role. This is also true in philately. I have repeatedly demonstrated - most recently using the example of the pioneer of German philately, Dr. Alfred Moschkau - that this is not a recent phenomenon, but was already an important question for many collectors 120, 130, and 140 years ago. For him, too, it was important to be one of the first: the first expert, the first handbook author, the first professional journalist.

Slide 2 – Dr. Alfred Moschkau

Critical research in recent years has shown that much of this is inaccurate, or at least cannot be derived from facts documented today. People sometimes tend, later in life, to embellish their youth and early years, or even to reinvent them – to put it politely.

Slide 3 – Dr. John Edward Gray

The question of who the world's first collector was has long preoccupied many people. There were plenty of those who wanted to claim this ius primus philatelicus [first philatelic right] for themselves. A “classic” example of this type of philatelist asserting their prerogative was undoubtedly Dr. John Edward Gray (1800–1875). He is said to have purchased a block (of four?) Penny Black stamps as early as May 1, 1840, and set it aside as a memento of the introduction of the Uniform Penny Postage. After further stamps were issued, he acquired them as well and even published one of the first stamp catalogues at the end of 1862.

Slide 4 – Dr. Gray's Catalogue

The evidence for mentioning Dr. John Edward Gray probably stems from his own biographical statements, published in a series of articles entitled The Postage Stamps of the World in the June 1862 issue of Young England magazine, and also included in his aforementioned first stamp catalogue, which appeared shortly thereafter. There he wrote that he began collecting shortly after the system was established, meaning shortly after the introduction of postage stamps and many years before it became fashionable, because he had recognized the great benefits of the new penny postage system even before Sir Rowland Hill, and because collecting this “postage money” in the form of stamps was highly secure and economical (“I was the first that proposed the system of a small uniform rate of postage to be prepaid by stamps...”). It should be noted here that Gray’s attempt to claim “patronage” for Rowland Hill’s achievements was soon met with opposition from both Rowland Hill and Charles Knight⁽¹⁾.

- (1) See: Athenaeum, December 13, 20, and 27, 1862, January 3 and 10, 1863; cited in P. J. Anderson & B. T. K. Smith: Early English Philatelic Literature 1862–1865, London, 1912, p.12; Gray’s complete account of the beginning of his collecting activities is also reproduced in: Charles J. Phillips: Stamp Collecting. The King of Hobbies and The Hobby of Kings, New York, 1936, p.35 and was last recorded in James Mackay: Guinness Book of Stamps, Ullstein Verlag, Frankfurt – Berlin – Vienna, 1985, p.146.

Dr. Gray later faced competition from an Austrian named William Kratter in Sydney, who claimed that his father, who had emigrated to Australia, had already begun collecting the Sydney City Post envelopes issued in 1838 since November 3rd of that year⁽²⁾. An Englishwoman, Miss Harrison from Yorkshire, also gained literary notoriety in 1910 when, at the age of 80, she told Meekels Magazine that in 1840 – when she was ten years old – she had received rare VR Penny Blacks from one of Queen Victoria’s ladies-in-waiting, and later also essays and proofs from Sir Rowland Hill. She was still active as a collector in 1910. Even on the Isle of Wight, there was supposedly a lady, a “governess”, who began collecting stamps as early as 1841 – at that time there were only four different types, so she opted for quantity, amassing as many as possible. Because she made this known to everyone with the help of her friends and acquaintances, this allegedly attracted the attention of the postal authorities, who even launched an investigation, and only the results of which, that she had no criminal or fraudulent intentions, are said to have saved her from prison⁽³⁾.

- (2) Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal, 1910, p.164.
- (3) See: E. A. Smythies: The Lure of the Postage Stamp, in: The Stamp Lover, January/February 1955, p.131.

In 1923, Alexander Bungerz believed he had identified another early collector, namely the Parisian engraver Auguste Mancin. As early as 1840, Mancin had asked friendly employees to procure all newly appearing stamps for him. He collected for over 15 years until he contracted tuberculosis and was forced to sell his collection. At that time, there were supposedly already three stamp dealers in Paris, and he sold to one of them for the dealer’s highest bid of 100 francs⁽⁴⁾.

- (4) Alexander Bungerz: Grosses Lexikon der Philatelie, Munich, 1923, see under Mancin, Auguste (p.443).

The majority of these early collectors of the 1840s and 1850s were not philatelists in today’s sense, who researched, categorized, or even systematized stamps and their origins according to philatelic criteria. As a rule, they remained fixated on the quantity of identical or differently colored stamps and stamp designs, or pursued this eccentric hobby alongside many others simply as a sport, as a mania.

A letter addressed to Henry D. Davies, London, and sent by John M. Davenport of Oxon on the 14th December 1841, seemed more serious. In this letter, Davenport asks: Dear Henry, if you can deign to do something so trivial, I would like to ask you once again to collect all the stamps you can get your hands on. I have received an inquiry from another source about building a collection of such stamps⁽⁵⁾. What is remarkable is not so much the suggestion that a collection of such stamps should be created, as this does not clarify what kind of “collection” it was. Rather, it is the fact that Davenport apparently made a second inquiry, meaning his first inquiry must have been made some time earlier.

- (5) John R. Homersham: The second recorded mention of stamp collecting? In: The London Philatelist, May 1997, Volume 106, p.115. The original letter reads: Dear Henry, If you can descend to any thing so trifling I will again ask you to put by all the postage stamps you can: I having had a request from another quarter to assist in making a collection of them.

It may be true that later famous names in philately date their first trading activities to the early 1850s or even earlier. Jean-Baptiste Moens later claimed that he had been collecting stamps as a boy since 1848 and entered the trade in 1852. His literary work, which began ten years later, in 1862, is certainly documented, and the first advertisements date back even earlier. But it was only from the mid-50s onwards that one could speak of the broader emergence of a more serious collecting sport, which, however, was initially not viewed in isolation, but generally in conjunction with other objects. For example, with coins, seals, autographs, books, and the like⁽⁶⁾.

- (6) Such a “general collectors’ club” became known in the USA in 1856 under the name “Omnibus Club”. It can also be assumed that in the 1850s and 1860s in Germany - comparable to the model of the “Bridlington Amateur Association” founded in Great Britain in 1865, which even published its own magazine, The Postmen’s Knock - collectors interested in postage stamps were already loosely organized, albeit with some regulations, in German clubs. However, since these clubs were not destined to last, any sources or verifiable evidence are lacking.

In England, numerous notices and classified ads—for example, in Beeton’s Boy’s Own Magazine - are documented from 1860 onward, in which young collectors publicly advertised their wants and offers. It is known that the first public stamp fairs took place in Paris in 1860. The age of philately had begun. Such advertisements were the first literary product from which the growth and emergence of early philately, and in a number of cases, verifiable names, can be traced. These were followed - almost simultaneously with the first dealer lists from around 1861 - by the first articles in more widely circulated popular magazines, which are closely associated with the name of a Frenchman, Natalis Rondot⁽⁷⁾.

Slide 5 – Natalis Rondot

- (7) Natalis Rondot published a series of articles entitled Les Timbres-poste de tous les États du Globe in the Magasin Pittoresque starting on the 21st June 1862. From the 26th July 1862, this series also appeared in English in Cassell’s Illustrated Family Paper under the title Postage Stamps, and from the 1st October of the same year under the title Briefmarken und Briefmarken-Sammlungen in the fashion magazine Der Bazar. As Jan Vellekoop was able to demonstrate, there was even a Dutch translation, published from 1862 to 1864 in the yearbooks edited by S. Gille Heringa (Nederlandsch jaarboekje der posterijen voor ... – Middelburg: Altdorffer, 1862–1864), featuring 63 illustrations and five lithographic plates. In Germany, another article about postage stamps appeared in the Illustrierte Leipziger Zeitung No. 1014 on the 6th December 1862.

Dr. J. E. Gray, author/editor of one of the early postage stamp catalogues published as early as 1862, reflected on the reality of those days in his catalogue introduction when he wrote:

The collection of Postage Stamps is a fashion not confined to this country, or to a single class; for collections are frequently seen in the drawing-room of the luxurious, in the study of the enlightend (!), and the locker of the schoolboy.

The fashion has been ridiculed, as all fashions will be; but if postage stamps are properly studied, collected and arranged, there is no reason why they may not be quite as instructive and entertaining as the collections of birds, butterflies, shells, books engravings, coins or other objects⁽⁸⁾.

- (8) Quoted from Robert White: The first Stamp Collector and his Catalogue, Stamp Lover, Vol. 96, February 2004, p.12. Gray had previously published The Postage Stamps of the World in the magazine Young England in London: Tweedie, 1862, from June p.91, a series that appeared in five installments and which formed the basis for his later catalogue.

A similar sentiment was expressed by another catalogue author who published a catalogue in the same year, August 1862 (Aids to Stamp Collectors), and contributed an article to the journal The Monthly Intelligencer, which was first published on December 15th. In this article, Frederick William Booty also focused particularly on the changing nature of the early stamp collecting scene and its impact on public perception:

It is quite remarkable to observe how much public opinion about stamp collecting has changed. Two or three years ago, when one could still name collectors individually (now they number in the hundreds), they were denounced as hopeless, albeit harmless, eccentrics, and their friends all too readily endorsed their mania, especially since these collectors were always only asking for 'old stamps' that were of no practical use except to themselves. If these same cynics could see the truly beautiful stamp books owned by these fortunate, tasteful, and successful collectors, they would probably be convinced and ready to accept that even unsuccessful collections can contain hidden beauties⁽⁹⁾.

- (9) Quoted from L. N. & M. Williams: Centenary of the Philatelic Press, in: The Stamp Lover, October/November 1962, p.63.

Slide 6 – Frederick William Booty

Slide 7 – Oscar Berger-Levrault

With Booty, Gray, and many others, the age of philatelic literature was ushered in in 1861 - the pioneering period in which the printed word gained prominence, whether in price lists or overviews of existing stamps, in early advertisements whose search and exchange requests were followed by these lists as offers, and finally by compilations that provided truly comprehensive overviews of everything that existed. Catalogues were born, and almost simultaneously, the need arose to exchange information about new releases and all aspects of collecting: precisely in periodically published journals.

It seemed necessary to add another genre of literature, albums, to the rapidly spreading phenomenon of philately - the more serious, systematic pursuit of collecting postage stamps - as the number of stamps increased undeniably year after year from 1860 onward. These stamps, as valued treasures, needed to be stored securely and presented in a lasting way. What began as a whim of a few "eccentrics" became a genuine passion with substance.

All these early literary traces – and numerous others not mentioned here – lead primarily by Great Britain and France, where Oscar Berger-Levrault from Strasbourg compiled an initial list of known postage stamps as early as 1861 with the help of friends and fellow collectors such as Dr. Amable Legrand and Jean-Baptiste Moens. Why England and France in particular? This was probably not due to their geographical proximity, but rather to two events that had greatly promoted stamp collecting: the first two World's Fairs in London in 1851 and Paris in 1857. At both, postage stamps were presented as the latest innovation, a world-changing novelty – and this product, new to many, appealed to a wide audience, not just children and young people. From a stone thrown into the water, an avalanche was set in motion, which, in literary form, continues to captivate anyone who delves into literature. Philately was born. Its indispensable foundation was the publication of printed literature, as it was the only way to facilitate communication across geographical or even national borders, enabling collectors to collaborate. And only this - apart from isolated cases of surviving personal letters - allows us today to prove who actually belonged to the first collectors of that era.

The Situation in Germany

There must have been individual collectors in Germany at that time as well. However, names from the 1840s or 1850s are hardly known, and when they are, they are isolated cases, usually documented by surviving letters. Years ago, I became aware of the first female collector, not from Germany, but from Switzerland: Elisabeth Tobler, who corresponded with her friend in the mid-1850s and asked her for stamps for her collection. I presented this young woman, who died in childbirth in 1861 after giving birth to her second child, in detail in an article years ago⁽¹⁰⁾.

Slide 8 – Elisabeth Tobler, collector since her youth (Her letter of 1856).

- (10) Last cited in: W. Maassen & V. Schouberechts: *Milestones of the Philatelic Literature of the 19th Century, Monte-Carlo, 2013, pp.294–300.

Slide 9 – Elisabeth Tobler – (Züst).

Such cases are isolated incidents, certainly documentable and verifiable. But a “philatelic scene” as we understand it today did not yet exist at that time. Neither in Switzerland nor in Germany. It encompasses far more: namely, suppliers and consumers, a market, but also a communication and orientation structure that provides a certain balance to this market: with literature. This takes the form of journals and catalogues, price lists and circulars, advertisements and promotional materials, all of which can be verified. And such a “market” only demonstrably existed in Germany from 1862 onwards. At that time, the first stamp price list from Zschiesche & Köder appeared in Leipzig, still a modest eight pages – yet later apparently counted by the company as its first catalogue – and at that time, Dürr's bookshop in the same city published its first albums. Many names, but also prospectuses – in modern parlance, “flyers” – from this and subsequent years have survived to this day.

Slide 10 – Das Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler.

The first specialist stamp-collecting journal, the Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler (Magazine for Stamp Collectors), didn't appear until May 1863. This brings us closer to the actual source that provides us with verifiable research material today, including the names of vendors, dealers, collectors, and philatelists. My focus on this journal - with regard to the German-speaking world is primarily due to the scarcity of other usable material, but also because this journal reveals an enormous wealth of names, some of whom would become very well-known for a long time. I subsequently analyzed the first few years of the journal, which ran until 1867, and discovered many surprises.

The sheer volume of the analysis of the journal for the years 1863 - 1866—around 40 manuscript pages - precludes listing all the names and content individually. Many names were, and still are, merely “one-hit wonders”, meaning collectors who were looking for something or offered something for sale only once. They didn't return - at least not in this magazine. Which doesn't necessarily mean that their collecting phase was short-lived.

Therefore, I will limit myself to a selection, namely to those names that have been of renown and prestige for years and decades, although it should be emphasized here that these were not exclusively of German origin. For early philately was international, knowing neither borders nor walls.

Jean-Baptiste Moens

Slide 11 – Jean Baptiste Moens.

There is no doubt that Moens from Brussels was the world's first stamp dealer. However, he too was initially just a bookseller. He is said to have started collecting in 1852 (which cannot be proven). It is documented that he first referred to himself as a stamp dealer in the imprint of a book published in 1858. In the first issue of the Magazin in May 1863, the third edition of his catalogue (handbook) with illustrations was already presented, and the anonymous author of the article - likely Carl Zschiesche - stated that the first two editions from 1862 had already been widely distributed. As early as the 4th June 1861, Moens had announced his plans for such a catalogue in the newspaper L'Étoile Belge - perhaps the first advertisement for a philatelic-literature product. The first stamp list, however, was published by someone else: Oscar Berger-Levrault in September 1861. It wasn't printed, but only reproduced, and only for friends, in an estimated print run of 40 - 50 copies. Moens was definitely included; he was also one of the first to be mentioned in the Magazin.

Slide 12 – Jean-Baptiste Moens' Catalogue

And what about Zschiesche & Köder themselves? Their first price list, probably presented at the Leipzig Autumn Fair, is now known. The prices were even handwritten! The print run couldn't have been very large. It's impossible to definitively say when Zschiesche & Köder began dealing in stamps - or perhaps not yet. Certainly from 1862 onwards. But the company's main business was originally only antiques and coins, not stamps. These were added gradually - presumably starting in 1862.

Slide 13 – Durr's Catalogue

Dürr's bookshop in Leipzig was a competitor of Zschiesche. Richard Claudius worked for it, and the owners at that time were likely O. A. Edelmann (from 1852) and Otto Friedrich Dürr (from 1858). According to the German Publishers and Booksellers Association, the bookshop had already existed since the 7th May 1652, with its founder Christoph Cellarius. The company included several printing works, which formed the core business of the affiliated publishing house. This publishing house also launched its first catalogue in 1862 - at the same time as Zschiesche's - and its first albums, which Richard Claudius also oversaw. The company first appeared in the Magazin with advertisements in January 1864 (under Richard Claudius), but it undoubtedly ranks among the first companies in Germany to have made its mark on the literary world. That this didn't last long may also be due to the fact that Dürr's bookshop was not a philatelic publisher, but rather had a completely different focus: education, philosophy and culture. Early philately probably didn't fit into that long-term context.

This may explain why Gustav Wuttig, another bookseller in Leipzig, who had already offered his catalogue and the sixth edition of his "Stamp Album" in August 1863, apparently took over the philately section (if one could even call it that) shortly thereafter. In the February issue of the Magazin, dated 25th January 1864, he announced that: According to the advertisement from Dürr's bookstore here in the book trade journal, this album (which was previously issued jointly with the aforementioned firm) has now passed into my own and sole publishing house and is therefore only available from me. Please do not confuse my stamp album with a stamp album published by Dürr's bookstore without regard to my acknowledged ownership and publishing rights, and please pay close attention to my company when placing orders.

Gustav Wuttig was also one of the first and at that time, proprietor of the Literarischen Museums in Leipzig. Besides him, Friedrich Ludwig should also be mentioned, who in the first issue of the Magazin also advertised his album published by the commission publisher G. E. Schulze in Leipzig.

Album and catalogue makers, or rather, publishers! These were usually publishing houses, bookstores, and printing companies, often in co-operation with experienced booksellers. Were these collectors? The first collectors? Certainly not, at least not that we know of. However, they could be considered part of the group of dealers, the "accessory dealers" as we would call them today.

So let's stick with dealers for now, but this time with "real" stamp dealers. Here, we find an early advertisement from Stafford Smith of Bath in May 1863. He is said to have traded in southern England from 1861/62 and became a world-renowned "pure" stamp dealer and philatelic catalogue publisher.

Oskar Jann from Breslau, who appears in the "Magazin" from July 1863 onward, is also among these early dealers. Likewise, Wilhelm Reichel from Kaufbeuren, Gustav Spehr from Wismar, Pierre Mahé and Justin Lallier from Paris, Leopold Priebatsch from Breslau, Georg Zechmeyer from Nuremberg, Moritz Ruhl from Leipzig and Jeanne Elb in Dresden, all of whom advertised in the Magazin in 1863.

Slide 14 -Wilhelm Reichel

Let's take a closer look at a few names. Wilhelm Reichel became known in 1864 for his Börsenblatt für den Briefmarkensammler [Trading Journal for Stamp Collectors], the first issue of which he sent out free of charge, according to his advertisement in January 1864. But not for long, because in an advertisement by Gustav Wuttig in the Magazin No.15 of the 1st July 1864, p.119, he announces: As a continuation of the 'Börsenblatt für den Briefmarkenhandel', previously published by G. A. Reichel in Kaufbeuren, which has been transferred to the publishing house of Ernst Roschlau in Coburg, the 'Allgemeine Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung' [General German Stamp Journal] will be published under his editorship from the 1st July onwards under the amended and more appropriate title. Published by Ernst Roschlau in Coburg. ..., the distribution rights for the book trade have been transferred to the undersigned.

And in the Magazin No.15 of the 1st July 1864, on page 119, Wuttig announced that the distribution of the new Allgemeine Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, published by Ernst Roschlau in Coburg starting in July 1864, and its distribution to the book trade had been exclusively transferred to his bookstore and himself. The end of the year also marked the end of the journal.

Slide 15 – Pierre Mahé

Pierre Mahé and Justin Lallier became world-famous. Lallier, from June 1862, was the first album publisher, while Mahé became one of the most important stamp dealers and catalogue publishers of the 19th century. Mahé had been dealing in stamps independently since 1861 and around 1875 became secretary to Philipp von Ferrari, whose vast collections he subsequently managed.

Slide 17 – Georg Zechmeyer

Georg Zechmeyer from Nuremberg was perhaps the largest wholesaler of stamps, as well as imitations and facsimiles, in the 19th century. He supplied countless stationery shops, bookstores, and kiosks throughout Europe. He initially claimed to be the oldest, or first, stamp dealer in Germany, but later revised this claim, limiting his territory to Bavaria. However, he was certainly in business from 1863 onward.

Slide 18 – Moritz Ruhl, Leipzig (1864)

Moritz Ruhl from Leipzig is known for playing cards featuring postage stamp motifs (1863) and for his Briefmarken-Freund [Stamp Friend] a magazine published in installments starting in 1864 and also advertised in the Magazin. These were the first large-format drawings of postage stamps based on the original stamp designs. He had 96 of these produced by 1865, and they are now considered literary rarities.

The name of a woman, Jeanne Elb, might come as a surprise. Was she an early stamp dealer?

Her advertisement first appeared in the Magazin No.8 of the 1st December 1863, on page 61, with the address Mad. Jeanne W.e Elb in Dresden, Schössergasse No. 5, III [3rd district] She recommended albums of rare stamps and small assortments of partly new, partly used specimens as Christmas gifts, priced from 15 to 60 silver groschen and more. Also revealing is the note: Catalogues are available there upon receipt of 5 Sgr. postage paid.

On the 1st May 1864, two further advertisements followed, one in French and one in English, in which Mrs. Elb sought to buy, sell, or exchange stamps from collectors and dealers. In the Magazin No. 16 of the 1st August 1864, p.125, she (now Jeanne, widow Elb) offered unused Prussian envelopes as rarities. So, was she apparently a dealer after all?

The name Elb is puzzling, as it is known from literature. A Ferdinand Elb from Dresden is said to have produced forgeries (facsimiles) as early as 1858. He is still credited today with forging/producing fantasy stamps of German local issues and the Berlin City Express Post (1859). Around 1865/66, he produced an excellent lithographic forgery of the 3-mark Saxon stamp. His altered, or rather falsified, covers for Finland's first issue of 1845 also became widely known. Was he a relative? Given their shared residence in Dresden, that seems likely. But Madame was French - how could that be?

Further clues can be found in the early history of auctions, as the first auction in Europe that also included postage stamps took place in Paris more than 150 years ago. More precisely, on the 29th December 1865, at the Hôtel Drouot in Paris. At that time, the stock of a stamp dealer, namely Josef W. Elb, was sold there for 800 French francs. This dealer, Josef W. Elb, who died in Paris on the 4th November 1865, was originally a journalist and translator from Dresden who had lived in Paris since around 1848 and earned extra income through the stamp trade. Elb (he was the uncle of Ferdinand Elb, who also became known for an early stamp catalogue in 1864) had been trading for two years, according to his "colleague" Arthur Maury, and his entire estate was auctioned off: this included stamps, but also his household goods and much more⁽¹¹⁾.

- (11) See: A. Maury, in: Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste, No.17, 15th November 1865, p.135; also Pierre Mahé: Les Marchands de Timbres-Poste d'Autrefois et leurs Catalogues, Amiens, 1908, pp.351-355.

A brief mention should be made of the 1864 catalogue, including a price list with descriptions of all postage stamps and postmarks issued and planned since the very beginning of stamp issuance up to the present day 2,800 items. published in Dresden and comprised 132 pages. It was authored by Ferdinand Elb. Supplements to the catalog appeared in 1864, 1866, and 1867. Suppantisch later attested that the catalogue and its 2,800 listed items was compiled from "official sources", meaning information from the postal administrations.

Slide 19 – Victor Suppantisch

Speaking of Suppantisch - and this brings us to the early collectors - there is an advertisement in the Magazin No.14 of the 1st June 1864, p.112: Suppantischek, Victor resident of Graz/Styria. Offers 1 Thaler each for every 40 overseas or 80 non-German stamps. For any two overseas stamps, he sends 16 different Austrian ones. – Yes, that's our Suppantisch, who decades later became known as President of the Senate in Vienna, and who from 1882 onwards collected only philatelic literature, sold his stamps, and became world-famous as a bibliophile. He too - born in Ljubljana in 1838 - was one of the very first collectors!

While his name remains unforgettable in Graz until his death in 1919, and even to this day, the names of other collectors have largely faded into obscurity. I would like to mention two names: W. Th. Clausius from Frankfurt and Prof. Dr. Volpi from Munich. Volpi's collection was even featured in more detail in the Magazin No. 22 of the 1st February 1865, pp.170-171. It was described as a unique collection, the first volume of which (3,000 items, including 1,500 essays) significantly exceeded the value of comparable collections in France and England. Housed in an Imperial Folio album, each page was said to be handcrafted, and almost all the stamps were "new and clean". Among them was a complete sheet of the old Austrian 4 Kreuzer stamp of the Bavarian 1-pfennig coin from 1849. Dr. Volpi had acquired these rarities solely through his connections with ambassadors and government ministries. Sauley [actually Sauley], Herpin, and Primoli in Paris, as well as Berger-Levrault in Strasbourg, had recognized his album as the finest during their visits. Volpi intended to create two more such albums, one for envelopes and the other for non-European stamps, of which he also possessed almost a complete collection.

The name Clausius raises eyebrows, as it is known that the Literarische Museum listed W. Th. Clausius, Dr. Joseph, and W. Th. Israel as contributors to its catalogue in 1865, also in its "Magazine". Three early collectors. The relationship between W. Th. Clausius and an M. Clausius, whose collection was auctioned on the 11th August 1873, in London by the auction house of Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson, & Hodge, is unknown to me. The description stated that the collection of one of the premier German collectors, M. Clausius, was being auctioned, consisting of 1,804 stamps, 540 postal stationery fragments, and 265 complete letters. The entire stamp collection was divided into 96 lots, about which an unnamed author later commented⁽¹²⁾ that the descriptions of these lots gave the catalogue reader absolutely no idea what the collection actually contained, meaning it was simply sold off cheaply.

- (12) See: Another Auction Sale, in: The American Journal of Philately, 15th September 1873, pp.154–155.

We are nearing the end. Not without briefly examining three names of early German philatelists whom I would describe as rather "dubious". The first was Christian Mann, or Christian Mann Jr., as he initially called himself. This young Christian Mann from Leipzig (Ritterstrasse 39) appears with his first advertisement in the Magazin No.3 of the 1st July 1863, p.24. He recommended himself for the purchase and sale of all types of postage stamps. He reappeared with his recommendation in the Magazin No.5 of the 1st September 1863, p.40.

In Magazin No.10 of the 1st February 1864, on p.79, Mann again advertised his "always complete stock". He continued to send out catalogues for 5 Ngr. [Neugroschen] On page 80, Mann placed an advertisement with a remarkable text: I am looking for a position for a young man who thoroughly understands the stamp trade. - Brühl already interpreted this advertisement as a self-promotion! In Magazin No.13 of the 1st May 1864, on page 103, Mann was looking for all discontinued German stamps in unused condition. On page 104, Mann placed another advertisement, offering various individual items, as well as his catalogue, again for 5 Ngr. In Magazin No.16 of the 1st September 1864, on page 135, he offered stamps of the Sandwich Islands as genuine specimens.

In the Magazin No.17 of 1st September 1864, supplement, Mann announced the publication of a directory of European stamp dealers and asked all stamp dealers to send him their exact address by September 1st (!). Advertisements and classified ads would also be accepted, with a split line for 2 Ngr. He now gave his address as Ritterstrasse 32 in Leipzig. In Magazin No.19 of the 1st November 1864, p.149, he wrote: I recommend stamps from all countries at rock-bottom prices, guaranteeing authenticity. I grant dealers a high discount. Catalogue 5 Sgr.

In Magazin No.21 of the 1st January 1865, p.165, it was stated that his Directory of European Stamp Dealers had been published by Hermann Luppe in Leipzig. Price: 10 Ngr. BUT: In MfB No. 23/January 1, 1865, p. 165, it was stated that his "Directory of European Stamp Dealers" had been published by Hermann Luppe in Leipzig. Price: 10 Ngr. BUT: In Magazin No.23 of the 1st March 1865 on page 182, he announced that due to closure of my business he was selling 50% of his still significant stamp stock and would continue to send out his catalogue for 2½ Ngr.

Slide 20 – Christian Mann

In the Magazin No.24 of the 1st April 1865: In a supplement, the Literarisches Museum published a half-page advertisement about this still underage lad, who allegedly used a fictitious company, Chr. Mann Junior, and was selling his stock of stamps at 50% below their own prices. A fictitious order had revealed that even the most common stamps that had been ordered were scarcely available, and if they were, then at significantly more than 100% of their own prices. The article continued: To further characterize Mr. M., we add that he has been selling, and attempted to sell, "counterfeit" stamps - those that any dealer, however limited his understanding, would immediately recognize - right here on the square, under a guarantee of authenticity.

Christian Mann, and with that I can summarize the available findings, was indeed a shady character. He sold genuine and counterfeit stamps, mixed together without hesitation, and maintained close contact with other facsimile dealers. His so-called catalogues were pirated copies of other catalogues (e.g., Bauschke's), who also took legal action against him. In 1871, Georg Sartori sued him for copyright infringement. Sartori was cut from the same cloth, as Moschkau later revealed: he, too, was one of the many dealers who sold facsimiles as originals. Sartori, of course, also placed advertisements in the Magazin and was likely still a teenager in 1864/65. Both certainly had contact with Philipp Spiro from Hamburg, who at that time was flooding the market with his facsimiles in vast quantities. Spiro himself also advertised in the Magazin from October 1864 onward. Spiro's own magazine also appeared around this time, but only a few issues were published. After that, he seemed to prefer distribution through third parties, as this made business easier.

Slide 21 – Gustav Bauschke

Slide 22 – Georg Sartori & Paul Norberto

To illustrate the importance and illuminating nature of addresses and senders, I would like to conclude with an example of a price list. This price list dates from 1865 and was compiled by the aforementioned Georg Sartori. It was first presented by its former owner, Dr. Heinz Jaeger (today, thanks to a donation from Dr. Jaeger, it belongs to the BDPh), in the IBRA 73 catalogue. I have described it in more detail in the publication series of the Consilium

Philatelicum⁽¹³⁾. The handwritten list, subsequently reproduced in facsimile, comprised several pages. Much has already been said about Sartori; there is no need to repeat this or the information provided in 2004 here.

- (13) Edited by Wolfgang Maassen, Volume 5: From the Early Days of German Philately, Bonn 2004, pp.39-47.

I recently came across the image again. My gaze faltered - this time at the address. Upon closer inspection, one can read Mr. Paul Norberto, Turin. In 2004, this meant absolutely nothing to me. Norberto? An Italian, then? Ten years later, I was wiser, having visited Raffaele Diena's library and examined a stack of early prospectuses and letters from stamp dealers dating back to 1862/63. The name Paul Norberto (alias J. Arduin) appeared frequently there.

Anyone familiar with the famous Crawford Catalogue might also have come across a note that read:

NORBERTO (PAUL) pseud. [i.e. J. ARDUIN] Price-list of old Italian stamps warranted genuine for sale with P. N. Turin, [1864].

4°. 11 ¾ in. 1 leaf. Printed on one side only.

* Printed by autographic lithography with the name and address of the publisher filled in by hand with pen and ink. Mis. St. Pamph. 91 (42).*

Paul Norberto, or J. Arduin, was an Italian dealer with worldwide contacts. The selection of scans available to me - often unfortunately not of the highest quality - confirms this. Among them are many early catalogue publishers, as well as numerous advertisers in the Magazin. These include, for example, our “friend” Christian Mann, the Literarisches Museum, and others.

To summarize: Der Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler helps us in our search for early collectors and dealers, but it doesn't help us definitively identify the very first one, only “the first ones” However, it is invaluable today to have such facts in verifiable form. Unfortunately, this only applies from May 1863 onward. If one wants to find earlier traces, one must look for daily newspapers from that time, perhaps even from 1860 onward, in the cities mentioned here. The Illustrierten Zeitung of the city of Leipzig should certainly yield results - I think.

Slide 23 – W. Dudley Atlee

Slide 24 – E. Doble

Slide 25 – Letter from 1856

Slide 26 – A. C. Kline

Slide 27 – Literarisches Museum

Slide 28 – J. -B. Moens

Slide 29 – Mount Brown

Slide 30 – Christian Mann & Paul Norberto

Slide 31 – Christian Mann

Slide 32 – Philipp Rondell & Paul Norberto

pp.55-83

Wolfgang Maassen

First collectors – first dealers. Initial research

Although much has been written in recent years about the early pioneering days of German philately, it cannot yet be said that these early years, from approximately 1862 to 1875, have been truly researched and thoroughly documented. The available sources are too fragmentary, and even the remaining literary relics have only been partially analyzed. What is known from later years is the desire of philatelists of that era to claim the “right of first birth” in philately. Almost everyone wanted to be the first: be it the first collector, the first dealer, or the first in Bavaria, the first in Hamburg, and so on. This phenomenon is not unique to Germany. It can be found in England as well, where Stanley Gibbons claimed this “right of first birth” before Stafford Smith, and also in Belgium, where Jean-Baptiste Moens expected the same, given that he had already begun trading in stamps in 1854. That may be the case, but to this day – if one excludes his own statements – it is no longer provable.

The question then arises: what can be considered acceptable evidence? A self-report from a later period would hardly be valid without further substantiation. Evidence in the scientific sense could consist of primary or secondary sources that have survived and can therefore still be verified by anyone today. These include newspapers, magazines of all kinds, and also surviving letters from that early period. A clearly datable photograph could be helpful, but such photographs are rare. Later biographies of philatelists living earlier are of little value as secondary sources, as they were largely based on statements that were not verified even at the time of their writing; their truthfulness, cannot be proven. This leaves only the aforementioned primary sources.

Their disadvantage is that such sources - not only in Germany - only exist from around 1862/63 onward. Exceptions prove the rule however, as the surviving literary output (unfortunately) only began at that time. Before that, only letters, i.e., individual objects, can be recognized as evidence today. But their number is also very manageable.

Another obstacle complicates research: Early collectors were often reluctant to appear in a daily or specialist journal using their full names, or even their place of residence. Abbreviations or aliases, however, generally do not allow for unambiguous identification. Consequently, in a scholarly sense, only those names that are clearly identifiable and can be precisely dated can be recorded.

The following research attempts to contribute to this effort by, among other things, drawing on information from the first German specialist journal, the Magazin für Briefmarken-Sammler (MfB) by Zschiesche & Köder. During its four-year publication period, from the 1st May 1863, to the 1st April 1867, a total of 48 issues of the journal appeared. The author recently had the good fortune to acquire what appears to be a “complete” run. While his existing run was also complete in terms of continuous pagination, it was quickly discovered that a number of inserts and the unpaginated supplements were missing. These supplements are of considerable importance for researching the first collectors/dealers, as they usually contain further names of those active at the time - at least those who wished to be publicly known.

ZZZZZ

It should be emphasized again that this study focuses on the names of philatelists who demonstrably left their mark in or after Germany. It is therefore not intended as a comprehensive worldwide overview of all countries. Given the associated effort and the space required, many readers will likely understand this limitation.

The “Magazine for Stamp Collectors” (1863–1867. Evaluation up to approximately mid-1865)

The following compilation is chronological. That is, for each year, the names of philatelists active at that time are listed, and, where possible, their activities are briefly described. For companies, this also includes a brief description of their products or services, which in turn provides important information, e.g., on the publication dates of albums and catalogs (even if an announcement is missing the fact that the publication dates in a magazine are not necessarily the same as actual production dates, but rather reflect planned production data.)

Many names are and remain “one-hit wonders.” That is, they were collectors who were looking for something or offered something for a limited time. They do not reappear, at least not in this magazine. This does not necessarily mean that their collecting phase was short-lived; that would be an unsubstantiated conclusion, even if it might be true in individual cases. Nevertheless, these names are also among the “first.”

One more word beforehand: Even a glance at this first German specialist magazine makes it clear that early philately was an international affair, as one already finds the names of numerous companies from abroad that had active trade relations with German collectors and dealers. Reason enough to consider them as well.

1863

Moens, J. B. In the MfB No. 1/May 1, 1863, p. 6, two new publications by Moens, who at that time was already “rightly called the king of Belgian stamp collecting,” are announced. These are his “Manuel de Moens” (3rd enlarged edition) and “Illustrations du Manuel du Collectionneur de Timbres-poste” (Illustrations to the Stamp Collector's Handbook). Zschiesche (he was probably the anonymous editor of the paper) confirms that at that time the first two editions of the handbook were already very widely distributed, and that the new, third edition was valuable, enriched with new, previously unlisted issues. An error (The cataloging of a ½ penny stamp from Newfoundland) is included in his catalog, just as it is in the English catalog by Mount Brown, because this stamp does not exist.

An advertisement on page 8 gives the exact title of the handbook: “Manuel du Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste, ou Nomenclature générale de tous les timbres adoptés dans les divers pays de l’univers.” The volume of illustrations forms the second part of this catalog.

Zschiesche & Köder, the publishers, announce in MfB No. 1/May 1, 1863, page 6, their intention to publish their catalog in installments in the MfB (the first installment appears on page 7: I. Europe/Baden to Denmark). The stamps are listed in chronological order, arranged by year of issue and denominations, followed by the postal stationery (covers) for each country, if issued.

The prices are in Neugroschen, with only one price category, meaning no distinction is made between unused and stamped items.

The second series (Danube Princely Principalities to Great Britain) appeared in MfB No. 2/June 1, 1863, p. 15. The third appeared in MfB No. 3/July 1, 1863, p. 22 (continuation of Great Britain to Hanover). In the same issue, an advertisement on p. 24 announced that a new, more complete, and improved catalog, paperback and in octavo format, would be published in the second half of July for 8 Neugroschen. The serialized catalog also continued. The fourth series (Hanover to Lombardy and Venetia) appeared in MfB No. 4/August 1, 1863, p. 30.

In August 1863, the separate printed catalog was advertised in MfB No. 4/August 1, 1863, p. 32, under the title "Catalog of postage stamps issued from 1840 to July 1863 with printed and reduced prices. Containing approximately 1300 items," for the price of 8 Neugroschen. The catalog now included a preface in German, English, and French and was elegantly designed. It was listed as having 80 pages. An identical advertisement appeared in MfB No. 5/September 1, 1863, p. 39, as well as in later issues (see, for example, MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, on p. 55, and December 1863, on p. 61).

The fifth installment of the serialized catalog, published in MfB No. 5/September 1, 1863, p. 38, covers Lübeck to Modena. The sixth installment, in MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 45, covers Naples to Oldenburg. The seventh installment (Austria to Parma) appears in MfB No. 6/November 1, 1863, on p. 54. The eighth installment (Parma–Prussia) was published in MfB No. 9/January 1, 1864, on p. 70. After this, there was a hiatus, and the serialized catalogs no longer appeared in the journal itself, but from May 1864 onward as a supplement. These serialized catalogs were now compiled according to the third printed edition of the catalog. In November 1864, these serialized catalogs in the form of supplements were discontinued entirely. The series had only progressed as far as "America / Bahamas."

(Note: In the two 1963 issues of the journal available to the author, the serialized catalog ends in November, as there is no continuation in December 1863. This is unless it was printed as a supplement that was not included in the existing copies. In one of the two bound copies, the serialized catalog is found these supplements, beginning in May 1864, were designated as "Supplement ... No. 13" (which also served as the issue number for the same publication).

In an editorial "On the Opening of the Second Year" in MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, on page 97, the publisher of the journal announced: "Recently, we have had to refrain from continuing our stamp catalog several times, but since the desire has been expressed from various quarters that the publication of the catalog is valuable to many collectors, we have decided to resume it. However, in order not to further restrict the space for textual information, this continuation will henceforth appear in special supplements."

Ludwig, Friedrich

In the MfB No. 1/May 1, 1863, p. 8, the publishing house of G. E. Schulze in Leipzig placed an advertisement for the "Postage Stamp Album" by editor Friedrich Ludwig. The album is in landscape format and comprises 150 pages, printed on heavy writing paper. The description reads: "The Postage Stamp Album contains, in addition to the latest geographical notes on all countries of the world that use postage stamps, precise information on the color and value of each stamp, an exact drawing, lithographed from originals, of the size and shape of all postage stamps issued to date, and finally, a comparative overview of the coin types in circulation in various countries."

This advertisement may be for the first edition of this larger album, which the author has not yet seen

The landscape format was apparently copied from the French Lallier Album, first published in June 1862. The description should not be misinterpreted as meaning that the stamps were depicted; rather, only placement frames were drawn, usually in a somewhat approximate format. Comparable advertisements appear in subsequent issues of the magazine, for example, in MfB No. 4/August 1, 1863, p. 31; in MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 48; in MfB No. 6/November 1, 1863, p. 55; and in MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, p. 63. Hamm, J. V. In MfB No. 1/1. In May 1863, on page 8, Hamm advertised his "Postage Stamp Polka," published by C. F. W. Siegel in Leipzig. It was evidently a piano score adorned with "42 colorful postage stamps."

Smith & Smith, Stafford

In MfB No. 1/May 1, 1863, p. 8, he offers colored coats of arms and monograms for decorating albums. A package containing 50 different items could be ordered from him in Bath. In MfB No. 3/July 1, 1863, p. 24, the company advertises its "descriptive price catalog of several hundred British, colonial, and foreign stamps. Illustrated with impressions of rare stamps." In MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 46, the publication of the "One-and-Six-Penny Packet of Arms, Crests, Monograms, etc." containing 100 different coats of arms and monograms is advertised. For the first time, the company signs its name with the note "Dealer in foreign stamps to His Royal Highness the Prince of Orange."

While the May issue listed the address as Bath, George Street No. 13, the July issue omitted the street name. The October issue changed the house number "13" is now highlighted in bold as the new house number.

August Fiebiger, the Leipzig merchant (likely mistakenly spelled Fibiger at first), residing at Ritterstrasse 1 (later advertisements include the addition: "Clothing Store"), advertises in the MfB No. 2/June 1, 1863, p. 16, a "beautiful album" with 315 stamps, including well-preserved and rare ones, for 8 pfennigs. For comparison: On the same page, Zschiesche & Köder advertises its price list with stamps from all countries and its stock, which allegedly contains over 1,000 types. In the MfB No. 3/July 1, 1863, p. 22, Fiebiger again recommends a collection, this time with 300 stamps for 7 pfennigs. The same advertisement appears in the MfB No. 4/1. August 1863, p. 31. A month later, Fiebiger again offers "a fine album" in MfB No. 5/September 1, 1863, p. 39. This time he even describes the top values contained among the 355 stamps. In MfB No. 7/November 1, 1863, on p. 55, he offers an album with 300 well-preserved stamps for 7 Thalers, and the same in MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, on p. 63.

Oskar Jann from Breslau, Schmiedebrücke (No. 24), advertises in the MfB No. 3/July 1, 1863, p. 23, the album of Friedrich Ludwig, of which he has two copies (one of them bound in blue shagreen) with 426 and 820 stamps respectively. He also offers his stock of several thousand stamps from all over the world and initial compilations of 60 stamps for newcomers. In the MfB No. 5/September 1, 1863, p. 40, he also advertises his price list, which is available for 7 ½ Sgr., and in another advertisement on the same page, he is looking for various rarer European issues (Mercury- Stamps (Bayer's 1st issue, Tuscany, Naples, etc.). In MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 47, Jann announces in his advertisement that he currently has a selection of 1,200 items in stock. The same advertisement appears in MfB No. 7/November 1, 1863, on p. 55. In MfB

No. 8/December 1, 1863, a similar advertisement appears, but now over 1,250 stamps are in stock.

Israel, Wilhelm Theodor. The collector living in Eybau is seeking a number of (mostly rare) stamps from all continents in MfB No. 3/July 1, 1863, p. 23.

Mann, Christian. The young Christian Mann from Leipzig (Ritterstr. 39) appears with his first advertisement in MfB No. 3/1. July 1863, p. 24. He recommends himself for the purchase and sale of all types of postage stamps. In MfB No. 5/1 September 1863, p. 40, he appears again with his recommendation.

Wilhelm Reichel, based in Kaufbeuren, offers black 1-Ker Bavaria stamps, each for 6 Neugroschen. See MfB No. 4/August 1, 1863, p. 31. In the next issue, also in MfB No. 4/August 1, 1863, p. 31, Reichel (now advertising under the name Wilhelm Reichel & Co.) promotes his stamps under the bold, large-print headline "The Cheapest!!", including "a stamp consignment... from which unsuitable items will be returned," i.e., selection consignments! In MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 47, the company again places an advertisement explicitly as a "stamp dealer" and offers various stamps for sale. In MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, on p. 62, he announces the publication of his new magazine, the "Börsenblatt für den Briefmarkenhandel" (Trade Journal for the Stamp Trade), available on commission from the publisher G. A. Reichel in Kaufbeuren, but also "through all bookstores and post offices." This journal also includes a "Stamp Exchange." Furthermore, he announces a "Stamp Subscription" starting January 1, 1864. The announcement states:

"Each subscriber will receive 50, 100, 200, and 300 genuine and flawless stamps in installments, and as a bonus, a free stamp album!" Further details can be found in a separate prospectus, which will be sent postage paid.

Prophet, Albert (resident of Ad. Gropengiesser, Osterode/Harz) In MfB No. 4/August 1, 1863, p. 31, this gentleman offers large quantities of Hanover stamps (sometimes up to 150).

Feiglstock, Ignaz. In the MfB No. 4/August 1, 1863, p. 31, the Vienna-based philatelist seeks Mercury stamps wholesale and in retail, also for exchange. At the same time, he also offers 24 old/newer Austrian stamps. He repeats his exchange advertisement in the MfB No. 7/November 1, 1863, on p. 55.

Anton, Wilhelm. According to the advertisement in the MfB No. 4/August 1, 1863, p. 31, a "stamp game" (with color illustrations of the stamps, a map of the world, and a value chart of all coins worldwide, etc.) is available in bookstores. It was compiled by Wilhelm Anton (Anton being the family name). It is described as being designed for "older youth and their friends" and comes in an elegant case.

Wuttig, G. (Gustav) As a bookstore in Leipzig, Wuttig advertised a complete catalog of his stamp stock in the MfB No. 4/August 1, 1863, p. 32 ("large stocks at the lowest prices"), as well as a "Stamp Album (6th edition)." The description reads: "In elegant cloth bindings in five different editions at 16 Sgr., 25 Sgr., 1 Thlr., 10 Sgr., in leather binding at 2 Thlr.; inexpensive edition (without text) cart. at 10 Sgr." In the MfB No. 5/September 1, 1863, p. 39, Wuttig differentiated regarding the mailing of price lists: these were free, but those with sales prices cost 5 Sgr. each.

Spehr, Gustav

The Wismar-based dealer placed an advertisement in the MfB No. 4/August 1, 1863, p. 32, for his wholesale stock of overseas postage stamps. He also advertised in the MfB No. 5/September 1, 1863, p. 40, where he highlighted free shipping of the Price Courante. In the MfB No. 7/November 1, 1863, he offered various higher-quality individual stamps on p. 56.

Meyer, J.

The advertiser of a larger advertisement in the MfB No. 5/September 1, 1863, p. 39, explicitly addressed his (bulk) offer to stamp dealers in the headline. He was a watchmaker by trade and resided in Dresden. A similar advertisement from the watchmaker appeared in the MfB No. 6/1. October 1863, p. 46.

Rosenberg, Alexander. The vendor located at Jägerzeile No. 42, 3rd courtyard in Vienna, advertises in MfB No. 5/September 1, 1863, p. 40, used Austrian postage stamps, which can be purchased for a small sum of money or exchanged for other stamps of any type. For flawless copies guaranteed! In MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, on page 148, he offers selections of rare used and unused stamps, and also unused German stamps on page 149. MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, supplement: Ships selections of rare stamps from around the world.

Seidler, Wilhelm J. P. S.

In a small advertisement, Seidler, residing in Leipzig, offers a large selection of overseas stamps at the lowest possible prices in MfB No. 5/September 1, 1863, on page 40.

Mahé, P. (Pierre) Mahé emphasizes in his larger advertisement that his shop at 18 rue de Cannelles in Paris is the one that "holds the largest stock of stamps in France and offers the cheapest selection." Mahe recommends his extensive selection of Italian holdings and is seeking to purchase numerous German, Austrian, and English positions. See: MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 46

Lallier, Justin. His album was offered in the MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 46, not by Lallier himself, but by the dispatch office of the journal "Le Timbre-Poste" (Galerie Bortier, No. 7, Marché de à Madeleine in Brussels (= J.-B. Moens)) in its second edition.

Müller, H.

This is one of the numerous advertisements in which the seller can only be reached at a different address (in this case: at D. Cordes & Co. in Bremen). In MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 47, Müller offers various individual stamps, but also 50 different stamps at 10 Sgr. each. A second advertisement appears on the same page He is looking to sell collections and stamp albums (with 375 stamps for 10 Thaler courtesy).

Müller, Th.

In the MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, on page 48, there is another advertisement from a Mr. Müller, this time with the abbreviated first name "Th." and contactable at the address Mecke & Stock, also in Bremen. Coincidence?

Franke, C. A.

The Leipzig vendor (An der Pleisse 2, Barfussmühle) is offering a nice album with 308 stamps for 7 Thaler. See: MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 47. The same advertisement appears in MfB

No. 7/November 1, 1863, on page 55 and MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, on page 63.

Rosenberg, Alexander

Address: Vienna, Jägerzeile 42, 3rd courtyard. Advertisement in MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 48. Purchase/exchange of all Austrian and Lombard postage stamps, wholesale and retail.

Priebatsch, Leopold. The company advertises as an art dealer in Breslau. It sells rare stamps and albums and also guarantees the dispatch of complete price lists upon presentation of 5 Sgr. MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 48. Same advertisement in MfB No. 7/November 1, 1863, on p. 55.

Zechmeyer, G. (Georg). An advertisement from the Nuremberg dealer appears for the first time in MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 48, in which he offers Saxon 3-pfennig and Bavarian stamps from the first issue onward.

Hartwig, C.

Resident of St. Petersburg, Vasily Ostrov, 1st Line, House 36. H. offers Scandinavian stamps from various countries and Russian stamps for sale. MfB No. 6/October 1, 1863, p. 48. A similar advertisement appeared in MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, p. 63.

Effinger, E.

This vendor resided in Mannheim, M. 4.1. In MfB No. 7/November 1, 1863, p. 56. He advertised the sale of stamps from all countries.

Ruhl, M.

In the MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, on page 59, something is presented for the first time under "Literature" (!). It is described as "an interesting game for young and old," namely "The Stamp Exchange." The reviewer ("-n.") calls it something new and truly original. It is a parlor game in which the stamps used are "from all parts of the world... printed on heavy, satin-finished card stock in approximately eight times the size of the original stamps." The publisher was M. (Moritz) Ruhl from Leipzig. He placed an advertisement in the MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, on page 62, which stated that the game contained "60 large, magnificent illustrations of the most beautiful stamps from all parts of the world, along with 60 exchange and prize cards and 30 numbered tickets in an elegant carton for the price of 20 Ngr."

Langer, Ignaz. A vendor in Olomouc (at the address E. Hölzel) offers stamps from various countries, sold cheaply by the dozen. See: MfB No. 8/1 December 1863, on p. 61.

Löw, Josef: This dealer from Vienna (City 496, Bureau "Engländer") offered Austrian stamps as sets for sale/exchange. MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, p. 61.

Violet, S.

An Englishman from London (49 Tooley Street, Southwark, London SE) offered various stamps from British colonies by the dozen in MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, p. 61. His price list was available for 5 Ngr.

Clausius, W. Th.

The advertisement sought by the philatelist living in Frankfurt am Main (see: MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, p. 61) is interesting in several respects, as C. is looking for the stamps with reference to the Zschiesche catalog numbers! In the second edition of their catalog from July 1863, Zschiesche & Köder numbered all listed stamps from 1 to "infinity". That this system was not practical will be shown later.

Elb, Jeanne. For the first time, a woman appears as an advertiser, and indeed a Frenchwoman, as she identifies herself in the MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, on page 61, as "Madame Jeanne W. Elb in Dresden, Schössergasse No. 5, 3rd district." She recommends albums with rare stamps and small assortments of "partly new, partly used specimens" as Christmas gifts, priced from 15 to 60 Sgr and more. Also revealing is the note: "Catalogs are available there upon receipt of 5 Sgr."

Klemm, F. W.

The seller – see MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, on page 63 – resided in Osterode am Harz and offered 500 envelopes from the United States "cheap!!"

Rawll, G.

A larger advertisement from a London-based supplier (139 Leadenhall St.) reveals his worldwide offerings and his desire for correspondents in all countries. He places a second advertisement on the same page, listing each country individually. MfB No. 8/July 1, 1863, p. 63.

Burgk, Eugen, Ritterstrasse 26, Leipzig. He offers 115 old Modena envelopes, individually or in smaller lots. MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, p. 64.

Weil & Wertheimer. The company is located at Spitalstrasse No. 2 in Karlsruhe. MfB No. 8/1. December 1863, on page 64. She sends out "old and new Baden stamps and envelopes in a large selection at the lowest prices".

Krauss, Joh. Georg. The Nuremberg supplier is located at Breitegasse 506. According to his own statements, he maintains a "large stock of stamps at very low prices..." (MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, p. 64).

Polack, Neander. This supplier resides at Schaarmarkt 25 in Hamburg. In his advertisement (MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, p. 64), he emphasizes that "all types of stamps" are available from him.

This advertisement concludes the first year of publication of this journal. Not listed (See above.) These were advertisements whose clients were either not named or only identified by initials. Not listed individually were all the self-advertisements by Zschiesche & Köder, which appeared in abundance in every issue of the paper. These were predominantly advertisements through which they presented themselves—apart from their catalog—as antique and coin dealers. Z. & K. never referred to themselves as stamp dealers in 1863!

The issues from May to December comprised a total of 64 pages. Initially, there was usually only one page of advertisements, but later issues had two to four pages, with one page each dedicated to catalog updates. The December issue contained four pages of advertisements (without catalog updates).

Year 1864

Jann, Oscar, Breslau, Schmiedebrücke 24. MfB No. 9/January 1, 1864, p. 71. Similar offer as in 1863. Ditto in MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 94 (stock and price list for 1300 stamps). In MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, p. 104, he offers the same and his price list, the prices of which he has now reduced. Repeat advertisement in MfB No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 112.

Wertheimber, N. (?) A S. H. Adler appeared as a recommendation for this supplier in MfB No. 9/January 1, 1864, p. 71. Also in MfB No. 10/1. March 1864, on p. 87.

Rawll, G. (see above)

Further advertisement in MfB No. 9/January 1, 1864, on p. 71, and MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864 On page 79. Ditto in MfB No. 10/March 1, 1864, on page 88. Ditto in MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 120, MfB No. 16/September 1, 1864, p. 135. See also under "Clarke & Rawll".

Reichel, Wilh. & Co.

See above. Another advertisement for his new "Trade Journal for the Stamp Trade". Issue No. 1 will be sent free of charge as a trial issue. MfB No. 9/January 1, 1864, on page 71. The journal is published twice a month, and a quarterly subscription costs 12 Ngr. = 42 Kr. Rhenish.

Smith and Smith's, Stafford, see above. In this advertisement in MfB No. 9/January 1, 1864. In January 1864, on page 72, Smith advertised his "Descriptive Price Catalogue" and its new, revised and improved edition with more than 50 beautiful color illustrations. 18 pages, small quarto, in an illustrated cover, 6 pence (2 ½ groschen).

Roschlau, Ernst (see above). MfB No. 9/January 1, 1864, p. 72. Offers "very cheap stamps" from overseas. Based in Coburg.

Reiner, A.

Poste restante in Dresden. MfB No. 9/January 1, 1864, p. 72. Advertises offers from his "wholesale warehouse" (overseas).

Polack, Neander (see above). MfB No. 9/January 1, 1864, p. 72. Comparable advertisement.

Ballieu. In MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, p. 76, the "Guide de l'Amateur de Timbres-Poste" by "Z." (Zschiesche) is reviewed. This is the 2nd edition, 132 pages, published in Paris In the Ocav format, "contenant deux mille (2000) Timbres." Z. concedes that the catalog makes a "quite pleasing impression" externally, but 2000 entries is a number that far exceeds any album. For example, one would have to subtract 118 essays, 240 color nuances, 12 instruction stamps, 12 supplementary stamps, and 107 Hamburg private stamps, as well as a portion of the 236 older North American private stamps listed, to prevent an album from becoming excessively large. Besides a few other corrections that Z. considers necessary, he criticizes the consistent alphabetical arrangement of the countries. For instance, Brazil follows Bremen. He leaves it open to debate whether this is practical. In their own catalog, they intend to maintain the continental division.

Gustav Wuttig appears for the first time with a major advertisement in the MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, on page 78, dated January 25, 1864. He recommends to all collectors the recently published 8th (!) edition of the "Album for Stamps." The advertisement reads: "130 pages in landscape quarto format, with precise information and descriptions of all issued stamps, the fields printed only on one side, and the reverse side blank." The album was available in four versions:

a) on heavy writing paper:

No. 1. in an elegant half-linen binding, only 15 Ngr.

No. 2. in a full linen binding with gilt lettering, only 25 Ngr.

b) on heavy fine card stock

No. 3. in a full linen binding with gilt lettering and gilt edges, 1 Thlr. 5 Ngr.

No. 4, bound in shagreen leather with letterpress printing, gilt edges and clasp, 2 Thaler 15 Ngr.

An important supplementary note was included: "According to an advertisement from Dürr's bookstore here in the Book Exchange Gazette, this album (which was previously issued jointly by the aforementioned firm) has now been transferred to my own and sole publishing house and is therefore only available from me; please do not confuse my stamp album with a stamp album published by Dürr's bookstore without regard to my acknowledged ownership and publishing rights, and please pay close attention to my company when placing orders." At the same time, Wuttig advertised his extensive stock of stamps from all countries. A complete price list was available for 5 Ngr., according to the bookseller from Leipzig. The advertisement was repeated verbatim in the MfB No. 11/March 1, 1864, on page 86.

A review of this new 8th edition appeared in MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, on page 100. The reviewer ("L.") emphasizes that in this album only the left-hand pages are printed, leaving the right-hand and back pages blank. The stamp spaces are sized according to the largest stamps known to date, and even if smaller stamps are placed in the center, the red printed frame forms an attractive border. The review continues: "In the column to the left of the stamp spaces, among the geographical and statistical notes, the issues of the respective countries are listed in catalog form and numbered consecutively, corresponding to the numbers printed in the center of the spaces, thus greatly facilitating the insertion of stamps in the correct position. The arrangement of the issue is the album's unique feature so that the owner simultaneously possesses a complete catalog of all stamps issued up to 1864 (with the exception of Hamburg and North American private stamps).

The 9th edition of this album is reviewed by "L." in the MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, on pages 147/148. The title is listed as follows: "Album for Stamps. Edited by Gustav Bauschke with the collaboration of G. Wuttig. Ninth revised and improved edition. Cross-4. Leipzig 1864. G. Wuttig. Literary Museum." Thus, the album was created by Gustav Bauschke and published by the Literary Museum, for which Gustav Wuttig was apparently the proprietor at that time. The reviewer continues: "It contains ...a complete and easily navigable catalog of all stamps issued up to the present day, including North American private stamps, printed opposite the fields corresponding to the respective countries." He again praises the field sizes, which are exactly the same as those to be applied to these stamps, "so that all stamps are equidistant and the symmetry is not disturbed by gaps that are sometimes too wide and sometimes too narrow." However, the borders could be double-layered. Otherwise, the printing and paper are excellent.

An advertisement in the MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 150, lists the three versions in which this album is available:

I. at 25 Ngr. Bound in Callico

II. at 1 Thlr. 5 Ngr. Bound in Callico with rich gilt decoration and gilt edges

III. at 2 Thlr. 22 ½ Ngr. Bound in the finest shagreen leather with rich gilt decoration, Gilt edges and lock. Interleaved with writing and tissue paper. Same advertisement in MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 157. In MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 119, Wuttig announces that the distribution of the new "Allgemeine deutsche BriefmarkenZeitung" (General German Stamp Journal), published by Ernst Roschlau in Coburg starting in July 1864, and its direct debit for the book trade have been exclusively transferred to his bookstore, i.e., to him. In MfB No. 16/September 1, 1864, p. 135, W. offers his latest, carefully revised and supplemented "Price List of My Stamp Inventory, a complete catalog of all stamps issued up to the end of July 1864 with attached individual selling prices." Price: 5 Ngr.

Behrmann, J. H.

MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, p. 78: B. offers various stamps from all continents. His business was located in Hamburg, 24 Neustadt Fuhlentwiete. A similar advertisement appears in MfB No. 10/March 1, 1864, p. 86. It also appears in MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 119.

In MfB No. 17/September 1, 1864, p. 135, a similar advertisement appears for a "Stamp Dealer S. H. Behrmann, Hamburg." However, no street address is given. Is the "S" in the name a typo? In MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, supplement, the name is again "J. H. Behrmann." He offers numerous items worldwide and guarantees their authenticity.

Köhler, K. F.

offers a collection of 60,000 postage stamps, likely from another source, mostly Scandinavian, but also from other countries. MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, on p. 78

Müller, Th.

In an advertisement dated January 1864, this advertiser from Bremen announced that he had ceased all dealing in postage stamps. MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, p. 78. (The first dealer to abandon the postage stamp trade?)

Hirsche, Eduard, MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, p. 78: Located in Hamburg, Neueburg No. 25. Offering all types of postage stamps at low prices, also in exchange.

Claudius, Richard (Dürr's Bookstore) In an advertisement dated January 1864, the bookstore placed an ad in MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, p. 79, for an album by Richard Claudius entitled "Postage Stamp Album." 128 pages in landscape folio format on heavy white paper, with a detailed stamp description on the right-hand page and a sufficient number of blue-printed spaces on the left for placing the stamps. Three versions of the album were offered:

No. 1. in an elegant half-linen binding with embossed cover and gilt title. No. 2. in an elegant full-linen binding with embossed cover and gilt title. No. 3. in an elegant full-linen binding with richly gilded covers and clasp.

Prices have not yet been announced. In the MfB No. 10/March 1, 1864, on page 88, it states that the album has just been published. For the time being, only the three varieties are available, "but any other binding will be available in the shortest possible time." The same advertisement appears in the MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, on page 95, and in the MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, on page 101. This advertisement now mentions that this is the second edition of the album.

In issue 14 of the MfB (Märkische Volksblatt) on June 1, 1864, page 111, a new advertisement from Dürr's bookstore appears, stating that four different versions of the album are now available. In addition to the aforementioned Nos. 1 to 3, there is now a No. 0: (with text) in half-cloth, elegant card cover. The date of the text's composition is given as April 1864. The advertisement is repeated in MfB No. 15 on July 1, 1864, page 118, and in MfB No. 16 on August 1, 1864, page 128. In an advertisement in MfB No. 17, supplement dated September 1, 1864, this album is described as the second edition (date of the advertisement by Dürr's bookstore: July 1864).

... In another advertisement in the MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, supplement, a 4th (!) revised and corrected edition is offered as "just published" in four different versions at prices ranging from 12 Ngr. to 1 Thlr. Further description:

128 pages, landscape folio on heavy white paper, with a detailed stamp description on the left-hand page and a sufficient number of red-printed spaces on the left for placing the stamps (the reverse of the previous edition!). Four versions of the album were offered:

No. 0 (with text) in elegant half-cloth binding. No. 1 in elegant half-cloth binding with cover embossing and gilt title. No. 2 in elegant full-cloth binding with cover embossing and gilt title. No. 3 in elegant full-cloth binding with richly gilt covers and clasp.

Dürr's bookstore gives September 1864 as the date of this advertisement. The advertisement was repeated in the MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, as a supplement, and for one month thereafter later in the MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, supplement.

Franz, M.

(Lit. N. 69 in Mannheim) sends out an assortment of old Baden stamps for 12.5 Ngr. MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, on p. 79. Another advertisement in MfB No. 10/March 1, 1864, on p. 87, here with the sender's initials "Lit. N. 6, 7". In MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, on p. 93, another small advertisement, as well as on p. 95.

Mann Jr., Christian, MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, on p. 79. M. again recommends his "always complete stock". He continues to send out catalogs for 5 Ngr. On page 80, M. places an advertisement with a remarkable text: "I am looking for a position for a young man who thoroughly understands the stamp trade." – Brühl already interpreted this advertisement as a self-promotion! In MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, on page 103, M. is looking for all discontinued German stamps in unused condition! On page 104, M. places another advertisement, offering various individual items, as well as his catalog again for 5 Ngr. In MfB No. 16/September 1, 1864, on page 135, he offers stamps of the Sandwich Islands "in genuine specimens."

In MfB No. 17/September 1, 1864, supplement, Mann announces the publication of a directory of European stamp dealers and requests all stamp dealers to send him their exact address by September 1 (!). Advertisements and classified ads would also be accepted; the split line would cost 2 Ngr. He now gives his address as Ritterstrasse 32 in Leipzig. In MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 149, he writes: "Under guarantee of authenticity, I recommend Stamps from all countries at rock-bottom prices. Dealers receive a high discount. Catalog 5 Sgr.

Vialet, S.

This man had already placed an advertisement in 1863. He still operates from London, but now at a new address (32 Maze Pond, Southwark, London, S. E.). He is looking for stamps with Zschiesche numbers and offers his price list for a postage fee of 5 Ngr. MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, on p. 80.

Löw, Josef, MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, on p. 80. He had already advertised in MfB No. 8/December 1, 1863, on p. 61. This is a comparable advertisement. The company's address has now been added: Vienna, City, Trinity Church, No. 496, Bureau "Engländer". L. shares this information in MfB No. 10/1. March 1864, on page 87, he announced that he had transferred his business to M. Wagatsch in Vienna, Riembergasse No. 11. MfB No. 10/March 1, 1864, on page 87.

Feiglstock, Ignatz

MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, p. 80. F. announces that he must close his business until the end of February due to serious illness.

Michaels, Leopold

Location: Osterode am Harz. MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, p. 80: Offer of a Ludwig album with 700 stamps for 60 Thalers. In MfB No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 111, M. offers new Hanoverian city postmarks, also by the dozen.

Platt, J.

Location: Akbar, Birkenhead, England. MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, p. 80: Offer of all kinds of English and colonial postage stamps.

Roschlau, E. F. Ad. Ernst, residing in Coburg. MfB No. 10/February 1, 1864, p. 80. Offers various stamps by the dozen. In MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, p. 102, Roschlau explicitly identifies himself as a "stamp dealer," a description previously unheard of. He sends out a free monthly "stamp price list." In MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, p. 103, he advertises as the main agent of the "Börsenblatt für den Briefmarkenhandel" (Trading Journal for the Stamp Trade).

In an advertisement by Gustav Wuttig in MfB No. 15/May 1, 1864, In July 1864, on page 119, he announces: "As a continuation of the 'Börsenblatt für den Briefmarkenhandel' (Trade Journal for the Stamp Trade), previously published by G. A. Reichel in Kaufbeuren and now owned by Ernst Roschlau in Coburg, the 'Allgemeine deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung' (General German Stamp Journal) will be published under his editorship from July 1st onwards under the amended and more appropriate title. Published by Ernst Roschlau in Coburg. ..., the distribution rights for the book trade have been transferred to the undersigned."

Reus, F. A. de, based in Haarlem, Netherlands, advertises his stamp exchange business. MfB

No. 11/March 1, 1864, p. 86. In MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, p. 103, he advertises himself as a wholesaler and retailer, offering stamped stamps and also offering exchange. A similar advertisement appears in MfB No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 110. In MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 127, the company offers Java stamps.

Kramer, John (based in Hamburg, c/o N. Bramann, Schaarmarkt No. 24). MfB No. 11/March 1, 1864, p. 86: Offers stamps from Lübeck and Brazil, but also happy to consider other stamps.

Ludwig, Friedrich. The Leipzig publisher Friedrich Löwe announces a new edition of Friedrich Ludwig's "Stamp Album" for the near future. MfB No. 11/March 1, 1864, p. 87. The improved edition now contains 144 pages on heavy writing paper in a large landscape format for approximately 1,500 stamps. Bound in half-linen with gilt title at 1 Thaler, bound in full linen with gilt title and lock at 1 Thaler 10 Groschen. In MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 95, it still states that the album will be published "soon." In MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, p. 102, it then states that the album has been published. However, Löwe signed the advertisement in February 1864, which doesn't add up.

... A review of the new album (signed "L.") appeared in MfB No. 14/June 1, 1864, on page 108. The new edition differed little externally from the previous one, but the content included corrected and supplemented geographical and statistical data. The only point of criticism was the geographical division of the pages; furthermore, additional printed pages were blank to accommodate later issues.

Further advertisements in MfB No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 110; in MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 116; in MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 126; MfB No. 17/September 1, 1864, Supplement: Still the same advertisement from February 1864 (advertisement by Friedrich Löwe). Likewise in MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 142; MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, Supplement; MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 159.

Hartwig, C.

Advertised again (Russian kopek stamps). MfB No. 11/1. March 1864, on p. 87. In MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 142 he offers Stamps of the Steamship Company for Southern Russia and stamps of the Wenden Circle.

Rosenberg, Alex.

Advertised again (previously in September 1863), this time his selections. MfB No. 11/March 1, 1864, p. 87.

Wagatsch, M.

The first sale of a stamp business advertised in a magazine: Löw announces in MfB No. 11/March 1, 1864, p. 87, that he has transferred his business to M. Wagatsch in Vienna, Riemergasse No. 11. MfB No. 10/March 1, 1864, p. 87. Wagatsch places an advertisement below, particularly recommending his Austrian and Lombard assortments. Re-advertised in

MfB No. 13/March 1, 1864. May 1864, on page 101 and in MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, page 125. In MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, page 152, "Gebr. Wagatsch" (formerly M. Wagatsch) advertised 25,000 Austrian stamps in lots of 2,000 each in a large-format advertisement.

Zschiesche & Köder

Headquarters Leipzig, Königsstrasse No. 25. MfB No. 11/March 1, 1864, p. 88: The Leipzig firm announces that its new catalog will be published in its 3rd edition on April 1. Containing 1400 items. Small octavo, 80 pages, 8 Ngr. In MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 93, the publisher announces that the consecutive numbers in this new edition will not be changed, but where necessary, sub-numbers (a, b, c) will be added for newly inserted stamps. These new additions will also be printed separately on an extra sheet, if necessary. Many prices have now been reduced, but for very rare items, no price information can be found. In an advertisement in the same April issue, on page 96, it states: "Just published...". Furthermore, this new 3rd edition has been increased by 150 items and is available through all bookstores. Another advertisement on page 96 also offers some higher-quality stamps. In MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, on page 102, it is announced that the "Catalog of postage stamps issued from 1840 to March 31, 1864, of all countries with printed and significantly reduced sales prices. Containing over 1500 items..." has just been published. The advertisement is repeated in MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, on page 118. In MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, on page 124, the company announces that the supplements to the 3rd edition of the catalog will be printed separately and included with both the MfB and all subsequent catalogs. In MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, supplement, the company again placed an advertisement for the catalog in its 3rd edition, to which the supplements would now be included. In MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, supplement, the company again advertised the catalog (which contained 1600 items on 80 pages). The same advertisement appeared in MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, supplement.

In MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 127, the company offers "rare, unused stamps... guaranteed authentic." It also advertises its catalog on p. 128. In MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 142, a company advertisement appears for the first time, seeking to repurchase MfB No. 4 (for 2.5 Ngr.). Einsiedel, B. L. Location: Dresden. Selling its overseas and Italian stamps at rock-bottom prices to clear out its stock. MfB No. 11/March 1, 1864, p. 88.

Berger-Levrault, Oscar In MfB No. 11/1. In April 1864, on page 92, this catalog ("Description of the stamps known to date (more than 2200 varieties) together with notes on reprinted stamps and instructions for setting up collections," published in Strasbourg, received a favorable review from an unnamed author ("L."). The reviewer described the work as a handbook, not a catalog. He stated that it was the most thorough publication to date in German. The anonymous author had included not only the stamps themselves, but also various essays, proposals, printing proofs, and color nuances, indicating exceptional expertise. The cataloging proceeded geographically, starting in Russia and extending to Portugal, thus proceeding from east to west. The reviewer considered the description of the stamp shapes (square, portrait or landscape format, oval, circular, etc.) to be particularly useful. In the same issue of MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, the publishing company (Widow Berger-Levrault & Son) placed a sales advertisement for the catalog on page 94. Catalog.

Literary Museum Leipzig. MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 93. Advertisement seeking various stamps, but also a recommendation of the "well-stocked" stock of postage stamps. In MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 94, a new catalog is offered: "Catalog of all known postage stamps issued from 1840 to March 1864 with printed sales prices." Price: 5 Ngr. In another advertisement in this April issue on p. 96, individual stamps are offered. Ditto in MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, p. 104, where it is also emphasized that only "genuine and well-preserved stamps" are offered. Likewise in MfB No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 109. In MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 120, the company again advertises its warehouse of stamps from all countries, both wholesale and retail, and assures that it enables all dealers to deliver at its catalog price. In issue 16/August 1, 1864, p. 127, the company offers various used stamps by the dozen and hundred. On p. 128, there is another advertisement, which, among other things, promotes the catalog (3rd edition!). 5 Ngr. Ditto in issue 16/September 1, 1864, p. 134.

MfB issue 18/1. October 1864, p. 141 (erroneously 144): It is announced that with the publication of a stamp album, a supplement to the catalog will also be released, containing "all newly issued stamps up to October 1864," which will be sent free of charge to all catalog owners upon request.

Oppenheimer & Co., Sited in Mannheim. Official Gazette No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 94. Advertises the commissioning of all types of stamps.

Young, W. & Co. Liverpool, West Derby Road. MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 94. Advertises better-quality, unused stamps and recommends its price list/catalog of over 1500 stamps for 4 Sgr. Delivers wholesale and retail. In MfB No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 110, the company places another large advertisement. New company address: 34 South John Street, Liverpool. In MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 125, a similarly large advertisement. In MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 126, a smaller advertisement referring to its catalog with 1600 recorded stamps. Another advertisement in MfB No. 16/September 1, 1864, p. 134, this time almost a full page. Explicitly at the beginning: "Authenticity guaranteed!" Similar advertisement in MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 143. Ditto in MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, supplement. Ditto in MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864 (full page).

Paur, Otto

Location: Lichtenstein. Offers an album with 375 stamps, 50 of which are unused. MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 94.

Ruhl, Moritz. Location: Leipzig. MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 95. R. announces the publication of a new title (his card game had already been presented in December 1863): "The Stamp Collector. A Collection of True-to-Life Illustrations of Stamps from All Parts of the World." The text adds: "In enlarged scale and brilliant color printing. In booklets, each with 8 pages, with an elegant cover, for 5 Ngr." The first booklet is to contain illustrations of stamps from the latest issues of the following countries: Schleswig-Holstein, Italy, Costa Rica, Venezuela, New Brunswick, Sweden, New Granada, and Holstein-Lauenburg.

In addition, it was stated: "The stamp collector will always offer something new and rare in each of its issues, with a consistently rich variety; the content is organized so that initially all countries and states that issued postage stamps will be represented, followed by the completion of the individual groups, so that the respective customers will receive a collection that is, in a certain respect, always complete with just a few issues."

A review of "The Stamp Collector" appeared in the MfB No. 14/June 1, 1864, on page 108 (signed "L."). The first issue was described as brilliantly produced from an artistic point of view, the stamps being reproduced true to the original, in authentic color, "so that the collector

"Precisely that which is of greatest interest to him and which he must desire to learn about is presented in full clarity and purity."

In MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 117, Ruhl announces the publication of the second issue in another advertisement. This issue will contain illustrations of the following stamps: Sandwich Islands, Confederate States of North America, Ionian Islands, Santa Lucia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, French Colonies, and Antiqua. Available as before from all book and art dealers.

Brackenhoeft, C. L. W.

Location: Amsterdam. MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 95. Recommends himself as an agency and his stock of all types of postage stamps. MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 95.

Langer, Ign.

(pr. Adr. Ed. Hölzel, Olomouc). MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 95: Supplies Danube principalities, etc. In MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 119, a similar advertisement appears, but the company address is now "pr. adr. H. E. Hölzel, Olomouc." MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 149: now "Poste Restante," he recommends his shop of stamps from all countries.

Weil & Wertheimer, address: Karlsruhe, Spitalstraße 2. MfB No. 12/April 1, 1864, p. 96. Again recommends Italian stamps and Baden stamps by the dozen or by the hundred.

Franke, C. A.

See above in MfB No. 13/1. May 1864, on page 101. Re-insertion of an album with 308 stamps for 7 Thalers.

Fiebiger, August

See above in the MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, on page 101. Re-advertisement of an album with 300 stamps for 7 Thalers.

Smith, Stafford, and Smith's address now: Bath, Queen Square House. Advertisement of a new, updated catalog edition, 18 pages, small quarto, in an illustrated cover, with 50 beautiful tonal illustrations, 2.5 Sgr. MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, on page 101.

Geier, Fr.

Address in Vienna (Pr. address: Adalbert Walleck, Weihburggasse 922). MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, on page 102. Offers assortments and exchanges.

Kaibel, Max A.

Dorpat in Livonia (Prussian address: University bookseller E. J. Karow). MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, p. 103. Offers Russian stamps. MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 126. Recommends Russian, Finnish, and Polish stamps. MfB No. 17/September 1, 1864, supplement (now without address...), but a similar offer, plus a second advertisement. In MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 149, another advertisement, also offering procurement of Russian novelties. Similar advertisement in MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 157.

Elb, Madame Jeanne Vve, see above, Dresden. MfB No. 13/1. May 1864, on page 103. Two advertisements in French and English, in which Mrs. Elb seeks to buy, sell, or exchange items from collectors and dealers. In the MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, page 125, she (now Jeanne Elb, widow) offers unused Prussian envelopes as rarities.

Mende, H.

Location: Osterode/Harz. MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, p. 103. Offers a very elegant stamp album with approximately 420 "beautiful stamps" for 10 Thalers.

Sartori, G. (Georg). Location: Mannheim. MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, p. 104. Offers old Baden stamps and more, individually or by the hundred. Similar advertisement in MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 118. In MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 141 (erroneously 144), he offers similar items, but also by the thousand or 5,000, and specifies his price per hundred!

Burgk, Hugo. Location: Leipzig. See advertisement in December 1863 (but there, Eugen Burgk). This time he is looking for various stamps, individually or in lots. MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, p. 104. Offered in MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 157, 100 different German and foreign stamps.

Zechmeyer, G. (Georg)

Address: S. 1308 in Nuremberg. MfB No. 13/May 1, 1864, on p. 104. Sells and exchanges postage stamps of all countries. First advertisement appeared in October 1863. An identical advertisement appeared in MfB No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 112, and again in MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 118. A further advertisement (small print) appeared in MfB No. 16/September 1, 1864, supplement. The address was now given as "L. 56 in Nuremberg." The same advertisement appeared in MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 144 ("Sells postage stamps of all countries...").

Geilinger, Brothers

Address: Riesbach near Zurich. MfB No. 14/1. June 1864, p. 108: Sale/exchange of all Swiss stamps. Similar advertisement in MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 119, MfB No. 16/September 1, 1864, p. 135. Russian and other issues are offered by the company in MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, on p. 148.

Mahrn, F. W.

Address: Halle a.S. Official Gazette No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 109: The advertiser describes his business as a "brand dealer" offering stamps from all countries at low prices.

Kutter, Adrian & Co.

Address: Peter Kutter in Ravensburg. Official Gazette No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 111. Offers assortments for sale/exchange.

Cini & Co.

Address: Livorno/Tuscany. Official Gazette No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 111. Advertises its large stock of Italian and English stamps.

Suppanschitzek, Victor. Resident of Graz/Styria. Official Gazette No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 111. June 1864, p. 112: Offers 1 Thaler for every 40 overseas or 80 non-German stamps. For any two overseas stamps, he sends 16 different Austrian stamps.

Maurer, Fr.

Resident of Stuttgart, Marktstr. 13. MfB No. 14/June 1, 1864, p. 112. Various old German stamps, also in larger quantities.

Alexander, J. (I.?) residing in Hamburg, 2nd Marienstr. No. 4. MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 116. Offers Spanish stamps, also in quantities, as he has direct contact with one of the largest stamp dealers in Madrid. In another advertisement – MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 117 – he informs me that he wants to clear out his significant stock of definitive stamps and offers various items. In MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 126, two similar advertisements. In MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 142, he offers various Spanish stamps, as well as Hamburg private stamps, also for exchange. In MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 151, a comparable advertisement appears.

Eims, W.

Located in Halberstadt. MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 117. Offers a postage stamp album with text for 10 Sgr. In another advertisement in the same issue on p. 117, he offers an album with 850 stamps for sale.

Nutter, J. A.

Located in Montreal, Canada, Box 519. MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 117. Offers a large selection of Canadian and US stamps. Similar advertisement in MfB No. 16/1. August 1864, p. 124. In MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 142, he advertised again with a larger advertisement. Another appeared in MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, a supplement with various North American items for sale/exchange.

Bloch, L. & Co.

Based in Karlsruhe. MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 117. Dispatches stamps from Baden and American private postage stamps. MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 126. Offers Baden rural postage stamps. In MfB No. 17/September 1, 1864, p. 135, the company offers inexpensive Italian stamps.

Baloren, P. A.

Based in Le Havre, France, Poste restante. MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 118. Offers postage stamps from all countries. The advertisement in English appears on p. 119 of the issue. A similar advertisement in French appears in MfB No. 15/July 1, 1864, p. 120.

Effinger, E.

See above (November 1863). Continues to offer his price list for postage stamps. MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 124

Klingler, residing in Stuttgart, Postpr. MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 126. Offers various Württemberg issues in quantities of 100.

Bébié, Alfred, based in Zurich. MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 126. August 1864, p. 126. Recommends his stock of Swiss and Italian stamps to dealers and collectors. Ditto in MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 144.

Bauer, Ludwig. Address: Munich, Dachauerstr. No. 37. MfB No. 16/August 1, 1864, p. 127. Offers various assortments and a Wuttig album with stamps for 6 Thalers.

Zumpe

Dresden, Breitestrasse 16.4. – Zumpe was not the advertiser's name; this remained unspecified, as the album, which the advertiser wanted to sell with 835 stamps for 30 Thalers, was to be picked up at Zumpe's. Official Gazette No. 17/September 1, 1864, p. 133. Who was the advertiser?

Rothenberger, Heinrich. Address: Gostenhof No. 2a, Nuremberg. Official Gazette No. 17/September 1, 1864, p. 133. He offered his services for the sale of postage stamps from all countries.

Behrmann, S. H.

See above under "J. H. Behrmann"!

Richardson, George. Address: 192 London Road, Liverpool, England. Official Gazette No. 17/September 1, 1864, p. 136. Applies to overseas and colonial stamps. "Authenticity guaranteed." References available from Young & Stockall. A larger advertisement appeared in the MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, supplement.

Samter & Co.

Address: Hamburg, Valentinskamp 61. MfB No. 17/September 1, 1864, supplement. Offers various messenger stamps. MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 159: Now recommends itself as a "Cheap Source" for stamps from all countries.

Clarke, E.

Address: 32 Wood Street, Princes Road, Kennington Cross, London. MfB No. 17/September 1, 1864, supplement. Sells stamps from all over the world, but only by the dozen.

Windisch, Otto. Address: Nuremberg. MfB No. 17/September 1, 1864. September 1864, Supplement. Advertises for Spain and Italy by the dozen, but is also looking for all types of stamps.

Spausta, Max, resident of Olomouc. MfB No. 17/1, September 1864, Supplement. Sells a well-organized "Stamp Album" (Wuttig, 8th edition) with 420 stamps.

Church, F. J.

Address: St. Peter's Chambers, Cornhill, London E.C. Official Gazette No. 17/September 1, 1864, Supplement: offers various stamps, also by the dozen.

Seligmann, Carl. Address: 12 Brodschragen, Hamburg. Sale/exchange of postage stamps. Official Gazette No. 17/September 1, 1864, Supplement.

Acker, F.

Address: Birsigstrasse in Basel. Official Gazette No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 141 (erroneously 144). Offers Basel city postage for 1 Schilling (cheaper wholesale).

Postal official (anonymous): "Red Schleswig" 4 Schilling stamps are available from a postal official. Official Gazette No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 141 (erroneously 144). Address: A 100 City Post Office – Hamburg.

Maury fils, registered office: 5 Rue Richelieu, Paris. MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 142. Arthur Maury advertises the publication of his new magazine (Le Collectionneur des Timbres-Poste). A catalog of all stamps with sales prices is included free with a subscription. A review of the magazine by "L." appeared in the same issue on pages 139/140.

Fries, Hermann

Bookstore in Leipzig. Official Gazette No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 142. Advertises the sale of a leather-bound album with over 800 excellently preserved stamps for 70 Thalers.

Gerretsen, P.

Amsterdam. Postal address: Herm. Menne & Thole. Official Gazette No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 142. Offers various overseas stamps and a price list.

Klix, Gustav. Location: Zittau (Saxony). Official Gazette No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 142. Offers various Saxon and Austrian stamps in large quantities.

Spehr, Gustav. Wismar. In Official Gazette No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 142. He had already appeared with advertisements in 1863. Now he announces that he is an agent for the monthly "Universal Stamp Gazette." He also accepted advertising commissions. In an advertisement in the same issue on page 144, he offered stamps from Mecklenburg-Schwerin and Russia, and in the supplement to the magazine, he placed a wanted ad for envelopes from Thurn and Taxis and Prussia. In MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, page 157, he offered an album of 900 stamps on commission. In another advertisement on the same page, he stated that he gladly accepted selections and offers, and on page 158, he placed yet another advertisement offering individual stamps from around the world.

Ernst, Arthur, residing in Winterthur. In MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, page 143, he offered 129 old Mexican stamps.

Spiro, Philipp

Address: Adolphsplatz 10, Hamburg. Offers "genuine examples" of old Swedish stamps and more. Larger format advertisement in MfB No. 18/October 1, 1864, p. 144. Norwegian stamps and others are offered by the dozen or hundred in MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 148.

Johnstone, R.

Address: 12 Pembroke Street, Glasgow, Scotland. MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 149. He offers British colonial stamps and more, guaranteeing their authenticity. In MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 158, he offers 100,000 German stamps in quantities of 1,000 for 1 Thaler 25 Sgr.

King, Isaac M.

Address: 62 Broadway, New York, or Box 3758. He advertised his catalog, which contained over 2,400 stamps. Available for 4 silver groschen.

He supplied wholesale and retail, guaranteeing authenticity. MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 149.

Bátor, Gustav, residing at No. 91, Poste Restante, (Buda)Pest. He sold an album of 570 stamps for 16 Reichsthaler "due to departure." MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 149.

Dressel Jr., I. P.

Address: Meelboom & Nachenius, Amsterdam. Advertises its large stock of postage stamps of all kinds, especially Luxembourg, Bremen, Moldavia, Switzerland, and overseas. Price list available free of charge.

Clarke & Rawll (E. Clarke / G. Rawll) Address: 32 Wood St. Lambeth, London S. MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 150. Offer various stamps from England and the colonies. (Apparently a new company merger). The company placed a large advertisement on page 151 of this issue. Also in MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 160.

Theophilus, Creber & Co.

Address: Devonport, England. MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 150. Advertises "the most affordable price list of English colonial stamps ever published." Shipping at a cost of 4d. And in a second advertisement on this page, English colonial stamps. His price list contains more than 2,000 stamps.

Ritter, Prof. Dr.

(by address) in Munich. MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 150. Searching for various missing stamps by Zschiesche numbers. MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 150.

Zerhau, F.

Called by L. O. Müllner, Singerstrasse 30, Vienna. Official Gazette No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 150. Sale and exchange of all kinds of Austrian and Lombard stamps.

Industria & Co.

Address: Oxford Street, Preston (England). Offering rare colonial stamps in exchange for old Saxon and other rarities. Official Gazette No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 151.

Thiele, Ad.

Address: Mannheim, C. 1 No. 6. Official Gazette No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 151. Offering old Baden and Württemberg stamps. In Official Gazette No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 151. Also included in the November 1864 issue is a supplement from this company (A. Thiele & Cie.) dated "November 1864," which states: "We hereby inform you that, beginning December 15th of this year, we will be publishing a descriptive catalog of all postage stamps issued since 1840 every month, in a large octavo format of 25–30 pages." Advertisements would also be included in the catalog. Price in Germany for the catalog: 5 silver groschen.

Watson Jr., Henry. Address: Glover Street, Preston (England). Seeking stamps of any quantity on behalf of dealers. MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 152

Wagatsch, Brothers

MfB No. 19/November 1, 1864, p. 152. See M. Wagatsch. This refers to the successor company.

Bachmann Sohn, J.

Location: Basel, Wallstrasse. MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 157. Offered imitations of cantonal stamps.

Nüßeler, E.

Location: Mannheim. Stamps from all countries offered in MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 157.

Atlee, W. D.

Residence: 32 Ellington St., London N. MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 158. Dispatches stamps upon request. He identifies himself as an agent for Mr. King in New York.

Meyer, G. A.

Address: Amsterdam, Spui No. 70. MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 158. Offers various Modena, Parma, and Baden stamps.

Mahé, Pierre, 18 rue de Canettes, Paris. MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 158. He had already advertised his stamp business in October 1863. Now he announces his new magazine, "Le Timbrophile," a journal for stamp collectors, to be published on the 15th of each month. Issue No. 1 was already published on November 15. Annual subscription: 28 silver groschen.

Jacobs, Carl

Located in Braunschweig, Bohlweg 13. Recommends his extensive stock to all dealers and collectors. In the MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 159. Also seeks exchange partners and correspondence partners.

Erie, Joh. Phil.

Location: Hamburg. MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 159. Offers selected rarer stamps from around the world in a larger format advertisement.

Alt, Alfred. Location: Lemberg train station, Galicia. MfB No. 20/December 1, 1864, p. 160. For each colonial stamp, he offers one uncanceled blue Mercury stamp, or two cancelled genuine stamps, or 15 diverse continental stamps. Stock for exchange: 17,000 stamps.

1865

Mahé, P.: Le Timbrophile.

This new "Journal de la Collection Timbrepostale" is reviewed favorably by "L." in MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 164. The reason given for the journal's name, "Timbrophile" and not "Collectionneur de Timbres-Postes," is interesting: the publisher of "Timbres-Poste" (presumably Arthur Maury) had threatened a copyright complaint and lawsuit.

Claudius, Richard: The 4th edition of the album, already advertised several times in 1864, is further advertised by Dürr's bookstore in the same manner in MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 165. Likewise in MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 174 and in MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 182. (In the latter advertisement, the Dürr bookshop signs with the month February 1865 and the album has "just been published".)

In MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, p. 191, Dürr's Bookstore advertises the newly released (March?)

edition, the 5th edition of Richard Claudius's "Postage Stamp Album." As before, there are four different types (see above) at prices ranging from 12 Ngr. to 1 Thlr. Another advertisement appears in MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, as an insert.

Wagatsch & Co.

Vienna, Riemergasse No. 11. MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 165. The company exchanges Austrian and overseas stamps for German ones. A second advertisement appears on p. 166 offering selections.

A similar advertisement appears in MfB No. 22/January 1, 1865. February 1865, p. 173 and again on p. 174.

Sartori, Georg.

Still based in Mannheim. MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 165. Offers various overseas stamps. On p. 168, it is noted that Sartori had a supplement in the issue (this is missing from the author's copy). In MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 173, he recommends his prompt and very affordable service. Another recommendation at the same address in MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 182. A further advertisement for "rarest stamps in beautiful, genuine specimens" appears in MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, p. 191.

Mann, Chr.

Leipzig. MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 165. His "Directory of European Stamp Dealers" was allegedly published by Hermann Luppe in Leipzig. Price: 10 Ngr. BUT: In MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 182, he announces that, due to "closing down my business," he is selling his still "considerable stamp stock" at 50% and will continue to send out his catalog for 2.5 Ngr.

In MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, supplement, the Literary Museum publishes a half-page advertisement about this "still underage lad," who, operating under a fictitious company, "Chr. Mann junior," is allegedly selling his stamp stock at 50% below its own price. A fictitious order revealed that even the most common brands that had been ordered were barely available, and if they were, they were priced significantly above 100% of the stated prices. The statement continues: "To further characterize Mr. M., we add that he directly and indirectly sold 'counterfeit' brands here on site, specifically those that any dealer, no matter how limited their understanding, would recognize."

"It should be immediately recognizable, sold under guarantee of authenticity, as has been attempted to be sold."

Wuttig, G. (Literary Museum) Leipzig. MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 165. The 9th edition of the "Album for Stamps," already advertised in 1864, is advertised again here. In MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 173, he recommends that dealers contact the Literary Museum regarding the purchase of the album and current terms.

Roodhuyzen, D. H.

Amsterdam, Keizersgracht, K. K. 419. MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 166. Offers various European stamps by the dozen and seeks agents.

Langer, Ig.

Olomouc, now: Ober Ring 14. Official Gazette No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 166. He announces that due to lack of time, he has transferred his entire stamp collection to Hugo Burgk, Ritterstrasse 26 in Leipzig.

Joseph Maximilian

Eydtkuhnen. MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 166. Offer of various stamps according to Zschiesche numbers.

Nutter, J.A.

Montreal, Box 519, Canada. MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 166. Sale/exchange of North American stamps.

Wium, I. E.

Copenhagen, Frederiksberggade 5. MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 166. Offers the oldest Danish stamp, also in quantities. Similar advertisement in MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 173.

Young & Stockall, 34 South John Street, Liverpool. MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 167. Full-page advertisement following an earlier worldwide pattern. Worldwide offer advertised in MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 176, and on three pages in a supplement to this No. 22. Another advertisement appeared in MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 184, and in the first supplement to that issue, again three pages. The same was also advertised in the supplement to MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865 (3.5 pages). The same was also advertised in MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, in a supplement (3.5 pages).

Young Jr., John

222 Gallougate, Glasgow. MfB No. 21/January 1, 1865, p. 168. Sale/exchange of numerous overseas stamps, but also well-executed facsimiles of rare stamps from around the world on offer.

Volpi, Prof. Dr.

Munich. MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, pp. 170-171. Editorial report on the unique Volpi collection, Volume 1 of which (3000 items, including 1500 essays) would significantly exceed the value of comparable collections in France and England. Housed in an Imperial Folio album, each page was hand-crafted by an artist, almost all stamps "new and clean." Among other things, it includes a complete sheet of the old Austrian 4 Kreuzer stamp of the Bavarian 1-pfennig coin from 1849. The rarities were described by Dr. Volpi obtained his album solely through his connections with envoys and ministries. Sauley, Herpin, and Primoli in Paris, as well as Berger-Levrault in Strasbourg, had recognized it as the finest during their visits. Volpi intended to create two more such albums, one for envelopes and the other for non-European stamps, which he also possessed almost in their entirety.

Kaiser, Theodor, Vienna, Gonzagagasse 3. Official Gazette No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 173. Recommends his stock to all countries.

Minde, H.

Osterode am Harmsbach. Official Gazette No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 173. Sells an album with 520 stamps.

Geier, Ms.

c/o A. Walleck in Vienna, Weihburggasse No. 922. Official Gazette No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 173. Is closing his stamp business and therefore selling everything at half price. Also offers selection shipments.

Lehner, J.H.

Bergauerplatz 56, Nuremberg. Official Gazette No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 173. Offers imitations of very rare stamps in excellent condition in large quantities.

Hiestrich, W.

Hamburg, New Wall Frame No. 5. MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 173. Recommends his complete stock of all stamps, also accepts consignments of selected stamps.

Jung, Fr.

L. 62 U. Bergauerplatz Nuremberg. MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 173. Offers imitation postage stamps for cash on delivery. Per thousand or more.

Dean, D.

Hope Square Weymouth. MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 174. Offers exchange, but also subscriptions to the magazine "Stamp Collectors Miscellany." Also works as an advertising agency for it.

Samter & Co.

Hamburg. MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 174. Had already advertised in September 1864, now again offers overseas and Hamburg postal stamps. Also in MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 183, MfB No. 24/1. April 1865, p. 191.

Hirsche, Eduard, Hamburg, Neuburg 25. MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 174. He placed a similar advertisement in February 1864. MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 199: Now offering various European/overseas stamps and guaranteeing their authenticity.

Spiro, Philip (sic!)

Hamburg, Adolphsplatz 10. MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 175. He had already placed an advertisement in October 1864. Now he is offering numerous individual items, also in quantities of 100, and Hamburg messenger stamps.

Hase, G. C. A.

Osterode am Harmsbach. MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865, p. 175. Offering Hanover envelopes and selected overseas stamps. In MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, supplement, he is selling an album with 830 mostly rare, neatly mounted stamps, but announces in a further advertisement below that he intends to close his stamp business and sell his entire stock below cost.

Wuttig, G.

Bookstore in Leipzig. MfB No. 22/1. February 1865, p. 175. Offered in a larger advertisement numerous lots of better European postage stamps.

Literary Museum Leipzig. Two-page insert on gray paper with a sales offer of stamps from around the world + album offer in MfB No. 22/February 1, 1865. Simultaneously, the first announcement of the 4th completely revised edition of the "Catalog of all known stamps." Another smaller advertisement and a four-page insert on thin brown paper in MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 183 and insert. A further insert in the same March issue presents this 4th edition of the catalog in more detail as appearing in mid-March, and includes two sample pages. Contributors are listed as W. Th. Clausius, Dr. Joseph, and W. Th. Israel. In MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, p. 192, the company informs readers that it cannot send out the catalog until April 1865 due to "unforeseen incidents at the printing plant."

Bauer, Louis. Formerly in Munich, now Prussian. Address: Christian Dietrich, 50 Maiden Lane, New York. MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 182. Offers a particularly large selection of "Americana."

Alexander, J.

2. Marienstrasse No. 4, Hamburg. MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 182. Various items offered with a guarantee of authenticity. In Supplement No. 2, he offers three albums of imitation stamps. In MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, p. 191, he offers Hamburg private stamps and seeks imitations for exchange.

Hutter (Nutter?), J. A.

Montreal, P.O. Box 519. MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 182. Sells North Americana.

Pfyffer (Antiquarian), Lucerne. MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 183. Offers samples and genuine examples of Swiss Confederation stamps, cantonal stamps, and federal stamps in excellent condition. Same advertisement in MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, supplement.

Heim, Eduard, Fleischmarkt 18, Vienna. MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 182. In this, his first advertisement, he recommends his stock of stamps from all countries. In a second advertisement on p. 183, he is seeking British colonial stamps.

Thiele, A. & Co.

Mannheim. Already had an advertisement in autumn 1864. Now again in the MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 182. Advertises his extensive stock and seeks contacts.

Weiss, A.

Lemberg (Galicia), Sixtusgasse 629. MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, p. 183. Seeks only exchange of genuine stamps from ancient Italian states.

Clark & Rawll. New address: 11 Bishopsgate St., London E.C. Last advertisement in December 1864, now in the MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, Supplement 2. Again, some lots of better stamps from overseas.

Hill, C. H.

425 Agle Street, Glasgow, Scotland. MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, advertisement in Supplement 2. Seeking stamps from various countries and offering British colonial stamps in exchange. Similar advertisement in MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, supplement, and in MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 200.

Weir, John & Co.

14 East Nile Street, Glasgow (formerly John Young Jr.). MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, advertisement in Supplement 2. Offers a large selection of facsimiles of rare stamps.

Smith, Stafford & Smith, Queen Square House, Bath, England. Advertises the "Stamp Collector's Magazine" with the slogan: "One stamp free!" MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, full-size advertisement in Supplement 2. Same advertisement in MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, supplement. Ditto in MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, supplement.

Zerhau, F.

Pr. Address: L. O. Müllner, Vienna, Singergasse No. 30. MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, Supplement 2. Sale and exchange of stamps from Austria/Lombardy.

Hartwig, C.

St. Petersburg, Vasily Ostrov, 1st Line No. 36. As in March 1864, he now advertises in MfB No. 23/March 1, 1865, 2nd Supplement, Russian steamship stamps.

Zschiesche & Köder

MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, p. 188. In an editorial, Z. discusses perforated and imperforate issues of the same stamp series in more detail, pointing out that such stamps have existed since the mid-1850s. Since 1857 (Württemberg), they have also been available in Germany. Her position (also relevant for the catalog): "For collectors, the difference between perforated and imperforate stamps seems to us to be of no particular significance..."

In MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 195, Z. presents the new catalog – 4th edition – editorially. Due to a typesetters' strike, it could not be published by the end of April 1865 (the strike had already lasted more than 5 weeks). However, the previous a, b, c numbers have now been omitted, and the numbering has been changed to run continuously from beginning to end. For each state, however, the numbering starts again from 1. Since the last edition, 400 new titles have been added. The fact that they still only have 2000 titles, while others have already reached over 3000, is because they continue to exclude essays and color variations. They have not set prices for rare brands. Regarding the super deals offered by other vendors, the following is stated verbatim: "Finally, we would like to add that offers at prices 50% lower than ours and other catalogs, as are occasionally advertised by dealers under the name 'Clearance Sale' (?), should give any buyer who values fair service cause for justified concern." In this context, they refer to the advertisement of the Literary Museum "Zur Aufklärung" (To Enlightenment), which was directed against Christian Mann.

Brackenhoeft, C. L. W.

Amsterdam. MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, p. 190. Offers numerous various high-quality items from around the world by the dozen.

Alt, Alfred. Lemberg Station. MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, p. 191. Having already advertised in December 1864, he now announces his intention to compile a directory of collectors who plan to exchange items. Anyone who sends in their address will later receive the address book at a 40% discount. In another advertisement in the supplement, he offers various Austrian newspaper stamps. In MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 199, he gives away 12 Austrian stamps free of charge with one order, including a genuine blue Mercury stamp.

Mathies, Carl (formerly A. Thiele & Co.) Mannheim. MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, p. 191. The advertisement briefly informs readers of the change of ownership and recommends their extensive stock.

Reus, F. A. de Haarlem / Holland. MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, Supplement. Offers specifically Dutch colonial stamps, seeks others by issue number. Ditto in MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 200.

Meyer, H.

St. Petersburg, Sangerbrucke No. 16, Quart 6. MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, Supplement. Places two advertisements, offering Russian and Odessa steamship stamps.

Spehr, Gustav Wismar. MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, Supplement. Having already advertised in 1864, he now recommends his wholesale warehouse of all varieties of genuine brands to retailers. See also MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, supplement.

Johnstone, R

12 Pembroke Street, Glasgow. MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, Supplement. He had already placed an advertisement in November 1864. Now he is offering large quantities (100,000 stamps) in exchange for colonial stamps (minimum quantities of 5,000).

Reinning, J. F.

Athens, Rue d'Hermes (Chermes Street). MfB No. 24/April 1, 1865, Supplement. Offers Greek stamps. Similar advertisement in MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 199.

Bornheim, Rich.

Hamburg, Sonnenstrasse 4. MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 198. Offers various Old German and overseas stamps.

Rehwoldt, J.

Poste Restante, Lubeck. MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 198. Maintains a large stock of stamps and sells unused New Zealand stamps by the dozen.

Maruhn, F. W.

Halle an der Saale. MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 199. Exchanges Prussian and Saxon stamps for colonial stamps. MfB No. 25/May 1, 1865, Supplement: In this advertisement, the advertiser describes himself as a "stamp dealer" and promotes himself for genuine and beautiful stamps.

Wildt, Arthur

Fraustadt, Posen/Prussia. Official Gazette No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 199. Seeking exchange.

Wittenstein Jr., Carl Horn – Lippe-Detmold. Official Gazette No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 199. Selling a stamp collection of 740 stamps. Official Gazette No. 25/May 1, 1865, Enclosure: Thurn & Taxis offers exchange/sale.

Burgk, Hugo (see also Langer, Ig., January 1865) now located at Große Windmühlenstrasse No. 5 in Leipzig. Offering rare stamps from around the world.

Grunwood & Co.

Preston, England. Official Gazette No. 25/May 1, 1865, p. 199. Seeking exchange for various stamps from different countries and other colonial stamps.

Behrmann, H. J. L.

Hamburg, St. Pauli, 19 Wilhelminenstrasse (Advertisements for two other Behrmanns were already placed last year; the address-?)

Editor's Note: This is the end of the article although the text is unfinished and the bracket was never closed.

END

Phila Historica
December 2014, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2020

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-3

Editorial.

Wolfgang Maassen

Dear reader of Phila Historica,

With this fourth edition of the digital magazine launched in early 2013, the second year is complete. Since I write these lines in November, I still have no overview of how extensive it will be. If this year has a few pages less than the first from 2013, some will certainly be happy, especially since a year volume that is still to be printed - such an offer is planned again - will not be too expensive.

I would like to take the opportunity to thank you again. For your loyalty to the magazine, for your support as an author and letter to the editor writer, for some discussion that I can have with you, but also for advice that I get. We will implement one of them as soon as possible: to change the 2-column set to a 1-column set. Why? Because I was able to convince myself of how tedious it is to read longer articles (which you don't print out) on the screen. And since many read the magazine only on the screen, a folding sentence facilitates the reading option.

At the beginning of the autumn, our private "removal" was finally completed. This is not only noticeable in the fact that I was able to attend to other appointments, trade fairs, symposia and exhibitions again, but also work in my winter domicile with work in front of me all day again and to work out new articles. That is for me like Christmas and New Year.

The contributions in this issue will be able to empathize with the focus of the autumn activity, especially the contributions that were created for a symposium of the Consilium Philatelicum in Berlin in early November. I thank Hans-Joachim Büll, Peter Fischer, Dr. Heinz Jaeger and Norbert Mankiewicz for their lectures, which I can reproduce here verbatim. I myself wrote another that documents the eventful and moving time from 1988/1990 from a philatelic point of view.

At this symposium there was also a visit to the Museum Library of the Museum of Communication. This library really has a unique story that it was worth to capture. The research was not easy, but Peter Süss, Claudia Loest and Irmgard Krause helped me, so that - supported by current images by Wilhelm van Loo and some older photos from the archive of the Museum for Communication - then - at least to this extent - a presentation has emerged, which shows how it came together and what belongs together.

In this issue, I publish a contribution by Dr. Andreas Hahn, the curator of the archive of the Philatelie of the Museum Foundation in Bonn, who clearly illustrates the work of this museum foundation. I have allowed myself to illustrate this article with illustrations from the World Cup archive and with some of my own literary titles to match the topic.

I particularly recommend two more extensive contributions: the history of the Maximaphilia by Günter Formery and the historical overview of the thematic literature of Dr. Ernst Schlunegger. Both not only contain an overview of people and associations that have never been offered in this form that were committed and active in these areas, but also to what they have created in the “relics” worth reading. Dr. Schlunegger’s contribution was originally planned for the book of Maassen/Schouberecht: Milestones of Philatelic Literature ..., because two years ago we wanted to have today's chapter 6 (literature of the 20th century) in three sub -chapters (on postal history/early philately, aerophilately, thematic Philately). However, since the previous five chapters had already reached such a large scale, we had to make the decision in the final phase to completely renew this chapter and focus exclusively on “important” works of the philatelic literature of the 20th century. Dr. Schlunegger, whom I had previously asked to write the treatise for the thematic philately, had done the work for free.

In this respect, I was pleased to see that his study from the FIP Commission for Thematic Philatelie in the TCNEWS Bulletin number 27 was published in October 2014, but still without illustrations. So I asked him for suitable illustrations so that the English translation including the numerous illustrations appeared in the Philatelic Journalist of the AIJP in March 2015 in printed form, the German original text for this, can also appear illustrated. I can only thank Dr. Schlunegger for the support given.

Last but not least, I thought that this year should not be over without remembering two events in philately, which were hardly noteworthy elsewhere in 2014: BUGRA 1914 in Leipzig and an exhibition for Philatelists’ Day as well as an exhibition that never took place, Kassel in 1914. The latter two fell victim to the outbreak of the war, while the BUGRA took place, but was seriously affected from August 1914. These facets of philately are supposed to complement the postal histories, which were documented at other events, especially in Ypres - this year.

I am always happy to read that biographical works that are dedicated to artists are of interest. In this respect, I welcome Prof. Dr. Wolfgang Scharlipp’s work very much, two of whom you can find again in this issue. His example can teach us all!

Otherwise you will find the usual sections: current and letters to the editor, newcomers to the libraries, but also the book reviews. If the “Honors” section is very short this time with the reproduction of the laudations, that is simply for the reason that the majority of the awarding persons/institutions - the Sieger Prize for philatelic literature stands out here - no longer produce such awards. Today many people are enough to stand in the spotlight themselves and to consider the honor to be honored with some nice words and a handshake. This is also reminiscent of a cultural change, ultimately-especially if you draw comparisons to Oscar, Bambi, but also to the Roll of Distinguished Philatelists Ceremony of the British Congress-is an impoverishment. And into this “cultural change” ultimately also fits a lecture on Philatelie in the year 2039, which weights and addresses these and other phenomena. You may not agree with some statements and may even know some things better, but there is no getting around the fact that society, including philately, changes.

The abundance of topics is therefore also very exciting in this issue and should also entertain you - depending on your taste and preferences. Not everyone is interested in everything or everyone. So select. It is more important that something is found. And this is exactly what should happen in the upcoming edition, which is expected to be released in March 2015. So don't think the topics go out. The topic of the unusual exhibition in Kassel seems to me to deepen value, e.g. By comparing with today's events of this kind, but also with an impression of the catalogue at that time. We continue the series for early stamp dealers with several contributions of a very different nature.

New special publications in digital and printed form are also considered: for example the documentation of an impressive counterfeiting collection of the early Brazilian stamps by Steven Rose (USA), but also the bibliography of an important philatelic and post -historical library by Federico Borromeo, which will only appear in a small edition of 25 copies. Enough for libraries and some bibliophiles that may be interested.

So I only have to wish you an exciting literary new year,

Wolfgang Maassen

P. S.: I don't want to forget my thanks to my family, especially Sarah and Michael, who looks after and shaped Phila Historica, and to my wife, who always keeps a cool head. What can there be better than a good team?

pp.4-5 Contents

Editorial	1
-----------	---

Current

Wolfgang Maassen:
Current notes from research and literature	6

Wolfgang Maassen:
The future of philately - outlook for the next 25 years	10

Sieger-Prize for Philatelic Literature 2014	20
---	----

Philatelic history “Special” 25 years of the fall of the [Berlin] Wall

Wolfgang Maassen:
Experienced philatelic history. The example of “25 years of the fall of the Wall” in Berlin	23

Wolfgang Maassen:

“Important guests of the symposium 25 years of the fall of the Wall” on November 8, 2014 in Berlin 36

Dr. Heinz Jaeger:

“25 years of the fall of the Berlin Wall” – It is not how something begins, but rather how it ends that ultimately determines success 39

Peter Fischer:

Symposium “25 Years of the Fall of the Berlin Wall”: German-German Association of Philately 41

Hans-Joachim Büll: 25 years of the fall of the Berlin Wall: East-West experiences of an auctioneer 48

Norbert Mankiewicz:

The fall of the Berlin Wall and reunification from the perspective of a GDR stamp dealer 58

Dr. Jürgen Daude: 25 years of reunification of Berlin-Staaken 64

Philatelic history in general

Wolfgang Massen:

1914: An International Stamp Exhibition and a German Philatelists Day fell through! 68

Dr. Ernst Schlunegger:

Thematic literature then and now 79

Günter Formery:

The development of maximaphilately in Europe 98

Dr. Andreas Hahn:

Philately in the Post and Telecommunications Museum Foundation 116

Dieter Michelson:

100 Years of Heinrich Köhler Auctions. Heinrich Köhler – his life, his business 129

Rainer von Scharpen:

ROSSICA 2014. A review 146

Prof. Dr. Wolfgang Scharlipp:

French stamp engravers (Part II) 150

Prof. Dr. Wolfgang Scharlipp:

The Swedish stamp engraver Lars Sjööblom 157

History of [Philatelic] Literature

P. Preuss:

To all it may concern (Reprint, in German)	159
To all it may concern (Translation into English)	164

Max Ton:

On the fate and value of philatelic books and magazines (In German)	161
On the fate and value of philatelic books and magazines (Translation into English)	165

Wolfgang Maassen:

BUGRA 2014. The largest philatelic literature exhibition of all time	169
--	-----

Wolfgang Maassen:

Philatelic libraries in Berlin and their whereabouts A research	198
---	-----

Categories

Wolfgang Maassen: Read for you	221
New arrivals at the Philatelic Libraries	229
Imprint	254

pp.164-168

To all it might concern.

P. Preuss

English translation in the original document of an article reprinted from an unstated source, soliciting support for Der Deutsche Philatelistische Bücherwurm.

Max Ton

An English translation in the original document of an article apparently reprinted from an unstated source bewailing the lack of interest in philatelic literature by a great many stamp collectors.

END

Victor Suppantschitsch

The oldest known printed philatelic work in the World

[Das ältest bekannt philatelistische druckwerk der erde]

Die Post, 15th April 1895, Volume 2, Issue 8, pp.63-64 & 1st May, Issue 9, p.73.

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

June 2021

THE OLDEST KNOWN PRINTED PHILATELIC WORK IN THE WORLD

Collecting is as old as civilization, yet it is a hallmark of it. Its area is unlimited, it only depends on the mood and taste of the individual what and how he wants to collect. If the collection was nevertheless mostly limited to certain generally known areas, the explanation for this lies in the fact that certain objects have awakened the lust for collecting at all times and in all peoples. It is only in the modern age that the areas of collecting have expanded in an unbelievable way, so that there will be relatively few objects of which it can be said with certainty that they do not form an object of collecting or have ever formed. As far as the postage stamps - and the stamps in general - are concerned, like hardly any other item they are excellently suited for collecting, since every stamp is in itself a small work of art to be kept in the smallest table drawer. What is certain, however, is that there is no other collecting field that counts as many followers and is spread all over the world as collecting stamps. If one takes into account that the objects of this collecting area have only existed for not much longer than half a century and have been collected for 40 years at the longest, then the widespread of stamp collecting must arouse astonishment. In my opinion, one of the most interesting cultural-historical phenomena of our century lies in the tremendous development that stamp collecting has taken, which would have long been the subject of public discussion if the lay world had an inkling of it, if only they had done the great research who have been led by hundreds of the most talented men in this field if they knew that the most minute details would be explored with an expenditure of time and effort which - allow me my frank expression - would be worthy of a greater cause, that great works have been written dealing with the postage stamps of a single country, yes, that the history of a single stamp fills an entire book, that the literature of postage stamp studies encompasses a great library of many thousands of volumes in all civilized languages, that hundreds of collectors' associations encircle the whole earth, that colossal fortunes lie in individual collections, that the stamp trade provides bread to thousands of people that the stocks of individual dealers represent a value of hundreds of thousands of marks if the lay world had a glimpse into the monstrous dimensions that stamp collecting has reached in all its directions.

As it is, all of this is only known to the initiated and is therefore only discussed in specialist journals. It is true that articles about stamp collecting appear here and there in daily newspapers and entertainment papers. However, they are mostly content with mentioning the great prices that individual stamps or entire collections have achieved and the like and are therefore not suitable for giving the public a correct and full insight into the current state of stamp collecting.

A history of collecting has not been written at all to this day, and also the few writers who have written a special history of philately (Dr. Moschkau, Suppantschitsch) are themselves philatelists and have - I would like to say - only they have internal development in their writings depicted in philately. A representation of the philatelic movement in relation to its expression and effect externally, on the bourgeois world has not yet appeared. Certainly, however, the time will come when one can look back on the epoch of stamp collecting as something of the past, so that stamp collecting will belong to history and there will be cultural historians who, although laypeople will write a history of this collecting system on the basis of the available sources.

For everyone who is concerned with the history of philately or will deal with it in the future, whether he is an expert or a layperson, it will be of the greatest interest to know or to determine under what circumstances and by whom the first philatelic drink, i.e. the first printed work, which is for collection purposes only, has been produced and what its content is., will be of the greatest interest.

It is the purpose of these lines to discuss this. The philatelic and literary phenomena can be divided into 4 main groups, namely 1 price lists, 2 albums, 3 catalogues, manuals and monographs and 4 newspapers. As far as the price lists are concerned, we know that such were already issued by dealers in England in 1862, and which were probably already in existence in Germany at that time, price lists from earlier times, especially from 1861, are not known. The oldest that are available date from 1862. Even if one reads here and there of writers dealing with philatelic literature the assumption that price lists of English dealers may have existed as early as 1861, there is no evidence in this case. As already mentioned, nobody owns one that would undoubtedly have been issued as early as 1861.

However, in the very early days individual dealers sent their customers hand-written lists of stamps that they had in stock for sale, along with the price, and I myself have such a written price list, but that's not the point here, since it was only reproduced by hand, such products have to do in the present case.

Likewise, it would not be impossible for fiction or entertainment papers from the time before 1862 to contain offers from dealers citing individual stamps that can be sold and their prices, but that does not belong here either, because in these cases it is not possible to speak of independent philatelic printed works.

The album literature also began in 1862 when Justin Lallier published the first album in Paris in 1862. In this area, too, the Germans were the next, since in the same year stamp books were already being issued in Leipzig.

We have been informed even more precisely about the appearance of the first catalogue. This is Alfred Potiquet: Catalogue des Timbres-Poste créés dans les Divers États du Globe, Paris, E. de Laplante, Marchand de Timbre-Poste pour Collections, 1862. Although this work bears the year 1862 on the title page, a note in the 2nd edition says that the first edition of the same was already available for sale on December 21st 1861. In 1862 a number of catalogs and other special works were published, the performance of which would exceed the scope and purpose of this article. Suffice it to say that Mount Brown published the first English catalogue [Editor's note: No, it was Frederick Booty in April] in May 1862 and that apparently also the catalogue of Tramburg's heirs in Hamburg, which I recently discovered, (see my article on this: "An old, apparently lost stamp catalogue" in Postwertzeichenkunde, Volume II, No. 11) was issued as early as 1862.

Finally, as far as the newspaper literature is concerned, it is England that opens the dance. The first philatelic journal the Monthly Advertiser appeared in Liverpool on December 15th 1862, or as it was from number 3 onwards from the Stamp Collectors Review and Monthly Advertiser by E. Moore & Co.; published on February 15th 1863 in Belgium (Brussels) the Timbre-Poste and on May 1st 1863 in Germany (Leipzig) the Magazin für Briefmarkensammler followed.

From what has been said it would follow that the Potiquet catalogue is to be regarded as the oldest philatelic publication. However, this is not the case.

However, is this catalogue the oldest philatelic printed work of all? Rather, this title is due to a private work which was written and printed by Oscar Berger-Levrault in Strasbourg, the author of the famous manual "Description of the Stamps Known Up to Now", Strasbourg 1864, and I am pleased to hand it over, thanks to the kindness of the author to be able to provide more details about its origin and content. Oscar Berger-Levrault was one of the oldest and most outstanding collectors. He was collecting as early as 1860 and by the beginning of 1861 already owned one of the most important collections of its time. He was not just a collector, however, but also a researcher who was in contact with the most important collectors of the time and his endeavors were primarily aimed at determining the scope of this new area of collection, a task that at that time could only be solved after major difficulties had been overcome. In order to facilitate communication with his correspondents and exchange friends, in 1861 the idea occurred to him to compile a list of all postage stamps known to him and to have them printed, which was all the easier since he owned a printer in Strasbourg. He then used these lists to determine the current status of his collection and sent them to his correspondents with the request that they name and describe all postage stamps that were not listed in the register but existed to their knowledge.

[Part 2]

In this way he succeeded in making his list more and more complete and as often as he saw a foreign or new postage stamp or was otherwise reported, he entered it, temporarily handwritten, in his list in the relevant place where it belonged. As soon as a number of such new reports were available, he completed the list by including the latter and send it back to his friends, etc. The first edition of this list was completed on September 17th 1861 at the latest, as shown on the copy which Mr. Berger-Levrault still owns today, the state of the owner's collection is registered from that day. The first 2 editions (the second was made in January 1862) were litho-autographed, the other 10 were produced using by type printing. The last 3 editions fall in the year 1864. These lists included all postage stamps known to the author (stamps, envelopes, etc.) of all countries and already listed the differences in the borders [Perforations] and the paper differences, in the 2nd edition of January 1862 a few essays are already listed. The first edition already lists 973 postage stamps. The two litho-autographed first editions are each 12 pages in quarto, the first six printed 16 each, the others of 20-26 pages in octavo. Each edition was made in 40-50 copies, of which Mr. Berger-Levrault sent his correspondents, who incidentally number of 12-15, 3 copies each, whereas he kept 4-5 copies of each edition for his own use. Potiquet used the first edition when writing his famous catalogue, which was put into distribution on December 21st 1861, as Potiquet himself acknowledged in a letter to Berger-Levrault.

These lists, which are nothing more than private catalogues, therefore do not contain any price information either, but all the other data of the public catalogues with the exception of a description of the stamps, which is missing here.

In any case, however, the 1st edition of this private catalogue, which was published on September 17, 1861 at the latest, is the first known philatelic printed work in the world and the merit of having written and printed it is due to Oscar Berger-Levrault, bookseller, formerly in Strasbourg now in Nancy.

Finally, it should only be noted that Ph. De Bosredon in his Bibliographie Timbrologique de la France et de la Belgique, Brussels 1878, pages 1 and 2, cites these lists under catalogues, but these editions are so far partly incomplete, partly are not entirely correct, unless it is stated that there are two different editions of the 2nd edition, of which the later contains various additions that are missing in the former, which was achieved by etching into the stone, and that as the date of manufacture of the 2nd edition of December 1861 is given, which is not the case because it already contains a stamp and an envelope from England from 1862. The later edition of the second edition is also made on much thinner paper than the former.

One is strangely touched when one reads among other things in the first two editions:

“Chorillos (République de) ½ Oz 1 Rl. - 1 Oz 2 Rl.” Under which the stamps of the “Pacific Steam Navigation Company” are meant.

In a later article I reserve the right to discuss the significance of Oscar Berger-Levrault's to philately and his services to it in more detail.

END

Emil W. Mewes

40 years of Literatur Nachrichten

[40 jahre Literaturnachrichten]

Mitteilungsblätter der Bundestellen Forschung und Literatur im BDPh e.V., 1991,
Whole number 12, pp.8-13

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

June 2021

40 YEARS OF LITERATUR NACHRICHTEN

Ceremonial speech by Vice President of the BDPh e.V., EmilW. Mewes, Dusseldorf on the occasion of the opening of the 9 Soest Talks on June 1, 1991

The SOESTER TALKS, which have been held in Soest since 1970 as an event of the Association of German Philatelists, have been reserved exclusively for research and literature in philately since the 4 talks in 1974.

The significance of these events was also documented with a special stamp, which for these talks was given by the organizer, a special post office specially set up for this purpose, the motto with the focus of these talks. So from the 4 SOESTER TALKS onwards, we can record the following mottos:

4th SOESTER TALKS 1974:

"Research in Philately"

5. SOESTER TALKS 1979:

"Research and Literature"

6. SOESTER TALKS 1983:

The focus was on philatelic literature, made visible by an open book called C. Lindenberg, F. Kalckhoff, G. Kobold, A. E. Glasewald and H. E. Sieger.

7. SOESTER TALKS 1985:

"Modern philately - research - promote - consolidate"

8th SOESTER TALKS 1988:

"50 Jahre Postmark Guild". The motto not contained in the stamp was "No philately without stamping knowledge".

The 9 SOESTER TALKS to be carried out this year in the period from May 31 to June 2, 1991 have the motto "Philately and Communication" and indicate a special anniversary in the special stamp, which is also accompanied by a small exhibition "Philatelic literature - Bibliographies".

"40 years of LITERATURE NEWS"

Let us now take a brief look back at the time in the history of philatelic literature - bibliographies - before 1951, when the LITERATURE NEWS was first published.

Barely 22 years after Rowland Hill introduced the first postage stamps in England, the Strasbourg bookseller and printer's owner Oscar Berger-Levrault was able to meet the demands of collectors who were already widespread in England, France, Germany and North America by publishing a stamp catalog published on October 17, 1861 first philatelic printed matter in the world.

So we can have another anniversary today:

“130 Years of Philatelic Literature”

But no one could have guessed at that time what importance would later be attached to philatelic literature in the context of philatelic research. Apart from the fact that philatelic research is unthinkable without literature, its importance became more and more apparent when, as a result of the increasing number of Beau issues after 1900, many collectors were forced to give up “general collecting” and focus on more and more special fields (country groups, individual countries, motifs and Collections of topics such as airmail, pre-philately, precancels, first day covers, postal stationery, etc.); The research results and experiences laid down in the specialist literature were dependent on this, precisely because of the specialization.

Unfortunately, it is an unfortunate fact that only a fraction of all research work that has been published could appear in book form as a monograph, since a publisher who is willing to make sacrifices is not always willing to make sacrifices for the publication because of the high printing costs in relation to the small edition, which result from the necessary illustration still increase, finds. A considerable part of the research work is therefore only included as a reprint in the specialist press, the scope of which, in view of its 130 years of existence and international distribution in philatelic libraries, amounts to at least twice the space required by the monographs.

In the search for source references, it is now important for the collector to determine in which periodical writing (which, in addition to the specialist journals, also includes almanacs, yearbooks, calendars and the like containing no less valuable articles) the research work that is relevant for his specialty occur or in which year they are included. This results in the need to create references (biographies, index), which the Austrian Senate President Victor Suppanschitsch recognized as early as 1891 and prompted him to publish a “Bibliography At the same time reference book of all German philatelic literature since its existence” published by Verlag A. Larisch, Munich by the end of 1891 “. So next year this early standard work of German philatelic literature will be 100 years old. After Lord Crawford, Suppanschitsch undoubtedly owned the most important philatelic library of the time. Born on October 31, 1838 in Laibach, he studied law in Vienna and, like Lindenberg, pursued a career as a judge, in which he made it to the position of Sentas President at the Abersten Gerischtshof in Vienna, also in this respect as successfully as Lindenberg.

The bibliography of all German philatelic literature published in 1892 from its existence until the end of 1891 was followed by numerous other publications, including the work “Grundzüge der Briefmarkenkunde” in 1895, which was the authoritative philatelic textbook until the publication of Haass's standard work in 1905 “Lehrbuch der Briefmarkenkunde” German language. In 1913 the Berlin Philatelist Club awarded him the Lindenberg Medal, and in 1918 the Mainz Association for Postage Stamping awarded him the “Hans Wagner Medal”. He did not survive the fall of the K. and K. monarchy for long, he died on March 2, 1919 in Graz. Since negotiations with the Berlin Philatelist Club about the purchase of the library failed, his heirs sold this unique library for $ 1,500 to Theodore E. Steinway, who donated it to the New York “Collectors Club”, which at one time gave the library, which had been in a rather poor state became one of the leading in the world.

In his two-volume work “Geschichte der Philateli”, Prof. Carlrichard Brühl gave figures on the library holdings, which Suppantchitsch himself published a catalog and presented in a short article in the “Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society”.

Although he limited himself to the literature published up to the end of 1900, his library alone comprised around 27,200 journal numbers as well as around 1,170 books and other non-periodic publications, as well as around 1,000 price lists and around 300 association publications (statutes, annual reports, etc.) .) a total of around 30,000 individual pieces. The breakdown of the journals by language is interesting: 7,324 German-speaking journal numbers were compared to 4,115 French, but 13,027 English-speaking. All other languages together only contributed 2,698 numbers, of which 890 Spanish made up the largest proportion. The situation was similar with the independent publications: 550 were written in English, 429 in German and 139 in French; 61 were written in other languages, 19 of them in Spanish and 16 in Italian. The German-English production in the field of philatelic literature thus reached over 75% for magazines and almost 84% for other publications by 1900, with English-language literature clearly outperforming German-language literature (about 2: 1 for magazines, but only about 5: 4 for the monographs and the like).

A similar fate, namely that of the forced sale, was already in 1880, one of the oldest philatelic libraries in Germany, that of our old master of philately, Dr. Alfred Moschkau, decided; he lost it along with his large collection of stamps as a result of his unfortunate trial against a manufacturer or distributor of “imitations” whom he carelessly called a “counterfeiter. It passed into the possession of the “Wiener Philatelisten-Club”.

The editor of the (Central German) Philatelist Newspaper and founder of the Gössnitzer Philatelist Association Arthur Ernst Glasewald, the publisher of the “German Philatelic Bookworm” Carl Beck, the author of the “Great Lexicon of Philately” painter Alexander Bungerz walk in the footsteps of Suppantchitsch.

The magnificent libraries of the last two named Beck and Bungerz, with that of the painter Alexander Bungerz (1874-1931) being the most important library of the twenties, came into the possession of the Prussian State Library in 1931. They could be allocated to this from the surpluses of IPOSTA 1930.

We are also not allowed to pass by the former magistrate and later banker Heinrich Fraenkel and Dr. jur. Otto Rommel from Leipzig, who both had built remarkable libraries before World War I, whereby Rommel's strength lay primarily in the field of philatelic magazines, while Fraenkel, who had acquired the library from Sigmund Fridel, Vienna, around 1890, himself Haas greatly exceeded in scope and material.

It follows Rudolf Krasemann (bibliography of the most important special works on the postage stamps of individual countries), Friedrich Leitenberger (bibliography of German-language literature), the Potsdam librarian Fr. Wilh. Thalmann (directory of the specialist articles contained in Philatelistische journals), the author of the manual of the phil. Literature Max Ton. “The international philatelic literature reference work Mondial (1936) started by Fritz Billig (Vienna later publisher in Jamaica, NJ.) And the project of the author of the explanations for the editors of the projected "general index, who unfortunately did not return from the last world war, remained unfinished" The German-speaking philat. Journal literature C. Schmitt diel. The same fate shared the "Handbook and Catalog of the Philatelic Literature of the World" announced by Karl Scharfenberg in the "Magazine for Philatelic Literature 1950". The founder of the Federation Internationale de la Presse Philatélique (FIPP) Dr. Ing. Giulio Tedeschi- Turin 1929/1930 financed "Repertoire bibliographique de la Presse philatelique" directed by Professor Franzis P. Rénaut, which was delivered free of charge to the members of the FIPP together with the bulletin of the FIPP. Unfortunately, the repertoire was discontinued after the appearance of deliveries due to insufficient subscriber access.

As periodical publications in the German philatelic area and thus as a prelude to the LITERATURE NEWS, we are allowed to Dr. Rommel's monthly supplement to "Die Post": "The philatelic literature", the first issue of which was published in 1895.

"The philatelic bookworm" in Hamburg was published in 17 years under the editorship of C. Schmitt diel, Hamburg, "The philatelic literature - contribution for the general interests of philatelic literature". Under the title "The Philatelic Literature Collector", this publication, founded in 1932, was a supplement to the "Green Collectors World" (Verlag Klin-Niebuß).

After 1945 the "Society for Philatelic Literature e.V." launched, which published the magazine "Die Lupe" (later continued as "Collector's Lupe" by Dr. Ploenes and E. W. Mewes) and literature references on the old German collecting areas of Baden, Bavaria, Prussia, Saxony and Württemberg.

With the publication of issue 5 in May 1950, which Alfred Ihm in Wunsiedel, a member of the postmark guild "Rhein-Donau" eV, edited "Archive for Philatelic Literature" in the third year, ceased its publication, it was created for the then head of the philatelic department of the Munich City Library, Christoph Otto Müller, who together with Dr. F. Kalckhoff, H. Posselt and Alfred Ihm contributed to the design of the overview of the contents of the domestic and foreign specialist journals in the archive; on the occasion of the Bundestag of the Association of German Philatelists in Munich in 1949, he was appointed head of the BDPh's Federal Literature Office the need to continue the documentation work started in the archive. This is how the "LITERATUR-NACHRICHTEN - PHILATELIC DIGEST" were born, the first issue of which appeared in January 1951 with a modest 20 pages in A5 format with 5 numbers each bimonthly in 1951 and 1952 and every quarter up to 1962. From then on it was decided to publish annual volumes, even interrupted several times by two annual volumes.

I can say that I consider myself lucky that I was available as a staff member for the LITERATUR-Nachrichten from their number 1 onwards. And unfortunately there were always only a few that Christoph Otto Müller and his successors could count on, in contrast to the numerous national and international awards that this joint work of German philatelists has received over the years. The creator of this literary publication in 1962, 10 years after the appearance of the number 1, which was an indispensable part of the work of the Association of German Philatelists, was able to point to 26 top honors won at international and national exhibitions, including the "diplomas" that were still customary at the time in the rank of a gold medal "prevailed.

From 1963 to 1974 Fritz Gaedicke, Berlin, elected in 1963 as the successor to Christoph Otto Müller as federal agency manager for literature, continued his work, only to hand it over to Robert Höhn, Cologne, in 1975, from whom she became the federal agency manager in 1985 Literature in the BDPh. Franz-Josef Lindauer took over.

Volume 89 of LITERATUR-NACHRICHTEN will be leaving the printing press in a few weeks. So it is more or less an anniversary volume, this volume 89 for the year 1989, which the Bund Deutscher Philatelisten is looking for the numerous friends of philatelic literature in its own ranks, such as the federations merged in the FIP Fédération Internationale de Philatélie so hopefully how his predecessors can provide usable compendium. His main editor, the current head of the federal agency for literature, Franz-Josef Lindauer, can also celebrate a small anniversary with it, as he is responsible for the 5th time for the compilation of this extensive work. With 512 pages, the annual volume is almost the same size as its predecessor (528 pages) and contains a total of 4,957 references on 375 pages, which are divided into the individual areas as follows:

Area Studies 2.135 Bibliography
Subjects 2.014 Bibliography
Topic 709 Bibliography
Miscellaneous 99 Bibliography

All circulars and research reports from the working and research groups and the motive groups in the Association of German Philatelists were evaluated. This proves the importance of the work of these communities, which are open to all members of an association in the BDPh or a corresponding association in a regional association of the FIP.

Only the activities in these communities will and should be reported in the future. In addition, as in the previous year's volumes, a large number of philatelic journals were evaluated, for which we Hartwig Danesch, Schwelm; Johanna Finger, Wadersloh; Hermengild Lindauer, Soest; Esa Mattila, Espoo (Finland); Uwe Seif, Schorndorf; Gerhard Trögel, Leverkusen and Jürgen Zalaszewski, Manching: are indebted to us. 119 literary publications from 1989 were also discussed.

When the 4,957 locations of the forthcoming LITERATUR-NACHRICHTEN 1989 by Otto Gleixner, the successor of Christoph Otto Müller as head of the Philatelic Library of the Munich Municipal Libraries, are listed on Indemcards, not only do the corresponding index cards go there, but also all circulars and Individual publications by our working and research communities, then the sum of these index cards of the last 10 years from 1980 to 1989 has reached the impressive sum of around 70,000 references. How large may the total number of these references for the previous numbers 1-80 be, and all this knowledge is available to the members of our Federation for the promotion of their own research activities.

40 years of LITERATUR-NACHRICHTEN should really be a reason and occasion to remember with gratitude all those who have paved the way to the development of this knowledge with their work from number 1 of these publications on. If I succeeded in doing this a little with what I said, I would be delighted.

In these thanks, however, we should also include the Foundation for the Promotion of Philately and Postal History, which has been promoting the publication of LITERATURE NEWS for over 25 years. It is only through this generous support that it can be passed on free of charge to all associations, working and research groups and motive groups in the Federation of German Philatelists, as well as to all state associations of the FIP as a sign of international community thinking of the Federation of German Philatelists.
May it stay like this for a long time!

END

Claudia Maassen

Dear Members of the AIJP

[Liebe Mitglieder der AIJP]

Circular to all members of the Association Internationale des Journalistes Philatéliques, [March 2011], 70pp.

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

July 2020

DEAR MEMBERS OF THE AIJP

With this mail you will receive a further offer from the AIJP literature mediation service. The roughly 1,000 items are mainly the second (and last) part of Hans Mayer's Philatelic Library, which is being released by Phil * Creativ Verlag in Schwalmthal. AIJP members will receive this offer first, before it will be offered to other interested parties starting around April 15, 2011.

Here are a few preliminary remarks:

Hans Meyer lived in Ubstadt and was very much involved with his profession (he was formerly the police director), his region and Wurttemberg's homeland, but also his club and association. In this respect, the list also contains numerous items that are to be considered under these aspects, i.e. have no direct connection to philately. We still took them in because there may also be other interested parties.

Almost all items were priced very cheaply; as before, usually at half the usual prices that can otherwise be found. The intention is to sell this inventory as quickly as possible, also to make room for new acquisitions.

Bids on this list, the prices of which are fixed prices, can be sent to Mr. Dobiak by email. Subject to prior sale. If items are already sold out, you will receive a corresponding message. Postage/shipping costs are always extra.

Please state the order number when ordering!

The offer ends at the end of April 15, 2011.

Note

Phil*Creativ Verlag will occupy a larger antiquarian stand (booth No. 113 in front of the "Snack Point") at the upcoming International Stamp Fair in Essen. There the publisher offers a selection from its antiquarian bookshop, also with a department of rare literature. Have a look inside!

Phil*Creativ Verlag
Claudia Maassen

END

Literatur Nachrichten
1999, Volume 99

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
August 2020

LITERATUR NACHRICHTEN

1999, Volume 99

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

FOREWORD

It is hard to believe - you are not only holding a new volume of LITERATUR-NACHRICHTEN in your hands, no, it is also the most extensive one to date! How is it possible that years for the LITERATURE NEWS contain more data on new philatelic titles? Is the wheel being reinvented over and over again, or is there really always new philatelic research being published?

Our philatelic working groups and our philatelic authors really do not need to freshen up familiar things or even create literary plagiarism. They publish philatelic novelties, which are often the result of years of research. With a lot of meticulousness and expertise they carry out basic philatelic research, correct or supplement previous knowledge, set up theories that have yet to be checked or take part in the discussion about the future of philately. All of these aspects of philatelic research can be applied to both postal history and thematic topics.

But what does philately look like in the 21st century? Does it stick to the previously known topics or add new ones that are hardly realized today or are not even present. Do you know how communication - in the philatelic sense - will develop in the new century? Letters in the conventional sense will certainly be written for many years to come, and postage stamps representing the state will also be issued. But will they perhaps one day only be offered as a nostalgic product? In our high-tech and networked world, alternative communication options have already been developed, others - which are still far from our imagination - will follow. Alternatives today are already e-mail, fax, the Internet with chat rooms and web cams; Postage stamps can be produced and accounted for electronically. Private posts develop their own ideas for mail delivery. Quo vadis philately?

Wit philatelists have to face this new challenge. We cannot simply ignore the new developments in the postal and communications sector. Otherwise there is a risk of having to find out at some point that you have reached a dead end.

However, I am absolutely certain that our working groups in particular, but also numerous other philatelists, will take on this new task. Many philatelic articles already deal with topics from the field of modern communication. There are sure to be more and more. Take an active part in this area too, philately will thank you for it.

Finally, I would like to thank everyone who has immortalized themselves as philatelic authors in these LITERATURE NEWS, but also my federal agency manager, Franz-Josef Lindauer, who made sure that the large amount of data was collated, processed and written down.

Soest, January 2001

Franz-Karl Lindner, Association of German Philatelists e.V.

EPILOGUE

Dear user of this LITERATURE NEWS,

These and the issues on electronic data carriers from 1987 onwards are available from Philatelie Verlags- und Vertriebs GmbH, Mildren-Scheel-Str. 2, 53175 Bonn, can be requested.

For your information, she said that this edition of the LITERATUR-NEWS - as far as I know today - will be the penultimate year that will be published in book form.

Although several of my colleagues - at the head Ms. Johanna Finger - as well as my dear wife tried to clarify all errors in the proofreading, one can assume that you will definitely find a few more.

Therefore, I would like to ask the wetter to inform me of any typing or factual errors found. If an issue of a magazine or article has not been evaluated or stopped, please let me know. These errors can then be corrected on the electronic data carrier.

Thank you already to everyone who wrote to me.

Finally, I would like to say to all of my helpers in the working groups who evaluate your publications, namely Messrs. Hartwig Danesch, Schwelm, Rudolf Hofer (+), Ulrich Jobsky, Wiehl, Jörg Maier, Munich, Dr. We would like to thank Walter Möbs, Dinslaken, Rainer vonschepen, Mainz, Christian Schunck, Cologne, Gerhard Trögel, Leverkusen, and Jürgen Zalaszewski, Manching, who are responsible for many foreign magazines, as well as the editors. Without your work, the LITERATURE NEWS would only be worth half.

Thanks again!

Frans-Josef Lindauer
Bundesstellenleiter
Forschung u. Literatur

END

J. M. Pos

The pioneers of philately
[De pioniers in de philatelie]

Het Philatelistisch Maandblad, April 1916, Volume 5, Whole number 52, pp.56-57; May, Whole number 53, pp.70-71; June, Whole number 54, p.89; July, Whole number 55, pp.106-107; August, Whole number 56, pp.120-121 & September, Whole number 57, pp.135-136.

Translation by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
August 2020

THE PIONEERS OF PHILATELY

Part 1

Pioneer work is always difficult, for it means the cultivation of virgin soil, the cultivation of wasteland. The discovery of such a field is already part of that work, although chance sometimes plays an important part here. Every science has had its precursors. And although pioneers such as Galvani and Volta for electricity and Stephenson and Watt for steam engineering and – more up to date – the Dutchman Cornelius van Drebbel and the American Mr. Holland may have meant more to the submarine industry than our pioneers to the philately, yet I think we ought to know a little more about our foremen.

The pioneers of every science are honored and honored. Statues are erected for them. Think Ann Laurens Koster and Columbus. And although I am not walking around with statues or even monuments to one of our best philatelic forerunners, those who feel more than merely material for the philately, should, better than is often the case, be acquainted with the first labour. our front workers. In the previous issues of our monthly magazine I have already stated that in the sixties of the previous century our pioneers started their work. Now something about the pioneers themselves, in reference to a chapter appearing in “The Stamp Collector”, a book that I recommend to everyone as worth reading. It is probably known to everyone that England in particular should be regarded as the cradle of Philately.

In 1861 the principal English collectors were H. H. F. J. Stainforth, Daniel Cooper, Philbrick, Hughes-Hughes, Dr. Viner, Mount Brown and Pemberton.

Mr. Stainforth was the last preacher of the now defunct All Saints' Church in London, and his house was the rendezvous of the deaf-named philatelists on Saturday afternoon, save Mr. Pemberton, who lived too far from London to attend these meetings regularly. The rectory of All Saints' Church in London can therefore be regarded as the first clubhouse of philatelists in England. Mr. Stainforth's collection included rare copies, many local stamps of the United States, which Mr. Mount Brown largely supplied him, and he was the possessor of the first “Petimus” - stamps of British Guiana (see Senf No. 5-20). He died in September 1866, while his collection passed into the hands of dealers, who sold the rarities piece by piece.

Sir Daniel Cooper was born in New South Wales in 1821. He was repeatedly elected Speaker of the Colony's Assembly under the new Act of 1856.

He arrived in England in 1861 and soon after began collecting stamps. In a few years his collection became the largest and most important of those existing at the time. It was due to his position in Australia and his connections with many high-ranking officials that he came into possession of rare specimens more easily than others, and as can be understood, his collection was rich in Australian stamps. He was also one of the first owners of the rare early Hawaiian seals. He was one of the founders of the Philatelic Society of London and also the first president of that Society, which was formed in April 1869. Until 1878 Sir Cooper remained its president. In that year he sold his collection to Herr P. von Ferrary for 36,000.

When Sir Cooper left the field of the Philatelic, Judge Philbrick acted as warden of the Philatelists in England. So much was he soon known as a connoisseur of rarities that a discovered rarity was first presented to him. He was England's judge. He collected not only stamps, but also postal items, both unused and canceled, and his collection was well-stocked in every field. In the past, when the number of issues was not as great as it is now, and the time approached for the collection of proofs and essays. Philbrick's collection also contained finer copies, among which may be mentioned the drawings of the first postage stamps of England, which are of such great importance to us. He continued collecting essays when these proof stamps, if I may call them that, were no longer so common in other collections. It is a pity that even in our time these stamps are not given more attention by people who wish to give a picture of the development of the postal system through their collection. All the rarities that existed when Philbrick collected were found in his collection, such as the two "Post-Office" stamps of Mauritius, the first issue of the Hawaiian Islands, the two first Reunion stamps, and the first stamps of British Buyana. So complete was his collection that, a zealous philatelist as he was, he began to collect whole sheets, which were distinguished by the difference in type, b. v. of the One Penny, Two and Three Pence of New South Wales, the first and third of which contain 25 types, while a sheet of the Two pence has one less. He may therefore be regarded as the founder of the scientific philatelic school. In 1882, much to the chagrin of his philatelic friends, he relinquished his entire collection to the purchaser of Sir Cooper's collection Herr P. von Ferrary for 96,000.

(Will be followed.)

THE PIONEERS IN PHILATELY: 2

(Continued and Closing.)

This sum was unheard of at the time. Now Philbrick's collection would probably have brought in a small million. Shortly afterwards he started collecting the stamps of Great Britain again and made his first step in the field of specialism. As such, he is also a pioneer. He sold this special collection in 1894 for 18,000. However, he continued and continued his collection of postal items and tax stamps. Indeed, collecting had become so second nature to him that he once again began a collection of the stamps of his country. He was also a co-founder of the Philatelic Society of London and became its successor in 1878 when Sir Cooper stepped down as president. He held that post until 1893. He was a contributor to the first philatelic magazines, especially the Stamp Collectors Magazine and the Philatelic Record. But his chief philatelic writing work he spent in conjunction with Mr. W. A. S. Westoby on the compilation of a history of the Postal Victory and Telegraph Stamps of Great Britain. This work was published in 1881 and was so well cared for that for years it remained a source of information not only for philatelists but also for senior postal officials.

Mr. William Hughes-Hughes became a member of the Bar in 1842 and began collecting stamps in 1859. However, he continued this work only with Ernst 15 years later. He submitted his collection to the Philatelic Exhibition in London in 1890 and was awarded a silver medal. His collection contained only about 3,000 copies, with almost all of them being rarities in excellent condition. He sold her in 1896 to a firm of London merchants for about 36,000, and it is certainly interesting to know that he himself had only spent about 800 on it. He was also co-supervisor of the often mentioned "Society".

dr. CW Viner, whose name is known as the publisher of Oppen's Stamp Album to thousands of collectors, began collecting for a friend in 1855 and for his own account in 1860. He, too, soon acquired names as a philatelist, and although he renounced his collections more than once, he continued to be constantly takes an interest in philately. From the beginning he was a prolific Writer in the field of philately and can thus be regarded as one of the pioneers of scientific philately. He stood Mr. Mount Brown in the compilation of his first catalog, and in 1863 he was appointed editor of the Stamp Collectors Magazine. In 1867 he became editor of the Philatelist. He was also one of the founders of the well-known "Society".

Mr. Mount Brown, known as the compiler of the catalog named after him, began collecting in 1860 and obtained, mainly by exchange, a collection of over 300 stamps, a collection which his friends then admired with admiration. That number was indeed considerable, taking into account the few issues that had yet seen the light. Two years later, Mr. Mount Brown, which allowed a list of all then known postage stamps to exist, and with the help of some well-known collectors of the day he succeeded in compiling such a list, which he published in May, 1862. His enterprise was successful, which appeared from the 5th edition, which was already necessary in 1864. His correspondences with collectors all over the world had reached such proportions by 1869 that he was left with only the choice of giving up his London business or leaving the Philately. He decided on the latter.

Mr. E. L. Pemberton began collecting as a schoolboy about 1859 and the Philately has always been a subject of careful study for him. Only later did he consider collecting stamps from a commercial point of view and he was certainly one of the first. He was consulted from all sides on philatelic matters. His death in 1878 at the age of 34 concluded a promising career, to which his works bear testimony, among which may be mentioned "Forged stamps and how to detect them," published in 1863 and co-written with Mr. Thornton Lewes, "The Stamp Collector's Handbook" and "The Philatelic Catalogue", one volume of which was published. Mr. Pemberton edited the Philatelic Journal, a journal which began his career in 1872, and to these other philatelic journals he devoted his constant concerns.

Here are seven philatelists who may be regarded as the pioneers of philately, the pioneers and pioneers of the philatelic world. Whoever feels love for our hobby should know and appreciate this circle of friends.

Next time I hope to share something about some other well-known philatelists.

Arnhem. J.M. POS.

THE PIONEERS IN PHILATELY: 3 (Sequel.)

Still other philatelists made a name for themselves in the latter half of the last century, not least through their precious collections. And now it is true that money is a powerful factor, and the holders of narrow purses have not had time to take that toll in the philatelic sphere which men of money filled. But it must not be forgotten that the very favorable financial circumstances in which many of our pioneers found themselves promoted the development of philately.

Of the well-known collectors since 1860, we mention in the first place Mr. W.A.S. Westoby. This friend of the philately began collecting about 1862, when he had settled in Paris, and he soon became one of the foremost collectors in the French capital. At that time there were four or five well-known shops in Paris where the trade in philatelic articles was carried on, proof that the Parisians were already moving on philatelic grounds with as much enthusiasm as the Londoners. In these matters the well-known collectors met regularly, to make purchases for their collections, to exhibit their treasures, and to strike up a chat about their hobby—the nervous frenzy of humanity was not yet over.

epidemic – and to investigate new issues. Among these visitors Westoby was one of the most famous of the novice, as he strove to collect used stamps in excellent condition, a practice which was not always followed, as little attention was paid to poorly canceled and well-edged specimens. Later, Westoby became especially interested in European stamps, of which he collected a magnificent collection, consisting of almost all unused copies. The man, who from the novice had a taste for the aesthetic side of philately, finally had to welcome the collection of uncanceled stamps. With the exception of the stamps of Great Britain, he sold this entire collection to Mr. Tapling about 1884. After that he continued to add to the remaining part of his collection. As already mentioned, in association with Mr. Philbrick wrote a work on the postal and telegraph stamps of England. That twerk, “The Postage and Telegraph Stamps of Great Britain” was published by Sampson Low, Marston, Searle & Rivington, London, and J. B. Moens, 42 Rue de Florence, Brussels. (Price f6.30). Later he wrote: “Postage Stamps of the United Kingdom”, published in London by the same publishers for f.3, - and “The Adhesive Postage Stamps of Europe”. The latter work is published in parts by Upcott Gill, Strand 170, London W. C. for f0.60 per volume. This weather is also highly recommended for beginners. Westoby also contributed to the publishing of the first philatelic periodicals, and was editor of the Philatelic Record for some years and for a long time of Alfred Smith & Son's Monthly Circular.

One of the first Parisian collectors was also Baron Alphonse de Rothschild, and although he ceased to collect actively about 1880, he has, as might be expected, amassed a collection of several volumes. He mainly devoted himself to collecting whole sheets, especially those on which type differences occur. Baron Rothschild left the compilation of his collection entirely to the aforementioned Belgian publisher J. B. Moens, who visited him at regular intervals in Paris to provide a place in the album for the rare copies which he had managed to obtain for him. Baron Alphonse was founder and for many years president of the “Société Française de Timbrologie”. He also wrote several works in the field of the postal system, a proof that he did not allow himself to be "flipped", but himself took an active part in philatelic work.

mr. E. W. Image became interested in collecting stamps, while assisting his wife in assembling a collection, after receiving some triangular stamps from the Cape of Good Hope, which were then in circulation. After her death in 1872, Mr. Image his wife's collection and reworked it completely. In 1882, when he no longer considered himself young enough to continue his hobby, he sold his collection to Mr. Tapling for £3,000. It contained both envelopes and stamps, including all known rarities, except the two "Post-office" of Mauritius. The samples were in exceptionally good condition and only rarely did Mr. Image miss an opportunity to get your hands on rare stamps. This happened, however, when he was offered the two above-mentioned stamps for ₣2,800. The chance of acquiring ownership of this famous couple on more favorable terms did not materialize to his regret.

Arnhem. J.M. POS.
(To be continued.)

THE PIONEERS IN PHILATELY: 4 (Sequel.)

Mr. Victoriano G. de Ysasi, a Spanish resident in London and vice president of The Philatelic Society of London from 1878 until his death in 1881, was also among the first collectors. His collection was especially rich in stamps of Spain and the Colonies, which he easily obtained through his many connections in the Spanish possessions. He collected both unused and used, but in separate albums, and his collection of unused stamps aroused the admiration of many of his friends so much that unused collecting became more popular ever since. His collection was complete except for some of the rarest rarities. Before his tragic death as a result of a railway accident in 1881, he relinquished several parts of his collection.

Mr. Maitland Burnett, who was honorary secretary of the well-known London Society from 1879 to 1885, began collecting like so many others as a schoolboy. When his school years were over, he gave his collection to his sister in 1860. After traveling for 20 years, he returned to his home in Scotland and found his gift peacefully lying on a bookshelf in the library. He decided to complete his collection and took his album with him to London, in order to acquire the few copies which he believed were still missing. To his astonishment it appeared to him not only that after four years it was quite easy to track down a dealer in stamps, but also that the stamps had risen so much in price that the missing ones would cost him a lot of money. . Kit didn't deter him, though. When one day he met Mr. de Ysasi, this moved him to join the London Society, and he soon changed from a simple collector to an enthusiastic and scientific philatelist. The collection he brought together was distinguished by numerous stamps, which rarely find their way to the market. She was complete except for some of the greatest rarities, and the specimens had been selected with the utmost care. When he left England in 1885, he sold his stamps to a trading firm for 12,000 and the finest specimens found a place in the Tapling collection.

Mr. Burnett was the first editor of the Philatelic Record, which was published in 1879, and remained so with a few short intervals until the end of its issue in 1885.

The two Caillebotte brothers, Parisians, first started collecting seriously in 1877, but in a few years they acquired one of the largest collections that ever existed. Two persons, so closely related to each other and both inspired by the same enthusiasm for the same hobby, moreover had a better chance of creating a splendid collection than the individual who always has to track down his own channels. They collected not only postage stamps, but also telegraph stamps and postal items of all kinds. The stamps alone took place in about 50 large volumes of quarto format and were arranged on a scientific basis. Both brothers were tireless in collecting different varieties and slightest deviations occurred in their album. When one of the two, viz. Martial's marriage in 1887, the collection was broken up, as George saw no opportunity to complete the collection with the care and accuracy he deemed necessary. The loose stamps were bought by Mr. Tapling, for 60,000, while part of the postal items were also taken over by this famous philatelist. The rest of the postal items were sold at an Auction in London at the end of 1890. The stamp collection contained all the rarities except the two "Post-Office" stamps of Mauritius and some local stamps of the United and Confederate States of America. The two brothers not only collected, but also studied all the issues, and the result of their labors, especially with regard to the New South Wales and Mexico stamps, will ever remain a monument of their diligent and meticulous study and abiding service to the good. of philately.

Mr. Gilbert Harrison, like most collectors, started by collecting everything he could get his hands on. But that proved too powerful for him in the long run. To collect all the stamps of the world on a basis as he scientifically envisioned it would be an impossible task for one man. He therefore confined himself to the stamps of Afghanistan, Cashmere, Japan, and Portuguese India, and the envelope stamps of the United States, precisely the most difficult countries to collect, which frighten even the boldest collectors. Of these countries he formed an exceedingly finer collection, and his Afghan stamps, valued at 96,000, were probably the most valuable collection of stamps of any country in the world. He died in 1894 at the age of 36. His United States collection was sold at an Auction in London the following year for 16,000. The other stamps came into the hands of some London merchants. Mr. Harrison and Lieutenant F. H. Capiér compiled a complete treatise on the seals of Portuguese India, viz. "Portuguese India", published by Stanley Gibbons Ltd., 391 Strand, London W.C., (price £2.95). He also wrote "The Nesbitt Stamped Envelopes and Wrappers of the United States of America", published as a supplement to the "London Philatelist", by M. P. Castle and available from Mr. Gooch Effingham House, Arundelstreet, Strand, in London for £6.-.

The Earl of Kingston devoted himself chiefly to collecting the stamps of England, British North America, some of the Australian Colonies, and Ceylong. From Great Britain in particular he amassed a splendid collection, consisting almost entirely of unused stamps, many of them in pairs or blocks. The whole was aesthetically arranged in three bound parts. After his death this collection was sold to a firm of London merchants for 21,600. Lord Kingston became Philbrick's successor as president of the London Society in 1892 and remained so until his death in January 1896.

Mr. J. K. Tiffany of St. Louis (Ver. St.) was for many years one of the foremost collectors in America. His collection was excellently arranged on a scientific basis in a number of bound volumes. He was president of the "American Philatelic Association" of the founding stamps of the United States: "History of the Postage Stamps of the United States of America", published by CH Mekeel in St. Louis (USA), price £5 - and as one of the authors of a book about the envelopes of his country, namely "The Stamped Envelopes, Wrappers and Sheets of the United States", published by the "Scott Stamp and Coin Co., Ltd.", 18 East 23rd Street, New York, (price 12.50) he raises more than any other American collectors have earned their sports in the field of scientific philately. He also collected philatelic works and it is estimated that his library contained at least 95% of everything published in this field. He died in 1897 at the age of 55.

Mr. TK Tapling set the first step on philatelic ground when he was ten years old, and except for the few years which he spent at Trinity College, Cambridge, he remained an avid collector until his death in April 1891. His collection was already quite important when he met Mr. Purchas and his collection. Two years later he came into possession of the European stamps of Mr. Westoby, and until his death he seized every fine collection which had come on the English market since 1882. Among these may be mentioned the excellent collection of Mauritius stamps of Major Evans, including a beautiful copy of the "One Penny Post-office" on envelope. The other value of the "Post-office" stamps, the "two pence" blue (unused) was obtained by exchange from Herr von Ferrary. By purchasing Captain Weare's collection he obtained a splendid collection of the first issues of Afghanistan and of Portuguese India, British India and some other countries.

Mr. Cameron's collection brought him into possession of the first issues of Cashmere, those of Mr. Luard supplied him with many more beautiful stamps of British Guiana and those of De Ysasi, Burnet and Castle made him the owner of other splendid copies.

During all the years that he collected he corresponded with the foremost merchants of the world concerning the purchase of certain stamps. It is worth noting that he obtained the first issues of New South Wales by constant advertising in Sydney magazines. By this alone he obtained several hundred copies of the "Sydney Views" and of the Lauwerkrans stamps. By 1887 his collection had grown to such an extent that he also had to occupy the backs of his album pages, putting his albums in danger of suffering from oversaturation.

Arnhem. J.M. POS.
(To be continued.)

THE PIONEERS IN PHILATELY: 5 (Sequel.)

When the gathering of the Gaillebotte brothers came to the market, it was agreed that Mr. Tapling was allowed to take possession of everything he needed from it. The finer arrangement in the albums of the two French brothers appealed to him so much that he decided to buy these albums in their entirety and fill the gaps in them with stamps which he already owned, while relinquishing the surplus in his own possession. flooded books. But in the end this ranking didn't do him any good either. At that time he already owned a hundred Philbrick albums, bound in red morocco leather. Each of these albums contained about 60 loose leaves of gray-green tinted paper. mr. Tapling now came up with the idea of attaching each stamp to a white card surrounded by a red line. These cards were affixed to larger sheets by date of issue, each copy of each denomination being followed by the varieties to which it belonged. In this way an easy overview was obtained of the values belonging to an issue.

The collection is thus arranged in the British Museum, while the details of each issue are given on the pages of the albums. The collection contains postage stamps as well as telegraph stamps and postal items of all kinds. mr. Tapling has always tried to collect unused, and only then did he obtain used copies when there was no chance of obtaining them unused or when used stamps were more valuable than unused ones. Also, the collection consists only of stamps and postal items, issued until the end of 1889. The intention of Mr. Tapling was to have a collection of everything issued by the post during the first 50 years (1840 to 1890). It is a pity that the Board of the British Museum has no funds available to supplement the collection. It is true that some existing gaps have been filled, but these gifts again come from philatelists, collectors and dealers alike. May their example be followed by others.

A few words about the collection itself. Of course each country is well represented, but special attention should be given to Great Britain and the Colonies and most other states of Europe. Also not to be mentioned are the whole sheets, original and reconstructed, of stamps, which differ in type, and also not the so-called private local stamps. The collection of postal items is almost complete. Among these may be mentioned the Sardinia envelopes of 1818, the Sydnie-dito of 1838, the House of Parliament envelopes and the Mulready envelopes and covers, while not forgetting the Balloon envelopes, which were used during the siege of Paris and the letters which used by the Germans during the Franco-Prussian War.

Since the collection came into the British Museum, it has become worth at least three times as much. She is now estimated at 100,000 pd.st.

mr. Tapling was vice president of the Phil. Society of London from 1881 to his death. He has also provided descriptions of the first stamps of New Zealand, the first issues of Tasmania, the stamps of Turkey and the first issues of Afghanistan. The very large material at his disposal enabled him to prove how many stamps on each of the three plates of the "One Penny" and "Two Pence" were retouched and re-engraved, while he was able to determine in the proper order the varieties on the plates occurred. He was also able to provide an explanation of the production of the Lauwerkrans series. In addition, his description of the seals of Tasmania is very important. He made several improvements to the existing descriptions of the seals of this island.

He has placed the 24 varieties of the "One Penny" in its proper place. He also discovered the existence of two plates of the "Four Pence", each containing an equal number of variations. He also supplied descriptions of these plates, in which the various deviations on the plate were accurately indicated. These investigations alone would entitle him to a place of honor among the first philatelists of the world. His name will exist in the Philatelic, Tapling's name will be surrounded by a halo of merit.

A few more collectors who have made a name for themselves in the philatelic field should be mentioned, among them the most famous pioneers. And then we first think of Dr. A. Legrand in Paris. He began collecting in 1862 and now owns one of the largest and most valuable collections in existence. His collection consists of postal and telegraph stamps and those stamps, which until now have had only a stepmother's interest, viz. tax stamps. He is – he was still alive when "The Stamp Collector" was issued – the lucky owner of the two "Post-Office" Mauritius stamps and of the other oldest rarities there are only a few that are not to be found in his collection. Dr. Legrand has a beautiful collection of the stamps of his own country, including many essays. Under the pseudonym of "Dr. Magnus" he is known in the philatelic world as a prolific writer of philatelic essays and works, while under his own name he has written a useful work entitled: "Manuel de l' amateur des timbres". Already in 1865 he attracted attention by reporting in French stamp leaves the result of his researches on philatelic messengers. He was one of the first to draw attention to watermarks and perforation differences. He spared no effort to introduce the mental image that only collecting on a scientific basis can give a clear picture of the development of the postal system. As secretary, he was one of the most active founders of the "Société française de Timbrologie", in 1874. In 1893 he resigned and founded a new Association in Paris: "La Société Nouvelle de Timbrologie", of which he became president. He also initiated an International Congress of Philatelists in Paris in 1878.

We have already mentioned Herr P. van Ferrary as the purchaser of Sir Daniel Cooper's and Judge Philbrick's collections. He, too, was still alive when "The Stamp Collector" was issued, and then lived in Paris. According to the authors of the work, he is the possessor of the largest and most beautiful collection of stamps in the whole world, the value of which is now difficult to determine, but in any case far exceeds that of the Tapling collection in the British Museum. It is estimated that the owner has spent at least 3 million guilders on it. It contains no less than 4 copies of the "Postoffice" stamps of Mauritius, the only known copy of the "One Cent" British Guiana of 1856, three of the first issued "Two Cents" of this colony and several first issues of the Hawaii Islands. The foundation for this collection was laid in 1864, and since then the owner has worked with untiring zeal in its construction and spared no expense in obtaining each variety of each issue. Not content with this, he has endeavored to acquire both a used and unused copy of each stamp. The slightest deviation in color, paper composition, watermark or perforation, he considered worthy of a place in his albums. Every great merchant in the world has supplied him with seals, and no price was too high for a genuine seal. It is easy to see, then, that for such a gigantic labor he had to acquire the help of a secretary. His stamps are arranged according to his own plans and attached to loose sheets of stiff paper.

Arnhem. J.M. POS.
(To be continued.)

Part 6

Major Evans started his philatelic career in 1861 as a general collector. In 1876 he was stationed in Mauritius and there gathered a wonderful collection of the stamps of this island. He later sold this collection, while the best stamps came into the possession of Mr. Tapling. After that, Mr. Evans published the seals of the British Indian flag-states and of Afghanistan and brought them to a great completeness therein. Jih also collected the "Mulready" envelopes and the most complete series of the different caricatures of these postal items. He wrote a work about it: "The Mulready Envelope and its Caricatures", published by Stanley Gibbons Ltd., Strand, London (price f4 and f6.30) (deluxe edition). He also published: "Stamps and Stamp Collecting", which was launched by the same company and is also recommended for beginners (price f1.35 or f2.55). He is still editor of the Stanley Gibbons Monthly Journal and has also published several catalogs.

Mr. P. Castle, a Sussex magistrate, began collecting on a scientific basis in 1878 and in a few years obtained one of the most extensive general collections ever assembled in England. By about 1887 his collection had grown so large that from now on he decided to devote his attention only to the stamps of the British colonies in Australia, while renouncing the other ones. When his Australian collection was nearly complete, he sold it to a London firm for $ 120,000. Then, however, he had already started again on a collection of European stamps, which is already one of the largest of the existing stamps and which did not arise through large purchases, but was built up from parcel to parcel and from seal to seal, along scientific lines. He does not collect postal items, but he is in possession of whole sheets, including from Bergedorf, Bavaria and Hamburg, of certain issues. His collection fills 60 volumes and some countries have not yet been rearranged. Mr. Castle became vice president of the London Philatelic Society after the death of Mr. Tapling in 1891 and edited the magazine animal Vereeniging, the "London Philatelist" from issue to Jan. 1892.

Many more names could be mentioned of persons who have made a name for themselves in the philatelic terrain, such as Mr. F. W. Ayer, a wealthy American who first began to collect systematically in 1892 and in 5 years amassed a wonderful collection, especially from the United States and British North America, which he sold in London in 1897; Mr. WB Avery, which has the second largest general collection in England after the Tapling collection, including an unused pair of the Post-office stamps, some rare Postmaster stamps of the United and Confederate States of America, the first "Two Cents "from British Guiana, and almost all other great curiosities; Mr. R. Ehrenbach, a London merchant, who until 1876 had a splendid collection of the stamps of the German States, which he then sold for 72,000 guilders, but since then collected the stamps from Austria, Belgium, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Russia, Ruenos Ayres, Brazil, the Dominican Republic, Uruguay, and one or two other countries; H. H. F. Breitfuss and T. Notthafft in Petrograd and P. Mirabaud in Paris; the Brussels merchant J. B. Moens, who made himself useful as Writer of: "Histoire des Timbres-Poste et de toutes les Marques d'affranchissement employees en Espange" (price fr. 22); C. Lindenberg, Author of "Die Briefumschläge der Deutschen Staaten" in 3 volumes, published by Hugo Krötzsch, Lange Strasse 22, Leipzig (price Mrk.20) and of: "Die Briefmarken van Baden" at the same (price M4); Rudolf Friedrich, Author of "Die Postwertzeichen Spaniens und seiner Kolonien" edited by Hugo Krötzsch (prize M.10) and more, but we would also like to draw your attention to two members of the English royal family, namely Z. K. H. den Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha and Z. K. .H. the Duke of York, both of whom have a great interest in Philately.

The first belongs to the ancients and has collected for many years, without ever losing interest in the Philately. He always trembles collectively and picks precious specimens. In May 1890 he opened the Landensche exhibition, where he himself presented the stamps of twelve countries. At the Piccadilly exhibition in Julie n Aug. In 1897 he exhibited a collection of rarities, which attracted general attention. He has been honorary chairman of the Londensche

Vereeniging since Dec. 1890.

The Duke of York has a much larger collection than his luminous kinsman. It contains a special collection of the postal and telegraph stamps of Great Britain with unused and imperforated copies of Registration Sheets, which are located at Somerset House, as well as a special collection of those stamps from India. Before the stamps can be issued by the Post Office in England, a proof sheet must be subject to the approval of the appropriate authorities at Somerset House, who will issue imprimatur or leave. For some wards new plates are required every year, and as English seals have been in circulation since the 1840s, it can be understood that the collection of registration seals of the Duke of York consists of hundreds of copies. His special collection of Indian stamps also contains many "specimens", Z. K.H. has a fine collection of the other British colonies and one of the most complete collections of the stamps of the Turkish Islands. On the first of July 1897, the Duke opened the second London Philatelic Exhibition, where he exhibited his Indian stamps, a number of curiosities and several very interesting essays from Great Britain and colonies. He became honorary vice-president of the London Society in March, 1893, and shortly after the death of the Earl of Kingston in January, 1896, he was elected president of that association.

Here's another about our pioneers. have rendered some service to our beginners with these essays, then my efforts have already been amply rewarded.

Armhem P. K. POS.

END

Emilio Simonazzi

The Philatelic Trade in Italy. The Evolution over Two Centuries
[Il Commercio Filatelico in Italia. L'Evoluzione a Cavallo di Due Secoli]
Unificato, Commercianti Italiani Filatelici, Milan, Italy, 2017, 132pp.

Translation of the Introduction only, pp.11-13

Translation by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
November 2020

THE PHILATELIC TRADE IN ITALY

THE EVOLUTION OVER TWO CENTURIES

Introduction

Philatelic collecting boasts a history of more than a hundred years, in fact, specialized publications believe it is possible to identify its initial steps a few days after the issue of the first stamp in the world, the more than well-known Penny Black, which appeared in Great Britain back in May 6. of 1840 following the Rowland Hill postal reform.

In fact, the statement of Edward Gray (1800-1875), an official of the British Museum in London, who claimed to have been one of the first stamp collectors, if not the first, is considered worthy of faith by some authors of the history of philately. purchased a block of the same a few days after the issue of the aforementioned Penny Black, which was then followed by the purchase of subsequent values, again in blocks, issued by the English post office. Edward Gray was also, in 1862, the author of one of the first stamp catalogs.

What is certain is that the concept of philatelic collecting today is very different from that which must be attributed to the first enthusiasts of the time, not only because the numerical entity of the initial issues was very limited, but also because the the first enthusiasts could perhaps be more easily defined as collectors, leaving the term collesionist with a meaning of greater cultural depth and more careful research, than the mere desire to own an object that was a novelty.

Philatelic collecting nowadays is stimulated by a desire for possession, typical of every form of collecting, but it is also characterized by a spirit of research and study of the stamp both as regards its technical realization, both as an artistic expression and starting from since the last decades as a tool for postal communication in the analysis of uses with the various modes of transit, transport and tariffs.

Nonetheless, it was precisely the concert of novelties that then greatly contributed to the spread of philatelic collecting, especially in the period 1861-1870, thanks also to the two Universal Expositions, in London in 1851 and in Paris in 1857, during which the stamp was presented as a modern innovation capable of greatly facilitating the communications of the time heavily dependent on mail.

Parallel to the appearance of the first collectors, the first dealers also began their activity often as an evolution of an initial collecting phase, probably depending on the principle that in the face of any interest generated in some people by the desire to collect one or more series of objects of the same kind, develops conversely in alter the intuition of making them the object of collection and sale in favor of the first.

This was the case of two of the best-known European merchants of the late nineteenth century, one of which Jean-Baptiste Moens of Brussels (1833-1909), who after becoming interested in stamps as a collector, started a business of stamps in the 1852, at the Galleria Bortier at the Marchè de la Madeleine, supporting from 1862 the publication of a Maniel du Collectionneur and the following 15 February 1863 the publication of the magazine Le Timbre-Poste, which was the first to appear on the European continent, outdated only a few months after the first magazine ever published in Europe, The Monthly Adviser Printed in Liverpool in December 1862. In 1973, the Belgian Post Office dedicated a stamp with a band to Jean-Baptiste Moens, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Chamber of Philatelic Merchants of the country (Fig. 1).

to

Another was Pierre Marie Mahè (1833-1913), also among the stamp dealers of the first hour, with a shop in Paris in the rue de Varenne and who exercised for a long time the functions of private secretary of Count Philippe Arnold la Rènотиèrè or Von Ferrari De La Rènотиèrè (1848-1917) (Fig. 2), perhaps the largest stamp collector in the world, who began collecting stamps as early as 1860, gathering many of the most important philatelic rarities including the one cent. Guyana magenta, sold to him in the late 1870s for £ 150 by one of the first British stamp dealers, a certain Thomas Ridpatt; collections that Ferrari then left, having assumed Austrian citizenship, in bond with Germany so that they were destined for the Postal Museum in Berlin and which were instead confiscated by the French government against war damage and sold at auction during 14 sessions held from 19621 to 1925, making a total of 425,925 pounds (Fig. 3).

Anecdotal to remember that in June 2014 the one cent. magenta of Guyana was auctioned by Sotheby's in the New York office for 9,480,000 dollars equal to almost 7 million euros, achieving an absolute record for the world⁹ of philately also from the point of view of monetary revaluation if we consider the 150 pounds paid by Ferrari to get hold of it.

In any case, we will have the opportunity to talk about Moens and Mahè again due to the strong ties they had with Italy and with the first Italian philatelic merchants for the events of the remains of the postage stamps of the pre-unification states which, after the creation of the Kingdom of Italy, were concentrated in Turin at the then Directorate General of the Ministry of Public Works, at the time competent in postal matters.

The parallelism between collecting and trading of what is the object of collecting itself is not a concept that must seem demeaning of one towards the other of the two activities, nor a contrast between two different methodologies of approach towards the same object, even if in the time this apparent dichotomy provided reasons for debate in various philatelic journals of the early twentieth century; dichotomy fomented by those who consider themselves absolute purists of collecting, used to argue that stamp collectors should procure the objects of their collections by obtaining them exclusively from correspondence or through exchanges with other collectors.

A quest concept that cannot fail to immediately appear as purely utopian, perhaps valid at the dawn of collecting itself, when the new issue stamps were still a few dozen, while around 1860 the number of stamps issued by the various postal administrations around the world already totaled to about 1,000.

A debate that continued for several decades if we consider that still in 1928 a well-known Italian philatelic dealer and publisher Roberto Palmieri found it useful to report in the magazine Il Bollettino Filatelico which he founded in Naples in 1922 what Jean Clavel had to write in an article published in L'Echo de la Timbrologie of that year "... it is not paradoxical to say that those who live from philately are those who in turn make it live", definitively confirming the principle that in fact it is precisely philatelic dealers who inevitably provide collectors with the raw material of their collections and how one is inevitably linked to the other in a reciprocal subsistence.

Strangely enough, in the wide bibliographic panorama existing on philately, in particular on the many editions of manuals, catalogs and philatelic reviews that have appeared since the decades since the development of this form of collecting, very little exists that refers with particular attention to the philatelic trade.

Fig. 3

Italy is no exception, as even the philatelic publications of our country have scarcely interested in this particular sector, so that it is not easy to try to reconstruct the history of the philatelic trade since the news of many commercial firms that having started their business during the nineteenth century or in the very first years of the twentieth century they then abandoned it for various reasons.

END

[Arthur Maury (Editor)]

Public sale of postage stamps

[Vente publique de timbres poste]

Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste, January 1866, Whole number 19, p.151

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

November 2020

PUBLIC SALE OF POSTAGE STAMPS

AT THE HOTEL OF THE AUTHORITIES

Monday 29 running, at one o'clock, were sold, at the hotel on rue Drouot, room no. 10, the postage stamps from poor Mr. Elle; his assortment, not very considerable, since for some time it had not been occupied with it, produced, according to our rough estimate, from 800 to 1,000 francs. Afriches announcing the sale had attracted all the merchants of Paris, and the auctions were pushed much further than we would have expected, to the astonishment of onlookers and odds and ends, who could not believe it. to see gold being given for a few small squares of paper which the town crier was walking around a vast plateau. The honors at the auction were for Mr. Riester's essays and proofs, which were sold at a relatively high price /

END

Wolfgang Maassen

150 years ago the first philatelic literature appeared

[Vor 150 Jahren erschien die erste philatelistische literatur]

Philatelie, February 2012, Volume 64, Whole number 416, pp.42-45

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

January 2021

150 YEARS AGO THE FIRST PHILATELIC LITERATURE APPEARED

IPHLA 1012 in Mainz will commemorate the anniversary of “150 years of philatelic literature in Germany” in one year, which is absolutely correct. But two philatelic works had already appeared a year before - a catalog forerunner and a printed catalog - which are the first two specialist publications of their kind, but originated in France. It is hardly a coincidence that catalogs start at the beginning of the specialist literature. By 1860 the total number of issued stamps was already around 1,000 different and the first problems not only with the procurement but also with the quantity that had appeared. Some countries had already issued a number of stamps - although it was often not clear in which order - other stamps appeared for the first time or were not even known to many. At the same time, it became clear that not a few stamps were apparently much rarer than others and hardly available. If one takes into account that around this time the first stamp exchanges spurred communication and the level of knowledge, which were only widespread in a few places before then, and at the same time private imitations, from today's perspective “forgeries”, were more and more widespread, there was an understandable need for a kind of definitive overview of what existed.

From this early and first knowledge, what one can call today a “market” emerged, namely the need to pass on this knowledge and to communicate to everyone was what the function of the (general and later specialist) magazines became. Almost at the same time, however, the striving to organize and present grew, which was addressed by the appearance of the first albums. However, the separation of the wheat from the chaff is also associated with the first “catalogues”, so it is not surprising that only a little later (1863) the first publications on the subject of “combating counterfeiting” appeared.

The first printed “catalogues” were not catalogues in today's sense, rather “lists”, i.e. stock lists of individual collectors or stock lists from dealers (e.g. those from Zschiesche & Köder, Stanley Gibbons or Scott). During their creation, among others France, England and Belgium, but also Germany play an important role. The works themselves are known to many today only from literature, especially since these are mostly only preserved in a few individual copies and can hardly be found even in large libraries. Purely from the known number of proven specimens, they are not infrequently rarer than the “Blue Mauritius”, but not even remotely comparable in price and demand.

A catalogue forerunner

The first catalogue to be mentioned here was actually not a publicly sold catalogue, in this respect a forerunner, but it was, without a doubt, the basis for all of the following. The bookseller and printer's owner François Georges Berger-Levrault in Strasbourg - he was already considered one of the great collectors in the 1860s and 70s, although he probably only started collecting shortly or a few years before 1860 - intended to create a kind of "list" "To compile a directory, i.e. an overview, for himself and his friends on the basis of his own collection and information known to him.

Page 42 Oscar Berger-Levrault's legendary 12-page list of stamps from September 1861 (image from the British Library, London. Reprinted with permission).

This resulted in several handwritten lists, each updating the last, which were first copied in only about 40 to 50 copies in his printing house, and later reproduced lithographically. Berger-Levrault kept a good ten of them himself, and gave the rest to friends with whom he was in close and intensive correspondence and exchanging ideas⁽¹⁾.

This directory now served the friends as the basis for a supplementary list, in which they entered new "finds" and reported them in turn to Strasbourg. The result was the first list of stamps (even this was not a catalogue in today's sense), which appeared on the 17th September 1861 with ten or twelve pages of content or scope in quarto format and listed 973 postage stamps, but without illustrations⁽²⁾. A second edition appeared in December 1861. Between January 1862 and 1864, there were 14 further editions, from the third edition in June 1862 it was already in printed form (the last had reached a length of 26 pages), which did not contain any author's name, only the title "Les Timbres-Poste"⁽³⁾.

Berger-Levrault: A short biography

Page 43 (1) Oscar Berger-Levrault about 1861

The founder for this "list of stamps" was François Georges Oscar Berger-Levrault, who was born in Strasbourg on the 9th May 1826, had - as already mentioned - his own collection. In September 1861 this contained exactly 673 postage stamps, but by August 1862 it had grown to 1,142 items, counting 1,533 in April 1863 and 1,857 different in July 1864. This inventory can easily be inferred from his lists and catalogues today. Berger-Levrault's family was the founder - he himself was first co-owner, then owner - of the large and important publishing and military book store of Berger-Levrault in Strasbourg (his ancestors had already run a book store and print shop there from 1675).

Page 43 (2) Oscar Berger-Levrault about 1903

He was in personal contact with the well-known collectors of the time, including Georges Herpin, Larminat, Dr. Amable Legrand, Alfred Potiquet, Natalis Rondot, Caignart de Sauley, thanks to the World Exhibition in Paris in 1855, he was able to establish direct information and procured contacts with postal administrations all over the world, on the basis of which he obtained the stamps and the associated information necessary for his subsequent cataloguing effort.

Page 43 (3) At world exhibitions like this one in London in 1862, the early serious philatelists met to establish contacts. (Source unknown)

Typical of the time, Berger-Levrault can be classified as a general collector. Around 1870 his collection comprised around 10,400 stamps, 6,300 mint and 1,400 essays. He is also considered the first "block collector", as he always collected the stamps with parts of all the stamps attached. At that time he stated that there were “up to 50 stamps known at the time, as well as some Australian stamps with their various different watermarks, on which he had been working closely with his friends F. A. Philbrick and Dr. Magnus, lacking to make his collection complete⁽⁴⁾.” He sold this first large and historically significant collection long before his death, but began collecting again around 1890 with his grandchildren. This, too, can be indirectly explained, for after a long pause in publication he spoke again in 1890 with two specialist articles in the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Zeitung by Ernst Heitmann, for example about Charles Whiting’s postage stamp designs for the first British issue and also discussed used and unused stamps⁽⁵⁾.

Page 44 (1) Letter from 1858 to the Berger-Levrault printer, franked with a Baden stamp. (Image source: Peter Feuser, Stuttgart.)

By that time, however, he had long been a factor in international philately, albeit one that was almost forgotten by many. Because his first “catalogue lists”, mentioned at the beginning, had a “description of the postage stamps known up to now (more than 2200 types) together with notes about the reprinted stamps and instructions for setting up collections” (Strasburg, bookstore of Wwe. Berger -Levrault & Son 1864; in 1865 the catalog was also published in French). Strictly speaking, it was the first German-language manual that catalogued not only the postage stamps but also essays, proofs, private stamps and forgeries. In 1867 (on the cover of a partial edition/reprint it says 1869) the manual “Les Timbres-poste” appeared in an expanded form, but only in French⁽⁶⁾.

Page 44 (2) Berger Levraults catalogue in German from 1864. Many people considered this catalogue to be the best catalogue work at that time thanks to the precise descriptions. (Source: Journal of the Philatelic Literature Society, 1914, Volume 7, Issue 4, Plate XVI.)

After the Franco-German war he sold the factory and opened a new one in Nancy in 1872 (the first number of the Confidential Correspondence Sheet of the German philatelic associations that was produced in the former B.-L. knew about these connections). He wrote for the Collectionneur des Timbres-Poste from the first edition in 1864 and also worked for Moens on “The Dutch. Essays ”in the Festschrift des Berliner Philatelisten-Klub 1898. He made a name for himself through his publications on essays and was the first to undertake detailed studies of the types of paper printing, watermarks and perforations, the results of which were first published in May 1867 . Later Berger-Levrault also wrote for the magazine Die Post, but also published a work “Collecting stamps 30 years ago”⁽⁷⁾. He lived in Nancy until his death on the 24th September 1903. Berger-Levrault was a member of the consistory of the Reformed Church in Nancy, member of the Stanislaus Academy, officer of the Legion of Honor and public education, commander of the Mediodi and Liberator and Knight of the Order of Guadelupe⁽⁸⁾.

The “unknown” Berger-Levrault catalogue

The title is not to be taken very seriously, although it is not completely unjustified. Because on the 21st December 1861 - also 150 years ago - the first catalogue with the title “Catalogue des Timbres-Poste Créés dans les divers États due Globe” appeared in the bookstore of Eugène Lacroix in Paris. Alfred Potiquet was the author. This first printed stamp catalogue in which 1080 stamps and 132 different envelopes were listed - is often listed in the literature under the name of the seller, a stamp dealership in Paris, “Catalogue Laplante” because it contained the addition: “en vente: chez Laplante marchand de timbres-poste pour collections 1, rue Christine, Paris”.

Page 45 (1) The Potiquet catalogue. This is the second edition of March 1862.
(Source: WM-Archive.)

What is far less known: Potiquet had used Oscar Berger-Levrault's catalog as a source, having received information and help from him, both of whom - as already mentioned - were in close correspondence. So he used Berger-Levrault's previous work and knowledge to create his own catalogue - initially unauthorized for the first edition of the catalogue, but rather tolerated for a second edition. In March 1862, this second edition appeared with a length of 48 pages, although Laplant's name was no longer on the cover.

Page 45 (2) The illustrations of two inside pages of the Potiquet Catalogue make it clear how limited the information in this first catalogue was. Short texts, no illustrations.
(Source: WM-Archive.)

An author's note by Potiquet on the second cover page of this second edition is informative, where it said: "When the first edition of the Catalogue des Timbres Poste was published (21st December 1861), no pamphlet about postage stamps had yet been published ... but this so richly documenting Catalogue opened the way for further publications of this kind. In particular, two small brochures, almost entirely copied from Mr. Alfred Potiquet's work, one in Brussels, the other in Paris. We have therefore taken legal steps against their authors [...]." ⁽⁹⁾

In an obituary it was said: "This is where Berger-Levrault's ingenious greatness lies, who even in the early days of collecting, without any real role model, judged the needs of Philatelie correctly, that he classified everything correctly and drew the lines correctly, so that despite all the subsequent research and aids, one could not put this in a significantly different way to the present day" ⁽¹⁰⁾. I would like to remind you that Berger-Levrault's preliminary work became the model for all later catalogue makers who followed him.

His lists are hardly preserved today. Potiquet's first catalog from 1861 (first edition) is known only in a few copies, hardly any in private ownership. The second edition is a bit more common, which can be seen in relative terms, because not even a handful are listed. In 2010, at the 320th Schwanke auction after many years, a copy in reasonably good condition was offered again. It was worth around 1000 euros to a lover (hammer price: 840 euros).

Other sources

Illustriertes Briefmarken-Journal, no. 13/1891, p.205; No. 22/1903, p.415 (with picture); VKBl, No. 12/1903, pp. 261-263; Max Ton, in: Sammler-Woche, No. 27/28 1924, pp.6-7; DBZ, No. 10/30.10.1903, p.131-132; The Philatelic Record, 1903, pp.182-183; Die Post, No. 8/1895, pp.63-65; No. 1/1904, pp.2-4, p.24; Moschkau's Magazin, 1872, p.49; to B.-L. For early catalogs see also: Wolfgang Maaßen: Philatelie und Verein im 19. Jahrhundert, Schwalmtal 2006, Chap. 3.1, pages 177ff.

References

1. See DBZ 14/1903, pp.131-132, Manfred Amrhein: Philatelic Literature, Volume 1, p.9.
2. The dating of the edition of this work is given as follows: DBA 1903: September 14, 1861 at the latest. Victor Suppantschitsch named the same date in Die Post of 1895, but also wrote: "If not earlier", reprinted in Die Post, 1904, p.24. The Philatelic Record: The first edition of this list was printed in August 1861 and surely distributed to friends before November 17, 1861, of which twelve new editions had appeared by September 1864. The National Postal Museum Library in the United States has a copy with "September 1861" written on the first page in red ink (ex Turner Library).

3. Further information on the various Berger-Levrault lists can be found in the Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie, June 1877, as well as the Crawford Catalog (London 1991), columns 45-46. According to C. Brühl in "History of Philately" (see volume 2, page 602) who refers to G. Turner, four of the 40 to 50 copies of the first edition should still exist today.
4. L. N. and M. Williams: Centenary of the Stamp Catalogue, in: The Stamp Lover, August-September 1961, p.37.
5. See No. 14/15. July 1890, pp.255-257; No. 21 of November 1, 1890, pp 387-390.
6. Full title: Les timbres-poste. Catalog méthodique et descriptive de tous les timbres-poste connus ("Première partie, timbres-poste proprement dits"). Other parts of the catalogue have not been published.
7. In: IBJ. 1890, pp.177-178
8. More information about Berger-Levrault and his collection can be found in Fred J. Melville, in: The Postage Stamp, Volume 15, p.46.
9. Bertram T. K. Smith: The Earliest Catalogues of Postage Stamps, The Philatelic Record, 1908, p.71; L. N. and M. Williams: Stamps Day by Day, London 1950, here: World's first printed stamp catalog (Alfred Potiquet's), p.235ff.
10. Vertrauliches Korrespondenzblatt (VKBl), No. 12/1903, p.262.

END

Justin Lallier (1823-1873)

Mémoires de la Timbrologie web site: <http://memoires.timbrologie.online.fr>, 1st April, 2021, 5pp.

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

1st April 2021

JUSTIN LALLIER (1823-1873)

Henry-Justin Lallier was born on the 21st June 1823 in Joigny (Yonne) into a family of notables, scientists and scholars:

- his father, André Séraphin Lallier (1783-1845) is a chemist and geologist. He was notably chief chemistry preparer at the Collège de France. At the birth of Henry-Justin, he was controller of direct taxes; he will then be inspector for Yonne, then director for Creuse then for Vendée;
- his uncle and namesake Justin Jean-Pierre Lallier (1796-1865), a distinguished Latinist and Hellenist, was principal of the College of Joigny in 1823; he was subsequently principal of the Lycée d'Orléans, then vicar-general and canon of the archévêché de Sens;
- another of his uncles, Louis Célestin Lallier, was in 1823 the King's attorney in Joigny; he himself distinguished himself as a Latinist and Hellenist during his studies in Paris;
- another of his uncles, Antoine François Lallier, is a doctor and will be deputy mayor of Joigny.

Figure 1

Justin Lallier's birth certificate. Among the signatories: his father André Séraphin Lallier, and his uncles Louis Célestin Lallier, King's attorney, and Justin Lallier, Principal of the College.

In 1814, André Séraphin Lallier himself signed the birth certificate of François Lallier, son of Antoine François Lallier. We will find François Lallier as magistrate in Sens and eminent member of the Archaeological Society which will welcome Justin Lallier as a corresponding member in 1867.

Justin Lallier, following his father's career, was controller of direct contributions in Orléans when he joined the Société archéologique de la Ville de Sens as a correspondent in 1847, of which his cousin François Lallier (1814-1886), magistrate, was a founding member and was president (François Lallier is also one of those who, with Frédéric Ozanam, founded the Society of Saint-Vincent de Paul).

In 1849, he joined as a resident member of the Archaeological Society of Orléanais; he appears more in the work of this society than in those of the Société de Sens or the French Society for the Conservation of Historical Monuments, of which he is also a member.

Justin Lallier seems to be a talented designer. The National Library of France keeps a Plan of the siege of Montargis in 1427, an unfortunately undated engraving, which he signs as designer; in 1855 he donated to the Musée de la Société d'Orléans a drawing of the Roman mosaic in Bielle (Basses-Pyrénées), which he had recorded; in 1859 he informed the Society of his intention to copy, in order to offer them to it, the seven miniatures contained in the Vigils of Charles VII, manuscript of the Imperial Library, etc ...

In 1853, Lallier left Orléans for Pau but remained a full member of the Société d'Archéologie de l'Orléanais (preferential treatment, perhaps in recognition of his activity in favor of the society and of his numerous donations to the museum, since this membership is statutorily reserved for natives of Orléans or residents of the departments of Loiret, Eure-et-Loir and Loir-et-Cher).

Justin Lallier joined in 1855 the Direction des contributions direct de la Seine. From 1855 to 1857, he lived in Batignolles, 28 rue Truffaut, and covered the area made up of the municipalities of Batignolles, Puteaux, Nanterre and Suresnes. In 1858, he changed sectors and took charge of the Saint-Marcel and Observatoire districts, in intramural Paris this time (districts of the 12th arrondissement of the former administrative organization of the capital).

In 1860, with the administrative reorganization of Paris, his sector was made up of the districts of Val-de-Grâce and Jardin des Plantes, in the 5th arrondissement. He himself has lived since 1859 at 82 rue Bonaparte (6th district). Such was his situation when he produced in June 1862 the first edition of his Album-Timbres-Poste. He remained controller of direct taxes at least until 1868 in a sector reduced to the only district of Val-de-Grâce from 1864. He remained at 48 rue Monsieur-le-Prince (6th) from 1861, then at 63 rue de Vaugirard (6th) from 1865, then at 31 rue Rousselet (7th) until his death. He died on the 12th August 1873. Curiously, his death certificate confers on him the profession of employee and not of tax inspector.

Figure 2

Opposite: announcement of his death in the Bulletin of the Archaeological Society of Orléanais.

The case of the “14th edition of the Lallier album” (1876)

Three years after his death, his widow and his heirs sue for forgery his publisher Lenègre, as well as Pierre Mahé, for having published without their consent an Album for postage stamps presented as the “14th edition of the Lallier album, reviewed, corrected and continued on a new plan by Pierre Mahé”.

In its judgment rendered at the hearing of the 26th December 1876, the Civil Court of the Seine rejected the charge of infringement, on the grounds that the new album differs from the previous ones by the format, the provisions and the composition, but retains that the publisher, by publishing under the name of Lallier a work of which this one was not the author, derived an illegitimate profit from the notoriety which was acquired in the name of Lallier by the thirteen first editions. Lenègre and Mahé are ordered to pay the plaintiffs the sum of 1,200 francs as damages.

The records tell us that a total of 40,000 copies of the various editions of Lallier Albums have been sold.

Figure 3
Signature of Justin Lallier.

The Works of Justin Lallier

Postage Stamp Albums in the French Language

- Album-timbres-poste, orné de cartes, par Justin Lallier. Paris, Lenègre, 1862.
Un vol. oblong de 160 pages, lith. à Paris, par Compan. [image here]
- Album-timbres-poste, avec cartes et tableau indicatif du rapport des monnaies du globe à la monnaie française, par Justin Lallier, 2^e édition, revue, corrigée et augmentée. Paris, Lenègre, 1863.
Un vol. oblong de 180 pages, lith. à Paris, par Compan.
- Album-timbres-poste, avec cartes et tableau indicatif du rapport des monnaies du globe à la monnaie française, par Justin Lallier, 3^e édition, revue, corrigée et augmentée. Paris, Lenègre, juin 1863.
Un vol. oblong de 180 pages, lith. à Paris, par Cortey. [image here]
- Album-timbres-poste, avec cartes et tableau indicatif du rapport des monnaies du globe à la monnaie française, par Justin Lallier, 4^e édition, entièrement refondue et augmentée. Paris, Lenègre, mai 1864.
Un vol. oblong de 279 pages, lith. à Paris, par Cortey.
- Albums-Lallier-Timbres-poste, avec cartes, armoiries, tableau indicatif du rapport des monnaies du globe à la monnaie française, renseignements bibliographiques et portraits des souverains, par Justin Lallier, 5^e édition, entièrement corrigée et augmentée. Paris, Lenègre, 1^{er} janvier 1866.
Un vol. oblong de 286 pages, lith. à Paris, par Goyer.[image here]
- - idem - 6^e édition, revue et augmentée de nouveaux timbres et des armoiries et tableaux de toutes les puissances. Paris, Lenègre, 1866.
Un vol. oblong de 286 pages, lith. à Paris, par Goyer.
- - idem - 7^e édition entièrement corrigée et augmentée de timbres nouveaux. Paris, Lenègre, juillet 1867.
Un vol. oblong de 339 pages, lith. à Paris, par Goyer. - 2^e tirage en 1868. [image here]
- Album-timbres-poste, 8^e édition, ornée des monnaies de chaque pays, leur rapport avec la monnaie française, des armoiries, pavillons et portraits des souverains, d'un planisphère et de renseignements bibliographiques, par Justin Lallier, Paris, Lenègre, 1869.
Un vol. oblong de 527 pages, lith. à Paris, par Goyer. This edition is the first to include Fiscal Stamps.

- - idem - 9^e édition, ornée des monnaies... Paris, Lenègre, 1870.
Un vol. oblong de 543 pages, lith. à Paris, par Goyer.
 - - idem - 10^e édition, ornée des monnaies... Paris, Lenègre, 1870.
Un vol. oblong de 543 pages, lith. à Paris, par Goyer.
 - - idem - 11^e édition, revue, corrigée et augmentée d'un supplément, ornée des monnaies... Paris, Lenègre, 1871.
Un vol. oblong de 543 pages, lith. à Paris, par Goyer.
 - - idem - 12^e édition, ornée des monnaies... Paris, Lenègre, 1872.
Un vol. oblong de 543 pages, lith. à Paris, par Goyer.
 - Supplément à l'Album-timbres-poste, par Justin Lallier. Paris, Lenègre, 1872.
Une plaquette format oblong de 16 pages, lith. à Paris, par Hermet.
 - Album-timbres-poste, par Justin Lallier, 13^e édition. Première partie (de 1840 à 1870), armoiries, pavillons et portraits des souverains et renseignements bibliographiques spéciaux, par Justin Lallier, Paris, Lenègre, 1873.
Un vol. oblong de 446 pages, imprimé par Hermet, à Paris.
 - Album-timbres-poste, par Justin Lallier. 2^e partie (1870-1873), ornée des armoiries, et pavillons des puissances, d'un rapport à la monnaie française de toutes les monnaies du globe et de cartes géographiques. Paris, Lenègre, 1873.
Un vol. oblong de 178 pages, imprimé à Paris, par Marie.
- Deuxième tirage avec 2^e partie (1870-1874). Paris, Lenègre, 1874.
- Album-timbres-poste élémentaire de 1840 à 1874, par Justin-H. Lallier, Paris, Lenègre, 1873.
Un vol. oblong de 248 pages, imprimé par Heutte, à Paris. Il s'agit d'un album élémentaire; les pages de gauche sont un catalogue sommaire et les pages de droite comportent 32 emplacement indifférenciés [image here]

Editions of the Postage Stamp Album in English

Postage-Stamp-Album. Illustrated with maps, by Justin Lallier, A. Lenègre:

- First Edition, Paris, 1862.
- Second Edition, Paris, 1863. [image here]
- Third Edition, Paris, 1864.
- Fourth Edition, Paris, août 1864.
- Fifth Edition, Paris, 1866.
- Sixth Edition, Paris, 1867.
- Seventh Edition, Paris, 1867.
- Eight Edition, Paris, 18--.
- Ninth Edition, Paris, 18--.

Figure 4

The fourth edition of the Postage-Stamp-Album, August 1864 reserves one page for a single stamp: 50 boxes for each of the variants of the 10 centimes “Triquerat” of New Caledonia.

Editions of the Postage Stamp Album in Spanish

- Album de sellos de correo. por Justino Lallier. Traducido del Francés, conforme con la tercera edición. A. Lenègre. 1863.

Other Publications Related to Postage Stamps

- Illustrations de la jeunesse. Timbres-poste de France. - 1er janvier 1864. P. Mahé, éditeur, rue des Canettes, 18 (timbres pour collections). J. Lallier del. Chrétien lith. A single sheet of strong paper, with the arms of the Empire in colour.

Other Publications Not Related to Postage Stamps

- Pau, description de la ville et du château, Parmantier, 1856.
- Bains des Pyrénées: Cauterets, Barèges, Saint-Sauveur, Luz, Gavarnie, descriptions historiques et archéologiques avec dessins, Parmantier, 1858.
- Bains des Pyrénées: Lescar, Morlaas, Mosaique du Pont d'Oly, Larruns, Eaux-Bonnes, Eaux-Chaudes, Bayonne, Biarritz, Cambo, Pays basque. Descriptions historiques et archéologiques, etc., Paris et Pau, 1858.
- La numismatique française. Description et reproduction d'après les originaux des monnaies françaises depuis Clovis jusqu'à Napoléon III, par Justin Lallier, 1860. Prospectus-specimen in 4° dated the 30th March 1860, accompanied by an engraved plate - perhaps an unfinished project.
- Album contemporain européen [Texte imprimé]: biogr. historiques avec portraits photographiques des personnages illustres du XIX^e siècle, Poinson et Loubère, 1865. [consulted in Gallica]
- Album contemporain, contenant les biographies sommaires de trois cents des principaux personnages de notre époque, 1866. [consulted in Gallica]

Figure 5

The two versions of the Contemporary Album available on Gallica; that of 1866 contains the photographs. Justin Lallier did not hesitate to place his father André Séraphin Lallier and his uncle Justin Lallier among the contemporaries distinguished by these albums (see pages 184 and 162 of the 1865 edition, pages 108 and 104 of the 1866 edition). Funny detail: the photographs of Justin Lallier's two relatives in the 1866 edition are well placed but the publisher has inverted their numbers (278 and 297).

Paris - 1867, Tableau des rues de Paris avec leur Longueur, indiquée pour la Première Fois, par Justin Lallier, 1867.

Préface de l'Album photographique des ruines de Paris: Collection de tous les monuments et édifices incendiés et détruits par la Commune de Paris: Accompagnée de Notices historiques et descriptives sur chaque sujet. P. Loubère phot., Librairie, 22 rue de Visconti, Paris, 1871 [consulted in Gallica]

Album de monogrammes historiques, chiffres, marques, lettres. Paris, chez tous les libraires et papetiers, 1872.

Sources Principales

Archives numérisées de l'état-civil pour les départements de l'Yonne et de la Seine.

Bulletin de la Société archéologique de l'Orléanais [Gallica]

Almanach impérial [Gallica]

For the list of works:

- Philippe de Bosredon du Pont, Bibliographie timbrologique de la France, Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie, fascicules 4, 5 et 8, 1876-77.
- John Kerr Tiffany: The philatelic library - a catalogue of stamp publications, 1874.
- Catalogue général de la Bibliothèque Nationale de France.

END

Meeting of the 1st April 1875

[Séance du 1^{er} Avril 1875]

Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie, 1975, Volume 1, Issue 1, pp.12-14

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

April 2021

MEETING OF THE 1ST APRIL 1875

SESSION OF APRIL 1, 1875

Presidency of Mr. A. De Rothschild

The meeting closed at eight twenty-five minutes.

The minutes of the last meeting are read and adopted.

The President communicated the correspondence, which included:

1. The order of the prefect of police regularly constitutes the Company.

This piece has been delivered for printing with the status, and will be distributed to members, by the President, as soon as it reaches him from the printing press;

2. Two letters in Spanish, from Mr. Mariano Pardo de Figueroa asking the Board to admit him to the Society as a corresponding member. He gives the support the list of his stamp-lifting works, in the various Spanish, English and French newspapers of the specialty. The President announced that this request was received with the greatest favor because of the eminent services of Mr. Pardo and his well-deserved reputation.

In a Post-Scriptum, Mr. Pardo says the following:

"The undersigned, consulted in January 1875, by the Director General of Posts of Madrid regarding the new issue of postcards, has seen the model he proposed approved, given the design represents the geographical map of Spain. He thinks it will be a philatelic novelty because it has not yet been used in another country. "

3. Letter from M. Guihaire, de Redon, asking to be part of the Society as a full member. Not knowing anyone, he asked M. de Président to introduce him.

He sent a specimen catalog of postage stamps from Spain, issued during the reign of Isabella II. He proposes to the Company to have a catalog printed at his expense that the Company will see and judge. It is very similar to that proposed by M. de Dr Legrand. There will be many lengths, he said, but avoiding them would be at the expense of precision.

The Company expresses its readiness to examine the sent specimen and the printed work of Mr. Guihaire when presented to it. The admission of Mr. Guihaire was pronounced by the Council.

The Secretary proposes to the Society to begin the publication of its Bulletin without delay, by publishing a fascicle of 2 or 3 sheets in-8 °. He thinks that the Rules, the order of the Prefect of Police, authorizing the meetings of the Society, the minutes of the meetings, the readings made, could, together with the catalog of French stamps, form more sufficient elements. This issue, addressed to all timbrophilic journals, to authors of publications and to known amateurs, would make the Society better known than any other proceeds, and would certainly lead to an increase in its resources which would allow this publication to continue.

M. de Bosredon supported this proposal, which obtained general approval.

Mr De Ferrari believes that the work on the French stamps, which will result from the discussion which will open, will be yet another cause for success.

The Board of Directors is invited to study the project and make proposals at the next meeting.

The Secretary read a note containing the result of his examination of the stamp of 4 cuartos 1857, on plain azure paper submitted to the last meeting, by M. De Joannis. He thinks that this stamp is of an excellent type, but that the azure coloring results from a fraud about which he completely excludes the corresponding due respectability, fraud that the treatment of the stamp with bleach would have demonstrated whether it had been possible to submit the confluence there for examination by the Company.

The agenda calls for a discussion of the stamps of France and an examination of the collections. The Secretary, referring to the catalogue, shows the March issue of the Philatelist, which contains work done at the Philatelic Society of London, on the Cape of Good Hope and Chile stamps. It shows that if this work does not contain the description of the stamps, it nevertheless gives after the date of issue the shape of the stamps, the watermarks, and even the names of the printers. But for each value of stamps all the varieties of colors and shades are indicated with a certain profusion which contrasts with the parsimony due to M. Monnerot's project.

The examination of the stamps of France has begun.

A discussion ensued on the question of whether to report the postage prepaid ticket issued by M. de Vélayer. M. De Ferrari communicates an article by M. Feuillet de Coaches, which appeared in the newspaper Intermédiaire, issue of 25 October 1866 (3rd year, no 68). It follows from this article that M. de Vélayer first issued banknotes printed and struck with a mark which was peculiar to him. The notes contained nothing else except: Postage paid, ... the ... oven of ... fan one thousand six hundred and fifty-three or fifty-four. To use it, you had to fill in the blank with the date of the day and month you were writing and twist the note around the letter you wanted to address. These letters were withdrawn three times a day on the letter box, and brought to their address. But at the same time, M. de Vélayer had printed forms of a dozen kinds relating to the most usual uses of life, forms which it was sufficient to fill out and throw in the bowl after having attached a banknote. post paid. These formulas sold for five sols a dozen. This is one of them, with the blanks filled in by Pelisson's hand, that can be found in the stamp journals that mentioned the postage prepaid bill.

Mr. De Bosredon advises that this note is not a postage stamp; that in the absence of sufficient information, it is best to leave it out. Everything about him is just a historical curiosity. No one else has seen or owned it.

This view is adopted.

The Secretary communicates the project he has drawn up of the catalog of postage stamps and telegraphs of France, based on the ideas he has already made known about the stamps of Spain. The values are grouped under the issue date of the first published security in each series, taking care to give the other dates after each security. This provision is recognized as good. The Society admits that the catalog should list stamps prepared and not put into service such as the 25 centimes (20 centimes blue, with red overprint) of July 1880, but not those which have remained in the proof state. She agrees with Mr. De Bosredon that stamps indented by particular and unofficial procedures should only be indicated. The Secretary said that it will be possible, with the help of a finer text, to distinguish these historically interesting varieties from the stamps, as well as the secondary shades of color of the same value.

A few varieties are reported by various members, as well as dates that are not known.

The Secretary's work, comprising only Republic and Empire postage stamps up to 1870, ends with telegraph stamps. The remainder is returned to the next meeting.

M. De Bosredon read a Note on movable stamps considered from the historical point of view.

This reading is listened to with the greatest attention, and the Society votes for its publication in its Bulletin.

The meeting rose at twenty minutes past ten.

The next session will be held on Thursday, May 13, with Ascension Day falling on the first Thursday.

END

Philippe de Bosredon (1827-1906).

On the Mémoires de la Timbrologie web site: <http://memoires.timbrologie.online.fr>, as of April 2021, 3pp.

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
April 2021

PHILIPPE DE BOSREDON (1827-1906)

Philippe-Marie de Bosredon du Pont was born on the 28th March 1827 in Chavagnac (Dordogne) and died on the 15th March 1906 in Saint-Cloud (Seine-et-Oise). He was a senior official of the Second Empire, a politician and scholar.

Senior civil servant: After studies at the Brive seminary, he entered the Council of State as auditor in 1849, then Master of Requests in 1858, finally State Councilor by decree dated October 27, 1865. He was the Secretary General of the Ministry of the Interior from the 12th April 1865 to the 11th January 1871. His career was linked to the person of Minister Eugène Rouher and he was appreciated by the Empress Eugénie.

The photograph presented at the top of the page is taken from a Collection of French and Foreign Personalities under the Second Empire (1860-1870), kept at the National Library.

After the fall of the Empire, he no longer exercised any responsibility in the state apparatus (apart from participating in councils and commissions) and became director of the General Life Insurance Company from 1873 to 1891.

Politician: He was general councilor of the canton of Terrasson (Dordogne) from 1861 to 1882 and vice-president of the General Council (from 1879).

His brother Alexandre de Bosredon (1831-1903) was Mayor of Chavagnac from 1860 to 1903, general councilor of the canton of Salignac (Dordogne) from 1871 to 1898, deputy (1869) then senator (1890) of Dordogne.

Scholar: he was vice-president (for the district of Sarlat) of the Historical and Archaeological Society of Périgord from its creation in 1874 until his death, and in December 1874 was one of the founding members of the Société Française de Timbrologie, of which he was the librarian and archivist.

He was commander of the Legion of Honor (7th August 1869) and holder of many foreign orders.

The administrative directories make it possible to follow his successive addresses in Paris while he exercised functions at the Council of State or the Ministry of the Interior: 8 rue Castellane in 1849, 70 rue Neuve des Mathurins in 1854, 14 rue Rumfort in 1858, 5 rue de l'Isly in 1865 and 21, rue Pigalle in 1867. We also know the address of the house where he retired at the end of his life, in Saint-Cloud, 8, rue du Commandant Lorienty.

Three great facts about philately

In addition to his eminent role as librarian and archivist of the French Society of Timbrology, philately is indebted to Philippe de Bosredon for:

- his contribution to the adoption of the telegraph stamp in France (law of 13th June 1866): he was one of the two government commissioners who presented the explanatory memorandum to the legislative body on the 14th March 1866. His Monograph on the telegraph stamps from France presented on the 8th March 1877 to the Société Française de Timbrologie is therefore a first-hand account.
- the founding work of fiscal philately: his Monograph on the adhesive fiscal stamps of France and the colonies, published in 1874 by Pierre Mahé, remarkable in that it links the successive issues of fiscal stamps to the texts at the origin of their creations, as well as the evolution of prices, and that it mentions proofs and essays.
- the first philatelic bibliography listing works in the French language: his Philatelic Bibliography of France and Belgium was presented to the Société Française de Timbrologie in three communications, in 1876 and 1877 and published in 1878 by J. B. Moëns.

Publications

The list of publications by Philippe de Bosredon appears in the Bibliographie du Périgord published in 1897-1901 (of which he is one of the authors). We only detail here the works and articles concerning philately, but Bosredon also wrote:

- works and articles of an administrative and professional nature: his first publication (1854) was a Note on the property of the old maladreries; in 1870 and 1873 he produced two texts on vicinalité, and finally in 1878 his Notes for use in a French bibliography on life insurance.
- numerous texts of regional scholarship, a field to which his writings will be devoted exclusively from 1879: numerous articles in the Bulletin of the Archaeological and Historical Society of Périgord, but also works including his Sigillography du Périgord (1880) or else its Summary inventory of the Périgord collection at the National Library (1890).

The philatelic writings of Philippe de Bosredon were produced over a period ranging from 1870 to 1878; it will be noted that his first text was published while he still held high office at the Ministry of the Interior:

Personal works:

- On French stamps. Signed P. B. - Le Timbrophile, (Paris, Mahé) 28th February 1870, p.514.

- Note on the methodical formation of the collections of stamps. - La Gazette des Timbres, (Paris, Mahé) 1st year, 1872-73, p.21, then p.34, and finally p.81.
- French fiscal stamps. - Ibid., 2nd year, 1873-74, p.13 and p.20.
- Monograph on adhesive tax stamps from France and the French colonies, by Ph. De B. - Paris, Mahé, 1874; in-12, 100pp.
- The tax stamps of Spain and its colonies for the year 1867. - Signed Ph. De B. - Le Timbre Fiscal, Brussels, Moëns, 1st year, 1874, p.80; 2nd year, 1875, pp.15 & 22.
- About the tax stamps of France. - Le Timbre Fiscal, Brussels, Moëns, 2nd year, 1875, p.46. Signed: Ph. De B.
- Monograph on Swiss adhesive tax stamps. - Ibid., t. II, 1875, pp.72, 76, 83, 92; t. III, 1876, p.5) Signed Ph. De B.
- Mobile stamps viewed from a historical point of view. - Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie, t. I, 1875-78, p.18.
- Monograph on telegraph stamps of France. - Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie, t. I, 1875-78, p.196.
- Monograph on Belgian tax stamps. - Le Timbre Fiscal, 3rd year, 1876, pp.22, 95.
- Philatelic Bibliography of France and Belgium. - Bulletin de la Société Française de Timbrologie, t. I, II and III years, 1876-1877, pp.101, 131, 221, 283. Also Brussels, Moëns; in-16, 74 p.
- Monograph on the tax stamps of the Grand Duchy of Oldenburg. - Signed Ph. De B. - Le Timbre Fiscal, III and IV years, 1877-1878, p.42.
- Monograph of tax stamps of the Kingdom of Saxony. - Signed Ph. De B. - Ibid., pp.44, 48, 51.
- Monograph on the tax stamps of the Grand Duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. - Signed Ph. De B. - Ibid., p.75.
- Dei francobolli considerati sotto il punto de vista amministrativo e finanziario. - Corriere dei Francobolli, Trieste, 3rd year, 1877, nos. 1, 2, 3, 5-6.
- Note on stamps considered from the point of view of the emblems shown thereon. - Report of the International Congress of Timbrophiles, session of 1878. - Neuilly, Bouzin, 1878, p.269.
- On the application of postage stamps to savings banks. - Le Timbre-Poste, Brussels, Moëns, 16th year, 1878, p.28.

- Note de vari francobolli imperfettamente conosciuti e d'esistenza dubbiosa o discussa.
- Corriere dei francobolli, 4th year, 1878, nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11 and 14.

Philippe de Bosredon has also translated articles by other authors, notably for the Bulletin of the French Timbrology Society and for the Report of the International Congress of Timbrophiles.

Sources and additional information:

Obituary of Philippe de Bosredon, in the Bulletin of the Historical and Archaeological Society of Périgord, volume XXXIII, 1906, consulted on Gallica.

File on Philippe de Bosredon - archives of the National Order of the Legion of Honor.

Anatole de Rouméjoux, Philippe de Bosredon and Ferdinand Villeplet, General Bibliography of Périgord, Volume I, page 58, 1897-1901, consulted on Gallica.

Imperial Almanac and National Almanac, consulted on Gallica

Bulletin of the Ministry of the Interior, consulted on Gallica

END

Carl Lund

Foreign stamp literature.

[Udenlandsk frimærkelitteratur.]

Nordisk Frimærketidende:

Frimærketidender.[Stamp magazines.], December 1867, Issue 5, pp.34-37; February 1868, Issue 6, pp.41-43.

Cataloger og Hjælpekrifter.[Catalogues and auxiliary writings.], March Issue 7, pp.49-50; 5th May, Issue 8/9, pp.57-59.

Albums., 5th May, Issue 8/9, pp.59-60.

Diversa. [Various.], 31st May, Issue 10, p.69 & 30th June, Issue 11/12, p.85

(The final double number (11/12) was missing from the Crawford Library and was made available to me by Chris King)

(Translation of various pages and paragraphs I judged to be of interest to me including the Editor's introduction on pages 1-2.)

Translated by Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

May 2021

Page 1

TO THE READER!

The all-time prevailing collecting spirit has found a wide field in our century, as stamps have been invented, and especially in recent years the stamp mania has taken a big upswing both throughout the world and also here in the Nordics. You see people of all ages, of all sexes, interested in stamps, as they strive to form a small collection of used and unused, common and rare stamps, as and when their means allow them to do so. However, since the price varies, it is not surprising here in the city to see the stamps listed differently at the various outlets, and when you see a so-called "stamp sale" in almost every basement in the small streets, where usually all the stamps are listed completely incorrectly, then you have here in the city, a stamp collectors' association formed, the purpose of which is to get the members the stamps as cheaply as possible. However, since the association has expanded, it has seen itself able to establish a sale in Grønnegade No. 10, in the living room. Stamp lovers here in the city could safely refer to this sale, and out-of-town residents could simply place their orders at the counter of this magazine, the orders would be carried out immediately! Furthermore, the Association has signed up with several major collectors; and the result of this is the appearance of this magazine! The purpose of the magazine is to inform the subscribers of when new stamps come out and what they cost here in the city, also to provide a roughly uniform price through sales agents, in short, to provide a link between the various traders and buyers. When you now consider that the magazine is published once a month, that each issue comes with an unused stamp free of charge, that the magazine itself contains a part that is funny and worth reading, then you will probably hardly feel that the price has been set correctly, namely at 32 Skilling quarterly! Hoping that this undertaking will be well-received and widely disseminated, we allow ourselves to draw the attention of the esteemed stamp collectors to this.

The Stamp Collectors Association
Editorial desk: Klareboderne, Nr. 5, 1st floor

Page 34

FOREIGN STAMP LITERATURE

Stamp journals

In the following lines, we would like to mention the magazines published so far and still to be published, classifying them according to the different countries and dwell a little on the most important ones. First we would like to mention them:

English Journals

Page 41

FOREIGN STAMP LITERATURE

Stamp journals (Continued.)

American Journals

In America, no less than 12 different periodicals have been published, of which, however, only 3 have continued to our time; we would therefore mention them first.

The Stamp-Collectors Record is published by Allan Taylor and is the oldest. Its first issue was published in Montreal (Canada) in February, 1864, the next issue in March, but it then ceased until it appeared in the city of Albany in December of the same year, and since that time it has been issued regularly every month with the exception of September 1865. In October 1865, the editorial staff of the paper moved to Boston, Massachusetts, where it is still. The size of the magazine was ½ sheet and the price was 50 cents a year until November 1866, when it was reduced to 25 cents; with each issue comes an unused stamp.

Page 69

FOREIGN STAMP LITERATURE (Ended)

Miscellaneous

As we hereby conclude our overview of the stamp literature, we assume that we have thereby given our readers an indication of various books and periodicals that deal with the study of stamps, their value, appearance, colour, date of publication, etc. However, since we know that it is not always so easy to obtain these writings, we should be pleased to undertake to obtain them for those of our esteemed readers who might desire it.

The editors

END

Author (14pt)

Title

[Title in original language]

Bibliographic details

(Notes)

Translated for James Negus and found in his files by Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
May 2001

TITLE (14pt)

END

STADTRAT DER LANDESHAUPTSTADT MÜNCHEN

Stadtbibliothek Philatelistische Abteilung
München 2, Rathaus, Zim. 365

Munich, August 19th, 1955

James Negus, Esq.
339 Prince Regent Lane
London 16
(England)

Dear Mr. Negus,

In volume LXI number 1572 of the STAMP COLLECTORS' FORTNIGHTLY I have found your article "Indexing Philatelic Literature" in which you have made favourable remarks not only upon the philatelic information as served by the STAMP LOVER and THE AMERICAN PHILATELIST, but also upon the index of our LITERATUR-NACHRICHTEN.

In my opinion, the indexing of philatelic literature could be greatly facilitated by a close co-operation between those gentlemen who are responsible for the indexes of the STAMP LOVER, THE AMERICAN PHILATELIST and the LITERATUR-NACHRICHTEN, with a view to a still greater rationalization. What I have in mind is that Messrs. L. N. and M. Williams (London) specialize in the English literature, Mr. Lidmann David in American, Mr. Spaulding in Japanese and Mr. Hillet in Latin American publications, while I myself not only take care of the German, Austrian and Swiss press; I would also see to the East European literature being revised by an expert in Slavonic languages. A central index could then be published in the form of an international "Philatelic Digest". To achieve this end, it would, however, be indispensable to agree on uniform abbreviations for philatelic magazines etc., e.g. P = Post, St. = Stamp(s), Ph = Philately (Philatelist), etc., as well as on a uniform system for the numbering of catalogues.

In expressly this connection, the revival of the "Fédération internationale de la presse philatélique” (FIPP) within the framework of the FIP – which might even be supported by the “Weltpostverein” (World Post Union) and the UNESCO – would be very desirable.

I should very much like to know your opinion and to receive your suggestions in this respect. As to the above-mentioned co-operation, I am also thinking of Messrs. King-Farlow (London), Dr. Mathieu (Oberviechtach), P. C. Rickenback (London), Billig (Jamaica), and Daniel W. Vooy (Canajoharie, N. Y., USA).

Looking forward to your reply, I am,

Yours very truly,

CH. O. MULLER

Director of the Philatelic Section of the Mun. Library
Munich City

STADTRAT DER LANDESHAUPTSTADT MÜNCHEN

Stadtbibliothek Philatelistische Abteilung
München 2, Rathaus, Zim. 365

Munich, September 8th, 1955

James Negus, Esq.
339 Prince Regent Lane
London E.16
(England)

Dear Mr. Negus,

Thank you very much, indeed, for your long letter of 29/8.55 in which you have given me your detailed opinion about a more expedient system for the indexing of philatelic literature to be adopted. I, too, feel that one of the urgent problems to be solved is the unification of abbreviations and methods of citation between American, British and German indexes. As you state, too short abbreviations are apt to cause confusion; on the other hand, they must not too long either. In short, the adoption of a "golden middle-course" would, like always, serve the purpose best. You were further right in stating that "S.M." standing for "Stamp Magazine" as well as for "Stamp Mirror" is no proper solution, whereas "SMW" for "Stamp Mirror (Weekly)" can hardly be regarded as a logical one. I also agree with you that certain abbreviations should once and for all be retained for the most frequently occurring words, such as instance:

A	for	Archives
Am	for	American
B	for	Briefmarke
Br	for	British
C	for	Collector, Collectionneur
D	for	Deutsch, Deutsche, etc.
F	for	Filatelie
Fr	for	Freimarke, Frimaerke
J	for	Journal
M	for	Magazin(e)
Mi	for	Mitteilung(en)
P	for	Post, Postal, Poste
Ph	for	Philatelic, Philately, Philatelist, Philatelie
R	for	Revue, Review
S	for	Sammel-, Sammleer
St	for	Stamp(s)
T	for	Timbre(s)
W	for	Weekly
Z	for	Zeitschrift, Zeitung;

Hence follows:

DBZ	=	Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung
SP	=	Sammlerpost
StM	=	Stamp Magazine
TP	=	Timbre-Poste, etc.

Since according to this system, "S" would stand exclusively for "Sammler", the "Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung" would, logically, have to be quoted as "SchBZ". On this basis it should, in my opinion, not be very difficult to develop a reasonable code which should then also be adopted by all philatelic libraries.

However, what you say about our index giving only the whole numbers instead of the page numbers, is not quite correct; the latter is always given after the whole number. By way of example: LN21/22 page 67: Neusseland Early Queen ... AmPh 638:417 (The American Philatelist no. 638 page 417). If a periodical has no whole number, then for instance "UP 1955-3:33" means Union Postale 1955 no. 3 page 33.

To my regret, Mr. Vooys has up to now dealt with bibliographical problems only on a very small scale. I, for my part, would greatly welcome a publication dealing with those questions as are treated by you in your article "Abbreviations of the Titles of Philatelic Periodicals".

Before getting in touch with the other gentlemen to are interested in the whole affair, I feel that we should first of all, you and I, create a thorough basis for a new system for the indexing of philatelic literature.

Looking forward to your reply, I am with my best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

CH. O. MULLER

Director of the Philatelic Section of the Mun. Library
Munich City

STADTRAT DER LANDESHAUPTSTADT MÜNCHEN

Stadtbibliothek Philatelistische Abteilung
München 2, Rathaus, Zim. 365

Munich, 30th May, 1956

James Negus, Esq.
339 Prince Regent Lane
London 16
(England)

Dear Mr. Negus,

To my great regret your last detailed of a considerable time ago, dealing with my system of abbreviating philatelic literature, has been lost on its way to being translated.

I should be very grateful to you if you could possibly let me have a copy of the said letter so that I can at long last give you an answer to it.

Yours sincerely,

CH. O. MULLER

Director of the Philatelic Section of the Mun. Library
Munich City

Dear Mr. Negus,

I thank you for providing a copy of your letter of 1st October, which went astray, and which I could only now answer, unfortunately.

I only prefer giving the whole number as opposed to the Volume Number, insofar as it is a question of the references in the Bulletin (Literally: Literature-News). It would make the printing of the index much more complicated and more expensive, if I had to put AmPh Vol 69/1956-8: 575 as against AmPh 664/575.

Looking at this from a purely 'library' point of view, it is certainly useful when loaning out, to know that, for example, No.664 is included in Vol.69 when somebody wants it. However, the information is always available in the Publications Card Index, so in practice there shouldn't be any difficulty.

In order not to make the publication of the index too expensive, simpler terms of reference must be adopted, than for a card index only intended for library purposes. However the difficulty then arises that with Anglo-Saxon periodicals, the numbering of the volumes does not always coincide with the calendar year, but frequently take up part of one year and part of another, so that a supplementary indication of the volume will be necessary, the documentation will be even longer.

It will be correct to put the Volume Numbers in Arabic numerals as you propose, and was in fact prescribed thus in the alphabetic catalogue of the Prussian libraries from 1899/1908 (Para. 4, 3).

Your proposal to lengthen the abbreviation Ph for Philately by one or two letters in order to distinguish between the derivatives, Philatelist, Philately, etc., deserves attention. The abbreviations of the Kumbley Auction lists form a fitting basis for the introduction of international agreement on abbreviations. In the above mentioned instructions Bl. = Blatt, H = Heft were laid down.

In choosing abbreviations for existing technical journals and those now being brought into existence for one big index covering all times and countries, care must be taken not to cause confusion with publications which may have ceased publication. For example, to use the abbreviation SBZ (referring to the Swiss Stamp Magazine) might cause confusion with the Saxon Magazine, BZ, which is no longer going. If 'Stamp Lover' were to be abbreviated to SL instead of StL (see index) then this magazine could be confused with the 'Sammler-Lupe'.

The of magazine titles which you are now composing should form a good basis for a philatelic bibliography, provided you also take Schmitt diel's proposals into consideration, as contained in his Bibliography of Ph. Lit. Parti: General index of German Language philatelic periodicals. Unfortunately, Schmitt diel was killed in the war on the Russian front, and was never able to extend his survey as far foreign language periodicals.

The 'Society for Philatelic Literature' recently formed in Duisberg has included a basis for complete international documentation in its programme: I'll let you know further in due course.

I'm glad my proposal about work on the Index met with your approval. I agree with you about Point 2 of your proposed measures, i.e. that all the Articles need not be registered, but only the more important and of lasting value. Those of merely temporary interest only to be considered in the light of what is absolutely essential.

Just now, it isn't all that easy to draw a hard and fast line. Chats etc., on Philately can remain ignored. Also, your proposals in Point 3, which have already been applied in Billig's Mondial are worthy of being strived for.

I am aware of the cumulative problem. We possess King-Farlow Cumulative index as follows:

A in document

The layout of your index cards corresponds to ours, of which I enclose sample.

I agree with your proposal number 4, and am glad to hear from you that you consider the Literature Bulletin suitable for the continual presentation of current comprehensive lists of contents. The Society Phil. Lit. will get in touch with you in the near future in order to expedite the practical carrying out of the points raised by you and by me.

In the meantime you might get in touch with your American friends so that the suggestions and queries of H. Steinhardt, Peggy Eltges, Charles Hahn, D. Lidman, Robert Spaulding, J. Hillet, etc., can be evaluated.

Trusting to hear from, etc., etc.

Ch. O. Muller

11.8.56

Dear Herr Muller,

Urgent pressure of other work prevents me from replying to your detailed and useful letter of 13th June. I have also been able to make no progress recently with my list of periodicals.

However, now that I have a little more time I hope to apply myself to the problem again and will get in touch with you further as soon as possible.

I look forward also to hearing of the work on the Duisburg Gesellschaft für philatelistische Literatur. Would you please let me have membership details in due course? Would I be permitted to become a member?

Unfortunately I have not got a copy of Schmittdiel's General-index.

Please forgive the unsatisfactoriness of this reply, but it is really to acknowledge with thanks receipt of your last letter.

With kind regards

Yours sincerely

JAMES NEGUS

Rudolf Buschhaus

The book as a collector's item

[Das buch als sammelobjekt]

Ingo Susemihl (Editor): 1971-2021 Festschrift zum 50-Jährigen Bestehen der Philatelistischen Bibliothek Hamburg e.V., Philatelistische Bibliothek Hamburg, Germany, 2021, p.40

Translation by Rudolf Buschhaus for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2021

THE BOOK AS A COLLECTOR'S ITEM

Today, the purely informational function of a book can often also be fulfilled digitally. There are many philatelists who only own books and newsletters in digital form. I smile, when I imagine their horror, if it were suggested, that they scan their stamps and covers and dispose of the originals.

But that is exactly the horror I feel, when a well-preserved philatelic printed work is destroyed - because I am a book collector! To reduce a book to its information content seems like sacrilege to me. Where else can I hope for understanding than with philatelists, who can relate to my joys by analogy with their own collecting areas. Do you know my pain when "obsolete literature" is thrown away and club libraries are dissolved?

The criteria according to which I collect will certainly sound familiar to philatelists. The possession of a work in its various editions including possible supplements and also predecessors forms the basis. The various variations of binding, paper and publisher round off the result. This includes country-specific editions, luxury editions as well as translations. Occasionally there are even production errors, such as missing pages, upside-down binding, etc. Special copies, e.g. signed or bookplates of well-known collectors or libraries, are attractive. My aim is to tell the whole story of a printed work, so also through contemporary previews, advertisements, reviews, awards, press reports, etc.

Of course, I cannot give a comprehensive account of my collecting field in such a short article, but only whet your appetite a little.

Finally, two favourite items from my postal history collection, for which the title of the books is unimportant - after all, the signatures of the honorary Presidents of two old-letter collecting societies adorn the respective books.

[Figure 1]

Ex Libris of Ulrich Brunnert, Honorary President and President of the DASV 1985 - 1997 with his dedication to the library of the DASV.

[Figure 2]

Dedication of the Honorary President of the Swiss Old Letter Collectors' Association Jean J. Winkler to the library of the SASV.

I wonder if the two Presidents could have imagined at that time, that their book donations would be united in my library today, after the associations' collections were dissolved as independent libraries?

I welcome any contact from kindred souls: Vorphilatelie@gmx.de

END

Alexander Bungerz

Carl Beck †

Germania-Berichte, July 1929, Volume 26, Issue 7, Whole number 335, pp.79-80.

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

September 2021

CARL BECK †

Never in my writing has it been so difficult for me to write as it is today, when I have to write the obituary for the best and most self-sacrificing of my friends. Even though I had been seriously ill for months and had no hope of a permanent recovery, I had written my farewells to Carl Beck many weeks ago because I saw no prospect of ever seeing him again. – That's how it happened, but in a different way than I thought. He would have been out of life before me, he, the healthy, strong one, who always calmly and happily affirmed life! The news of his death, which his friends in Berlin had been expecting for a short time, reached me like a bolt from the blue.

Carl Beck was born on December 27, 1879 in Heppenheim an der Bergstrasse; professionally, he was employed at the Statistical Office and, after 25 years of service, took his leave as senior secretary a few years ago. The scrupulous precision that he required in his work as a civil servant is echoed in his philatelic works, of which I quote:

Das Reichspostmuseum und seine Markenbestände (2nd edn.)

Bibliographie der wichtigsten deutschen Sonderschriften über die Postwertzeichen einzelner Länder, I. 1919, II. 1923.

Bibliographie Leipzig – Breslau 1915.

Die bayerischen Kreuzermarken der Ausgaben 1849 bis 1875.

Bayern 1849 1 Kreuzer schwarz.

Ueber Vereinsberichte.

Ueber die Bedeutung philatelistischer Literatur.

Die Anlage philatelistischer Bibliotheken.

Ueber den Wert der philatelistischen Literatur.

Ueber die Notwendigkeit philatelistischer Bildung.

Praktischer Wegweiser durch das Reich der Philatelie.

He also wrote the monographs on Victor Suppanschtsch and myself, wrote Die Bayerischen Mührladstempel with Karl Holzschuher and was editor of the Philatelistischen Miszellen in the years 1905-09.

In his earliest philatelic time, when he collected like everyone else, he recognized the high value of literature and very soon turned his attention exclusively to collecting it, limiting himself to German-language publications. Through the great passion he brought to literature, through consistent searching for decades, through the great love of order and the careful recording of his treasures, he came into possession of a unique private library, which after Suppanschtsch's is the largest of its kind.

As a result of his fabulous memory, he was, after Fränkels' death, the best expert on German-language Philatelic literature; he immediately grabbed every article he wanted from the depths of his unfathomable cupboards - so he was the living, never-failing encyclopedia for everything to do with philatelic literature. His death left a painful void for all who turned to his everlasting gracious help in matters of literature.

The same love of literature that connected us both expressed itself in 1921 in the publication of the Philatelistischen Bücherwurms and in the founding of the Association of German Literatur-Collectors, which, thanks to its propaganda activities, reached an unbelievable number of members.

A peculiar collection still caught Carl Beck's interest: autographs of well-known philatelists and authors; this collection, which he also started early on, is probably unique of its kind.

He was also active in club life, he was to be found at almost every society and many federal associations. In the Germania-Ring he managed the offices of the newspaper procurement office, the credit agency and black list, in the federation he was in charge of the federal literature office and the federal credit agency. He was also a member of the panel of judges for the Sieger-Prize.

As a person, Carl Beck was of a rare harmony and consistency, always willing and helpful, always willing to work for the good of philately, whether to promote a good cause or to combat vermin.

We only got to know each other personally when we were more mature, after we had written to each other for years. From our shared love of literature and our view of life, which was the same in every respect, a friendship developed which, without the slightest difference, proved to last until death. In Carl Beck I am losing the best and most loyal friend of my life.

Alexander Bungerz

END

Miscellaneous: Our Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann
[Vermischtes: Unserem Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann]
Germania-Berichte, October 1930, Volume 27, Issue 10, Whole number 350, p.133.

Translation by Brian J. Birch
Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
August 2021

MISCELLANEOUS:
OUR FRIEDRICH WILHELM THALMANN

To our Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann, EM. and Secretary of the Association of Stamp Collectors in Potsdam, one of the well-known Prussian researchers, 23 years administrator of our Ring library, on his 60th birthday, which he celebrated on October 11th, our sincere, warmest congratulations. Without going into his many literary-philatelic works and research results, we remember the diligent work of establishing the 2 silver groschen of Prussia. Few Ring members know how much work Fr. Wilh. Thalmann has done for our cause without special compensation, only out of love and idealism. How much higher is unselfish work to be valued under the most oppressive conditions at times. Some friends and admirers of his have insisted on giving special recognition to the importance of Thalmann's activity. May our jubilee be granted many more years of satisfactory work in our hobby - maybe the time will come again when we can reward him for his work with a clubbing wage!

Thanks very much! I would like to take this opportunity to express my heartfelt thanks to all of the numerous Ring friends who thought of my 60th birthday in such amiable words, some with gifts, and in telegrams, because I am not able to write to each and every one of them.

Fr. Wilh. Thalmann, Potsdam.

END

Miscellaneous: Jubilee. Friedr. Wilh. Thalmann

[Vermischtes: Jubiläum. Friedr. Wilh. Thalmann]

Germania-Berichte, December 1932, Volume 29, Issue 11, Whole number 375, p.143

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

September 2021

MISCELLANEOUS: JUBILEE. FRIEDR. WILH. THALMANN

Friedr. Wilh. Thalmann, co-founder of the Vereins der Briefmarkensammler (Association of Postage Stamp Collectors) in Potsdam, was able to look back on 25 years of office as second chairman and secretary last month. The first chairman of the association congratulated him with warm words and praised mainly his services as a Prussian researcher. We also congratulate him from the bottom of our hearts, may he keep to philately, which he enriches so richly with his stirring work, for a long time to come.

END

Miscellaneous: Max Ton

[Vermischtes: Max Ton]

Germania-Berichte, March 1932, Volume 29, Issue 3, Whole number 367, p.36

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

September 2021

MISCELLANEOUS: MAX TON

Max Ton, who has been blind since 1928, committed suicide on March 21st. his 50th birthday, and at the same time on this day he can look back on 25 years of writing. In addition to daily writing, he also devoted himself primarily to philately. His life's work, the "Handbook of Philatelic Literature", which was published in Dresden in 1918 and saw a completely revised new edition in 1924/25*, was more widely distributed. Since 1925, he has primarily held the position of court reporter at the local regional court, which he still carries out conscientiously despite his sudden blindness in 1928.

END

† In Memoriam †- Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann, Berlin †
[† Zum Gedächtnis †- Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann, Berlin †]
Das Postwertzeichen-Der Poststempel, February 1938, Volume 12, Issue 2, p.52

Translation by Brian J. Birch
Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
September 2021

† IN MEMORIAM †

FRIEDRICH WILHELM THALMANN, BERLIN †

After the editorial deadline, we received the sad news that the experienced connoisseur of Prussian stamps and distinguished researcher in the field of Prussian stamps, Friedrich Wilhelm Thalmann, Berlin, died of heart failure on February 3rd, at the age of 68, after a short hospital stay. In our magazine, the various people have often come to write with valuable contributions and have always unselfishly made their extensive experience available to German philately as a whole. The name Dr. Wilhelm Thalmann always remains connected to the history of philatelic research.

END

E. Régnard & Pierre Mahé

The Collection of H[erpin].

[La collection H.....]

Le Timbrophile, July 1866, Volume 2, Whole number 21, pp.174-175.

(The article is by Régnard with an editorial comment by Mahé.)

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

September 2021

THE COLLECTION OF H[ERPIN].

It is with a heart full of bitterness that we come to speak to the reader about the sale of the most brilliant French collection, the mother collection. There was the model that we tried to copy, there the goal to achieve, there the collector's dream. Led by an unparalleled and favored guide, she always marched with great strides, quickly clearing the way and mercilessly and triumphantly outpacing all those who aroused jealous rivals to the most incredible efforts. This beautiful collection is no longer French property; she is lost to us forever. It will pass into some foreign album, where it will carefully hide the name of its author to glorify its new master. There, quartered, split, torn into pieces, she will find death to suddenly go and live again in another body and bring her soul there. God grant that the fingers which will have the honor of touching it possess that nervous delicacy which a great lady brings to adorn herself, on a festive day, with her richest diamonds; and now, the reader having given us this kind of funeral speech, let us let one of the most beautiful monuments of timbrophilia flow with one last regret and talk about the style which presided over the erection of this monument, the sublime of its kind.

Containing essays, stamps and reprints, this collection, a true object of art, was intended as much to satisfy good taste as to help in the study of the most scrupulous timbrophilic science. On the one hand, each of the copies seemed to come from a special edition; on the other, each of the white places that we saw in the album at rare intervals seemed destined to receive some specimen dreamed of by the author and almost ephemeral. Obliterations, period; except here and there a few small imperceptible traces. We would have liked to see this album completed by the collection of the different cancellations of posts; but this study of secondary importance had probably been postponed as being too unrewarding and too unartistic. Among the extremely rare stamps in this collection, we can cite:

The two 4/2 tornese blues from the Two Sicilies, vividly printed and perfectly new.

The 4 cuartos brick 4.856 from Spain on grained, non-yard paper.

The Victoria Regina of England.

Moldovans of 4,859 on yard paper.

The 40 and 80 paras of the following series on blue paper.

All envelopes with two Finnish stamps indicated in the Nicolas catalog.

The 3 Tuscan lira yellow on white.

The 4/2 red anna from India.

The red 4 pence, Cape Town lithograph.

Mauritius stamp with goddess and valueless, red on blue paper.

The 4 shilling coffee with milk from Natal.

The 30 cents of the meeting.
The 4 yellow hundred (Colqu'houn) of the Confederate States.
The red 25 cent pony express.
The brand new 4/2 yellow peso from Peru.
The entire vermilion series of Terre-Veuve.
The 5 orange quartos 4,854 from Luzon.
Van-Diemen's blue 4 penny.

The Too-late and the Registered of Victoria, etc., etc.; then a series of the rarest essays, which we can boldly estimate at more than 4,000 francs. To cite here all the marvels that this album contained would be too long and we would have done better, to shorten our article, to begin by listing what it did not contain. Never before has such a beautiful collection been sold, so good abroad as in France. This sale will remain in the memory of stamp enthusiasts for many years, and twenty aus will not be enough to extinguish the memory among those who have had the honor of leafing through these resplendent pages.

E. REGNARD

While associating our regrets with those of Mr. Regnard, that a collection, the most beautiful that could be cited in France, has emerged among our neighbors the "English, we must say that they are well tempered by the knowledge that we have of the name of its beautiful buyer" Mr. Fred. Ph... We will even say, this will seem monstrous, that we are, to a certain point, satisfied with this belly. We will make ourselves understood.

There were two collections: (not to mention others, however, also very remarkable, those of MM. de Saulcy, Dr. Magnus, D, Count Primoli, etc.), that of Mr. H.... and that of Mr. Ph... One day the latter crossed the Channel and they found themselves face to face. From that moment on, there were presentiments; it seemed that these two rivals could not exist together, that one had to absorb the other and this is what happened, to the disadvantage of France, this is the only point which leaves us with regret.

When this became known, there was a moment of discouragement in the timbrophilic phalanx, of which Mr. H... held the head so valiantly. It seemed like everything was lost and almost everyone asked themselves: Am I going to continue? Will Mr. So-and-so continue?

We, the first, could not help but feel a certain fear about the possible causes of this desertion. But we did not take long to recover from this movement, and today, if we have to reproach Mr. H... for a moment of failure, we do not find enough strength to applaud the robust faith of Mr. Ph..., who, when timbrophilia seemed to be in danger, came, by this bold blow, to give it, on the contrary, the highest affirmation, showing, by the large sum devoted to this acquisition, all the interest contained, not only in the beautiful H... collection, but also in the very object of the collection in general, timbrophilia.

The Ph... collection, reinforced by the H... collection and the jewels of the V... collection, recently sold in London, 365 pounds. st., today forms the most complete set that one could desire. It is the standard album, the book, and there is nothing more to envy than the admirable and unique series of French essays that Mr. de Saulcy owns.

A final regret: it is that a collection of this importance is not the property of a public library, and that in the future it may be dismembered and dispersed into a more or less large number of different albums.

P.M.

END

Sft. [Fritz Seifert]

Fritz Leitenberger †

Germania-Berichte, September 1933, Volume 30, Issue 8, Whole number 383, p.99

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

September 2021

FRITZ LEITENBERGER †

On September 9th, our individual member and Ring-Revisor editor Fritz Leitenberger died unexpectedly due to a heart attack in Gernrode (Harz), where he was seeking rest. In accordance with his last wish, he was quietly cremated in Bernburg, with only his closest family members attending the farewell ceremony. The crematorium in Bernburg sent the urn of the deceased to Leipzig. We were therefore privileged to say goodbye to him in his home, where the urn was placed on his workstation decorated with flowers. The urn will later be buried in his parents' grave in Teplitz-Schänau.

Fritz Leitenberger was born on August 31, 1890 in Teplitz-Schänau and was therefore 43 years old. In 1920/21 he published the "Weltpost-Echo" in his own publishing house, and in 1925 he compiled a "Bibliography of German-language philatelic literature". He wrote many essays with a skillful, sometimes "sharp" pen; Most trade magazines and stamp corners in daily newspapers and monthly magazines have counted him as an employee. Particularly worthy of mention is his "Handbook of Czechoslovakian Austrian-Hungarian postal stamps. Origin", which appeared in Leipzig in 1930, as well as the work on Hradčany specialization. His work has received widespread recognition and has received several awards. He edited the Schaubek album for eight years at C. F. Lücke, Leipzig, and wrote the text S O S for the same publisher, which appeared in two editions.

As a special collector, he turned to the Hradčany stamps, whose plates he compiled. He processed these stamps and especially their cancellations with great understanding. His research collection 50 H. Hradschin received high awards at many exhibitions, including Antwerp, Algiers, Le Havre, Gdansk (honorary award), Luxembourg, Melbourne, Strasbourg and Vienna. He is considered one of the best researchers in his specialty. When his handbook was published, he founded the Czechoslovakia postmark collectors' interest group, of which he was chairman. The unique index of Czechoslovak postmarks he created is remarkable. He was also the founder of the Bungerz plaque, which is known to be awarded once every year for the best philatelic work.

Through his wealth of philatelic knowledge and his love of philately, combined with a pleasant, lovable personality, he has secured a lasting memory. His friends and the Germania Ring suffered an irreplaceable loss through his death. We will always honor his memory!

The ring line of the Germania ring

END

Karl Rist

The philatelist and the Literatur-Nachrichten
[Der philatelist und die "Literatur-Nachrichten"]
Die Sammler-Lupe, August 1961, Volume 16, Issue 16, p.360

Translation by Brian J. Birch
Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
October 2021

THE PHILATELIST AND THE LITERATUR-NACHRICHTEN

In general, one should not drag things into the public domain whose intimate knowledge has long been familiar with them but has no intention of properly understanding the extent of the necessity. However, in this case an exception must be made, not just for the sake of the thing, but for the sake of the collectors, the researching philatelists.

This thing bites: "Literary News". It would be presumptuous to say that it is not worth taking up a pen for the sake of this matter and that it is pointless to draw the attention of philatelists to an event that can no longer be discussed within the smallest circles, that simply can no longer be withheld from the public.

Of course, it can't be a coincidence that I'm the one who polemicizes about this "thing", after all, I'm affected by it. Less as an employee, more as a researching philatelist in general and as a literature lover in particular. In addition, my name has recently been directly associated with the "literature news". As a Munich collector friend recently told me, "he heard from important circles that I would take over the editorial team of the LN".

Well, this assumption - no matter how authoritative the circles may be - is not even unfounded, but it was deliberately declared to be a hoax from the outset, at least based on wishful thinking. Perhaps it arose from a very simple exchange of letters that became necessary due to its publication in the "Bundes-Nachrichten" of the BdPh. This publication - it was the report of the federal agency head of Federal Agency B during the last Bundestag - made it clear that the "Literatur-Nachrichten" must be in a crisis that has actually been going on for a long time. To put it cautiously: the continued existence of the LN is at risk. I am excused from repeating the wording of this report here, but I must mention that the head of the federal agency. Mr. Chr. O. Müller, in his report, suggested suggestions for resolving the crisis. He thereby asked Berau's philatelists to submit suitable suggestions, suitable opinions or critical voices on his suggestions. I am not informed about the result of the letters, but I am informed about a new fact in this "matter", which is unlikely to be conducive to the continued existence of the LN. Collector friend Müller wrote to me "that he had to give up editing the LN both because of his advanced age and because of an eye disease". It was initially unimportant that he trusted me enough and offered to continue the LN.

But let's get to the point. The "Literatur-Nachrichten" appeared in January 1951 as an organ of the "Bundesstelle phil. Literature of the BdPh", as it was then subtitled Hiezz. First in small format up to No. 6, and then from No. 7 in larger DIN A 4 format until today (No. 41-44), year after year, to provide interested philatelists with documents that enable them to provide research work with the necessary information. Highly recognized by the philatelic world, awarded numerous medals and praised in numerous reviews, the LN had conquered a worthy place for themselves. One had to believe that the “Literary News” could look into the future with confidence.

And yet, the “Literatur-Nachrichten” could only be kept afloat with generous financial resources provided by the BdPh. The circle of paying owners was too small and the financial resources that remained from the sale were too small, after printing, production and shipping had already taken up far more of the income. So the LN was a losing proposition, as one would say in technical language. The crisis is less to be found in the matter itself than in the financial situation.

Given this dilemma, fellow collector Müller made his aforementioned suggestions, which should lead to a certain recovery process. All in all: Only radical changes to the current presentation can help. But is that really true? If so, why?

First of all, it must be made very clear that the interest of individual collectors in the “Literature News” is missing, and that is only because the associations simply do not do what is necessary to create interest. If you imagine that his so-called literature director of a not exactly small club behaves completely negatively towards the LN (literary news? I don't know, we don't need it!!), you can't imagine what the impact is on the club members.

It should simply be mandatory for everyone in the BdPh. registered association to subscribe to the LN, at least a matter of honor. But who would want to somehow initiate this in a state in which the buzzword “freedom” is misused to its detriment. Certainly, I can already hear the voices... But the knowledge of successful work must not only be expressed in numbers, it must be effective. Club life needs a huge and fundamental renewal, not everywhere, but predominantly. One should not hide the fact that the crisis of “literary news” is a crisis of the German philatelist associations.

However, I suspect that there will hardly be any changes to the “literature news” at this point in time. And just as fundamentally as the clubs had to expect. In addition, the federal government, which brings together these associations, must do its part to make the “Neue Literatur-Nachrichten” the philatelist's magazine. So it simply shouldn't and can't cry, e.g. B. in the “Bundes-Nachrichten” eight or more pages are used for book reviews alone (just the same as in the LN). The club chairman and his bookkeeper are easily tempted to consider this report as sufficient for their literary knowledge. But that's just by the way. One could also call the “Society for Philatelic Literature e. V., include Duisburg. But what the heck?

Constructive suggestions are expected from a critic so that they can... We are spared the accusation of not understanding, which is largely a counter-argument. You can e.g. E.g., fritify the new German postage stamps, present the better proposals or drafts and the only reproach that they receive is the suggestion that they don't understand anything about the matter. Technical details are thrown around that are not known to the critic himself. You read something about unprinted surfaces and that's where the rub lies, even though the matter of the Lumogen imprint has as little to do with the printing as, for example, life insurance has to do with a piano.

With that said, I would like to get back to the matter at hand. The “Neue Literatur-Nachrichten” must continue the legacy of the LN, even if there are frantic attempts to get another LN issue off the ground (with the use of large financial resources). A separation or conclusion must be brought about clearly and rigorously. The “New Literature News” must be structured to be more readable. You must create a document for the club evening. So deviate from the strictly literary status. The edition of the “Neue Literatur-Nachrichten” must be separated into a German edition published quarterly and an annual international edition. Negotiations must be held with the FIP to coordinate global literary research, and the federal government must strive to make full use of the opportunities given to it. As a very first step, the “New Literature News” must be handed over to an editorial team. The enormous work must not be left to any individual, even if, for example, the index is compiled by several employees. It will then be the responsibility of this committee to undertake serious editorial work to design a new magazine that meets all wishes and can look carefree into the future, for the whole of German philately. The “Association of German Philelists” can therefore make a real contribution to its achievements.

END

Christian Boyer

Articles on Arthur Maury

[Articles sur Arthur Maury]

Christian Boyer's web site: www.christianboyer.com/philatelie, extracted January 2022, 4pp.

One article and extracts from two books presenting of the life of Arthur Maury:
Nécrologie., Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Postes, 1st December 1907, Cover & p.1.
(Obituary published immediately after his death in the periodical he founded.)

Georges Brunel: Ce qu'était la Philatélie en 1867., 1930.

(Biography written by someone who knew him personally.)

Henri Leroux, André Maurice, Roger North & René Poulain: Le Centenaire de la Maison Arthur Maury 1860-1960., Louis Schneider, France, 1961, pp.7-9 & 28-29.

(Excerpts from the book written for the Centenary of the house.)

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

13th February 2022

ARTICLES ON ARTHUR MAURY

Le Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste, December 1907, Whole number 326, Cover & p.1.

Obituary

The newspaper was in press when the almost sudden death of Arthur Maury, who suffered from congestion last Friday, died on Sunday, December 1, at the age of 63. We share this painful news with readers of the Collectionneur.

The founder of this newspaper, which he has always been actively managing for more than 40 years, Mr. Maury will leave unanimous regrets in the entire philatelic world which is losing in him one of its deans. The many words of sympathy that flow from every part to the deceased's House show how much esteem his colleagues and all those who knew him felt.

A philatelist from the beginning, he was always concerned with stamps, and devoted himself entirely to their study. The works he has written on this subject are alive, he has, so to speak, lived them. At the same time as a conscientious author, philately loses in him a scholar and a passionate collector.

Heraldist, he had collected in his Spontini Street home interesting collections of curious and historical trinkets often quoted in the Illustrated Reviews.

He endeavored to demonstrate the popular origin of the Gallic Rooster and to make it reappear in the coat of arms of France, to which he succeeded in part. We remember the important book⁽¹⁾ he published on this subject, which was honored by a Government subscription.

Quite recently, he published a 400-page volume on French stamps⁽²⁾, and the readers of the Collectionneur have seen in the preceding issue the welcome that has been given to this so complete and well-documented a publication.

Officer of Public Instruction, of Nicham Iftikhar, decorated with several foreign orders, Mr. Maury had been appointed president of the Chambre Syndicale des Négociants in postage stamps since its foundation. He was also, alongside Leo Claretie of Germany, vice-president of the Society of Lovers of games and old toys. An expert at the Tribunal de la Seine, M. Maury, in this last function, and in the many labors he had undertaken, in spite of the precarious state of his health, had been overworked lately; he died, so to speak, at the breach.

He was an affable man, loved by his staff, always ready to help and who will be missed by all who knew him.

His funeral will be held Wednesday, 4th December at 10 am, in the church Notre-Dame-de-Lorette. We will meet at 6, boulevard Montmartre.

Notes

- (1) Les Emblèmes et les Drapeaux de la France: le Coq Gaulois, by Arthur Maury, Paris, 1904.
- (2) Histoire des Timbres-Poste Français, Bandes, Cartes, Timbres-Télégraphe et Téléphone, Essais, Marques Postales et Oblitérations, by Arthur Maury, Paris, 1907.

Georges Brunel: What was the State of Philately in 1867., Yvert & Cie, Amiens, France, 1930, page 29.

He was very young, barely out of childhood, when Arthur Maury had felt the mania for collecting. He admits it himself: in his desk, in boarding school, he had a fully-arranged menagerie: a field mouse, a pierrot, a lizard and snails! he even had a fish in a bottle! Also, one day when at the Stamp Exchange a comrade asked him if his father received letters from abroad and, in this case, to give him the postage stamps, his attention was immediately aroused. Some time later, he saw, displayed in the streets of Paris, the announcement of the Manuel de Timbres-Poste (that of Potiquet); he procured it, read it and his path was traced, he resolved to collect and soon to traffic. He had asked his father to leave him part of the shop window where he exhibited his duplicates; this small business was very successful and soon he gave up glove making to devote himself exclusively to the business of postage stamps. First at 5, rue de Richelieu, due to expropriation, he then moved to 25⁽¹⁾ rue Le Peletier (opposite the Opera, where he occupied a very busy little shop), finally at the end of 1869, he moved to 80, rue Saint-Lazare (where the Maison Pavoille is now), which became the center for all collectors. As early as 1864, he had founded the Collectionneur des Timbres-Poste which still appears⁽²⁾ and which thus happens to be the oldest philatelic journal. In July 1891, he opened vast stores on Boulevard Montmartre to the amazement of all the merchants in the district, who could not imagine that such a big place was needed to sell small squares of paper! His first catalogue dates from December 1864, it bore the name: Maury fils, 5 rue de Richelieu, with branch, 52, rue Napoléon, in Boulogne-sur-Mer!

Maury's name was a symbol: he personified philately for a long time, because he had been one of the first to adopt this term; the variety of albums he had created had earned him a large clientele of young people who later became great collectors.

He was a kind and courteous man, a hard worker, very witty and timely, and good enough with his tongue to launch interesting articles from time to time. He published a large number of remarkable studies such as his Histoire du Timbre-Poste Français, his Catalog de Marques Postales and a historical study on the Coq Gaulois, because he had a passion: he would have liked the rooster to become the French emblem on all vignettes. He died, very wealthy, on the 1st December 1907.

Notes on Brunel's text

- (1) Error. the shop was at 23, rue Le Peletier.
- (2) The paper ceased publication in 1968.

Henri Leroux, André Maurice, Roger North & René Poulain: The Centenary of the House of Arthur Maury 1860-1960., pages 7-9, 28-29

It will seem legitimate to all those who love the postage stamp and its history to place the year 1960 under the sign of Arthur Maury, this “grandfather of philately”, which was and remains one of its most illustrious pioneers: a century, indeed, will have passed since as a very young man he decided to sell postage stamps for collection, a century during which was to flourish this science that owes him so much - including even its name Philately.

Born on the 31st January 1844 in the heart of old Paris, rue du Petit-Musc, Arthur Maury was born to modest traders. Having specialized in selling gloves, his father moved to Boulogne-sur-Mer. A few years later, in 1860, the young Maury, who for several years already collected stamps and exchanged them, especially with the many Englishmen who each day passed through Boulogne, from his father that he was allowed a whole shop window where he installed his stamp sheets, carefully presented at marked prices.

Soon, a small clientele was formed; to satisfy it, he had to supply himself everywhere and mainly in Paris, where he entered into relations with collectors, already relatively numerous and with the few people who did more or less trade: the House of Maury was virtually founded and this young, then 16-year-old man had just created a company, which still bears his name in the very premises where he had to establish it definitively, after various moves of which we will, for the lovers of precision, to give the list:

Three years after having “hanged the housewarming” at Boulogne-sur-Mer, Arthur Maury, an emancipated minor, rented a small shop in Paris, opposite the Théâtre Français, 5, rue de Richelieu.

In 1865, his store being expropriated, he moved it to 23 rue Le Peletier.

The success, which had already been announced, was such that the location proved insufficient to accommodate the activity of the staff and the reception of the customers. Arthur Maury then rented more spacious premises, 92 rue Saint Lazare. A few years later, it was a mansion of the city Malesherbes that he assigned to his business in continuous growth.

Finally, in September 1891, stores and offices were transported and relocated to the heart of the Paris business district, 6, boulevard Montmartre, where this old and sympathetic House maintains the tradition of its illustrious founder, under the aegis of its owner and director, Roger North.

His thirty years of commercial activity had already given Arthur Maury exceptional success that he had to enjoy during the sixteen years that passed until his death, 6 boulevard Montmartre, on the 1st December 1907. Even more remarkable than this material fortune are the breadth and quality of the work he has built up over 45 years of incessant toil, the main chapters of which we will discuss. (...) In one of the earliest issues of the Collectionneur, Arthur Maury favorably presented a suggestion by Mr Herpin, a shrewd collector and, no doubt, Hellenizing, who proposed for the name of postage stamp collectors the term “Philately”. Adopted rather quickly abroad, this term was to be discussed for a long time in France, against those of “timbology” and “timbophilia” defended respectively and with equal tenacity by two “ancestors” of the collection of stamps, Mahé and Dr. Legrand. Arthur Maury and his journal had to end up imposing it definitively and universally.

One of the happiest memories of Arthur Maury’s life relates to a trip he made to Mont Blanc, about 1900. Being in a hotel frequented by foreigners of distinction, he amused himself, instead of giving his real name, to write on the book of travelers: Yruam (reverse of Maury), Prince of Serbmit (reverse of Timbres) and he stuck next to it a sticker with the same inscriptions which he had printed, in various colors, for the needs of his business. This rather childish trick resulted in him being the focus of several diners and dinners, and the butler filled him with attentions, “which obliged him to give twenty sous of tip.”

Arthur Maury was certainly a prominent figure in the Paris of the “belle epoque” - and our previous articles clearly show what titles he had gained legitimately.

His celebrity went well beyond our borders. Let’s quote this anecdote:

The Russian prince Wladimir T... who was staying in Paris, having had the fancy to visit in person - and almost solemnly - the house of the Rue du Petit-Musc where Maury had been born, had put himself in the lead, after a whim of his fiance, to sell for 15,000 francs his collection of stamps: he threw it into the fire because Maury wanted to give him only 13,500! (They were gold francs).

We have already said that he was received - and listened to - by the most famous political figures of his time. He was justifiably proud of the relations he had with Victor Hugo, with the ex-Emperor of Brazil Dom Pedro and with many other celebrities.

Holder of several foreign orders, he had been made Officer of the Academy since 1888, and promoted Officer of Education in 1900.

He had not yet obtained, when he died in 1907, the Cross of the Legion of Honor: it was, it seems, largely deserved by this philatelic trading giant, by this conscientious and erudite writer, who has left among other works: The History of the French Postage Stamp, and Emblems and Flags of France.

END

Carl Beck

Bibliography of the German-language philatelic literature

[Bibliographie der deutschsprachlichen philatelistischen literatur]

Germania-Berichte, October 1925, Volume 22, Issue 10, Whole number 290, p.167

(Appreciation after it had ceased publication)

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

18th February 2022

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE GERMAN-LANGUAGE

PHILATELIC LITERATURE

(Appreciation after it had ceased publication)

Bibliographie der deutschsprachlichen philatelistischen Literatur, by Friedrich Leitenberger, has ceased publication, to the great regret of all serious collectors. Anyone who needs a bibliography for their studies, who uses Suppantchitsch's work, who has to search often and extensively in tables of contents, who leafs through all the volumes that do not have an index, who needs sources and literature references for a special area, knows the value of a comprehensive bibliography. Leitenberger's idea was good, even very good, but there was not enough interest in other circles. How long will it be before dealers will see that without researchers and writers nothing can go on, that dealers would not receive huge prices for rarities if researchers had not made collectors aware of the rarity. How would traders be today without the basic works of a Lindenberg, Kalckhoff, Munk, etc., which have never had anything to do with the trade? Where is the understanding that in the end it is always and only the ideal collector and researcher who helps the dealer to fill his coffers? And when will those circles who benefit from it finally feel compelled to sacrifice something for researchers and research that will automatically pay them back? Leitenberger's large-scale work also had to perish due to lack of interest, which is a shame. But the damage will come to those who ultimately would have benefited from the completion of the bibliography!

The following have been published: Foreword, xiipp., Delivery 1, 16pp., Delivery 2, 22pp. In Memoriam, 4pp.

Carl Beck

END

Carl Beck

Bibliography of the German-language philat. literature 1925

[Bibliographie der deutschsprachigen philat. literatur 1925]

Germania-Berichte, February 1925, Volume 22, Issue 2, Whole number 282, p.36

(Review when it was published.)

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

18th February 2022

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE GERMAN-LANGUAGE

PHILATELIC LITERATURE

(Review when it was published.)

Bibliographie der Deutschsprachigen Philat. Literatur, 1925. Author: Friedrich Leitenberger, Berlin; Publisher J. K. G. Wagnersche Buchdruckerei, Neustadt a. Orla. – Author as well as publisher have ventured on a task that deserves admiration; the former because of the courage to want to cope with the enormous amount of trouble, the latter because of the willingness to publish such a work. Leitenberger himself is trying to remedy an actual need, and doing so as quickly as possible by recording the content of all the previous month's specialist journals using around 60 abbreviations, giving anyone interested in the field the opportunity to get their hands on the various papers; We consider this to be a great advantage in the interests of collectors, even if it also becomes a disadvantage for researchers, as they have to look up several deliveries to cover the monthly installments. Finally, even this is rendered a very great service by the fact that we are now given an overview of our literature at all. From this point of view, it would only be desirable if the publisher would also find the necessary support, such that at least every association incorporated this bibliography into its library. Only then will it be possible to expand the author's further endeavors to extend the bibliography to earlier years and thus to give philately one of the greatest services, to achieve a goal. – As we have just been informed, the intended one delivery per month had to be made into three due to the volume handed over, a circumstance that we are happy to believe from the publisher as well as the author after looking at Delivery 2.

Carl Beck

END

Enr. Conr. Eberhardt

History of Philately by which I mean the Science of Collecting Postage Stamps

[Historia de la Filotelia o sea la Ciencia de Coleccionar Sellos de Correo]

Imprenta Gutenberg, Santiago, Chile, 1890, 173pp.

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

October 2022

HISTORY OF PHILATELY

BY WHICH I MEAN THE SCIENCE OF COLLECTING

POSTAGE STAMPS.

FOREWORD

By launching this modest little work into circulation, my purpose has been not other than to take a further step in favor of South American philately and to present to collectors from Latin America and Spain a detailed list of what philately is, since to date there is no analogous work in our language.

As this modest work will undoubtedly fall into the hands of people who are not collectors, or those who have been and who, due to some inconvenience or deception suffered, are no longer collectors, it will perhaps cause in one or the other, the desire to adhere to our pleasant pastime.

On the other hand, this work will show those who call our science child's play that it is very far from it, since reading the work carefully, more than one of our opponents will change their opinion regarding their way of considering philately.

True collectors, on the other hand, will find in these pages new material to strengthen their interest in our science and some of the author's ideas about it; These ideas are the fruit of his long experience in the philatelic field.

Thus, full of flattering hopes for the good of our cause, these pages undertake their journey through the world, and if they partially succeed in their object, the aspirations of their author will be satisfied and recompensed for the hard work that has been necessary for the compilation of all the data.

Health and happiness to my Hispanic-American and Spanish colleagues!

Valparaiso, February 1890.

Enr. Conr. Eberhardt.

Translator's Note: Care must be exercised if relying upon the data in this work as I have not tried to correct his errors – many of which are obvious. Its main interest lies in its being an early South American view of the history of philately and collecting stamps.

FIRST CHAPTER

I History of Philately⁽¹⁾

Although the friends of our science, that is to say collectors in general, already know the word at the head of this chapter, I am, however, going to explain more closely its meaning and definition, since it has lent itself to several discussions regarding it. Whether it has to be Philotely or Philately.

Already in my periodical Guia del Coleccionista de Sellos de Correo [Postage Stamp Collector's Guide] in its first number, (January 1878) I began an article on philotely, beginning with the definition of this word; I will do it again later in a more explicit way.

Back when the first essays on philotelic literature appeared, that is, the first periodicals, symptoms of the importance that our science was acquiring, a name began to be given to it, qualifying it first as Timbromanía, which later turned out to be something more. How poorly chosen, because that word contains a meaning that does little favor to collectors, and in its place was used “Timbrofilia” and “Timbrología” expressions that already instilled more respect....; but these had to give way to that of “Filotelía” [ie. Philotely] as we still call it today.

⁽¹⁾ Speaking of stamps, this work deals only with postage and telegraph stamps, including envelopes, cards and bands for impressions, excluding all tax stamps, documents, contributions, etc. , except in the case of having used these for postage.

Philotely is a Greek word and is made up of the two words “Philos” (Pronounced filos) which means friend and “telso” which means bowl, tribute, tax. Thus, from the fusion of both words and according to Greek grammar, the result is “Filotelía” which means «tax free; or bowl) then the ph is changed to f to give it the Castilian pronunciation which forms “Filotelía” which literally means friend, fond of what is related to the taxation, or tax, and as the taxation of the letter, that is the letter tax represented by the stamps, that word (philotely) represents that of our science, which is the collection of postage stamps, together with the study of everything that may be related to stamps and mail. The meaning of the Greek word is something vast, but it is appropriate to our case.

The two Greek words also form Philately whose trem (with a instead of o) is used in North America, in England and in part of Germany; but “philotely” is as correct as “philately”. In Belgium and France the name of our science changes entirely and is called “Timbrologie” or “Timbrophilie”, but these are compositions that are half French and half Greek and we decided in [South] America on the purely Greek expression, which is “Philotely” and at the same time the most used in the world and known by millions of collectors.

I also decide on “philotelie” with or, because there are other words in Spanish whose first two syllables come from the Greek “philos” such as: philosophy, philology.

Philotely found its origin about ten years, a little more or less, after the issuance of the first postage stamps, that is, between 1850 and 1855.

Some say that the collection of stamps had its beginning as a bet, to gather the number of stamps that was necessary to cover an entire wall. The bet was won by the collector, who continued in the hobby, inducing others to do the same.

Others assert that a Paris school teacher advised his disciples to paste behind the atlas sheets with as many stamps as they could obtain from the respective country whose map was on the sheet. In this way he stimulated the study of geography.

Be this as it may, the truth is that it was children who first took up collecting stamps, some keeping the hobby until their older age and falling little by little into one or another type of person.

But that philosophy certainly should be qualified only as pure dedication to collecting stamps by a small number of fans, who were alien, therefore, the studies or at least the occupation with the different branches that embraces the philosophy in its true sense of science that it today possesses.

Thus, that collection of stamps, we will simply say, the beginning of our hobby today, gradually acquired value, while the idea of consolidating that hobby was born in one or another serious collector, establishing a small business with the stamps and thus providing material to collectors that would serve as support in maintaining and propagating this hobby.

It was in Belgium and France that stamp collecting began with the greatest enthusiasm: these were followed by England, Germany, etc. until by the years 1860-62 it spread rapidly and almost simultaneously to the whole world, later passing to North and South America.

At that time (1860 to 65) it was collected with a real enthusiasm, which bordered almost on mania, especially among young collectors, schoolboys, who seemed to only live for stamps, forgetting everything before their favorite passion. This circumstance did not go unnoticed by school teachers and parents, who for the most part did their best to evict this entertainment, pernicious, in their opinion, for children.

Articles were even published in important newspapers and other newspapers made crude war on this hobby, qualifying their results with quite dark forecasts....!

But it was not only children who dedicated themselves to collecting stamps, no, people of all categories, rich and poor, in short, stamps were the order of the day...

Such a state of things imperatively demanded an order that would protect that hobby against the ruinous end that it could have had, and to this end stamp businesses, small and large, were established; Newspapers, current price lists, catalogs and albums were published, which gradually created some system in the labyrinth that stamp collecting was beginning to form.

It was at this time that we realize when the collection of stamps began to pass from such, acquiring the notions of the philatelic science of today, thanks to the impulse that the nascent philatelic literature gave it, since the most amateurs and competent collectors strove to spread through it the formal dedication to philately, to gradually raise it to the rank of a science.

The first philatelic newspaper was published in 1862 in Liverpool; various publications followed in Belgium, Germany, France and even in North America. In South America the first newspaper began to be published in 1878, by the author of this little work.

The dedication to philately was growing every day, from which it turned out that the works on philately increased amazingly, publishing all kinds of albums, catalogues, special brochures on stamps, on counterfeits, etc. until today our science has reached a fairly satisfactory state, developing this and acquiring its greatest value in the last fifteen years, thanks to the first-rate literary forces that since then have battled for our science and that still continue with passion in their task, stimulated by the good results that their efforts yield and by the flattering future to which the philately is heading with a sure and accelerated step.

I have already duly explained the principle and history of philately; let us now deal more closely with philatelic science and the benefit that formal dedication to it brings to philatelists.

Those who believe that stamp collecting cannot be a science, or rather, those who look down on it and even scoff at stamp collectors, in a word, the enemies of philately, they are all the more obstinate in not wanting to recognize the scientific value of philately, since they do not want to take the trouble to look more deeply at our occupation, putting aside for a moment their contrary ideas, and looking for explanations, not among people who are also anti-philatelists or indifferent, but between collectors of recognized merit or between the material that they can find at their disposal everywhere and that explains to them what are the bases on which the sense of science that philately truly possesses rests.

But it happens that they form the opposite idea considering the way children and the young form their collections and they judge philately as a toy or a useless pastime.

But it is not in that circle where one must look for why philately is a science.

Look to serious collectors of recognized reputation, to adult collectors who occupy some respectable position in society, and entering into communication with them you will have an idea of what philately is.

People like the King of Portugal, Baron Arthur de Rothschild, Dr. Ferrari of Paris, Dr. Legrand of Neuilly, Mr. de Volpi of Trento, the Brazilian consul in Caracas, the German emperor, all these passionate collectors and many other great personalities would not bother with stamp collecting if it were just a toy or because it is an occupation for children.

Pope Pius IX was also a collector, whose collection was one of the best and still exists.

And understand that most of these great collectors are not limited only to collecting stamps for their collection, which is certainly not the nature of philatelic science, but they work hard, with true passion to propagate by all possible means the love of philately, so that they always acquire more and more the adjective of science that our adversaries are obstinate in not recognising.

There is, for example, the philatelic society of Paris, headed by Baron A. de Rothschild until recently as President, serving as secretary, treasurer and other positions, men of merit, old in keeping high the name of our science. This society exists for about twenty years and in all that time its directors and members of important social status and capacity, have not stopped working for the benefit of the philately.

Beyond this society, which is the head of all others, we count others in London, in New York, and in other cities of North America, several in Germany and those of Lima and Montevideo that have existed for only a few years. We also count among philatelists great personalities, aristocrats, merchants, bankers, finally we have them in all classes of society, from the sumptuous palace to the simple craftsman's hut.

It is not because children are also busy collecting stamps that our science should be considered a toy, because if we are going to say that, we could say the same about numismatics, since there are also children who accumulate coins; of the natural sciences, since children also occupy themselves with collecting insects, birds, flowers and plants of all kinds.

We repeat a thousand times that philately is science and it only has the defect of not being old, nor of having with it the characters of today a thousand or more years ago, for the very simple reason that it did not exist before the material that serve as a base: the stamps.

I call science the clear knowledge of something, based on obvious principles, capable of true studies and that finally result in positive benefit for the person who studies it. These studies and the consequent benefit can be of any nature desired, and emanate precisely from the nature of science.

He who only looks at the collection of stamps as a mere pastime and with the sole aspiration of seeing as soon as possible all those that have been issued, that by the way is far from attributing to his entertainment the name of science; Children and a large number of collectors are included in this category; Exactly as happens with many other sciences in which there are fans of this or that science, but who, in their opinion, only take away the most acceptable side, or pleasant if you will.

But this is not the case with those collectors that we can classify as "philatelists" and who take intellectual advantage of their occupation with philately.

Of course, it makes us learn geography almost unintentionally, because by dint of seeing, trying, reading so many times of such or such stamps, our attention comes to focus on thousands of circumstances that rub against those countries; studying its position, its products, its degree of culture, etc. And so it happens with many places and perhaps with all, gradually falling into a true study of geography and acquiring by this means knowledge that otherwise would have perhaps remained unknown to the collector....

For schoolchildren there is no simpler way to learn and retain more easily the rude and crude studies of geography, than the dedication to stamps, but certainly with a little symmetry and plan and not as a mere toy.

Outside of geography, instinctively the philatelist desires to know this or that thing in history of the country, and lo and behold, from his observations he falls into the study of several branches that were previously unknown to him or at least takes care of them from time to time.

In his stamp album he finds the portraits of Kings, Queens, famous people, etc. and would like to know something about the life or the merits of some of them, which makes him gladly look for this knowledge and take an interest in his stamps to know something about this or that character.

Then he acquires notions of numismatics, heraldry and other sciences, for which the stamps serve him as a comparison, and at the same time that he forms his studies, the progression of his collection always presents him with new attractions and a constant occupation with everything that is related to the named studies and to what is related to the mail.

The newspapers and other philatelic literature, the discussions in the philatelic societies, the correspondence they will perhaps carry on with like-minded people, the special dedication to good condition, clean pieces, symmetry, and good looks of your album, all of that has a powerful and pleasant influence on keeping the intelligence of the philatelist towards his favorite passion and towards the studies or occupation of almost playful proportions

If he is also versed in literature, he makes known in the newspapers and in societies their ideas, presenting philatelic works that have caused him reflections, comparison, study, and that stimulate him always more to follow his love of the science in question.

And all this is hidden from the eyes of our adversaries or from the majority, only because the philatelists do not flaunt their work, perhaps because of modesty regarding the science they are dedicated to, for the same reason of it being new and that it is not yet time to present it in public, we will say, until it has been raised to a position that is not reached by the elements that would like to get in its way for its destruction....!

It is true that among the millions of collectors there are, most of them cannot be counted as philatelists in the scientific sense that I have explained, but there is an enormous number that justly deserves such a description.

And let it be said now that what we profess is not science!

To finish with the history of philately, I will give a brief review of its current state, reserving for other chapters the details of those main factors that compose it.

Those main factors are in the first place the philatelists, then our literature, the philatelic societies, trade and the exchange of stamps.

The most eminent philatelists strive to propagate more and more the dedication to philately; our current literature, which is the most powerful force that defends our banner, counts a hundred good newspapers, special works on the stamps of some countries, on mail, on counterfeit stamps and on thousands of objects that rub against each other in our cause. These publications exist in various languages and scattered throughout the universe.

Some of the philatelic periodicals exist since twenty and more years to date.

On the other hand, philatelic societies strive in keeping the love of philately alive and in propagating it as much as possible. The Parisian society invests good sums of money in awarding prizes, medals and diplomas for the best philatelic works that are presented, thus stimulating the development of literature and the perfection of the science of which I speak. Other societies also encourage their members, according to the means at their disposal, to be enlightened in every way in the sphere of philately.

The merchants also contribute their contingent to the advancement of philately, because due to the multiplicity of their relationships they are able to present the fans with the opportunity to continue providing themselves with the stamps to complete their collections, either for money or for reciprocal exchanges. From this it turns out that the stamp dealers contribute at least to maintain the hobby, since they present the facilities to obtain the old stamps and the new ones that are issued.

The trade in stamps has today assumed colossal proportions, as there are merchants who only live and deal with it, employing numerous employees and capital amounting to many tens of thousands of pesos.

Such is the state of philatelic science today, which continues in our time, more than ever, with real giant steps in its improvement, presenting new attractions to the children every day and letting them glimpse a flattering future. ...

It is only the counterfeits that here and there present some obstacles to its development and cause bitter hours; but they can no longer seriously put themselves before the forces that we have today and that imprint ever more improvement on it and assure it of its cheerful future.

I have treated philately globally; the next step is to show in detail the main points of which it is composed.

CHAPTER II. – THE STAMPS

First Part

Under this category I include both postage stamps and telegraph stamps, including cards, envelopes and bands for newspapers, excluding stamps for tax forms, documents and other fees.

I am of the opinion of joining the telegraph stamps to the collection of postage stamps for the reason that the telegraph is a communication analogous to the post, only that it is much faster and simpler, but deep down, the thing comes to be one.

In almost all the countries, the telegraph offices are also linked to the post offices, being one address and accounting, and in many cases using the same postage stamps for the telegraphic service.

The first stamps that are known are, according to some, those issued by a merchant from Paris, called Velayer, in the year 1653; said merchant obtained a concession from the King to establish a postal company in Paris.

Others attribute the invention of stamps to the Duchess de Longueville, who gave the idea to the postmaster at the time, Mr. Fouquet, in Paris, of having mailboxes placed in various districts of the city, in which each one could deposit their letters, without the need to take them to the post office, nor to have them weighed and appraised their size, nor to give knowledge of their content, which at that time it was an obligation. She also advised him to issue stamps with the royal coat of arms and inscription of the value to paste them on the letters and thus be franked.

The idea was accepted and with this the odious obligations that existed to send a letter by post were partly abolished.

The seal was in the form of a kind of band, which was placed around the letter, sticking its extremities, and carried the inscription of Port payé .. le .. jour de l'an mil six cent cinquante - trois, or cinquante quatre - 1 Sol, as shown by the respective decree of August 8, 1653, whose facsimile in ancient French and translated into Spanish, is found in the Guía del Coleccionista of 1879.

The aforementioned seal must not have been used for a long time, since nothing indicates that it had been.

Almost two centuries passed without postage stamps being used, as new traces of them are found only in 1813, in Sicily.

Reliable documents testify to an issue of stamped envelopes, decreed on August 12, 1818 and put into use a few months later. There were three values issued for these envelopes: 15, 25 and 50 cents, being printed in blue ink; the paper of the envelopes bore the coat of arms of Sardinia and the portrait of King Victor Emmanuel as a watermark.

In 1820 he changed the type with slight modifications, printing the seal in the middle of the envelope and dry, that is, without ink.

More or less at this time it is said that postal envelopes existed in China, but exact data about this fact is not known.

However, all these issues did not deserve to be considered as the issue of the first stamps, since their use was extremely limited and they did not last long, nor were they imitated by other nations.

The year 1840 is the one that legitimately must be considered as the cradle of stamps and Mr. Rowland Hill as their inventor.

Indeed, it was on April 27, 1840 when the postal envelopes called "Mulready", were issued because this is the name of the author of the drawing of those envelopes and the only model that was accepted out of more than 2,000 that were presented to win the prize offered by the government for the best type.

William Mulready was a painter from London, and of much reputation for the perfection of his artistic works in the art of painting. He died on July 7, 1863.

Lord Lonsdale was the one who gave the idea for the issue of stamps that Sir Rowland Hill practically took advantage of, putting it into practice on May 13, 1840, the date of the issue of the first 1 and 2 pence stamps of England and that they can effectively be called the first.

Thus, we must consider Mr. Rowland Hill as the inventor of the stamps and reformer of the mail, since his reforms, presented to parliament in 1837 in a special little work, and approved by it in January 1840 and in which he mainly mentioned the introduction of low postage and of envelopes and stamps, they served as a basis to other nations to fix their postal system of communications and postage.

Hill therefore has the honor of being the founder of the modern post, and the inventor of stamps; his name and his merits will remain engraved with veneration in the memory of collectors!

I enclose some biographical notes on the life of this great man.

Sir Rowland Hill was born in Kidderminster in 1795. From an early age he showed a keen interest and talent for mechanics, having built not a few scientific instruments. His first occupation, after concluding his studies, was as a mathematics teacher at his father's school, remaining as a teacher for seventeen years. He married in 1827, and in 1833 was appointed secretary of a colonization commission for South Australia, contributing effectively to the founding of the colony of the same name.

At that time he conceived the idea of manufacturing a printing machine, whose cylinder would be molded to the type, printing on continuous paper; this idea was perfected by others and is now well known among printers.

The bad organization and the absurdities in the postal service of that time caught the attention of Hill, who actively devoted himself to its reform, not without encountering thousands of setbacks such that someone less energetic than Hill would have made them abandon their purpose.

It must be considered that in those times the communication channels were very few, difficult and extremely expensive. The railway was in its infancy, with the cart and the back of the animal being the main means of communication.

For the transport of correspondence there was not always or everywhere a fixed itinerary, nor rules, nor provisions. Thousands of letters were sent with friends, by traveling merchants, and by various other means. The letters were not classified according to their weight, but according to the number of sheets of which they were composed. In the main post offices of England and France there were (dark rooms) where letters were checked by candlelight, as when buying eggs and checking whether their contents are doubtful. In short, that was the state of affairs in the post office branch so that to tell everything in minute detail it would be necessary to write a book of not insignificant dimensions.

To put an end to this labyrinth and to establish a regular and cheap postal system, the postage being within the reach of the poorest, that was the grandiose idea that sprouted in Hill's brain and that after many difficulties he finally achieved on August 7 of 1839, the day in which, having accepted the bases of its reform, the government decreed them as law, being approved by the commission and in the chambers on July 5 of that year, with a majority of 102 votes.

He ran into many difficulties, because the improvement introduced a true revolution in the field.

At the beginning and while the clerks got used to weighing the letters, the postage of a simple letter was 4 pence, which on December 5, 1839 increased in London the number of letters sent from 39,000 to 60,000!

Shortly thereafter, on January 10, 1840, the so-called “penny” system was introduced, the postage being for single letters only one penny, and paying postage left to the sender.

In that same year the famous “Mulready” envelopes were sent which were later found to be unsuitable, as the large vignette left too little space for name and address and therefore the black 1 penny stamp was issued on May 6, which was in turn supplanted by the red one, which was later followed by other values.

Hill was not employed in the post office until 1846, when he was appointed secretary to the postmaster general, and in 1854 secretary to the post office department. Before 1846 he had served as President of the London and Brighton Railway.

The British nation was able to value at its true worth the merits with which Rowland Hill had been credited.

In 1836 he retired with a full salary of £2,000 a year and £20,000 which the government gave him as a just reward for his important services. Already in 1845 he had received 10,000 pounds by popular subscription and in 1846, 13,360 pounds sterling.

Many have been the testimonies, gifts, honors, that he has received from all parts of the kingdom; the society of fine arts gave him its first Albert medal; Oxford University conferred its highest distinction on him, naming him Doctor of Laws; in 1860 he was made a knight of the order of the bath and in 1877, a popular subscription, in which donations should not exceed 6 pence per person; reached the sum of 1,600 pounds among 100,000 donors; Said subscription was to erect a monument to the illustrious champion. In 1876 he was also consulted about the issuance of the postcard. On the 30th of January of the following year he received the honorable title of free citizen of the city of London, the document was in a gold box whose sides were engraved with the design of Mulready’s envelope, the city’s coat of arms, the Hill’s personal coat of arms and monogram, and a penny postage stamp, and case inscriptions. Being too weak at the time to leave home and go to London to collect the gift, it was presented to him in his room at Kidderminster by a commission appointed for the purpose.

Few are the heroes of progress and civilization who, like Hill, have witnessed the fruits of their efforts for the good of humanity and who, even in life, have reaped thousands of demonstrations from the grateful people, who rightly expressed their appreciation and gratitude to him.

The work of the deceased not only produced the most brilliant results in his country, but also made itself felt in the entire universe. Sir Rowland Hill passed away on August 26, 1879, at the age of 84 in Hamptead, near London. His remains were deposited in London at Westminster Abbey.

Far from being one of the most advanced countries in Europe that followed the example of the stamp issue created first by England, it was Brazil that followed suit, presenting in 1843 a series of three stamps.

This country was followed in the issuance of stamps by the canton of Geneva in Switzerland, in the year 1844; then Finland in 1845 (covers); North America in 1846, and only in 1848 did a European country of greater importance, Russia, come to avail itself of such great utility; They were followed in 1849 by France and Bavaria, in 1850 by Prussia, Saxony, Australia and so on almost all the countries of the world to this day, in which almost the entire universe uses the indispensable postage stamps.

Until 1860 they were owned by only 76 countries, which issued more or less 900 stamps, that is, in a period of 20 years; At present the countries that issue and have issued stamps (if those that are out of use are counted) are more than 70 with about 8000 stamps. In fact, there are about 2,000 more or less in use, including stamps, bands, envelopes and postcards.

I will not go into explaining the use that is made today of stamps and the advantages that those small representatives of the size, which most look at with indifference, lend to humanity as a whole: each one knows very well the role they represent; but to give an idea of its importance, let it be stated here that England needs for herself and her colonies only the stamp at 1 penny, the amount of 6 million a day, or about 2000 million a year; in Germany about 8,000,000 stamps, envelopes, cards and envelopes are printed daily, which gives a respectable figure of 2.4 billion a year.

As for the appearance of the stamps, it can be said that each one characterizes the country to which it belongs: the kingdoms and empires generally represent on their seals the portrait of the monarch or the coat of arms of the country, for example England, Russia, Germany, etc. Austria, Italy, Brazil and others; the republics generally include in them the facsimile of one of their most illustrious statesmen or the coat of arms of the nation, for example North America, Argentina, Mexico, Uruguay, Paraguay. According to this, the collection of stamps is both a heraldic picture that greatly helps the study of heraldry.

In truth, where is heraldry better represented than in a good stamp album? And then, what a beautiful ensemble is formed by the other ornaments with which the busts, coats of arms, allegories and inscriptions contained in the stamps are generally intertwined!

As for their artistic merit, there are stamps that, due to the nature of the drawing they represent, due to their admirable engraving and the fine choice of colors, are true miniature works of art.

Who does not admire the beautiful series of North American postage stamps of 1869; those of newspapers of 1875; those of Brazil of 1881, and almost all those that have been engraved in steel by the National Bank Note Company of New York?

On average, it is the stamps of America in general that represent the best aspect, both in the choice of design and in the perfection of their engravings.

In exhibitions there have also been collections of stamps, already complete or from a certain country only, almost always deserving some prize.

There are very few complete collections of stamps, since there are stamps that are extremely difficult to obtain, because very few have been issued, or because they have been used for a very short time, they are naturally very expensive and their acquisition is not possible for most collectors.

Fortunately, there are few rarer stamps and they exist in few copies and therefore those fans who can dispose of a few hundred pesos without sacrifice, may well have a truly complete collection.

The less favored collectors of fortune can content themselves with a photograph of the rarest, since in recent times some of them have begun to be reproduced photographically.

Thus, for example, we count among the rarest the following: North America, stamps for newspapers with an effective value of $24, 36, 48 and 60, which must be bought for precisely this price at the post office, since they are hardly obtainable when used; Moldavia, 1858, 27, 54, 81 23 and 108 Para; Naples, 1860 Tornese; Uruguay, the 3 Diligencia; Brazil, 300 and 600 reis of 1845; British Guiana, 1850 and the provisional ones of 1862: Sardinia, covers of 1819 and 1820; Bolivia, 1866, 10 cts.; 1867, eagle, 50 blue and 100 green; 1867 and 1872 500 cts. and others of which few copies exist, paying from $10 up to $100 and more for some of those named if they are obtained.

Regarding the manufacture of stamps, these have been executed in all kinds of printing and on all kinds of paper, from the expensive steel engraving (steel engraving on linen and strong paper), to the cheapest lithographic and typographic printing and on ordinary straw or wood paper.

Of which more or less, almost all of them have been falsified and above all, they are able to be washed to reuse them, to the detriment of the mail and the income of the nations.

In the most advanced countries, much has been studied to implement a way to prevent used stamps from being washed, giving instructions to the printer to use, for example, very faint colors or inks that disappear on contact with liquids.

The North American Post Office has offered a high prize to the one who presents the way to avoid stamp washing.

Several projects have been presented in this regard but they are not admissible in practice. Thus, for example, it has been proposed to use: 1. stamps perforated in the middle; of which one part would stick to the letter and the other would be torn off at its perforation; 2. cancellation stamp of with indelible ink; 3. instrument that cuts or pierces the stamp or that is hot to burn the stamp superficially, and many others.

These two systems are generally very slow, as they prevent the disablement from being done quickly, as is necessary.

The only stamps that cannot be washed are the Russian and current German ones, (1880 to 89,) which are printed with specially prepared inks, because at the slightest contact with water or another liquid the impression disappears.

I do not know what reasons keeps other governments from this advantage, since their printing is not by far as costly as North American printing, which is steel.

In addition, the Russian stamps are of very fine execution, pleasant in appearance and printed in two colors, which makes counterfeiting difficult at the same time. Its printing is not difficult or expensive compared to many other stamps printed in steel or in relief, such as those of Portugal.

Under Falsifications you will find more details about the stamps that are most likely to be forged.

To prove that it is not only children who take care of their collection, I will only say that the museums of Saint Petersburg, London, Paris, Berlin, have spent a huge sum on the formation of their stamp collections, which they continue to constantly perfect.

It cannot therefore be denied that a collection of stamps is one more testimony of the culture of our time, without counting the scientific merit that must be recognized in the first instance and the benefits that the dedication to it brings to the philatelists.

The stamp trade has assumed colossal proportions today; From the simple retail sale of stamps, which began some thirty years ago, the demands of the gradual development that the hobby of stamp collecting was taking, were always giving more importance and food to the stamp business, which today has reached a state that is in comparason in no way inferior to mercantile business.

Germany and England are the nations that have the most important stamp dealers, there are many of them who operate with a capital of 20, 30 and more thousands of pesos.

Therefore, it is not exaggerated if I calculate the value that is currently invested per year by collectors from all over the universe to buy stamps at around four million pesos.

Although the number of stamps increases each year by about 300 more or less, perhaps causing some fear regarding the difficulty that will come in 40, 50 or more years to obtain a complete collection, I do not believe this fear is well founded, since being then materially impossible to procure the oldest stamps, I can predict that to fill the gaps that these stamps necessarily leave, reproductions will have to be made by means of photography, whose impression, a faithful copy of the original, remains in good condition for a very long time, or the collector can limit himself to collecting only the stamps from a certain time onwards, or only those from a part of the world, which after all always comes to fill the object of the philately, based mainly on the acquisition and study of postage stamps for the formation of a collection, leaving to the discretion of the collector the expansion that he wants to give, according to his ideas or according to his situation.

With the considerations that I have just made manifest, in my opinion, the inconvenience of forming a collection in times that we will not survive is safe.

As a subdivision of the stamp business I can count the exchange of stamps, which has now taken on enormous proportions.

Indeed, the exchange of stamps that many do, whether in the same country or city, or with collectors from other countries, is a not insignificant advantage for expanding the collection, especially among collectors who are very far apart.

Almost every collector can provide the stamps from their country in large quantities and at very little cost, either by exchanges or by purchases; Those stamps that do not have great value for him can be sent to a stamp dealer or to collectors in other countries to be exchanged.

Starting the exchange, little by little you get to have many and always new relationships where you use superfluous stamps.

Therefore, I highly recommend stamp exchanges, especially to collectors who cannot always have the money necessary for their purchase.

Second Part

The Categories of stamps and those that are to be collected

This Part, comprising pages 26-36, is simply about how and what to collect in the field of stamps and accordingly, has not been translated.

CHAPTER III

PHILATELIC LITERATURE

I will not go into explaining one by one the literary works that philately has told and tells about, because in addition to being a very difficult and almost impossible job, I believe it is of no value for philatelists in general; I will limit myself to describing the beginning and development of philatelic literature, highlighting the value that it possesses in each country.

Philatelic literature dates back to 1861, when the first traces of literature are found in the works: (Catalogue de Timbres) by Laplante, Paris, and (Manuel du Collectionneur de Timbres-Poste) Brussels: these were followed next year by other works. and the first philatelic newspaper: (The Stamp Collectors Review) published in Liverpool, which was followed by (Le Timbre Poste) on January 1, 1863 and which exists to this day.

Since then, philatelic periodicals, albums, catalogues and works of all kinds followed one another with real fury and there are more than a hundred periodicals published to date and perhaps triple this amount of other literary works of all kinds. that are related to philately.

The work published in 1874 by the eminent North American philatelist John K. Tiffany and titled (The Philatelic Library) records no less than 569 philatelic publications up to 1874, that is, including newspapers, special works on stamps, catalogs and albums. Today that number may well double.

The role that literature plays in philately is extremely important and the advancement, as well as the status and importance that it has today, is exclusively due to it; Without literature, philately would be worth almost nothing and all its merit would consist of it being considered a toy or hobby.

It is for the rest that the great philatelic geniuses that philately has had and has, understanding the value of literature, have made an effort and continue to make more and more effort every day to demonstrate through the press the scientific character that the stamp collection contains within itself. Philosophical literature is what makes the layman and our adversaries silent and change their minds, when they want to ignore our science. The good newspapers that we have in almost all languages; the excellent albums for stamps, with their geographical content; the valuable illustrated catalogues; the innumerable special and worthwhile works that have been published on philately; In short, this whole set of publications that the name of literature represents, has a certain imposing gift in favor of our philately and we can be proud of having achieved in just four decades, results such that they speak very loudly in favor of it, of that philately that many still consider a child's toy, although its works and the palpable results it provides to its true followers say otherwise! I will go into explaining more closely the philatelic literature, as it is presented to us today, which is what was most valuable for the time in which it was written. I will detail the literature of each country separately.

GREAT BRITAIN Although philatelic journalism was born here, the most eminent philatelists of the Albion have not been able to maintain its superiority; On the contrary, it seems that the importance of philatelic literature in England is declining, since there are few philatelic works that have been published in recent years, and on the other hand, the newspapers, which are many, for the most part limit themselves to announcing the new issues, the minutes of this or that Company and the rest is notices. Many are purely current prices of stamps.

There are only one or two newspapers that in their columns carry articles on philately, that is, those articles of common interest for philately, this being the kind of literature that helps our science to always acquire more merit and that instructs and pleases the philatelists.

English journalism in general is, therefore, not what it should be, and I hope the English understand that literature like that I have just cited lightly is what gives our science its scientific value and what creates philosophical merit.

What has been said refers to English journalism; As for the other literary works, England has two or three magnificent manuals and catalogues of stamps, but they are already old and of little value today.

The catalogue that today still has inestimable merit is that of the late and competent philatelist E. L. Pemberton; It is a finished work and dates from the year 1879. There are many other English catalogues, old and new, but they are almost without exception simple current prices of their authors.

In 1881 an excellent Catalogue of the Stamps of England was published by the Philatelic Society of London.

FRANCE has been and is one of the countries where philately has many followers and especially high-ranking philatelists and people of reputation. It is also in that country where there is the most important Philatelic Society of all: the (Société Française de Timbrologie).

France today has several good newspapers and I recommend them to those who speak Spanish, since French is the language that is best understood by many collectors in Latin America, that is, those who wish to read philatelic newspapers.

These newspapers are: L'Ami des Timbres, Le Collectionneur des Timbres Poste, Le Courier du Timbrophile and L'Echo de'la Timbrologie, all from Paris; The latter is the organ of the (Société Française de Timbrologie). The first named has only value as a catalogue, lacking any philatelic articles at all and only containing new issues of stamps, accompanying each issue with some catalog pages; very meticulous and from which I notice many superfluities typical of the aimless meticulousness with which most French collectors seem to collect stamps. (I refer to what was said in the chapter (Stamps to be collected) page 26).

As for other special works on stamps and philately in general, France has them in very small numbers and of lesser value. I exclude the publications of the Philatelic Society in Paris, which are of a private nature, I can say, and only accessible to its members, and the notable Report of the Philatelic Congress of Paris in 1880.

It is seen, then, that French philatelic literature is limited and leaves much to be discovered, although in past times it was the opposite; The reason for this presumably lies in the fact that Belgium presents French philatetists with quite valuable literature.

So let's move on to this one.

BELGIUM – Before going into more details I must warn you that the philatelic literature of Belgium all comes from the same center: from the editor of Le Timbre Poste, which most collectors know. The bulk of all Belgian French publications is the property of the intelligent philatelist Mr. Moens, while a small part of them is written by Dr. Legrand, Baron Arthur de Rothschild and two or three others, but all have been printed in Brussels, Mr. Moens being in charge of its printing and distribution.

Belgium has the legitimate pride of publishing to date the oldest of the philatelic newspapers that currently exists: (Le Timbre-Poste) which has existed since 1863 and is one of the best, although its content is generally limited to describing new issues. of stamps and the publication of special catalogs on various countries. In recent years, it has almost completely lacked that literature that instructs philatetists and that, with good material, provides them with pleasant hours that stimulate them ever more in their love for our science.

But what is most related to the literature I am dealing with are those numerous special works that Mr. Moens has published, among which his catalogue of stamps stands out - although it is too vague in terms of colors, varieties, etc. – and the special catalogues of each country, which it has been publishing for years and in which the philatelist can even find a copy of the official decrees referring to the issuance of stamps.

It must not be denied that Belgian literature is valuable, but it lacks philatelic works that deal with philately in general and that instruct the collector, both the young and the most competent. (Le Timbre-Poste) should be in charge of this due to its character as an old newspaper and its perhaps vast circulation. Special works have the disadvantage of not becoming as popular in a short time as a periodical publication does.

GERMANY – This country is where literature has achieved superiority today, both in journalism and in other literary-philatelic works.

Already in the infancy of German philatelic literature, it stood out for how useful the content of its newspapers was, above all, and it has managed to maintain this advantage over other philatelic periodicals to this day.

In fact, the tendency of the German philatelic newspapers proves to be more profitable and practical than in any other country, when compared with that of other newspapers. Most of the Germanic newspapers are filled with entertaining and scientific reading, which, while entertaining the philatelist, presents instructive and always varied material.

German philatetists strive through philatelic journalism to spread the love of our science ever more. In the editorial articles and in the countless ones that come from the pens of competent philatelists, one notices deep meditation, emanating from assiduous study and work, obtained in long practice of philatelic knowledge.

And keep in mind that philatelic literature had its beginning in Germany only in 1865, that is, when it had already existed in France, England and Belgium for a few years, so that in less time Germany has managed to gain superiority in this field.

As for their special works, the Germans have good catalogues and works on the history, purpose and benefit of philately; almost all works that honor their authors.

There are currently eight good German philatelic newspapers, including two from Austria and another from Switzerland. The best of all is published in Leipzig; It appears bi-weekly and gives the engravings of the new stamps in colors.

AUSTRIA has two newspapers, several catalogues and good special works on philately. The literature of this country has the same tendency as that of Germany, and in terms of its merit, it does not detract from the German literature in any way, except that it has fewer works, since only in 1872 did the first newspapers and a catalogue of stamps begin to be published, following in 1876 and 80 other newspapers that exist today. But these are enough for their success and tendency for the Austrian philatelists, who also have the advantage of being able to use German literature, whose language is also theirs.

SWISS. An effort was made in 1875 to lay the foundation for philatelic literature in the country, but since fans of our science were not numerous enough there, the first seven-issue newspaper that had been released to circulation ceased to be published.

In the year 1879, a newspaper appeared that still exists and that deserves the adjective of very good, for its chosen reading and for its very marked tendency in favor of philately and against forgeries, which makes war to the death without any consideration.

ITALY. The efforts to propagate literature here have been in vain, since the few newspapers that have been published in other years existed for a short time.

Special works, catalogues, etc. currently there is none; All the works belong to bygone eras, 1870 to 1874. On the whole, Italian literature has been of little importance.

IN ROMANIA there once existed a newspaper in Romanian and French.

The other European countries that we have not named separately, such as Denmark, Russia, Holland, etc., have done little to nothing regarding philatelic literature. One or another newspaper that they have given birth to has since died.

Holland, Sweden and Norway still have one newspaper each; The one in Holland has been around for five to six years now.

SPAIN does not have any body that represents its collectors, nor works on philately. Only in 1870 and 71 were two Spanish newspapers published, but they lived only a few months. The first was El Indicador de Sellos, a biweekly newspaper, publishing only one issue in Madrid, July 15, 1870, and the second was El Coleccionista de Sellos, also from Madrid and which appeared four times, February 15th and 28th and March 15th and 31st. from 1871. I have never had news of its contents.

In mid-1881, the famous Catalogue of the stamps of Spain and its colonies appeared, a finished and worthwhile work, its author being Fernandez Duro, head of the Post Office Bureau. The work consists of 250 pages, and was published by order of the Spanish Government; Thus, it is the first official philatelic work. This catalogue received a silver medal from the Société Française de Timbrologie, in Paris.

In 1882 I received from Barcelona an Album for Stamps, in Spanish, which caused me surprise and pleasure. Surprise, to see that this album had already existed since 1879 without having heard a word about it; and pleasure, considering that this album was further proof of the advances of our philately in Spain. The album I am talking about is in 8°, with 252 pages and also illustrated with 1242 stamp engravings, each issue showing its different types, which is extremely convenient for the collector. It has not appeared again in another edition. This first album is the first exclusively in the Spanish language and its content is excellent, although in the interior arrangement and placement of the countries there are slight errors and it has the small defect of the paper being very thin and printed on both sides; but as the first in Spanish, its author could not venture to make a deluxe edition and has done a lot to publish it. The increased expense demanded by this type of books and their engravings is familiar to me as a printer and I admire once again the courage of the author, Don Plácido Ramon de Torres, in giving birth to it, perhaps without the expectation of recovering the expenses.

We owe a thousand applauses and thanks to this collector and I would only like, if the business allows it, that he make a new edition later, on better paper, printed on one side and in a larger size.

We now take a leap into the new world and we know what is there regarding literature.

NORTH AMERICA and CANADA are not well represented by their philatelic works, of which there are many, especially in the United States of North America, but most of them are of very little or no value.

In this Republic, where everything is done on a large scale, they have also wanted to follow that example with philatelic literature, but the idea has been abandoned, since of the one hundred philatelic periodicals that have been published from 1862 to date, some of it lasted only a few months and many were conspicuous by their absence in the second issue. The reason for this is that even boys start publishing newspapers, and the consequence is (like father, like son). Today there will be about ten in circulation. Years before there were still very good newspapers, which it is felt had just been published, after circulating 6, 8 or more years, such as the American Journal of Philately which existed for 10 years, The Stamp Journal, 5 years.

Today about two or three deserve attention as good newspapers; The others that will be about seven are of very little importance and most of them can be considered as current prices of their owners.

North America has other ancient literary-philatelic works in small numbers, although in previous times it published some of merit.

Despite the unimportance of literature, there are in this great republic many good philatelic forces who, with regret it must be said, send their literary products abroad, to Belgium, France, etc., instead of concentrating them in their own country, through a publication that with such forces would acquire value and serve as a model for the philately of the republic; That is the reason why the best newspapers die in North America, even after fighting for so many years in favor of philately.

Despite what has been said, there is a tendency among some of the most passionate Yankee philatelists to do something more than mediocre for our science, something that is of great value for philately.

A notable fact in the history of the stamp collection is the Color Table projected for so long and which finally became a fact in the year 1884, having been published through the Philatelic Society of New York and about which I finally deal with in the chapter Miscellaneous.

OCEANIA – Even in this remote part of the world, philately has representatives who speak in its favor.

In fact, the year 1880 saw the appearance of two philatelic newspapers in the cities of Adelaide and Sydney, which, although modest in appearance, nevertheless had the laudable purpose of serving our science as much as possible, due to the trend in this regard.

From its content I have deduced that in those distant lands philately has many followers, since it is necessary for this to happen in order to maintain a newspaper; except in the case in which its author provides the means for this from his own pocket without regard to the cost.

I have already dealt extensively with philatelic literature, leaving only to note its state in our continent, that is, in Latin America, which I have thought prudent to postpone until the end of this chapter.

LATIN AMERICA cannot yet raise its voice regarding its literary works, since these amount only to the following ones, which appeared from 1882 onwards:

1. O Brasil Filatelico, monthly newspaper, in Portuguese, published in Sao Paulo, Brazil, consisting of 8 pages. It lasted two or three months.
2. Anunciador Filotélico, a 4-page sheet published monthly in Bogotá and which was mostly intended for stamp advertisements. No longer exists.
3. Anunciador, loose sheet, printed on one side only and contains only four to five advertisements; it doesn't exist anymore.
4. El Filotelista, which is the continuation of El Anunciador, from 1879, then purely a newspaper advertisement and elevated to a newspaper in 1880, but which was only a newspaper for seven months.

The newspaper O Brasil Filatelico reappeared in 1885, edited by another collector than the one who founded it in 1882. I have number 7 of February 1885 in sight and I don't know if this publication is still available, since I haven't received it for a long time.

5. El Filotélico. It is strange that in Santo Domingo, in February 1885, a newspaper under this title, organ of the Santo Domingo Philatelic Society, was published. I say that it is strange because there are perhaps a dozen collectors there and they cannot, nor those from the surrounding area, support a newspaper. At least I speak from experience and I have not been wrong, since number 9 of this publication is the last one I have seen, nor do I have news that it is still being published since I have not received it for a long time.

6. O Philatelista its number. 8, received in 1885, tells me that it must be the last issue published under that title, since I have not seen another issue since. It was published quarterly.

7. El Ecuador Filatélico, number 1, January 1886, is the only newspaper that I have a note of that appeared in Ecuador in that single issue. In 4 pages, counting the cover, it brought seven new issues and two insignificant articles.

8. La Revista Filatélica, Barranquilla. (Columbia), number 14, October 1888, second year, is another of the newspapers that lasted only until that date, since I never heard anything from it again, and no matter how much I asked its author for the issues published before the 14th, he did not send them to me. So, judging by this one, I will say that its content was limited to giving a few new issues and three pages of notices.

9. Boletín de la Sociedad Filatélica Mexicana. It has existed since April 1889 and non-members can also subscribe to it.

10. Boletín de la Sociedad Filatélica Nacional of Guanajuato (Mexico), existed for only a few months, because the Society had been merged into that of Mexico.

11. Guía del Coleccionista de sellos de Correos. A passionate collector for nearly twenty years, I founded in 1878, under the title above, a newspaper that, in the second year of its existence, promised to give good results, both in favor of the interests of philately, that in South America was then beginning to establish itself enough to even cover the expenses of publication and perhaps give a profit, although small, in compensation for the expenses and the work of writing it. But it didn't happen like that.

I maintained this newspaper until December 1884, and seeing that from year to year the number of subscribers did not increase and my time made it impossible for me to dedicate myself to its editing, I decided to abandon the publication that I managed with the greatest attention for seven years. Due particularly to this decision to abandon the protection of my subscribers, I published the following mortuary article with the last issue:

THE FAREWELL

Of the Guia del Coleccionista de Sellos de Correo

I

It is with deep regret that I have to head this article with such a sad title.

I feel truly sorry to have to leave this publication, to which I am linked by so many pleasant memories of times past; those times when I started with such flattering hopes the only newspaper in Spanish, that then existed for seven years, giving life and fruitful movement to philately in Latin America.

Over time I believed that over the years the publication would be accepted by the majority of collectors on this continent, and thus I would achieve a number of subscribers that would produce me some positive profit – to say the least – since in the first years I spent two or three times more than the subscriptions.

Apart from this, I formed the illusion that the main collectors would help me with articles for my newspaper, something that I requested on many occasions.

Finally, I assumed that through this publication, philately would develop enormously in the countries of Spanish America, leaving me with the pleasant satisfaction of having contributed with my efforts as a passionate collector to create a little order in the ranks of fans. offering you the fruit of my experience, commitment and work acquired in long years of practice and continuous and continuing contact in these matters.

II

My hopes were in vain to see my aspirations realized under the bases that I have just outlined, because the more years passed, the further away they became, and in the last few years there were so many subscribers that did not send me the insignificant amount of the subscription, that saw the possibility of even offsetting the net and limited expenses that were incurred in my own printing press disappearing.

Under such conditions, I believe that everyone will easily conceive that the decision taken to destroy the Guia does not emanate absolutely from a lack of enthusiasm or will.

I have had quite a dose of both during the seven years that I have kept at a loss a publication that was so dear to me, perhaps sacrificing more than a thousand pesos for it.

Proof of the pecuniary disinterest, of the love of philately and its cause in Latin America, of the true interest with which I served my subscribers, giving them an account of everything notable that was happening in the matter of stamps and finally sharing with them my ideas and experiences in the same thing, after all this, I repeat, it seems to me that I have given infinite proofs in the six hundred or more pages that comprise the volumes of the seven years that I have been publisher.

Finally, since my businesses in my printing and lithography workshops absorb completely twelve hours a day of continuous and heavy work, I do not have the time or the will to follow this publication punctually, at least under the unsatisfactory circumstances stated above.

If I even saw the expenses and part of my efforts and personal work compensated, I would gladly hire or pay an intelligent person to gather the necessary material for the publication, since printing is in my establishment a matter of two or three days for each issue.

Thus, given the above explanations, the Postal Stamp Collector's Guide bids farewell to his subscribers, not without declaring that he goes down to the grave with honor, after having taken up arms firmly, fought as a brave man and surrendered. only after having fought beyond what is required.

ENR. CONR. EBERHARDT

It may be that later, in a few years, when there are a greater number of fans in Latin America and Spain and if my occupations allows me, I will decide to continue said publication. At least I intend to carry it out again in Germany, where I plan to move in a year or two.

As for special works, the first that has been published in South America is the one that the reader now has in his hands.

Although South American philatelic literature is poor at the moment, this is only due to the little real addition that until now existed on our continent. In a few more years it may be that Spanish-American philatelic literature, going through all the efforts, disappointments, expenses, lessons and other adventures typical of beginners, will be reborn with new vigor and resemble European literature.

I have no illusions with this assertion, because knowing the state of philately in all the republics of America, I foresee a flattering future and a vast area to cultivate our literature.

The proof of this is that when I started publishing the Guia I thought I couldn't continue with it due to lack of readers, but the opposite happened, because my publication little by little woke up from their sleep a hundred collectors, who did not have an organ. that it did represent a point of support that would guide them along the philatelic path, rehabilitating their old hobby, strengthening it with the acquisition of constant and new material and obtaining new followers of philately.

Witnesses of the philatelic Advancement operated through my publication, during its life, in Spanish-American land, are first of all the numerous collectors who were then trained and ancient collectors who were resurrected, I can say, in the main republics; Secondly, the formation of 6 or 7 philatelic societies and finally the creation of new bodies for the interests of philatelists in Latin America.

However, there will be a period of paralysis for now, since I believe that the Spanish-language newspapers that appear from time to time in some republics will hardly be able to be maintained for long; Very soon they will feel the sad disappointment and the naked reality, that is, the little protection on the part of the fans in Latin America; both with respect to providing material for publication, as well as its maintenance through subscriptions.

For my part, I firmly declare that the opportune and apparent time has not yet arrived to maintain a publication in order, since there are few amateurs who can call themselves philatelists and give life, material and protection to a newspaper; It is not possible to wait for it and send it all at once; On the contrary, union is strength and the diversity of ideas developed frequently in a newspaper and written by different fans are of great interest and promote competition, thus resulting in the movement that drives the Development of an idea, of a thing, of a science.

For my part, I have done for seven years, with my Collector's Guide everything I could for the good of my subscribers.

CHAPTER IV

First Part

THE PHILATELISTS

Under this category, collectors and philatelists of all categories are classified in detail, although between philatelists in the true sense of the word and collectors there is a great distance, as I will try to show.

I will start with the collectors, whose category is subdivided into two:

- a) In to young collectors, that is, schoolchildren and
- b) In to older collectors who are only lovers of the hobby or out of the desire to possess as soon as possible a complete collection of stamps, without linking to them the studies that are of the nature of philately.

Although it is true that the interest in collecting stamps is generally born in youth at school, with some retaining this hobby until their mature and advanced age, it is nevertheless shocking to see the way in which some of the children form their collections. Without any plan or order, and sometimes in a notebook whose pages have been written by themselves, they accumulate stamps, either by country or one after another. And what stamps they are sometimes! With pieces of rubbish, dirty and in many cases impossible to see which country they belong to....!

The owner of such a collection clearly demonstrates that he himself is opposed to cleanliness, and that he has no great attachment or sense of order and good taste.

On the other hand, it will be observed that there are children who, with their small savings, provide themselves with a blank book or a printed album, in which they place the stamps by country, by value, by issues and with a certain symmetry and cleanliness, taking care of the arrangement of their collections whenever they are unoccupied.

These children take advantage of the collection, since their constant love for it imprints in them habits of perseverance, love of order, cleanliness, etc., which are naturally positive benefits, emanating from their assiduous dedication to stamps.

To arrange the stamps in his album in the best possible way, the child collector of the category that I have just indicated, sometimes consults his older colleagues, his parents and even his teachers – if they are not anti-philatelists – about this or that stamp whose origin they do not know or whose inscriptions they cannot understand with their limited knowledge.

In the study of geography, a teacher will notice that this child collector retains more easily than others the names of the countries and their position: or at least he has more attachment, or vocation I will say, to the study of geography, because by dint of continually and carefully contemplating the stamps in his album, he easily retains, without knowing how, the names of the countries. From this comes an advantage, which, with the help of his favorite passion, stamps, he has acquired almost through play and makes the study of geography less difficult, arid and tiring in itself, especially for children.

On the other hand, is it not much more pleasant for parents to see their children preferably occupied in the formation of their stamp collections, which has nothing harmful, instead of seeing them in other occupations or useless games that sometimes turn out to be even harmful for the child as well as for the parents?

And despite all this, there are school teachers who, with true fury, prohibit their disciples from any occupation with stamps, some going so far as to seize or destroy the collection of the innocent collector, who by dint of who knows what deprivations he has managed to give his album a small value that constitutes its main joy.

Such a procedure, apart from being an attack on property, is highly despicable. With it, the passion for the collection is always increased, since it is known that what is sometimes pursued with violence, acquires new strength and development through the collection....!

This is a very natural logic that we often observe in practice.

It is true, on the other hand, that the hobby even becomes a mania among some children and it also turns out that they tend to neglect their study tasks.

But who but the teachers themselves or the parents can avoid this defect?

It is up to them to stimulate the love of stamps, dictating measures leading to limiting it only to hours that are not essential to their studies: teachers at school and parents at home. Nothing is simpler than this, and if the matter is handled wisely, good results will not fail to occur.

Well, not only does the child neglect his chores because he occupies himself too much with stamps; No, if we come to this, I will simply say that anything else: a favorite game, bad habits, sweets, laziness, make the child neglect his studies. But, as I just said, it is the parents or the teacher who are in charge of limiting the child's activities.

Encouraging study in children through means that are accessible and easy for them and that do not compromise their moral or physical appearance in any way is the duty of every teacher.

Why, then, prohibit or be against stamp collecting, carried out by children who have chosen it as their favorite entertainment? If this is done, many other occupations and games peculiar to children must be prohibited, which sometimes, far from being instructive, such as collecting stamps, in some cases turn out to be even harmful.

The couple's law is not hard!

Everything has its limit and every deviation has its remedy.

The child's limited knowledge does not allow him to understand the value that studying has for him, and children's distractions come to his aid, exerting a very favorable reaction on his spirit, gradually stimulating and almost playing with love and his love for studying.

I have had the opportunity to observe how powerfully the collection of stamps influences the application of children, for example when the father keeps the album, allowing the son to use it only in his free hours, or when he has completed this or that work, or promising to give him a number of stamps if he applies himself.

It is worth seeing in these cases the enthusiasm with which the child collector works, to later be able to occupy himself for a few hours with his album and include the new stamps that he would have obtained to win the offered prize.

It is more or less in the sense indicated that I understand that children must be allowed to collect.

But if they accumulate stamps without a plan, or order, or any cleanliness and they take their hobby to the point of turning it into a mania, at the mercy of their schoolmates, then the prohibition or reprimand may take effect, since the child who, after a few examples, does not accept ways of cleanliness and good order even in his hobbies, he can hardly advance in his school tasks.

After what has been said, I do not intend to make the hobby of collecting stamps mandatory for children; by no means; I am only talking about the children who are already dedicated to it, because there is nothing written about tastes and to be a collector you need certain skills that are peculiar to one's character: each child has his or her favorite entertainment.

However, I am of the opinion that no child under 10 years of age should begin to dedicate themselves to collecting, since after this age is when certain mental faculties develop in the child that make them instinctively account for their actions, showing them in their mind. the scope they can have with this or that occupation.

I have focused extensively on children's collectors for several reasons, which are:

1. For giving my opinion on this to the anti-philatelists, that is, enemies of philately, with the hope that it will be taken into account in its fair value;

2. Because children do not have the gift or the permission to be able to explain the reason why they dedicate themselves to the collection, when they are given hints or reprimands regarding it;
 3. Because it is in childhood where the foundations of philately are laid, since many retain the hobby until their advanced age, with few beginning to dedicate themselves to collecting in mature age.
-

I will move on to the Second category of collectors, the mature ones.

This category can be said to form the vast majority of stamp collecting fans.

Collectors are all those who dedicate themselves to it, with the purpose of passing the time, or with the purpose of completing their collection as soon as possible, either to obtain pecuniary benefit or to have the pleasure of possessing it completely, without worrying in the least about the object of philately, which is the serious study of geography and history, with the details attached to these sciences; These annexes are the knowledge of human races, the state of culture of the main countries, their constitution, the currencies that circulate in them and other things.

These studies, from which others can be derived, and the dedication to becoming educated in philatelic literature, are what give philately the nature of a science. Therefore, anyone who does not link these studies to the collection cannot be called a philatelist; He is simply a collector.

What a complication and what an enormous job, philatelic science is! Collectors will exclaim.

And they are right, because to be a philatelist it is necessary that, along with the constant acquisition of stamps, one deals with what I have just indicated and most of it.

Later, in the part regarding philatelists, I will be more explicit about this.

He who only dedicates himself to collecting for a pure hobby, or with the purpose of obtaining some lucrative benefit, wastes his time uselessly and in the end will feel this and is perhaps disappointed when, by wanting to get rid of his collection in a hasty manner (as It always happens), in exchange for some sum of money or some other object, he is dissatisfied with the sale or exchange and maintains that the collection of stamps does not give any pecuniary benefit.

It is also completely neglected or abandoned by those who, due to lack of resources, relations or communications to make exchanges, are discouraged from following it.

As will be understood, such abandonment or way of collecting does not exert a beneficial influence on the collector's mind; But if you deal with it a little more scientifically, over time you will not fail to feel a profitable result, emanating from your dedication to philately, or rather to the simple collection of stamps, since I am talking about collectors.

It is a fact that many collectors who for some reason have abandoned their hobby of stamps, after some time retrace their steps and begin their ancient passion almost with more ardour.

I will now give some details of how one can take intellectual advantage of dedication to stamps, without contradicting the recreational and pleasurable feeling that it brings to the hobbyist.

My readers already know what I demand of a philatelist in the true sense of the word, and they have seen that I do not ask for little; However, you can be a collector with (aspirations to be a philatelist).

It will be understood that the studies and consequent knowledge that philatelic science demands cannot be acquired at once: actually they are reached gradually if the collector takes care of the collection as he should.

1. The collector will begin by first arranging his album under some regime of symmetry, order and cleanliness, which he has chosen as a rule or principle. To do this, use a bound book with blank pages if you collect color varieties, or a printed album if the number of stamps you have is less than 4,000. The stamps must be removed from the gum and paper on their backing, either by washing them or not, and be adhered to the album only in one or the two upper corners, giving preference to starch paste instead of gum to stick them. It almost always happens that you have to change one stamp for another or transfer the entire collection to a new book and then you will notice the advantage of sticking the stamps as I said: in one corner or in two.

2. Try to include in the album the stamps that are in the best condition and with the least possible signs of abuse; Collect the cards, envelopes and postal wrappers only in their entirety, keeping them in the meantime in large envelopes or in a purpose-built folder, with divisions, and observe in the acquisition of all this what I have said in the Second Part (the categories of stamps). (page 26)

3. Once this is done, the other philatelic occupations come.

The collector should try to acquire a good catalogue of stamps in the language that is most common to him; In case you have a printed album, with the respective cataloguing, a catalogue is almost unnecessary, but it is always good to have one.

What is essential for the collector is a good philatelic newspaper that keeps him up to date with new issues and instructs him in everything related to philately. In this sense I recommend what was said under literature.

4. Special works on philately, on the stamps of a country, on forgeries and other matters, also help a lot to make the collection of stamps more entertaining and instructive; There are very good ones in several languages, and since literature is of great value for the purpose of philately, I will mention in this particular work everything that is necessary for both the collector and the philatelist.

To acquire philatelic works, it is enough to go to a collector in the respective country, being able to pay their value in used or clean stamps, as appropriate.

5. The collector will also do well to join as a member of some Philatelic Society, since these, through their works and publications, emanating from the diversity of ideas amongst their members, contribute not a little to increasing the philatelic knowledge necessary to the collector.

I also recommend meeting collectors from time to time, or on certain days; At which meeting they will discuss stamps in general, each one bringing his or her collection or a certain series of stamps, to exchange ideas among themselves regarding certain data or other knowledge that was unknown or to exchange and sell stamps.

A circle like this contributes to recreating the fans and in these modest meetings held for a long time, whilst offering moments of pleasant chat and reciprocity of ideas, they are very useful to gradually acquire philatelic knowledge that is not inconsiderable.

What I do advise is that, in the enthusiasm that usually takes over the attendees, when they see how useful a meeting like this is in the long run, they do not allow themselves to be influenced by whoever wants to suddenly form a Philatelic Society, writing statutes, proclaiming to all four winds the great news, to shortly after play the role of Don Quixote; Then comes the bad impression that later causes mockery or more or less true criticism to ruin a meeting that could have borne very profitable results.

From the simple meeting, if it is seen that attendance increases or at least does not decrease, a philatelic (club or circle) can be born, forming certain bases or resources for its installation and its purposes, but do not forget, that converting an Association like this into a philatelic society, in the true sense of the word that is given to it today, is a long way.

Meetings like this, transformed into circles, subject in their procedures to certain regulations, in the long run will be the basis of true societies, yes. Collectors will do well to meditate carefully on these slight observations, which each person can complete according to circumstances.

6. Adamas must constantly be busy comparing the seals with each other; the colors, types of paper, perforation, etc., the particularities of one issue with respect to another, in short, a constant study will be made of the types of stamps and the way they are manufactured, whether with lithographs, typography, etc.

This means that the collector, after a few years, knows at once how to distinguish to which issue this or that stamp belongs to which reference is sometimes made and what is more, this assiduous occupation with the stamps makes him acquire the instinct, I will say, of knowing a fake almost the moment it is presented to you.

7. Apart from all this, you have to take care of the geography of this or that country from time to time; but not by learning by heart their smallest details, such as their small cities and other details, but by acquiring knowledge of their history, the language spoken in them, the territorial division, the coins, the state of culture, that is, knowledge of the world.

8. These are the bases that must serve those who are dedicated to collecting stamps, to prepare for the studies of the philatelist.

As you can see, the latter can be achieved through a preparatory course, if I can express myself, in the manner indicated, in the midst of all the occupations of life, I mean, without neglecting these in order to give preference to the former.

Such a preparatory course can last for years depending on the free time that each one can dedicate to it, and in general it exists forever, but it gives the dedicated collector a certain satisfaction regarding the way in which he has spent his time with his favorite passion, and if your memory goes back a few years and lets pass through your mind such a habit, the superficial knowledge of geography, history, the arts or others all acquired because of your constant dedication to stamps, you will not fail to be satisfied with yourself and remember with pleasure the past....!

You see that, dear colleagues, that even being a collector one profits from philately; Do not let your spirits be depressed because from time to time I demand a lot from those who dedicate themselves to our science.

I explain everything related to the collector. Gradually they increase their general knowledge, until after many years of constant occupation with the collection of stamps and the aforementioned studies, they become fit for the demands of what a philatelist should be.

SECOND PART

The collector deals in a somewhat superficial manner with the studies belonging to the stamp collection. The opposite happens with the philatelist, since his duty is to dedicate himself to the truly detailed study of the branches that I have indicated on another occasion, that is, in a scientific way.

It is up to you to study geography in all its aspects, including the constitution of the countries, their history, their state of civilization, commerce, industry, and others.

These serious studies are what give philately the character of science and are the basis of it, its entire being; Therefore, dedication to it should not be considered a simple hobby or pure passion.

With these studies, the philatelist therefore has enough material to spend his free time on for many years.

How to do it is a matter that each person can judge for himself, since a philatelist will not lack the means to do so, especially in our time when he has at his disposal excellent works on geography and history in general or in particular for each country, which also exist in all languages.

If the collector is in charge of reading only one or two philatelic periodicals and one or another work on philately, the philatelist must own several newspapers and all the works that are published on philately, - it is understood that only those whose language he understands.

In addition to always being up to date with what is happening in the philatelic world, these works and the various newspapers, due to the diversity of ideas, make the dry studies of geography and history that the philatelist must undertake more enjoyable.

What has been said about these studies is certainly applicable only to those who lack them, or who possess this knowledge imperfectly.

Along with these studies, the philatelist must always attend to the good conservation and increase of his collection, a beloved object and the fruit of long years of constant occupation, acquired perhaps at the expense of who knows what sacrifices and deprivations...

You will observe more or less the same rules in this as those I outlined for collectors.

Taking care, as I have said, of studies and dedication to his collection, the philatelist attracts other occupations, such as the acquisition of some knowledge of paper manufacturing, printing classes, chemistry, and the influence exerted by inks, the humidity or heat on the stamps, and a thousand particularities that the philatelist acquires in itself as positive knowledge necessary for philately.

There are many philatelists in the true sense of the word today, but too few compared to the millions of collectors there are.

The most eminent philatelists reside in Europe. In North America there are also some and in Latin America I only know one or another.

This is because it has only been a very short time since collectors on our continent have been scientifically dedicated to philately.

One of the most vehement aspirations of a true philatelist (I classify it as an imperative need) is a permanent album, that is, one in which once the stamps have been arranged, there is no need to ever transfer them to a new album.

This is a very important matter, because as is known, there is no printed and bound album that in the long run is not completely full and that is not then inadequate to continue placing in it the new stamps that are continually issued.

Apart from this, cards, envelopes and entire postal scrapers cannot have a place in an album such as those that are sold, in fact.

To overcome all the inconveniences that a bound album presents, there is no other means than the permanent album, which is simply made up of loose cardboard, on which the stamps, etc., are placed, and a purpose-built cabinet or shelf.

Its arrangement requires a lot of work and a little good taste and skill are needed for its formation; Apart from this, the cost demanded is somewhat high.

But since a collection of 5 to 6,000 stamps has a high value, it is assumed that the philatelist who possesses it is a person of resources, or at least can invest 50 to 100 pesos in a permanent album.

Furthermore, this takes away the work that you will necessarily have from time to time, of transferring the stamps from one album to another, to the detriment of the stamps, which suffer from so much change.

I am therefore going to present the plan for the formation of a permanent album according to my ideas.

First of all, it should be said that you should not proceed with the formation of this, unless you have a collection of about 5,000 stamps, cards, stamps and bands, because only then can the arrangement be done correctly, especially for the entire.

Let's go to

Permanent Album

You need 300 to 350 sheets of smooth, good-quality cardboard, of a light color, measuring 50 centimeters high by 40 wide, more or less, to accommodate the largest envelopes available.

A decorative border will be printed on these cardboards that forms a square around them; This in a printing company that does good work.

The stamps must be free of paper and gum on their backs. When separating the stamps from the album, wet only the back of them with fresh water, making sure to leave them like that and on blotting paper for a few minutes so that you can easily remove the paper from the back; The face of the stamp should not be wet, because there are some that, due to the delicate nature of their colors, would lose a large part of them when washed. In addition, completely wetting them, as is usually done, some stamps lose their relief, and the copper and steel engravings lose the brilliance of the impression. As aniline inks are usually used for rendering stamps unusable again, it happens that with complete washing the ink dissolves and stains the stamp.

There are other stamps such as those of Russia, Kashmir, Germany from 1880 to '89 and others, which when wet become useless because the entire impression is erased.

Stamps printed in relief, such as most of those from Portugal, Peru 1868/71 and several others, should also not be wet, because the relief disappears.

The stamps do not have to be placed directly on the cardboard, but first they are glued in the two upper corners with a little starch paste on a sheet of gray paper that is a little larger than the stamp, and to give it a more prominent appearance it must have a printed square, made by hand if you like; (see figure no. 1) the stamp arranged in this way immediately adheres to the cardboard, sticking the small square with a little paste only in the corners. To remove a stamp due to having to replace it with another one or for another reason, remove it with the entire square, using a pen knife.

The use of gum arabic or glue should be banned because the former is too liquid and requires much more time than paste to stick well, while the glue is a very dark color, has a bad smell and is uncomfortable to use. Gum and glue often attack the color and evenness of the paper of the stamps. The paste should always be fresh, no more than 8 to 10 days. Half a cup at a time is enough.

As there are not many sizes of stamps and to simplify the operation of placing them on the gray sheets, these can be ordered at a printing press, printed and cut very accurately; If they do not commit to ensuring that once cut, the white between the cut and the printed square comes out on all sides, dots or stripes can be printed with these squares, which serve as a guide for the scissors to cut them by hand. – For a better explanation I show the design of these little squares (fig. no. 1) with those stripes and in the most common natural sizes that are needed. There is a need for other sizes, but they are very few and can be done by hand, with thick Indian ink, which is lighter and does not erase as easily as writing.

The different issues must be separated by a gap left on the cardboard, or ensuring that each issue begins, if possible, on a new line and always in the middle of the width of the sheet, except in cases where an emission has very few values.

Use compass and ruler in any case.

The collector should do everything possible to collect only stamps that are in the best state of cleanliness, and not incorporate defective, overly postmarked or torn specimens into the album. There is nothing more shocking in a collection than stamps with missing corners, very blurred or dirty. Very rare and somewhat defective stamps can be patched and repaired by painting what is missing with paint of the same color as the stamp, to hide the lack.

I recommend following the alphabetical order in the arrangement of the countries, and each of the five parts of the world separately, starting with the countries that no longer issue stamps, since of these the stamps of 2 or more countries can be placed immediately on the same cardboard, since there will be no need to add new issues.

Stamps that are in very poor condition should be kept separately, to be replaced with good ones once they are obtained.

The cartons must bear the name of the country of the stamps they contain; These names can be made in pen if the collector is able to make an elegant letter that does not detract from the whole; If not, it will do well to have them printed as I will indicate later.

You can even add national coats of arms to the cards, which are easy to obtain. In any case, it is more acceptable to have completely printed cardboard according to fig. number 4.

The envelopes, postcards and bands are arranged differently and separately from the stamps, but using cardboard identical to that of the stamps. To begin the arrangement of envelopes, cards and bands, it is necessary to have a regular collection of these, which should not be less than 400 to 500 copies.

Let's explain how to arrange the envelopes.

It is calculated first, placing the envelopes on top of each other in a horizontal position, and leaving only the seal visible, which is the space they together occupy; (If you do not have all the envelopes belonging to an issue, it is easy to review a catalog and find their description to know their number.)

Next, a sheet of thick paper is cut a hair larger than the space required, that is, the space occupied by the envelopes, and the most valuable one is placed first on the aforementioned paper; Then this envelope is secured with a silk ribbon that holds it in a vertical position, making a cut in the paper and gluing the ends of said ribbon to its backing.

Once this is done, take another silk ribbon of the length that exists between the first and the left edge of the envelope, bending the ribbon a little in this part so that it can be glued to the thick paper; Next, the right end of this tape is glued under the other vertical one, while the left, folded part adheres to the paper.

In this way, the rest of the envelopes continue until the complete series is placed. The left corners of the paper are covered with a wider tape, which forms a triangle and which serves to hold the envelope that is above all of them.

For greater information see the fig. No. 2 of our engraving, part in skeleton and part with the first envelope of a series, the one that should go below; The second envelope would fall on tape E and cover it, the third on D, the fourth on C, the fifth on B and the last goes under the tape. To and from the left corners.

Once this is finished, a sheet of paper is arranged, the same one that has been used for the stamps, and it is cut to a size a little larger than the entire device, adding a box of lines around it as has been done with the stamps and the whole thing is adhered to the cardboard sheet.

Such a complete device can be seen in figure no. 3.

The silk ribbons can be white or a color of the collector's choice; We recommend that they be light in color, less than a centimeter wide and as thin as possible. Instead of ribbons, very firm thread paper can be used.

Conditioned with symmetry and cleanliness, this device creates a brilliant effect to the eye and protects the envelopes in any case, also offering the advantage of being able to take them out whenever you want, to see the inscriptions on the back or for another object, which cannot be done due to the system of gluing them firmly as many do.

It is necessary to calculate, as far as possible, that a complete series of envelopes occupies a single row on the cardboard; If this is not possible, they are arranged in two or more rows, but always so that the device is placed in the middle of the cardboard sheet. If the issue consists of only 1 or 2 envelopes, cards or strips, two such devices will be placed in a line, to save space. When envelopes of different sizes are found in an issue, the device is adjusted to the size of the largest envelope.

Postcards, newspaper wrappers and other forms fit exactly the same as envelopes and as explained above. When there is only one envelope, card or band in an issue, they are arranged as follows:

Take a sheet of paper of the same size as the respective form and then cover the four corners of the paper with a tape or paper that forms a small triangle and that serves to hold the envelope, etc., that you want to place; The ribbons or paper corners are glued to the back of the sheet of paper, and this in turn is adhered to another sheet that is a little larger and is made of the same gray paper used for the stamps; The sheet of gray paper must have a double black line around it, just as was done with the other envelopes. Once the device is completed, they are glued at their corners with paste on the cardboard sheet and then the card, strip or envelope is placed on it. In figure no. 4 this will look better.

All cartons must be covered with sheets of thick, dark-colored paper, glued to the left and to the back of the heel that holds the cartons, as I will explain later, so that the continuous rubbing of one carton against the other does not damage the carton's contents. Care will be taken to always handle the cartons carefully. It is also advisable to paint the cut of the cardboard with sealing wax or dark blue, so that it does not get dirty with continuous use; This can be done in any bindery or in the printing house where the boards are printed.

It is true that all this is somewhat laborious and requires a lot of time to arrange it properly and give the whole a good appearance, but on the other hand, it must be considered that the conditioning of the collection according to this system is only done once and for all, and never will the collector be forced to change the stamps on the cardboard, as will always happen with printed albums, since the increasing number of new issues of stamps will never find enough space in a bound book to collect them properly. This system also has the advantage of always being able to add new cards for the stamps that are issued successively; The stamps and other forms position can be changed if by mistake they have been placed incorrectly, and entire cartons can also be replaced with others, if the case requires it.

If all the stamps of new issues are not obtained at once, they will be placed in their respective place after calculating with a compass and ruler the place that must be left free for the missing ones.

The look of the set is beautiful and even non-collectors will find pleasure in taking a look at the collection. Figure no. 4 gives an idea of the explained system.

I forgot to warn that on the cardboard sheets no other note should be made than the name of the country and the date of issue of each series and even this can be omitted if the collector's handwriting is not pretty.

The names of the countries can be printed, in a list, on sheets of thin paper, enclosed in a small square, the lengths and types being able to be different from each other, to make it easier for the printer to print several names at the same time in a sheet of paper, more or less like this:

❧ HELIGOLAND ❧

❧ EUROPA ❧

A good catalogue of stamps will serve as a guide for the collector in the arrangement of values, issues, sizes, etc.

As we have already said before, you need 300 to 350 sheets of cardboard, more or less, to stick all the stamps, cards, envelopes and envelopes; But for future issues, about 50 more sheets must be saved, printed like the others and ordered at the same time.

Every year or every 6 months or so, the new items issued can be placed, and new sheets of cardboard taken, if necessary, placing them in their respective place.

The cards should not be numbered, since new ones always have to be added and the cumeration would be interrupted. If numbered, the added sheets would lead to a, b, c.

Let's now move on to the binding system:

An intelligent binder will be ordered to make 7 volumes, or portfolios; spine of good flexible leather (without cardboard); leather corners and thick cardboard covers covered in fabric; the spine will have six holes with eyelets; the interior height of the spine is 4 centimeters; This would cover the volume of 50 to 60 cartons, leaving one volume left over for reserve, since over the years the number of cartons will increase due to new issues.

The size of the covers of these portfolios must be one centimeter larger, on all sides, than the cardboard sheets.

In each two holes they will have a firm rubber strap or cord that is not too elastic, to firmly tie the cardboard whose holes will be passed through them. The mooring will remain behind.

The cardboard sheets will have on the left a strip or heel of the same cardboard as the sheets, joined by the backing very cleanly and very well glued with a strip of thread as thin as possible and from centimeter to wider, taking care of the binder that the sheet and the heel are a hair's length from each other so that they "open well".

Behind this check will be glued the sheet of thick, dark paper that covers the entire cardboard to protect the stamps.

The stubs will have the holes in exactly the same position as those on the spine of the portfolio.

As all of this is not easy for a collector to do, I recommend that the binder take note of everything said regarding the binding, and it is advisable to order its preparation from the same printing company that prints the cardboard, if it has a competent binder.

The volumes will be numbered 1 to 7 on the spine, and on the cover or spine you can add the titles or names that the owner wishes.

To store the volumes, a shelf or some kind of closet is convenient; This one contains eight divisions, to place the volumes in them, calculating that each division is 6 to 7 centimeters high.

The divisions should be a little larger in width and length than the volumes, so that they can be removed easily. It is not advisable to cover the volumes, since the rubbing of the lower edges wears out cardboard and covers at the bottom.

The appearance of such a closet would be more or less like the drawing I presented with number. 5 and number 6 shows a more modest cupboard, such as to be placed on the table; and even simpler it could be done in the same way, and without doors, although in the case of a good collection, it is safer to keep it under lock and key.

The volume and excess cardboard will be kept in division 7a, and in drawer no. 8 brushes, duplicate stamp paper, scissors, magnifying glass and other small items necessary to the collector.

The exterior dimensions of the cabinet depend on the thickness of the wood used and its cost varies between 10 to 50 pesos and more, depending on the demands and financial status of the collector. A collection arranged according to the indicated plan is truly impressive and to the eyes of the layman in the matter presents a pleasant recreation; Nor would I qualify our science in the adverse way that many do.

Anyone who does not have the means to provide such an album can simplify it on the same basis, using more economical materials. – You can also arrange a large white book, specifically ordered to be made, with an endpaper printed on each sheet, arranging the stamps only on it, in the usual way, leaving behind each sheet a strip about 2 centimeters wide to stick new sheets later, taking care to ask the printer for about 50 loose and printed. – Another book would be necessary for the cards, envelopes and strips, in case they were collected whole, and these would be placed on top of each other by gluing them to the left on the pages of the book, or arranging them as I explained above. Also in this book it would be necessary to have a strip or heel behind each sheet to stick supplements.

Naturally, in both books the divisions, inscriptions, etc., would be done by hand.

If you prefer a printed album, send it to a binder to place strips behind each one or two sheets on which to glue new sheets.

The invention of the postage stamp

Until recently, Rowland Hill was considered the legitimate inventor of the postage stamp, but lately doubts have been raised in this regard, and, at the time of the third installment of the present work being in press, when the Second was concluded, we read several English newspapers that the real inventor was:

JAMES CHALMERS

Here are some notes that shed light on the matter.

When in 1839, in the British Parliament, the projected reform of the penny post system was debated, which consisted particularly of lowering the cost of the simple letter, throughout the kingdom, to one penny, without distinction of distance, when discussing such an important and transcendental project, the basis of our current postal institution, that is, low postage, one of the members, Mr. Wallace, mentioned the stamp, as the most effective means of franking letters.

This gentleman had already received in 1837 from the inventor of the stamp, James Chalmers, a communication in which he stated his idea of issuing a stamp that would be affixed to letters for postage, thus avoiding the public's inconvenience of going or sending it to the Post Office to pay the shipping. He indicated at the same time that said stamps could be printed on strips of paper or on sheets, gummed, and posted in Post Offices, bookstores and similar businesses; that to avoid their use twice, the mail had to render them unusable with a stamp, also showing a seal thus rendering it unusable, with the inscription "Dundee, 16th February 1838".

Apart from this, he gave the drawing of several stamps, showing, exactly how he made them.

Rowland Hill, who in those circumstances formed the head of the Commission for the implementation of the (low postage) system and radical and new regulation of the entire postal institution of that time, had previously received from Chalmers himself the instruction to create a stamp for sticking on the letters, but since he was the author of another idea, that of envelopes with a printed stamp, (the so famous and rare Mulready ones) and, proud of the postal reform that he proposed, he did not attend to that magnificent idea, because he wanted that every effort must be made to introduce his own, that of the envelopes, because otherwise, he well thought, someone else would have been showered with the honors and prizes that corresponded to such an important invention.

It cannot be denied that Rowland Hill has his very notable merits in postal reform, as he worked hard and lucidly, with the penetration of magnificent ideas and through his famous pamphlets. "The penny postage system" put into practice the most important reform that exists for the commercial and social life of all countries in the universe, that is, the modern postal institution, embodied with such deep roots in the needs of the people.

That reform of 1840, which Rowland Hill carried out with perseverance and energy, although born or insinuated in part by other people, but recast as one by Hill, is the basis of our current postal institution; Little by little new ideas were born from it, perfecting themselves to such a point and forming a spring of our current life, without which existence our century of advances could not be conceived....!

As I have said, much honor belongs to Hill for this reform, but on the other hand it was unjustifiable for a man like him, who should have had high views, to remain silent about the inventor of the stamp, James Chalmers, whose portrait we give.

He was a printer by profession, a native of Dundee, where as early as 1835 he had received popular expressions of gratitude for several changes introduced in the means of postal communication, shortening the time of the itinerary.

But on the other hand the main merit consists of being the true inventor of the postage stamp, which is duly proven by numerous original letters that refer to the fact and by the personal statements of several people who were his friends, and even more so. by workers who were at his service and who helped him in the preparation of the samples he prepared to present to parliament in 1839.

At the beginning of 1840, Rowland Hill, who became convinced of the lack of acceptance in practice of his stamped envelopes, which were sheets of paper folded into an envelope but not gummed, introduced the issue of the first stamp, invented by Chalmers.

Then, on January 18, 1840, he went to Hill, demanding the right of invention, but the powerful Hill sent him away with the answer that he had had such an idea a long time before, which contradicted himself, since on the 3rd March 1838, he acknowledged receipt from Chalmers of the circular in which he explained to Hill his idea for the stamp.

Today, the undeniable fact that Chalmers was the inventor is fully proven, with reliable documents, and his son, Patrick Chalmers, has contributed to highlighting the veracity of the event, through well-written pamphlets that he has published on the subject. years ago now.

On the other hand, Hill's son and admirers do not oppose Patrick Chalmers' publications but show a profound silence.

However, Pearson Hill, son of Sir Rowland, has made available to the authors of the colossal works (Encyclopaedia Britannica) and (Dictionary of National Biography) all the authentic material that is necessary to know the life and deeds of Hill.

Both works, which are undeniable authorities, have decided to recognize James Chalmers as the inventor of stamps.

The truth always wins, sooner or later!

The interesting character, hero of such an idea, died in 1853.

CHAPTER FIVE

Philatelic Societies

One of the advantages that largely helps the development of philately in general is philatelic societies.

The purely scientific object and therefore unrelated to any pecuniary benefit for which they are intended; the diversity of ideas regarding the works in favor of philately, which results from the circumstance of several collectors meeting to discuss these works; the accumulation of funds that is gradually formed with the increase in the number of members; In short, the importance that a Society always acquires directed by philatelists of merit and the more or less influence that usually appears, are all factors that, brought together for a single purpose, operate for the benefit of philatelic science, making it always more respectable.

The first society in our memory was established in England, in the city of Bridlington, in 1865, but it is not known why it had a short existence, and its short existence is presumed to be due to the lack of true philatelists, since at that time there were not the necessary number.

Translator's Note:

The information that follows is very general and is too well-known to bother translating.

The whole book started off well as I am interested in the History of Philately. However, I was misled by the title, but should have known better. Many languages use the word History when the author really means Story as it turned out in this case. For the record, I will translate only the chapter headings from here-on.

Chapter Six	Forgeries	p.85
	I. Typography	p.88
	II. Lithography	p.91
	III. Siderography or Steel Engraving	p.93
	2. Partial falsification of stamps	p.98
	Facsimiles	p.123
Chapter VI	Miscellany	p.124
	Essays	p.124

Philatelic Congress	p.125
The exchange of stamps	p.126
Directions for obtaining stamps	p.128
Ways to send stamps by mail	p.128
The inventor of the perforation of stamps	p.130
Stamp auction	p.131
Invention of the Post Card	p.132
Philately in South America
I.	p.133
II.	p.134
III.	p.135

Valparaiso, 14th August 1878

Enr. Conr. Eberhardt

Tables of Colours	p.146
A
	p.160
Brief Considerations on Philately in Spain	p.164
Epilogue	p.168

I have spoken

Valparaiso, November 1890

E. C. Eberhardt

Index	p.[171]
-------	---------

END

Dr. Phil. Alfred Moschkau

About the History of Philately: Collected Contributions to the History of Postage Stamps and Postage Stamp Collecting

[Zur Geschichte der Philatelie: Gesammelte Beiträge zur Geschichte der Briefmarken und der Briefmarkenkunde]

Philatelistische Bibliothek Volume IV, Louis Senf, Leipzig, Germany 1879, i + pp.1-15

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

October 2022

ABOUT THE HISTORY OF PHILATELY:
COLLECTED CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE HISTORY OF
POSTAGE STAMPS AND POSTAGE STAMP COLLECTING

FOREWORD

I have published many an extensive contribution to the “History of Stamps and Stamp Collecting” in German journals over the past decade, and many of these have been deemed worthy of translation into foreign languages. But they are now here, now there, randomly scattered, and some of the journals in question are no longer available for sale, even in antiquarian shops.

Now the fact that many of these essays are certainly of lasting value; Furthermore, the fact that I was often admonished by a friend to withhold these works from oblivion made me dare to put the most interesting ones together and send them out into the world as the fourth volume of my philatelic library.

For every collector, whether old or young, this little work will contain material worth reading, and even the owners of the papers from which the various articles were taken should not be able to do without it, for the reason that it is all cumbersome to look up other than in this handy form. Finally, it should also be mentioned that most of the works were reviewed, improved and completed before they were reprinted.

In many respects, this little work forms a useful commentary on my “History of Stamps and Philately”, which was published last year in its third edition, and if it is lucky enough to find such an approving, honorable reception as this last one, this could only encourage me in the resolution: without seeing right or left, to persevere faithfully in the further development of our beautiful science, which is so entertaining.

With philatelic greetings

Oybin, New Year 1879.

The author.

Mme. de Longueville

The inventor of the postage stamp.

While authentic documents prove that the first postage stamps were issued by the Frenchman M. de Velay for the city post office established in Paris in August 1653, M. M. v. Weber in Wirth's German business calendar for 1870 under the inscription: "Verschweigene Boten" a story which ascribes the invention of the franking mark used by M. de Velay to the beautiful Duchess of Longueville.

Since, despite the imaginative way in which this story is told to us, there are also indisputable indications which confirm the truth of this assertion, I thought I would be accommodating the German philatelists if I presented this lady, who is therefore important for our science, in a clean portrait

Anna Genoveva de Bourbon, Duchess of Longueville, is the daughter of Princess Margaretha Bourbon-Condé and became the latter in a prison at Vincennes Castle; which she co-inhabited in the most magnanimous manner with her jealousy because of the painting banned from the court of Henry IV by Henry II of Bourbon-Condé.

Anna Genoveva developed into the loveliest maiden, the most dazzling beauty, and according to F. v. Hohenhausen, her eyes were radiantly blue, her curly hair the most brilliant blond, plus a wonderful voice and a truly royal demeanor—certainly no wonder that people loved her from an early age.

Her ambitious parents would not allow her to marry of her own choice, so Anna considered entering a convent, but she gave up an engagement to the Duke of Joingville, which was broken by his death at the insistence of her parents and finally married the sovereign of the Principality of Neufchatel, Heinrich von Orleans, Duke of Longueville, with whom she lived in an unhappy marriage. On the 15th April 1679, she died, weary of the tumult of the world, in the famous Carmelite monastery in Faubourg S. Jaques in Paris. Her heart was buried at the instigation of several French poets in the monastery at Ponto - Royal.

This shiny beauty has played an influential role on several occasions. For the first time in 1648, on the occasion of the signing of the Westphalian Peace in Münster, which she attended at the side of her husband and where she, as an apparent angel of peace, followed the old saying: seek peace and you will find it.

In order to win over the Parisians, she let Cardinal Retz accompany her with great pomp to the town hall, where she gave birth to a son who was given the name Charles-Paris and was baptized by the Senate.

The other time, a few years earlier, when it was a matter of clearing the waters for the French Post, which had been terribly influenced by the King's mother and Cardinal Mazarin; on which occasion she recommended to the General Manager of the Post Office, Fouquet, the idea of franking the correspondence with certain recognizable signs.

The following details are reported about this: On the 9th April 1644, an official letter rate was published, which fixed the rates for letters for the whole of France according to weight and distance. However, since the police and, above all, the almighty Cardinal Mazarin, wanted to profit from the entire correspondence, this decree stipulated that all letters were to be delivered to only one postman and, on request, everyone had to report to the post office officer about the content of the letter to be posted.

This was bound to create inconvenience over time. The all too embarrassing registration and tariffing took up a lot of time, the control was excessively strict and so the people of all classes grumbled about a postal system that actually only showed a downside. But this murmuring still faded away, only when voices were raised about this tariff was a change of it to be considered.

The young king, who was only a little over thirteen years old, had given his love to two pretty young ladies, the daughter of a spice merchant and a maid of honor of his mother, the queen, a short time after his entry into the capital. But whenever he had tried to approach the ladies of his heart by letter, the very next day his letters were returned by the postmaster Fouquet on the special orders of Cardinal Mazarin.

The King was incensed at this, and through his Grand Chamberlain sent the Postmaster a somewhat unflattering note, which Fouquet received just as he was having a pleasant chat with the Duchess of Longueville. His sudden annoyance did not go unnoticed by this lady! She asked about the content of this letter and he now openly confessed to her what a peculiar situation the present postal system was putting him in with the Court and the people.

As a result of Fouquet's complaint, Mme. de Longueville is said to have made a suggestion to him that he should take action to ensure that the post office in future be content with receiving postage for the letters posted in advance without worrying about the content of the letter. Furthermore, he should "have strips of paper made, which should bear the name or portrait of the king and the value in the form of the usual isinglass wafers, which must be sellable to anyone in any number at the post office. Finally, he should have mailboxes installed in the liveliest parts of Paris, into which letters marked with the above postage paid stamps could be posted without a fuss."

Fouquet is said to have put these very fortunate ideas into practice, and the decree of 8th August 1653, which introduced the well-known billets port payés, is said to be mainly due to this ordinance.

That this is not improbable can be seen from the fact that the French poet Louvet glorified de Longueville in a poem dated the 16th August 1654 because of this event and that the practical arrangement invented by this high lady was happily welcomed by the court and the city. And despite all that jubilation, a century later it was again simple for the Savoyards who took care of the Paris city mail service !

Henceforth we may honor the actual inventor of postal franking marks in this woman, which does not mean, however, that we hold Sir Rowland Hill undiminished as the founder of the postage stamp industry in well-deserved honor

Sir Rowland Hill,

Founder of the Postage stamp

At my direct request to the great reformer of the English postal system, for the illustr. Briefm.-Journal to make biographical notes available, he was kind enough to send me the following memoirs, edited by me, together with a very friendly accompanying letter, for use, and their content, as mostly still completely unknown, should certainly be welcomed by all.

Sir Rowland Hill was born in Kidderminster on the 3rd December 1795. Even in his infancy it could not escape a keen eye that he would rise to greatness, for though he was restrained by weakness and sickness, he displayed such tireless perseverance in all that he had planned that he did not allow himself to be dissuaded by any obstacle. Hill's ability in mechanical inventions was great and fertile, and his disposition to exercise led him to the use of various implements, which he soon improved; he also provided himself with apparatus for physical experiments, not made after a pattern, but appropriate to his wit, his special purpose, and his limited pocket-money. Among these was one which, by means of an electrification machine made by himself when he was twelve, he made a visible representation of the celestial bodies of the southern hemisphere, invisible to us in the north, stars, nebulae, and all, and let them rise and fall.

At the age of thirteen Hill received the award for his skill in drawing, from all the pupils in England. This prize was awarded by Sir Richard Phillips, the now long-deceased editor of the school newspaper. He had a remarkable gift for mathematics, but having become a teacher in his father's school at an age when boys are still learners, he had no opportunity to develop the same. Teaching, however, is not to be despised as a means of learning, for though his time for further study of mathematics was very limited, yet he devoted his inventive powers to it as much as possible, and often thought to surprise and gratify his father, solving problems of no small difficulty in an improved way. He perfected himself in field measuring, and although he had only a small measuring disk, he knew how to use it in such a way that he could even make trigonometric measurements with it and a measurement of Birmingham and environs. After growing up, and feeling that he had neglected geometry, he used the Christmas holidays to become more adept at it, he studied the whole of Euclid, and repeated it to his father like a schoolboy. He also showed his capacity for improvement in drafting a new constitution for the government of his father's school, which owed its perfection, through the agency of a committee elected by the whole school, to the power of self-government.

A large number of extraordinary, remarkable men have been educated in this school. After 1833 R. Hill saw his place as a teacher replaced, for which position he never felt the right inclination, although he had worked successfully. He resigned and associated himself with several gentlemen in order to cultivate colonies in Australia. In 1834 he received permission from Parliament to establish the colonies in South Australia, which by 1859 already had a population of 11,000 souls. In August 1834 1,626,867 acres of wild land were sold, bringing the Government £2,134,657. From this mass 235,999 acres were cut in the year mentioned, so that the colony yielded an annual income of £450,000. It had an import of £1,623,032, almost all from England, and an export of £1,744,180 in wheat and timber. Flour, copper, ore, fused copper, and other products, enjoying the advantage of extraordinary ports, railways, and telegraphs; its capital, Adelaide, is adorned with fine buildings, provided with gas, water, and all the important conveniences; the prosperity of the colony is founded and secured by a free constitution, while everything possible is done for instruction, education, school, and church from the start. Administered by commissionaires, who elected R. Hill as their secretary, and so fell upon him the chief concern, regulation, and direction of being concerned for the comfort of the immigrants. A point that deserves all the more consideration because of its favorable result, as complete failure instead of success was achieved in several previously founded colonies! He was at the same time a member of the Society for the Dissemination of General Knowledge, founded by Lord Brougham, which was particularly useful in the dissemination of cheap literature. This gave him the idea of inventing an apparatus for faster printing. Thereupon he invented a machine, the property of which was to print by revolving a cylinder in which the types were stuck, under which the paper was placed in long sheets. After improving this invention with the help of his brother Edward Hill, he took out a patent on it; but although his machine printed with great rapidity, and its printing was beautifully executed, it did not come into use, because of the necessary alteration which the type had to receive, as also most contractors dreaded such an expense and the unwelcome procedure, and so on. Finally, R. Hill had lost much time and no small capital. But the continuing demand for rapid printing brought the typed cylinder into use, similar to R. Hill's design, although the present invention was made by persons to whom his could be unknown. R. Hill announced his invention in August 1835 and drew the attention of the largest printers to his machine. This brief experience convinced him that it was better to divert his thoughts. From his childhood he had always heard his father's opinion that the postage was too high, not only for the convenience of the general public, but also for the amount of revenue. This remark was repeated so often in his family that postage became a major topic of conversation, accordingly Hill now decided to undertake a detailed investigation into the subject and as far as it served him to familiarize himself with the multifaceted and intricate business of the postal system. This was of course very difficult for him; Hope of getting information by personal intercourse with postal workers was very feeble, for it is an old saying that postmasters or their agents do not like to speak of the same except for their business. However, the means of knowledge were not limited to verbal conversation. The postal system has been a favorite subject of inquiries from Parliament and a Royal Commission had been established for many years. Consequently a mass of blue books were created in which a large number of facts were noted (which, however, have mostly become waste paper). Mattock [a tool like a pickaxe] in hand, Hill began his work, and in a few months he had not only cleared the gold from the mine but also cleaned it of the slag. Nevertheless, he was still doubtful about some points. Through the intermediary of some friends with influence at St. Martins-le-Grand, he managed to get clarification on some of these questions, but the bulk of these answers was neither sufficient nor precise. Thus, for example, it was very desirable and essential to be approximately certain of the number of letters passing through the British Post Office in a year, but no satisfactory answer could be obtained on this. Using the best means at his disposal, he determined that it was 88½ millions, which he later reduced to 79½ after he had obtained some more detailed information.

About the same time the then Postmaster-General had stated in the House of Lords that the figure was 42-43 millions. Late in 1837 the House of Commons appointed a committee to examine the merits of penny postage. On the occasion of these examinations, which lasted through the whole of 1838, the number of letters came to 58 million. These figures, too, turned out to be incorrect on closer examination and were estimated at 67 million and finally at 70 million. After continued tireless efforts had brought this number to 70½ million; in January 1859 the number was estimated by the postal authorities themselves at 75 million

The numbers quoted will show clearly what difficulty it was for the uninitiated to look for this number. Having completed this work, Hill had to turn his attention to the expenses the state was having as a result of these letters. These were divided into three classes: 1) to receive the letter, and to prepare it for its journey, which, according to the old regulations, was irksome enough, as the postage in relation to the distance which the letter had to go, and whether it was from 1, 2 or 3 sheets was calculated. For example, a simple letter from London to Edinburgh paid 1 shilling. 1½d., if double 2 shillings 3d., triple 3 shillings 3½d. Even the smallest enclosure was calculated as one sheet added. The office of appraising the letter, or writing the postage on it, was a particularly complicated business, taking much of the time and labour of many officials. These and other matters, which would take us too long here, formed the first part of the expenditure.

The second part was the cost of carriage from one post office to another, and this expense, even for so long a journey from London to Edinburgh, proved, on careful examination, to be no more than a ninth part of a farthing (not quite a quarter of a pfennig).

The third expense was that of delivering the letter and receiving the postage, as the letters were mostly sent unstamped.

R. Hill soon realized that although a reduction in postage would be made, even if things remained as before, the post office would not suffer. He therefore set about proposing various methods, among others this, that instead of counting the letters or papers by the number of sheets, one should assume a certain weight, under which they should be no matter what their content, too, can only be regarded as simple. Much trouble would thereby be saved in the post office, and an unjustified fashion of charging the letter would be removed, for surely a double letter is not double, and a triple not treble trouble. But notwithstanding this change, the post office would still have had a great source of work to do in calculating the distance which the letter had to travel.

But when Rowland Hill had discovered that the difference in the cost of transportation between a nearer and a further place amounted to an insignificant fraction of a farthing, it seemed clear to him that it would be nearer common justice to disregard distance as a difference better than to weigh them down with the smallest coin. Regarding the third point, all that could be done to reduce the cost of delivering letters from door to door, was the plan to frank the letter in order, as it were, to give the business of determining the charge to be left to the receiving post office and not to the issuing one. This led to the proposal to prepay by stamps, with the post office on either side being exempt from accepting the postage. In this way all obstacles to perfection were gradually removed, and a great object, an equal postage basis, was introduced in all the English islands.

The easy realization of this object has now been discussed. It became easy to greatly reduce the postage, and therefore a boon to the corresponding class, and reconciled everyone to the change and habit of usage, which would have presented great obstacles to acceptance had the advantages been less considerable.

In 1837 Rowland Hill published his Plan which he presented to his countrymen expounded in a short but clear pamphlet. The brilliant project spread across the kingdom like wildfire. The strong and bitter party spirit of the time was stilled for a time. But he got neither the ministry nor the opposition as his friends. It was too great a subject for the party's petty handlers, and would no doubt have been destroyed had not the people, unanimously, moved it in Parliament. to discuss about it. That voice was quickly heard.

The prosperity of the system of cheap and equal postage within our shores forms part of the history of England, but our shores did not yet remain the limits of its extent; it has spread throughout the civilized world, and its progress is part of the history of civilization itself. The labors, the discouragements, and, we must add, the persecutions of the founder were far from preventing him from carrying out this plan. The Democratic Party, which was at the helm of the Penny postage in 1839, now referred to as Acts of Parliament, though reluctant to yield to his project, treated the founder with justice, gave him their confidence, boarded him in the treasury, and assisted him fully in the implementation of his plans. After a time it was replaced by an aristocratic party, and whose representatives, while acknowledging the brilliant ability inherent in the founder of this plan, knew that he had finished his work and that his service was not more needed, and with a waste of compliments they dismissed him from office. They left him, it is true, the consolation which the famous Spartan Pedaritus drew from the loss of his election. who says that his fatherland has 300 worthier men than he is. Rowland Hill had a greater cause for self-congratulation than Pedaritus. Among the thousands of distributions offered by our civil service, no vacant position could be found which a capable and deserving public servant, like the founder of the penny Post tax, was apt to fill out. But that's not all! They even dared to reject Hill's project altogether, which aroused the displeasure of the nation. They took matters into their own hands; finding an office for Hill was beyond their power, but they would not allow him to leave office bare-handed, and a plentiful subscription of £15,000 at once rewarded the benefactor, and marked his dismissal with an indelible mark. When the Democrats regained power in 1847 they invited R. Hill to take a post in the post office, he accepted, and in a short time the public had reason to know that nothing valid, but pure partisanship had caused his dismissal. After his re-entry into office one improvement followed another in the postal system, and measures are still being worked out to improve it more and more, that we find no place to enumerate them. One thing, however, is so obvious and can be said in so few words that we will state it here. The benefit which the Money Order Office brings to the state is well known; in 1847 R. Hill found its administration in a state of complications which necessitated enormous expenditure, which even exceeded the income by an annually increasing sum, which at that time was £10,000. So Hill took charge of management, it soon became independent, then profitable, and is now bringing in a net profit of £40,000 annually, and as it becomes more profitable every year, it is easy to assume that this total will also increase later. This great saving is due only to the simplification of management, begun by R. Hill, but now carried on by his youngest brother, Frederick Hill, who in 1851, principally to assist his brother, gave up his post of prison inspector and took up a post. This isn't the only help R. Hill received from his family, for it may be doubted whether he would have been able to cling to his ideas for so many years of weary work had he not been enraptured by his wife's cheerful and wise help, for where only her help could be of use to him, she stood by his side with the greatest care for his ever-failing health. When R. Hill returned to office in 1846, he was appointed secretary to the Postmaster-General, but was really only associate secretary to Mr. Maberly; only in 1854, when the latter gentleman received another position, was R. Hill his successor. In 1856, under the Duke of Argyll, he became Postmaster-General, was knighted by the Queen and Commander of the Order of the Bath in 1860, and at the end of February 1864 he retired to private life, again showered with the sincerest tokens of the gratitude of the British people and government.

The gratitude of the British nation received new nourishment when, at the beginning of 1877, the council of Kidderminster, the birthplace of Rowland Hill, decided to erect a bronze statue to its very famous son and for this purpose turned to the English people for assistance, In form A "penny collection" the respectable sum of 1,560 pounds (approx. 31,200 marks) was donated to the committee in less than a year, and the erection of the projected monument was thus sufficiently secured.

In the autumn of 1877 Sir Rowland Hill celebrated his fiftieth anniversary of marriage, to the general acclaim of his country.

In how willingly the aged reformer in the last-mentioned year accepted the dedication of the fourth edition of the Schaubek album, which was published by the writer of this revised edition, and how he kindly gave the same his portrait with his own signature as a return gift, this was reported in detail in the Illustrierte Briefmarken-Journal. That finally the philatelists of Germany and Austria took an active part in the collection for the Hill memorial is self-evident.

May the well-deserved one be granted a happy, cheerful old age. His name will live on to the remotest of times. —

Editor's Note:

I judged from the title that this booklet, like Moschkau's other histories of philately would contain material that came within my sphere of interests and I had it translated. It turned out to be a few biographies of people related to philately and various other interesting chapters but nothing really relating to the history of philately. I therefore terminated the above rough translation here.

END

Ch. O. Müller & James Negus

Four letters from Müller to Negus about indexing with a copy of the final response from Negus. 19th August 1955 to 11th August 1956.

Partly translated for James Negus & for Brian J. Birch
Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
October 2022

FOUR LETTERS FROM MÜLLER TO NEGUS ABOUT INDEXING
WITH A COPY OF THE FINAL RESPONSE FROM NEGUS.
19TH AUGUST 1955 TO 11TH AUGUST 1956.

Letter 1

STADTRAT DER LANDESHAUPTSTADT MÜNCHEN

Stadtbibliothek Philatelistische Abteilung
München 2, Rathaus, Zim. 365

Munich, August 19th, 1955

James Negus, Esq.
339 Prince Regent Lane
London 16
(England)

Dear Mr. Negus,

In volume LXI number 1572 of the STAMP COLLECTORS' FORTNIGHTLY I have found you article "Indexing Philatelic Literature" in which you have made favourable remarks not only upon the philatelic information as served by the STAMP LOVER and THE AMERICAN PHILATELIST, but also upon the index of our LITERATUR-NACHRICHTEN.

In my opinion, the indexing of philatelic literature could be greatly facilitated by a close co-operation between those gentlemen who are responsible for the indexes of the STAMP LOVER, THE AMERICAN PHILATLIST and the LITERATUR-NACHRICHTEN, with a view to a still greater rationalization. What I have in mind is that Messrs. L. N. and M. Williams (London) specialize in the English literature, Mr. David Lidmann in American, Mr. Spaulding in Japanese and Mr. Hillet in Latin American publications, while I myself not only take care of the German, Austrian and Swiss press; I would also see to the East European literature being looked after by an expert in Slavonic languages. A central index could then be published in the form of an international "Philatelic Digest". To achieve this end, it would, however, be indispensable to agree on uniform abbreviations for philatelic magazines etc., e.g. P = Post, St. = Stamp(s), Ph = Philately (Philatelist), etc., as well as on a uniform system for the numbering of catalogues.

In expressly this connection, the revival of the “Fédération Internationale de la Presse Philatélique” (FIPP) within the framework of the FIP – which might even be supported by the “Weltpostverein” (World Post Union) and UNESCO – would be very desirable.

I should very much like to know your opinion and to receive your suggestions in this respect. As to the above-mentioned co-operation, I am also thinking of Messrs. King-Farlow (London), Dr. Mathieu (Oberviechtach), P. C. Rickenback (London), Billig (Jamaica), and Daniel W. Vooyo (Canajoharie, N. Y., USA).

Looking forward to your reply, I am,

Yours very truly,

CH. O. MULLER

Director of the Philatelic Section of the Mun. Library of Munich City

Letter 2

STADTRAT DER LANDESHAUPTSTADT MÜNCHEN

Stadtbibliothek Philatelistische Abteilung
München 2, Rathaus, Zim. 365

Munich, September 8th, 1955

James Negus, Esq.
339 Prince Regent Lane
London E.16
(England)

Dear Mr. Negus,

Thank you very much, indeed, for your long letter of 29/8/55 in which you have given me your detailed opinion about a more expedient system for the indexing of philatelic literature to be adopted. I, too, feel that one of the urgent problems to be solved is the unification of abbreviations and methods of citation between American, British and German indexes. As you state, too short abbreviations are apt to cause confusion; on the other hand, they must not too long either. In short, the adoption of a "golden middle-course" would, like always, serve the purpose best. You were further right in stating that "S.M." standing for "Stamp Magazine" as well as for "Stamp Mirror" is no proper solution, whereas "SMW" for "Stamp Mirror (Weekly)" can hardly be regarded as a logical one. I also agree with you that certain abbreviations should once and for all be retained for the most frequently occurring words, such as instance:

A	for	Archives
Am	for	American
B	for	Briefmarke
Br	for	British
C	for	Collector, Collectionneur
D	for	Deutsch, Deutsche, etc.
F	for	Filatelie
Fr	for	Freimarke, Frimaerke
J	for	Journal
M	for	Magazin(e)
Mi	for	Mitteilung(en)
P	for	Post, Postal, Poste
Ph	for	Philatelic, Philately, Philatelist, Philatelie
R	for	Revue, Review
S	for	Sammel-, Sammler
St	for	Stamp(s)
T	for	Timbre(s)
W	for	Weekly
Z	for	Zeitschrift, Zeitung;

Hence it follows that:

DBZ	=	Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung
SP	=	Sammlerpost

StM = Stamp Magazine
TP = Timbre-Poste, etc.

Since according to this system, "S" would stand exclusively for "Sammler", the "Schweizer Briefmarken-Zeitung" would, logically, have to be quoted as "SchBZ". On this basis it should, in my opinion, not be very difficult to develop a reasonable code which should then also be adopted by all philatelic libraries.

However, what you say about our index giving only the whole numbers instead of the page numbers, is not quite correct; the latter is always given after the whole number. By way of example: LN21/22 page 67: Neusseland Early Queen ... AmPh 638:417 (The American Philatelist no. 638 page 417). If a periodical has no whole number, then for instance "UP 1955-3:33" means Union Postale 1955 no. 3 page 33.

To my regret, Mr. Vooy's has up to now dealt with bibliographical problems only on a very small scale. I, for my part, would greatly welcome a publication dealing with those questions as are treated by you in your article "Abbreviations of the Titles of Philatelic Periodicals".

On the basis of my experience I can state that the abbreviations as used in our LN now pass current also with the German groups interested in literature, by which fact the practicalability of our system seems to have been proved. Of course, suggestions for further improvements are always desirable.

Before getting in touch with the other gentlemen who are interested in the whole affair, I feel that we should first of all, you and I, create a thorough basis for a new system for the indexing of philatelic literature.

Looking forward to your reply, I am with my best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

CH. O. MULLER

Director of the Philatelic Section of the Mun. Library
Munich City

Letter 3

STADTRAT DER LANDESHAUPTSTADT MÜNCHEN

Stadtbibliothek Philatelistische Abteilung
München 2, Rathaus, Zim. 365

Munich, 30th May, 1956

James Negus, Esq.
339 Prince Regent Lane
London 16
(England)

Dear Mr. Negus,

To my great regret your last detailed letter of a considerable time ago, dealing with my system of abbreviating philatelic literature, has been lost on its way to being translated.

I should be very grateful to you if you could possibly let me have a copy of the said letter so that I can at long last give you an answer to it.

Yours sincerely,

CH. O. MULLER

Director of the Philatelic Section of the Mun. Library
Munich City

Letter 4

München, 13.6.1956

Mr. James Negus
339 Prince Regent Lane
LONDON, E.16

Dear Mr. Negus,

I thank you for providing a copy of your letter of 1st October, which went astray, and which I could only now answer, unfortunately.

I only prefer giving the whole number as opposed to the Volume Number, insofar as it is a question of the references in the Bulletin (Literally: Literature-News). It would make the printing of the index much more complicated and more expensive, if I had to put AmPh Vol 69/1956-8: 575 as against AmPh 664/575.

Looking at this from a purely 'library' point of view, it is certainly useful when loaning out, to know that, for example, No.664 is included in Vol.69 when somebody wants it. However, the information is always available in the Publications Card Index, so in practice there shouldn't be any difficulty.

In order not to make the publication of the index too expensive, simpler terms of reference must be adopted, than for a card index only intended for library purposes. However the difficulty then arises that with Anglo-Saxon periodicals, the numbering of the volumes does not always coincide with the calendar year, but frequently takes up part of one year and part of another, so that a supplementary indication of the volume will be necessary, the documentation will be even longer.

It will be correct to put the Volume Numbers in Arabic numerals as you propose, and was in fact prescribed thus in the alphabetic catalogue of the Prussian libraries from 1899/1908 (Para. 4, 3).

Your proposal to lengthen the abbreviation Ph for Philately by one or two letters in order to distinguish between the derivatives, Philatelist, Philately, etc., deserves attention. The abbreviations of the Kumbley Auction lists form a fitting basis for the introduction of international agreement on abbreviations. In the above mentioned instructions Bl. = Blatt, H = Heft were laid down.

In choosing abbreviations for existing technical journals and those now being brought into existence for one big index covering all times and countries, care must be taken not to cause confusion with publications which may have ceased publication. For example, to use the abbreviation SBZ (referring to the Swiss Stamp Magazine) might cause confusion with the Saxon Magazine, SZ, which is no longer going. If 'Stamp Lover' were to be abbreviated to SL instead of StL (see index) then this magazine could be confused with the 'Sammler-Lupe'.

The list of magazine titles which you are now composing should form a good basis for a philatelic bibliography, provided you also take Schmittdiel's proposals into consideration, as contained in his Bibliography of Ph. Lit. Part 1: General index of German Language philatelic periodicals. Unfortunately, Schmittdiel was killed in the war on the Russian front, and was never able to extend his survey as far as foreign language periodicals.

The 'Society for Philatelic Literature' recently formed in Duisberg has included a basis for complete international documentation in its programme: I'll let you know further in due course.

I'm glad my proposal about work on the Index met with your approval. I agree with you about Point 2 of your proposed measures, i.e. that all the Articles need not be registered, but only the more important and of lasting value. Those of merely temporary interest are only to be considered in the light of what is absolutely essential. Just now, it isn't all that easy to draw a hard and fast line. Chats etc., on Philately can remain ignored. Also, your proposals in Point 3, which have already been applied in Billig's Mondial are worthy of being strived for.

I am aware of the cumulations problem. We possess King-Farlow Cumulative index as follows:

London Phst. Vol. 1-53
Journal of the Phc. Lit. Soc. Vol. 1-11
Phc. Journal of Great Britain Vol. 1-56
StL. Vol. 1-40

Further cumulative indexes as:

The Amer. Phst Vol. 1-51
Coll. Cl. Phst. Vol. 1-30

The layout of your index cards corresponds to ours, of which I enclose sample.

I agree with your proposal number 4, and am glad to hear from you that you consider the Literatur-Nachrichten suitable for the continual presentation of current comprehensive lists of contents.

The [German] Society for Philatelic Literature will get in touch with you in the near future in order to expedite the practical carrying out of the points raised by you and by me.

In the meantime you might get in touch with your American friends so that the suggestions and queries of Hans R. Steinhardt, Peggy Eltges, Charles Hahn (The American Philatelist), David Lidman (Index of the American Philatelist) and his employees, Robert M. Spaulding Jr. (Japanese journals) Alfred J. Hillel (Spanish & Portuguese), etc., can be evaluated.

Trusting to hear from you again, greets you with the expression of excellent respect, your devoted

Ch. O. Muller
Städt Verw. Ob. Insp.

Letter 5

11.8.56

Dear Herr Müller,

Urgent pressure of other work prevents me from replying to your detailed and useful letter of 13th June. I have also been able to make no progress recently with my list of periodicals.

However, now that I have a little more time I hope to apply myself to the problem again and will get in touch with you further as soon as possible.

I look forward also to hearing of the work on the Duisburg Gesellschaft für philatelistische Literatur. Would you please let me have membership details in due course? Would I be permitted to become a member?

Unfortunately I have not got a copy of Schmittdiel's General-index.

Please forgive the unsatisfactoriness of this reply, but it is really to acknowledge with thanks receipt of your last letter.

With kind regards

Yours sincerely

JAMES NEGUS

END

J. A. Bosshard & Fritz Seifert

Well-known philatelists

[Bekannte philatelisten]

In: Deutsche Philatelistische Jahrbuch 1931: Wer Wie Was Wann und Wo in der Philatelie?
[German Philatelic Year Book 1931: Who What Where When and How in Philately?], Fritz
Seifert, Leipzig, Germany, 1930, pp.91-143

Only the following entry has been translated: Otto Rommel, p.117

Translation by Brian J. Birch

Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
March 2023

WELL-KNOWN PHILATELISTS

p.117

Rommel

Dr. Jur. Otto Rommel, Berlin W 15, Ruhlandstr. 162. Born on the 2nd February 1857 in Hildburghausen. Author: Baden, Bavaria, Bergedorf, Deutsche Reichspost in Krösch Handbook, Geschichte der Sächsischen newspaper stamp 3 Pfg. Red, Catalogue of Nordic Bypost stamps, Morocco, its mail and its postage stamps, the Chinese Local Stamps, the Postage stamps of the Begedorf Postal District, the Postage stamps of Lübeck, the Courier, Railway and Steamship stamps of Scandinavia and Finland, Special Catalogue of the postage stamps of the German Postal Districts, Study of the postage stamps of Peru and many publications about philatelic literature, mainly in Philatelie 1898-1911. His philatelic Library was acquired by the Prussian State Library in Berlin. Reference: Bungerz p.620.

END

Dr. Tillfried Cernajsek

Karl Franz Stock Dead: Obituary

[Karl Franz Stock Verstorben: Obituary]

Austria Forum web site: <https://austria-forum.org>, Accessed 18th July 2023, 4pp.

(Translation of the obituary only)

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

July 2023

KARL FRANZ STOCK DEAD: OBITUARY

Not unexpectedly, our honorary member and holder of the Scapinelli Medal, Karl F. Stock, passed away last June. A large congregation of mourners gathered on the 22nd June 2022 to say goodbye in the Graz fire hall. This farewell was very painful for me, especially since I have known Karl for almost half a century and have always been in close contact with him.

Karl Stock was born in Graz in 1937 as the third child. He grew up in poor conditions in a one-room apartment. In 1943 he was orphaned after his father died of tuberculosis through no fault of his own in prison. For the years that followed, he eked out his existence as a starving truant, he even ended up in a police prison when he was picked up in the Graz bomb ruins looking for food. From 1945 to 1946 he worked as a "hoarder", which at that time had become an everyday activity for the needy post-war population. This activity was ended by the youth welfare office and Karl was taken with his brother Otmar to the state educational institution Jagdberg in the municipality of Schlins, Vorarlberg. Here, too, he and his brother remained difficult residents of the home. They left the home and took the train to Graz, where they were happily welcomed by their mother. As children, they had no problem getting through the demarcation lines. But the joy of returning does not last long.

Karl and his brother would have to go back to Jagdberg. A different life began for him there under Chaplain Josef Andreas Müller, who was also a religion teacher and composer. He becomes a choirboy and is allowed to make his first communion in 1947. From 1951 he was a monastery student in St. Georgen am Längsee, from 1952 to 1953 a cello student, from 1953 to 1954 a violin student and from 1952 to 1954 a tenor horn player. Since Karl was not willing to take up a religious profession, he left Jagdberg and returned to Graz, where he worked as a labourer in various companies from 1954 to 1958. At the same time, he began to write poems and, temporarily unemployed, underwent psychotherapeutic self-treatment. In 1956 he discovered himself as a linocut artist. This art would be decisive for his whole subsequent life. Since then, Karl has been drawing and painting. He never had any special training, but always had good teachers who encouraged him and never discouraged him. From 1979 he began exhibiting his work publicly here and there. From 1954 to 1959 he was a night school student and tutor for classmates. In March 1959 he graduated from night school.

In 1959 he worked as an insurance clerk. In the same year he visited Strasbourg for the first time and began to study mathematics and physics. At the same time, he becomes a librarian at the Graz University Library. From 1962 he began bibliographical work, to which he devoted his entire life. In 1964 he began working as a statistician and writer. In 1960 he married the Alsatian Mayrlène Ledermann from Krautgersheim near Strasbourg. The children Elisabeth (1965) and Daniel (1966) came from this marriage. Karl's wife was to become one of the most important collaborators in his bibliographical ventures. Since 1976, together with Rudolf Heilinger and his wife Marylène, he has published a Bibliography of Austrian Bibliographies, Collective Bibliographies and Reference Works, which eventually reached 30 volumes. It is admirable that Karl started to study political science, receiving a dissertation in 1968 and earning his doctorate in political science in 1969. From 1967 he worked as a programmer just by the way. In 1969 the family moved into a new condominium on Wienerstrasse. From 1970 to 1973, Karl was assigned to the computer center in Graz to develop programs for library documentation with Walter Koch. It was from here that I received impulses for the future introduction of EDP in my specialist library. In 1974 he was appointed library director of the University Library of Graz University of Technology. In the same year, his book on the principles and practice of library statistics was published by the Saur publishing house in Pullach, which resulted in further close collaboration for Karl.

In 1976, Karl acquired a property in Wolfgruben, St. Ruprecht an der Raab. The “Huabn” became his summer workshop and printer for his linocut work. From 1978 he began to work with a platen printing press himself. In 1997 he retires and, as he said himself, spent the rest of his life's vacation with mentally active imagination and increasing physical incapacity and at times strenuous activity. In Innsbruck in 1998 his most important tool, his Notebook, was stolen from the room in a hotel. The loss of material value was disproportionate to the loss of valuable data stored in the device. Due to the theft, some texts have been irretrievably lost. In the following year, 1999, Karl F. Stock joined the Austrian Exlibris Society. From the year 2001, Karl began to deal with the new legal regulations for the delivery of compulsory items and with the incompatible delivery of social security amounts to the commercial social insurance institution. With the “Print on demand” method, Karl tried to keep his income below the marginal income limit. He began to produce only very small editions and only delivered obligatory items to the Austrian National Library. Nevertheless, it remained in contravention of a decision by the Federal Chancellery, which stated that all “print-on-demand” works were subject to a delivery obligation. In 2011 he suffered a heart attack, which he luckily survived. From 2021, severe old age complaints become noticeable, which followed him continuously to the end of his life, despite his intellectual height. I had telephone conversations with him almost weekly and we exchanged views on the problems that had become apparent in the bookplate movement.

Karl F. Stock has published a large number of publications on library and bibliography and bookplates. Individual works can be accessed online in the Austria Forum. According to his own statements, he created over 470 linocuts and a few woodcuts over the years 1957-2019. These are available online on his homepage (<https://bibli.kfstock.at>). Under certain conditions, access to the bibliographic databases he has created is also possible here. His Bibliography of International Ex-Libris Literature is very important to us friends of the ex-libris and indispensable for any work in the field of ex-libris. As far as I know, this database has reached 65,700 entries. It is helpful for all those who want to use it as a source for their work. Karl Stock's son Daniel will ensure that this database will be continued and expanded.

Last but not least, it should not go unmentioned that Karl F. Stock was a member of the Austrian knowledge network Austria – Forum (Head: Prof. Hermann Maurer, Graz University of Technology). He has made a number of his books available to the Austria – Forum, but has also been actively involved in other ways. At his suggestion, the Austrian Exlibris Society made all out-of-print yearbooks available for digitization. These digital copies and also other digital copies of bookplate publications can be found on this knowledge network.

There have been no recognitions or honors from the public sector or its employers. Only private professional associations have recognized his achievements and honored them with honors:

- 1968: Award of the promotion medal by the Association of Austrian Librarians (VÖB).
- 17th September 2009: Honorary membership of the Austrian Association of librarians.
- 14th July 2004: Presentation of the Udo Ivask certificate of the Fédération Internationale des Amateurs d'Ex-Libris (FISAE).
- 21st November 2011: Honorary membership of the Austrian Exlibris Society (ÖEG).
- 2016: Presentation of the Paul Scapinelli [Prize] Medal of the Austrian Exlibris Society (ÖEG) on the occasion of the first Vienna Woods Conference of the Austrian Exlibris Society in Unterkirchbach near Mauerbach near Vienna.
- 2020: Presentation of the Walter von Zur Westen Medal of the German Exlibris Society (DEG).

In the face of his death, Karl F. Stock still had the strength to address parting words/ to all the bereaved:

Dear friends! Still in full possession of my mental sanity and anticipating the approaching end of my earthly existence, I would like to say goodbye to you. I thank you for your friendship and affection during my eventful earthly journey. I go with confidence into the scientifically unproven realm of creation of an infinite spirit of action and hope that we will all find ourselves there. May this expectation comfort all my loved ones over this final farewell from this earthly existence.

Tillfried Cernajsek

END (of Translation)

The remainder of the text are essentially references that do not require translating. (BJB)

Biographien:

- Cernajsek, Tillfried: Karl F. Stock: Staatswissenschaftler - Bibliothekar - EDV-Pionier im Bibliotheks- und Bibliographiewesen - Graphiker - Exlibriskünstler zum 65. – Mitteilungen der Österreichischen Exlibrisgesellschaft, 57/1, S.4-6, 2 Abb., Wien 2002.
 - Cernajsek, Tillfried: Die Internationale Exlibris – Vereinigung ehrte Karl F. Stock und Ottmar Premstaller. - Mitteilungen der Vereinigung Österreichischer Bibliothekarinnen & Bibliothekare, 57, H. ¾, S.81, Wien 2004.
- [Verleihung des Udo-Ivask-Preises an Karl F. Stock für die ?Österreichische Exlibris-Bibliographie 1881-2003? und des Gianni-Mantero-Preises an Ottmar Premstaller für Verdienste um Verbreitung des Exlibris-Gedankens.]*[ID0066102]
- Cernajsek, Tillfried: Karl Franz Stock. – In: Contemporary international ex-libris artists / ed. By Artur Mário da Mota Miranda, 10, S.95-100, 8 Abb., 1 Portr., Braga 2008 [in deutscher u. engl. Sprache]

- Cernajsek, Tillfried: Karl F. Stock präsentierte seine Bibliographien online in Wien. – Aus der bibliophilen Welt 12, S. 15-16, Wien 2009.
- Cernajsek, Tillfried: Karl F. Stock präsentierte seine Bibliographien online in Wien / Tillfried Cernajsek. – In: Mitteilungen der Vereinigung österreichischer Bibliothekarinnen & Bibliothekare. – 62. 2009, H. 2, S. 97-98, 1 Illustr.; auch in: SELC Express. – Nr. 76. 2009, S. 13, 1 Illustr. [Exlibris Eva-M. Wimmer, Paracelsus]; auch in: Mitteilungen der Dt. Exlibris-Ges. 2009, H. 2, S. 50-51; auch in: Aus der bibliophilen Welt. – Wien. 12. 2009, S. 15-16.
- Cernajsek, Tillfried: Die Bibliographie internationaler Exlibrisliteratur hat nun schon über 50.000 Einträge! / TCP. – In: Mitteilungen der Österreichischen Exlibris-Gesellschaft. N. F. 65. 2010, Nr. 2, S. 18-19. [Betrifft die Internet-Datenbank der "Bibliographie der internationalen Exlibris-Literatur" von Karl F. Stock.]
- Cernajsek, Tillfried: Karl F. Stock ist 80 Jahre alt geworden. – In: Mitteilungen der Österreichischen Exlibris-Gesellschaft. N.F. 72, Nr. 1, S.3 - 5, Illustr., Wien 2017.
- Müksch, Ursula: Hofrat Dr. Karl F. Stock: Schöpfer der Datenbank der Internationalen Exlibris – Literatur und Linolschnitt-Künstler; Ehrenmitglied der Österreichischen Gesellschaft für Exlibris und Gebrauchsgrafik / Ursula Müksch. – In: Österreichisches Jahrbuch für Exlibris und Gebrauchsgrafik. – 67. 2011-2012, S. 6-11, 2 Fotos, 2 Exlibris-Illustr.
- Rödel, Klaus: Karl F. Stock: Exlibrisforsker og kunstner; Exlibrisforsker und Künstler / Klaus Rödel. – In: Nordisk Exlibris Tidsskrift. – 63. 2011, H. 261 = N. S. H. 49. 2011/1, S. 9-11, 10 Illustr.
- Scheffer, Heinrich R.: Hofrat Dr. Karl F. Stock ist zum Ehrenmitglied der ÖEG ernannt worden / Heinrich R. Scheffer. – In: Mitteilungen der Österr. Exlibris-Gesellschaft. N. F. 66., Nr.3, S. 10, mit Portr., Wien 2022

Quellen:

- Autobiographie: Tagebuchnotizen aller Art von gestern bis morgen oder „Vom Schulschwänzer zum Bibliotheksdirektor“ (<https://bibli.kfstock.at/downloads/Tagebuchnotizen%20von%20gestern%20bis%20morgen-Txt-2021-VIII.pdf>) (2022_06_16_13:49)
- Linolschnitt und übermalte Linoldrucke 1957 – 2021. Illustriertes Verzeichnis, Graz 2021 (<https://bibli.kfstock.at/downloads/Lino/LinoDoc1957-2021-10-24-001-080.pdf>)
- Stock, Karl Franz, *13. Jänner 1937, † 10. Juni 2022, Biogramm in: Infos zum AF/Editorial Board/Ehemalige Mitglieder des Editorial Boards/Stock, Hofrat Dr. Karl
- Siehe auch web-books und bei Suche "Stock" eingeben.

END

Der Philatelistische Literatursammler
August 1932, Volume 1, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
26th October 2023

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Der Philatelistische Literatursammler
September 1932, Volume 1, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
26th October 2023

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Der Philatelistische Literatursammler
October 1932, Volume 1, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
26th October 2023

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Der Philatelistische Literatursammler
November 1932, Volume 1, Issue 5

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
26th October 2023

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Der Philatelistische Literatursammler
December 1932, Volume 1, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
26th October 2023

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Die Philatelistische Literatur
January 1935, Volume 4, Issue 1; Whole number 31

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
26th October 2023

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.1

The Lifespan of German-language philatelic newspapers.

C. Michaelis

p.2

Literature preview.

Overview

pp.2-5

New philatelic literature publications.

C. Schmittdiel

p.4

Gesellschaft Philatelistischer Literaturfreunde e. V., Hamburg

Membership news.

List of new members.

Obituary of Kurt Kayssner.

pp.5-7

Magazines indexed.

Table of contents

C. Schmittdiel with the participation of: Dr. F. Kalckhoff, W. v. Rachmanow and Prof. Renaut d'Oultre-Seille.

pp.7-8

Advertisements.

END

Wolfgang Maassen

The Fascination of Writing: Tips for Authors, Editors and Publishers
[Faszination Schreiben: Tipps für Autoren, Redakteure und Büchermacher]
Ratgeber für Briefmarkensammler Volume 5, Phil*Creativ Verlag, Schwalmthal, Germany,
2005, 214pp.

Translation of the Contents and Introduction only

Translation by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
November 2023

THE FASCINATION OF WRITING
TIPS FOR AUTHORS, EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS

CONTENTS

Introduction	5
1. In the beginning there is an idea	7
2. “Time is money” – time management is useful	12
3. Research – the “A” and “O” of good work	18
4. No master has fallen from heaven yet	28
5. From the note box to the fair copy	37
6. The “perfect” manuscript: Know how!	45
7. Not just for gourmets: Typographic all sorts!	59
8. Layout and design questions for book makers and hobby authors	65
9. The right mix for computer geeks	74
10. The little picture times 1	83
11. The boy sat at the spring	87
12. When the Kadi threatens	117
Press law for the state of North Rhine-Westphalia	118
Press Code of the German Press Council	132

13. Therefore test whoever binds himself forever! – Always an Adventurer:	140
Author and publishing contracts	140
Contracts between authors and specialist journals	141
The author or publishing contract	144
14. We make pressure	170
15. In the beginning there was the word – collecting societies and foundations	181
16. It's time to say goodbye!	199

Attachment:

1. CUEcards – a “convenient knowledge storage”	201
2. List of literature and sources	205
3. Important addresses	206
4. Index	207

TO THE ESCORT

Guides see themselves as a genre that aims to provide help for self-help. The interested reader can undoubtedly judge better whether this can be achieved with this small font.

The need to write such a text arose from numerous lectures, seminars and discussions in which, on the one hand, the author was happy to pass on the knowledge he had acquired over decades, but on the other hand he was also able to get to know the many open questions of his listeners and their needs.

This brochure is therefore not aimed at professionals with many years of professional experience, at professional or specialist journalists, at professional authors who write for newspapers, magazines and publishers or who have already gained their own experience in constant contact with the subject matter. It would be difficult to tell this group anything new.

The author also finds it difficult to convey new things to those who know-it-all; At best, he can still learn from them himself - if they really know better. He is willing to do this - also in the interests of this volume of advice - and at any time.

A particular problem arises from the diversity of the intended readership. Some may be planning their first specialist article, others already have certain experience. While some may still be working with handwritten manuscripts, others are still using the typewriter, others are - with more or less great suffering - using the PC and the world of comfortable but also complex text - and perhaps even typesetting programs.

According to these completely different requirements, the references and contents of the information must be adapted, but sometimes they are so different that something applies to one person that may not apply at all to another. The reader should also decide for themselves whether the attempt to present something useful to all groups was successful.

First and foremost, the author has in mind the authors who want to publish their own contributions in a specialist journal, but also in working materials, newsletters or research reports from specialized working groups, but also the editorial colleagues who work in these areas with such authors - regardless of whether male or female – work together. However, authors who are planning their own books, whether self-published or externally published, should not be neglected. The aspects that need to be taken into account in a guide are correspondingly extensive.

The fact that the examples come from the world of philately and postal history is due to the biographical development of the author, who has left his mark in specialist magazines since the early 1970s and has published numerous books with other publishers and in his own company and since 1989 has been editor-in-chief of the specialist magazine with the highest circulation in Germany, Philatelie.

Here he can and must only see himself as a learner, especially since he is not a German scholar or someone with particular language experience. This, in turn, is at the same time an obligation to simplify organizational processes, to establish conventions and to optimize standards in such a way that they open up the freedom for one's own intellectual work.

Examples are taken from the experience of the author's publications. However, they can be transferred to other specialist magazines and non-fiction books cum grano salis. The difference can be seen more clearly between the different requirements for the products "article" and "book".

My thanks go to my long-time friend and mentor Karlheinz Wittig from Lohmar. He gave me the courage to take literary steps as an inexperienced "newbie" and to succumb to the fascination of philately and postal history. But he also taught me, to put it figuratively, the daring nature of carving out paths with a machete on foreign terrain in the jungle, which, when viewed in the sunlight, are not always new paths, but always new ones were Paths of probation.

A special thank you goes to Peter Fischer, whose final editing helped make this book even more readable. For numerous more technical aspects, especially in the area of handling files and image processing, for typography, layout and typography, I have to rely on my wife Claudia Maaßen, who is much more at home in this world of design and production than I am. To this day, she teaches me to always dare to try new things and to overcome even difficult challenges together.

I would like to encourage readers to walk with me through the jungle of language, the variety of forms of manuscripts and files, the new world of bits and bytes, but also to give me plenty of tips in response. Things are always easier together!

Wolfgang Maassen

END

Wolfgang Maassen

Personality and Copyright: A Guide for Authors and Editors of Print and Digital Media.
[Persönlichkeits- und Urheberrechte: Ein Leitfaden für Autoren und Redakteure der Print und Digitalmedien.]

Ratgeber für Briefmarkensammler Volume 10, Phil*Creativ Verlag, Schwalmthal, Germany,
2015, 118pp.

(The translation covers pages 1 & 3-6)

Translation by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
May 2024

PERSONALITY AND COPYRIGHT
A GUIDE FOR AUTHORS AND EDITORS OF PRINT AND DIGITAL MEDIA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Preface	5
1. Individual rights – personal rights	7
2. Protection of personal Honor	12
2.1 Case 1: Defamatory factual statements?	14
2.2 Case 2: Defamatory expressions of opinion?	17
2.3 Case 3: Defamation or even business damage?	19
3. The right to your own word and image	22
3.1 The right to non-publication of the spoken word	22
3.2 The right to the privately written word	23
3.3 The right to your own image	29
3.4 The right to the image of one's own thing	34
3.5 The right to your own name	40
3.6 The right to correct reproduction	41
4. General copyright law	43
4. On the use of texts	46
Plagiarism	46
Use of third-party texts for your own publications	48

Use of third-party texts for your own website	51
“Indirect plagiarism”	54
Obligations for authors, editors and publishers	56
4.2 On the use of third-party catalog numbers	57
4.3 On the use of images	86
Illustrations from auction catalogs etc.	88
Illustrations from databases	92
The exception: the picture quote	93
Use of your own commissioned images	94
4.4 Further case studies relating to philately	95
Case 1: Unauthorized use of a location sketch	96
Case 2: The adoption of a philatelic image from a website and use in a specialised article	97
Case 3: Use of images in a misleading or wrong context	98
Case 4: Lorient heirs against Wikipedia	100
4.5 Illustrations of stamps	101
National regulations	101
International regulations	107
5. Quote correctly – “borrow” correctly	110
5.1 Citation rules	110
5.2 Quotation rights	113
5.3 Citation methods	115
Sources	118

FOREWORD

It's not until now that you, as an author, editor or journalist, sometimes have the feeling that you're always standing with one foot in prison, as there are so many pitfalls in everyday creative life that it's impossible to know all of them and can perhaps easily get around them. Not only do we have to plumb the depths of legal paragraphs, but we also have to take the interests of various sides into account. So it's not just about you as an author, photographer or artist, it's also about other people about whom you produce text or image statements, but ultimately also about the exploiters of your own or other people's work, i.e. publishers and other rights holders. Things don't get much less complicated when you consider the group of property owners who also insist on their supposed or actual rights. Many a person has gotten lost in the jungle of paragraphs.

The logical conclusion that it might be better not to enter such spheres of interest or to deal with them in the first place turns out to be premature and wrong, at the latest after a cease-and-desist declaration with a penalty clause has arrived. By then it is usually already too late, the porcelain has been smashed and the child has fallen into the well. All you can do now is see how the damage caused can probably be limited.

The one - damage limitation - as well as the other - damage prevention - concerns everyone who speaks publicly about third parties, writes or reproduces something in visual form. And this not only in printed media, but - nowadays - also in digital media: in forums, in blogs, but also especially when designing your own websites. It is difficult to overlook the domain of hard-working lawyers who have developed warnings about unauthorized copying of text and image content on websites in the Federal Republic, although these hardly make any distinction between private or commercial users. The main thing is that it brings in money and sales. Believing that everything on the internet is free and rights-free just because it is so easy to obtain and use, often even free of charge, can quickly turn out to be an expensive mistake.

Now the author of this book is not a lawyer, he is an author and journalist himself. He can look back on almost 40 years of extensive experience, which - especially in his capacity as editor of several philatelic specialist magazines - has taught him a lot, including his own mistakes and mis-steps. But he cannot provide legal advice in the legal sense; Only lawyers approved for such specialist questions can do this. Nevertheless, you can learn from them, find out more and put their knowledge into a comprehensible form, enriched by numerous cases from everyday philatelic practice. In this respect, this book is seen as a companion to important questions, as a work and life-related guide that can protect you from mistakes and thus from harm.

Wolfgang Maassen
Denia, August 2015

END

Horst Hille

The sufferings of the young (and old) Moschkau

[Die leiden des jungen (und alten) Moschkaus]

Neue Lipsia Rundschau, 1985, Volume 18, Issue 2, Whole number 102

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

April 2024

THE SUFFERINGS OF THE YOUNG (AND OLD) MOSCHKAU

A contribution to Dr. Alfred Moschkau research

In his book “On the History of Philately” (published by Louis Senf, Leipzig, 1879), the old master of German philately and probably the first great German philatelist, Dr. Alfred Moschkau (born on the 24th January 1848 in Löbau, died on the 27th May 1912 in Oybin), also discussed personal matters regarding his state of health. In the section “Also a reminder. For my friends!” (p.77) he says: “My heart disease – a tantalizing torment up to this hour – had occurred in a serious form in the autumn of 1859 and had thrown me into the sick bed.” On the other hand, this fact, which in itself was extremely unpleasant, was the reason why he - at the age of eleven, already confined to the hospital room for a long time - was supposed to occupy himself with his father’s old letters and thus got into philately. You can read what happened next in my article “He was the very first exhibitor” (see, 1978, Issue 1, p.8). In 1983, also appeared a small leaflet with his short biography at the then redesigned or renamed “Bergmuseum Dr. Alfred Moschkau” in Oybin. Much more about him will be printed when we mark the 75th anniversary of his death in 1987. For example, the well-known Halle philatelist Ernst König deals in depth with the life and work of the old master of our hobby. Here we only provide a few additional details about his physical suffering, from original sources that are not available elsewhere. They show that he mastered and endured them with heroic patience - despite all this, he lived to be 64 years old.

In my collection of documents about important philatelists there are also some postcards written by Moschkau to friends, which make it quite clear the harassment he suffered throughout his life, but which also demonstrate that our hobby can be a source of strength even under such health constraints. I quote:

- From his card dated 27th February 1899:
“... that the correspondence came to a standstill due to illness. First I suffered from bladder hemorrhoids and insomnia for almost 3 weeks, and for the last 11 days we have all been hit by influenza in a particularly severe form.”
- From a card dated 4th January 1900:
“The main train arrives... provided that my condition doesn’t deteriorate. My old heart disease, bad pectoral rheumatism and catarrh, I haven’t really gotten over in the last two days...”

- From his card dated 9th December 1901:
“I have been blessed with a stomach ailment in addition to my old troubles for over a month now.”
- From his card dated 7th June 1907:
“We have a cornucopia of worries. My son, the teacher, is in a nervous condition. Sanatorium for over 4 months! Added to this is my physical misery, which I bear calmly and do not weaken at work.”

Our respect for Alfred Moschkau's diverse achievements - including within philately - can certainly only grow in view of these meaningful statements from his own hand.

END

Jan Ulrich Clauss

Memorial of the 75th Birthday of Wolfgang Maassen RDP FRPSL AiJP CPh on the 25th January 2024

[Festschrift zum 75. Geburtstag von Wolfgang Maassen RDP FRPSL AiJP CPh am 25. Januar 2024]

Drukfrey, Neulingen, Germany, 2024, 140pp.

(Translation of the Contents pages and Introduction only, pp.3-7.)

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

May 2023

MEMORIAL OF THE 75TH BIRTHDAY OF WOLFGANG MAASSEN

RDP FRPSL AiJP CPh ON THE 25TH JANUARY 2024

CONTENTS

Preface	7
Authors' contributions	12
Eckart Bergmann: W. M. – A philatelic trademark	12
Torsten Berndt: Stay in touch and work together	20
Jan Ulrich Clauss: As a researcher, completely stunned by the Greatness	31
Hans-Jürgen Dobiak: My encounters with Wolfgang Maassen	35
Ralph Ebner: The History of Philately	37
Peter Feuser: Almost superhuman conciliance	39
Christoph & Regina Gärtner: A birthday of superlatives	41
Andreas Hahn: A grand seigneur of philately	42
Thomas Höpfner: The Royal's 2015 show in Gotha	45
Heinz Jaeger: A handwritten greeting with a fountain pen!	49
Rolf-Dieter Jaretsky: Thoroughness is his trademark	50
Chris King: Ypres (Flanders) 1914-2014	51

Günther Korn: A personality in philately from A-Z	59
Rüdiger Krenkel: Wolfgang not a clone – a special person!	62
Gerhard Lang: The Torres-Usigli forgeries of old German states	64
Franz-Karl Lindner: Nomen est omen – name says it all!	71
Karl Louis: Wolfgang and the album with the Yellow Merkur	80
Patrick Maselis: Fifteen versions of a work of art	85
Dieter Michelson: And it never made WUMM!	86
Giancarlo Morolli: Decades of successful cooperation!	89
Igor Pirc: The Slovenian Chain Breakers (Verigarji)	92
Franz-Josef Pütz: Class leader – in German and philately	97
Harald Rauhut: Wolfgang for the seventy-fifth!	102
Rainer von Scharpen: Cook and Waiter	105
Alfred Schmidt: Paths crossed many times	108
Vincent Schouberechts: Joint Research Trips in Southern Europe	113
Hans Schwarz: 1949 – A noble vintage!	115
Christian & Renate Springer: Protagonist of philatelic history	120
Pedro Vas Pereira: Greetings from Portugal	124
Klaus Weis: Without a title, but with proportions!	125
Klaus Wenz: Philatelic statistics actually	127
Jürgen Witkowski: Smoking heads!	128
Karlheinz Wittig: Brazil – His profession!	130
Wilhelm van Loo (photos)	8, 8, 9, 132
Biographies of contributors	135

FOREWORD

It used to be said in Bonn: Two aeroplanes meet in the air and Hans-Friedrich Genscher sits in both. Those who know the scene today say that these words could just as easily apply to Wolfgang Maassen. For two or three years, their large volumes, published synchronously, were overflowing, and everyone was wondering how they managed to do it without copying from themselves. Anyone who writes so much has to copy from themselves, because there is not so much new in the philatelic world that it is possible to write original, thick tomes that weigh no less than 3 kg and are innovative in terms of content and text. But as the 34 participants of this festival unanimously assure, everything produced by WM is always new, and that should be the case if you are the greatest philatelic historian in Europe.

There is probably no other so celebrated, who has bequeathed so much to our collectors in his German and English-language publications that are so diverse and interesting from a philately-historical perspective: as a philately editor for decades, as AIJP President, as an active promoter and innovator of the Royal Philatelic Society London (RPSL) in Britain and on the continent, as founder of the Consilium Philatelicum of the BDPh (CPh), as publisher of Phil*Creativ and antiquarian of Phil*Shop, as author and editor of Phila Historica and as BDPh exhibition organizer and imaginative AIJP patron of international philatelic events worldwide.

If I were younger, I would offer WM to work on a new edition of his 6-volume standard work Who's Who, because it deserves it, as it is probably the world's only contemporary philatelic encyclopedia on personalities. But since even the prolific writer WM needed a dozen years to complete the entire opus, I would also need at least that amount of time. But only the gods know whether I would still be alive.

For reasons of size - I had promised the sponsor "almost a hundred pages with probably 20 authors" - we had to forego a bibliography of WM, because it would have doubled the size of the book, and the deal with the sponsor was about "a small book" and not from a Maassen tome.

But sometimes the needs are too great: Since our dear WM is active across Europe, I also wanted to integrate the authorship across Europe. This didn't work in all cases. We now have a group of authors from Belgium, Britain, Germany, Italy, Portal, Switzerland, Slovenia and Spain - from eight countries. My original goal of bringing together a dozen states - including all nine of Germany's neighbors - was not successful because the authors from France, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the Czech Republic - who were certainly chosen according to personal criteria - did not give me any feedback. I hope that the 34 authors gathered here (including the co-authors there are 37), including five on the AIJP board, six examples from the Roll of Distinguished Philatelists (RDP) and five auctioneers, still represent a cross-section of philatelic colleagues and Friends of Wolfgang Maassen.

Compiling these contributions, including their sources, some of which were documented with forensic meticulousness (not always successful), was not as easy as planned. Some authors, e.g. Heinz Jaeger, Chris King, Patrick Maselis, Giancarlo Morolli and Renate Springer, responded immediately with a finished text. It may be coincidence: But all of these five are members of the Roll of Distinguished Philatelists (RDP). Others had to write four or five times before they were ready to write something, and even then they left the editor hanging.

When I created the booklet, my email archive contained over 320 emails that had accumulated over the three years of planning the book. The first half dozen of these were correspondence with Karlheinz Wittig, with whom I had had close cooperation on location and content for years. In the end, he was the first to write, and that was a good thing, since he didn't quite reach 100 years of age - but he wrote his very nice contribution in good time (including historical photographs that couldn't be systematized down to the icing on the cake)!

But today we are dedicating a book for himself to the man who wrote so much for all of us and for others! And the celebrated person doesn't need a bibliography of his own works. This would be more intended to shed light on our authors from Laibach to London and from Milan to Roeselare. But we can still put that into the world.

Godesberg, 1st December 2023

Jan Ulrich Clauss

END

Hans Wagner

Dr. med. Ludwig König †

Deutsche Briefmarken-Zeitung, March 1915, Volume 26, Issue 3, p.33-34

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

June 2023

Dr. med. LUDWIG KÖNIG †

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
December 1895, Volume 1, Issue 12

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.XXXXI-XXXII

Philatelic Review

(Two copies must be sent to us of journals which it is desired to have mentioned in this review.)

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
March 1896, Volume 2, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.IX-XII

Survey

Dr. Rommel, Leipzig

Survey of articles, etc. appearing in the periodical literature of the year 1895 on the postage stamps of the German States, and of monographs on this material published during the same period.

(Continuation)

p.XII

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
April 1896, Volume 2, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.XIII-XVI

Survey

Dr. Rommel, Leipzig

Survey of articles, etc. appearing in the periodical literature of the year 1895 on the postage stamps of the German States, and of monographs on this material published during the same period.
(Concluded)

p.XVI

Chronicle.

of the changes that have occurred in the literary field.
(Conclusion follows)

p.XVI

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
May 1896, Volume 2, Issue 5

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.XVII

Chronicle.

of the changes that have occurred in the literary field.

pp.XVII-XVIII

From the Book Market.

p.XVIII

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
June 1896, Volume 2, Issue 6

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.XXI

Chronicle.

of the changes that have occurred in the literary field.

pp.XXI-XXII

Literature.

p.XXII

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
July 1896, Volume 2, Issue 7

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.XXI

Chronicle.

of the changes that have occurred in the literary field.

p.XXI

Literature.

p.XXII

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
August 1896, Volume 2, Issue 8

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.XXIII

Philatelic Review.

(Two free of charge copies must be sent to us of journals which it is desired to have mentioned in this review.)

p.XXIV

Literature.

p.XXIV

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
September 1896, Volume 2, Issue 9

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.XXV-XXVI

Chronicle.

of the changes that have occurred in the literary field.

p.XXVI

Literature.

p.XXVI

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
October 1896, Volume 2, Issue 10

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.XXVII

Chronicle.

of the changes that have occurred in the literary field.

p.XXVII-XXVIII

Literature.

p.XXVIII

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
November 1896, Volume 2, Issue 11

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.XXIX-XXX

Philatelic Review

(Two copies must be sent to us of journals which it is desired to have mentioned in this review.)

p.XXX

Literature.

p.XXX

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
December 1896, Volume 2, Issue 12

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.XXXI

Chronicle.

of the changes that have occurred in the literary field.

pp.XXXI-XXXII

Literature.

p.XXXII

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
January 1897, Volume 3, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.I-II

Chronicle.

of the changes that have occurred in the literary field.

p.II

Literature.

p.II

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
February 1897, Volume 3, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

p.III

Chronicle.

of the changes that have occurred in the literary field.

pp.III-V

Survey.

Dr. Rommel, Leipzig

Survey of articles, etc. appearing in the periodical literature of the year 1896 on the postage stamps of the German States including attachments etc., and of monographs on this material published during the same period.

In the same way as last year, I am beginning to publish the bibliographical notes that I have accumulated in 1896. This time too, absolute completeness is not required. But I hope to offer researchers, whether they are active as writers or not, a tool that will be of some service to them.

pp.V-VI

Literature.

p.VI

Periodicals received by the Editor.

END

Die Philatelistische Litteratur
April 1897, Volume 3, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Betty Howarth for Brian J. Birch
Lieu dit au Guinot, 3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
ca.1999

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.XIII-XIV

Survey.

Dr. Rommel, Leipzig

Survey of articles, etc. appearing in the periodical literature of the year 1896 on the postage stamps of the German States including attachments etc., and of monographs on this material published during the same period.

END

Dr. Weinert is dead
[Dr. Weinert gestorben]

Sammler-Woche, 5th July 1942, Volume 25, Issue 13/14, pp.103-104.

Translation by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
November 2024

DR. WEINERT IS DEAD

On the 19th May 1942, the well-known philatelist and editor of the Donaupost, Dr. Viktor Weinert, died in Bratislava at the age of 52. On the 22nd May 1942, one day before the opening of the first nationwide Slovakian stamp exhibition, which was essentially his plan, he was buried by the German, Slovakian and Hungarian philatelists of his hometown. It was tragic fate that he was not able to see his last work, which was not just a stamp exhibition for him, but a symbol of the unity of the peoples of his homeland. It was the guiding principle of his entire life and philately was a service to this idea, to which he, a true child of the great Nibelung stream, had dedicated his heart and mind from an early age. Born on the 13th June 1890 in Bratislava, the son of a Palffy estate manager. After finishing high school he attended the University of Budapest, where he obtained a doctorate in law (Dr. Jur.), then graduated from the Vienna Commercial Academy and finally the College of Natural Resources and Life Sciences in Hungarian Altenburg, from where he returned home with his third diploma in 1917.

Even as a middle school student he was an enthusiastic stamp collector and wrote several articles for Senf's stamp journal, winning prizes. Of course his father did not want to know anything about such a "profession", but for the young doctor it was a "calling" to which he devoted himself exclusively after the collapse of the Danube Monarchy. His name was soon spread throughout the philatelic world by the Donaupost, which was first published on the 1st January 1918, and thus just celebrated its 25th anniversary. One of the most outstanding experts on the stamps of Austria and Hungary, Dr. Weinert put his magazine primarily at the service of these two popular but difficult subject areas, including the successor states, namely Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia and later independent Slovakia.

This gave the Donaupost its special touch, and wherever there were friends of the Austrian and Hungarian stamps, the attractive booklets with their rich and varied articles were distributed. The popular "Donaupost catalogues" for Hungary, Austria and the successor states also emerged, of which the booklet Austria 1850-1918, which was only published in January 1941, will probably have to satisfy the need for a handy special Austrian catalogue for a long time to come. Unfortunately, Dr. Weinert was not able to complete the second part, Austria 1918-1938. However, in addition to these specialist areas, Dr. Weinert also had an open and watchful eye for all other philatelic areas. He was particularly interested in fundamental questions, particularly new ideologies and movements, to which he readily offered hospitality in his Donaupost, even when they contradicted his own views and methods, which he had inherited from his youth. Thus, despite all narrow-minded dogmatism, Dr. Weinert was not only a pillar of art philately, to which he still belonged with his own work, but also a pioneer of new philately, which focused on the artistic and educational values of the stamp. Philatelic "materialism" and "idealism" met in friendly terms in his magazine, which owes its great success precisely to this fundamental tolerance and all-roundedness.

Dr. Weinert's death therefore leaves a significant gap in philatelic life and one can only hope that forces will be found that are capable of continuing his life's work in his spirit.

END

Pierre Mahé

The Stamp Dealers of the Olden Days and Their Catalogues
[Les Marchands de Timbres-Poste d'Autrefois et Leurs Catalogues]
Yvert & Tellier, Amiens, France, 1908, 371pp.

Translated sections: Foreword, pp.viii-xii

Contents and Translation by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
October 2024

THE STAMP DEALERS OF THE OLDEN DAYS
AND THEIR CATALOGUES

Page [XIII]

..... I wonder if these retrospective notes on disappeared individuals, special here, but sometimes very secondary, could have some interest for others than our professionals – and, again?

On the other hand, I think of so many other people, great or fat, dealers in partoles, sellers of wind, dealers in orviétan and hollow meats, political horse-dealers and other dealers, about whom we are told to listen. day, leaving very illustrious, but whose entire work in their entire life will not have been equivalent to that of a planer of boards or of a laboratory servant - and I will ignore: my The reader will be able to do the same if they wish.

NADAR: Quand j'étais photographe

Pages [IX]-XII

FOREWORD

Recently, while rereading an interesting article by the late M. Jacquier, published in 1901, in the Schweizer Briefmarken Zeitung, relating to the late Ed. de Laplante, and entitled: At the beginning of the stamp trade, the idea came to me to to give this article a continuation, a complement, and to bring back to memory some of the stamp dealers of the past, forgotten today by the majority of those who lived in their time, and unknown, or little known, to the present generation. I thought that this resurrection would not fail to be interesting for all those, and there are many of them, who profess the cult of Timbrophilia, some say: Philately.

Bibliophiles are curious about the history of the booksellers of yesteryear: why wouldn't the same be true for stamp enthusiasts, with regard to the stamp dealers of primitive times?

I will not speak, here, of the traders who, through the ages, have continued to inhabit our planet and still practice there, to the great satisfaction of stamp collectors, their flourishing and fruitful trade. I will only take care of those who have left this world to go to another, which we like to believe to be better, or who still live today, peacefully enjoying the fortune they acquired, in a corner of countries, unknown to the layman, forgetting the tribulations which could have made their commercial life difficult.

Seven main personalities will be the subject of the lines that we chastise to humble merchants whose only counter was the parapet of the quays of the Seine and for ceiling, the sky, very often inclement. I thought I would please my readers by partly reviving, before their eyes, the different catalogues mentioned in the course of this work. For this purpose, I give the phototypographic reproduction of the first pages of each of the said catalogs, accompanied by the facsimile of its cover, printed on paper of a color similar to that of the original, or as close as it was possible to do it. This will be compensation for those of my readers who were not lucky enough to be the fortunate owners of these brochures which have become, for the most part, impossible to find. Missing the object itself, they will have a partial reproduction of it, with rigorous accuracy. The rare catalog of F. Valette, having the particularity that it is at the same time a collector's manual, I have reproduced, in full, the curious didactic part.

In this work, I have engaged in work whose result will not fail to be appreciated by my readers. This is how I broke down the catalogues, and completely "anatomized", dissected them, dividing the whole by the details, which allows us to know what were the constituent elements of a rudimentary collection of stamps, with various periods of 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865 and 1866, date of publication of the last catalog published during this first five-year period of philately.

We can thus, at a glance, according to this classification see what was, on each of the above dates, the respective number of stamps existing for each different specialty, in all branches of franking and of the tax, both for letters and for newspapers, and printed matter of all kinds.

While not ignoring, by their face value, which stamps were related to this or that other postal service, I have however mentioned in a special way only those whose use was specifically defined and whose destination was indicated by the inscriptions, with a few exceptions such as New Caledonia, etc., whose local character is sufficiently established by usage.

I have also pointed out the number, particular to each catalogue, of unissued stamps, included by mistake, or by analogy, as well as that of essays, projects etc., presented, wrongly, as real stamps.

Finally, I noted the various errors that exist in the designation or description of certain stamps that were still poorly known in a time that today we could call ancient.

As a complement to the study of merchant catalogues, a few pages are devoted to that of Mr. Alfred Potiquet, prototype of all French works of the same genre.

Next I give an overview of the usefulness of special libraries made up of newspapers, catalogues, manuals etc. all other works dealing with stamps, and the services they are called upon to provide to collectors as well as special writers.

We will also find, at the end of the work, a comparative table of the number of stamps appearing in each of the catalogues studied, and the alphabetical index of all the countries having issued postage stamps, from 1840 to 1866.

It only remains for me to ask my readers for their full indulgence for the errors which will inevitably have crept into a work that is as laborious as it is considerable.

P. M.

Page [373]

CONTENTS

Blank pages have been included in the page count for completeness.

Author's Note	p.[VIII]
Foreword	pp.[IX]-XII
Edard de Laplante	pp.1-38
François Valette	pp.39-96
Alexandre Baillieu	pp.97-170
M ^{me} E. Nicolas	pp.171-200
E. Thirifocq	pp.201-220
Ch. Roussin	pp.221-298
Le Catalogue Potiquet	pp.299-344

Addenda

1. Comparison of the numbers of stamps in each of the catalogues. pp.345-346
(Note that there is an error in the Potiquet 1st edition. It actually contained details of 1212 stamps not 1112 as stated.)
2. Places issuing postage stamps known in 1866. pp.347-348
3. A postage stamp broker J. -W. Elb. pp.351-356
4. Open air dealers. pp.357-364
5. On philatelists' libraries. pp.365-371

END

Hermann Mittelmann

Catalogue of Current Philatelic Periodicals

[Katalog der Existierenden Briefmarken-Zeitungen]

Julius kittl, Mährish-Ostrau, Moravia, Austro-Hungary, 1889, 32pp.

(Translation of the introduction only, inside front cover)

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

December 2024

CATALOGUE OF CURRENT PHILATELIC PERIODICALS

HERMANN MITTELMANN

Czernowitz (Austria)

Acceptance of subscriptions and advertisements for all stamp newspapers listed here. Return postage must be included with every request. Unstamped letters will not be accepted. Sample copies of all stamp newspapers listed here can only be sent against submission of 15pf. = 10kr. per copy. Stamp dealers who advertise in the newspapers several times receive a corresponding discount. I also grant philatelic societies a corresponding discount for both subscriptions and advertisements. Suppliers of stamp newspapers not listed here are requested to send sample copies.

END

Wolfgang Maassen

Philately: Insights – Outlooks - Perspectives: Lectures and unpublished studies 1999-2012
[Philatelie: Einblicke – Ausblicke – Durchblicke: Vorträge und unveröffentlichte studien
1999-2012]

Phil*Creativ, Schwalmthal, Germany, 2012, 653pp.

Translation of the Contents and introductory notes on pages 3-9.

Translation by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
January 2025

PHILATELY: INSIGHTS – OUTLOOKS - PERSPECTIVES:
LECTURES AND UNPUBLISHED STUDIES 1999-2012

CONTENTS

	Page
Lectures and unpublished studies
1. Psychology and more...	11
“Collectors are weirdos!” – A humorous psychological look at anomalies of the human species (2011)	12
Marginalia on the psycho(patho)logy of philatelic officials. (Self-)critical notes on an unpopular topic (2006)	17
Collecting as a passion. From coffee parties to collecting excess. Examples from the history of philately (2006)	31
2. Definitions, Questions – and Answers	42
All philately or what? – A contribution to the development history of the term Philately from 1860-2000 (2001)	44
All literature or what? – A contribution to the problem of evaluating advertising and documenting literature (2012)	61
On the discussion “Philately and the history of mentality”: Against a narrow view of reality (2011)	73
What is philatelic history? – Marginalia for a better understanding (2010)	80
Fascination of philatelic history research – using the example of “Gebrüder Senf” (2010)	91

A king and his secretary: Ferrari and Mahé – On the value of philatelic history research (2011)	119
Problems of philatelic history research using the example of a book project on Dr. Alfred Moschkau (2011) 126
Moschkau's postcards. Genuine objects through the history of philately (2012)	147
Thoughts on the subject of fiscal stamps and the history of philately (2012)	150
3. Politics & Philately: Reflections	157
From Paradise to the Fall, from the Stamp to Philately ... (1999)	158
Politics and Philately in National Socialism (2005)	172
60 Years since the End of World War II: Philately, Associations and Clubs in the Third Reich (2005)	181
“DDR-Philately from my Point of View” (2007)	191
The Reception of Moschkau in East and West (2012)	201
4. Special holidays	214
German Philatelist's Days: Selected aspects of the past and thoughts on the future (2010)	217
On the discussion about the German Philatelist's Days (2010)	227
On the future of the German Philatelist's Days (2011)	238
“Wuppertal is everywhere!” Notes on a vexed topic (2012)	242
Literature exhibitions and more. A historical review (2012)	275
5. Classic and valuable	285
The alternative way: Collecting classics! (2004)	287
My questions to Lady Gomm (2011)	306
In the beginning there was the stamp. Then the forgery... Remarkable phases of the testing system in German philately (1860 to ca. 1930) (2008)	320

25 years of ATM in Germany - 25 years of RSV: The “classic” motif - Historical, personal and a never-ending story... (2005)	333
6. National and international associations	342
“Of stumbling blocks and milestones in German-Austrian philately. Philatelic historical notes on the shared history”. (2006)	344
60 years of the Association of Lower Saxony Philatelist Societies (2006)	351
The BDPH and its “dominant power” on the Rhine and Main: 60 years of the LV [Landes Verein] Hessen (2007)	366
60 years of the Middle Rhine Philatelist’s Association: Trials and tribulations – aspects of the early predecessor and history of the Middle Rhine Association (2008)	378
The AIJP: A world association for the benefit of authors and specialist journalists (2010)	392
7. Well-known clubs: From the early days of organized philately	401
The development of club philately in Leipzig (2007)	402
The beginnings of organized philately in Germany (2008)	410
Reaching for the stars on the philatelic Olympus. Selected aspects of the 120-year history of the Berlin Philatelists’ Club (2008)	425
125 years of the Hannover Stamp Club: What was it like 125 years ago and before? Aspects from the early days of philately (2011)	442
8. Legendary philatelists	447
Of someone who set out to conquer the world: The dream of Wilhelm Faber (2004)	448
The other Moschkau. Alfred Moschkau on the 100 th anniversary of his death (2012)	462
Roots – developments – errors: selected aspects of Hugo Schwaneberger – Eugen Berlin and Hugo Michel (2010)	467
Dealers & collectors: from harmony to minor tones (2005)	476

Memories of Dr. Franz Kalckhoff (2006)	503
Ludwig Hesshaimer. Artist and association philatelist (2005)	517
The history of the Senf brothers in Leipzig (2007)	531
9. Literary	560
The oldest stamp album in the world (2010)	561
From the first price lists to the first catalogues (2010)	570
German-British literary competition. First steps – milestones and more (2011)	579
A catalogue of the people. Hugo Michel's Europe Catalogue (2010)	586
Changed markets – changed catalogue approaches. A historical review (2010)	595
60 years of "philately" – A look back (2009)	605
60 years of "philately" – A look behind the scenes! (2009)	613
On the future of the philatelic press (2010)	622
Appendices
Appendix: List of people	631

Not finished
END

O. Bogh

Danish philately 70 years ago

[Dansk Filateli for 70 aar siden]

Nordisk Filatelistisk Tidskrift, June 1956, Issue 3, pp.86-87

Translation by Christopher King for Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
2024

DANISH PHILATELY 70 YEARS AGO

The following article was found in a partially completed manuscript among the papers of the late Assistant Administrator Bogh, together with the appendices mentioned in the article. When it was delivered to K.P.K.'s Library, the editor of this journal had the opportunity to go through the article and appendices, after which they are reproduced here with a few corrections. (Ed.).

Recently I had the opportunity to familiarise myself with one of the oldest collections I have ever come across, as it seems to have been assembled in the early sixties of the last century and contained practically no stamps after that time.

It was - of course - one of those collections where all the stamps were glued solidly to the pages of an exercise book and where the wide-margined stamps were clipped for the sake of beauty, where the concept of all stamps was of unspeakably little significance, in short, a collection whose problematic commercial value was decidedly disproportionate to the catalogue value of the stamps. But a collection that a collector could get a little philatelic pleasure out of by gently tinkering with it in the long winter evenings, when he was prepared to accept the disappointments.

The collection was assembled by the late merchant Zander in his boyhood.

Should the reader be happy to get through this introduction, which does not contain anything particularly new, there is something more real to report. The collection included a number of philatelic records which, thanks to the family's generosity, were not destroyed.

It appears from these that in the year 1863 a philatelic magazine was founded or at least planned to be founded in Copenhagen! The detailed circumstances can be reconstructed with a little imagination from a leaf torn out of a notebook among the records. On one side is a draft of a Latin exercise, on the other side the following:

Information is received about collections to be disposed of - both collected and individual stamps to be sold, and where in the city such are sold.

Stamps recognised as good by the Editor are accepted as payment. A price list of stamps is available in half sheets at the end of the month. The price is 2 skilling a week per issue. The magazines could be obtained from the editor every Saturday - More than 8 subscribers ...

It remains to be seen whether the journal has been in business and for how long, as well as what it has contained, but you can see a whole philatelic picture emerging from other records. It is in school, then, that interest in stamps was awakened as early as 1863. What the Latin exercise looked like in its final form may perhaps be a question.

But there is more of interest. A small pocketbook contains a list of certain stamps with the date and selling price as well as names - probably those of schoolmates. It remains to be seen whether they had the stamps delivered in return for payment when they received their weekly allowance, or whether they themselves made deliveries to merchant Zander and his brother. But the prices - that was what youthful collectors could achieve between themselves, presumably within the school walls - are of no small interest to today's collectors.

There is also a book with prices of certain stamps as well as various newspaper clippings among the remainder.

Furthermore, a philatelic club has been in operation. I must preface this remark by saying that I have had to resort to a certain poetic licence to reconstruct the purpose of the club. It was apparently a swap club, where people settled in cash in return for receiving cash for what they could deliver.

The number of stamp dealers was not limited to Erik Ritzau, who in July 1863 published a printed price list in English of unused stamps, but according to Zander's notes and information in his surviving records, stamps could also be obtained from Fæster, Nygade 7; Larsen, Krystalgade 19; Holm, Sværtegade 11; Udstillings-Salon, Østergade 54, 2nd Floor; Erik Ritzau, Fiolstræde 17, 4th Floor (Sale at Fæster).

Zander has also made a comparison of the prices at the various shops, and the following should be noted from this:

Luxembourg 10 C. cost 1 Sg. 2 Sk. at Fæster, but only 1 Sk. at Holm. Furthermore, it may surely interest today's collectors to become acquainted with a small selection of Ritzau's List: Bremen 2, 3, 5, 7 and 10 gr. could be had for 2, 3, 4, 5 and 9d respectively (English coin: Denmark's 2 Rbs. cost 1/6, the first two Schleswig and Holstein each 4/-), Finland No. 1 and 2 together 1/6, Oldenburg 1851 1/3, Church State 50 Baj 3/-, 1 Scudo 6/-, Poland 10 Kop. 8d, Sweden 9 and 12 Øre Vaaben together 3/-, Württemberg 18 Kr. (Issue not stated) 9d.

The price list ends with: On prefere corresponder en anglais, danois ou allemande. [I prefer to correspond in English, Danish or German.]

That Zander has occupied a rather prominent position in contemporary philately is evident from a letter sent to him by messenger, in which a Mr. D. Lippert informs him that since he has taken over E. Ritzau's business, he recommends himself to him and points out that the sales are still at the bookseller Falkenberg and in the cigar shop Nygade 7, whereas he himself can be found in Dybensgade 16, 2nd floor, every Sunday from 12 to 2.

Zander has kept accurate accounts of the expenses for the stamps he has acquired. Of the prices he has paid, the following should be noted: 3 øre Sweden Footpost 4 Sk., 1 Sk. Sweden Footpost 12 Sk., 5 Sk. Mecklenburg Schwerin 6 Sk., 18 Kr. Württemberg 4 Sk., 5 c. North America (was shown as Yvert No. 6), 2 skilling, Ionian Islands, all values of 2 marks and 4 skilling.

The records also contain adaptations to a standard catalogue with a glossary of philatelic terms in foreign languages. The papers also include various newspaper cuttings and notices, but a detailed description of these would probably go too far. The entire material has been donated to the Copenhagen Philatelic Club Library, where it is probably in good hands.

END

Ole Steen Jacobsen

Stamp collecting in Denmark 1840-1899. Erik Ritzau – founder of Danish philately.
[Frimærkesamleriet i Danmark 1840-1899. Erik Ritzau – Grundlægger af dansk filateli.]
Post-Historisk Tidsskrift, August 1993, Issue 3, pp.90-102.

Translation by Christopher King for Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
2024

STAMP COLLECTING IN DENMARK 1840-1899
ERIK RITZAU – FOUNDER OF DANISH PHILATELY.

Aug. Krautwalds Frimærkehandel

Editor's note: This image was not part of the original article. It was inserted by the translator.

Since the advent of the stamp in Great Britain on 6 [Not the 13th!] May 1840, stamps have been collected. In the beginning, it was probably also a novelty, but the collecting mania persisted and unconsciously people also started collecting postal history. Back then, it wasn't just stamps that were collected, but everything related: local postage stamps, stickers, cigarette stamps, railway stamps, bus tickets, savings stamps, telegram and telegraph stamps, coins and banknotes, wax seals, letters from famous people, autographs, belt buckles, antiques, etc.

In Denmark, the first stamp was issued about 11 years after the British, but it has not been possible to find out when the first Danish collectors began. However, we do know that around 1860, collecting started in earnest all over the world.

In a Danish diary entry from 1861, Carl Wium states that for his 22nd birthday he received a stamp for his collection from Thurn and Taxis. Customs inspector O. V. Riise (1842-2 October 1915) started collecting stamps in 1865. In 1888, Riise became chairman of KPK, a position he held for the next 25 years. In Elsinore in 1866, N. Jacobsen (1854-1931) started collecting stamps. In 1915 he wrote about stamps in Salmonsens's Leksikon.

The postal service and collectors

The first time the Danish postal service noticed that stamp collecting had started around the world was on the 8th May 1861. On this day, the postal service issued a circular to draw attention to the fact that letters from abroad, especially from overseas, often arrived here in poor condition, as the stamps had been torn off en route. "The staff are forbidden to appropriate the stamps on the dispatches, as this is inadmissible." In both 1882 and 1884, it is again necessary to emphasise the rules. "The staff must make sure by noting on the items if the stamps have been taken or removed either by the sender or the recipient (money orders and postal money orders and address letters)."

The first enquiry to the Post Office from a collector occurs as early as 1861. It comes from Paris. The next enquiry is from Australia in 1863.

The Post Office receives its first enquiry from a stamp dealer in May 1864. It is J.-B. Moens from Belgium, who ordered 10 thaler worth of stamps. History is silent on whether he received his stamps, but almost all enquiries in the last century were rejected. Instead, the postal service referred the buyer to the public sales outlets. If money was sent with the enquiry, it was immediately returned.

In the 19th century, the postal service was not aware of all the economic opportunities that were and are available to dealers and collectors around the world.

The first stamp advertisements

Eksempler på datidens frimærkeannoncer

For Frimærkesamlere.

Sjældne og ordinaire Frimærker i nye og brugte Exemplarer fra 1 Sk. til 5 Rd. pr. Stk., faaes i Cigarhandelen paa Østergade Nr. 26 hos

C. Rauth.

Illustreret Tidende 16. 6. 1867

Blandede Frimærker.

100 danske Skillingsmærker . . .	Kr. 0.90
100 norske Skillingsmærker . . .	2.00
200 Canada	1.00
100 Island	3.50
800 Finland	1.00
100 Japan	1.00
100 Tunis	3.00
100 Rumænien	1.00
100 Portorico	3.00
1000 Europakun	0.50

Porto ekstra. Prislister gratis.
N. S. Nedergaard, Skive, Danmark.

Illustreret Familie Journal 15. 1. 1899

Master bookbinder Larsen, Krystalgade 19, Copenhagen, placed the first known advertisement for stamps in December 1862 in Berlingske Tidende:

“Udenlandske Postmærker i stort Assortiment, er til behageligt Udvalg, Krystalgaden 19”. [At your convenience, a large variety of Foreign stamps are available at 19 Krystalgade.]

At the same time, unknown numbers of people searched under a ‘box number’ advertisement in Berlingske Tidende:

“Stamp collectors and stamp dealers are asked to leave their address at this paper’s counter under the reference A.A. Altona 707”.

Unfortunately, nothing more is known today about this advertisement.

The first album

In 1865, the first stamp album was published by one of Denmark’s earliest known stamp dealers Erik Ritzau (30th April 1839-23rd December 1903) at Chr. Falkenbergs Boghandel in Copenhagen, and printed at Thiele’s Bogtrykkeri.

A new and improved version of this album for postage stamps (with 11 pages of text) was published in 1868.

France was the first European country with a stamp catalogue. It was published in Paris on the 21st December 1861. The first catalogue is believed to be from Argentina in 1859.

Great Britain, Belgium and Germany published catalogues in 1862, the same year the first forgeries were discovered! Belgium had its own catalogue published in 1862. Stanley-Gibbons’ is from 1866.

The first albums were designed only with blank spaces, the rest of the description had to be added by the collectors themselves. In the beginning, the stamps in the album were attached with glue, but later they started to use pieces of selvage from complete sheets of stamps. Stamp hinges were unknown.

German Stamp Album from the last century. Note that it includes an essay, a postal stationery cut out and railway stamps

Calls for reprints

Abonn. 1 Kr. aarlig

FILATELISTEN

Red. og Udgiver P.A. Sand, Struer

Jugend-inspireret "hoved" til frimærketidsskrift

Udgaar maanedlig én G.

Demand for the Danish 2 RBS stamp was so strong in the USA in 1865 that the stamps were fetching 2 dollars each. (3 RDL 76 SK). In 1864, a Danish collector, pharmacist M. L. Møller, suggested to the postal service that they should reprint the 2 RBS stamps. He had checked that the same stamp paper and printing plates were still available and offered to buy the "reprints" for 2 skilling each (it was an idea with possibilities).

In 1878, it was stamp dealer Carl Marx, of Copenhagen, who repeated the call for reprints. He drew attention to the considerable net income of around DKK 5,000-6,000 that the postal service could achieve "by proceeding with a little caution". Carl Marx pointed out that countries such as Sweden, USA, Germany and Spain had large revenues from such sales and immediately ordered 100 sheets with 2 RBS cancelled for a total of DKK 400.00.

It wasn't until 1885 that the Danish postal service issued reprints of the 21 oldest stamps, but not for collectors. These reprints were to be used exclusively for the international bureau in Bern.

At that time, however, the demand from abroad for the Danish postal service was mostly for stamps and postal stationery from the Danish West Indies and Iceland.

The first stamp magazines

In 1865, a French weekly magazine - Le Magasin Pittoresque - published weekly news about stamps from around the world.

In 1867, the first stamp association in Denmark was formed, the Frimærkesamlerforeningen. These members opened a shop at Grønnegade 10, 1 stuen, Copenhagen (later transferred on the 1st May 1868 to C. Torst, Naboløs 4 and Grønnegade 24). The first Danish stamp shop outside Copenhagen was opened by the Association in Aalborg at bookseller M. M. Schultz. In 1868, a group of collectors met in Kolding at the bookseller Estrup. The association also published the first magazine for collectors: Nordisk Frimærketidende.

In order to sell stamp magazines to collectors, several of these contained unused foreign stamps and postal stationery inserted in the magazine. The magazines, usually only 4 pages long, were filled with reading material, advertisements from domestic and foreign dealers as well as price lists and sales offers under box numbers.

Klubben for Frimærkesamlere.

(Sektion Kjøbenhavn). Møde i Aften, Tirsdag, Kl. 8¹/₂, i Café de Russe.
Forskjellige Meddelelser. Auktion over indleverede Mærker.

Mødet Tirsdag 24¹/₃ 1885, bliver i Arbejderforeningens store Sal, Nørrevoldgaade 92. Større Lokale har været umuligt at skaffe. Alle Adgangskort ere udleverede.

Ingeman-Petersen.

The Club for Stamp Collectors (Copenhagen Section) – Meeting Tuesday 24/3 1885

The clubs are established

In 1877, M. Vedel, Carl Lund, Charles Meyer and Arthur Philipsen tried in vain to start a “Philatelic Club”. On the 22nd January 1885, it was again Doctor Marius Vedel who was behind the establishment of Sektion Kjøbenhavn - a branch of the German Internationaler Philatelistenverein zu Dresden, founded on the 1st January 1877. At the time, it was the world’s largest stamp club with 1,800 members. The club later continued alongside the KPK until 1920. In 1887, M. Vedel was again involved in founding Kjøbenhavns Philatelistklub, which in 1891 introduced a “black book” for dubious collectors, following a foreign model. By 1900, there were around 600 members of KPK, of which around 20 attended club meetings. The first Danish stamp and propaganda exhibition took place in Holmens Kanal 17, Copenhagen on the 17th-20th June 1897. On the 9th July 1894, a local branch of KPK was established in Aarhus.

The first Danish revenue stamps were issued in 1862 and were immediately in great demand abroad, as they were collected on an equal footing with postage stamps and everything else. And in 1867, Danish collectors also started collecting Danish revenue stamps.

At Denmark’s request, the International Exhibition of Art and Industry in Paris in 1867 featured 25 stamps from the Danish West Indies.

Forgeries

In 1868, tram tickets from Kjøbenhavns Sporveje were sold by “enterprising Copenhageners” as rare Danish stamps at 18 skilling for a 4 skilling ticket and 27 skilling for an 8 skilling ticket. The tickets had been coated with glue on the back and sold as unused stamps to a Belgian stamp dealer. In 1872, there were already 750 different counterfeit stamps worldwide, although some collectors had them in their collections.

Stamp experts of the time were exclusively from abroad, many Germans in particular were involved in this field. Among the 2nd generation of expertisers was Arthur Ernst Glasewald (1860-16th September 1926) who was particularly well-known in Denmark.

Postal history information

In terms of postal history, Danish readers were kept abreast of news from abroad, including the introduction of pneumatic tube mail in Berlin and Vienna in 1877, and that all trams and buses in Brussels were equipped with letterboxes and that the conductor stamped the letters. In Berlin, it was revealed that users of stamps removed the cancellation with glue and after washing it off reused them.

Collecting became so extensive that the Danish postal service's top employees were tempted to sell off their stocks of rare stamps, misprinted stamps and postal stationery that was presumably not intended for sale.

In 1890, the estate of the deceased wholesaler Winding, Copenhagen, offered through a lawyer to sell his mint stamp collection of 5,700 stamps and 2,500 envelopes and postcards to the postal service for the purchase price of DKK 15,000. At the time, the collection was said to be the best in the Nordic region.

The top management of the Post Office also collected stamps.
This is shown in the above lettercard, sent by Chief Postal Inspector Mørch
- later Chief Postmaster for Copenhagen:

Dear Muller!

Copenhagen 5/7 90

I am ashamed that I am only now answering your kind letter of 7th inst (last month, ed.) and thank you for your unabated eagerness to increase my collections, and for what you have sent me. The reason for my long silence has been that I have still hoped to be able to send you something good, but the promises made to me have not been fulfilled. I have none of the misprints you wanted; they have long since been bought up by the stamp dealers here.

Would you care for a sack of used envelopes with perforated stamps of all kinds, mostly of course 4 and 8 øre?

If you want it, let me know; I can possibly get such a package.

A doctor Lunddahl has died; it seemed to me that you said he had something.

Old banknotes are my speciality at this time.

Kind regards and thanks!

Your affectionate Mørch

It would be interesting to know which misprints are mentioned in the letter.

“This is what Tivoli’s Postcard Kiosk looked like just after the turn of the century.
Note the rich selection of cards”.

Illustreret Konversationsleksikon was published in 1894 with the following bitter comments about collectors:

“The stamp system has been associated with a collector’s mania, which in the course of time has assumed disproportionate dimensions, as amateurs buy up old or rare stamps, which thus become the object of a formal trade. These stamps often fetch fabulous prices, and some collectors possess collections whose value at market prices can sometimes reach a fortune, and this mania has given rise to a whole literature, even a kind of scholarship, with the publication of a formal textbook on philately ("Stamp Science") in addition to historical writings, journals and so on." (Something to think about)."

The postmarks

Around 1894, since collectors now had most of the stamps, they began to take an interest in the cancellations. At first it was the number cancellations on the different issues; then the collecting quickly increased to include the post office names in the cancellations. Then the stamps were collected on whole letters - which at the time cost almost the same as the catalogue price of a used stamp. It was O. Riise's book Dänemark Studie, Die Postmarken von Dänemark. Munich, 1893 that initiated cancellation collecting in Denmark.

The first special cancellers came just after the turn of the century with a cancellation for the Charity Bazaar in Copenhagen on the 11th April 1901. In September 1902, a new KPK cancellation was issued at the Post- og Frimærkeudstillingen in Industriforeningen, Kongens. Nytorv, K and at the East Asian Exhibition - in Copenhagen, October 1902.

Postcards

In 1897, Nordisk Filatelistisk Tidsskrift states that there is a huge collector interest in illustrated postcards in this country, and the magazine hopes that this interest will rub off on the official letter cards and postal stationery introduced in 1871 and 1865 respectively. Before this time, collectors only collected cut-outs for pasting into their collection of postal stationery. The albums of the time were designed for postal stationery cut-outs. Collecting postcards immediately led to a worldwide interest in swapping postcards. Collectors wanted the stamps cancelled on the picture side of the postcard.

Albums for postcards were made

There could also be stamp jokes like these from 1876:

- A Where is the cheapest place to eat?
- B. I do not know.
- A. At the Post Office, because there the most expensive cover (couvert) costs only 8 øre.

Or another one also from 1876 read:

- A shows his stamp friend B his new Swedish postage due (Lösen) stamp.
- B But tell me, where is Lösen really?

TIMBRES-POSTE
pour Collections.

J-B. MOENS,
7, Galerie Bortier, 7,
BRUXELLES.

LES TIMBRES-POSTE
illustrés, par
J-B. MOENS.
Joli volume in-12,
avec illustrations dans le texte.
PRIX: 3 FRANCS.

ILLUSTRATIONS
du précédent ouvrage dont elles forment le complément, 54 planches.
contenant 616 types.
PRIX: 17 FRANCS.

Reklamen fra frimærkefirmaet J. B. Moens' brevppair 1864.

Advertisement from the J. B. Moens firm's letterhead

Literature before the turn of the century

By the end of the century, the following books/journals on philately had already been published in Denmark:

Erik Ritzau: Price List in English, Copenhagen, 1863

François Bertini: Adressebog over Skandinaviske Frimærke Samlere., Copenhagen, 15th April 1877.

François Bertini: Dansk Catalog over alle eksisterende frimærker., 20th April 1877
M. Vedel: Briefmarkenkatalog., 1887.
N. S. Nedergaard: Skive 1887, Kjøbeliste nr 1.
Carl Hyllested: Copenhagen, Prisliste 1883; 1889.
A. E. Glasewald & Dr Vedel, Nordischen Privatmarken., 1888.
H. Rohde: Purchase price list of stamps 1891-92.
O. V. Riise: Dänemark Studie, Die Postmarken von Dänemark., Munich, 1893.
O. V. Riise: Danmark, en philatelistisk Studie., 1894.
KPK: Katalog over Danmarks, Islands og DVI frimærker og helsager., 1899, 33 pages.
Prisliste from E. M. Ruben, 8th edition, 1897.
Jul. Tybring: 12 Prisfortegnelse over udenlandske frimærker., 1899.

Stamp magazines

Abroad, the first magazines for collectors were published in Great Britain (15th December 1862 with 10,000 subscribers) and on the 1st February 1863 in France. Most of the stamp magazines contained information about new stamps, and a significant amount of space was devoted to warning collectors against fake and counterfeit stamps, as well as dishonest collectors and stamp dealers. Today, it is still highly topical to warn collectors against repaired and fake objects.

The first stamp magazine in the Nordic countries was published in Denmark on the 26th August 1867. There were only 12 issues. On the 30th June 1868, the magazine ceased publication due to strong competition from foreign journals, as mentioned in the last issue.

This was Nordisk Frimærketidende published by an association of major Danish collectors at Klareboderne no. 5, 1st floor and printed by Carl Lund in Copenhagen.

Skandinavisk Frimærke-Journal was published by François Bertini (a stamp dealer since 1869) very briefly with 8 issues from the 20th October 1876 to May 1877, alongside 16 issues of Skandinavisk Frimærketidende by Arthur Philipsen, Gothersgade 6 with sales at Gothersgade 16. The magazine warned against the many fake stamps in circulation and showed examples and descriptions of these fake stamps.

François Bertini was also behind the publication of an Adressebog over Skandinaviske Frimærke Samlere in 1877 with 210 addresses of dealers and collectors in Scandinavia and America.

In 1878, a new edition was published with 4 issues of Nordisk Frimærkeverden by L. Emil Jensen & S. Schmidt. 1st January to 15th April 1878.

Fanø also had its own stamp magazine. On the 25th April 1890, Skandinavisk Philatelist Tidende saw the light of day. It was produced in 6 issues by N. Møller Kromann from Sønderho, Fanø, as publisher. In October of the same year, the publisher joined forces with Th. Knudsen and the magazine was renamed Skandinavisk Frimærke-Tidende. In 1891-92, stamp dealer Heinrich Rohde was the publisher. It was discontinued in September 1893.

In Nibe, on the 20th April 1894, 2 issues of Philatelist Journal were published very briefly by A. Petersen, Frimærkehandlers og samleres Avertisementshæfte was published in May 1894 in a single issue by J. A. Chr. Danielsen in Aarhus.

Before NFT - Nordisk Filatelistisk Tidsskrift - started, its predecessor was published in February to October 1894 in German. It was initially a joint Nordic project, but later exclusively from Copenhagen.

ALBUM TIL POSTFRIMÆRKER

MEG

FORTEGNELSE OVER DE FORSKJELLIGE LANDES

BREV- OG COUVERTMÆRKER,

(udstedte i Aarene 1840—1865.)

AF

ERIK RITZAU.

KJØBENHAVN.

FORLAGT AF CHR. FALKENBERGS BOCHANDEL

TRIELES BOOFTYKKERI

1865.

Danmark.

Projecterede:

Portr. Frederik VII., 8 RBS = 2½ sch. C.

Mercur, 4 RBS — 1½ sch. C.

51. Værdi i M. 2 RBS bl., Krone, korslagt Scepter og Sværd. 4 RBS br. i flere Nuancer.

53. Kr. m. m. punkt. Bd. 2 Sk. bl., 4 br., 8 gr., 16 lil.

60. do. lin. Bd. 4 Sk. br., 8 gr.

64. do. Værdi i alle 4 Hjørner. 4 Sk. br., 16 graagren.

65. do. do. 2 Sk. bl., 3 lil.

Cvt. Kr. i oph. Tr. Ov. 64. 4 Sk. br., 65. 2 Sk. bl.

Besiddelser i Vestindien. som Danmark 53. 3 cents br.

Ecuador.

65. Vb. i Ov. ½ R. bl., 1 gl., 1 gr.

England.

(1 £ = 20 sh. 1 sh. = 12 pence = 42 Sk.)

1 Mail 1840. Victoria. Bgst. in. Hj. 1 penny srt., 1 rødbr., 2 bl. do. do. VR i øv. Hj. 1 srt.

Det var sådanne oplysninger, som Erik Ritzau bragte i sit katalog. Man ser, at han også omtaler "Projecterede" frimærker - mærker som alligevel ikke udkom.

Til venstre forsiden af hans katalog

It was this kind of information that Erik Ritzau used in his catalogue. It can be seen that he also mentions "projected" stamps — or stamps which were not issued.

To the left the title page of his catalogue.

Erik N. Ritzau

One of the oldest - if not the oldest - Danish stamp shop was opened at Fiolstræde 17 in Copenhagen in 1861 by the 22-year-old Erik N. Ritzau. After his confirmation, in the years 1853 to 1857, he had been privately employed in the Chief Postmaster General's letter post office and from 1857 until the 21st February 1861 as an assistant in the postal service.

Through his work in the Post Office, Erik Ritzau gained in-depth knowledge of the agency's many fields of activity. These included stamps, but he also kept a close eye on the State telegraph system. All of this was of great use to him later on.

In 1863 he joined the military, where he graduated as a lieutenant in May 1864.

In 1865 Ritzau joined Dansk Rigstidende as a reporter, but on the 1st February 1866 he established his life's work Ritzau's Bureau, a telegram agency with political and commercial telegraph messages, Købmagergade 26. Ritzau also established a business selling telephones and telephone systems and was generally at the forefront of developments in telegraphy and telephony in Copenhagen.

Ritzau had his home in Helliggeiststræde 16 (now Valkendorffsgade).

Erik Ritzau and philately

Letter addressed to Ritzau's Bureau

It was Erik Ritzau who set up the first stamp shop in Denmark, but he did not run it himself for long. It was handed over to D. Lippert. From the literature, we can see that Lippert had several outlets in Copenhagen: at bookseller Falkenberg, Købmagergade 17, at Cigarhandleren, Nygade 7 and at the private address Dybensgade 16, 2nd floor every Sunday from 12.00 to 14.00. It has not been possible to determine whether Ritzau also had more than one shop/outlet.

However, there is no doubt that Erik N. Ritzau was the pioneer of the establishment of Danish philately - Timbromania - as he called it. He got the collecting network going as early as 1861 by opening one or more sales outlets for used and unused stamps. He followed this up with a printed price list of unused stamps (July 1863), and in 1865 he published a Danish world album for stamp collectors.

In the preface he writes:

Although "Timbromania" has not yet taken hold here to the same extent as abroad, where it has given rise to large establishments that make considerable wholesale stamp sales, and where it has given rise to a whole literature, it is nevertheless evident on the other hand, that there are such a considerable number of stamp collectors in Denmark and the neighbouring countries that an appropriately arranged album with a list of all postage stamps would probably be welcomed by the many collectors who have so far had to resort to foreign, especially German, sources of help. The undersigned has therefore willingly accepted the publisher's invitation to compile such an inventory, and dares to believe that he has thereby "remedied a long felt want".

In order to facilitate clarity, I have made this list as limited in scope as the material allowed, while endeavouring to designate the individual stamps as clearly as possible. The private stamps have been omitted, as they really have no place among "postage stamps", and the description of the finer nuances of the colour of one and the same stamp has also been omitted. With regard to the price at which the various stamps are sold, attention is drawn to ... the fact that unused copies of our old Danish 2 RBS stamps are currently sold in North America at a price of 2 dollars!

Copenhagen, in November 1865
Erik Ritzau

Erik Ritzau was not a former postal assistant for nothing. He left out the colour shades and all the private post stamps (bypost) by only making room for postage stamps! On the 8 editorial pages of the album, he gave an account of all issued and projected postage stamps in the world. In 1907, the family of Erik Ritzau wrote about the period before his military service in 1863 that he was a passionate and very wide-ranging philatelist.

Ritzau's Bureau

The reason why all this about Ritzau is only now coming to light is because Ritzau nowhere mentions his interest in stamps in his biography in 1886 for the Ordenskapitlet på Amalienborg or in his later biography in 1916. His later fantastic success with Ritzau's Bureau and his telephone business could stand alone without mentioning his efforts in stamp collecting from 1861 to 1865. From the 1st February 1866 onwards, all his energy was devoted towards safeguarding Ritzau's Bureau, etc.

Six months after the establishment of the Ritzau Bureau, he demonstrated his enterprise by placing an advertisement for a price list with his low telegram prices compared to the state telegram fees for Sweden. For him, challenging the State for comparable prices in 1866 did not matter. This price list was available from the well-known bookseller Falkenberg. Director Erik Ritzau became a Knight of the Order of the Dannebrog in 1886.

Stamp dealers in Denmark

The second oldest known Danish stamp shop opened in the fateful year of 1864 on Strøget in Copenhagen. The business was started by brothers Carl Julius Wium (1839-1913) and Viggo Wium on the 1st July 1864 at Frederiksberggade 5 in their father's bookshop. The business later moved to Holmens Kanal no. 26 with retail outlets in Norgesgade no. 5 (now Bredgade) and in Krystalgade 4.

From 1891, KRAK's directory has a special section for stamp dealers.

List of Stamp Dealers in Denmark

This list is not complete, but has been compiled on the basis of extensive study of books, magazines, newspapers, etc. Companies may have had several addresses and the dates in brackets may change. Corrections and additions are welcome.

Lieutenant, former Postal Assistant, Erik Ritzau, Fiolstræde 17, Copenhagen. 22nd February 1861 to 1865.

Master bookbinder Larsen, Krystalgade 19, Copenhagen (1862 to 1863).

Carl I. Wium, Holmens Kanal 26, Krystalgade 4, Norgesgade 5 (Bredgade 5), Copenhagen. 1864.

D. J. Lippert, clerk and city messenger exp. Dybensgade 16, K (took over the business after Erik Ritzau). In 1862, Lippert had an Employment and City Messenger Dispatch Office in Klosterstræde 4, Copenhagen.

Frimærkesamlerforeningen, Klareboderne 5 (printer Carl Lund), Grønnegade 10, 26th August 1867 to 1st May 1868

N. M. Schultz, Jomfru Annegade, Aalborg, 1867.

Cand Phil C. Torst, Naboløs 4, Grønnegade 24, 1st May 1868

Book dealer Estrup, Kolding, 1868.

Cigar dealer (Retail trade) A. F. Fæster, Nygade 7, Copenhagen, (1863)

Holm, Sværtegade 11 (gi. Mønt 17), Copenhagen, (1863?)

Udstillingssalonen, Østergade 54, Copenhagen, (1863?)

Bookseller Chr. Falkenberg, St. Kjøbmagergade 17, (1863 to 1868). Stamp sales and publication of albums, 1865 and 1868.

Carl Hyllested, Vesterbrogade 48, Forhåbningsholms Allé 3, Copenhagen, 1866 to 1900.

C. Rauth, Østergade 26 (1866 to 1867) cigar manufacturer, Copenhagen.

Cigarbutikken, Bredgade 2, Copenhagen, 1867.

Rudolph Larsen, Pilestræde 12, Copenhagen – 1867.

François Bertini, Copenhagen K, 1869 to (1877).

Jul. Tybring, Klosterstræde 6, Copenhagen, 1873 to February 1924.

Agnes Tybring February 1924-. J. Tybring was co-founder of KPK.

Nordisk Frimærkedepot, Tordenskjoldsgade 30, K, (1875).

Chr. L. Lange, delicatessen and stamps.

Sophus Appel, St. Pederstræde 53, K, 1876.

F. Edmund Jensen, Grønnegade 37, K, (1881 to 1922) tobacco manufacturer.

Telegraphist N. Petersen, Gothersgade 38, (1876 to 1882).

Carl Marx, Øster Farimagsvvej 8, Copenhagen, (1878).

C. Sundberg, Fælledvej 23, Copenhagen N., (1883).

Charles Meyer, Sologade 4, Copenhagen K, (1877 to 1883).

N.S. Nedergaard & Son, Skive 1st December 1885 to 19th December 1944.

Folmer Nedergaard 1944 to .

Doctor Marius Vedel and stamp shop FRANCO, Skindergade 35, Copenhagen, (1851) - (1886 to 28th January 1923) - Co-founder of KPK.

Julius Ruben. Cort Adelersgade 5, K, 1st December 1886 to (1936).

Edvard M. Ruben A/S, Kronprindsensgade 9, Gothersgade 63, Copenhagen, (1876 to 1938).

J. Jensen & Co., Randers (1887).

N. Møller Kromann, Sønderho, (1890).

P. M. Nissager, Løgstør, (1890).

P. Sørensen, Nørre alle 26, Aarhus, (1890).

Wilh. Wichmann, Kolding, (1890).

A. Petersen. Nibe, (1890).

E. Barclay, Roskilde, (1890).

Heinrich Rohde's Frimærkeforretning, Kongens. Nytorv 22, K, (1876 to 1905).

L. Emil Jensen. Copenhagen, (1877 to 1878).

J. P. C. Borum, Skindergade 29, Copenhagen, (1891).

Chr. Jørgensen, St. Strandstræde 3, Copenhagen, (1891).

K. Mathiasen. Esbjerg, (1892). (Private local posts).

Frimærkehandelen, Klosterstræde 24, K, / corner of Skindergade (Mønster), (1892).

Th. Hansen. Varde, (1892). (Private local posts).

E. H. Kirchhoff, Vesterbrogade 20. K, (1891 to 1897).

Carl Krogh, Gothersgade 69, K, (1891).

Julius Petersen, Kannikkestræde 3, K, (1891).

J. C. Jensen, Peder Hvidtfeldtsstræde 7, K, (1891 to 1892).

P. G. Petersen, Gothersgade 69, K, (1892).

Saxo Skiby, Kjøbmagergade 59, K, (1890 to 1892).

Chr. Olsens Frimærkehandel, Frederikshavn, (1897).

F. Gørtz, Helsingør, (1897).

Rudolf Kromann & Co. (V. Thomsen), Ved Stranden 16, Copenhagen, (1888 to 1900).

P. A. Sand, Struer and Holsted, (1897 to 1935).

Viggo A. Chr. Lassen, Østergade 42, K, (1897).

A. V. Swendsen. Vesterbrogade 13, K, Blaagaardsgade 49, N. Formerly of Hamburg (1880 to 1897).

Carl Larsen, Randers.

Th. J. Anthonsen, Esbjerg.

Hans Skovsgaard. Esbjerg. 1898 to (1931).

L. Kryger Sørensen, Aarhus.
Pattern, Frederiksberggade 16, K, (1891 to 1898).
N. M. Guldager, Holsted, (1897 to 1899).
Johannes Nielsen, Ryslinge, Godthaabsgade 7, Odense. (1886 to 1897).
M. E. Floor, Skindergade 5. K, (1894 to 1900).
J. Jeppesen efft., Skindergade 15, K, (1891 to 1919).
Kosmos A/S, Klosterstræde 4, (1900).
August Krautwald, Gothersgade 97. K, (1892 to 1916) photo at head of article.
G. Winckler, Gothersgade 34. K, (1896 to 1900).
R. N. Rasmussen, Hammel, (1894).
Skibby Frimærkehandel, Benth Wolf, (1904).

Dr. Vedel, who was one of the great, persistent pioneers of philately at the time, used this beautiful return handstamp on his mail.

Philatelic dates

Nordisk Filatelistisk Tidsskrift 1st January 1894, Frimærkehuset Hermes 1903, Hermes Cirkulationsklub 1st January 1908, Jysk Frimærkeblad, Skive 1915-1936, Den Danske Filatelist 1913-1st December 1972, (Andreas A. Jensen, Aage Reddersen & Jørgen Rasmussen), Danmarks Frimærkehandlerforening (16th November 1927), F.I.P. 1926, Postens Frimærkecenter 1st November 1926, Aarhus Frimærkehandel 1927, Dansk Filatelistisk Tidsskrift 1935, Frederiksberg Frimærke Forening 8th March 1935, Populær Filateli 1st January 1939, A/S R. Bechsgaard 1935 (1914-1982), Frimærkesamleren 1st January 1943, Jørgen Rasmussen 1944 (1972), Stempelsamlerforeningen 21st April 1950, Dansk Posthistorisk Selskab 1st December 1972, Forlaget Skilling 1st December 1972. At the turn of the century in 1900, there were 9 stamp dealers advertising in Copenhagen and the rest of Denmark.

International co-operation

In 1889, Nordstjernen published an article about how young people became stamp collectors. It was a translated article from German by Dr A. Moschkau.

Congresses between Nordic collectors were held in 1893 in Lund for the first time and in 1899 in Stockholm for the fourth occasion.

The foreign stamp literature was huge at the time and was widely used by Danish collectors, such as:

Album Illustré pour Timbres-Poste & Telegraphe, 1878.

Handbuch für Postmarken-Sammler, Alfred Moschkau, 1887 (the world's first stamp expert).

Handbuch für Postkarten-Sammler, 1890.

Gebrüder Senf's Illustrierter Postwerzeichen-Katalog, 22nd March 1872-1874 (catalogue) – (Brdr. Senf) 4th April 1881 to 17th January 1941.

Atlas de Planches de Timbres, J. B. Moens, 1892 (Stamp dealer 1852 to 1900).

By the turn of the century 1900, around 20,000 stamps had been issued worldwide, so new collectors were advised not to start with such a large collection, but rather to begin a European collection(!)

Sources:

All works cited above.

NFT 1956-86, Olaf Bøgh:

Lehrbuch der Briefmarkenkunde. Theodor Haas, Leipzig 1905 (A/S R. Bechsgaard's library).

Ordenskapitlet, Amalienborg. (A Danish Royal institution that administers the Royal Danish Orders of Chivalry.)

Ritzau's Bureau. 1916. P. Eliassen. Copenhagen.

The Danish National Archives, Personnel files for P&T.

Posthistoriske Cirkulærer 1861, Chief Postal Inspector Erik Jensen.

Erik Nicolai Ritzau 1839-1939, Chr. Kirchoff-Larsen.

The Ritzau family, E. N. Ritzau, 1907.

END

Victor Suppantisch

*New from the book market: Catalogue of the Philatelic Library of the Earl of Crawford K.T.
by E. D. Bacon, London*

[Neues vom büchermarkt: Catalogue of the Philatelic Library of the Earl of Crawford K.T. by E. D. Bacon, London]

Der Philatelist, 15th March 1912, Volume 33, Issue 3, pp.86-87

(Review)

Translation by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
April 2025

NEW FROM THE BOOK MARKET:
CATALOGUE OF THE PHILATELIC LIBRARY OF THE EARL OF CRAWFORD K.T. BY E. D. BACON, LONDON

Under this title, a work was published last year that is of inestimable value to all those interested in philatelic literature.

The story of its origins alone deserves to be made generally known.

The Earl of Crawford, an English Lord and avid philatelist, was the owner of a famous general library in England called “Lindesiana” to which he added a philatelic library. For this purpose, he acquired, in 1901, the philatelic library in St. Louis (America), which had been slumbering peacefully since the death of its founder, John K. Tiffany, who was highly respected in philatelic circles and who died in January 1897. At that time, it was the most important in the world and filled, many boxes when it arrived in London. Lord Crawford’s most ardent endeavor was now to complete it, and he was given the opportunity to do that when at the end of January 1907 the well-known philatelist Heinrich Fränkel, retired district judge in Berlin, unexpectedly died in the prime of his life and he was able to acquire a philatelic library, which was one of the richest in Europe.

Lord Crawford then entrusted the organization, arrangement, and completion of the library to one of the most outstanding living philatelists, the author of a number of distinguished specialized works, E. D. Bacon of London. By giving him unlimited means, it was easy for E. D. Bacon to fill in almost all the gaps and also to obtain the necessary information in a complete manner. Thus, the published section of the “Lindesiana” has become the richest organisation of the World and will probably remain so.

Of course, Bacon also received the commission to compile the library catalogue, which Lord Crawford wanted to have printed as a private work for his own needs and for distribution at his discretion. However, after the Philatelic Literature Society, the first philatelic literature society in Europe, was founded in London at the end of 1907 and of which Lord Crawford had been a member from the very beginning, he took the generous step of allowing the Society, to make copies of the present set available both for its members and for further distribution among friends and collectors of philatelic literature, and this is the reason the philatelic world has to thank that this monumental work can be acquired by interested parties at all and at a currently reasonable price*.

The association produced 300 copies of the work, of which 100 are for the members. The remainder are intended for the public.

* The Crawford Catalogue is kept in the Society library and is available to members. See Vertraul. Mitteilungen number 28.

The work in large quarto format (56x 25 cm) is printed in English and comprises 462 pages, the latter divided into two numbered columns each, so that it has 924 such numbered columns.

On the left page before the main title page we find the following dedication in plain words:

With gracious dedication, this work is dedicated to His Majesty the King, who, as the Duke of York and the Prince of Wales, honored the Royal Philatelic Society in London by being its President from May 1896 to May 1910.

It should be noted that the Philatelic Society of London, one of the oldest societies (founded on April 10, 1869) declared on November 28, 1906, that King Edward VII had granted it the right to use the title "Royal Philatelic Society of London".

The work itself is divided into a Preface, parts I and II, and parts A and B.

Part I, on columns 1-428, deals with non-periodical literature, while Part II, on columns 419-924, deals with the periodical literature. The first part lists all books, brochures, and non-periodical publications, including auction catalogues and even older or more important price lists. The second part lists all newspapers, journals, and periodicals.

Although the book—as the title suggests—was supposed to be a catalogue of Lord Crawford's Library, Bacon went a step further. by including in the volume, with the consent of the owner, all philatelic and literary works which it is certain have been discovered, even though they are missing from the library, with a note of their description, and thereby creating a work which, for the periods it covers, can be cited as a complete bibliography of the entire philatelic literature of the world. These periods... For Part I the period was the end of 1908 and for Part II the period up to the end of 1906 - the latter with minor exceptions concerning those in which the journal continued to be published beyond 1906, but was received before the publication of the catalogue.

In Parts I and II, the alphabetical order was strictly adhered to, regardless of the different languages, which makes the book much easier to use. In Part I, the books were detailed: if the author is known, under their names, otherwise under the first word of their titles, and in the case of publications of associations or societies, under the name of the places where they are based. In Part II, however, the original inscriptions were inscribed below the first word of their titles.

For each work - book or journal - the author, the publisher, the place of publication and the date of publication are stated, where known.

For journals, the individual year lengths as well as the number of issues or pages of each year and their dates are given.

If the publisher or place of publication has changed, this is indicated by stating the relevant dates.

For periodicals, all issues, format, page count, and possibly also the place of printing are indicated. All misleading printing errors and omissions are also indicated; for periodicals, all errors and omissions in the year, number, date, etc. In the latter case, every change of title, as well as every merger with another periodical, is noted, and a journal number is also added, and all reprints—which are frequently encountered in periodical literature - are identified.

The author of this book, however, pursued another goal. The specialized philatelic researcher and merchant should immediately find all sources listed here that might be useful for their specialized studies. In addition, he listed in this volume the countries issuing postage stamps and, for each individual country, all specialized works and publications dealing with postage stamps. What value this has for the study of philately need not be discussed.

Further help can be found in Appendix A, in which all periodicals published in a particular year are listed in chronological order, with the individual countries arranged alphabetically. Finally, Appendix B also caters to those who wish to further research the philological period of the region, as it provides all the sources for this research. Nevertheless, Bacon's work must be considered one of the most important and greatest bibliographical works that exist. The work he did there clearly required years of his time and can be credited to someone who knows the philatelic literature and its scope intimately and has also done extensive research.

However, Bacon's work relies on the almost complete library of Lord Crawford and, in addition, several other existing literary works at his disposal. The wealth of what remained to be researched was impressive, and what he researched was enormous. In particular, The details offered in his work, which cannot be discussed in detail, could only have been obtained with great effort and perseverance and were never recorded. One can safely claim that the book contains more than 100,000 volumes, some of which were researched, but all of which had to be examined before being released to the public.

But Bacon's most unique achievement is the careful preparation and compilation of the materials involved. In this respect, the work is exemplary. The entire rich material is presented and processed with logical clarity, the sentences are concise yet clear, not a word too many, and not too few, and the countless notes on the individual sections contain a large amount of new material that had previously remained unknown even to the experienced literary expert. Lord Crawford's Library contains, in addition to strictly philatelic literature, a large number of semi-philatelic publications—mostly published in the United States of North America - as well as numerous poetic works, which the catalogue also contains, and... was handled with the same thoroughness.

The meticulous precision with which Bacon corrected the typesetting cannot be overestimated, for I encountered only two to five printing errors during the meticulous reading of the book.

While - since no human work is perfect - a few details should allow for correction or addition, all of them, presented in a dignified form, will certainly be welcome by the author, especially since Lord Crawford intends to continue the catalogue in a few years and intends to take corrections and additions into account.

END

Victor Suppantschitsch

Philatelic Literature Bibliography Index von William Ricketts

Der Philatelist, October 1912, Volume 33, Issue 10, p.276

(Review)

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

April 2025

PHILATELIC LITERATURE BIBLIOGRAPHY INDEX

BY WILLIAM RICKETTS

The author, a member of the Philatelic Literature Society in London, who is also a member of the International Philatelic Society in Dresden, began publishing a work this year under the above title, the second volume of which has just been published. He describes his work as a reference book on everything that has been written in journals, books, etc., found in his library, on literature, specifically of stamp collecting. It will contain two parts, the first of which will deal with general topics, while the second will deal with discussions and will cover all languages. He wants the work to appear in informal booklets by means of a typewriter, in order to avoid the high printing costs.

The regular edition will be limited to 100 copies, plus 15 copies on pink, 10 on blue, and 5 each on green and thick white paper. The price of one copy of the regular edition, including shipping costs, is approximately 18 cents (American currency). The first issue contains a short introduction concerning the development of the language of philatelic literature and 10 pages of the actual subject matter. The second issue contains a 10-page preview of the works appearing in the abbreviations, which, however, only reaches the letter C and is gradually continued, and a further 10 pages of text. The format is quarto - 28 x 21½cm - and each sheet is only written on one side.

What volume the work will have reached upon its completion is, of course, impossible to estimate, especially since the size of the author's philatelic library is unknown. However, considering that the index is alphabetically arranged and the second issue is still entirely in the letter A, it can be concluded that it will be very extensive.

A critical judgment on its value is, of course, impossible until it is fully available. These numbers, however, serve only to draw the attention of friends of philatelic literature to this new publication. Interested parties who wish to purchase it should contact the previous author, Mr. William R. Ricketts 1577 Wyoming Avenue, Forty-Fort Pa., United States of North America, directly.

The author, however, would like to suggest that the publication of the individual volumes be somewhat accelerated—there is a six-month gap between the publication of the first and second volumes—if he wishes the current generation to experience its completeness.

Victor Suppantschitsch (Graz)

END

Heinz Glättli & Walter Stamm

“Basler Taube” Foundation. Forseeable dissolution of the Foundation [Stiftung “Basler Taube”. Absehbare Auflösung der Stiftung Dissolution prévisible de la fondation “Basler Taube”]

Schweizer Briefmarken Zeitung, March 2024, Volume 136, Issue 4, pp.8-9

Translation by Heinz Glättli for Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
June 2024

“BASLER TAUBE” FOUNDATION

FORSEEABLE DISSOLUTION OF THE FOUNDATION

For nineteen long years, from 1995 to 2014, the Basler Taube Foundation was very successful as a philatelic centre. During this time, it was able to build up an impressive library and make it accessible to the public with an interest in philately; it was also possible to borrow literature. In addition to this core business, the Foundation was also able to carry out several other philatelic activities, in particular twice organising large stamp exhibitions at the Basel Stamp Days. It organised youth development activities and appeared at philatelic exhibitions, gave lectures and promoted philately. Page two of our annually updated “Fact Sheet” provides a good overview.

Sixteen Foundation councillors from eleven associations in north-west Switzerland became involved in the Foundation after it was established in 1995. Not all of the Foundation Board members’ ideas could be realised, as either the finances or the manpower were lacking to put the proposals into practice. The really big goal of acquiring and running our own building turned out to be unrealisable, as the really large donations did not materialise. However, with the opening of beautiful libraries in 2004-2018, even with an adjoining cafeteria that we could use, we had largely realised the idea of “a house of philately”.

From 2015 onwards, we noticed a marked deterioration in the economic environment. Well-known donors stopped renewing their contributions to the Foundation. Since then, the Foundation has had to report losses, which have seriously reduced its equity. It was not possible to replace the loss of patrons with new ones, and problems at the stamp societies in the Basel region also affected the Foundation. Several philatelists were unable to continue their support for the Foundation, and several Foundation Board members and Club 200 members passed away.

In 2018, the landlord of our former library premises unexpectedly gave us notice to terminate the lease. However, this also represented a great opportunity for the foundation, as we were able to rent a much larger space for the same price, which allowed us to accept new gifts and new loans. Unfortunately, however, it turned out that not all lenders were prepared to make an appropriate contribution to the rental costs. At the same time, two new large philatelic foundations/libraries were being set up in Switzerland, which were pressing ahead with their plans with their own emphasis and not in Basel. As a result, support for the Basler Taube Foundation dwindled noticeably and dangerously.

This was compounded by unfavourable developments in the philately scene. The demand for our library collapsed, and our library team saw fewer and fewer interested parties. The fact that some publications are now available to collectors in digital form made our holdings unattractive in some cases. The cost-benefit ratio developed to our disadvantage. The stamp societies in the region ran into problems and some of them disbanded.

At the beginning of 2024, the Board of Trustees of the Basler Taube Foundation came to the definitive conclusion that after nine years of losses, it would only be possible to continue the foundation for a relatively short time. The Foundation Board therefore revised its objectives. According to the Foundation Board resolution of 27th February 2024, the Foundation will pursue the following objectives:

- Maintaining the publicly accessible library until at least 30th September 2025
- Finding a suitable institution that wants to continue our work 1995-2023 and our library
- Orderly withdrawal from the obligations (in particular the rental agreement)
- Prevention of damage to the Foundation and its Board of Trustees
- If possible: processing of the gifts from Freeland, Schlunegger, Anderle, etc. (not only books, but also documentation).

Based on the current facts, the Foundation must assume that the most likely scenario is that the Board of Trustees will have to propose that the Foundation be dissolved in a few years' time, as it cannot (or can no longer) fulfil its original purpose and/or continue to pursue it. From today's perspective, it no longer seems possible that the Foundation will be able to enter into a new contract and continue to run a library after the current rental agreement expires.

However, the Board of Trustees is confident that it will still be able to realise the above-mentioned goals and thus bring the Foundation's wonderful work from 1995 to 2023 to a successful conclusion. It asks for your understanding and benevolent support in realising the next necessary steps.

Muttenz/Basel, 20th February 2024

Heinz Glättli
Board of Trustees

Walter Stamm
Board of Trustees

END

Markus Winkler

Hermann Mittelmann (1869–1916)

Profession, Writer, Civil Servant

[Beruf Schriftsteller, Beamter]

Bukovina Portal: www.bukowina-portal.de

(This site included several of what appeared to be title pages of Mittelmann's publications but they would not print out reasonably so I left them out)

Translation by Brian J. Birch

3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE

June 2025

Hermann Mittelmann

The merchant, accountant, secretary, and publicist Hermann Mittelmann was born in Chernivtsi, Habsburg Empire (now in Ukraine) in 1869. He attended the state high school and completed a commercial apprenticeship. He subsequently held many different positions in the city: as publisher and editor-in-chief of various newspapers (Bukowiner Kaufmännische Blätter, an organ representing the interests of the merchant community; Bukowiner Kurorte-Zeitung; Austrian Philatelists-Zeitung), as a member of the State Association for Tourism and a sworn expert on travel and shipping matters, as a corresponding member of the Central Commission for the Research and Preservation of Art and Historical Monuments, and as a member of the Bukowin State Museum.

He gave lectures on Ottoman culture, served as secretary of the Red Crescent Society in Bukovina, and organized trips to the Ottoman Empire. His work focused on promoting tourism in the city and the crown land of Bukovina. Together with Franz Porubsky, he published the collection of texts Heiteres und Ernstes aus der Bukowina (Cheerful and Serious Stories from Bukovina) in 1906. In 1907, he published the Illustrated Guide to Bukovina, which was also intended to have an external impact: The editor of this guide, Mr. Hermann Mittelmann, has made agreements with both the editorial staff of the "Österreichische Illustrierte Zeitung" and the editor-in-chief of the "Londoner Zeitung", ensuring the publication of extensive treatises (descriptions of the natural beauties of Bukovina), with numerous illustrations. These treatises will certainly contribute greatly to promoting tourism in Bukovina" (Czernowitzer Allgemeine Zeitung, 24th July 1907, pp.4f.) The travel guide was re-published in a reprint edition in 2001 (review in the Neue Zürcher Zeitung).

He was also active as a merchant, including serving as the sole representative in Bukovina (and also in Transylvania) for various companies. In Chernivtsi, he lived at Rathausstraße 27 (1898) and at St. Petersplatz 2 (until 1914). Hermann Mittelmann died on the 28th February 1916 at the age of 46 in Vienna, where he had fled after the outbreak of the First World War. He was buried in Vienna's Central Cemetery.

Markus Winkler

Mittelmann's publications:

& Franz Porubsky: Cheerful and Serious Stories from Bukovina., Chernivtsi, 1906.

Illustrated Guide to Bukovina., Chernivtsi, 1907.

END

Phila Historica
March 2015, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
June 2015, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
September 2015, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
December 2015, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
March 2016, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
June 2016, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
September 2016, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
December 2016, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
March 2017, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
June 2017, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
September 2017, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
December 2017, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
March 2018, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
June 2018, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
September 2018, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
December 2018, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
March 2019, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
June 2019, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
September 2019, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
December 2019, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
March 2020, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
June 2020, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
September 2020, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
December 2020, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
March 2021, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
June 2021, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
September 2021, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
December 2021, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
March 2022, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
June 2022, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
September 2022, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
December 2022, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
March 2023, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
June 2023, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
September 2023, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
December 2023, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
March 2024, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
June 2024, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
September 2024, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
December 2024, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
March 2025, Issue 1

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
June 2025, Issue 2

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
September 2025, Issue 3

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Phila Historica
December 2025, Issue 4

Translation Digest

Translated by Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
December 2025

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

Philat. Trans. 898
Philat. Trans. 899
Philat. Trans. 900
Philat. Trans. 901
Philat. Trans. 902
Philat. Trans. 903
Philat. Trans. 904
Philat. Trans. 905
Philat. Trans. 906
Philat. Trans. 907
Philat. Trans. 908
Philat. Trans. 909
Philat. Trans. 910
Philat. Trans. 911
Philat. Trans. 912
Philat. Trans. 913
Philat. Trans. 914
Philat. Trans. 915
Philat. Trans. 916
Philat. Trans. 917
Philat. Trans. 918
Philat. Trans. 919

Proforma

Philat. Trans. ?

Author (14pt)

Title

[Title in original language]

Bibliographic details

(Notes)

Translation by Translator for Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
? 2026

TITLE (14pt)

END

Proforma: Translation Digest

Philat. Trans. ?

Title (14pt)
Date, Volume & Issue

Translation Digest

Translated by Translator for Brian J. Birch
3166 Route de Seyches, 47350 Montignac-Toupinerie, FRANCE
? 2026

Translation Digest

Note: A Translation Digest provides a translation of all of the article titles and general headings of a complete issue of a specialised bibliographic periodical. It also includes full translations of all articles that appear to be of interest to me.

pp.1-2

Title.

Author

END

LIST OF THE
S.E.P.S. TRANS. SERIES OF TRANSLATIONS

INTRODUCTION

I was the Librarian of the Security Endorsement & Perfin Society of Great Britain (now the Perfin Society) from 1971 until 1984. During that time I organised and expanded the Society Library, having nearly two hundred and fifty items translated in the process. I called these translations the S.E.P.S. Trans. series, based on the Society's name, in order to distinguish them from a second series I had in hand called Philat. Trans. which comprised all other non-perfin philatelic translations that were carried out for me. In order to keep control of this major endeavour, I numbered the translations and kept a separate list. After the one hundred and second translation had been completed (no, I really have no idea why I chose such an odd number) I published the list in the Society Bulletin.

After my stint as Librarian was over, I completed the list of translations and provided a copy to the new Librarian. In an attempt to preserve a record of these translations, I have added the list and write-ups I provided as Appendix 1 of this work. As to the current availability of these translations, I have no idea. I was informed that the librarian who followed in my footsteps looted the Library, passing on to his successor a mere fraction of the library he had received from me.

PHILATELIC TRANSLATIONS ABOUT PERFINS

The article, which covered S.E.P.S. Trans. 1 to 102, was published in the Bulletin of the Security Endorsement, and Perfin Society of Great Britain in an effort to publicise the Society's translation project. I subsequently relinquished the post of Librarian and my part in translating perfins articles ceased.

Before handing over the unedited translations to the new Librarian in 1987, I numbered them and extended the original list to cover every translation carried out for the Society: a total of 246.

Many of the translations were unedited and handwritten, particularly the later ones. All of the translations should be available from the current Perfin Society Librarian.

THE S.E.P.S. LIBRARY TRANSLATIONS PROJECT

When I took over the position of Librarian for the Security Endorsement and Perfins Society of Great Britain (S.E.P.S.) in June 1971, the library contained about half a dozen foreign language articles. Only one of these articles was accompanied by an English translation. By the end of the following decade, the extent of the library had increased dramatically. It then contained complete files of five foreign-language periodicals devoted to perfans (two from Germany and one each from France, Czechoslovakia and Japan) and about a hundred foreign-language books and articles.

As I do not read any foreign languages, the information in these publications was largely denied to me and, I presumed, to most other members of the Society.

Since 1975, the contents of the library had been organized and publicised by means of Perfans Abstracts. Each book, pamphlet and article in the library was included in Perfans Abstracts with its full bibliographic data and an abstract of its contents. Subject and Author indexes being published periodically. Foreign-language publications obviously formed a stumbling block to this systematic approach as I was unable to abstract and index them.

A legacy from my University days was the Engineering Librarian, Betty Howarth, who carried out technical translations for staff, to alleviate the boredom of evening duty on the enquiry desk. We had become friends and even though I had departed the University some years earlier, she very kindly continued to translate philatelic articles for me. Once the articles had been translated, I edited them and arranged for them to be typed. A copy of each translation was then sent to the Perfans Club in the USA, to be deposited in their library.

Inevitably, one translator could not cope with all of the foreign languages in which the articles and books in the library were written. However, her linguistic ability did cope with French; German; Italian; Spanish; Portuguese and Russian. Articles in the remaining languages: - Swedish; Danish; Norwegian; Polish; Hungarian; Czechoslovakian; Japanese; Dutch and Greek were translated through the good offices of the American Philatelic Society's Translation Committee under its late Chairman Dmytro Bykovetz Jr.

TRANSLATING PERIODICALS DEVOTED TO PERFANS

In general, periodicals contain signed articles, unsigned articles (generally written by the editor) and society news. Naturally, a proportion of these (such as the society news), will be of no permanent interest and therefore do not need to be translated. However, the task of sorting what should be translated from what should not, requires a knowledge of the language concerned and so we come the full circle. The policy with respect to specialist periodicals devoted to Perfans was to produce cover to cover translations (i.e. everything from the front cover to the back cover is translated). Critical selection can then be carried out prior to inclusion in Perfans Abstracts. The following periodicals were translated cover to cover :-

Bulletin de Liaison

Association Nationale des Collectionneurs de Timbres Perfores (ANCOPER), Paris, France.

Firmen - und Behordliche Duchlochungun - Rundbrief

Renamed Lochungun.

Firmendurchlochungun - Rundbrief

Renamed Lochungun.

Lochungun

Arbeitsgemeinschaft Lochungun, Germany.

- This periodical had various name changes prior to the adoption of this title in April 1982. Even the Society's name had been simplified from Firmen - und Behordliche Durchlochungen. The first two issues were un-numbered.

Perfiny

Klubem Filatelistu 00-65 Kovoprojekta, Prague, Czechoslovakia.

Pol-Lochungen - Rundbrief

Arbeitsgemeinschaft Pol-Lochungen, Helmstedt, Germany.

Senko

Tadashi Adachi, Japan.

TRANSLATING BOOKS, PAMPHLETS AND ARTICLES DEVOTED TO PERFINS

This category consists mainly of articles dealing with perfins published in general and specialist society periodicals. The books and pamphlets are generally either catalogues of the perfins of a particular country or merely include perfins as one part of a wider specialised study.

There were about a hundred of these foreign-language items in the library when the translation project began and additions were being made at the rate of about thirty-five items per year.

THE S.E.P.S. SERIES OF TRANSLATIONS

All translations, whether cover-to-cover or ad hoc, were numbered serially. No separate indexes were available to the translations as they would eventually be incorporated in Perfins Abstracts (the Perfin Society library index) and would then be indexed by both author and subject.

In the following list, the order is as follows:-

S.E.P.S. Trans. N°

Author: Title., Bibliographic details:-

Periodical: Name of periodical, Date, Volume Number, Issue Number (or Whole number) pages. (Perfins Abstract number, if known)

Book or Pamphlet: Publisher, Place of Publication, Year, pages. (Perfins Abstract number, if known)

It must be born in mind that many of these references date from the 1970s when my attempts at recording bibliographic details on five inch by three inch cards, were not necessarily as comprehensive as they are now. All references have been brought up to date with regards to my current style, although I have not attempted to fill in the missing data.

LIST OF S.E.P.S. TRANSLATIONS

S.E.P.S. Trans. 1

P. Mazur: Stamps with perforations., Filateliya SSSR, April 1974, Issue 4, pp.6-7. (0241)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 2

P. Mazur: Stamps with perforations., Filateliya SSSR, September 1972, Issue 9, pp.38-39. (0242)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 3

D. Ribault: Catalogue of French Perfins: Introduction. (0259)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 4

P. Mazur: More about perforations on postage stamps., Filateliya SSSR, April 1973, Issue 4, pp.v-vi. (0247)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 5

Germany - POL stamp., in: Michel Briefmarken-Katalog Deutschland 1969., Schwaneberger Album, Munich, Germany, 1968, p.107. (0164)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 6

P. Mazur: Perforations on Soviet postage stamps., Filateliya SSSR, December 1975, Issue 12, pp.25-27. (0497)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 7

Yu. Aleksandrov: Perforations on postage stamps from pre-revolutionary Russia., Filateliya SSSR, Feb 1973, Issue 2, p.34. (0498)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 8

G. Lebland: French issues - Vol. 3 - The perforated stamps of France (second, third and fourth lists)., Study No. 97, Le Monde des Philatélistes, Paris, France, 1968. (0356)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 9

Cancelling with perforating machines., in: Catalogo de los Sellos Postales de la Republica Argentina., 6th edition, Volume 2, Victor Kneitschel, Buenos Aires, Argentina, 1958, pp.548-559. (0416)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 10

Minutes of the Meeting of the Board of Directors of 10th May 1977., Association Nationale des Collectionneurs de Timbres Perfores (ANCOPER), Paris, France., May 1977.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 11

Election of the Committee., Association Nationale des Collectionneurs de Timbres Perfores (ANCOPER), Paris, France., September 1977.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 12

General Assembly of 26th October 1977., Association Nationale des Collectionneurs de Timbres Perfores (ANCOPER), Paris, France., October 1977.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 13

Bulletin de Liaison, October 1977, Whole number 1.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 14

Bulletin de Liaison, November 1977, Whole number 2.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 15

Bulletin de Liaison, January 1978, Whole number 3.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 16

Bulletin de Liaison, March 1978, Whole number 4.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 17

Bulletin de Liaison, April 1978, Whole number 5.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 18

Bulletin de Liaison, May 1978, Whole number 6.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 19

G. Kadocsa: Hole in the stamp., Filateliai Szemle, March 1968, p.6. (0417)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 20

Bulletin de Liaison, June 1978, Whole number 7.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 21

S. J. Macrimichalos: Perfins of Greece and Crete., Philotelia, March/April 1969, Volume 46, pp.54-55. (0372)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 22

Bavarian - Official Stamps., in: Borek Briefmarken - Katalog Deutschland 1969., Richard Borek, Brunswick, Germany, 1968, p.6. (0421)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 23

France - Stamps for the air post., in: Catalogue de Timbres-Poste, 1 - France 1969., 63rd edition, Yvert & Tellier, Amiens, France, 1968, p.103. (0422)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 24

Tunis - Postage due stamps., in: Catalogue de Timbres - Poste, 1 - France 1969, 63rd edition, Yvert & Tellier, Amiens, France, 1968, p.636. (0496)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 25

Switzerland - Official Stamps II for the Federal administration., in: Katalog Schweiz/Liechtenstein & Campione 1969., Zumstein, Bern, Switzerland, 1968, pp.142-143. (0505)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 26

Bavarian - Official stamps., in: Michel Briefmarken - Katalog Deutschland 1969., Schwaneberger Album, Munich, Germany, 1968, pp.36-38. (0495)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 27

P. Mazur: Perforations from the Moscow postal department on stamps from pre-revolutionary Russia., Filateliya SSSR, May 1973, Issue 5, pp.vii-viii. (0506)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 28

P. Mazur: Firm's perforations on Russian stamps., Filateliya SSSR, April 1975, Issue 4, p.29. (0512)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 29

P. Mazur: Puzzling perforations., Filateliya SSSR, May 1976, Issue 5, p.29. (0577)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 30

O. Hansen: Danish Perfins., Posthistorisk Tidsskrift, March 1974, Volume 2, Issue 1, pp.156-170 & June 1974, Issue 2, pp.220-229.

Reprinted in booklet form by Posthistorisk Tidsskrift, Hobro, Denmark. (0866)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 31

G. Leblond: French Issues - Volume 5 - French Perfins (5th-9th lists)., Study No. 129, Le Monde des Philatélistes, Paris, France, 1971. (0711)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 32

E. Adler: Communications and answers from the Society's philatelic working group: perforated stamps (Firm's perforations)., Der Philatelist (Novy Bor), 1932, Issue 1/2, pp.20-21. (0710)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 33

Bulletin de Liaison, September 1978, Whole number 8.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 34

Bulletin de Liaison, October 1978, Whole number 9.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 35

Bulletin de Liaison, November 1978, Whole number 10.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 36

Bulletin de Liaison, December 1978, Whole number 11.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 37

Bulletin de Liaison, January 1979, Whole number 12.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 38

Bulletin de Liaison, February 1979, Whole number 13.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 39

Perfins, December 1974, Volume 1, Issue 5.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 40

Bavaria - Official Stamps., in: Deutschland Netto-Katalog 1975/76., 45th edition, Hans Grobe, Hanover, Germany, 1975, p.383. (0578)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 41

V. Maxa: Catalogue of Perfins of the Czechoslovakian area – Introduction., Prague, Czechoslovakia, 1976. (0887)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 42

V. J. Van Lint: Belgian stamps with perforated initials., Het Postzegel, March/April 1957, Volume 19, Issue 2, pp.19-20. (0579)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 43

P. Girshman: Perforations on postage stamps from pre-revolutionary Russia - an addenda., Filateliya SSSR, February 1973, Issue 2, p.34. (0584)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 44

A. Jorgensen: Firms perforations., Dansk Filatelistisk Tidsskrift, February 1954, Volume 20, Issue 2, pp.4-5. (0569)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 45

T. Lagerwall: A little about protective perforations., Svensk Filatelistisk Tidsskrift, February 1979, Issue 2, pp.101-105. (0872)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 46

Bulletin de Liaison, April 1979, Whole number 14.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 47

Perfins on Norwegian stamps., in: Norgeskatalogen 1978., Oslo Filatelist Klubb, Oslo, Norway, 1977, pp.205-210. (0683)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 48

Perfins, June 1974, Volume 1, Issue 1.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 49

Bulletin de Liaison, May 1979, Whole number 15.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 50

Bulletin de Liaison, June 1979, Whole number 16.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 51

V. Maxa: Unfamiliar facts about Czechoslovakian firms' perforations., Bibliographic details, unknown: German periodical, pp.039/1-039/3. (0883)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 52

A. Sekowski: Private perfins used in Warsaw., Bibliographic details, unknown: Polish periodical, pp.10-12. (0702)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 53

Bulletin de Liaison, September 1979, Whole number 17.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 54

A. J. Larsen: Entires - Corner., Posthistorisk Tidsskrift, March 1974. Volume 2, Issue 1, p.155. (0880)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 55

Bulletin de Liaison, October 1979, Whole number 8.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 56

Catalogue of the Perfins of France - Introduction., Association Nationale des Collectionneurs de Timbres Perfores (ANCOPER), Paris, France, 1979.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 57

Bulletin de Liaison, November 1979, Whole number 19.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 58

Australia: Official stamps., in: Kohl – Briefmarkenhandbuch., 2nd edition, Volume 1, Verein der Freunde des Kohl - Briefmarkenhandbuch, Berlin, Germany, 1926, p.140. (0888)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 59

Bulletin de Liaison, December 1979, Whole number 20.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 60

Bavaria: Official Stamps., in: Kohl – Briefmarkenhandbuch., 2nd edition, Volume 2, Verein der Freunde des Kohl - Briefmarkenhandbuch, Berlin, 1926, pp.234-236 & 239-241.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 61

Bulletin de Liaison, January 1980, Whole number 21.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 62

Senko, May 1972, Whole number 1.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 63

Senko, June 1972, Whole number 2.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 64

Firmendurchlochungen - Rundbrief, April 1973, Whole number 1.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 65

Bulletin de Liaison, February 1980, Whole number 22.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 66

Firmendurchlochungen - Rundbrief, Whole number 2.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 67

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 23.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 68

Great Britain: Official stamps for the Ministry of Public Works., in: Kohl-Briefmarken Handbuch., 2nd edition, Volume 3, Verein der Freunde des Kohl - Briefmarkenhandbuch, Berlin, Germany, 1931, pp.823-825. (0865)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 69

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 24.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 70

Pol - Lochungen - Rundbrief, September 1955, Whole number 1.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 71

Perfyny, Volume 1, Issue 2.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 72

Perfyny, Volume 1, Issue 3.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 73

Perfyny, Volume 1, Issue 4.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 74

Perfyny, Volume 2, Issue 1.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 75

Perfyny, Volume 2, Issue 2.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 76

Perfyny, Volume 2, Issue 3.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 77

Perfyny, Volume 2, Issue 4.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 78

Perfyny, Volume 2, Issue 5.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 79

Perfyny, Volume 2, Issue 6.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 80

Perfyny, Volume 2, Issue 7.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 81

Perfyny, Volume 2, Issue 8.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 82

Perfyny, Volume 2, Issue 9.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 83

Perfyny, Volume 2, Issue 10.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 84

Perfyny, Volume 3, Issue 1.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 85

Firmendurchlochung, 26th September 1961.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 86

Firmendurchlochung – Rundbrief, Whole number 3.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 87

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 4.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 88

Firmen - und Behordliche Duchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 5.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 89

Firmen - und Behordliche Duchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 6.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 90

Firmen - und Behordliche Duchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 7.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 91

Firmen - und Behordliche Duchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 8.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 92

Firmen - und Behordliche Duchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 9.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 93

Senko, Whole number 3.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 94

Senko, Whole number 4.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 95

Senko, Whole number 5.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 96

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 25.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 97

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 26.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 98

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 27.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 99

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 28.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 100

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 29.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 101

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 30.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 102

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 31.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 103

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 32.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 104

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 33.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 105

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 34.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 106

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 35.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 107

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 36.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 108

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 37.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 109

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 38.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 110

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 39.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 111

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 40.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 112

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 41.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 113

Perfyny, Volume 3, Issue 2.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 114

Perfyny, Volume 3, Issue 3.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 115

L. Bergman, T. Lagerwall, & S. Swenson: Swedish Perfins., Special Handbook 14, Sveriges Filatelist-Forbund, Boras, Sweden, 1981.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 116

Bulletin de Liaison Whole number 51.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 117

Pol-Lochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 15.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 118

Bulletin de Liaison, January 1984, Whole number 53.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 119

Firmendurchlochung – Rundbrief, March 1973, Whole number 24.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 120

F. P. Rodriguez: Perforated stamps - history of their adoption in Great Britain. Revista de Filatelia, November 1983, pp501-503.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 121

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 42.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 122

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 43.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 123

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 44.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 124

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 45.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 125

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 46.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 126

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 47.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 127

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 48.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 128

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 49.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 129

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 50.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 130

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 52.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 131

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 54.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 132

Deutsche Firmendurchlochungen, October 1962. (2nd fore-runner to the Society's Rundbrief.)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 133

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 10.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 134

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 11.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 135

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 12.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 136

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 13.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 137

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 14.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 138

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 15.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 139

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 16.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 140

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 17.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 141

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 18.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 142

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 19.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 143

Firmendurchlochungen - Rundbrief , Whole number 20.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 144

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 21.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 145

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 22.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 146

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 23.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 147

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 27.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 148

Firmendurchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 38.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 149

Perfyny, February 1976, Volume 3, Issue 2.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 150

Perfyny, March 1976, Volume 3, Issue 3.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 151

Perfyny, April 1976, Volume 3, Issue 4.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 152

Perfyny, May 1976, Volume 3, Issue 5.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 153

Perfyny, June 1976, Volume 3, Issue 6.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 154

Perfyny, October 1976, Volume 3, Issue 8.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 155

Perfyny, November 1976, Volume 3, Issue 9.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 156

Perfyny, December 1976, Volume 3, Issue 10.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 157

Perfyny, January 1977, Volume 4, Issue 1.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 158

Perfyny, March 1977, Volume 4, Issue 2.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 159

Perfyny, April 1977, Volume 4, Issue 3.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 160

Perfyny, May 1977, Volume 4, Issue 4.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 161

Perfyny, June 1977, Volume 4, Issue 5.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 162

Perfyny, July 1977, Volume 4, Issue 6.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 163

Perfyny, September 1977, Volume 4, Issue 7.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 164

Pol - Lochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 2.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 165

Pol - Lochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 3.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 166

Pol - Lochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 4.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 167

Pol - Lochungen – Rundbrief, 1956, Whole number 5.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 168

Pol - Lochungen – Rundbrief, 1956, Whole number 6.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 169

Pol - Lochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 7.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 170

Pol - Lochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 8.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 171

Pol - Lochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 9.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 172

Pol - Lochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 10.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 173

Pol - Lochungen - Rundbrief Whole number 11.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 174

Pol - Lochungen - Rundbrief Whole number 12.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 175

Pol - Lochungen - Rundbrief Whole number 13.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 176

Pol - Lochungen - Rundbrief Whole number 14.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 177

Senko, October 1972, Whole number 6.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 178

Senko, November 1972, Whole number 7.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 179

Senko, January 1973, Whole number 8.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 180

Senko, March 1973, Whole number 9.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 181

Senko, 1973, Whole number 10.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 182

Senko, 1974, Whole number 11.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 183

Senko, August 1974, Whole number 12.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 184

Bulletin de Liaison, Whole number 55.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 185

Firmen - und Durchlochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 25.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 186

Pol - Lochungen – Rundbrief, Whole number 16.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 187

T. Adachi: Illustrated Catalogue of Japanese Stamps with Security Markings., 3rd edition, Takaski Adachi, Tokyo, Japan, 1980. (Translation of the introductory text only.)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 188

M. Peterik: Perfins - Valueless and of no interest?, in: Catalogue of the Regional Exhibition of Postage Stamps., Kadan, Czechoslovakia, 1979, pp.40-43.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 189

H. Schultz-Steinheil: Perfins on postage stamps., in: Sveriges Frankoteken Handbook., Volume 3, SFF, Sweden, 1964.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 190

Col. G. Lebland: Issues of France - Volume II: French Perfins (First List)., Study No. 67, Le Monde des Philatélistes, Paris, France. (Translation of the introductory text only.)

S.E.P.S. Trans 191

H. Munk: Great Britain Official Perfins for the Board of Trade., in: Kohl - Briefmarken Handbuch, Volume 3, 2nd edition, Verein der Freunde des Kohl-Briefmarkenhandbuchs, Berlin, Germany, 1931, pp.832-834.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 192

H. Munk: Guatemala - Perforated OFFICIAL and hand - stamped OFFICIAL., in: Kohl-Briefmarkenhandbuch, Volume 4, 2nd edition, Verein der Freunde des Kohl-Briefmarkenhandbuchs, Berlin, Germany, 1933, pp.200-202 & 1013-1014.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 193

H. Munk: Great Britain - Officially approved protective overprints for private use., in: Kohl-Briefmarkenhandbuch, Volume 3, 2nd edition., Verein der Freunde des Kohl-Briefmarkenhandbuchs, Berlin, Germany, 1931, pp.1022-1024.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 194

Col. G. Lebland: Issues of France - Volume IX: French Perfins (Twelfth to Fourteenth Lists)., Study No. 226, Le Monde des Philatélistes, Paris, France. (Translation of the minor text only.)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 195

Registered letters and registered postmarks., in: A Magyar Belyege Monografiája., Volume 1, Hungary, 1965, pp.582-587 & illustrations on pp.589 & 590.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 196

J. R. D. Ferreira: Catalogue of Perfins on the stamps of Portugal., Reprinted from Boletim do Clube Filatelico de Portugal, Lisbon, Portugal, 1978. (Translation of the introductory text only.)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 197

A. de la Mettrie: Printed marks for private control., Study No. 167, Le Monde de Philatélistes, Paris, France, 1974.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 198

M. Kinkel: Collect something different - collect perfins., Bibliographic details not known, 1970s, pp.183-190.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 199

Perfins on Finnish stamps., Suomen Postimerkkien Yasikisja, 1972, Volume 6, pp.128-129.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 200

L. Bergman: Perfins (Part 16)., Bältespannären, July 1980, Volume 15, Issue 1, pp.33-34.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 201

L. Bergman: Perfins (Part 15)., Bältespannären, June 1979, Volume 14, Issue 1, pp.22-23.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 202

L. Bergman: Perfins (Part 17)., Bältespannären, July 1982, Volume 17, Issue 1, p.51.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 203

V. J. Van Lint: Perfins., Berner Briefmarken - Zeitung, September 1954, p.123.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 204

W. Ahrens: Perfins from Brazil., Brasil Filatelico, September 1955 pp.9-12.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 205

P. Von Krusenstierna: The Stamp Box : on Philately's fringes., Dagens Nyheter, 24th December 1976.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 206

E. Vonhoff: German Perfins - a problem for research., Der Eisenbahner Philatelist, January 1971, Volume 4, Issue 13, pp.3-4.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 207

L. S. Ettre: Perforated Stamps., Filateliai Szemle, December 1974, Volume 27, Issue 12, p.10.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 208

V. Maxa: Perforated Stamps., Filateliai Szemle, 24th June 1981, pp.16-17.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 209

V. Maxa: Perfins are taking., Filatelie, 1970, Volume 20, Issue 19, pp.580-581.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 210

V. Maxa: The last Czechoslovak perfin., Filatelie, 1970, Volume 20, Issue 24, pp.740-741.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 211

V. Maxa: It happened years ago, or how did perfins get to us?, Filatelie, 1977, Issue 9, pp.270-272 & 281.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 212

V. Maxa: Without value and interest?, Filatelie, 1970, Volume 20, Issue 13, pp. 396-398.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 213

V. Maxa: What is hiding beyond one question mark?, Filatelie, 1977, Issue 15, pp.460-461.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 214

E. Dehli: Privately perforated Norwegian stamps., Frimerke Forum, 1972, Volume 3, Issue 4, pp.6-7 & 9-10.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 215

W. Ritter: Stamps with firms perforations or perfins from British India. 10 Jahre Indien Report, October 1980, pp.50-60.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 216

P. I. Litschke: Bibliography of literature about firm and official Perfins., Sammler-Dienst, 1968, Issue 21, pp.1319-1322.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 217

An interesting discourse about a peculiar perfin reproduced with permission from "TAAK TOLK"., Mijn Stokpaardje, April 1956.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 218

J. Seyffarth: Perforated postage stamps - waste paper or philatelic documents. (Bibliographic details not known), 1979, Issue 2.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 219

G. Lebland: Firms perforations and perforating devices., Le Monde des Philatélistes, July/August 1979, Whole number 322, p.25.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 220

V. Maxa: The "POKO" perforating machine., Le Monde des Philatélistes, July/August 1979, Whole number 322, p.25.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 221

R. Richet: Stamps from the Plebiscite in Eastern Silesia - 1920 (Czech. and Polish stamps overprinted "SO 1920" - 13th February to 10th August, 1920)., Le Monde des Philatélistes, September 1978, Whole number 312, pp.31-35.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 222

P. Mazur: Perfins on stamps and their history. Filateliya SSSR, June 1974, Issue 6, p.43.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 223

E. J. Enschede: Perfined coil stamps., Nederlandsch Maandblad voor Philatelie, October 1936, Volume 15, Issue 10, p.197.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 224

C. Van. Straaten: Perfined coil stamps., Nederlandsch Maandblad voor Philatelie, November 1936, Volume 15, Issue 11, p.214.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 225

J. C. Prins: Perfins., Nederlandsch Maandblad voor Philatelie, July/August 1972, Volume 49, pp.436-439.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 226

W. Sperling: Supplement to philatelic report number 14 - Leipzig firms Perfins., Neue Lipsia Rundschau, April/May 1979, Issue 2, pp.24-25.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 227

Swedish company perforations., Het Noorderlicht, October 1968, Issue 17, pp.16-18.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 228

P. Saulgrain: History of an airmail postage stamp: The 1.90F ultramarine perforated "EIPA 30" La Philatélie Française, January 1977, Whole number 273, pp.28-29.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 229

G. Argyropoulos: Greek perfins., Philotelia, March/April 1967, Whole number 402, p.46.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 230

M. K. Konstantini: Greek perfin stamps., Philotelia, July/August 1974, Whole number 447, pp.129-130.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 231

Faeroe-Islands perfin., Posthistorisk Tidsskrift, August 1976, Volume 2, Issue 2/3, pp.71-72.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 232

A. Jorgensen: Perfins., Posthistorisk Tidsskrift, December 1975, Issue 13, pp.427-429.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 233

E. Vonhoff: Society working party on firm's perforations., Sammler-Dienst, 1963, Issue 12, pp. 565-567.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 234

Did you know that ..., Sammler-Dienst, 1963, Issue 17, pp.829-830.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 235

E. Vonhoff: Federal working party on firm's perforations., Sammler-Dienst, 17th August 1963, Volume 14, Issue 17, p.842.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 236

W. Sperling: Perforated postage stamps., Sammler Express, 1979, Volume 33, Issue 7, pp.220-221.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 237

R. D'Oultre-Seille: England's present-day official stamps., Svensk Filatelistisk Tidskrift, 1933, Issue 4. (Originally published in French in Annales de Philatélie.)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 238

H. Falk: Newly-discovered Russian postage-due stamps., Svensk Filatelistisk Tidskrift, February 1968, p.94.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 239

S. Swenson, L. Bergman & T. Lagerwall: Inventory of Swedish perfins., Svensk Filatelistisk Tidskrift, 1975, Issue 6.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 240

T. Lagerwall: Some comments on official perfins., Svensk Filatelistisk Tidskrift, May 1982, Issue 5, pp.361-367.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 241

L. Bergman: Perfins., Svensk Filatelistisk Tidskrift, 1972, Issue 8, p.432.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 242

Zpravodaj Perfiny. [Perfins Newsletter], Bibliographic details unknown but probably published in Filatelia.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 243

V. J. Van Lint: Company perforations., Bibliographic details unknown but published in Dutch, pp.78-80.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 244

G. Vieth: German POL perforations., Bibliographic details unknown but published in German, 1980, pp.12-16.

S.E.P.S. Trans. 245

P. I. Litschke: Bibliography of literature on firms' and official perforations., Literatur Nachrichten 1969, Whole number 58, pp.126-144. (Translation of the introductory text only.)

S.E.P.S. Trans. 246

H. Falk: Company perforations on stamps., Svensk Filatelistisk Tidskrift, 1968, Issue 2, pp.90-91.

END